TEAPOT GROCERY

Each Thought it was Himself

The article in yesterday's paper, admonishing the wife beater, excited a good deal of curiosity, and lots of wives have been heard to ask their husbands "What ward do we live in, for I am afraid they will think it is you." The fellows whose wives are away from home, consider themselves lucky, as they are thus removed from the list of possible ones.

One poor fellow plaintively said that it was the other way at his house—his wife beats him—but, strange to say, nobody offered him any sympathy.

SOME PERTINENT REASONS

Why the Capital Should be Located at Ocala

There are forty-five counties in the state, twenty-five of which lie tributary to and south of Ocala. The area of these counties is much larger than the twenty counties not tributary to and north of Ocala. This makes Ocala the geographical center of the state where the capitol should of right be located.

Jacksonville should not be the capitol, because that place is in a corner of the state, is a commercial center, subject to epidemics and for these reasons the people of the whole state would object to its being located there. Tampa or Daytona could as well ask for the location as Jacksonville. All the state would want in the event of a change from its present site, would be a good, comfortable, commodious building and grounds. This can be furnished to the state.

Jacksonville, of course, out bids any town in the state (bidding is not always paying) but that is not the whole question the people would pass upon. They would vote to locate at a geographical center. The greatest convenience and economy to the greatest number. The surveyors may measure every foot of land in Florida and then compute by geomtrical deductions and Ocala will be found to be the nearest town to that point, having extensive transportation facilities. Within the next ten years Ocala will be that of population. Every foot of land of the peninsula will, before many years, be selected by northern people. The land that is called "sand" has productive value not yet fully understood. The health, conditions, environments, and social status of those people will make such immigration necessary and on the peninsula they will find those conditions, health and environments bettered. This will solve the whole question of immigration and cause my predictions to be fulfilled.

The conservative property men of Jacksonville don't want the capital there, because he knows that capitals don't make cities. Jacksonville would lose its commercial greatness and capital would not go there as much if she had the capital. The wise business man knows what I say is true.

The location of Ocala is especially suited for residence districts of those people who like to live at capitals. Jacksonville is not so much as Ocala; Tampa is not so much as Ocala; Gainesville is not so much as Ocala. Two of these towns are larger than Ocala and all have the best people in the world in them. Still they are commercial centers and are liable to be large manufacturing places. In such places capitals should not be located. Birmingham is not the capitol of Alabama; New Orleans is not the capitol of Louisiana; Savannah is not the capitol of Georgia; New York City is not the capitol of New York; Chicago is not the capitol of Illinois; Detroit is not the capitol of Michigan; Galveston is not the capitol of Texas.

There isn't a property owner, railroad or citizen in Florida but would be more or less benefited by the location of the capital at Ocala on this point, viz: Capitals are located so as to attract a class of people to the place for residence purposes, centrally located for these and the legislators. These people are generally those who have means. They live at the capital and establish business in other parts of the state. Often these other places are more benefited than the capitol, but the capitol serves its purpose. It's the best town in the state for that purpose and used as such, will benefit the state the most for that purpose. The surroundings of Tallahassee don't fill this point at all. The people there are not to blame. Nature has made Ocala the capitol of Florida, that's the long and short of it. Now let the people of Florida obey the laws of nature to their advantage. The people of other towns should not require Ocala people to become bankrupt in raising a great bonus to get the capital, but rather should make it easy for the capital to be located here. The wise business man knows what I mean. Men of means don't like the idea of bankrupt cities, no matter the enterprise. Another thing they don't like bitter quarrels over capital location. Let the capital be located without a newspaper row and mud throwing. There is a bright future for Florida. The people of Jacksonville will make more money to build the capital in Ocala and give it to the state than they will to get the capitol by a rabid newspaper fight and villification of other towns who want it and scattering ideas "great many" is to be used.
