LIFE STORIES

Hope springs for Mary Putnik

Steve BAUMANN
COLUMNIST

For Mary Putnik and Warm Mineral Springs, it was love at first dip.

In October 1991, Mary and her husband, Bob, first traveled south from Chicago to North Port for a visit.

"We came, we swam and everything and went back home and put our house on the market," she said Monday.

By September 1993, they had moved.

"We fell in love with the Springs," she added.

Mary is a European by birth, as are so many of the people who pay good money to float around the warm, highly mineralized pond fed by deep aquifer.

She grew up in Serbia, which was Yugoslavia when she lived there. In 1971, she and Bob left for Vienna and spent three years getting their papers in order for a move to the U.S. The reason was simple, one you're likely to get from most immigrants:

"We were looking for a better life."

They found it in Chicago in the half-million-strong Serbian neighborhoods.

Then here, among a smaller community of European emigres.

"Just because of the wonderful water," Mary said.

The Putniks moved about a mile away. She came swimming, got to know the staff and told them she was looking for work.

"A couple of months later, they called me and offered me a part-time job," she said. "I took it, and here I am."

Still at the Springs, from part-time work to assistant manager to operating manager to her current position, general manager. Through one owner, then another and another and another.

As she gave me a tour during her lunch break Monday, Mary said the biggest constant over two decades was the people.

"European people believe a lot in the minerals in the springs and everything. They don't believe in chlorine in the pools and that type of thing," she said.

In Serbia, for instance, there are 35 springs. (She's toured them.) And, Mary added, "They are all different. Different minerals and different activities.

"So when you go in Europe to the springs you have the spa and you're going for the services. You have exercise, you have a sauna, you have massages."

Which to me seems a good argument for bringing back services that have been lost in the past year: a spa and a restaurant, plus exercise and wellness facilities. Maybe even some place, conveniently located, where tourists can stay overnight.

Mary also believes deeply in the restorative power of the place.

"If you're here and you see the people, they come in with the wheelchair, they come in with the walker. They're hardly walking.

"After two weeks, they put the walker on the side and they're walking."

She added, "So when you see something like that it really touches your heart. It's amazing how the water works for people."

As for Mary, she has nothing to say about the politics of the place. Not a thing. She's happy to have worked there all these years, happy to have gotten her job back when Warm Mineral Springs reopened after a nine-month closure.

And hopeful to keep working.

She's almost 62. She'd like to work until she's 65. Then retire and come back as a customer.

"If it's possible," she added, which was the most she said about the uncertain future.

"I'm hoping."

Missing child case tests social media

By ADAM KREGER
STAFF WRITER

When law enforcement turns to technology and social media to seek aid in solving cases, authorities run the risk of committing inadvertent errors or receiving unhelpful feedback. That's what happened Friday afternoon when the Charlotte County Sheriff's Office was looking for a missing girl, but officials say the situation has been addressed.

After a 10-year-old girl ran away from a youth program at a Port Charlotte church, the CCSO was quick to get the word out to the public via social media. A CCSO Facebook post to 9,368 users was shared 380 times and received 65 comments. The same information reached 985 Twitter followers. And, an alert was texted or emailed to 1,142 people registered for the Nixle notification service.

The child was found safe around 8 p.m. — about six hours after the search began.

CCSO public information officer Debbie Bowe said the Nixle message — which was linked to the Sheriff's Office Twitter and Facebook — was inadvertently only viewable by Nixle users. Later, the post deactivated altogether.

"Basically, a wrong button was clicked, or the right button wasn't

Local Muslims observe holy month

By PAUL FALLON
STAFF WRITER

CHARLOTTE HARBOR — The Muslim community in Charlotte County is small, but people should not judge it by its size alone, said Imam Azhar Subedar.

The Islamic Community of Southwest Florida is actively involved throughout the area, Subedar said. The members are doctors, as well as county and city workers and entrepreneurs. The membership is also active in charities and donates funds to help the needy, he said.

The members of the mosque, located at 25148 Harborview Road, are observing the Islamic holy month of Ramadan, which is marked by fasting through the day, as well as prayer and reflection, Subedar said. During the holiest of months, Muslims around the world wake early to eat before the sun comes up and they do not eat again until the sun sets.

They also refrain from drinking fluids during the daytime hours, Subedar said. This restraint in a country with a wide variety of different religions is something that makes American Muslims unique in the world, he added.

Charlotte keeps its current tax rate

By STEVE REILLY
STAFF WRITER

An increase in Charlotte County property values influenced commissioners to freeze the tax rate on those properties in the 2014-15 fiscal year.

Charlotte County commissioners voted unanimously Monday to set a countywide property tax ceiling of 6.3007 mills, the present rate of taxation. The commissioners do have the option in September to lower that rate, but cannot increase it.

A mill equates to $1 in taxes per $1,000 of taxable value. The countywide rate will translate into $630.07 per $100,000 of a property's taxable value. Also, that does not count other millage and assessments on a property tax bill in Charlotte County.

The Charlotte countywide millage rate includes revenue for the general fund, sheriff operations, capital projects fund and the state-mandated health unit.

What it does not include are the county's 0.2 mills for its Environmentally Sensitive Lands Program, which voters approved in 2006; 0.2387 mills for the Greater Charlotte Street Lighting District; 2.5855 mills for the Charlotte Public Safety Unit; 1.8012 mills for the Don Pedro/Knight Island Street and Drainage Unit; 0.7798 mills for the Manasota Key Street and Drainage Unit; 0.1978 for the Stump Pass/Beach Renourishment and 0.7062 mills for the Sandhill Municipal Service Taxing Unit.

Commissioners agreed to keep all those additional millage tax rates the same.

Additionally, the county has flat non-ad valorem municipal service benefit unit rates appearing on the tax bill that are paid by property owners within a specific geographic area.

Other governmental agencies assess their own millage rates that appear on the tax bills. Based upon adopted 2013-14 millage rates, the county breakdown of who receives what from the total of property tax assessments on tax bills is:

- 40.98 percent for the school board.
- 20.14 percent for law enforcement, courts, correction and jail budgets.
- 18.53 percent for Charlotte County's countywide rate.

Keep Gulf beaches dark for turtles

By STEVE REILLY
Staff Writer

ENGLEWOOD — Local sea turtle patrols reported a slight slowing in the number of new nestings last week.

But they expressed greater concerns about keeping the beaches dark, as well as leaving the nesting turtles and hatching nests undisturbed.

"The next two weeks will be the darkest of July, increasing the threat posed by lights," said Wilma Katz. She and Zoe Bass are the principal permit holders overseeing Coastal Wildlife Club volunteer sea turtle patrols on Manasota Key.

With the new moon on July 26, Katz told volunteers, "We'll be reminding residents and visitors we encounter to make sure their section of beach is dark at night. We appreciate any 'lights out or shielded, please' reminders you can offer as well."

As of Friday, the CWC reported 2,775 loggerhead sea turtle nests on Manasota Key, 572 more nests than last year during the same time period. The CWC also reported 18 green turtle nests and one Kemp's ridley nest this season.

Female loggerhead sea turtles generally nest at night and nests hatch at night with the young turtles heading instinctively toward the bright horizon over the Gulf. However, artificial light can dissuade females from nesting and disorient the hatching sea turtles.

While it may be exciting to witness a female nesting or the turtles emerging from their nests, people can cause problems if they approach the turtles carelessly.

"Lots of people with flashlights on the beach, so lots of false crawls," said Linda Soderquist who's the permit holder on the bridgeless Little Gasparilla Island.

"Everyone wants to see a turtle! They go from nest to nest looking for hatches, too," Soderquist said, suspecting most of those people are vacationers.

Like Manasota Key, Soderquist is reporting more nests this year than last year. As of Friday, 122 loggerheads nested, while last year 82 nests were reported. She's also reported one green sea turtle nest.

North of Don Pedro State Park, Brenda Bossman, the primary permit holder for Knight and Don Pedro islands, reported more than 290 loggerhead nests and one green sea turtle nest. Bossman has also reported hatching turtles being disoriented due to people keeping on lights that shine on the Gulf beaches.

"We have opportunity for more education with (Palm Island Resort) and other condo associations," Bossman said, but she added more people on the islands aren't drawing shades, shielding or shutting off their lights this season as they have in previous nesting seasons.

On Manasota Key, Bass said, "We do have similar problems. (Friday) one of our volunteers found a flashlight by a false crawl where the turtle dug her primary body pit and an abandoned egg chamber. All that effort and it appears someone spooked her."

Bass also said, "Many people are ignorant of the law or just don't care. But for those who don't know or care, there are many more who do care and are respectful of our sea turtles."

Sarasota and Charlotte counties and the city of Venice have implemented ordinances to ensure sea turtles are protected. Those ordinances call for lights to be disconnected, shielded or turned off outdoor lights visible on the beach until Oct. 31, the end of the local sea turtle nesting season.

Sea turtles are starting to hatch on local beaches. Residents and visitors are reminded to avoid the nests and to keep artificial lights off the beach.

HOW TO HELP NESTING SEA TURTLES

Englewood's Coastal Wildlife Club and Mote Marine Laboratory offer the following tips to protect the turtles and hatchlings:

- Disconnect, shield or turn off outdoor lights visible on the beach until Oct. 31, the end of the local sea turtle nesting season.
- Close drapes after dark and move beach furniture off the beach. Move or adjust interior lights visible from the beach.
- Do not use flashlights, tiki torches, fishing lanterns, photo flashes or fireworks on Gulf beaches at night.
- Enjoy building sand castles, digging holes or other play on the Gulf beaches, but refill any holes before you leave. Sea turtle hatchlings and shorebird chicks can be trapped in holes. The nesting adult sea turtles can also be trapped or injure themselves.
- Remove canopies, chairs, toys and other obstructions from beaches at night.
- Do mini-cleanups of trash on the beach that might hinder nesting turtles or hatchlings. Food scraps left on the beaches attract raccoons and other predators.
- Do not allow dogs on the beach. Even leashed dogs, just by being there, can frighten turtles, dig up nests or harm hatchlings or shorebird chicks, causing the mother to abandon the nest.
- If a nesting turtle or hatchlings are spotted, remain quiet, at a distance and in the dark.

All sea turtle species are classified as endangered or threatened with federal and state protections, including their nests.

According to state law, violators can face up to five years in prison or a $5,000 fine for disrupting or destroying a nest. The intentional disturbance of a sea turtle nest is punishable as a third-degree felony. Under the Federal Endangered Species Act, violators can face a year in prison and fines up to $100,000.

For marine wildlife emergencies, including dead or injured adult sea turtles and disoriented hatchlings and disruption of nests, call the Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission Division of Law Enforcement at 888-404-3922, or visit www.Myfwc.com/law/Alert.

North Port EDC hosting job fair

By ANNE KLOCKENKEMPER
Staff Writer

NORTH PORT — On Aug. 6, job seekers and employers will have a chance to connect at a job fair hosted by the North Port Economic Development Corporation.

The event, set for 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the gym at North Port High School, is one North Port EDC Executive Director Jean Harris hopes will attract professionals either in need of a job or looking for a career change.

"Because it's being held at the high school, I've had people who ask if it's for high school students. It's not," she said. "We're looking for any and all job seekers. It's not restricted to North Port. Any of the surrounding areas — Venice, Englewood, Port Charlotte. We want everyone to feel welcome and to use this as an opportunity to find a position that they're looking for."

The NPEDC decided to host the job fair because members had been hearing from the community that such an event would be welcome.

"Economic development plays a large force in workforce development," she said. "And it's very much needed, because we're the largest workforce in Sarasota County."

Harris said they still have room for companies that are hiring, and that the NPEDC has had an exceptional response.

"We have representatives already confirmed from the education and health care fields, manufacturing, transportation and construction industries. Really what we're looking to do is bring the employers to the workforce. We're looking for anyone who has positions to fill," she said. "We do still have space, but space is limited. … It is first-come, first-served."

There is a $100 exhibitor fee for employers, or $50 if they are already a member of the NPEDC.

Primarily, however, Harris said they're trying to get the word out to job-seekers that the job fair is happening.

"We want to make sure that people know we are holding this event for the people that are out of work," she said.

Harris said job seekers should bring copies of their résumé. Suits aren't necessary, she said, but those on the job hunt should be prepared to speak directly to employers. North Port High School is at 6400 W. Price Blvd.

The North Port Economic Development Corp., in its third year, is a private organization that hopes to further the city as a viable regional player for growth in business, education, medicine and ecotourism. To help reach that goal, the group unveiled a five-part "vision plan" in January 2013. And although it would cost potentially hundreds of millions to complete, the plan could create roughly 1,700 jobs and transform the city, NPEDC members say.

For more information on the Aug. 6 job fair, or for an employer interested in having a booth, call the North Port EDC at 941-429-7857.

Report: Road rage leads to gunshots

CHARLOTTE COUNTY — A North Fort Myers man has been accused of shooting at another driver on Interstate 75 during a road rage incident Sunday night, according to the Charlotte County Sheriff's Office.

Joey John-Medeiros Pinheiro, 20, was driving a Chrysler LeBaron southbound through Charlotte County — returning to North Fort Myers after a day at the beach in Venice — when he allegedly cut off a 47-year-old man in a Chevrolet Avalanche and gave him an obscene hand gesture. The report shows Pinheiro cut the man off "several times" through Charlotte County, but Pinheiro claims he was the one cut off. One of Pinheiro's friends — who was driving back in a separate car — told Pinheiro someone in the Avalanche was throwing loose change and ice out the window, court records show.

