WALTON.

Mrs. C. H. Racey, of Jensen, was the dinner guest of Mr. and Mrs. K. E. Schuyler, Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Harris were guests of Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Willes, of Jensen, Wednesday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Lennard attended the box social for the benefit of the belfry at Viking, Saturday evening, passing a pleasant hour at the school house in that town. Afterwards they were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. R. W Lennard until the next morning when they went on to Sebastian to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Stinson, where the remainder of the day was passed. They returned to Walton on evening train.

The connecting link across the savannah at this point has been forged and it is now possible for man, woman or child to walk across. It is hard to realize that the culmination of hopes and desires are completed and that it is possible to explore the St. Lucie Gardens without much effort. Now that a way has opened for people to reach the interior the outlook will be more prepossessing, and as the season advances this tract of land so little known for many years will reach out and hold its own.

Of all energetic youngsters is young Marshall Luce, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Luce. The lad is young in years, but not in ideas, and entered the Eden school at the beginning of the present term, and no matter what the weather, the little chap is found in his place. Some times he makes the two miles or more by walking (making it four when again at home), some times his "bike" carries him down and return; then again he is helped to and from with the family horse, It is much to the lad's credit that his grit does not diminish in quantity. Some day in the not distant future he will be heard from as one whom no obstacle can deter from reaching the goal to which he aspires.

Mr. and Mrs. George Miller, formerly of Pittsburg, but now of Walton, arrived on the early train Friday morniug. Mr. Miller is the recent purchaser of the Jennings cottage, better known as the Walton Country Club. It is understood that Mr. Miller will abandon the old structure and build something worth while. The ground is sufficiently large to admit of something out of the ordinary in architecture. Already the dimensions of a long and well built wharf are to be seen and where the "Dreamer" will find its home when the work is completed. A garage will be built, a large touring car to arrive later. Mr. and Mrs. Miller are friendly and social in their courtesy to the old residents, and in the short time since their arrival here made many friends, and from all appearances will retain them. They are certainly most welcome. For the present and until their home is completed they may be found at the Colony Home.

On Thursday evening occurred an accident which might have proven one of strange characteristics, but fortunately developed only into much hard work and a thorough wetting for those most concerned. The car used as a purveyor of merchandise from the establishment of the Walton Fish Company started for the railroad station at 6 p. m., under the care of F. Cour. When a short distance had been covered, one side of the track seemed to settle and without further warning the two men in charge and ten barrels of fish were deposited in the river. Very fortunately the car retained its equilibrium sufficiently so that as the weight became lessened it remained on the track. It was not a pleasant night for a salt water bath as rain was falling, yet, those on hand (or in the water) with the help of the proprietor, worked with a will and nine of the ten barrels were rescued for repacking and icing. One barrel "took to itself wings" and disappeared entirely. The sturdy team of the Coledron Land Company was pressed into service and the young superintendent, Mr. Coxe, made the trip to the ice factory in Jensen and at midnight the goods were ready for the northern markets, much to the relief of those most interested, for when the accident took place it was thought hardly possible and not at all probable that any part of the cargo could be utilized. The men that took the impromptu bath received no injuries and were ready to hold their positions next day.
