HENEY THREATENS INSULTING WITNESS

STOPS HIM ABRUPTLY FROM REFERRING TO HIS RECORD.

Says He Draws the Line Beyond Which No Living Man Can Step. Sensation in Court.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 16.—At the trial of Patrick Calhoun, on an indictment charging bribery, Assistant District Attorney Francis J. Heney yesterday resented the demeanor of a witness on the stand and declares that he had "drawn a line over which no living man may step" in villifying him.

Samuel Leake, who was summoned to the stand during the examination of veniremen because of an allegation that he had endeavored to purchase an interest in the haberdashery business conducted by a brother of one of the jurors, warned Mr. Heney that he could make certain revelations concerning the prosecutor's past. Mr. Leake, who had been questioned as to his visit to a saloon said: "I think it very improper to refer to these things, Mr. Heney. I could tell of places I saw you—."

"I want you to stop that right now," interrupted Mr. Heney. "I don't propose that you shall make any more threats. You are here to answer questions."

"There is one conversation you don't dare to refer to," retorted the witness. "There was one when you went up the back way into the Call office and tried to go back on Phelan and Sprackels—."

"That's all there will be of that," said Mr. Henry. "I took this sort of thing from Henry Arch (attorney for Abraham Ruef) for months, until it led to an attempt at assassination, and after this I want it understood that I won't take it from any man living. If I am going to be shot again, I'll be shot in front, not from behind, nor from the side."

Lewis F. Byington, of the defense, here took exception, saying, "We believe that the district attorney should recognize the limits of his duty in examining a witness."

Mr. Heney, rising, pitched his voice so that it penetrated beyond the room and said:

"This district attorney is doing his duty as such, but before I am a district attorney I am an American citizen, and in that capacity I want to say right here and now that I draw the line over which no living man may step. For months I took all the villification that could be heaped on me, merely because I dared to do my duty, which someone had to do, but I am through with it now, and I want this thoroughly understood."

The panel of twelve tentative jurors was broken by the discharge of one peremptory challenge; and two alleged cases of jury tampering were made public.

SCHEMERS BILLED HERE.

Have Worked the Fakes All Over the State.

A novel and new scheme of faking the merchants was unearthed by The Times-Union in its issue of last Tuesday, which will probably put them to flight from the State if the newspapers will give the scheme publicity.

Two well-dressed men come into town and inform merchants that they are going to enlarge pictures free for people, the only requirement being that the party buy a frame for same. The men then make a contract with merchants to give a frame free upon the trading of so much, say $25. Then they canvass the town for enlarging pictures, stating that when they receive same such and such merchant will give them a frame free of charge, never mentioning the trading proposition. The fakirs then take the orders for the pictures, say 100, to the merchant and get his order for an equal number of frames. These are shipped C. O. D. and the merchant pays for same. Result: The fakirs get paid for the frames, but never enlarge the pictures, and the merchant is out so much money.

AT THE TABERNACLE.

Large Audience Greets the Opening Performance Last Night.

From Wednesday's Daily:

A fair crowd greeted the opening performance of the Winter Chautauqua last night at the Tabernacle. The performance put on last night consisted of a lecture illustrated with moving pictures, and proved pleasing to those present.

Addresses which were made concerning the good work done by the Chautauqua in years past and what would result from the present effort were well received. The men who have gotten up this great undertaking are to be commended upon securing good attractions for the citizens, as well as the large number of winter visitors here.
