EOD team investigates former Boca Grande bomb site

BY MC3 MICHAEL MCNABB
Southernmost Flyer

Explosive Ordnance Disposal Mobile Unit 6 (EODMU6) Mayport, Fla., came to Key West Sunday to investigate and possibly dispose of 12 reported bombs in the waters off Boca Grande.

In March divers reported seeing two bombs near a shipwreck - which divers and snorkelers often frequent - to the Coast Guard. The Coast Guard immediately reported the situation to Navy Explosive Ordnance Disposal. That month EODMU6 Panama City, Fla., came to Key West to investigate the situation.

The Panama City team came down under the impression that there were only two bombs that needed to be evaluated. Instead, they found a dozen 50 - 100-pound bombs that they determined had a minimal likelihood of being active. Being unequipped for what they ended up finding, the team decided to head back and send another EODMU6 team from Mayport.

"Our entire team is trained to dive and supervise dive operations," said Cornely. "Every one of us is ready for anything that could go wrong."

The team underwent briefs Monday to coordinate with the Coast Guard and NAS Key West officials and explain the precautions they would take to the National Oceanographic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) and Florida Keys National Marine Sanctuary to ensure no harm would come to marine mammals and endangered species of fish and coral.

Got fish? You'd better have a Florida license

BY JOLENE SCHOLL
MWR Marketing/Outreach Coordinator

Saltwater anglers fishing on Naval Air Station Key West shores be forewarned - a $9 license is better than a $50 fine. On Aug. 1 Florida began requiring saltwater anglers fishing on shore to be licensed. The shores of the air station - all four annexes - are included.

"The state Fish and Wildlife Officers can enforce their regulations onboard NAS Key West property just as the FDEP [Florida Department of Environmental Protection] and other state agencies do," according to Bill Adkins, MWR Business Area Manager Site One, which includes both marinas.

What is the reasoning behind the newly-required license? The federal government will begin charging a $15 - $25 federal registration fee in 2011 in states that don't have an approved licensing system, according to information on the Florida Fish and Wildlife Web site, www.myfwc.com. By establishing the shoreline license, the Florida Legislature arranged for this state's anglers to be exempt from the federal

Identifying drug use

The Navy Drug Screening Program is a Department of Defense-mandated program. Each base has a Program Manager who is responsible for managing both the drug testing program and outreach programs

Random Urinalysis

Random urinalysis of naval personnel is accomplished on randomly selected days using the Navy Drug Screening Program, a DoD-certified computer program. Each command will sample 10 to 20 percent of its assigned personnel monthly.

Sailors are selected on a random basis using NDSP. Due to the randomness of the computer selection process some Sailors maybe selected to provide a sample more times than others.

The urine collection process is the method used for drug testing and strict adherence to chain of custody procedures is required to ensure forensic defensibility of the drug testing results. Results may be used for UCMJ or administrative actions, including adverse characterizations of administrative discharge.

Detailed guidance is contained in OPNAVINST 5350.4. In addition to random testing, several tools exist for testing when commanding officers suspect drug use.

Member's Consent

This is used prior to a probable cause or command-directed urinalysis test. Prior to asking the Sailor if he or she will consent to a urinalysis the command representative should advise the Sailor that they may decline to provide a sample. Consent should be obtained in writing.

Commanding officers are not required to give Article 31, UCMJ rights prior to asking for consent, however, evidence that a Sailor was read these rights may be used to help demonstrate the Sailor's consent was voluntary. Consent is not valid if it is mere acquiescence to authority.

NAS Key West Command DAPA

MAC
James Blagg

Results may be used for UCMJ action, characterization of discharge and administrative action.

Probable Cause

Used when the commanding officer has probable cause to suspect a Sailor has ingested drugs, is intoxicated, or has been involved in a drug related offense. Commanding officers must directly coordinate with the Staff Judge Advocate's office.

Results may be used for UCMJ action, characterization of discharge, and administrative action.

Command Directed

Used when the commanding officer, officer in charge, or other officer who has succeeded to command per U.S. Navy Regulations, suspects drug use but does not have a sufficient basis for probable cause. The authority to authorize a command-directed urinalysis may be delegated to an executive officer and or command duty officer.

Results may be used for administrative action only.

Command-directed drug testing is appropriate when the Sailor displays aberrant, bizarre, or unlawful behavior.

Self Referral

A Sailor may self refer as a drug user prior to being selected to participate in urinalysis testing (i.e. random testing, voluntary consent testing, probable cause and command directed testing).

Commanding officers may initiate administrative actions such as discharge, removal from flying, Personal Reliability Program, restricted area badges, etc. Sailors in the SARP may also be disciplined under the UCMJ when independent evidence of drug use is obtained.

Unit Sweep

A unit sweep is urinalysis of an entire unit, or the selection, random or otherwise, of

Members of Explosive Ordnance Disposal Unit 6 (EODMU6) Mayport, Fla., pull an inert Mk 15 bomb, which was on the ocean floor near Boca Grande, onto their boat.

