DAUGHTERS WELCOMED BY C. B. PARKHILL

Eloquent Pensacolian Delivered the Address of Welcome.

THE ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE DAUGHTERS OF CONFEDERACY OF FLORIDA, WAS A SUCCESS, A PLEASING FEATURE BEING ADDRESS OF JUDGE PRRKHILL.

Special to The Journal.

Tallahassee, Fla., May 9.—One of the pleasing features of the annual convention of the Daughters of the Confederacy of Florida, which was a success, was the address of welcome delivered by Judge Chas. B. Parkhill, who spoke as follows:

"Madame President and Daughters of the Confederacy:

"I consider myself most happy to meet an assemblage of such distinction and loveliness, and greatly honored to have been chosen as the one to extend to you, in a short address, a most hearty welcome to the capital of Florida.

"On behalf of the Anna Jackson chapter, the United Confederates, the people of Tallahassee, and of myself as the son of a veteran, I welcome you heartily, gladly. I welcome you as representative of the womanhood of our state. Woman has always been a most potent factor in all conditions of civilization, they have taken an intelligent part in forming the annals of our country. In war and in peace, in sunshine and in shadow, in joy and in sorrow, woman has been the inspiration of all that is best in its history. Your presence here suggests to me the home. It is your part to preserve the home—to preserve its sweetness, its purity. In all this bright southland, from north to south and from east to west, it is by you that the homely virtues are nourished and tender memories cherished in the hearts of our children; the little ones who are the inheritance of the bravery, the honor, the devotion to principle which animated their fathers, the men who "wore the gray." It is by you that our youth is taught to cherish and emulate that love of honor and principle, so that they may hereafter successfully carry on the work of the state. You guide our destinies, you make our lives.

"I welcome you, also, as Daughters of the Confederacy. Yours is a proud heritage—a heritage as daughters of heroes. Should this fair country of ours ever become a monarchy, here will be found an order of nobility already established. What higher nobility could be desired than can be drawn from the ranks of those men who marched to glory with Stonewall Jackson, who sat around the camp fire with J. E. B. Stuart; who sailed into the foreign waters of the Atlantic and the Pacific with Admiral Semmes, and sat upon the deck of the Alabama watching the stars and thinking of home and loved ones; who died to win the approbation of that purest, best and greatest man who ever lived—General Robert E. Lee? It makes no difference that this new order of nobility would be poor as the world counts wealth. They are the inheritors of those better riches which are theirs forever—of truth, principle and honor.

"But this glorious republic of ours will never be a monarchy. The names of the only nobility that we shall ever know have been written by our fathers in glory and honor for all eternity. It is yours, Daughters of the Confederacy, to carry on the traditions of the past, to keep alive the memories of our heroic dead, to keep green their resting-places, and to preserve the custom of Memorial Day

"We of the south are sometimes misjudged for not singing union war songs, for not at all times bowing down in adoration of the Union flag. We are accused of a want of patriotism, and of hatred and prejudice. These charges are untrue. We simply hallow the memories left us of those years when our fathers laid down their lives for what they believed to be the right. We love to feel, on one day of the year, that family touch of kinship as we gather around those spots hallowed by sacred traditions of that mighty struggle in which our fathers died. When, as a little boy, my mother led me to that far-off spot in Virginia where lay the remains of my father removed from the battlefield of Gaines's Mill, she did not speak to me of hatred. She spoke of father's love of honor, and his devotion to principle.

American soldiers were brothers, and all fought for what they believed to be the right, nevertheless, while we may honor our brothers in blue, let us continue to give one day to those who wore the gray. Three hundred and sixty-four days in the year we speak in praise of the glory of the Union, but on the 26th of April let us talk only of the "Old South" and its imperishable glories.

"But, Daughters of the Confederacy, I have said enough. It but remains to once more welcome you among us. Nowhere would you find a nobler hospitality than among the people of Tallahassee. I welcome you to this capital of our fair state—to this building in which our fathers signed the ordinance of secession. Your coming here has been harmonious and will be fruitful of good. Yours is the great honor and the great responsibility so to act and so to live that the spirit which animated the old-fashioned woman of the south will never be tarnished and will never die. Quietly, and without noise of drums or stir of strife, you gather in these halls where are wont to sit the lawmakers of Florida. Would that by your presence among them you might inspire them with purer sentiments of justice, truth, honor and sobriety.

"I thank you, Daughters of the Confederacy, for being allowed to speak. There is no subject nearer my heart—none to which I can do less justice. Again I thank you."

The Officers Present.

Those in attendance at the convention were as follows:

Mrs. Raines, custodian of crosses; Mrs. R. C. Cooley, corresponding secretary of the general order. The special guests of the chapter were: Mrs. Edwin C. Weed, first state president; Mrs. J. N. Medlin, second vice-president; Mrs. T. C. Vann, corresponding secretary; Miss Irene Murat, recording secretary; Mrs. J. N. Blackwell, registrar; Mrs. F. O. Howe, historian; Mrs. E. B. McNulty, state recorder of crosses; Miss Mary Bright, treasurer.

Do your sleeves ever draw up after a rain or a damp spell?
Not if we made them.
That "drawing up" shows faulty sponging of the cloth.
Every yard of cloth used in our garments is both London shrunk and steam shrunk before it is cut.
