GOP postpones vote on immigration bill

By Lisa Mascaro
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House Republican immigration overhaul dangled precariously Thursday, imperiled by stubborn differences between conservative and moderate factions — and by President Donald Trump's running commentary about a bill he only half-heartedly supported and then suggested would never become law.

Republican leaders were twice forced to postpone final voting, first until Friday and then punting it to next week, as negotiators made a last-ditch push for support. They were trying to persuade colleagues to seize the moment and tackle immigration problems by approving the bill, which includes $25 billion for Trump's border wall and a path to citizenship for young immigrants who have lived in the U.S. illegally since childhood.

House Majority Whip Steve Scalise of Louisiana said Thursday evening they would keep trying to find consensus on the legislation.

Earlier in the day, Speaker Paul Ryan had appeared

Poll: Majority approve of Trump's North Korea effort

By Emily Swanson and Catherine Lucey
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A majority of Americans now approve of President Donald Trump's handling of U.S. relations with North Korea, a change that comes after his historic summit with that country's leader, Kim Jong Un. But most don't believe Kim is serious about addressing the international concerns about his country's nuclear weapons program.

A new poll from The Associated Press-NORC Center for Public Affairs Research released Thursday finds that 55 percent of Americans approve of Trump's diplomacy with North Korea, up from 42 percent in March and 34 percent last October. It's the highest rating for the Republican president on any individual issue on an AP-NORC poll since his inauguration.

The survey was conducted immediately after Trump concluded a one-day meeting with Kim, the first between a U.S. and North Korean leader in six decades of hostility, at which they agreed North Korea would work

Science Says: What makes something truly addictive?

By Lindsey Tanner
The Associated Press

CHICAGO — Now that the world's leading public health group says too much Minecraft can be an addiction, could overindulging in chocolate, exercise, even sex, be next?

The short answer is probably not.

The new "gaming disorder" classification from the World Health Organization revives a debate in the medical community about whether behaviors can cause the same kind of addictive illness as drugs.

The strictest definition of addiction refers to a disease resulting from changes in brain chemistry caused by compulsive use of drugs or alcohol. The definition includes excessive use that damages health, relationships, jobs and other parts of normal life.

MSU president apologizes for 'kickback' comments

Michigan State University's interim president apologized Thursday for an email remark about one of the gymnasts sexually abused by ex-sports doctor Larry Nassar, the latest sign of turbulence for the former governor tasked with steering the school out of the burgeoning scandal.

John Engler's apology came more than a week after the public disclosure of his email exchange from April suggesting Rachael Denhollander probably received a "kickback" from her plaintiff's attorney.

"I didn't give it the consideration it warranted," Engler said in a statement Thursday. "That was a big mistake. I was wrong. I apologize."

California parents accused of shackling kids to face trial

A judge on Thursday ordered a California couple to face trial on torture and child abuse charges after prosecutors presented evidence their children were subjected to years of filth, starvation and cruelty that included beatings with a wooden paddle and caging them as punishment.

Riverside County Superior Court Judge Bernard Schwartz found probable cause that David and Louise Turpin abused 12 of their 13 children for years.

Investigators testified that the couple chained their children to beds and deprived them of food. The judge threw out a child endangerment charge involving the youngest daughter.

"It is not written in stone that the trans-Atlantic bond will survive forever," Stoltenberg said during a speech in London. "But I believe we will preserve it."

NATO has been shaken by Donald Trump's "America First" stance and mistrust of international institutions.

First lady visits migrant children

By Darlene Superville
The Associated Press

McALLEN, Texas — Melania Trump made an unannounced visit to a Texas facility Thursday, talking with children and staff as she got a first-hand look at some of the migrant children sent there by the U.S. government after their families entered the country illegally.

The first lady's stop at Upbring New Hope Children's Center came the morning after President Donald Trump signed an executive order halting the practice of separating these families. The visit to the one-story red brick building, which houses 55 children, was intended to lend support to those children who remain separated from their parents, said Stephanie Grisham, the first lady's spokeswoman.

"She wanted to see everything for herself," Grisham said.

Third-graders at the facility welcomed the first lady with a large paper American flag they'd signed taped to a wall. With the words, "Welcome! First Lady" written in black marker across the red and white bars, Mrs. Trump also signed the flag, which the children gave to her. Next to the flag on the classroom walls: A drawing of a flowering plant, a butterfly, a hummingbird and a heart, with the words, "New Hope, We Love You All, Staff" written in cursive.

Visiting another classroom, Mrs. Trump asked children where they were from, if they were friends and how long they'd been at the center where staff said children typically spend between 42 and 45 days. The children responded, sometimes in English, other times in Spanish, many of them wearing gray T-shirts with the red, white and blue words "We Are One." She told children to "be kind and nice to each other" as she left for another classroom.

The first lady thanked the staff for their "heroic work" and asked them to reunite the children with their families as quickly as possible. In a makeshift conference room, Mrs. Trump met with staff from New Hope, HHS and border patrol, asking several questions about the children's welfare and asking that the children be reunited with their families "as quickly as possible."

New Hope staff reassured Mrs. Trump, who was accompanied by Health and Human Services secretary Alex Azar, that the children are assessed for physical and mental health issues when they enter the facility and are often distraught. They attend school five days a week and have a variety of activities.

"We just have a tremendous passion for working with these children," said program director Roy De La Cerda. "We see them as our own."

President Trump had come under pressure to stop the practice of separating families, including from GOP allies and the first lady herself, following a public outcry sparked by widespread images of children held in fence-like structures. Plans for a visit to a second facility where children housed in cages were seen by The Associated Press last week were canceled because of flooding.

The trip was intended to lend support to some of the more than 2,300 children who remain separated from their parents, Grisham said. In addition to the meetings with staff and children, Mrs. Trump also was briefed on the children's medical care by nursing staff.

The president had insisted incorrectly that his administration had no choice but to separate families apprehended at the border because children cannot go to jail with adults who are being criminally prosecuted for crossing the border illegally. Trump had said only Congress could fix the problem and he specifically pointed a finger at Democrats.

He reversed course Wednesday by signing the order ending separations and keeping families together when they are in custody, at least for the next few weeks. The administration's "zero-tolerance" policy of criminally prosecuting illegal border-crossers, which has led to the removal of some 2,300 children from their parents since May, remains.

When asked Thursday if the first lady supports the policy, Grisham said, "She supports that the law should be followed."

The trip came together within the past 48 hours, Grisham said.

"She told her staff she wanted to go and we made that happen," she said.

President Trump spilled the beans about his wife's trip to the border before it was announced, telling reporters during a Cabinet meeting: "My wife, our first lady, is down now at the border because it really bothered her to be looking at this and seeing it, as it bothered me, as it bothered everybody at this table. We're all bothered by it."

Grisham said that the first lady had the full backing of her husband.

"She told him 'I am headed down to Texas' and he was supportive."

Mrs. Trump, whose focus as first lady is on child well-being, appears to have been among those pushing her husband to act.

Grisham released a statement last weekend saying the first lady "hates" to see children separated from their families and "believes we need to be a country that follows all laws, but also a country that governs with heart."

Hours before Trump used his executive order to halt family separations, a White House official let it be known that Mrs. Trump had been voicing her opinion to the president for some time, including that he needed to help families stay together. The official refused to be identified discussing Trump's private conversations with his wife.

Trump acknowledged Wednesday that the mother of his 12-year-old son, Barron, had been prodding him.

"My wife feels very strongly about it," he told reporters after he signed the order.

The pair of statements from the first lady amounted to an unusual public intervention by Mrs. Trump into a policy debate. Her four former living predecessors, seemingly encouraged after Laura Bush authored a scathing opinion piece, followed with sharper commentary of their own condemning the family separations as shameful.

The last-minute trip to Texas marks the first public action by Mrs. Trump since she announced in May an initiative named "Be Best" to focus on the overall well-being of children and help teach them kindness. She had been expected to travel to promote the campaign but was sidelined a week after the announcement following surgery to treat a benign kidney condition.

Melania Trump dons 'I really don't care, do u?' jacket during visit

Melania Trump went to Texas to show she cared about migrant children. Her fashion choice carried a baffling counter-message. The first lady wore a green, hooded military jacket from Zara that read "I really don't care, do u?" both as she departed and returned to Washington.

The words were printed in white, in graffiti-style, on the jacket's back.

When asked what message the first lady's jacket intended to send, spokeswoman Stephanie Grisham said: "It's a jacket. There was no hidden message. After today's important visit to Texas, I hope the media isn't going to choose to focus on her wardrobe. " Grisham underscored that message in a tweet with the hashtags #SheCares and #ItsJustAJacket.

But President Donald Trump offered his own interpretation in a tweet, saying it "refers to the Fake News Media. Melania has learned how dishonest they are, and she truly no longer cares!"

Mrs. Trump changed into a pale yellow jacket before the plane landed in McAllen, Texas, for a visit to the Upbring New Hope Children's Center, which houses 55 migrant children.

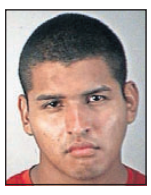
LADY LAKE
Report: Man rear-ends cop car in stolen vehicle

Bryan Cardona-Rodriguez learned a hard lesson Wednesday: If you're going to steal a car, you'd better know how to drive it.

Police say the Dade City man stole a car from a gas station near an Orlando-area attraction but hit a car in Leesburg, then plowed into the back of a patrol car in Lady Lake.



Cardona-Rodriguez

According to an arrest report, Cardona-Rodriguez struck a Lady Lake police car on U.S. Highway 441 just after midnight Wednesday, pulled around the patrol car and sped off. Officers gave chase and finally stopped him near La Plaza Parkway.

Cardona-Rodriguez reportedly apologized and went on to say that he was walking around Universal City Walk when he saw someone filling up the car at a nearby gas station. The car door was open, so he jumped in and took off. He kept driving until he ended up in Lady Lake.

Officers confirmed the vehicle was stolen and discovered that it had also been involved in a hit-and-run in Leesburg on its way to Lady Lake.

Cardona-Rodriguez, who is unemployed, was charged with aggravated fleeing and eluding, grand theft auto and hit-and-run.

Man killed when car overturns in Bushnell Thursday morning

A motorist was killed early Thursday when he lost control of his car on a curve and struck some traffic signs. The 1997 Mazda overturned and he was ejected.

Devin Dubbs, 22, of Bushnell was going south on County Road 575 north of County Road 663 at 12:11 a.m. when the accident occurred, according to the Florida Highway Patrol.

He was taken to Bayonet Point Hospital, where he died of his injuries. He was not wearing a seat belt.

Troopers seize vehicle in fatal hit-and-run on CR 44

Florida Highway Patrol troopers have located a vehicle that may have been involved in the hit-and-run death of a man pushing a bicycle on the side of County Road 44.

The owner of the vehicle contacted FHP Wednesday after the body of Christopher Hayost, 38, of Eustis, was discovered off CR 44 near Sparrow Lane at about 10:30 a.m. Wednesday.

Troopers went to the residence in Lake County and found a silver 2003 Ford Escape with front-end damage consistent with striking a pedestrian.

Troopers seized the vehicle in hopes of retrieving evidence.

Anyone with information about this crash is asked to contact FHP at 407-737-2213 or CrimeLine at 1-800-423-TIPS.