Pinheiro eventually positioned his car to the left of the Avalanche and used a Crosman Survivalist BB gun to fire at the vehicle, by reaching his left arm out the window and aiming over the roof, the report shows. The driver-side window of the Avalanche shattered, authorities said, and shards of glass hit the driver. The man told deputies he thought he had been shot at first. An unidentified passenger in the Avalanche was uninjured.

Pinheiro exited I-75 at Tuckers Grade. The man in the Avalanche followed him and was able to flag down a CCSO deputy, who stopped Pinheiro. The shooter had allegedly tossed the gun out the window near the exit ramp, but authorities found it later.

The suspect was arrested and charged with two counts of aggravated assault with the intent to commit a felony, shooting from a vehicle, shooting into a vehicle, tampering with evidence and violation of probation. He was being held at the Charlotte County Jail without bond Monday.

Man remains jailed after standoff

PORT CHARLOTTE — A 71-year-old man remained behind bars Monday after he was involved in a lengthy standoff with law enforcement that ended early Sunday, according to the Charlotte County Sheriff's Office.

Dennis Robert Poulakis barricaded himself inside a home on Helena Avenue Saturday afternoon and threatened to kill himself, the report shows. The home belonged to a man who had a restraining order against Poulakis, and Poulakis left a message for the man around 1:30 p.m. telling him where he was. Poulakis allegedly said he'd kill himself if law enforcement was notified.

Authorities with the CCSO's Crisis Negotiation Team went to the home and were unable to get Poulakis to surrender for a Baker Act evaluation. Around 3:30 a.m., a taxi pulled up to the home and Poulakis — with a blanket-wrapped shotgun in hand — tried to make it to the car, the report shows. Authorities reportedly used a Taser electroshock device on him multiple times and pepper-sprayed him for not obeying commands to stop. He was arrested on charges of violating an injunction, aggravated stalking and resisting arrest. He also was charged with failing to appear for a court date, in relation to a different case. Poulakis, of the 500 block of East Tarpon Boulevard Northwest in Port Charlotte, was being held without bond Monday at the Charlotte County Jail.

Report: Man arrested over relationship with minor

PORT CHARLOTTE — A 22-year-old man has been arrested for having a sexual relationship with a 14-year-old girl, according to the Charlotte County Sheriff's Office.

Darnell Paul Scott, of the 2100 block of Starlite Lane, was arrested Saturday on a charge of lewd and lascivious battery on a victim under 16 years old, after the girl's mother heard about what was going on and notified authorities.

The two never had sexual intercourse together, the report shows, but they performed several sex acts on each other from early May to mid-July. The two had begun dating in February. The girl was a willing participant in the sex acts, the report shows.

Scott was being held without bond in the Charlotte County Jail on Monday for violating his probation, which he was on for a conviction earlier this month related to giving false information to a pawn shop.

Facts, not fear, should decide marijuana vote

OUR POSITION: Medical marijuana amendment debate shouldn't be decided by fear.

The Florida Sheriff's Association's aggressive campaign to defeat a constitutional amendment legalizing marijuana for medical purposes is a mixture of common-sense advice and old-fashioned scare-mongering. We got a dose of both when FSA President Grady Judd and Charlotte County Sheriff Bill Prummell spoke to the Sun editorial board last week.

Judd spoke via conference call from Polk County, where he has served as sheriff since 2004. His main message was that the referendum language is so poorly written that it would create loopholes "big enough to sail a battleship through." He said polling showing broad support for medical marijuana is flawed and that people he speaks to change their minds when he explains that the amendment would essentially "legalize marijuana," not just make it legal for medical purposes.

He said the writers of the amendment were exploiting voters' compassion for people suffering from illnesses or conditions such as cancer, seizures, multiple sclerosis and paralysis, without revealing that marijuana could be recommended for more minor conditions such as anxiety and insomnia.

Prummell emphasized the importance for voters to read not only the ballot language, but the full text of the amendment in order to get a clear picture of what the amendment means. He touted the growing availability of drugs containing medically beneficial compounds contained in marijuana (without the euphoric effect of THC) as a reason to not legalize pot. He cited the Florida Legislature's approval this year of a low-THC marijuana called Charlotte's Web as an example.

We agree with Judd and Prummell that voters should read both the abbreviated ballot language and the full text of the amendment. Voters can go to the state Division of Elections website at election.dos.state.fl.us and click on Constitutional Amendments. Amendment 2 is titled "Use of Marijuana for Certain Medical Conditions."

What we regret is the FSA and individual sheriffs engaging in overt scare tactics to convince voters medical marijuana will unleash a host of anti-social ills, including spiraling recreational use and abuse (especially by minors), crime and the involvement of criminals in the distribution chain. As we noted in a May editorial on the Legislature's passage of the Charlotte Web bill, studies of states where medical marijuana is legal have shown the opposite to be true. There is no evidence medical marijuana produces a generation of young potheads and a University of Texas study concluded "medical marijuana laws were not found to have a crime exacerbating effect on any of the seven crime types. On the contrary, our findings indicated that MML precedes a reduction in homicide and assault."

We respect the position taken by Florida sheriffs on this important public policy issue. They and their officers are on the front lines of coping with drug-related crime. We think they earnestly believe medical marijuana would make their jobs harder. That said, we disapprove of the fear-mongering tactics employed by Judd and others that smack of 1950s-era films such as "Reefer Madness" that distort the issues even as they implore voters to look at the facts.

Radio a forgotten source of entertainment

Editor:

If you are young, or young at heart, here it is. It's the marvel of the century. It will free you from the confinement of watching your boob tube, and cure your habit of computeritis.

What is it? They call it radio. It is not new on the scene. But it may be new to you. If you are busy shooting your mouth off all day on your cellphone. It is the latest craze for those who want to be with it. You can do your own thing while listening to music and talk programs coming out of thin air. Buy one to play, and you will say, "this has made my day."

County's new van bad for seniors

Editor:

Charlotte County and the Cultural Center have a wonderful program whereby seniors and handicapped citizens can obtain a free ride to and from doctors offices, food stores, etc. in a sedan. I have been a volunteer driver for over two years.

Unfortunately, a few weeks ago, some bureaucrat in Charlotte County decided to exchange the sedan for an eight-seat, two-step van. Some of the drivers voiced concerns to the Cultural Center about how a senior using a cane or walker could safely get in or out of a large van. We drivers are not allowed to physically assist our customers. If something happens and someone slips, we are instructed to call 911.

When the van was delivered I was surprised to see that the mileage was higher than the sedan the county replaced. Last Monday I drove this van and watched each senior struggle in and out, trying to navigate the two steps. Why would Charlotte County make this change, even though some drivers voiced safety concerns? Maybe the answer was a sign on the van noting that federal funds supported this vehicle. Is this another example of a government program being implemented by bureaucrats and the people must comply? I will not drive this van anymore and put any senior at risk.

TV preachers not his favorite

Editor:

Are we in the end of days? According to some we are. The signs abound. If one watches Christian television and believes the preachers thereon, then something is going to happen soon, perhaps in our time? Each generation has been hearing the same message.

St. Paul thought the end of days was close. Most religions have some story about the last days. They cite "blood" moons, passing comets, natural disasters, freaky weather, Mayan calendars, biblical prophecies and other concocted theories to back up these stories. Regarding TV preachers: what better way to increase the flock and keep the coffers full than to keep folks nervous, on edge, afraid and trembling.

"You had better be ready. Judgment day is upon us. Send money. Listen to God, he will tell you how much. Plant a 'seed.' Expect returns many times-fold." A donation brings you books, pamphlets, DVDs, tapes, prayer cloths and other come-ons. These preachers are on a self-righteous ego trip, basking in the adulation of their adoring fans.

I imagine them at the TV Preachers Convention, smoking $100 cigars, sipping 15-year-old single malt scotch, flashing their $2,500 pinky rings, slapping each other on the back, all the while chuckling, "Did you ever think it would be this easy?"

Send illegals to liberal bases

Editor:

Today, we are witnessing the debacle on what the lack of securing our border is causing in our country. We know that in the early 20th century, when immigrants entered this country, they were given a medical examination to make sure the immigrants had no communicable diseases. Today, preventing the spread of such diseases does not seem to be a priority, even though it is becoming well-documented that these illegals are bringing communicable diseases into this country.

We now see our government moving these illegals into communities without notifying local government agencies and attempting to keep such movement secret. Many people in these communities and their elected officials realize they do not have the budget resources to provide care for these illegals, but the federal government is not listening.

I would like to suggest the way to address this issue quickly is to send all these illegals to Martha's Vineyard, Nantucket Island, Cape Cod, Beverly Hills, Palm Springs, Northern Virginia, Washington, D.C., and San Francisco as well as other bastions of liberalism. I am sure the so-called tolerant liberals will quickly show their intolerance with "Not in my backyard." As for the gang members and drug cartel members that we are allowing into this country, I would suggest sending them to Chicago where they will fit right in with the violence.

Curious who paid for penny tax signs

Editor:

Just recently in several places in the county I have noticed new large metal signs going up in regarding the 1 percent tax. They are placed in areas that have been improved by the 1 percent tax. Bayshore is a great example of improvement to that area using the money from this tax.

Is the purpose of the signs to generate interest to "sell" the tax? Showing — "Look here to see what we did with your 1 percent tax money!"

Whether for the tax or against the tax, one wonders if the signs and installation were paid for with the revenue generated by the 1 percent tax or by the general fund.

If the revenue that paid for the signs and installation were generated by the 1 percent tax, is that money generated for the funding of signs? I think that it is for improvements.

I hope this doesn't go the same way that those colored bands that were put on sign posts to designate flood zone areas. I am sure that some visitors think the bands are some tape left over from someone's yard sale sign.

Wheels and Wings ride a success

Editor:

A giant "thank you" for all the volunteers and supporters of Wheels and Wings V this past July 4 weekend. Organized by the Peace River Riders Bicycle Club the event showcased our beautiful area to 334 riders from five states. From Mayor Keesling, who proclaimed July 6 Wheels and Wings day, to our partners who offered cash and products. Please let them know we appreciate their community support.

They were: Beef 'O' Bradys (Fort Myers, Punta Gorda) Dodson Law, (SWFL Clearwater) Community Physicians of North Port (North Port) Acme Bicycle Shops (Punta Gorda), Andreae Group Remax Harbor (Punta Gorda), Comet Cleaners (Punta Gorda), Ralph Temple Insurance (Punta Gorda), Road ID (Erlanger, Ky.) Advil Allergy Endurance, C & R Graphics, (Port Charlotte) Richards Whole Foods, (Port Charlotte), Patty Stefan Photography (Port Charlotte), Gary Millwater Photography (Venice), City of Punta Gorda, and the Punta Gorda Police Department. Kudos to six hotels and six local pubs that offered up specials for the riders that arrived early to take part in the President's No-Spandex Pub Ride July 5.

Some fun facts: The riders rode four different routes, demolished over 600 pounds of chicken wings, drained over five kegs of "beerveridges," cruised more than 159 miles of local roadways, 243 riders traveled from outside Charlotte County and the average age was 50.3 years old.

PGI boat owners support community

Editor:

In response to an article written regarding the Alligator Creek cut through, I must agree that it very well is a safety matter for all people. Not just those who live in PGI. You can never tell when the weather will change here in Florida, and it does so without notice.

As far as being environmentally friendly, consider the fuel savings with 2,000 boats traveling one hour less at idle to reach their destination. And then multiply that times 3-4 times per week.

I also would like to remind you that the boat owners here in PGI purchase our fishing and boating supplies with businesses in Charlotte County. As well as new boats, canvas, boat detailing, and repairs.

So if your objection to the cut through is strictly financial, then maybe you should remember we here in PGI pay taxes, and yes, lots of them. Most of us are elderly with no children at home, yet we pick up the school tax, fuel tax, both car and boat. We keep many businesses alive by hiring them for service work, which goes to the county as a business tax. It cannot always be about you, but what is good for our community as a whole.

Elizabeth Warren for president?

Dana Milbank

It was one of those important but dull hearings that don't even get broadcast on C-SPAN 3.

An obscure subcommittee was taking expert testimony on patient safety Thursday, and only four of its 14 members bothered to show up. Several of the public seats were empty, too.

But Elizabeth Warren was in her element.

The committee's most junior member was the first senator to arrive, five minutes early, and when it was her turn to question the witnesses she blew past the time limit. It was as if she were back at Harvard Law School, using the Socratic method to lead students to her desired conclusions in favor of stricter standards for hospitals and prescriptions.

"Dr. Jha? … OK, good, and Dr. Gandhi wants to add to that? … Dr. Pronovost, you want to get into this? … OK, so we've got payment responsibility. Very powerful. Dr. Disch? … What would be the next step?"

She nodded, waved, smiled and coaxed her pupils along with "right" and "mm-hmm." When the chairman finally cut her off, Warren had a concern. "I do want to be sure Dr. James gets a chance to participate," she said.

Indeed, his class-participation grade was riding on it.

Watching Warren combine her encyclopedic knowledge of the regulatory system with her three decades of experience as a professor, it was difficult to picture her launching a long-shot bid for the presidency.

