LATIN AMERICAN GRATITUDE

How Castro Appreciates the Good Offices of the United States in Protecting His Country

Washington, May 14.—Information has been received at the State Department that Gen. Reyes, the Colombian peace envoy, sent to Washington after the secession of Panama to try and regain control of the isthmus, and President Castro, of Venezuela, are attempting to organize the republics of Central and South America into an alliance that will be unfriendly to the United States, especially in a commercial way.

This long has been one of Castro's pet schemes.

Reyes was induced to meet President Castro, and they patched up their differences. After their conferehce Gen. Reyes made this declaration of the policy of the anti-American alliance:

"The only means which the countries of Latin America have of saving themselves from dismemberment is to put an end once for all to civil war, and in this way oppose the forces of civilization and progress to the Yankee doctrine."

It has been les than two years since the United States protected Venezuela from dismemberment by England and Germany.

HENRY M. STANLEY

A Brief Biography of the Famous African Explorer

(Savannah News.)

Notwithstanding the fact that nearly a quarter of a century has elapsed since Henry M. Stanley was prominently before the world, the newspapers and periodicals are paying generous tributes to his memory. In fact, except within the immediate circle of his acquaintances in England, he had been almost forgotten. The announcement of his death in the dispatches on last Wednesday, however, served to recall his remarkable career.

It is about thirty-three years since he started to find the explorer, Livingstone, who was supposed to be somewhere in the interior of Africa, if still alive, of which there was much doubt. At that time comparatively nothing was known of that vast continent, with the exception of portions of its coast territory. At Zanzibar he organized an expedition, penetrated the wilderness for hundreds of miles, and, after overcoming difficulties that would have caused a less determined man to turn back, found Livingstone.

That deed made him famous. On his return to England his story of his success was doubted until he showed Livingstone's diary and produced letters from him, and then all sorts of honors were showered upon him.

He led other expeditions to Africa, and made discoveries which were of great benefit to the world. It may be said that he was the founder of the Congo state, which, though it doesn't amount to a great deal yet, will some day contain a large population of civilized and prosperous people. It is a rich country, and with good government, its resources would be rapidly developed.

Mr. Stanley was an example of what can be accomplished by ability, energy and courage. He had no helping hand in his struggle for fame and fortune. He achieved both by his own unaided efforts. It is not even certain who his parents were, nor where his birthplace was. It is generally believed, however, that he was born at Denbigh, Wales, and that the name of his father was John Rowlands, a farmer. It is known that he spent the greater part of his youth in the St. Asaph Union work house. He left that institution when about 16 years of age, and became a cabin boy on a schooner bound for New Orleans. There he entered the employment of a merchant named Henry M. Stanley. It has been stated that he was adopted by this merchant. It is certain that he took his name.

Mr. Stanley was born in 1841, and, consequently, was about 20 years of age when the civil war began. He enlisted in the Confederate army, was taken prisoner and afterwards volunteered in the federal navy. Having made a reputation as newspaper correspondent while traveling in various countries, Mr. Bennett of the New York Herald selected him to lead an expedition to find Livingstone, the African missionary and explorer.

A TERRIBLE TOUR

Frightful Experience of an Exploring Party in Crossing Newfoundland

Advices from the west coast of Newfoundland state that the Philip Knowling expedition, which sailed from Bay St. George for Glenwood by way of Cormack's Track, has arrived at its destination after three weeks of suffering and extreme hardships.

The story is one that rivals the terrible experience of the Hubbard party in Labrador, and but for the pluck of Knowling the whole party would have perished.

Henry McWhirter, who accompanied the expedition, said to a New York Herald reporter:

"From the beginning of the journey the party trudged through mountains of snow, sinking at every step to a great depth, notwithstanding that each member of the party wore snow shoes. Food ran short after the first ten days and it was seldom that anything could be shot to sustain the hungry men and dogs.

"Owing to the continuous snow storms the guides were unable to get their bearings and frequently wished to be allowed to retrace their steps. However the pluck of Mr. Knowling always encouraged them. He would not turn back. In the event of his death he wanted to be buried deep down, so that the lynx would not eat his body. Soon came those awful signs of approaching starvation. Bells were ringing in our ears and voices shouting from all directions.

"Words fail to adequately describe the horror of our sensations. Driven to desperation the Indian guides killed all their dogs and ravenously ate the flesh."

The party, after tramping twenty-one days, had given up hope of reaching Glenwood. Exhausted from hunger and thirst and with no succor in sight, three had resolved to meet their death when McWhirter, who was stronger than the others, kept on a short distance. He discovered the head of the Gander river, and, returning to the others, they located their position. A faint shout of joy was raised and, throwing down their camp outfit and clothing, the men slowly made their way toward Glenwood. They were met by woodsmen, who gave them food and assisted the weaker members of the party to their camp.

The party had been practically given up for lost.

BETWEEN TWO STOOLS L'ENGLE FELL TO THE GROUND

Enough has been heard from the various counties to insure the election of the Hearst delegates. The figures received up to noon today show Claude L'Engle, who ran both as a Hearst delegate and an anti-Hearst delegate, to have received the smallest vote of any of the candidates.

A strong and systematic fight against Hearst was made, but his followers seemed to have won. There was much talk about Hearst's "barrel" in Florida, but not $1 was sent to the Hearst workers during the campaign. The victory under the circumstances was a magnificent one.

The returns show that the people do not want a convention. The vote shows that the democratic masses were afraid that the primary might be abolished. In Duval county, while suffering an almost complete wipe-up, the old "straight-out" faction retains its organization, having elected twenty-two of the thirty-one members of the county democratic committee. Factional lines were not tightly drawn, however, as hundreds of members of that faction believed that Senator Taliaferro's record entitled him to a reelection.—Metropolis.