Mount Dora applying for $18 million

Low-interest loans will lay the groundwork for Wolf Branch Innovation District

By Roxanne Brown
roxanne.brown@daily-commercial.com

MOUNT DORA – The Mount Dora City Council plans to apply for about $18 million in low-interest loans to lay the groundwork for the Wolf Branch Innovation District, a massive planned unit development in the making for well over a decade.

The loans would come from a State Revolving Funds program available to cities and governmental entities.

"It's something the state provides and it's a nice program," said Mount Dora Mayor Nick Girone. "We have a lot of important projects that are going to cost a lot of money. We don't have the money in our budget, but instead of going out for bank financing on high-interest loans or special bonding, the state allows cities to apply for basically rock bottom low interest loans."

The four projects Mount Dora hopes to fund will help prepare the 1,300 acres of the Wolf Branch Innovation District for development.

Multi-use residential, industrial and commercial zoning will be involved, and Mount Dora will provide water, sewer and reclaimed water.

During a tour of the site last year, Interim Planning Director Vince Sandersfeld said the Wolf Branch development can be expected in about two years.

While out there, City Manager Robin Hayes and Sandersfeld pointed out 20 acres of already cleared land donated to Lake-Sumter State College for a new campus and 192 multi-use apartments, town homes and condos going up around it.

Before that kind of massive growth can happen, however, updates have to be made to city

Boat ramp plan sails forth

Clermont officials signal approval of Bell Ceramics site

CLERMONT – Plans for the new Clermont boat ramp were unveiled Tuesday night at a City Council workshop, and it was smooth sailing throughout, with no negative comments or contentious questions.

The council still has to vote to approve the plans for what is known locally as the old Bell Ceramics site. City Manager Darren Gray expects that to happen at next week's regular council meeting.

"We want to move forward with this as quickly and as efficiently as possible," Gray said during the workshop.

Parking at the current Clermont boat ramp has been substantially compromised by ongoing construction of the Victory Pointe stormwater treatment system and the adjacent Triathlon Beach event area.

A year ago, city officials had planned to build a replacement ramp on the west shore of Lake Minneola, in the Lake Hiawatha Preserve, and in December they actually voted to do that. But in April, in the wake of two lawsuits and an administrative appeal of the city's boat ramp permit, the council reversed its decision and voted to build the ramp at Bell Ceramics instead.

The Bell site is at the east end of Waterfront Park. This time, as noted by both Gray and design engineer Duane Booth of Tavares-based BESH, Inc.,

Face scans for international travelers at Orlando airport

By Mike Schneider
Associated Press

ORLANDO — Florida's busiest airport is becoming the first in the nation to require a face scan of passengers on all arriving and departing international flights, including U.S. citizens, according to officials there.

The expected announcement Thursday at Orlando International Airport alarms some privacy advocates who say there are no formal rules in place for handling data gleaned from the scans, nor formal guidelines on what should happen if a passenger is wrongly prevented from boarding.

Airports in Atlanta, Boston, Chicago, Houston, Las Vegas, Miami, New York and Washington already use face scans for some departing international flights, but they don't involve all international travelers at the airports like the program's expansion in Orlando would. The image from the face scan is compared to a Department of Homeland Security biometric database that has images of people who should be on the flight, in order to verify the traveler's identity.

U.S. citizens at these airports can opt out, but the agency "doesn't seem to be doing an adequate job letting Americans know they can opt out," said Harrison Rudolph, an associate at the Center on Privacy & Technology at the Georgetown University Law Center.

Internet tax ruling could be major for Florida

By Lloyd Dunkelberger
News Service of Florida

TALLAHASSEE — A U.S. Supreme Court decision expanding the ability of states to pull in tax dollars from online purchases could have a significant impact in Florida.

In a 5-4 ruling Thursday, the nation's highest court upheld a South Dakota law that allowed the state to apply its sales tax to major online retailers, even if they had no physical presence in the state. The ruling reversed a 1992 court decision that held online retailers could only be required to collect and remit sales taxes if they had stores or some other "nexus" in states.

Brick-and-mortar retailers in Florida and other states have long complained that allowing some online retailers to evade sales taxes creates a competitive advantage for the remote sellers. Consumers were supposed to voluntarily pay sales taxes on remote purchases, although it rarely happened.

In his majority opinion Thursday, Justice Anthony Kennedy cited the expansion of internet commerce since the court's 1992 decision, noting national mail-order sales totaled $180 billion at that point, compared to $453.5 billion in online sales in 2017, according to the U.S. Department of Commerce.

"(The prior decision) puts both local businesses and many interstate businesses with physical presence at a competitive disadvantage relative to remote sellers," Kennedy wrote. "Remote sellers can avoid the regulatory burdens of tax collection and can offer de facto lower prices caused by the widespread failure of consumers to pay the tax on their own."

In a dissenting opinion citing the court's prior ruling, Chief Justice John Roberts said federal lawmakers, not the court, should decide whether to tax remote sales.

"Any alteration to those rules with the potential to disrupt the development of such a critical segment of the economy should be undertaken by Congress," he wrote.

The court decision was praised by Florida business groups.

"For years, online-only retailers have exploited this loophole that allows them not resigned to defeat, instead holding out hope that the compromise negotiated among the Republican House majority could sow the seeds for an eventual resolution.

"I actually think we're advancing the cause even if something doesn't necessarily pass," he said. "I think we're making advancements."

And they weren't ready to give up.

GOP lawmakers leaving a two-hour closed-door meeting said there were plans to add two provisions to the sweeping legislation to attract more backing.

One would require employers to use an online system to verify the citizenship of their workers, which could attract conservatives. The other would make it easier for employers to retain migrant workers, which could bolster support from Republicans from agricultural regions. Legislation on those issues had been promised for July, but skeptical lawmakers wanted it done sooner.

The turmoil among Republicans over the bill, hardened in recent days by heart-wrenching images from the crisis at the border — with families separated and young immigrants kept in fenced holding areas — showcased the limits of a go-it-alone GOP immigration strategy.

Republicans have never been able to pass a big immigration overhaul on their own, despite talking about the issue for years. The potential collapse of their latest effort underscores the reality that it probably will require bipartisan consensus to find immigration solutions, even as Republicans control both Congress and the White House.

Trump acknowledged as much. "We need two to tango," he said at the White House.

His offhand comments, coming before votes were cast Thursday, hardly helped an already tenuous situation. Maybe he should invite Democratic leaders Nancy Pelosi and Chuck Schumer to the White House, he suggested.

"We should be able to do a bill. I'd invite them to come to the White House any time they want. This afternoon would be good," Trump said. The Democratic leaders did not arrive.

In fact, the Democrats showed no interest in helping the Republicans without fundamental changes to include their own priorities.

"It is not a compromise," said House Minority Leader Pelosi. "It may be a compromise with the devil, but it is not a compromise with the Democrats."

Rather than help push the bill to the finish line, Trump's mixed messages reinforced his role as an unreliable partner for House Republicans in the immigration debate. First, he had distanced himself from the negotiations. Then, he interjected that he didn't like what they came up with. Then he reversed course and said he would back the compromise — as well as a more conservative measure that went down to defeat earlier Thursday.

to opt out just like at the other airports if they don't want to provide their photograph, Jennifer Gabris, a spokeswoman for the U.S. Customs and Border Protection said in an email. However, a notice about a possible rule change for the program states that "U.S. citizens may be required to provide photographs upon entering or departing the United States."

The Orlando announcement marks a step up in the scope of the face scan program, Rudolph said.

"We're not talking about one gate," he said. "We're talking about every international departure gate, which is a huge expansion of the number of people who will be scanned. Errors tend to go up as uses go up."

Orlando International Airport had about 6 million international passengers in the past year.

Rudolph said he has concerns about the face scans' accuracy, since some research shows they are less accurate with racial minorities, women and children. Researchers say this is because photos used to train the face-scanning software underrepresent minorities, women and young people.

Two U.S. senators last month sent a letter to the Department of Homeland Security, which is home to the border protection agency, urging that formal rules be implemented before the program is expanded.

"It will also ensure a full vetting of this potentially sweeping program that could impact every American leaving the country by airport," said the letter from U.S. Sen. Ed Markey, D-Mass. and U.S. Sen. Mike Lee, R-Utah.

to collect sales tax, which has given them an unfair competitive advantage over brick-and-mortar stores," said James Miller, a spokesman for the Florida Retail Federation. "This decision finally levels that playing field, and I think that's all any business owner wants."

The court decision could also be important in Florida because of the state's heavy reliance on sales-tax revenue. Expected to generate more than $24 billion for the state government in the current fiscal year, the sales tax is the single largest source of funding for the state.

Dominic Calabro, president of Florida TaxWatch, a business-oriented advocacy group, said the ability to apply the sales tax to more internet sales will keep the state's tax structure in sync with the evolving economy.

"The taxpayers of Florida really rely heavily on the sales tax. You've got to have a modern sales tax, so we don't have to have any other kind of tax that people don't want," Calabro said. "So, by relying on a sales tax, you have to make sure it's modern and up to date."

The exact impact of the ruling on Florida's sales tax collections is unknown but it could be significant.

Last November, the federal Government Accountability Office estimated that states could have collected between $8.5 billion and $13.4 billion in sales taxes in 2017 if they had expanded taxing authority. The estimate represented between 2 and 4 percent of total state and local sales tax collections in 2016, the analysts said.

In testimony before the Florida House Ways & Means Committee in January 2017, analysts gave a rough estimate of $200 million in potential sales tax revenue resulting from applying the tax to more remote sales.

In Florida, the sales tax has been applied to a wider range of internet sales over the last few years. In 2014, Amazon, the largest online retailer, began collecting the tax in Florida after it opened a series of "fulfillment centers" in the state. But the tax is not applied to "third-party" sales through the Amazon network.

And according to the Supreme Court case, some large online retailers do not collect taxes on their remote sales. Wayfair Inc., an online retailer of home goods and furniture that challenged the South Dakota law, had more than $4.7 billion in net revenue in 2017, according to the opinion.

But even with the court's decision, not all remote sales are likely to be taxed. The South Dakota law only applied the tax to online retailers that had at least $100,000 of annual sales in the state or 200 individual transactions.

BOAT

the city sought input from an advisory committee of local residents and boaters.

Booth gave the presentation to the council. The Bell Ceramics concept has two double ramps and 116 trailer parking slots, compared with the one double ramp and 77 trailer parking slots that the current Clermont facility had before construction of Victory Pointe and Triathlon Beach started.

Council member Heidi Briske questioned the sizing, noting that the original concept, as voted on in April, was to replace the facility with one of equal size. City Manager Gray and Capital Projects Manager James Kinzler pointed out that the extra parking – the "flex" parking off the west end of the paved oval of the boat launch facility – is an area that the city also plans to use for parking when there are major events at Waterfront Park.

Booth pointed out that by putting the ramps and dock proper at the east end of the property, where the water is deepest, they minimize dredging, and that by clearing vegetation from the dock and ramps only, the project should be easier to permit.

Booth estimates that the Bell Ceramics boat ramp will cost about $500,000 less than the $1.9 million originally budgeted for the Lake Hiawatha Preserve boat ramp, because the Hiawatha site would have necessitated moving part of the area's only north-south road.

Given the regional nature of the project, Gray said, the city may be able to get as much as half of the cost funded by outside sources. He specifically mentioned the Lake County Board of County Commissioners and the Lake County Water Authority. Council member Diane Travis asked Gray to get commitments for outside funding in writing as soon as possible, to help with the budgeting process.