A draft-Warren boomlet is underway, with the purpose of encouraging her to challenge Hillary Clinton for the Democratic nomination in 2016. It is eerily similar to the movement that propelled Barack Obama to challenge Clinton eight years ago even though, like Warren, Obama had served just two years in the Senate. But while Warren is a compelling figure — a feisty populist at a time of inequality and resentment — her actions since arriving in the Senate suggest she has neither interest in nor aptitude for a presidential candidacy.

I wanted to write about the Warren presidential hoopla, so I mentioned to her spokeswoman, Lacey Rose, that I'd buttonhole the senator after the subcommittee meeting. "We don't do hallway interviews," Rose replied. She said she would "see about" a phone interview, but six hours later reported that she "couldn't make this work." (Warren had been on the Senate floor, writing thank-you notes on official stationery while taking a turn in the presiding officer's chair.)

This, I learned, is typical. Congressional reporters say that Warren is unusual among senators in her refusal to take questions. She is invariably guarded by staff as she walks about the Capitol, and the few interviews she has done have generally been on defined topics (such as her book) where the risk of unanticipated questions is low.

Such reticence is certainly not a fault. But it is the behavior of a lawmaker who plans to keep her head down and to do her job as a legislator — not somebody who is contemplating the glare of the national spotlight. She has plunged into policy and is doing whatever she can to shield herself from unscripted moments.

At this point in 2006, Obama had already hired national political consultants David Axelrod and Anita Dunn. He clearly had greater ambitions: The Washington Post reported then that Obama himself "suggested that a presidential bid is a matter of when, not if."

Warren's apparent reluctance is well-grounded because Democrats may be less willing in 2016 to put their hopes in another neophyte. Liberals saw Obama as purer than Clinton, but his inconsistent leadership has disappointed many of them. Warren is, if anything, less known than Obama was; he served on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, but all of Warren's committee assignments are domestic.

None of this has stopped the "Ready for Warren" movement, which last week launched a website with a draft-Warren petition. "Run, Elizabeth, Run!" was the headline atop John Dickerson's Slate piece Thursday. In The Wall Street Journal, conservative John Feehery proclaimed that Warren "would beat the former first lady for the presidential nomination." In recent months Warren has made a dozen or so appearances in eight states for Democratic candidates.

It is, in other words, a bit like Obama in '06. Then, the young senator was getting more than 300 requests a week for appearances and drawing overflow crowds. But there is a crucial difference. As The Post reported at the time, Obama's Senate colleagues were grumbling about him being "drawn to news conferences and speeches more than to the hard details of lawmaking."

Warren, by contrast, is all about the hard details.

Obama dragged down by chaos at home and abroad

Michael Barone

"Why do you think President Obama's job rating is falling, even though the economy is recovering?" the interviewer asked.

It's a fair question, even though the economy declined 2.9 percent in the first quarter, even though most jobs created in June were parttime, and even though labor force participation remains low.

The fact is that the economy is growing, however slowly; jobs are being created, and the unemployment rate is heading down toward what economists consider full employment. And still the president's job rating languishes.

What's wrong with the question is an assumption embedded within it, that what voters seek most from government and political officeholders is economic growth. I think there's something they value even more: the maintenance of order.

This isn't what I was taught in political science classes. Political scientists who had grown up in the 1930s' Depression taught that politics was about "who gets what, when and how."

Operating on that assumption, political scientists developed rules that explained past election outcomes as a function of economic variables — how much the economy grew in the second quarter of the election year, for example.

Those rules generally worked pretty well at predicting future elections — until they didn't.

What they don't explain very well are the political upheavals that come when voters perceive that the nation and the world are in disarray. Americans, blessed with a mostly happy history, tend to take fundamental order for granted. They recoil and rebel when things spin out of control.

Example: The political scientists taught that the big shift toward Democrats in 1874 was a response to the financial panic of 1873. Sort of like the Great Depression.

But further study convinces me it was a rebellion against Ulysses Grant's military occupation of the South to protect blacks' rights. Voters tired of violence voted for the anti-black Democrats, who held House majorities for 14 of the next 20 years and won the popular vote for president in five of six presidential elections in those years.

Or consider Republicans' "back to normalcy" victory in 1920. This was a response to disorder at home (dizzying inflation and depression, waves of strikes, terrorist bombings) and abroad (Communist revolutions, continued fighting in Russia and the Middle East, rejection of Woodrow Wilson's League of Nations).

Closer to our times, Jimmy Carter was rejected in 1980 as the nation faced not only stagflation (inflation-plus-recession) at home but also an "arc of instability" abroad.

Americans, unlike voters in many other countries, demand the maintenance of order in the world as well in their own nation. From the early days of the republic, there has been an unspoken awareness that what happens in the world affects their own lives.

In the 19th century, American merchants went out into the Mediterranean, American whalers to the Pacific, American missionaries to China and the Middle East.

American troops followed. The Navy and Marines went after the Barbary pirates on the shores of Tripoli. American gunboats opened Japan to the world in 1854 and were stationed on rivers in China from the 1840s to the 1930s.

Which brings us to today. Many things seem to be spinning out of control. Important government agencies are malfunctioning — the Internal Revenue Service, Veterans Affairs. Obamacare is producing higher health care premiums and is on track to deliver more.

Tens of thousands of underage and some not-so-underage Central American illegal immigrants are streaming across the Rio Grande, and the government is flying them to parts unknown — and sending 38 back to their home countries.

Abroad things are even worse. In Syria there is violent civil war, and next door in Iraq terrorists are proclaiming a caliphate. Israel has been forced to launch a ground attack on the terrorist Hamas regime in Gaza.

A Malaysian airliner cruising at 33,000 feet over Ukraine has been brought down by a rocket, probably by thugs armed by Vladimir Putin's Russia.

The president, in between fundraisers, has time for a photo-op playing pool in Colorado, but not for one on the border. He has time for only two sentences on the airliner shoot-down before a photo-op and two more fundraisers. First things first.

Not everything spinning out of control is the president's fault. But his responses so far have confirmed voters' sense that the nation and the world are in disarray.

This, not economic sluggishness, is why he and his party are in trouble.

clicked," said Bowe. "This program is fairly new, and there's a learning curve. The problem is being corrected."

Certain CCSO supervisors — and Bowe — have authority to post to Nixle, which can automatically send the link to Facebook and Twitter. The supervisor who made the post Friday did that, but accidentally had the settings so that only Nixle users could see the information. So, the CCSO's Facebook post and tweet led to a Nixle log-in screen.

The first Facebook user to comment on the post asked the obvious question: "Can you share this with a link you don't have to create an account to view?" The post received dozens of likes, but got no response from the CCSO.

"When we have a situation like a missing person, the most important thing is to find the missing person," Bowe said. "We can't respond to all the comments, which oftentimes come in faster than we can read them."

Then, more than one Facebook user comment suggested the CCSO post might be old news — or "spam bs," as one person put it — since users were able to find news articles from January saying authorities were looking for the same girl in North Port. That's because she had gone missing in January, as well. The Sheriff's Office really was seeking public assistance Friday, despite what some commenters said.

"I couldn't figure out, right away, where that was coming from," said Bowe. "People who post about things they aren't certain about don't help the situation."

Sometimes, CCSO Facebook posts lead to arguments. Friday, one of Newburn's relatives got into a back-and-forth with a commenter.

"We appreciate comments about the general circumstances, and not cluttering up the post with other things," Bowe said.

Bowe, who often monitors posts and has the authority to respond, said there was no comment from CCSO Friday because "the situation corrected itself" — other users started posting accurate information to help those who could not see the post or who had posted false information.

The CCSO has been using Nixle since the beginning of May. Residents can sign up through ccso.org — click on Nixle — to receive texts or emails from the Sheriff's Office. Users can then respond via text or email, giving law enforcement another tool to gather tips about crimes, missing persons or other cases they may be trying to solve.

"We've gotten viable tips through Nixle," Bowe said. "We will continue to use it."

Imam Azhar Subedar breaks his fast on a date and water following prayer at the Islamic Community of Southwest Florida Sunday night. Muslims are currently celebrating the holy month of Ramadan where they can not eat or drink during the day.

and school schedules are rearranged for Ramadan," Subedar said. "But here we have to be more disciplined."

Muslims in the U.S. and other western countries could ignore the requirements of the holy month because they are not surrounded by others of a similar faith who would frown upon their behavior, he said.

"It's a beautiful thing to observe the tenets of our religion here," Subedar added. "Here our religion is driven by the heart, it's not driven by the culture."

Ramadan is when Muslims believe Allah revealed the Islamic holy book, the Quran, to the prophet Muhammad. Ramadan is based on the lunar calendar, and this year it runs from June 28 until July 27.

It is a month dedicated to reflection of one's life and blessings. Fasting is one of the tenets, or pillars, of the Islamic faith, as is giving to the needy, Subedar said. Muslims are required to give 2.5 percent of their yearly income to charity. This is called the Zakat, Subedar said.

"Ramadan teaches us self-discipline, it teaches us to be grateful and to be considerate," he said.

Depriving the body of food and water during the day helps to strengthen and grow the soul, Subedar said.

Muslims living in Southwest Florida end up fasting for around 15 hours a day during Ramadan. Muslims living in other parts of the globe will fast for longer, sometimes around 21 hours a day, because of the different times the sun sets depending on the location.

During Ramadan, many charitable organizations give presentations at mosques and Islamic centers about their need, Subedar added.

The Islamic Community of Southwest Florida's facility on Harborview Road is open to the general public, and members of other faiths are welcome to attend in order to get to know Islam, he said.

Abdool Khaleel, 57, of Punta Gorda, has been a member of the Islamic Community of Southwest Florida for around 28 years. The native of Guyana in South America pointed out that although the Islamic Community of Southwest Florida is small compared to other areas — there are about 200 to 250 members — it is a closely knit, diverse "family."

"We have people here from Pakistan, from South Africa, from the Middle East and from the Philippines," he said.

Khaleel hopes members of the community can learn that Islam is not the faith that is being portrayed on the news they watch at night. It is a faith of peace and respect for life, he added.

"What they see on the news isn't what they get," he said.

Since the local Islamic community is small, it is a family, said Zaheer Sattar, 55, of Port Charlotte. Since many of the members are far from their native lands, they must support and help each other in times of need and stress, Subedar said.

"We have that bond," he said. "Our families aren't here, so we have to be each other's family."

Muslims pray five times a day facing Mecca. During Ramadan, they typically break their fast after prayers as the sun sets. The local Islamic community gathers every Friday, Saturday and Sunday for a feast after their prayer.

On July 28, the congregation, or musalli, which means worshipers, will gather at 8 a.m. for a breakfast to celebrate the end of Ramadan, Subedar said.

A line-by-line proposed budget will be prepared for the county website, Burger said. Commissioners said they intend in August to dive into the details of the budget.

Doing the Time Warp

SUN PHOTOS BY BETSY WILLIAMS

First to arrive for the 11 p.m. showing of "The Rocky Horror Picture Show" were Arianna Ortiz, 19, Katelin Onody, 16, and Chrystal Vollmer. The viewing took place Friday night in downtown Punta Gorda as part of the AMI Kids Crossroads Third Friday Drive-In movie events.

Keeping with the tradition since 1975, Angela Rademaker came in "Rocky" makeup and Aundrea Siegenthaler in a maid's outfit similar to Magenta the maid in the film.

Ready to party, Eleanora Cochran, her daughter Mariah, 19, and Veronica Hogan, who came dressed as Janet the bride from "The Rocky Horror Picture Show."

Todd Stanfield, Will Albert, Dee Dee Przybylinkski, Valerie Dixon and Eli Stanfield, 15, came dressed in party hats and other "Rocky" clothing and equipped with lots of "Rocky" props for the viewing.

Melissa Corwin, Savanna Roemer, 15, her sister Taylor, 14, and their dad, David Roemer, were all familiar with the show, but eager to see it again.

A group of people who have never seen the movie — traditionally known as "virgins" — signify their newbie status with a "V."

Michele Robinson, with a bag of "Rocky" props being sold at the concession stand, attended the show with her mother, Toni Robinson.

Teresa and Frank Desguin came decked out in their "Rocky" gear along with a box filled with "Rocky" props.

Ukraine rebels release bodies

Pro-Moscow forces hand over black boxes from downed plane

HRABOVE, Ukraine — Bowing to international pressure Monday, pro-Moscow separatists released a train packed with bodies and handed over the black boxes from the downed Malaysia Airlines plane, four days after it plunged into rebel-held eastern Ukraine.

With body parts decaying in sweltering heat and signs that evidence at the crash site was mishandled, anger in Western capitals has mounted at the rebels and their allies in Moscow. Their reluctant cooperation will soothe mourning families and help investigators, but may do little to reconcile the East-West powers struggling over Ukraine's future.

Russia's Defense Ministry said it saw no evidence a missile was fired and denied involvement in the downing of Flight 17 — and suggested the Ukrainian military was at fault. President Vladimir Putin spoke out but showed no sign of abandoning the separatists as fighting

WASHINGTON — Bleeding from both legs and his arm, Ryan Pitts kept firing at about 200 Taliban fighters, even holding onto his grenades an extra moment to ensure the enemy couldn't heave them back. On Monday, President Barack Obama draped the Medal of Honor around his neck, in a somber White House ceremony that also paid tribute to his nine platoon comrades who died that summer day in Afghanistan.