According to NAS Key West Natural Resources Manager George Kenny, Navy EOD has received marine species awareness training and is versed in utilizing lookout procedures as they relate to the safety exclusion zones.

EODMU6 Mayport made their way out to the site Tuesday with help from the Coast Guard, who set up a 100-yard safety zone around the bombs' reported location. EOD sent two snorkelers out to check the area. After a brief look around the team found their target - a combination of Mk 15 and Mk 19 practice bombs that littered the ocean floor. According to Cornely, the area was probably used as a practice bombing range many years ago.

The team inspected all the bombs at the site and raised two out of the water, one of each type, for further inspection. Most of the bombs were hollow or so frail from being in the water that they broke apart just from being touched. The EOD team determined that all the bombs were inert and after pulling the two bombs, left the other bombs in place so as not to further disturb the environment in which they were found.

The unit made their way back to Key West feeling that their mission was a success.

"We did everything that needed to be done," said Straney. "We pulled two bombs and didn't need to use any explosives. I would say it was a success."

This EOD operation was one of 25 responses the team has made this year from Mayport all the way to St. Croix, including previous visits to Key West.

According to Cornely if anyone finds anything that could be harmful or dangerous in the waters immediately report it to the Coast Guard.

Warts and Grace

'The problem with perfectionists and their preoccupation with control is that the qualities that make them effective in their work can render them insufferable in their personal lives… in some settings, notably in our intimate relationships, we gain control only by relinquishing it." Gordon Livingston wrote these words in his book, "Too Soon Old, Too Late Smart: Thirty True Things You Need to Know Now."

Hear from a recovering Type A perfectionist - me. Less than perfection for the perfectionist is a reflection on self-worth. A perfectionist needs to show the world his or her value as a person at the expense of others and relationships. Dependence on performance rather than grace is central to their lives. "Zero Defects" is the name of the game! There can be no cracks in the armor. If there is a crack, then there is shame and guilt for not living up to the standard.

CHAPLAIN'S CORNER

NAS Key West Command Chaplain

Lt. Cmdr.
D. C. Dowling

A recovering perfectionist understands that wholeness is not perfection. Wholeness is achieved by personal confession and repentance (the answer to our guilt) and received through divine acceptance and grace (the answer to our shame). The combination of owning our guilt and receiving God's grace leads to spiritual transformation! A truthful evaluation of one's life is necessary in order to come to the place of living under grace, rather than law.

Confession is good for the soul and for our relationship with God. Who are you relying on? Is it yourself or God? If it is yourself, then the real wrong has been done against others in your life and ultimately against God.

Why not be honest about it? David admits in Psalm 69:5 saying, "God you know what I have done wrong. I cannot hide my guilt from You." That's confession - admitting what God already knows and perhaps what some people already know.

"Zero Defects" is not God's mentality. Admitting, confessing and believing in Him is all it takes to become the whole person He wants us to be. Not a bad deal! Commenting on God's grace one man once said to me, "He takes us warts and all."

You are welcome to join in Contemporary Christian Worship every Sunday at 10 a.m. at Sigsbee Park. This worship will move permanently to Truman Annex Chapel Sept. 6.

- For any fish for which spearing is expressly prohibited by law.

Obama pledges support, offers praise for troops, veterans

BY DONNA MILES
American Forces Press Service

America's men and women in uniform have done their duty and fulfilled every responsibility that's been asked of them, President Barack Obama said Aug. 17.

"And now," he said, "a grateful nation must fulfill ours."

Obama offered high praise for the troops, calling them the heart and soul of the world's best military during a speech at the Veterans of Foreign Wars' annual convention in Phoenix.

"It's not the powerful weapons that make our military the strongest in the world. It's not the sophisticated systems that make us the most advanced," he told the veterans. "No, the true strength of our military lies in the spirit and skill of our men and women in uniform."

Obama said he recognizes his responsibility to "America's most precious resource" and vowed to be deliberate in how he commits them.

"I will only send you into harm's way when it is absolutely necessary," he said. "When I do, it will be based on good intelligence and guided by a sound strategy. And I will give you a clear mission, defined goals and the equipment and support you need to get the job done."

Obama promised to ensure troops have the resources, equipment and strategies they need to succeed in the current conflicts as well as future ones.

"We need to keep our military the best-trained, best-led, best-equipped fighting force in the world," he said.

The president outlined some of the initiatives under way to support this goal:

- Growing the Army and Marine Corps and halting reductions in the Navy and Air Force to increase time between deployments, reduce stress on the force and bring an end to the Army's stop-loss, an involuntary extension program;
- Providing more assets to support current operations: helicopters and crews; intelligence, surveillance and reconnaissance capabilities; special operations forces; and armored vehicles and protective gear;
- Conducting a top-to-bottom review of military priorities and posture to develop a new blueprint for the 21st century military the United States will need;
- Balancing military capabilities to face unconventional as well as conventional threats;
- Modernizing the force by investing in new skills and specialties as well as new technologies; and
- Reforming the way the Pentagon does business to reduce waste and get the most capability out of every defense dollar.

