NEGRO CONFESSED TO HEINOUS CRIME

Pleaded Guilty to Assaulting White Woman Near Atlanta

WILL HANG ON DECEMBER 8TH

The Large Crowd Which Surrounded the Court House Was Quiet and Orderly and Seemed Satisfied With the Outcome of Trial.

Atlanta, Nov 14.—To the intense surprise of the great crowd of spectators, the court, and Solicitor Hill, Jim Walker, the negro arraigned for trial before Jurge Roan Monday morning on the charge of having criminally assaulted Mrs. G. W. Moore, at Brookwood last Thursday two weeks ago, pleaded guilty to the indictment.

"Perhaps he doesn't understand," remarked Solicitor Hill, after the indictment had been read to the prisoner.

"Oh, yet, he does," replied Judge Van Epps, of Walker's counsel. "He has confessed."

Walker himself reiterated the confession, and after his counsel had explained to the court the effort it had made in the negro's behalf, and how it had urged him not to confess, having pointed out that he would be hanged, and the negro still persisted, Walker reiterated his confession when he stood before Judge Roan.

Judge Roan then sentenced Walker to hang on December 8. He spoke of the splendid way that the spectators had restrained themselves, and how quickly justice had been meted out.

Throughout Walker, or Brice, showed no emotion. While seated his head hung over limply on his shoulder. As his counsel explained, he was perfectly dull and stupid. The import of the judge's terrible words seemingly made no impression.

Mr. and Mrs. Moore sat through the trial. Mrs. Moore was heavily veiled, and showed keenly the effects of the terrible ordeal she had been through. Neither Mr. Moore nor his sons, Cliff and John, made any sort of demonstration. They pronounced themselves as eminently satisfied.