Shark sightings off Cape Cod become boon for tourism

CHATHAM, Mass. (AP) — Its reputation as a man-eating predator aside, the great white shark is emerging as a boon for tourism on Cape Cod. Unlike in "Jaws," in which one of the animals terrorizes a small island, the sharks that have been spotted in growing numbers are stirring more curiosity than fear — and a buying frenzy for shark-related merchandise.

AP PHOTO

In this July 2 photo, vacationer Mark McCurdy, of Everett, Mass., examines shark-themed clothing at the Chatham Clothing Bar in Chatham, Mass.

Shark T-shirts are everywhere, "Jaws" has been playing in local movie theaters and boats are taking more tourists out to see the huge seal population that keeps the sharks coming. Harbormasters have issued warnings but — unlike the sharks in the movies — the great whites generally are not seen as a threat to human swimmers.

Among the entrepreneurs is Justin Labdon, owner of the Cape Cod Beach Chair Company, who started selling "Chatham Whites" T-shirts after customers who were renting paddle boards and kayaks began asking whether it was safe to go to sea.

"I mean, truthfully, we've probably grown about 500 percent in terms of the sale of our shark apparel," he said. The T-shirts, hoodies, hats, belts, dog collars and other accessories bear the iconic, torpedo-shaped image of great whites and sell for between $10 and $45.

He said his store brings in thousands of dollars in sales of the shark-themed merchandise.

Tourists peer through coin-operated binoculars in hopes of catching a glimpse of a shark fin from the beaches of Chatham. The posh resort town is on the elbow of the cape that has a large population of gray seals — the massive animals whose blubber is the fuel of choice for great white sharks. Local shops sell jewelry, candy, clothes, stuffed animals and beverages with shark motifs.

A study released last month by scientists at the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration found the number of great white sharks off the Eastern U.S. and Canada is surging after decades of decline. Conservation efforts and the greater availability of prey such as Massachusetts' seals are credited with the reversal.

Shark sightings have soared from generally fewer than two annually before 2004 to more than 20 in each of the last few years off Cape Cod, where the economy depends heavily on the summer tourism season. Despite notices urging boaters and swimmers to use caution, the official reaction has been nearly the opposite of the panic depicted in "Jaws," the 1975 film shot mainly on the Massachusetts island of Martha's Vineyard.

"White sharks are this iconic species in society and it draws amazing amounts of attention," said Gregory Skomal, a senior marine fisheries biologist who also leads the Massachusetts Shark Research Program, who said people are coming in hopes of witnessing the animals in their splendor.

$5M bond for teens in homeless deaths

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Three teenagers accused of fatally beating two homeless men beyond recognition with cinder blocks, bricks and a metal fence pole may have been terrorizing transients around Albuquerque for months, police said Monday.

The father of two of the boys said they were once homeless themselves and he had no idea what prompted the beatings. One of the boys told police they had attacked about 50 homeless people over the last few months, but had never gone that far. But on Friday night, he was angry about breaking up with his girlfriend, he said.

Alex Rios, 18, and two boys aged 16 and 15 were ordered held on $5 million bond each during initial court appearances Monday. They face murder charges stemming from the brutal attack in an Albuquerque lot where neighbors say transients regularly camped at night.

AP PHOTO

Alex Rios,18, makes an appearance on video for an arraignment in metro court Monday for participating in the beating of two homeless men on the westside in Albuquerque, N.M. over the weekend.

Following their arrest, the 15-year-old also told police that the trio had been targeting homeless people for the past year, according to a criminal complaint.

Prosecutors requested bonds of just $1 million, but Metropolitan Court Judge Linda Rogers set it higher, citing the gravity of the alleged crimes and the suspects' potential to flee. The district attorney's office said the younger suspects were charged as serious youthful offenders, meaning they could be tried in adult court.

The two younger defendants, one wiping away tears, sat in the courtroom while Rios made his appearance by closed circuit video from the county jail.

Family and attorneys for the three declined comment after the proceeding.

According to the criminal complaint, the 15-year-old told police the attack lasted more than an hour, and that the trio took turns picking up cinder blocks over their heads and smashing them into the faces of the men who had been sleeping in the field across from his home, according to the criminal complaint.

A third transient who escaped led police to the boys, whom he said were known for attacking homeless people. And the father of the two younger defendants told an Albuquerque television station there were rumors his son was violent, but he assumed it was with other kids.

Better weather to aid in wildfire fight

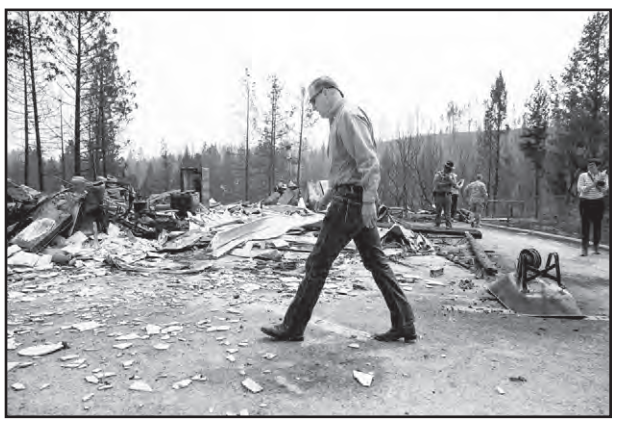
SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — Calmer winds and cooler temperatures were allowing firefighters to go on the offensive Monday against a destructive wildfire that has charred hundreds of square miles of terrain in Washington State.

The Carlton Complex of fires in north-central Washington had burned about 379 square miles, fire spokesman Andrew Sanbri said Monday.

"There is optimism in the air, but we don't want to give the impression that all is good," Sanbri said. "Things are improving."

Firefighters planned to aggressively protect some houses near Libby Creek on Monday, while burning away potential fuel on its north side, Sanbri said. Okanogan County Sheriff Frank Rogers estimates that 150 homes have been destroyed already, but suspects that number could be higher. The fire is being blamed for one death.

The forecast for Monday and Tuesday called for lighter winds and lower temperatures, said Spokane-based National Weather Service meteorologist Greg Koch.



AP PHOTO

Washington State Governor Jay Inslee walks the perimeter of a burned down home during a visit to the residential areas on Chiliwist Road affected by the Carlton Complex wildfire, near Malott, Wash., on Sunday.

Then on Wednesday a "vigorous" front is expected to cover Washington, bringing rain to much of the state. But it will also bring lightning, he added.

"The benefits of the system are still up in the air," Koch said. "We may get some rain where we need it, but we may also experience some lightning that could cause some new ignitions."

The fire has created smoky conditions and reduced air quality in much of eastern Washington and northern Idaho.

His deputies haven't been able to search parts of the county where homes are spread miles apart.

Rogers said one man has died of an apparent heart attack while fighting the fire near his home. Rob Koczewski, 67, was stricken on Saturday while he and his wife were hauling water and digging fire lines near their home. Rogers said Koczewski was a retired Washington State Patrol trooper and U.S. Marine.

There are more than 1,600 firefighters battling the flames, assisted by more than 100 fire engines, helicopters dropping buckets of water and planes spreading flame retardant, Sanbri said.

Many towns in the scenic Methow Valley remain without power and have limited landline and cellphone service. Okanogan County Public Utility District officials told KREM that fully restoring power to the area could take weeks.

Gov. Jay Inslee said Friday about 50 fires were burning in Washington, which has been wracked by hot, dry weather, gusting winds and lightning. About 2,000 firefighters were working in the eastern part of the state.

Karina Shagren, spokeswoman for the state's Military Department, said 100 National Guard troops were on standby, and up to 1,000 more in Yakima could receive additional fire training. Active-duty military could be called in as well, Inslee said.

The Washington state Department of Natural Resources has said firefighters from New Mexico, Utah and Wyoming are coming to the state to help.

Friend of Boston Marathon bombing suspect guilty

WASHINGTON (MCT) — A friend of Boston Marathon bombing suspect Dzhokhar Tsarnaev was convicted Monday of hindering the FBI investigation into the April 2013 blast by hiding Tsarnaev's backpack from authorities.

Azamat Tazhayakov, convicted in federal court on Boston, now faces up to 20 years in prison and becomes the first of three Tsarnaev friends to be tried in cases spawned from the marathon bombing, which killed three people and injured more than 260 others. He was acquitted of separate charges of trying to dispose of Tsarnaev's laptop computer.

Jurors reached the split verdict after prosecutors accused Tazhayakov of deliberately removing the backpack from Tsarnaev's college dorm room after Tsarnaev sent him computer messages telling him to dispose of some of his belongings.

ABC's Paula Faris gets weekend anchor job

NEW YORK (AP) — Paula Faris is replacing the departing Bianna Golodryga as the news anchor on the weekend edition of "Good Morning America."

ABC News said Monday that Faris will start Aug. 8. The "World News Now" anchor joined the network in 2012 from the NBC affiliate in Chicago, and was recently given exposure as ABC News' reporter at the World Cup.

Golodryga is leaving ABC News to join Yahoo.

Faris will be co-anchor of the weekend morning broadcast with Dan Harris. Rob Marciano will also soon be joining the weekend crew as the weather forecaster.

Perry sending National Guard to Texas border

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Gov. Rick Perry says he's deploying as many as 1,000 National Guard troops to the Texas-Mexico border after growing tired of "lip service" from the federal government.

Perry said Monday that the National Guard will provide additional support to a state-funded border surge that is costing an additional $1.3 million a week.

Much of the area has been overwhelmed in recent months by tens of thousands of unaccompanied children illegally entering the U.S.

Perry says criminals are exploiting the situation for human and drug trafficking.

More than 3,000 Border Patrol agents currently work in the region. The deployment of the National Guard is expected to unfold over the next 30 days.

Soldier attacked by grizzly at military base

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (Alaska Dispatch News) — A National Guard soldier was mauled by a brown bear on Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson while participating in a training exercise Sunday morning, officials said.

A base release said the soldier was mauled by a sow defending her cubs — the second such attack in just more than two months on the Anchorage base.

The soldier was in stable condition as of Sunday afternoon. His name had not yet been released.

The Alaska Army National Guard soldier was a participant in a daylong "land navigation exercise," said Alaska National Guard spokeswoman Maj. Candis Olmstead.

Detroit suspends water shutoffs for 15 days

DETROIT (Detroit Free Press) — The Detroit Water and Sewerage Department is suspending its water shutoffs for 15 days starting Monday to give residents another chance to prove they are unable to pay their bills.

"In case we have missed someone who has legitimate affordability problems this will allow them to come to us to see if they can work out payments," department spokesman Bill Johnson said. "We've always maintained that what we were doing was a collection effort — not a shutoff effort."

The department's decision comes on the same day that a group of Detroit residents filed a lawsuit in the city's bankruptcy case asking U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Steven Rhodes to restore water service to residential customers.

NASA names building for Neil Armstrong

(AP) — NASA honored one of its most famous astronauts Monday by renaming a historic building at the Kennedy Space Center in Florida.

It now bears the name of Neil Armstrong, the first man to walk on the moon when the Apollo 11 mission landed there 45 years ago.

Armstrong, who died in 2012, was remembered at a ceremony as not only an astronaut, but also as an aerospace engineer, a test pilot and university professor. Michael Collins, who orbited the moon as Armstrong took his historic steps on July 20, 1969, said he had a "powerful combination of curiosity and intelligence" along with an intuitive grasp of the complexities of flight machinery.

"Neil probably liked hangars better than office buildings, but he was certainly good in either venue," Collins said.

Obama gives protection to gays, transgenders

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Barack Obama on Monday gave employment protection to gay and transgender workers in the federal government and its contracting agencies, after being convinced by advocates of what he called the "irrefutable rightness of your cause."

"America's federal contracts should not subsidize discrimination against the American people," Obama said at a signing ceremony from the White House East Room. He said it's unacceptable that being gay is still a firing offense in most places in the United States.

Until last month, Obama long resisted pressure to pursue an executive anti-discrimination covering federal contractors in the hope that Congress would take more sweeping action banning anti-LGBT workplace discrimination across the landscape of employment in America.

Widow: Jury sent tobacco firm $23B message

NEW YORK (AP) — A Florida widow awarded $23.6 billion in the death of her chain-smoking husband on Monday called the massive verdict a message to Big Tobacco, even though she likely won't see much if any of the money.

The punitive damages — $23,623,718,906.62, to be precise — almost certainly will be significantly reduced on appeal, if not thrown out entirely, legal experts and industry analysts said. In another major tobacco trial, a $28 billion verdict in a 2002 case in Los Angeles turned into $28 million after appeals.

The figure is a pointed, dramatic gesture, said Cynthia Robinson, whose husband took up smoking at 13 and died of lung cancer at 36.

"It's over. R.J. Reynolds got knocked in the head. They have to own up to it — they have not, they probably won't, but it's justice," Robinson told The Associated Press.

Some legal experts even suggested the jurors in Florida, home to most of the nation's remaining lawsuits against Big Tobacco, may have been savvy enough to know their sky-high sum won't stand, but did it anyway to make a point.

Robinson said her husband spent the 10 months after his diagnosis in pain, sweating and coughing up blood. She said she still remembers "that cancer smell" and the way he died in a pool of blood in their home.

"And they've got the nerve to say, 'Michael chose to do this,'" Robinson said. "They knew exactly what they were doing. Now they have to pay for it."

