African Studies Digital Collections

Mission

The collections were developed and are managed to support the past, ongoing, and future needs of scholars.

As a part of the ongoing mission to preserve material, new material is digitized and added to the collections.

Scope

The collections are multidisciplinary and serve all colleges at the University of Florida. The collections support scholarship on diverse topics, including the study of the African continent, its flora and fauna, peoples and cultures, and natural resources and wildlife.

The materials are in different formats, ranging from photos and maps to literature and journals.

Searching in AFDC

Google Search

If you are accessing the collections on the campus, you can search using Google.

From the Home Page

The basic search on the Home Page allows you to search citation information across all items and collections in AFDC. You can also access sub-collections at the bottom of the page and search directly within each collection.

Advanced Search

If your basic search returns too many results, the advanced search feature allows you to restrict your search terms by categories such as title, publisher, subject, keyword, country and more.

Full Text Search

If you would like to search through the full text for a specific word or phrase, simply click on the text search tab. If you would like to include the newspapers in your search, click search, click the check box below the search bar and then type in the search term. You will receive results that include the term either in the citation or the full text. If the term is found in the full text, all pages with that term appear in the “matching pages” box at the top left of the screen.

All Items

Use the All Items tab to access all the materials in the collections.
