While the two brothers were outside talking; two gendarmes came out and started speaking French to J.S. (who does not understand French) at the same time twisting his (J.S.) hands and kneeing him (kicking him with the knee). They searched J.S. pockets and when they did not find the knife, one gendarme held him while the other went away and returned with a flash-light - During all this time the younger brother (E.S.) was standing with his hands folded looking on. When the gendarme returned with the flash-light he started looking on the ground for the knife and found it close to where E.S. was standing. He picked it up and said something in French, whereupon the other gendarme released J.S. and they both grabbed E.S. and started to twist his arm - E.S. shook them off and asked them (in English - gendarmes do not understand English) to leave him alone, because he had done nothing - The two gendarmes flew back at E.S. in a fighting manner and E.S. decided to defend himself - J.S. seeing two gendarmes attacking his younger brother decided to help him and took on one of the gendarmes. And so the two gendarmes were now in combat with the two brothers (both brothers are smaller than the gendarmes) -

E.S. soon had his gendarme out of commission; but when he looked around he saw that the other gendarme had his brother J.S. on the ground and was choking him. E.S. went over to where the gendarme was choking his brother and tried to get off - and when he could not succeed he burst the gendarme a kick in his face whereupon the gendarme released J.S. and both brothers took off - by this time the crowd had gathered - and some of the St. Martin "Frenchmen" started following the brothers throwing bottles and stones after them and calling on the gendarmes to kill the "Dutch so and so" - (See CLASH on page 8)