R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. plans to appeal the punitive damages that a Pensacola jury awarded late Friday on top of $16.8 million in compensatory damages.

"Regardless of the rhetoric surrounding this case, the damages awarded are grossly excessive and impermissible under state and constitutional law," said Jeff Raborn, vice president and assistant general counsel for Reynolds, which is owned by Winston-Salem, N.C.-based Reynolds American Inc.

Robinson's case originally was part of a class-action lawsuit representing between 300,000 and 700,000 Floridians. The trial lasted from 1998 to 2000, when the jury took only five hours to find the tobacco companies liable and awarded $145 billion in punitive damages.

In 2006, the Florida Supreme Court threw out most of that award as excessive and said it should not have been certified as a class action. The court said individual smokers and their families could bring their own cases, in which they would have to prove addiction and that smoking caused their illnesses or deaths but wouldn't have to show that smoking is dangerous and the companies had misled consumers — the court declared those as established facts.

Up to 8,000 cases stemming from the original class-action lawsuit are still pending in Florida. Reynolds has paid $114 million to date for damage awards issued in the individual lawsuits in Florida, and the company has an outstanding liability of roughly $185 million for the pending cases, Wall Street analyst Chris Growe said.

"While each individual case in and of itself is not likely to pose a threat to the industry, in aggregate the liability associated with these cases continues to grow," Growe said.

Though analysts downplayed the risks raised by the verdict, it still suggests cigarette companies aren't adequately managing their liability, said Mark Gottlieb, executive director of the Public Health Advocacy Institute at Northeastern University School of Law.

"These are manageable risks, but there's a human response to their actions that can be replicated in courtroom after courtroom that could have serious implications for their liability going forward," Gottlieb said Monday.

Plaintiffs have been winning damages from juries in two-thirds of the Florida lawsuits, but elsewhere the expense of taking on a tobacco company and having to prove their liability can seem daunting, Gottlieb said.

Fla. leads nation in foreclosures

ORLANDO (AP) — Florida led the nation in foreclosures during the first half of the year.

A report released last week by the research firm RealtyTrac says Florida's foreclosure rate was the nation's highest for the first half of 2014.

RealtyTrac says 1 in 74 Florida homes had a foreclosure filing in the first six months of the year.

More than 121,000 properties had a foreclosure filing, the most of any state. However, that number was down 22 percent from a year earlier.

Miami had the nation's highest metro area foreclosure rate, with 1 in 61 homes involved in a filing in the first half of the year.

Miami was followed by Orlando, Port St. Lucie, the Space Coast and Tampa in having the top five foreclosure rates by metro areas.

Boy also injured fingers on Disney World ride

ORLANDO (AP) — A report says a 12-year-old boy suffered cuts to four fingers on Walt Disney World's Pirates of the Caribbean ride, three months before a British tourist had a similar accident.

The report made public Monday by the Florida Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services shows the boy lacerated his fingers in mid-April.

No other details were released.

The British tourist lost two fingertips on his right hand almost two weeks ago while on the Pirates of the Caribbean ride.

Disney spokeswoman Jacquee Wahler says as a precaution, guests are no longer being loaded in the back row where the two people were when they were injured.

She says the ride has been inspected and is deemed safe.

Landlord accused of stabbing tenants

LAKE CITY (AP) — A Lake City landlord is accused of stabbing two tenants and cutting another after stopping by their rental home to inform them the power was going to be turned off.

Police say an argument began after Donald and Leah Fanslow stopped by the home Saturday night. That's when 46-year-old Donald Fanslow pulled out a pocket knife and stabbed two men and cut a female tenant. His 48-year-old wife also was cut.

The Gainesville Sun reports one man had torso wounds, while the other was stabbed in his lower body. Both were in stable condition on Sunday.

The female tenant and Leah Fanslow were treated for lacerations on their hands.

Donald Fanslow was charged with aggravated battery and bail was set at $150,000. Records didn't list an attorney.

Home-alone children call 911 during break-in DELTONA (AP) — Two central Florida siblings called 911 after burglars broke into their house while they were home alone.

Police say the incident happened Thursday afternoon in Deltona.

The Daytona Beach News-Journal (reports a 13-year-old girl told the 911 dispatcher that someone had just broken into the house. She told the dispatcher she and her 11-year-old brother heard knocking at the front door and a bedroom window before they locked themselves inside another bedroom and hid in a closet.

Their mother also called 911, saying she was 40 minutes away. She says she had instructed the children not to open the door when her daughter called about someone knocking.

Genetic mapping triggers new hope on schizophrenia

WASHINGTON (AP) — Scientists have linked more than 100 spots in our DNA to the risk of developing schizophrenia, casting light on the mystery of what makes the disease tick.

Such work could eventually point to new treatments, although they are many years away. Already, the new results provide the first hard genetic evidence to bolster a theory connecting the immune system to the disease.

More than 100 researchers from around the world collaborated in the biggest-ever genomic mapping of schizophrenia, for which scientists had previously uncovered only about a couple dozen risk-related genes.

The study included the genetic codes of more than 150,000 people — nearly 37,000 of them diagnosed with the disease. Researchers found 108 genetic markers for risk of getting the disease, 83 of them not previously reported. And scientists say there are still likely more to be found.

"It's a genetic revelation; schizophrenia has been a mystery," said study co-author Steve McCarroll, director of genetics for the Broad Institute of MIT and Harvard. "Results like this give you things to work on. It takes it out of the zone of guesses about which genes are relevant."

The results were released Monday by the journal Nature. It takes large studies to ferret out genes related to schizophrenia risk because each gene generally has only a very weak effect.

Schizophrenia is a debilitating mental disorder that makes it hard to tell the difference between what is real and not real, and affects about one out of every 100 people. Studies estimate that it costs $60 billion in the U.S. each year. Scientists have long known that genes play a part, and this work further confirms that.

The results are a "big step" toward finding drug therapies, said study lead author Dr. Michael O'Donovan, deputy director of the MRC Centre for Neuropsychiatric Genetics and Genomics at Cardiff University School of Medicine in Wales.

BODIES

flared anew near the site of the crash.

President Barack Obama accused the rebels of tampering with evidence and insulting victims' families, warning of new sanctions. Europeans will consider their own sanctions Tuesday.

The bodies of the 298 victims, most from the Netherlands, have become a part of the conflict in Ukraine because they could hold evidence of what brought the plane down on July 17 as it was flying from Amsterdam to Kuala Lumpur.

Grief turned to anger as families begged to get the bodies of their loved ones back, while the separatists held on to the remains.

"Bodies are just lying there for three days in the hot sun. There are people who have this on their conscience," said Silene Fredriksz-Hoogzand, whose son, Bryce, and his girlfriend Daisy Oehlers died on their way to a vacation in Bali, in an interview with The Associated Press in the Netherlands. "When I am in my bed at night, I see my son lying on the ground. ... They have to come home, not only those two. Everybody has to come home."

International forensics experts finally gained access to the crash site Monday — an emotional experience for the head of the Dutch National Forensic Investigations Team, Peter Van Vliet. Seeing the wreckage gave him goosebumps, he said.

The team stumbled across remains that had not yet been removed and inspected the perished passengers' luggage.

In Torez, a rebel-held town 9 miles from the crash site, inspectors bowed heads and clasped hands before climbing aboard refrigerated train cars holding the collected bodies. Armed rebels surrounded them, while commuters boarded other trains nearby.

The smell of decay was overwhelming. Workers wore masks, while passersby twisted their faces in horror at the odor. Temperatures hit 84 degrees, and a train engineer told the AP that a power outage had hit the refrigeration system temporarily overnight.

comrades fell in one of the bloodiest battles of the Afghan war.

"It is remarkable that we have young men and women serving in our military who, day in and day out, perform with so much integrity, so much humility and so much courage," the president said. "Ryan represents the very best of that tradition."

Pitts' mission that day in June 2008 was supposed to be his last before returning home from his second tour of Afghanistan. After all, Pitts and his team had been in the country for 14 months, the Army said, battling frequently with enemy forces in northeastern Afghanistan's mountainous Waygal Valley.

The goal was to move troops and equipment out of Combat Outpost Bella, a remote post roughly 10 miles from the nearest base, to a new site nearby. Accessible only by helicopter for supplies and reinforcements, Outpost Bella was slated to be closed.

At 4 a.m., Pitts was manning his observation post. On the horizon, he could see the blue-roofed buildings and protective stone walls of the town of Wanat: A one-story mosque, a hotel and cafe, some homes and a local bazaar.

What Pitts couldn't know was that all of those buildings were concealing enemy fighters. Some 200 of them soon launched a full-scale assault on the outpost, their machine-gun fire puncturing the early morning silence.

A cascade of rocket-fired grenades, gunfire and hand grenades fell on the troops, quickly killing two paratroopers. Shrapnel from grenades struck Pitts in both legs and his left arm. Unable to walk, he crawled to a comrade, who put a tourniquet on his leg.

For more than an hour, Pitts fought to protect the remaining troops and defend the post, the Army said. Propping himself up on his knees, he blindly fired a machine gun over a wall of sandbags, loading more bullets into his weapon despite his loss of blood.

He radioed back that he was alone, his teammates having all relocated or been killed. Enemy forces were so close to Pitts that those listening on the other end of the radio could hear them.

That's when Pitts accepted he was going to die, Obama said. But he decided to keep fighting anyway.

"That little post was on the verge of falling, giving the enemy a perch to devastate the base below," Obama said. "Against that onslaught, one American held the line."

More than an hour after the attack started, Pitts was evacuated, and eventually made a full recovery. The Army said but for his determination to fight while wounded, the enemy would have gained ground and killed more American troops.

Pitts stood stoically and humbly in the East Room of the White House, silent as Obama recalled his valor at a ceremony attended by Defense Secretary Chuck Hagel and New Hampshire's two senators. But in brief remarks later outside the West Wing, Pitts read the names of his fallen comrades, one by one, an uneasy silence hanging in the air in between each name.

Palestinian death toll surpassed 560.

Across Gaza, Israeli fighter planes hit homes and a high-rise tower, burying families in the rubble. The strike on the Gaza City tower brought down most of the building, killing 11 people — including six members of the same family — and wounding 40, said Palestinian health official Ashraf al-Kidra.

Israeli tanks, meanwhile, shelled a hospital in central Gaza, killing four people and wounding dozens as the daily death toll surpassed 100 for a second day. Israel said the shelling targeted rockets hidden near the compound, and accused militants of using civilians as shields.

At least 565 Palestinians have been killed and more than 3,600 wounded in the past two weeks, al-Kidra said.

On the Israeli side, seven more soldiers were killed in clashes with Gaza fighters Monday, bringing the military death toll to 25 — more than twice as many as in Israel's last Gaza ground war in 2009.

Two civilians have also died in Palestinian rocket attacks on Israeli cities and scores of soldiers have been injured.

The mounting bloodshed brought U.N. Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon and U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry to Cairo on Monday, for a new cease-fire push. However, the gaps remain wide and no credible mediator has emerged.

Egypt, Israel and the U.S. back an unconditional cease-fire, to be followed by talks on a possible new border arrangement for Gaza. Israel and Egypt have severely restricted movement in and out of Gaza since Hamas seized the territory in 2007.

Smoke from Israeli strikes rise over Gaza City, northern Gaza Strip, Monday. The first major ground battle in two weeks of Israel-Hamas fighting exacted a steep price Sunday: It killed 65 Palestinians and 13 Israeli soldiers and forced thousands of terrified Palestinian civilians to flee Gaza City's Shijaiyah neighborhood.

Hamas, with some support from Qatar and Turkey, wants guarantees on lifting the blockade before halting fire. The Islamic militant group has no faith in mediation by Egypt's rulers, who deposed a Hamas-friendly government in Cairo a year ago and tightened restrictions on Gaza — to the point of driving Hamas into its worst financial crisis since its founding in 1987.

The top Hamas leader in Gaza, Ismail Haniyeh, said Monday that Gaza's 1.7 million people share Hamas' goal of forcing Israel and Egypt to lift the blockade.

"We cannot go back, we cannot go back to the silent death" of the blockade, he said. "Gaza has decided to end the blockade by its blood and by its courage."

After a meeting with Egyptian Foreign Minister Sameh Shukri, Ban said that "violence must stop by all sides," and that they must enter negotiations, seemingly siding with Cairo's approach.

However, Ban also said: "We can't claim victory simply by returning matters to where they stood before they led to terrible bloodshed."

The border blockade has set Gaza back years, wiping out tens of thousands of jobs through bans on most exports and on imports of vital construction materials Israel says could be diverted by Hamas for military use.

authorities at Johns Hopkins Health System about her suspicions. He was forced to turn over the camera, and committed suicide days later. Investigators discovered roughly 1,200 videos and 140 images stored on a series of servers in his home.

"All of these women were brutalized by this," said the women's lead attorney, Jonathan Schochor. "Some of these women needed counseling, they were sleepless, they were dysfunctional in the workplace, they were dysfunctional at home, they were dysfunctional with their mates. This breach of trust, this betrayal — this is how they felt."

The preliminary settlement approved by a judge Monday is one of the largest on record in the U.S. involving sexual misconduct by a physician. It all but closes a case that never produced criminal charges but seriously threatened Hopkins' reputation.

Lawyers said thousands of women were traumatized, even though their faces were not visible in the images and it could not be established with certainty which patients were recorded or how many.