Travis also praised the current design plan for the South Lake Trail. The trail now crosses East Avenue at the north end (closest to the lake), at what Travis has referred to in the past as Dead Man's Curve. As part of the discussion at the April council meeting, when the decision to move the ramp to Bell Ceramics was made, the trail was to extend up the hill from the lake and cross over at the Grand Highway intersection, possibly with a traffic light. That decision upset many trail users who are handicapped and would have had problems with the hill, Travis said.

The current plan is to leave the trail crossing where it is, but with a four-way stop, then to run the trail as tightly as possible on the south side of the boat trailer parking area, but with a buffer.

Access to the boat launch facility will be from East Avenue.

infrastructure and utilities, Girone said.

On Tuesday, Mount Dora's Utilities and Plant Operations Director Joe Grusauskas, along with Mike Scullion from BESH Inc. and Henry Thomas from PRMG, Inc. – engineers and mortgage group experts – detailed the projects the $18 million will fund.

Among the projects is $5.8 million to relocate existing water, sewer and reclaimed water pipes on US Highway 441 out of the current state right-of-ways to allow the road to be widened.

"FDOT says, 'You need to move your pipes so we can do what we need to do.' It's the responsibility of the city and we have to pay for it but it's well worth it to be ready for the growth that's about to happen on our east side," Girone said Thursday. "We can't grow if we don't have the pipes out there. That's what's going to attract future businesses and residents."

The city, as a joint economic development project with the County, will also take $8.4 million to extend utilities from Round Lake Road into the Innovation District at Wolf Branch Road and $4.7 million to update and refurbish its Waste Water Treatment Plant No. 1 and build a lift station to modernize the 40-year-old treatment process currently being used.

In addition, it will take $2.7 million for the construction of pipes needed to hook into Apopka's reclaimed water facility plus a $550,000 state sustainability grant the state awarded to the city for the water project.

Girone said the city will purchase reclaimed water from Apopka and supply them with potable water in the future.

"This project will bring up to 1-million gallons of beneficial reclaimed water to the City Utility to augment city supplies during high demand periods and the new Innovation area," said Mount Dora Spokeswoman Lisa McDonald in an email.

Looking ahead, Girone said money from impact and user fees the city will receive from the Innovation District population can be used to pay back or offset loan costs, maintain current projects and fund future projects.

"The City of Mount Dora wants to prepare for our future as growth into the city continues. These utility functions are important for us to establish the groundwork for what lies ahead for the city, our residents and the businesses," McDonald said.

Girone said the Wolf Branch Innovation District will bring many benefits to not only Lake County, but to the entire Orlando Metropolitan area.

"We are looking at the Innovation District from the stand point of Mount Dora first, but also recognizing that this is a regional system we have here," Girone said. "Volusia, Seminole, Orange and all our neighboring cities in Lake County; they're all part of this.

"We want to make sure we do things that attract all the businesses and residents we are expecting," he added.

MURDER

went into the garage to rob Behney. Behney was shot and killed during the attempted robbery. All three fled in a black Honda.

On April 16, an Orlando police officer spotted the car and noticed that it had a stolen license plate. The car took off and six people bailed out and ran.

Police found a stolen .45-caliber handgun in the car and sent it to the Florida Department of Law Enforcement crime lab, where analysts matched shell casings from the crime scene to the handgun.

Investigators were also able to link the suspects to the car through a crime database. Police were also able to get information from some of the six people that bailed out of the car in Orlando, and that led to Burrows, police said.

Behney, 58, of Denver, Pennsylvania, had been in the area for a few months. He liked to go to motorcycle parts swap meets and was planning to attend Bikefest in Leesburg.

The owner of the garage, once used by a business, gave Behney permission to use the shop to fix his truck.

Darrell Hatcher, Jr., a motorcycle enthusiast, told the Daily Commercial following the murder that he met Behney at the flea market in Fruitland Park. "He was an honest guy," he said.

"This was a crime of greed and opportunity," said Fruitland Park Police Chief Michael Fewless. "Scott Behney did not deserve this, and Fruitland Park will not tolerate it. My deep appreciation goes out to our investigators, officers and FDLE agents, along with the Lake County Sheriff's Office Crime Scene Investigation Unit who worked hard to find the persons responsible."

FDLE Orlando Special Agent in Charge Danny Banks said: "In an effort to solve this horrific murder, FDLE and Fruitland Park Police Department worked long hours and followed through on many leads. We could not be satisfied until we found and arrested all of the parties involved."

Burrows and Mays are in the Lake County Jail, and Splunge is at the Orange County Detention Center.

The case will be prosecuted by the State Attorney's Office out of Tavares.

"I anticipate an adult charge for Splunge," Assistant State Attorney Hugh Bass said.

GAMING

Brain research supports that definition, and some imaging studies have suggested that excessive gaming might affect the brain in similar ways.

Under a looser definition, addiction is considered "a disease of extreme behavior. Any behavior carried to extreme that consumes you and keeps you from doing what you should be doing becomes an addiction as far as life is concerned," said Dr. Walter Ling, a UCLA psychiatrist.

In its widely used manual for diagnosing mental illness, the American Psychiatric Association calls excessive video gaming a "condition" but not a formal diagnosis or disease, and says more research is needed to determine if it qualifies as an addiction.

Drugs and the brain

Certain drugs including opioids and alcohol can over-activate the brain's reward circuit. That's the system that under normal circumstances is activated when people engage in "behaviors conducive to survival" including eating and drinking water when thirsty, explained Dr. Andrew Saxon, chairman of the association's addiction psychiatry council. The brain chemical dopamine regulates these behaviors, but narcotic drugs can flood the brain with dopamine, encouraging repeated use and making drug use more rewarding that healthy behaviors, Saxon said. Eventually increasing amounts are needed to get the same effect, and brain changes lead to an inability to control use.

What about other substances?

Caffeine is a stimulant and also activates the brain's reward system, but to a much lesser degree than addictive drugs. The "reward" can make people feel more alert, and frequent users can develop mild withdrawal symptoms when they stop, including headaches and tiredness. Caffeine-containing chocolate may produce similar effects. Neither substance causes the kinds of life problems found in drug addiction, although some coffee drinkers develop a tolerance to caffeine and need to drink more to get the same "buzz" or sense of alertness.

KOREA

toward denuclearization in exchange for U.S. security guarantees.

The positive feelings about the summit among Americans don't appear to have made a dent in Trump's overall approval rating, which stands at just 41 percent and has not significantly changed since March. As the poll was being conducted, Trump was embroiled in controversy over his administration's policy of separating children from their parents after border agents catch the families crossing into the U.S. illegally.

Yet even people unhappy with Trump overall are willing to admire his efforts at detente with North Korea. Last September, Trump taunted Kim as "Rocket Man" in a speech at the United Nations, during which he vowed to "totally destroy North Korea" if the U.S. was forced to defend itself or its allies. Last week, after meeting with Kim, he tweeted, "there is no longer a nuclear threat from North Korea."

"I hate to give Donald Trump any credit, but the fact is he was able to sit down with the man and possibly get the volume of that threat turned down significantly," said Susan Leo, 66, a retired minister from Santa Cruz, California, who supported Democrat Hillary Clinton for president.

Still, she added, when she considers the big picture, Trump's presidency is "a nightmare. There's absolutely no integrity in his life and in his presidency overall."

Leo isn't alone in having such split views of the president. While only 9 percent of Democrats and 37 percent of independents approve of how Trump's performance as president overall, 31 percent of Democrats and 53 percent of independents approve of his work with North Korea.

Long-term mortgage rates fall; 30-year at 4.57 percent

Long-term U.S. mortgage rates fell this week, marking their third decline in the past four weeks after increasing last week.

Mortgage buyer Freddie Mac said Thursday the average rate on 30-year, fixed-rate mortgages was 4.57 percent, down from 4.62 percent last week. By contrast, the 30-year rate averaged 3.90 percent a year ago.

Opening punches

By Paul Wiseman
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The United States attacked first, imposing tariffs on steel and aluminum from around the globe and threatening to hit tens of billions of dollars in Chinese products.

Now, the world is punching back.

The European Union is set Friday to slap tariffs on $3.4 billion in American products, from whiskey and motorcycles to peanuts and cranberries. India and Turkey have already targeted U.S. products, ranging from rice to autos to sunscreen.

And the highest-stakes fight still looms: In two weeks, the United States is to start taxing $34 billion in Chinese goods. Beijing has vowed to immediately retaliate with its own tariffs on U.S. soybeans and other farm products in a direct shot at President Donald Trump's supporters in America's heartland.

The tit-for-tat conflict between the United States and China — the world's two largest economies — is poised to escalate from there. The rhetoric is already intensifying.

"We oppose the act of extreme pressure and blackmail by swinging the big stick of trade protectionism," a spokesman for China's Commerce Ministry said Thursday. "The U.S. is abusing the tariff methods and starting trade wars all around the world."

Cecilia Malmstrom, the EU's trade commissioner, acknowledged that the EU had targeted some iconic American imports for tariffs, like Harley-Davidson motorcycles and bourbon, to "make noise" and put pressure on U.S. leaders.

John Murphy, a senior vice president at the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, estimates that $75 billion in U.S. products will be subject to new foreign tariffs by the end of the first week of July.

"We've never seen anything like this," said Mary Lovely, a Syracuse University economist who studies international trade — at least not since countries tried to wall themselves off from foreign competition during the Great Depression.

Those personally in the line of fire are among the most concerned.

"It will be a disaster," said Nagesh Balesu, who owns the Salt Whisky Bar and Dining Room in London and expects the European Union's tariffs to add nearly $7 to the price of a bottle of Jack Daniels, which is imported from Tennessee. "It's going to hit customers, that's for sure. How they'll take it, we'll have to wait and see."

As painful as the brewing trade war could prove, many have seen it coming.

Trump ran for the presidency on a vow to topple seven decades of American policy that had favored ever-freer trade among nations. He charged that a succession of poorly negotiated accords — including the North American Free Trade Agreement and the pact that admitted China into the World Trade Organization — put American manufacturers at an unfair disadvantage and destroyed millions of U.S. factory jobs.

He pledged to impose tariffs on imports from countries that Trump said had exploited the United States. Late last month, Trump proceeded to infuriate U.S. allies — from the EU to Canada and Mexico by imposing tariffs of 25 percent on imported steel and 10 percent on aluminum. The president justified the move by saying imported metals threatened America's national security — a dubious justification that countries have used rarely because it can be so easily abused.

And he is threatening to impose another national security-based tariff on imports of cars, trucks and auto parts.

Trump has also started a trade fight with China over Beijing's sharp-elbowed efforts to overtake U.S. technological dominance. China's tactics range from forcing American companies to hand over technology in exchange for access to the Chinese market to outright cyber-theft.

US stocks skid as industrials, autos, tech trade lower

By Marley Jay
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Car makers and technology and industrial companies fell Thursday as investors focused on the U.S.-China trade dispute, which could reduce company spending and earnings. The Dow Jones Industrial Average slipped for the eighth day in a row.

While investors generally don't expect a trade war between the U.S. and China, they remain sensitive to signs that rising tariffs and trade tensions will hurt the global economy and reduce corporate profits. This week they've received some signs that this is happening. On Thursday German automaker Daimler said the tariffs China plans to put on cars imported from the U.S. will contribute to a small decline in earnings this year.

