IN THE CIRCUIT COURT

SENTENCES PASSED ON A NUMBER OF EVIL DOERS

Ten prisoners are no longer on the rack of uncertainty. Judge Hocker, in open court this morning, passed the following sentences:

Richard Hamilton, colored, convicted of rape, a life sentence in the state penitentiary; David Player, colored, murder, life sentence; Jas. Knox, colored, a term of three years in the state pen. at hard labor; Robert Henderson, colored, grand larceny, one year in the county jail; Isaac Ashwood, colored, petty larceny, three months in the county jail; Charles Allen, colored, aggravated assault, one year in the county jail; Nero Miles and Julius Brown, colored, to pay a fine of $25 each or serve six months in the county jail; Arthur Gallipeau, white, murder, fifteen years in the state penitentiary at hard labor; Fred Woodson, colored, murder, life sentence to the penitentiary.

Nic and Robertson Myers have not yet been sentenced. This term of the court has been a terror to evildoers and more convictions have been secured than at any term for years, and in capital cases probably in the history of the county.

Sam Jacobs will be sentenced Monday.

"ROANOKE"

"Roanoke" is a beautiful Southern drama from the pen of Hal. Reid. It is a graphic story of Southern life in the mountains of old Virginia and is replete with that element of heart interest which appeals to all alike. The blind girl, with her simple, abiding trust in the Creator; her half-witted brother, whose one thought is the care of his little sister, and the old Southern darkey, faithful to her dead master's children, and ready, as she says, "to work her fingers to the bone for them;" as well as the less agreeable character of Ezekiel Morse, the human vampire, who leaves a trail of blood in his wake, are forcibly drawn, true to life, and show the work of a master of dramatic construction.

The situations are strong and the climaxes effective, the action of the play natural, and its interest absorbing from the rise of the curtain in a happy Southern home, to the last act, where the clouds of misfortune, which for a time threaten to overwhelm the hero and heroine, are brushed away, to the confusion of villainy and the triumph of virtue.

The play is one of Mr. Reid's best efforts and will be produced with all possible carefulness of detail and elaborate stage setting.

This play will be produced by the Robson Theater Co. during its engagement of one week here.

THE CONCERT