Hopkins said insurance will cover the settlement, which "properly balances the concerns of thousands of plaintiffs with obligations the Health System has to provide ongoing and superior care to the community." "It is our hope that this settlement—and findings by law enforcement that images were not shared—helps those affected achieve a measure of closure," the hospital statement said, adding that "one individual does not define Johns Hopkins."

Hospital authorities called Baltimore police just before Levy's firing. Police and federal investigators said they found no evidence he shared the material with others.

A class-action lawsuit on behalf of more than 8,000 of his patients who contacted lawyers was brought against Johns Hopkins last fall, alleging the hospital should have known what he was up to.

Some women told of being inappropriately touched and verbally abused by Levy, according to Schochor. In some cases, women said they were regularly summoned to Levy's office for unnecessary pelvic exams.

Myra James, 67, had been going to him for annual exams for 20 years. Since his misconduct became public, she hasn't been to a gynecologist once.

"I can't bring myself to go back," James said. "You're lying there, exposed. It's violating and it's horrible, and my trust is gone. Period."

The AP normally does not identify possible victims of sex crimes, but James agreed to the use of her name.

The settlement, involving eight law firms, is subject to final approval by a judge. A forensic psychologist and a post-traumatic stress specialist interviewed the plaintiffs and placed each woman into a category based on trauma level. That will determine how much money each one will receive.

ODD NEWS

Plane lands on NY highway for 2nd time

EAST MORICHES, N.Y. (AP) — A New York pilot who landed his disabled plane on a highway for the second time in eight days said Friday he's lucky to have escaped unhurt and thankful he didn't hit anyone.

Frank Fierro, 75, said he was "shaking" as he glided the single-engine Challenger ultralight plane to a landing on the eastbound lanes of Sunrise Highway just before 1 p.m.

Fierro landed the same plane in a nearby median on July 10.

Police said Fierro was flying the plane for the first time since last week's incident.

Both times it developed engine trouble, forcing Fierro to find a makeshift runway before he could get back to Spadaro Airport in East Moriches.

"I think someone up there is paying attention to me," Fierro said. "And that means a lot."

Wall Street stocks slip

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market started the week with a slight loss on Monday as investors weighed a mixed batch of corporate earnings against mounting political turmoil.

European leaders are considering tougher sanctions on Russia for its backing of separatists accused of shooting down a Malaysia Airways passenger plane in Ukraine last week. The European Union's foreign ministers will meet Tuesday to discuss their next steps.

In Washington, President Barack Obama demanded that international investigators get full access to the crash site and said the separatists had blocked investigators.

"It looks like we hit a speed bump," said Jack Ablin, chief investment officer at BMO Private Bank in Chicago. "Earnings are coming through quite nicely so far, but geopolitics trump earnings today."

The Standard & Poor's 500 index fell 4.59 points, or 0.2 percent, to close at 1,973.63. Seven of the 10 industry groups fell, led by retailers and other consumer-discretionary companies.

The Dow Jones industrial average fell 48.45 points, or 0.3 percent, to 17,051.73, while the Nasdaq composite lost 7.44 points, or 0.2 percent, to 4,424.70.

European markets ended lower. Germany's DAX dropped 1.1 percent while France's CAC-40 lost 0.7 percent. Britain's FTSE 100 slipped 0.3 percent.

A few well-known companies turned in results that fell short of estimates on Monday. The toy maker Hasbro reported second-quarter earnings and revenue that came in below analysts' targets. Rising sales of My Little Pony, Transformers and other toys weren't enough to stem a decline in sales of games such as Twister.

College graduates' starting salaries lag behind the rest

(LA Times) — Starting salaries for recent college graduates have risen far more slowly than the average earnings of all U.S. workers since the recession, an analysis by the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco found.

The study, released Monday, found that median earnings for recent college graduates rose only 6 percent from 2006 to 2013, less than half the rise of 15 percent for the overall U.S. workforce over roughly the same period.

Such disparities in pay growth rates have been seen in previous recessions, but the report says the current one "is substantially larger and has lasted longer than in the past."

"The gap between the two groups of employees appears to be substantially wider and their paths appear more divergent," the report found.

College graduates are particularly susceptible to wage stagnation during weak labor markets because older, experienced employees tend to have more job protections.

In trying to pinpoint the lackluster wage growth for recent college graduates, researchers at the San Francisco Fed had a key question: Are graduates getting different jobs that pay lower wages, or are salaries in the traditional career fields not growing?

The study concluded that college graduates are going into the same fields as before the recession, but that wage growth has been slow. In the two most popular categories for recent graduates — professional occupations and management, business & finance — there was only a 2.6 percent growth in median earnings since 2007.

"For almost all occupations and skill groups ... we find that recent graduates experienced lower wage growth than other workers," the report said.

Such sluggish growth could dissuade potential college students from enrolling, the report said, but the authors cite ample research showing that the lifetime earnings of college graduates far outpace those of non-graduates.

Entering the job market during an economic downturn, however, is likely to make it more difficult to pay back debt in the near term, the report finds.

Stansberry and IBM

Dear Mr. Berko: Please tell me your opinion of Porter Stansberry, whose newsletter predicts the immediate collapse of the dollar and the stock market and recommends gold and silver. Should I buy this letter and follow his other advice, which is available only from this publication? Also, tell me your opinion of IBM. I am thinking of buying 55 shares for my retirement account. — TR, Joliet, Ill.

Malcolm Berko

Dear TR: Porter Stansberry has been predicting the collapse of the dollar and the collapse of the market since 1999. He also predicted that the price of oil would reach $360 a barrel by mid-2013.

Stansberry's newsletter is a perfect fit if you are intellectually vacant, have a good fourth-grade education, are bereft of common sense, speak only pig Latin, have an IQ of 67 or were born on Pluto. This over-chubby fraudster sells a provocatively written publication about real estate, commodities, the stock market and economic theory so replete with deceit and misinformation that it borders on criminal negligence. The investment advice of this articulate shill is so masterfully egregious that the Securities and Exchange Commission fined him $1.5 million in 2007 for perpetrating a "scheme to defraud public investors by disseminating false information in several Internet newsletters." The courts rejected his First Amendment defense, saying, "Stansberry's conduct undoubtedly involved deliberate fraud, making statements that he knew to be false." And that's what Americans are exposed to when they listen to many financial advertisements on Sirius XM Radio. American investors are no greedier than other investors, though they are, by orders of magnitude, infinitely easier to hornswoggle.

Stansberry and thousands of investment incompetents who litter the airwaves, dirty your mail and post misleading advertisements in the media have caused irreparable damage to large numbers of investors. I've been in this business over 50 years; I've watched a lot of water go over the dam, and it's never been more polluted. I would guess that 40 percent of licensed salespeople selling investment advice are devious, greedy, articulate incompetents. And 35 percent of those who are licensed to peddle investment products are just greedy and articulate. Of the remaining 25 percent, half are basically honest and as dumb as glue, and the other half are just basically honest. It's tough for civilians to get a fair shake with their retirement portfolios. Brokerage firms hire representatives based foremost on their sales ability, provide four months of financial training and then set them loose like hungry Dobermans after red meat.

Sadly, the overseeing SEC is a bureaucratic farce run by Mary Schapiro, who earned $21 million in her last year as chairwoman of a feckless Financial Industry Regulatory Authority in 2008 before assuming her SEC title. Last year, individual retirement account assets reached $6.5 trillion, and brokerages such as Royal Alliance, Ameriprise Financial, IAA Financial and Primerica, as well as smaller firms, have sliced and diced retirees with dreadful products and outrageous commissions. That's par for the portfolio, which is why I laud a proposal by Jack Bogle (founder of The Vanguard Group) to create a federal body that would approve retirement products to ensure greater oversight of the brokerage industry. There is too much crap out there, and most investors can't distinguish it from Shinola.

I like IBM! I've always liked IBM. But I don't like the stock, which has been dead in the water since late 2011. IBM's dividend record is expialidocious, increasing fivefold in the past decade, though revenues seem to have hit a firewall and stalled at $100 billion. Share earnings have tripled in that time frame, and book value has doubled, though primarily because of IBM's prodigious stock buyback program, which reduced outstanding shares from 1.6 billion to 1 billion this year. The huge cost of buying back 600 million shares has taken a toll on IBM's creditworthiness. With debt climbing to a record $44 billion, IBM's credit rating could be lowered from AA- to A+. Revenues have fallen for nine consecutive quarters. Management has laid off 50,000 employees since 2005. And there seems to be a lot of fatigue in the IBM boardroom. This company needs an industrial-sized enema, pronto. Don't buy it.

Obama voices concern about Mideast

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Barack Obama called Monday for the international community to focus on ending the fighting in the Gaza Strip, as Secretary of State John Kerry arrived in the Middle East to make a renewed push for a cease-fire between Hamas and Israel.

Voicing fresh concern about civilian casualties, Obama reaffirmed his belief that Israel has the right to defend itself against rockets being launched by Hamas into Israel. Yet he contended that Israel's military action in Gaza had already done "significant damage" to the Hamas terrorist infrastructure and said he doesn't want to see more civilians getting killed.

"We have serious concerns about the rising number of Palestinian civilian deaths and the loss of Israeli lives," Obama said.

Orban to skip ceremony for statue

BUDAPEST, Hungary (Bloomberg) — Prime Minister Viktor Orban won't dedicate a disputed memorial he ordered to mark the Nazi invasion of Hungary after critics said the statue attempts to whitewash the country's responsibility for the Holocaust.

"There won't be an inauguration," Janos Lazar, minister in charge of the prime minister's office, told reporters Monday. "The government, sensing the controversy that has enveloped the monument, doesn't want to hurt the personal feelings of anyone."

The bronze statue, depicting Nazi-ally Hungary as the Archangel Gabriel being swept down on by an imperial eagle representing Germany, was erected over the weekend after being brought to a square in downtown Budapest at night.

At least 73 killed in Afghan violence

KABUL (dpa) — At least 60 militants, 12 members of the Afghan security forces and one civilian were killed in separate attacks across Afghanistan, officials said Monday.

Eight members of the police force and 28 Taliban fighters have died in a gun battle in the northern province of Faryab that started Friday and is still ongoing, said Ahmad Javid Bedar, the provincial governor's spokesman.

He added that the battle began after more than 300 militants assaulted police checkpoints in Qaysar district.

Scammers hijack names of Malaysia Flight 17 victims

(Washington Post) — While families of the Malaysia Flight 17 crash victims face an agonizing wait for proper burials, online scammers have already started to hijack their memories for profit.

At least six Facebook pages were created using the names of victims killed when the plane was shot down over eastern Ukraine, according to a report from the Canberra Times. The pages contained a link to a blog site claiming to have information about the crash, but users who clicked it on it were instead hit with pop-up ads for "online gambling, get-rich-quick schemes, and other dubious products and services."

Study: Beef pollutes more than pork, poultry

By SETH BORENSTEIN
Associated Press Writer

AP PHOTO

This June 18, 2009, file photo shows cows grazing in Rock County, Neb. Compared to the other animal proteins, beef produces five times more heat-trapping gases connected to global warming per calorie, puts out six times as much nitrogen for water pollution, takes 11 times more water for irrigation and uses 28 times the land, according to the study published Monday in the journal Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences.

WASHINGTON — Raising beef for the American dinner table does far more damage to the environment than producing pork, poultry, eggs or dairy, a new study says.

Compared with the other animal proteins, beef produces five times more heat-trapping gases per calorie, puts out six times as much water-polluting nitrogen, takes 11 times more water for irrigation and uses 28 times the land, according to the study published Monday in the journal Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences.

Cows are not efficient at converting feed to protein for human consumption, said lead author Gidon Eshel, an environmental physics professor at Bard College in New York.

Eshel used U.S. government figures to calculate air and water emissions and how much water and land were used in the lifetime production of beef, pork, poultry, dairy and eggs.

While other studies have looked at the issue, this is one of the most comprehensive pieces of research quantifying and comparing the U.S. environmental costs of different meats and other animal protein.

A spokesman for the National Cattlemen's Beef Association, Chase Adams, said the study "represents a gross oversimplification of the complex systems that make up the beef value chain."

Adams said that the beef industry has improved its environmental sustainability in recent years and that the U.S. produces beef with the lowest greenhouse gas emissions of any country.

In the study, pork, poultry, dairy and eggs all had comparable environmental footprints, so close there were no statistically significant differences among them, Eshel said. But cows were off-the-chart different. The study did not look at plants or fish raised for human consumption.

Cows burp major amounts of methane, a greenhouse gas that is dozens of times more potent than carbon dioxide. Their digestive system makes them produce considerably more methane than pigs, chickens or turkeys do, Eshel said. The manure used to grow feed for cows also releases methane, as does their own bodily waste.

Because they are bigger and take longer to put on weight for meat, cows eat more food over their lifetimes than other animals raised for protein.

Nitrogen, from fertilizer runoff, can harm rivers, lakes and bays, causing oxygen-depleted "dead zones." The use of irrigation water is a major issue out West when there are droughts, like the current one in California. So much land used for farming changes the biodiversity of a location, Eshel said.

"It really looks like beef is a lot worse environmentally than these other meats," said Ken Caldeira, an environmental scientist at the Carnegie Institution for Science. Caldeira wasn't part of this study, but has a separate study of beef's greenhouse gas footprint around the world, published this month in the journal Climatic Change.