The previous day, Fed Chairman Jerome Powell said the Fed has heard about businesses holding off on hiring and spending in response to the trade conflicts. Kate Moore, global equity strategist for BlackRock, said that investors have been hoping that the Republican-backed corporate tax cut would encourage companies to hire more workers, boost pay, and expand their operations, but the uncertainty over tariffs is discouraging them from doing that.

"There's a fear that rising uncertainty around trade and tariffs is going to significantly affect investment decisions and hiring decisions, and potentially take some steam off of what has looked like a very strong expansion," she said.

Online retailers skidded and rivals such as department stores rose after the Supreme Court ruled that states can force more online shoppers to pay sales tax. Energy companies declined ahead of a meeting where OPEC countries and other nations are expected to increase oil production. Bond yields fell, and big dividend companies like real estate investment trusts and utilities made some of the biggest gains on Wall Street.

The S&P 500 index slid 17.56 points, or 0.6 percent, to 2,749.76. The Dow fell 196.10 points, or 0.8 percent, to 24,461.70. The index has fallen 3.4 percent over the last eight days. Its last losing streak this long was in March 2017. The Nasdaq composite lost 68.56 points, or 0.9 percent, to 7,712.95. The Russell 2000 index of smaller-company stocks declined 18.04 points, or 1.1 percent, to 1,688.95. The Nasdaq and Russell 2000 both closed at record highs Wednesday.

A more humane border policy

With a stroke of his pen, President Donald Trump on Wednesday sought to undo the damage his administration has done to thousands of immigrant children — and to itself. The executive order he signed aims to keep together families caught illegally entering the country at the southern border.

It's a welcome reversal of a policy he and other administration officials previously had said they had no power to change — which raises the question of why, if such an action was available, it wasn't employed sooner.

Now it's up to Congress to ensure that more is done.

The Trump administration's "zero tolerance" enforcement of U.S. immigration law has created worse problems than the one it was attempting to solve — from humanitarian and political perspectives. Separating children from their parents, and keeping them confined for weeks in what amount to cages, is inhumane and an unacceptable price to pay for border security. Although this practice was conducted sparingly by previous administrations, under Trump it had been ramped up on an unprecedented scale.

Before, U.S. policy was to intercept families at the border, then release them from custody with the promise they would appear for a court date to adjudicate their claims of asylum. Not surprisingly, many never showed up. This "catch and release" made a mockery of immigration law.

The Trump administration solution was to detain all illegal entrants at the border until their cases could be heard. However, the law and Supreme Court decisions mandated that the government place the children with other family members, in foster homes, or in temporary shelters until their parents are free to care for them again.

The administration's "zero tolerance" crackdown that began in April resulted in more than a thousand families being separated, overwhelming the system. The government lacked sufficient resources to swiftly adjudicate the cases and reunite the families, which forced thousands of children to be held apart for long periods in makeshift detainment facilities.

The reports, sights and sounds of young children crying for their mothers and fathers are heartbreaking and intolerable. Yet, pain is exactly what the administration hoped would deter illegal border crossings, as well as compel Congress to produce comprehensive immigration reform legislation — heavy on the enforcement aspects the president favors.

Enough. Children should not be pawns in a political game, nor should they be made to suffer for their parents' decisions to take unlawful actions to seek a better life. There are better options than having to choose between two bad policies, "catch and release" and "zero tolerance."

Trump's executive order ends the cruel separation of families, but more is needed statutorily. Legislation should be passed to prohibit separations unless there is risk of harm to the children, appropriate funds for new shelters to keep families together in one place,; hire more immigration judges and expedite the asylum process.

Those are steps the Trump administration should have sought before it cracked down on the border and inflicted hardship on so many innocent children. Congress should act expeditiously.

How Russia has regressed since winning its World Cup bid

With the World Cup underway in Russia, the host country is naturally enjoying a lot of international attention. Conspicuously absent from that coverage, however, are Moscow's many transgressions since it won the bid in 2010 to host. The Russia of 2018 probably wouldn't even get the chance.

Russia won the bid on June 8, 2010, three days before the World Cup kicked off in South Africa. Back then, things were different. U.S.-Russia relations weren't great, but they weren't terrible, either. It was a year after then-Secretary of State Hillary Clinton tried to "reset" relations with Russia. (That was a miserable failure, by the way.)

In the eight years since, Russia's offenses have accumulated, to say the least.

To start, Russia annexed Crimea in March 2014 while the Sochi Winter Olympics provided a distraction.

This harkens back to August 2008, when Russia invaded Georgia during the Beijing Summer Olympics. Today, Russia occupies 20 percent of Georgian territory and continues to annex it, bit by bit.

In addition to annexing Crimea in 2014, Russia instigated a war in Donbas, Ukraine. Now four years later, the war continues, having claimed more than 10,000 lives. Moscow still backs pro-Russian separatists, sustaining the conflict in doing so.

A year later, in 2015, Russia decided to support Syrian President Bashar Assad, and launched air strikes in his country. Reviving the Syrian civil war (already four years old at this point) began a more long-term conflict among Russia, Syria and the United States. Moscow's bombing campaign has proven particularly destructive. It has killed thousands of innocent Syrian citizens; destroyed medical facilities; and levelled houses, businesses, and hospitals.

In 2016, the U.S. held its presidential election, in which Russia largely interfered. The interference was massive, and quite unique — a double threat. It manifested itself through Facebook ads designed to create a rift in American society. In addition, pro-Trump and anti-Clinton news stories were broadcasted across Russia. This year in the U.S. primary elections, special counsel Robert Mueller has proven that Russia is interfering once again.

To add insult to past injury, Russia struck Ukraine in 2017 in another capacity — cybercrime. The calamitous cyberattack, NotPetya, was part of Russia's effort to destabilize Ukraine even further than in the past. Billions of dollars of damage ensued, and the entire globe suffered.

Then this year, Russia committed a crime against the United Kingdom, and relations with both the U.K. and U.S. deteriorated. In March, a former Russian double agent and his daughter were poisoned with Novichok, a Soviet-era nerve agent. Evidence proved Russia responsible for the attack. Because the attacks were a threat to U.K. sovereignty, the U.S. and more than 20 European Union allies, including the U.K., expelled more than 100 Russian diplomats from their borders.

Russia also has persecuted opposition figures within its own borders. These persecutions range from the Polonium poisoning of Alexander Litvinenko, to the blatant murder of Boris Nemtsov, to the multiple imprisonments of Aleksei Navalny. Moscow will do whatever necessary to rid itself of these and many other foes of the Kremlin.

Circumstances on the domestic front have also changed much since 2010. For one, the Russian people have suffered under the Putin regime, whether they realize it or not. Putin and his cronies steal more from Russians' paychecks each year for their personal use, exhibited in their superfluous and ostentatious estates and palaces.

Additionally, the pursuit of democracy is under constant threat. Elections are rigged. Bribes and ballot-stuffing are prevalent, and Putin allows no true opposition candidates to run against him.

Russia has also dealt with the Olympics doping scandal this past year, which resulted in its eligible athletes being forced to compete under the neutral Olympics flag, rather than the Russian flag.

Much has changed since 2010. If the decision for Russia to host the World Cup had been made this past year, FIFA likely would not have granted it the honor. Russia needs to change its actions for the better — for the sake of its own citizens, as well as many others around the globe.

Solar panel tariffs are a huge step in the wrong direction

Trump's tariffs on solar panels are a huge step in the wrong direction for a nation that needs to be leading the way in renewable energy. These tariffs need to be repealed and long term solutions devised.

For instance, we should be looking into ways we can transform coal country into the hub for domestic renewable energy manufacturing. Incentivizing renewable energy industrial businesses to build factories in coal country and to hire, and train, the local community could go a long way to making us self sufficient for our renewable energy needs. It would also put our blighted coal country to work in good paying jobs with benefits and a healthy work environment.

Tariffs are rarely the best answer to an issue and in this case simply investing in ourselves could kill two birds with one stone.

Dreamers need compassion, not amnesty

When I read the front page article in Sunday's Daily Commercial ("GOP Risking Backlash on Immigration"), it once again reinforced my conclusion that so many people, and especially many of those idiots in Washington, have no concept of the definition of the term "amnesty."

The legal definition of the word is: "The action of the government by which all persons or certain groups of persons who have committed a criminal offense, usually of a political nature, that threatens the sovereignty of the government, such as sedition or treason, are granted immunity from prosecution." So when people assert that "amnesty" is being proposed for those Dreamers who were brought to the United States as children; have served in our armed forces; have gone to school here; and have become taxpaying contributors to our society, those people are showing their own ignorance. For the most part, these Dreamers have never committed a criminal offense. Therefore, the term "amnesty" is totally inappropriate when used in the context of the Dreamers.

If those most militant conservatives in Congress wish to deport tens of thousands of children who know no other homeland but the United States and who have committed no crimes threatening the sovereignty of the United States, then so be it. But, again, they are merely exhibiting their own ignorance and their total lack of the so-called Christian values that they supposedly adhere to. How hypocritical is that!

Force change, before it's too late

Police beat, shoot and kill innocent people of color, and we do nothing.The Border Patrol and ICE separate families, taking children only a few years old away from their mothers seeking asylum in the United States, leaving them terrified and helpless. And we do nothing.People use assault rifles, military weapons of mass destruction, to mow down school children and people at concerts, races, nightclubs and theaters. And we do nothing.Voices of outrage and sympathy are temporarily raised. Then what happens? Nothing! We are supposed to be democracy, at least for the time being, and yet we let our government get away with so much that we, as a country, don't stand for in principle.

We are still fortunate enough to have a vote in this country. If we don't use it to force the changes we want, we may not have that luxury much longer.

Several top stars struggling in Russia

By Mauricio Savarese
The Associated Press

SARANSK, Russia — With nagging injuries, heavy marking from opponents and some simply uninspired play, the top stars of the 2018 World Cup have struggled to deliver on the impossible expectations they carried into the tournament, with one prominent Portuguese exception.

Aside from Cristiano Ronaldo, who has all four of Portugal's goals in its two games, many of the biggest names are off to a shaky start.

No one has had rougher treatment from the opposition than the world's priciest player, Neymar. During Brazil's opening 1-1 draw with Switzerland, the 26-year-old was fouled 10 times, the highest number on a single player in a single match since the 1998 World Cup, when England's Alan Shearer took 11 challenges against Tunisia.

Overall, Switzerland fouled Brazil 19 times , with little intervention from the referee, and it worked — especially on Neymar. Brazilians suggested their opponents were too violent; Swiss midfielder Gelson Fernandes thinks Neymar has another problem.

"He just falls too much," Fernandes said after the game in Rostov-on-Don. "Out of these 10, only seven or eight were fouls. We have to stop their star, and he is the star."

Neymar felt the effects of the Swiss strategy long after Sunday's match ended, limping out of training Tuesday as he continues to recover from a foot injury he picked up before the tournament. He trained Wednesday and was confirmed as a starter for the match against Costa Rica on Friday.

Superstar Lionel Messi did face heavy marking too, but

NEW YORK — Deandre Ayton became the first No. 1 Sun and Luka Doncic was traded only a day after arriving in the U.S.

The Atlanta Hawks swapped the rights to Doncic, the No. 3 pick from Slovenia, to Atlanta for Trae Young, the No. 5 selection from Oklahoma in on Thursday night in the NBA draft.

