Plants for Decorative Purposes.

I am asked to give a list of such plants as can be grown by the amateur which are suitable for parlor decoration. I gladly comply with the request, because I like to encourage the growing of good plants for use in rooms. I would have them considered as part of the furnishing of a room as much as a picture or other work of art. I would be glad to have plants considered as necessities in every home. They are every day becoming more popular.

Plants with Large Foliage.—Palms in variety (Best varieties for amateur: Phoenix reclinata, Latania Borbonica, Areca lutescens and Chamerops excelsa). Ficus elastica or India Rubber Plant, Cycas, Canna, Banana, Aspidistra. Of the above, all but Canna and Banana have thick, firm leaves, and stand dry air and dust well.

Other Good Plants.—Phormium Formosum, with flat foliage, long and pointed, like some of the native flags. Pandanus utilis, or Screw Pine, with recurved, drooping foliage. Aucuba variegata, green, sprinkled thickly with yellow, often called Gold Dust Plant. Very fine. Agaves, in variety; plants with thick, fleshy foliage, somewhat resembling the Cactus in habit and general appearance.

Any of the above will give complete satisfaction if properly cared for, and all are easily grown.

The Pandanus utilis, better known as the Screw Pine, from the fact that its foliage is arranged in a spiral form, is one of the most decorative of house plants, if placed in the center of a group where it can be sufficiently elevated to display its drooping qualities. It requires only ordinary care, and improves with age. The leaves of this pine are generally three feet or more in length, about two inches in width, and of a bright green color, with a red line running down the center of each. The edges of the leaves are thickly set with sharp, needle-like teeth which effectually prevent anyone from meddling with it. It is a peculiarity of the plant that it lifts itself from the pot by its roots, and the amateur often gets the impression that the plant requires repotting because of the exposure of these roots. If re-potted and set lower, so that the base of the plant comes in contact with the soil, the roots immediately set to work to throw the plant above the pot again.

A new variety of the Aspidestra has foliage of a very rich green banded with light green, yellow or pure ivory white, the variegation being irregular, some leaves being almost entirely light, others having only narrow lines of the light colors. These leaves are all sent up from the crown of the plant, and vary in length from a foot to two feet, and often number fifteen or twenty on each plant. It will be readily understood from this that a pot of it presents a most attractive mass of foliage. Indeed, few plants are more striking, and I know of nothing better adapted to front rows in groups in parlor or hall where plants are arranged to present a solid and massive effect. The leaves are of a thick, tough texture, therefore not easily injured by handling, and, like all foliage of that kind, they stand the effect of dry air and dust exceedingly well. This plant does not require exposure to the sun, though undoubtedly it is benefited by being given some sunshine. It likes a good deal of water, but care should be taken to have the drainage perfect if you would prevent the tips of the leaves from turning brown. A singular plant which is eminently adapted for parlor use because its leaves remain in a perfect state for years; they are from three to four feet in length, and are beautifully variegated with light green shading to yellow, on a dark ground. The variegation has the peculiarity of running across the leaves in bands of irregular widths, rather than lengthwise.

One of the most striking and peculiar of the palm family is the Cycas reboluta. Its trunk looks more like a large and elongated pineapple than anything else. From the top it sends out its thick and leathery foliage in a great tuft. On a well-grown specimen the foliage will be two or three feet in length, spreading out in all directions, and from this some idea can be formed of its decorative qualities. It is dark green in color. Its leaves are stiff, but they have a graceful curve, and a good plant will be found extremely valuable in ornamenting a room. Its price prevents it from becoming as popular as it would surely be if it could be bought more cheaply, but because of its being rather slow and difficult to propagate it brings a high price.

This good old plant is coming into