Eshel calculates that the average American who switches from beef to pork would reduce the equivalent of 1,200 pounds of carbon dioxide a year, which is about nine days' worth of the nation's per capita greenhouse gas emissions. The EPA calculates that it is the same as the emissions from 61 gallons of gas or what comes out of the smokestack from burning 580 pounds of coal.

Caldeira said his calculations found that "eating a pound of beef causes more greenhouse warming than burning a gallon of gasoline."

Hundreds of fatigued Syrian rebels give up fight

ALEPPO, Syria (LA Times) — For two years, Emad Fa'aas was a devoted rebel fighter.

In the early days when Syrian rebels took up arms against the government of President Bashar Assad, he joined other fighters in attacking military checkpoints, sometimes traveling to neighboring provinces.

When the fighting spread into his city of Aleppo he spent long stretches fighting on the front lines, at times separated from his family for an entire month.

These days his hands are stained red, from cherry ice cream.

The front lines are not far away, but now he holds an ice cream scoop rather than a gun. Gone are his fighting days, replaced with working at the nameless shop, with a commercial coffee maker but otherwise bare shelves, that he recently opened to support his family.

"I left because I no longer had the ability to feed my kids," said Fa'aas, 39, who has a wife, two sons and a young daughter. "My jihad now is for my family."

He joins the ranks of hundreds, if not thousands, of exhausted and disillusioned Syrian rebel fighters who have left the armed opposition to rejoin civilian life and resurrect a semblance of their former lives even as the country around them continues to crumble.

More than three years after the Syrian uprising began, marked by hope that it would succeed quickly, as in Tunisia and Egypt, optimism has been replaced with a sense of failure and a sentiment that the conflict has wrought little but destruction and loss.

Some have put down their guns and returned to the farming fields they left when the uprising began.

"A lot of people left because it's taking so long; they thought it was going to be a matter of yelling 'God is great' twice in protest and a few hits and it would be over," said Samir Zaitoun, a commander with Al-Tawheed Brigade.

By his estimate, nearly half the fighters in Aleppo have left over the last year, most of them from small rebel groups. In the last six months the attrition has picked up as an emboldened Assad government retakes territory throughout the country: in Damascus and Homs, in central Syria, as well as in Aleppo, in the north.

But as the war continues in their absence, the departure of so many Syrian rebels could lead to more foreign fighters flocking into the country to fill the vacuum and join the fight against the government.

"It's better for me to pursue my education and my future," said Salaah, a former rebel fighter who did not want to give his full name for fear of endangering his family. "There is very little hope. These years were lost from our lives."

The 21-year-old, who left school when fighting engulfed his town, lost faith in the opposition and finally decided to defect when the Turkish refugee camp where his family is staying began offering classes for high school seniors. Within days he sold his Kalashnikov rifle for $1,000 and headed to Turkey.

"We did what we could," he said. "But in the end the country has been destroyed."

The first thing Fa'aas sold was his Kalashnikov.

Gradually his savings had been depleted, and as the situation in rebel-held parts of Aleppo worsened amid government air bombardments, the boutique where he still occasionally worked sewing formal and wedding dresses closed down.

To feed his family, he sold his rifle to his militia's commander.

When that money ran out, he moved on to other possessions.

For months he sold piece after piece in his home, near the front lines in the Old City, starting with the imported bedroom set and two cameras he bought while vacationing in Cyprus. Then every item in the living room, including his mother's sewing machine. He couldn't part with the three comforters in the bedroom that she had sewn and embroidered by hand. But moving on to the kitchen, he sold everything except a broken freezer.

UN calls for probe of plane downed over Ukraine

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The U.N. Security Council unanimously adopted a resolution Monday demanding international access to the site of the plane downed over eastern Ukraine and an end to military activities around the area, following intense pressure on a reluctant Russia to support the measure.

The resolution calls for a "full, thorough and independent international investigation" into the downing of Malaysia Airlines Flight 17 carrying 298 people in Hrabove. It calls for pro-Russia separatists to allow access to the site of the crash. And it demands that armed groups who control the crash site do not disturb debris, belongings or victims' remains.

All 15 council members voted in favor of the Australia-proposed measure in a televised meeting.

The vote came after a weekend of negotiations to overcome Russian objections to the text, including a phone conversation between Russian President Vladimir Putin and Australian Prime Minister Tony Abbot.

Russia had pushed for the resolution to state that the International Civil Aviation Organization — rather than Ukrainian authorities — take the lead in the investigation. The final resolution fell short of that demand, but in an effort to assuage veto-wielding Russia, it included wording changes that played up the role of the ICAO, a U.N. agency.

After the vote, U.S. Ambassador Samantha Power challenged Russia to use its influence to ensure Russian-backed rebels comply with the resolution. She said a Security Council resolution would not have been necessary had Russia pushed the rebels from the start to allow unimpeded access to the site.

Russian U.N. Ambassador Vitaly Churkin speaks to the media during an emergency meeting of the U.N. Security Council on the worsening situation in Gaza at United Nations headquarters, Sunday.

"Russia's silence since Thursday sent a message to the illegal armed groups it supports: We have your backs," Power said. ""We are not naïve: if Russia is not part of the solution, it will continue to be part of the problem."

Australian Foreign Minister Julie Bishop, who traveled to New York to address the council, said the resolution is an "unambiguous response from the international community to an utterly deplorable act."

Australia's "grief is now accompanied by outrage as we witness grotesque violations at the crash site," Bishop said. "This demands a response. That is why Australia has brought this resolution to the Security Council. Today, the Security Council has responded."

Australia lost 37 citizens and residents in the crash. Netherlands Foreign Minister Frans Timmermans, whose country lost 193 nationals on the flight, also traveled to New York for the vote.

Before the vote, Timmermans said his "first priority today is to make sure that our people are brought home and are treated with the dignity they deserve."

"It's about time that actions spoke louder than words on the side of the Russians," he said.

Vital evidence feared withheld by Ukraine's rebels

LONDON (AP) — "What exactly are they trying to hide?" President Barack Obama asked Monday as he demanded that Ukrainian rebels give investigators access to the wreckage of the downed jetliner.

The answer is: potentially a lot.

Aviation and defense experts say the victims' bodies could contain missile shrapnel. Chemical residue on the plane could confirm the type of weapon that brought down Malaysia Airlines Flight 17. And the location of the wreckage could yield information on how the attack unfolded.

The black boxes could offer vital clues as well. The cockpit voice recorder would record the bang of a missile. The data recorders, which register altitude and position, would be able to tie that information to the timing of a known missile launch in the area.

"You can effectively backtrack and give a relatively high degree of confidence in the location where that missile took off from," said a Manchester, England-based aviation industry consultant, Chris Yates. "If that location happens to be in rebel-held territory, which we all suspect it is, that would be the first point where you could point the finger of blame."

But while anguished families waited to take possession of their loved ones' remains, and investigators waited for the rebels to hand over the black boxes, independent observers warned that the pro-Moscow separatists had tampered with the debris and failed to secure the crash site. And the U.S. and its allies fumed that the rebels are trying to cover up evidence they shot down the plane.

Yates warned that the rebels may have already compromised the probe.

"What is gained, of course, is the possibility that whatever evidence remains of a missile strike can be obliterated," he said. "That's the bottom line, I suppose."

In this still mysterious tragedy, for example, the bodies themselves could offer precious clues. A missile from a Russian-made SA-11 mobile launcher, also known as a Buk, would explode outside the target aircraft, hurling shrapnel into the plane. Some bodies might bear the telltale wounds.

"While the stated reasons for removing some of the bodies to a refrigerated train — to protect them from wild animals and slow their decomposition — may be genuine, the bodies, too, are evidence," said Keir Giles, an expert on security at the Chatham House think tank.

Lyubov Kudryavets, a worker at the Torez morgue, told The Associated Press that last Thursday, after the plane went down over eastern Ukraine, a resident brought in the bloody body of a child, about 7 or 8 years old. On Saturday, she said, pro-Russia militiamen came to claim it.

"They began to question me: 'Where are the fragments of rocket? Where are the fragments from the plane?'" Kudryavets said. "But I didn't have any wreckage. ... I swear."

Some vets face uphill roster battle

By RICK STROUD
Tampa Bay Times

TAMPA — There are so many new faces for Tampa Bay that players from last year's team might feel like they've walked into the wrong locker room when they report to training camp Thursday.

Coach Lovie Smith and general manager Jason Licht made sweeping changes with the Bucs coming off a 4-12 season. Most of the additions came on offense, which ranked last in 2013. A number of borderline prospects survived the initial purge, but there still is plenty of cutting to do until the team has its 53-man roster.

Injuries, a lack of production, an inflated salary or the combination of all three can send any player packing. No job is safe this time of year, but some players are more vulnerable than others. Here are five Bucs

McIlroy escapes the dark period

By DOUG FERGUSON

HOYLAKE, England — The celebration began long before Rory McIlroy had a chance to drink out of the claret jug.

McIlroy was upstairs in the clubhouse at Royal Liverpool for the traditional toast with the R&A, unable to ignore the chants below from club members waiting for a glimpse of the British Open champion.

"Rory! Rory! Rory!"

It was a raucous scene for a club that starts with "Royal," but such is the personality of Liverpool. The members booed anyone who came down the stairs who did not have curly brown hair, freckles and a claret jug. And their cheers shook the brick clubhouse when Boy Wonder descended with the oldest trophy in golf.

The scene was so much different a year ago.

Tampa Bay's Evan Longoria tosses his bat after striking out against Minnesota during the eighth inning of Sunday's game. Longoria is on pace for career lows in almost every power category this year.

Longoria's so far futile search for his old pop leaves Rays with hole in lineup

By MARC TOPKIN
Tampa Bay Times

ST. LOUIS — With the second of his two doubles Sunday, Evan Longoria reached a monumental accomplishment.

Sure, breaking Carl Crawford's franchise record was a career milestone. But of more immediate significance, it was just the second of Longoria's 100 games this season in which he rapped more than one extra-base hit.

Longoria's power outage is an ongoing issue, and one Tampa Bay is eager to see end since the team knows how vital he can be as it tries to play its way back into contention.

"Longo is the guy — if we get him really going in the right direction — can make the biggest difference of all, there's no denying that," manager Joe Maddon said. "More than anything, he needs to hit the ball consistently as hard as he has in the past."

The dropoff has been significant, as Longoria is on a pace — with only 16 doubles and 11 home runs — for record lows in all power categories. His slugging percentage of .394 barely ranks in the majors' top 100. Only 28 percent of Longoria's hits have gone for extra bases; his career number before this season was in excess of 45 percent. Only 14.3 percent of his at-bats have resulted in a hard-hit ball, per ESPN tracking, which is tied for 180th out of 251 major-leaguers with at least 200 plate appearances.

Longoria admits that he doesn't know exactly what the problem is and acknowledges that the process of trying to correct something not easily identifiable is obviously frustrating. He can only hope the extra work he has been putting in with hitting coach Derek Shelton and the video he has been watching makes a difference.

"I've been looking at a lot of highlights when I was good," Longoria said. "Just trying to figure out what things I was doing then that I'm not doing now."

The working theory around the Rays is that Longoria's problems are rooted in a change in mechanics, that he got away — for reasons unclear — from his usual form at the

ACC bides time on network idea

By LUKE DECOCK
(Raleigh) News & Observer

GREENSBORO, N.C. — Expansion has, for the foreseeable future, run its course. While college athletics is entering a period of widespread and uncertain change, the ACC has achieved stability. The biggest question facing the conference now is a simple one.

Has the time come for an ACC Network, an actual channel dedicated to the conference?

The easy answer is yes. There has never been a better time to start a sports network of any kind. Live sports moves the broadcast needle like nothing else. Demand among advertisers has never been higher. The increasingly astronomic rights fees broadcasters are paying reflect that.

Yet there are other considerations for the ACC, which is why the conference has taken a surprisingly equivocal tone about its television future, which will be decided alongside ESPN, which holds the conference's rights through 2027, and could take another two or three years to shake out.

"You really have to look at it strategically from a business standpoint to determine whether it makes the most sense long term, because it's a long-term decision," ACC commissioner John Swofford said in an interview.

Fisher embraces next challenge

To defend title, the coach must keep Seminoles motivated, loose

By BRENDAN SONNONE

GREENSBORO, N.C. — It did not take long for Florida State coach Jimbo Fisher to build a champion.

He immediately brought a once proud program back to respectability in his first two seasons at FSU and turned the Seminoles into fringe title contenders in his third season. By his fourth year, Fisher fielded a team that went undefeated and won the BCS National Championship.

"You could argue, and I don't like to go back, but that team was as dominant as any team in college football history," Fisher said of his 2013 squad, which set the NCAA record for points in a season. "That team, to me, is one of the all-time great teams. I really believe that."

Now comes the next challenge for Fisher: Maintaining excellence.

Reflecting on what the Seminoles did makes Fisher uneasy, but it is a necessary exercise as he looks ahead. His ability to analyze last season's team in a historical perspective is healthy because last season is just that, history.

Fisher addressed the

RTA could close NASCAR disconnect

Alliance seeks changes, if governing body will listen

By JENNA FRYER
Associated Press

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — There is no clearer example of the disconnect between NASCAR and its teams then the fight earlier this year over the procedures to cool cars down during qualifying.

NASCAR refused to allow the use of cooling boxes, so teams had jerry-rigged a system that created a dangerous on-track situation for the drivers.