The Mavericks also gave up a future first-round pick to draft Doncic, who only arrived in New York on Wednesday after helping Spain's Real Madrid win its league championship after he won Euroleague MVP and Final Four MVP honors when they won that title this year.

His lengthy European season kept him from working out for teams but he knew the Mavericks liked him.

"I've been talking to Dallas a lot. They really wanted me, and they were very, very nice," the 19-year-old said. "They were very nice to me, and I think we had a very good relationship."

The Hawks will get perhaps the most exciting player in college basketball last season, the first player to lead the nation in scoring and assists in the same

Croatia routs Argentina, advances at World Cup

The Associated Press

NIZHNY NOVGOROD, Russia — Lionel Messi's frustrating international career may be coming to an early and anti-climactic finish after Argentina's worst loss in World Cup group play in 60 years.

With Diego Maradona watching from the stands, the 2014 runners-up were routed by Croatia 3-0 Thursday. The Croats are moving on to the round of 16.

Messi got off only one shot in a defeat that pushed Argentina to the brink of elimination. Messi, who turns 31 on Sunday, has never won a major title with Argentina's senior national team despite of decade of championships with Barcelona and five player of the year awards.

"He is our captain, he leads the team and we quite simply couldn't pass to him," Argentina coach Jorge Sampaoli said. "We work to give Leo the ball, but the opponent also works hard to prevent him from getting the ball."

Messi also missed a penalty kick in his team's opening 1-1 draw against Iceland.

Lightning just keep finding ways to win

Frank Jolley

The Leesburg Lightning are completely out of hand right now.

It's almost like they've forgotten how to lose.

Just three weeks into the Florida Collegiate Summer League season, the Lightning are trying to run away and hide from the rest of the league. Following a 17-11 loss in its season opener, which seemed like an ominous start at the time, Leesburg has since rattled off 11 consecutive wins.

The streak is a franchise record, eclipsing the previous mark of 10 straight wins by the 2012 team. That group finished with a league-best 26-15 mark, but lost 10-7 to DeLand in the FCSL Championship game at Tropicana Field in St. Petersburg.

Leesburg has an 11-1 record and leads second place Winter Park by five games. At this point, the Lightning have turned the FCSL into their own personal playground, while the rest of the league is playing for postseason seeding.

Of course, it's way too early to make that kind of boast.

But that's the buzz around Pat Thomas Stadium-Buddy Lowe Field nowadays.

Each game during the winning streak has been more like a fresh canvas, with a different player every night painting the finishing brushstrokes on a new masterpiece.

The ballpark has been transformed into a theater of sorts, with many games possessing a suspenseful, almost cinematic, feel to them.

The Lightning have been masters of illusion, seeming doomed and destined for defeat heading into their final at bats in three games during the streak. Each time, however, they rallied or broke a tie, including a pair of walk-off wins.

They've taken advantage of unforced fielding faux pas to scratch out runs and have forced opposing defenses into countless errors by creating pressure points on the basepaths.

With each win, the rest of the league gets smaller in the Lightning's rearview mirror.

However, before the Lightning Nation gets too carried away, let's remember this is baseball.

Anything can happen.

STORRS, CONN.
UConn: Ollie fired for impermissible contact

The University of Connecticut fired men's basketball coach Kevin Ollie after finding NCAA violations that included improper training sessions and improper contact with recruits by Ollie and former UConn star Ray Allen, according to documents released by the school. The violations are laid out in more than 1,300 pages of emails, transcripts and contracts given to The Associated Press and other media organizations who filed Freedom of Information requests with the school after Ollie was fired in March. They were released this week after UConn President Susan Herbst upheld the firing decision, a process that now heads to arbitration. The NCAA is investigating UConn for potential violations, but has not issued a finding.

NEW YORK
Serena: Young boys need domestic abuse education

Serena Williams says the conversation about stopping domestic abuse shouldn't just center around women, but men as well. The tennis superstar says education about domestic abuse should start when men are young boys. "I think expanding the conversation to men and expanding the conversation to young boys, it's so important," she said in an interview on Wednesday. "This is a human rights issue. We should all be treated the same. We should be treated equal. With domestic abuse, it doesn't care what color you are, what background you're from," she continued.

season. Otherwise, the top of the draft was dominated by big men, starting with a pair of former high school teammates.

The Suns stayed close to home to make the 7-foot-1 Ayton the first No. 1 pick in franchise history. The center from Arizona averaged 20.1 points and 11.6 rebounds in his lone season in Tucson, tying for the national lead with 24 double-doubles in 35 games.

He joined Mychal Thompson — father of Golden State All-Star Klay Thompson — in 1978 as the only players from the Bahamas to be the No. 1 pick in the NBA draft.

"Having my name called to be the first pick for the Phoenix Suns was mind-blowing," Ayton said. "Having all that confidence and leading up to that point when I saw Adam Silver came out, I was just waiting for my name, and when he called it, my mind went blank."

The Sacramento Kings followed by taking Marvin Bagley III, the Duke big man who played with Ayton at Hillcrest Prep Academy in Phoenix in 2015-16.

With Jaren Jackson Jr. going fourth to Memphis, Texas center Mo Bamba going No. 6 to Orlando and Wendell Carter Jr. following to Chicago, it was an early run of big men in what's increasingly become a perimeter-based league.

Then it was another guard with Alabama's Collin Sexton going at No. 8 to Cleveland, triggering chants of Michael Porter Jr.'s name by Knicks fans who hoped they would take him with the No. 9 pick. But they ended up disappointed as New York went with Kentucky's Kevin Knox.

With concerns over back problems that limited him to only three games at Missouri last season, Porter ended up falling all the way to Denver at No. 14, the last lottery position.

WORLD CUP

starting role because No. 1 keeper Sergio Romero injured his knee last month in the run-up to the tournament.

"We have to swallow the poison," Argentina midfielder Javier Mascherano said. "The game says it all."

Argentina, which has not missed making the second round since 2002, has not been eliminated. But the two-time champions need to win their next match against Nigeria on Tuesday, as well as get help from other matches.

Thursday's humiliating loss came in humiliating fashion for one of soccer's most storied nations.

Caballero mangled a clearance and kicked the ball toward Croatia defender Ante Rebic, who one-timed it into the net in the 53rd minute.

Caballero buried his face in his hands while a giant television screen showed Maradona doing the same.

"After they scored on us, we were emotionally broken," Sampaoli said. "I had a lot of hope. I am extremely hurt by this defeat, but I probably didn't understand the match the way I should have."

And it got worse as Argentina crumbled, frustrated by the Croatian defense. Modric scored with a hooking shot in the 80th and Ivan Rakitic added the third in stoppage time.

Croatia frustrated Argentina throughout the match and never gave Messi space to operate.

"Argentina wasn't confused. We were excellent," Croatia coach Zlatko Dalic said. "We beat a great Argentina with the best player in the world playing, Messi."

Croatia, which reached the 1998 World Cup semifinals but has not advanced past the group stage since then, will face Iceland on Tuesday in Rostov-on-Don.

"Let's keep our feet firmly on the ground and prepare for the next matches," said Modric, the man of the match. "We should be focused on what awaits. Every next game is going to be more difficult, but our main objective has been reached. It looks easy, but it was not that easy."

Argentina won the World Cup in 1978 and 1986 — the last with Maradona as the star player — but has not won any major title in 25 years. The Argentines also lost in the last two Copa America finals.

JOLLEY

Certainly, the Lightning are going to lose a game — probably several — before the season comes to an end. In fact, they'll probably have to find a way to snap a losing streak or two before season wraps up in about five weeks.

It's the nature of the game.

The Lightning will not play at a .917 winning percentage all season, as they have through their first 12 games. This isn't football and basketball.

Even the best teams in baseball win only about 60 percent of the time. Of course, there are exceptions — the 1998 New York Yankees won at a .704 clip, while the 1973 New York Mets had a .509 winning percentage — but that's about the norm.

In the FCSL, that equates to 18 losses over a complete 45-game schedule.

Leesburg would have to go 16-17 the rest of the way to finish with a .600 winning percentage (27-18).

That would be the second best regular-season record in team history, behind the 29-12 mark in 2011. But, after this blistering start, would that be a disappointing finish?

Hope not.

It's not easy to do what this year's team has already accomplished. Players come together a couple of days before the season begins and have to begin the process of becoming a team.

Oftentimes, that can take weeks or even the better part of the season.

For this group, however, that seems to have taken just a matter of days.

And the scary part ... at least, for the rest of the league?

Leesburg hasn't played many perfect games.

The pitching, for one, hasn't been entirely dominant, and the defense has booted away some seemingly certain outs. There have been baserunning blunders and a few poor at bats in crucial situations.

It's already been a special season for players and fans. Of course, there's still a long way to go, and many in the Lightning Nation will say a record in June means little if the season doesn't end with a championship in August.

Right now, the Lightning have to be considered the favorites to win the Whiting Cup — the FCSL championship trophy — for the third time in franchise history and the first time since 2009. Every other team looks like distant runners-up.

All the Lightning have to do is keep winning.

They've gotten that down to a science.

RUSSIA

he also had two uninspired performances for Argentina, which is now on the verge of early elimination after a 3-0 defeat against Croatia.

Throughout the matches against Iceland and Croatia, disciplined defenders and midfielders stopped Messi from making his famous runs and getting one-on-one chances.

Against Iceland, Messi saw his penalty spot kick saved by goalkeeper Hannes Halldorsson, and the game ended 1-1.

Against Croatia, he crumbled with the rest of the team, which now desperately needs to beat Nigeria in the last round of group stage to have a chance of advancing to the next phase.

"Messi is human," Aguero said after the Iceland match. "Sometimes things happen for a reason. We need to be with him. This was a bad day, but he can decide a match at any given moment. Hope he is better against Croatia."

Croatia was taking note.

"You can't stop him with one player, you have to defend like a team. You saw that with Iceland," defender Dejan Lovren said ahead of the Argentina clash late Thursday.

Egypt striker Mohamed Salah set a Premier League scoring record for Liverpool and held all the hopes for a deep run by the Pharaohs in their return to the World Cup, until he injured his shoulder playing for Liverpool in the Champions League final in a clash with Real Madrid's Sergio Ramos, of Spain.

Salah sat out the opening 1-0 loss to Uruguay in Yekaterinburg, with coach Hector Cuper hoping to have him fit for Egypt's second match, against Russia.

He made his World Cup debut in St. Petersburg and scored from the penalty spot, but only after the hosts led by three goals, and his mobility was clearly affected. He barely touched the ball in the first half and avoided physical contact with Russian defenders during the entire game, and Egypt was eliminated with one match left to play.

Ronaldo isn't entirely alone in starting strong. Diego Costa has three of Spain's four goals, Harry Kane has both of England's, and Luka Modric scored one goal and set up the other in Croatia's 2-0 win over Nigeria.

And there's plenty of time for others to turn things around. Kylian Mbappe, the 19-year-old striker at the center of the second-most expensive transfer in history, managed just one chance in France's 2-1 win over Australia in Kazan, but scored Thursday against Peru in front of an empty net. His famous runs and dribbles, however, were blocked by Australia's physical game.

It's early, and the tournament has seen plenty of stellar play from lesser-known players, but many of the star scorers have work to do.

