W: Yes, she lives in Washington, now.

P: She's remarried?

W: Yes, she's remarried, uh-huh.

P: Were there any children from that marriage?

W: No children--Fuller has no children.

P: And he lived in Jacksonville. He practiced law in Jacksonville. He continued his interest in politics?

W: That's right.

P: And he was elected to the city council in Jacksonville and served, according to the records, for three terms.

W: Oh, he did? I wasn't sure about that.

P: Now, did he then go back to Tallahassee? You said that he represented Duval County in the state legislature.

W: Yes, he did.

P: As a representative or as a senator?

W: No, as a representative. It was a year, the last year I was in college and it was in 1939, I believe.

P: This would have been during Governor Collins' administration.

W: I think so, uh-huh. These dates I'm not as good on as you are. Then he ran for governor, you know, shortly thereafter that.
