See! one is on her back. He may have got up there for fun, and it may be that, in chick words, he says to the chicks which are round the hen on the ground, "Ah, you poor wee chicks, you are not so tall as I am!"

The hen looks as if she would say, "You will have to get down when you want to eat, grand as you are."

The hen is proud of her chicks. She seems to think that there are no chicks so fine as hers in the whole world. She does not care to go with the hens that have no chicks. She likes to stay with her brood.

The hen shows her chicks how to find food. They would not know how to do so if she were not to teach them. They like to learn, and she likes to teach, so they get on well.

Though the chicks have food brought to them twice a day, they like to find tid-bits here and there when they are out for a walk. It is good for their health. Have you not seen cocks and hens and chicks scratch up the ground to look for food?