ROUNDUP/MATCHUPS

Yankees 4, Mariners 3: Aaron Judge and Miguel Andujar hit two-run homers off James Paxton in the first inning that sent New York past Seattle for a three-game sweep. Luis Severino and the Yankees boosted the best record in the majors to 50-22. They've won four in a row and 17 of 21. Seattle has lost a season-high four straight.
Red Sox 9, Twins 2: Rick Porcello allowed one hit in seven innings, Mookie Betts and Andrew Benintendi homered and Boston topped Minnesota to avoid a series sweep. Xander Bogaerts had two RBIs for the Red Sox, who had a season-high 16 hits, and finished 6-4 on a road trip through Baltimore, Seattle and Minnesota.
Rockies 6, Mets 4: Nolan Arenado homered for the third straight game and drove in five runs as Colorado got past New York. Arenado also doubled to back another strong outing from Kyle Freeland (7-6). Use cellphone video to document tricky mechanical issues

Brad Bergholdt

Q: We have a 2015 Hyundai Sonata Limited. It wasn't long after we purchased it, it developed the following problem: When I wanted to go into smart cruise control, it would refuse and indicate that SCC (smart cruise control) conditions are not met. The difficult part of this is that this would happen intermittently. The dealership checked it out numerous times over the past two to three years to no avail. Then they brought in a top engineer to check it out. They said he made full alignment of the system, and the problem still happens. They cannot replicate the problem. It seems this is the only Hyundai with this problem. The problem arises no matter what the weather, and, yes, the car is clean. It is in the garage most of the time. It has over 23,000 miles. Any ideas?

—Roy A.

A: Your smart cruise control system employs a radar sensor and smart integration between the powertrain, braking and other control modules to adapt to traffic ahead and maintain a safe following distance relative to the speed you've requested.

The list of possible disabling conditions is lengthy, with a dirty, misaligned, or faulty radar unit included.

Here's a question for you: When the SCC system is unavailable, are you able to engage the basic cruise control instead (press and hold the "distance" button for two seconds)? If so, this would rule out about 90 percent of the items on the list.

As with all intermittent problems, carefully detailing the conditions present at the time of symptom is essential. Having a passenger record a phone video of an unsuccessful smart cruise control engagement attempt, narrated with appropriate comments would solidify your concern (car companies prefer this word over complaint) and help you pressure Hyundai's customer service folks to get that engineer back on it, and perhaps replace the integrated radar/SCC control unit. Seeking a repair attempt as soon as possible after a failure provides the best chance of holding any stored diagnostic trouble codes in memory.

I searched for applicable service bulletins and cast a wide net for similar concerns but came up empty. This appears to be a unique problem. Turn up the heat with that video!

Q: My red battery indicator has begun to light up at certain times. What could cause this?

—Dave W.

A: Depending on the vehicle, there could be several possible causes for this; usually it's because the alternator is not supplying sufficient energy for vehicle use and battery state of charge. Alternator is a term used for a vehicle's belt-driven electrical generating device; it converts the engine's mechanical energy into electrical energy.

With the engine off and cool, try grabbing and rotating the alternator's pulley against the stationary drive belt. If you can slip the

Hyundai's 2018 Ioniq Hybrid gives consumers a competitor to the Prius

By G. Chambers Williams III
Tribune News Service

The 2018 Hyundai IONIQ Hybrid entered its second year for 2018, with a starting price of $22,200 (plus $885 freight) for the base Blue model, and it ranges as high as $27,550 for the top-of-the-line Limited. [HYUNDAI / TNS]

The compact Ioniq Hybrid, introduced last year to be Hyundai's direct competitor to the popular Toyota Prius, entered its second year for 2018, with a starting price of $22,200 (plus $885 freight) for the base Blue model, and it ranges as high as $27,550 for the top-of-the-line Limited.

In between is the SEL model for $24,000. And all new for 2018 is the Ioniq Plug-In Hybrid, which can go up to nearly 30 miles on battery power alone before recharging, but also can continue in gasoline mode as well.

Also available is the Ioniq Electric, which starts at $29,500, and is powered by battery only. The Ioniq Electric has a range between charges of about 124 miles, but the lithium-ion battery can be recharged to at least 80 percent of full charge in about 23 minutes, using a Level 3 fast charger.

With these variants, Hyundai became the first automaker to introduce the same vehicle in three electric configurations: a conventional hybrid; a plug-in hybrid that gives owners both a regular hybrid setup and an EV drive mode; and a pure EV version similar to the Nissan Leaf and Chevrolet Bolt. The electric model is available at dealerships in California, or only by special order at dealers outside California.

The first version to arrive was the Ioniq Hybrid, which has a maximum EPA fuel-economy rating of 58 mpg — better than the most-fuel-efficient Prius. That's for the base Blue model; our tester, the Hybrid Limited, has a rating of 55 mpg city/54 highway/55 combined.

With the Ioniq Plug-In Hybrid's range of more than 29 miles on a full charge, Hyundai says owners who have short daily commutes might not need to buy gasoline very often. The gasoline engine kicks in when the battery gets low, or the driver switches to "Sport" driving mode.

For this report, we tested the Ioniq Hybrid Limited, which, like the SEL model, has the slightly lower EPA ratings than the Blue model. The Blue version is rated 59 mpg city/57 highway/58 combined. (In comparison, the base Prius is rated 54/50/52.)

Outside, the Ioniq Hybrid is similar to the regular Prius, including having the two glass panels in the rear liftgate — the larger one on top, and a smaller one underneath. As with the Prius, the Ioniq seats up to five people. It's an inch shorter and two inches wider than the Prius, but has five cubic feet more interior space overall.

Another key difference is that the Ionic Hybrid and Plug-In Hybrid come with a six-speed double-clutch automatic transmission, while the Prius comes only with a continuously variable automatic.

Having a conventional transmission gives the Ioniq a more-conventional and sportier driving experience than the Prius, particularly when the gearshift lever is pushed to the left to engage the Sport mode.

That raises the shift points, keeps the gasoline engine on full-time, and allows for spirited driving. When quick pickup for passing is necessary, the Sport

Base price range: $22,200-$27,550, plus $885 freight.

The 2018 Nissan Kicks proves how lucky we are to be Americans

By Larry Printz
Tribune News Service

The Nissan Color Studio is all about style, color and personalization. The all-new 2018 Nissan Kicks, with its roots tracing back to Nissan's Rio de Janeiro design studio's Kicks Concept car, is also all about style, color and personalization. It's only natural that the two get together with the launch of the new Kicks Color Studio. [NISSAN/TNS]

SAN DIEGO — Sometimes you feel that as good as life is, it can always better. It's like eating a hamburger and realizing that it would have been tastier with melted cheese on it. But then you look at the person seated near you eating a bologna sandwich and realize that things could always be worse.

It's not unlike traveling abroad.

As nice as it is to experience different countries, upon returning, you feel lucky to live in America. Because, for example, if you live in Brazil and want to buy the new Nissan Kicks, you'll find it's a pricey premium vehicle, something it's not in the United States. Here, the new 2018 Kicks is an amazing value that starts at $17,995. Offered in ascending S, SV and SR models, this vehicle is filled with features that, for the money, make it a great value, like a 60 percent off sale at Macy's.

Importantly, every Kicks gets Automatic Emergency Braking, which brakes the car if it senses a collision is imminent. Bluetooth, three USB ports, a rearview monitor, keyless entry, push button start, roof rails and automatic headlights are also standard. Opt for the SV and you get Apple CarPlay, Android Auto, blind spot warning, rear cross traffic alert, 17-inch aluminum-alloy wheels, body color heated outside mirrors and outside door handles, rear tonneau cover, automatic climate control, seven-inch driver display, SiriusXM satellite radio, and remote engine start. SR models get additional LED lighting, fog lights, special trim, leather-wrapped steering wheel and shift knob, and a monitor that gives a 360-degree view around the vehicle. It also gives you access to the Premium Package, which includes a Bose eight-speaker audio system, heated front seats and a security system.

And it's wrapped in a wardrobe that looks modern without seeming goofy, like the late Nissan Juke. The car's side sculpting gives the car a deceptively long look. It's seems sporty yet urbane, even though it wears the latest in Nissan design hallmarks, including the floating roof and V-Motion grille. And it comes in seven colors and five two-tone color combinations.

Climb inside and you'll find the seats are firm and oddly bolstered but supportive. The tall seating

5 best states for summer road trips

Here is how the top 5 list for best summer road trip states shakes out, according to BestRide.com:

Oregon – 60.50
Nevada – 59.35
Utah – 59.22
North Carolina – 56.08
Minnesota – 55.59

Oregon – The Northwest state gets a top 5 ranking for its road conditions and safety. It's ranked second best for fun and scenic attractions.
Nevada – Before you scoff, there is so much more to Nevada than Las Vegas. The scenery can be stunning. The state ranks third for fun & scenic attractions and cracks the top 10 for driving & cost of lodging.
Utah – OK, so it's technically a popular off-road destination, but Moab would have to be at the top of the list when visiting Utah. DiscoverMoab.com has a nice article on the scenic byways you can explore in a day.
North Carolina – It's the only state on the East Coast to make the top 5 list. Head to the Asheville area if you want some distinctive scenery. End your day at The Biltmore Estate.
Minnesota – The Land of 10,000 Lakes is just a natural place for a road trip. After spending some time there last summer driving the Hyundai Tucson [which of course is our recommendation for best rental], I can't wait to return.

Test Drive: 2018 Honda Ridgeline

By Greg Zyla
More Content Now

Entry price: $29,990
Price as tested: $42,820

This week, we're behind the wheel of the second generation 2018 Honda Ridgeline, listed by the EPA as a light duty mid-size pickup and built by an American-based workforce in Lincoln, Alabama. With a unique blend of car, SUV and truck inner-workings, the Ridgeline easily seats five-passengers and comes in the ever popular four-door crew-cab design.

Currently available in six distinct trims, Ridgeline engineers successfully combine the best of what makes Honda cars and SUVs so popular while addressing the needs of light duty truck owners with its unique multi-purpose bed.

The entry 2018 Ridgeline RT two-wheel-drive (2WD) starts at just $29,990, and then escalates up the price ladder as more standard features are added. The most expensive Ridgeline is a new for 2018 Black Edition that arrives with standard all-wheel-drive (AWD) and unique Crystal Black Pear exterior, black interior and special black alloy 18-inch wheels starting at $43,420. Our upper class RTL-E featured standard AWD mechanicals and lists for $41,920. Our tester was near fully loaded and had zero options as the final tally came in at $42,820 with the $900 delivery fee added.

2018 Honda Ridgeline. [HONDA]

Likes: Multi-purpose extraordinaire, Honda V6 power, unique cargo bed.

Dislikes: No low range 4x4, touch screen learning curve.

Built on a unibody chassis instead of a full truck chassis, Ridgeline guarantees outstanding ride comfort and then compliments the theme with a steel reinforced bed and a multitude of SUV, car and pickup truck features. The Ridgeline is almost in a class by itself and proof of its solid build comes via the many awards it has already received, including the "North American Truck of the Year" award at last year's Detroit Auto Show.

Historically, Honda Ridgeline isn't an all-new model by any means. It's been around now for 12 years, debuting in 2006 with assembly in Canada. Through the years, Ridgeline attracted more and more interest to where today this new generation with enhanced car-like and pickup attributes is just what many consumers are looking.