Obama also recognized the country's responsibility to take care of its men and women in uniform, as well as veterans.

He noted that his fiscal 2010 budget funds "increasing military pay, building better family housing and funding more childcare and counseling to help families cope with the stresses of war."

In addition, big increases will be devoted to providing wounded warriors treatment centers, case managers and better medical care, he said. These resources, he told the veterans, will ensure wounded warriors get the care they need so they "can recover and return to where they want to be: with their units."

Obama also noted the billions of dollars in the new budget that will go toward treating post-traumatic stress disorder and traumatic brain injuries that have become the defining wounds of today's wars.

Increased funding will provide more treatment and mental-health screening to reach troops on the front lines and more mobile and rural clinics to reach veterans who have returned home, he said.

America's commitment to its troops will continue when they become veterans, he said, noting significant funding increases for Department of Veterans Affairs programs.

"Whether you left the service in 2009 or 1949, we will fulfill our responsibility to deliver the benefits and care that you earned," the president promised the veterans.

Even during tough economic times, Obama said the country can't shirk from its responsibilities to service members and veterans.

"Let me be clear," he said. "America's commitments to its veterans are not just lines in a budget.

"They are bonds that are sacred - a sacred trust that we are honor-bound to uphold."

STAR SERVICE

Naval Air Station Key West's total force team recently celebrated the graduation of several two-day "Star Service" classes presented to workers who are directly involved with customer service at the air station. Some of the topics included customer care, exceeding customer expectations, and how to handle a difficult customer situation.

Healing wounded warriors at Dolphin Research Center

STORY AND PHOTOS BY JAMES E. BROOKS
NAS Key West Public Affairs Officer

Thousands of miles from former battle lines drawn in sand and jungle, groups of wounded veterans are making small personal victories in recovering from injuries, visible or not, at the Dolphin Research Center in Marathon, Fla.

"There's a lot of anger and frustration in the folks coming back from Iraq and Afghanistan," said Marine Corps veteran Michael Fradera. "Programs and places like this help us adjust."

Fradera lost both his legs when the Humvee he was riding in was hit by a roadside bomb. While many are unsure and hesitant how to talk to a wounded veteran or what questions to ask, Fradera doesn't waste much time. He pulls out his cell phone and quickly scrolls to a digital picture of a tangled, burning heap of metal that used to be Marine transportation.

"There were four of us in there," he said, showing off the picture. "We all got out alive. I wasn't angry about losing my legs. I was angrier at losing my boots that I just bought."

The Dolphin Research Center's close relationship with wounded veterans goes back to the very inception of the facility. One of the facility's founders, Armando Rodriguez, is a wounded veteran himself. Rodriguez is the recipient of two Purple Hearts from his time with the Army in Vietnam.

"Armando had a big influence on the programs we run here for not only wounded veterans but also people facing difficult life challenges," said Joan Mehew, director of special needs programs.

According to Mehew, the facility once tested a 12-week pilot program for Vietnam Veterans suffering from post traumatic stress disorder.

"In 1999, we had a program that brought wounded veterans here with a therapist," she said. "It was run out of the Veterans Administration offices in Key West and Miami. We hope to establish a similar program to help not only Vietnam veterans but today's injured veterans as well."

While the facility's star attractions are 19 dolphins and three California sea lions, a landscaped Veterans Garden complete with a waterfall invites visitors to a quieter escape steps from the water.

"The garden idea started off very simply by a group of Vietnam veterans who gathered together to swap recipes," recalled Rodriguez. "We dedicated it in 1999 when we had the veteran's pilot program here. We expanded it in 2005 and it's open free to all veterans who just want a quiet place to reflect in a beautiful setting."

On Aug. 14, the garden was rededicated in a simple ceremony and a few short speeches. An honor guard from Naval Air Station Key West folded a flag that once flew over a headquarters building in Iraq. After the ceremonial folding, it was placed in a shadow box that will provide another source of solace for veterans, wounded or not, who stop at the center located alongside U.S. 1 at mile marker 58.

After making the 50-mile drive north to be part of the ceremonies, NAS Key West Commanding Officer Capt. Steven Holmes shook hands with the gathered veterans and toured the center.

"I want to thank you for your military service," Holmes said. "The Dolphin Research Facility is an unbelievable place and I hope you and all veterans enjoy it."

The Florida Keys are filled with small tranquil, get-aways eagerly sought by tourists. For veterans facing combat injuries and a lengthy road of recovery, the Dolphin Research Center offers a unique destination and a unique cadre of friends to speed the healing process.

Despite losing part of his leg to a roadside bomb in Iraq, Marine Corps veteran Damon Zeigler still enjoys the water. Dolphin Research Center's Merina welcomes the swimmer to her home at the Dolphin Research Center in Marathon, Fla.