Power comes from Honda's 3.5-liter, 24 valve overhead cam V6 putting out 280 horses and 262 lb. ft. of torque. Coupled to a heavy duty cooled six-speed automatic, the AWD owners can expect 18 city and 25 highway EPA mileage numbers (both very good) while the 2WD owner will expect an additional one MPG with 19 city and 26 highway.

Ridgeline's automatic AWD system is fine but does not offer a low-range 4x4 gear like many competitors do. If you're thinking serious off-road excursions, think again. This is not a go anywhere 4x4 heavy duty vehicle, so keep this in mind if someone dares you to go where you shouldn't while in the back mountains. Otherwise, Ridgeline is just fine for your normal off-road trail and camping weekends.

NISSAN

position and generous headroom lends the interior a deceptively large feeling. The center console is padded on the sides where front driver and passenger's knees hit, a small but important amenity. Legroom is plentiful up front, and surprisingly good for this car's length. Rear seat passengers enjoy less legroom, but it's adequate. However, rear seat height is higher than most competitors, unusual for a class where a too-low seating position is the norm. Cargo space is a generous 25.3 cubic feet.

There are a couple sore points, the first being the cup holders. They are buried in the back of the center console, and are lower than you might expect. Thankfully, there are others integrated into the door map pockets. The second is the rearview mirror, which has roughly cut edges that prove how little Nissan paid for each one.

The Kicks' infotainment touchscreen more than makes up for any quibbles. It's responsive and intuitive in operation, while the driver's instrument cluster offers a lot of display flexibility, providing ample amounts of information.

Performance is peppier than you'd expect given the 125 horsepower from its all-aluminum 1.6-liter four-cylinder engine. That sounds meager until you realize that the Kicks weighs 2,672 pounds. Its continuously variable transmission delivers power to the front wheels; all-wheel drive and a manual transmission aren't available. Thankfully, the transmission seems to be in the proper ratio most of the time, with little of the rubber-banding typical of CVTs. The engine emits a low moan that never proves bothersome.

While the Kicks does have an independent front suspension, the rear gets a twist beam suspension. Steering is fairly quick and nicely weighted but numb, returning no road feel. Body lean comes on gradually through corners, but is ever present. Push the car hard and lean becomes excessive, you'll feel the tires surrender and understeer kicks in, although it telegraphs these limits far in advance.

Ultimate grip seemed average, although bump absorption was impressive, lending a ride that felt like a more expensive vehicle. The front disc/rear drum brakes provide good stopping power. The cabin is impressively quiet.

Just don't expect driving kicks from the Kicks; that is not its mission. Rather, the 2018 Nissan Kicks offers sophisticated sporty style, a comfortable ride, generous cabin space and loads of equipment at prices mere mortals can afford.

It's like remembering to order a hamburger with cheese.

pulley at all, belt tension is inadequate. Also check the battery terminals for looseness and/or corrosion. Alternators typically employ brushes, which are small carbon electrical conductors that ride against the rotor's slip rings. The rotor becomes a multiple-pole magnet, the heart of the generating process. Due to friction, brushes eventually wear out, lasting perhaps 125,000 to 150,000 miles. This may be what's causing your intermittent charging system light. Brushes are inexpensive but due to the labor involved to renew them in most cases it's simpler to swap out the alternator with a remanufactured unit.

Hyundai designed the Ioniq to be much more of a driver's car than hybrids such as the Prius. The goal is to give consumers a car that does more than just conserve fuel — it also can be fun to drive.

The hope is that a better driving experience might attract buyers to the Ioniq who otherwise probably would not consider a hybrid. Hyundai says the Ioniq was designed to compete against regular compact sedans such as the Chevrolet Cruze and Ford Focus, although it's clearly a great competitor to the Prius. Prices are in more line with those conventional compacts, though, so there's no big cost premium for the hybrid drive system.

Hyundai says the Ioniq name is a combination of "ion" and "unique," with the "ion" part signifying that it's electrified.

Our tester had a fairly smooth ride even on some slightly rough (potholed) roads, and the cabin was generally quiet.

Overall roadhandling was more crisp and sure than that of the Prius, as well, and in Sport mode, we had better acceleration.

To help keep the weight down, the Ioniq was designed with an aluminum hood and liftgate, and it also has no conventional 12-volt battery to power the starter and other accessories. Instead, four cells of the large lithium-ion battery pack are used to create a 12-volt power source, eliminating the weight of the traditional 12-volt battery.

Under the hood of the Ioniq Hybrid is a 1.6-liter Atkinson-cycle four-cylinder gasoline engine, paired with a 32-kilowatt electric motor.

The gasoline engine is individually rated at 104 horsepower and 109 foot-pounds of torque. The electric motor has 43 horsepower and 125 foot-pounds of torque. Total system power is 139 horsepower. All levels have front-wheel drive.

Having a conventional transmission gives the Ioniq a more-conventional and sportier driving experience than the Prius, particularly when the gearshift lever is pushed to the left to engage the Sport mode. [HYUNDAI / TNS]

Because the lithium-ion battery is under the rear seat, the Ioniq has a roomy cargo area, with 26.6 cubic feet of space. There is no spare tire, however, just a "tire mending kit," which as most of us know doesn't always work, especially when the tire blows out or has damage.

Recyclable or renewable materials are used throughout the car, including an interior that is 25 percent made of sugar cane.

Standard on the base model are 15-inch Eco-Spoke wheels and P195/65R15 tires. Our Limited, though, came with 17-inch Eco-Spoke alloy wheels and P225/45R17 tires.

Other Limited extras included automatic HID headlights, power tilt-and-slide sunroof, LED daytime running lights and taillights, body-color heated outside mirrors with turn signals, and body-color door handles with approach lights built in.

Leather seats are included on the Limited, along with a color touch-screen audio system with backup camera, Android Auto and Apple CarPlay, HD/AM/FM/satellite radio, and Bluetooth hands-free phone system; a 4.2-inch color driver-information screen above the steering column; dual automatic climate control; heated front seats; leather-wrapped flat-bottom steering wheel and shifter knob; power windows/door locks with proximity key entry and pushbutton start; and power-adjustable driver's seat and lumbar support.

Safety gear included electronic stability control with traction control; four-wheel antilock disc brakes with power-regenerative braking, electronic brake-force distribution, and brake assist; front side-impact air bags, side-curtain air bags for both rows, and driver-knee air bag; blind-spot detection with rear cross-traffic alert and lane-change assist; and individual tire-pressure monitoring.

Our Limited tester came with the Ultimate Package ($3,000), which added automatic emergency braking, radar cruise control, lane-keep assist, adaptive headlights, rear parking sensors, a navigation system with eight-inch touchscreen display, Infinity premium audio with eight speakers and Clari-Fi music restoration, wireless charging for smartphones, cargo cover, and floor console-mounted rear air vents.

The only other extra was the carpeted floor mats ($125). The exterior of our vehicle was the pleasant Ceramic White color, and we had the beige interior — seats, dash and doors.

Total sticker price for our Ioniq Hybrid Limited was $31,560, including freight and options.

Dinosaurs and people face a new 'World' order in 'Fallen Kingdom'

By Ed Symkus

Owen Grady (Chris Pratt) has a memory of raising the velociraptor named Blue. [UNIVERSAL PICTURES]

Those tourist destinations — Jurassic Park, followed by Jurassic World — on Isla Nublar, just off of Costa Rica, are long gone, due to the fact that some of its attractions would rather have eaten the tourists than be seen by them. But now, three years after the demise of Jurassic World, it's those attractions — the cute little ones and the hungry, toothy, vicious huge ones — that are endangered. A volcano has erupted and is threatening to return the island's remaining inhabitants to extinction ... unless the well-meaning folks at the Dinosaur Protection Group, run by Claire Dearing (Bryce Dallas Howard) can secure government funding to save the creatures.

"Get lost," says Congress. "Hey! We can help," says Eli Mills (Rafe Spall), who handles money matters at the Benjamin Lockwood Estate, and who tells Claire that if she works with them, they will put up the money for a new home on a sanctuary island, where there will be no fences and no tourists.

But this means she'll have to enlist the help of animal behaviorist (some call him a raptor wrangler) Owen Grady (Chris Pratt), even though they've been apart for about three years, since their fling and dead-end romance that began when they met in "Jurassic World."

No, he's not interested. Hold on, yes, he is interested. Uh-oh, is there at least a hint of a spark still between them? Sorry, no time to think about that, as suddenly they're on a plane, with a reptile veterinarian and a computer expert tagging along, winging their way to the island, where they're met by a phalanx of heavily armed mercenaries who will assist with tranquilizing the animals then transporting them to their new home.

Yeah, right. There's no sanctuary. The gun men aren't there to help. This is a story about greedy people doing dastardly things. Damn those mercenaries! Damn whoever hired them!

The film's brief time on the island is filled with danger upon danger. All hell breaks loose there, and then it does again, as the volcano goes from lava flows to flaming explosions and dinosaurs are fleeing while people are getting out of their way. As always in these films, the dinosaurs are stunningly realistic. Surprisingly, though, the volcano effects are comparatively hokey.

But that's made up for when the action and a number of specimens return to the mainland and the Lockwood estate, where the main story — along with a couple too many side stories — unfolds. There are additional characters to meet, including wealthy, ailing Benjamin Lockwood (James Cromwell) and his feisty granddaughter Maisie (Isabella Sermon), who are both fine in small parts. Pratt has less to do in this installment, and is prone more to eye winking than heroics. Once again, Howard is OK as far as delivering her lines, but even her screams aren't very convincing when she's in peril.

The script provides plenty of good, zippy dialogue, and will bring about lots of nervous laughter in the numerous scenes of people in danger. And even though the plot gets crazier and more outrageous as it goes along, the story manages to stay grounded. The apocalyptic climax, very much in homage to the original film, is exciting, terrifying and fun, just as it should be. Although the end credits run close to 10 minutes, you might want to stay to see what happens at the end of them. It's only 10 seconds worth of extras, but they're 10 pretty cool seconds.

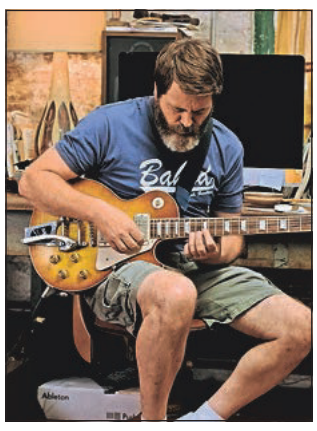
'Hearts Beat Loud' undeniably sweet

By Al Alexander
More Content Now



Nick Offerman in "Hearts Beat Loud." [BURN LATER PRODUCTIONS]

Brett Haley is steadily carving out a reputation as the go-to guy for depicting men and women of a certain age negotiating various forms of midlife crises. For Blythe Danner in "I'll See You in My Dreams," it was a widow's second chance at love. In last year's "The Hero," it was a dying Sam Elliott longing to reconnect with his estranged daughter. Haley's latest, the Sundance darling "Hearts Beat Loud," is a sort of a blend of the previous two with Nick Offerman inhabiting the clichéd role of a 48-year-old widower trying to squeeze every last drop from his final days with his college-bound daughter before she departs Brooklyn for a pre-med curriculum at UCLA.

It's undeniably sweet, and like all of Haley's films, brimming with compassion for the characters he's cooked up with regular writing partner Marc Basch. But as with "The Hero," everything feels overly calculated and under developed. Genuineness is never a concern; just cheese and manipulation. It doesn't take long to tire of it, either. You keep waiting for a spark, but all you get is predictability and disappointment. You also get a filmmaker determined to be the red, white and blue version of Ireland's John Carney, the originator of gems like "Once" and "Sing Street," pictures where music spoke as loudly — if not louder — than words.

With Carney, the sound is rich and full-bodied; with Haley it's tinny and blah. Nor is it anywhere near as organic.

The main problem with "Hearts Beat Loud," besides the gratuitous use of product placement, is the fact the movie has zero reason to exist.

What are we to glean from a story about a father who likes writing and playing songs with his daughter?

'Hearts Beat Loud'

Cast includes Nick Offerman, Kiersey Clemons, Toni Collette, Blythe Danner and Ted Danson.

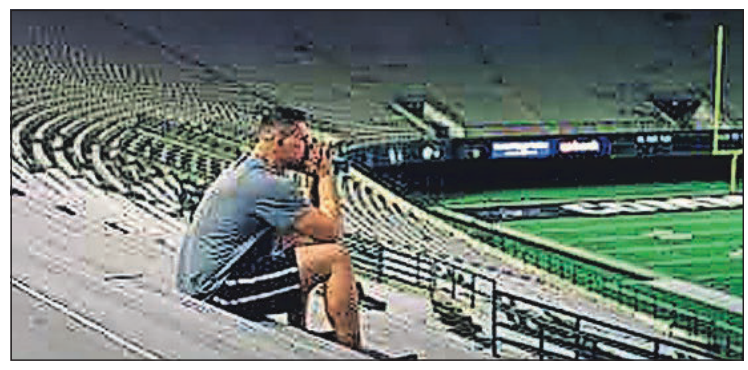
'Alone in The Game' explores a different kind of challenge in sport

Melissa Crawley



"Alone in The Game" premieres on AT&T Audience Network on June 28 at 8 p.m. EDT/PDT. [DLM ENTERTAINMENT GROUP]

Currently, there are 4,696 professional athletes in the NFL, NBA, MLB, NHL and MLS and not a single player is openly gay. LA Galaxy player Robbie Rogers, who retired in November 2017, is the only openly gay athlete to have competed in professional sport. His choice did not encourage more athletes to do the same. Through personal stories and industry perspectives, "Alone in The Game," explores why. It's an eye-opening documentary about the challenges LGBTQ athletes face when they are judged for their sexual orientation or gender identity rather than their performance.

For fans and players alike, sport offers camaraderie and acceptance. "Alone in The Game" asks viewers to think about this idea in the context of the LGBTQ player's experience when the fear of revealing your authentic self takes all that away. Through interviews with LGBTQ athletes, the film shines a light on the psychic costs they must pay within the intense environment of sport. Their personal stories are compelling.

In addition to Rogers, Olympic medalists Gus Kenworthy and Megan Rapinoe, former NFL lineman Ryan O'Callaghan and former NBA center Jason Collins are interviewed. They speak about the fear of being discovered, which for some lead to paranoia and for most, depression. Several college athletes also share their personal stories, including Riley, whose intense anxiety over being found out and consequently losing football, lead to several suicide attempts and lifelong emotional scars. Riley comments that the hyper-masculinity of football provided "good cover," but it came at the high price of having to "be somebody else all the time."

The film also makes a point about the environment of risk aversion common in sport. It's the idea that a coach might say: "I don't have a problem with gays but what if my star player does?" Combined with the reality of sport as big business, this attitude perpetuates a culture of exclusion and discrimination, keeping LGBTQ athletes silent.

Those who aren't silent, like Riley, who eventually finds his place with a different college football team, and Trevor, a transgender high school athlete who is accepted by his wrestling team after being rejected by his fellow football players, offer hope that the attitude toward LGBTQ athletes is slowly changing. At least on the field. Trevor's story, which includes footage of his legal fight against his father, who refuses to give him permission to change his name, is a raw personal account that highlights the pain many LGBTQ people face in their family relationships.

"Alone in The Game" is an important and empowering platform from which LGBTQ athletes are able to share their stories. As former ESPN president John Skipper says in the film's opening scenes: "When you become a great professional athlete, you sacrifice many things. One of those things shouldn't be who you are."

Girlfriend sees trouble ahead with man's plans for mother

DEAR ABBY: I am a woman, 34, who has finally met the man I want to spend my life with. He's 31, and his family lives about six hours away. He plans to move his mother here to live in the near future. She doesn't work or drive. She's on state assistance, and her Section 8 isn't enough for her to get an apartment on her own here.

My boyfriend plans to buy a duplex in the next year or so and have her live in the other apartment. This would involve me paying for part of the house because we'll likely be married by then. The problem is, the state won't give us any money for her to live in it, so we'll have to cover all her expenses. On top of that, I'm not comfortable with the lack of privacy.

I have tried bringing this up to him, and although he has been receptive, I haven't been as straightforward as I should have been. I know it's a touchy subject, and I'm not sure how to approach this. I don't want to lose him, but I'm afraid this will affect our lives too much. Help! -- THINGS DON'T LOOK BRIGHT

DEAR THINGS: You admit you haven't been as straightforward as you should have been with your boyfriend. In a case like this, honesty is the best policy. I urge you to start telling him exactly how you feel NOW, because your concerns are valid. His mother will be depending upon her son -- and you -- for everything when she relocates. If you aren't up to sharing the responsibility -- in addition to the loss of "personal space" -- he needs to know now. And if it spells the end of the romance, so be it.

DEAR ABBY: I have a neighbor who stops by several times a week unannounced and uninvited. What complicates the matter is that he has some form of mental disability. He's in his 20s and lives with his mother a block away from us. We tolerated his presence when he used to stop by only occasionally, but since meeting my 24-year-old daughter who is staying with us, his visits have increased to about five times a week.

When he comes over, he can be very demanding and rude. For example, if someone is sitting in "his seat," he assertively tells them they must get up. Other times he'll interrupt my daughter to tell her to come watch TV with him or sit next to him. In response, she tells him, "No, thank you."

We don't want to be rude, but his visits are making everyone uncomfortable and have become an issue of boundaries. How do we tell him and his mother we would like him to stop coming over? -- UNWELCOME NEIGHBOR IN FLORIDA

DEAR NEIGHBOR: That young man is lonely, but it should not be your responsibility to entertain him. Tell his mother exactly what you have written to me. It should be up to her to tell her son to stop dropping over. Depending upon how disabled he is, he should be working or in a program where he can do something constructive with his time.

Test your play

1. You are West, and the bidding has gone:

South	West	North	East
1 NT	Pass	2 NT	Pass
3 NT

NORTH

WEST
♠ Q 9 8 6 2

♦ K 7
♣ A Q 8 3

You lead the six of spades, and declarer wins partner's ten with the jack. South leads a heart to dummy's jack and returns the queen of diamonds, which you win with the king. How would you continue?

2. You are declarer with the West hand at Six Notrump, and North leads the ten of hearts. How would you play the hand?

WEST	EAST
♠ A 7 4 2	♠ K 6
♥ K J 3	♥ A Q 4
♦ A K 4	♦ Q 10 2
♣ K 9 5	♣ A 10 8 7 6

1. From the play thus far, it is clear that South's opening notrump bid (15 to 17 points) included the ace of hearts, ace of diamonds and A-K-J of spades (your partner cannot have the ace or king of spades, given his play at trick one). It follows that South cannot have the king of clubs, which would give him 19 points.

You should therefore shift to the club three at this point, confident that partner will win with the king. If partner has another club to return, you will defeat the contract.

If you fail to lead a club and instead woodenly return a spade, declarer will score three spade tricks, three diamond tricks and at least three hearts to make the contract.

2. The only problem is how to handle the clubs to give yourself the optimal chance for four tricks in the suit. Best is to win the heart in dummy, lead the club six and play low if South plays low. (If the six wins, continue with the seven.) If the six loses to North's jack or queen, win any return and play the king of clubs. The slam becomes certain if North follows suit to the king.

The only time this line of play fails is when North has been dealt the singleton jack or queen. If you alternatively attacked the clubs by first cashing the king or ace, you would go down if the next player was either void of clubs or held a low singleton. These cases outnumber those where North started with a singleton honor.

Tomorrow: Thinking things through.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY FOR FRIDAY, JUNE 22, 2018:

This year you open up to a more dynamic approach. You tend to follow your heart, no matter where your choices take you. Events occur quite suddenly and have quite an impact on your life. If you are single, your intensity and sensitivity draw others toward you. Take your time dating before making a commitment. If you are attached, the two of you find that the unexpected works in your favor. Even if you do not like what is happening initially, stay optimistic and unified with your sweetie, and everything will work out. SCORPIO could be an excellent sign for you to relate to.

ARIES (MARCH 21-APRIL 19) Deal with others on an individual level. Ask questions, and be more present in the moment. Use caution with money, as you could lose some today if you are not careful. Postpone any discussions about a special financial offer.

TAURUS (APRIL 20-MAY 20) Your ability to ask for favors and have them fulfilled emerges. Others often say "yes" without thinking about the work involved. You might be more unpredictable than you realize. A friend plays a substantial role in keeping others connected.

GEMINI (MAY 21-JUNE 20) Don't attempt to proceed in a different way. You know what works for you. Others seem bent on convincing you of the rightness of their ways. What they don't seem to get is that you have little interest in the topic and are more concerned about other matters.

CANCER (JUNE 21-JULY 22) You magnetize certain people who can't stay away from you. Observe more of what is happening around you. You might want to ask some questions before diving into a project. A lot happens quickly, so be ready to handle an unexpected invitation.

LEO (JULY 23-AUG. 22) You could be in a position where you want to change your plans. You experience so much disruption at work that you might consider running away. Nevertheless, just do what you must and nothing more. Follow another person's lead for now.

VIRGO (AUG. 23-SEPT. 22) You often ask questions and attempt to break barriers. You see a situation from a unique perspective. Think before you leap into a situation that is too hot for you to handle. Your frustration will build, and the situation is already high-voltage.

LIBRA (SEPT. 23-OCT. 22) Take news with a grain of salt. The unexpected could disrupt a financial matter. You might find that you have a lot to explain. You will want to be on the same page as the rest of the group. On the other hand, you are more independent than most.

SCORPIO (OCT. 23-NOV. 21) Your personality has a way of drawing admiration from many people. You'll want to deal with a person who could be difficult or touchy at best. You need to remain steady and secure, as you are likely to find a fundamental belief tested.

SAGITTARIUS (NOV. 22-DEC. 21) You might want to review a personal situation more carefully. Keeping this matter quiet will encourage you not to remain calm. Allow greater creativity to flood through your thoughts. Remember, nothing is impossible.

CAPRICORN (DEC. 22-JAN. 19) Zero in on your priorities, and refuse to be taken for granted. Your sense of direction comes through in a meeting or a discussion. Extremes mark your day, and as a result, you might want to focus on your changing emotions.

AQUARIUS (JAN. 20-FEB. 18) Stay on top of your work and make time for an important discussion. Honor what is happening within you, yet be willing to accept more responsibility, if need be. A family member can't express him- or herself clearly, which could be a problem.

PISCES (FEB. 19-MARCH 20) Reach out to someone you care about who might not be as available as you would like. Intense feelings mark your interactions, which could change how you see this person. Recognize that you might have put this individual on a pedestal.