NASCAR summoned the crew chiefs from every Sprint Cup organization to hash out a solution. The teams were almost unanimously in favor of using the cooling boxes, but NASCAR officials on that conference call in March wouldn't budge. They were OK with using fans, but smaller teams were against having to go buy them.

Exasperated, NASCAR reminded the participants on the call that the engine manufacturers were against the use of cooling boxes. Two of the top engine builders in NASCAR immediately denied that claim, and one said nobody from NASCAR had even talked with them.

The call had turned comical. In the end, NASCAR allowed the cooling boxes in a small victory for the teams.

The battle to get that win was absurd.

The Race Team Alliance, at its core, hopes to prevent those fights going forward.

Announced two weeks ago, the RTA was described as "a collaborative business association" that for the first time creates "a single entity to engage with stakeholders on creative ways to market and experience the power of the sport's teams and drivers."

Michael Waltrip Racing co-owner Rob Kauffman is the elected chair of the RTA. He has talked of banding the RTA teams together for purchasing power, creating travel partners and finding a common insurer. The RTA is not, Kauffman insists, a union. And if the goal is to seize a larger share of the TV money, that's not a topic any members of the RTA are openly discussing.

"That's a big obvious issue that's out there that the teams really have no influence or control over," Kauffman said of the $8 billion in TV money that is split with the tracks (65 percent), teams (25 percent) and NASCAR (10 percent). "We're going to focus on stuff we can do. If someone wants to discuss any big picture issues, we're happy to discuss and engage in a constructive way."

NASCAR has made it clear it isn't talking to the RTA about anything. Despite NASCAR President Mike Helton's dismissal of any animosity between the two sides, the RTA was informed all communication must go through NASCAR attorneys. International Speedway Corp. issued the same command.

Sure, it is NASCAR's court and nobody has to play NASCAR's game.

It's unclear if altering the landscape to a franchise model is on RTA's ultimate agenda. For now, the owners insist it's about creating one voice to benefit every team — and there's a need.

Several years ago, Rick Hendrick organized a meeting between many of the top owners, who all put together lists outlining their concerns. Nothing spectacular — maybe $1 million a team in savings.

The list was presented to NASCAR, which heard the ideas with deaf ears.

Perhaps the RTA will soon have the authority to step up and demand cost-saving measures. But for now, the question is not what the RTA is out to accomplish, but what took the team owners so long to get their act together.

MCILROY

makeshift tent outside Muirfield, speaking to reporters with a vacant look in those brown eyes. He had just opened with a 79, his worst start ever in a major in what was shaping up as a year to forget. He had no idea what was wrong with him or his game.

"Sometimes I feel like I'm walking around out there and I'm unconscious," he said that day. "I just need to try to think more. I'm trying to focus and trying to concentrate but, yeah, I can't really fathom it at the minute.

"I'm definitely under thinking on the golf course. Maybe overthinking off it."

He looked lost.

Now he looks like the best player in golf. And odds are, the worst of times might lead to the best.

If he felt unconscious on the golf course a year ago, he looked unconscious at times at Royal Liverpool. His golf was simply explosive on Friday afternoon with two bursts of birdies, and plenty of chances in between, on his way to a 66. The defining moment of this championship was Saturday, when McIlroy went from a share of the lead to six shots clear in just over an hour. He made eagle on two of the last three holes with two mammoth drives, two pretty swings and two perfect putts.

Nothing came easily to McIlroy over the last 18 months.

He was criticized for swapping out equipment when he signed a megadeal with Nike. He showed his age when he quit in the middle of the Honda Classic and initially blamed it on a sore wisdom tooth. He changed agents for the second time, and lawsuits followed that are still to be decided in court. He got engaged to tennis player Caroline Wozniacki to start the new year, then broke it off with a telephone call in May.

And there he was on Sunday, introduced as the "champion golfer of the year," his name etched in silver, his eyes gazing at all the names on that claret jug.

Asked for a low point during his struggles, McIlroy didn't hesitate.

"This time last year," he said.

Through it all, the 25-year-old from Northern Ireland never doubted he could return. He won the U.S. Open and the PGA Championship by eight shots. That wasn't an accident. He won the money title on both sides of the Atlantic. There was never a question of his skill.

"It was just trying to find a way to make it come out again," McIlroy said. "But yeah, definitely, missing the cut at Muirfield last year was a very low point. I never missed a cut at The Open before. I said to myself, 'I'll try to never make that happen again.' It's been huge what a difference a year makes. But it's turned into a great year."

And the tough times should only lead to better times.

■ NBA: Donald Sterling

Witness: Sterling needs to sell team

By LINDA DEUTSCH
AP Special Correspondent

LOS ANGELES — The chief financial officer of Donald Sterling's properties said Monday that the billionaire may be forced to sell a large portion of his real estate empire to cover $500 million in loans if he persists in refusing to sell the Los Angeles Clippers for $2 billion.

Darren Schield, who oversees the finances of The Sterling Family Trust, testified Monday that three banks are ready to recall their loans to Sterling because of his decision to dissolve the trust. His move was designed to rescind his signed agreement for the sale of the Clippers, a team he bought for $12 million.

Schield said if Sterling has to dump $500 million worth of apartment buildings he could destabilize the Los Angeles real estate market.

Sterling attorney Maxwell Blecher suggested that Sterling could take the company public in order to raise funds.

But Shelly Sterling's lawyer, Pierce O'Donnell asked if it would be easy to go public "with Donald Sterling's reputation."

Schield responded: "There's huge reputation issues. I don't know if anyone would want to go into partnership with him."

The NBA banned Donald Sterling for life for making racist statements after the release of recorded conversations. Sterling has denied he is a racist from the witness stand.

Schield testified in the probate trial that if Sterling's loans go into default and he needs to refinance, banks would be reluctant to give him that much money at the low rate he has now.

"I know the bank looks at this as a higher credit risk with all this going on," he said. "The rate would go up considerably."

Sterling, the volatile owner of the team, agreed to the sale but then dissolved the family trust in an effort to stop it.

Schield, testifying at the trial that will decide the future of a $2 billion deal to sell the Clippers to former Microsoft CEO Steve Ballmer, said he warned Sterling not to revoke the trust last month.

"I told him a revocation of the trust would be a breach of the loan covenants and would result in defaults," Schield said.

He said he also discussed it with Sterling's lawyer, Bobby Samini.

"I told him this revocation would open up a Pandora's box and trigger defaults," Schield said.

"Does the company have $500 million to pay off the loans?" asked O'Donnell.

"We do not," Schield answered.

Donald Sterling's lawyers who had said they planned to call six witnesses Monday produced none of them and court was recessed early.

Shelly Sterling, Donald Sterling's wife who had been listed as a witness, was in court but was not called to the stand. She was scheduled to return today.

Miami's Dwyane Wade, left, and center Chris Bosh will take on expanded roles next season as the Heat reshape their roster and their offense.

Miami's new-look roster isn't finalized

By SHANDEL RICHARDSON
Sun Sentinel

MIAMI

For four years, the Miami Heat were on top of the NBA.

They were the league's "it" team because of the presence of LeBron James. Now, with James' return to Cleveland, the rebuilding process has begun.

James held the league hostage for nearly two weeks as he wavered between staying in Miami and returning home.

The Heat brass was caught off guard when James announced he was leaving. It led to a frantic 48-hour period, with Heat personnel scrambling to find replacement players via free agency.

With three new additions (thus far), the post-LeBron era begins with uncertainty. Are the team's two remaining All-Stars ready to play without the ultimate crutch in James? Did Heat President Pat Riley surround them with enough youthful depth? Is coach Erik Spoelstra up for the challenge of leading a team minus the game's best player?

Regardless, here's a peek at the Heat roster; Miami has 12 players under contract, with three spots available:

Returning

Chris Andersen: His return was huge because the Heat needed depth in the frontcourt. Andersen was the most effective big off the bench. He battled nagging injuries throughout the postseason.

Chris Bosh: This could be the first time Bosh is the primary player since his days in Toronto. Without James, he may be asked to return to the post, too.

Mario Chalmers: There was speculation about him possibly not returning. By keeping Chalmers, the Heat made sure they would have experience at point guard.

Norris Cole: His third year in the league was full of inconsistency. He has struggled on the perimeter and hasn't become the playmaker the Heat envisioned. Still, Cole will fit into the Miami system because of his defense.

Justin Hamilton: Perhaps this is the year the Heat give Hamilton a chance. He's played mostly in garbage time, but was impressive during the NBA Summer League.

Udonis Haslem: The Heat's all-time leading rebounder took another pay cut so the team could make moves in free agency. Haslem should help the frontcourt.

Dwyane Wade: He will have to shoulder more of the load. This year will give fans the opportunity to see if he can play like the Wade of old.

Gone

Shane Battier: Battier made it known early he would retire. The Heat will miss his savvy on defense and timely 3-point shooting, but Danny Granger or James Ennis could be upgrades.

LeBron James: James leaves a huge void, with his departure most likely changing the offensive scheme. Spoelstra said he hasn't begun to think about strategy, but expect drastic alterations.

James Jones: In the postseason, he went from bench-warmer to key contributor, but he left because of playing time. He should receive more minutes in Cleveland.

Newcomers

Luol Deng: Landing Deng was vital. Several times over the last four years James said Deng was one of his toughest covers. His versatility should help offset some of the things James provided.

James Ennis: After a year in Australia, the 2013 second-round pick could turn into the young wing player the Heat desperately need. If Ennis continues to improve as a shooter, he may work his way into the rotation.

Danny Granger: Is he healthy enough to contribute in Miami? He has played 46 games in the last three seasons because of injury. Can he return to All-Star form?

Josh McRoberts: The Heat get a serviceable big man. He brings athleticism and could help with the rebounding woes. At 27, he also brings much-needed youth.

Shabazz Napier:

In Play

Ray Allen: Miami appears on the outside looking in. Allen is reportedly contemplating joining James in Cleveland or retiring.

Greg Oden: The experiment turned into a bust. Oden was never able to work his way into the rotation. Most likely, he doesn't return.

Michael Beasley: Another experiment gone bad. Beasley never bought into the Heat's defensive scheme. Expect him to land elsewhere.

Toney Douglas: He started 17 games last year, meaning he overachieved. Still, it appears Douglas' days in Miami are over.

Chicago re-signs guard

By The Associated Press

CHICAGO — Guard Kirk Hinrich agreed to re-sign with Chicago on a two-year deal.

The Bulls announced the move Monday, along with the signing of second-round pick Cameron Bairstow. A person with knowledge of the deal told The Associated Press that Hinrich will make $2.7 million next season. The contract includes a player option for the second year. The person requested anonymity because the team does not publicly comment on contract details.

Hinrich has spent nine of his 11 seasons with the Bulls.

The steady veteran averaged 9.1 points and 3.9 assists in 73 games last season. His presence will help give the Bulls a little bit of insurance should Derrick Rose's knee issues return.

Rose is set to play this season after missing most of the last two years.

Player moves: San Antonio announced it re-signed Matt Bonner. Terms were not disclosed, but the veteran will return for a ninth season in San Antonio. That's the longest tenure outside of the trio of Tim Duncan, Manu Ginobili and Tony Parker. . . .

Phoenix announced the signing of forward Anthony Tolliver. The Suns will be the seventh NBA team the 6-foot-8 Tolliver, an accurate 3-point shooter, has played for. . . .

Dallas signed free agent forward Richard Jefferson as a possible replacement for Vince Carter off the bench. Terms of the contract announced weren't released, but it is reportedly a one-year deal for the veteran minimum of $1.4 million. Jefferson started 78 games for Utah last year. . . .

Free-agent guard Nick Young signed a multiyear deal to stay with the Los Angeles Lakers. Terms were note disclosed. . . .

Utah signed free agent forward Trevor Booker, who played four seasons in Washington, averaging 6.4 points and 5.1 minutes in 235 career games, including 105 starts. He averaged 6.8 points and 5.3 rebounds last season.

Threshers turn 4 hits into a win

Charles' 3-run triple in sixth decides game

Staff Report

CLEARWATER — Three Charlotte pitchers combined on a four-hitter, but Art Charles' three-run triple in the sixth was decisive in Clearwater's 4-3 victory Monday in the Florida State League.

Charles' triple ended the night for Stone Crabs starter Jordan Harrison (0-2), who gave up three hits and two walks while striking out three in 5⅔ innings.

Charlotte attempted to rally in the eighth, trailing 4-1. Ulises Joaquin, the third of four Clearwater pitchers, issued back-to-back walks and a single to Leonardo Reginatto to load the bases. Patrick Leonard followed with a two-run single. The rally ended, however, when reliever Cody Forsythe entered and retired Justin O'Connor on a double play.

Forsythe retired the side in the ninth for his first save.

Charlotte scored its other run in the second on O'Connor's seventh homer. Jordan Guth (2-3, 2.44) scattered five hits across six innings. He struck out six.

■ BASEBALL: Hall of Fame

Hall expects crowd to return

By ANTHONY RIEBER
Newsday

What if they held a Hall of Fame induction ceremony and (almost) no one showed up?

That was nearly the case last year as no living inductees were honored as part of the Class of 2013 at the Baseball Hall of Fame. It was the first time that had happened since 1965.

Bob Gibson, who attended last year's ceremonies honoring three posthumously elected Hall of Famers, called it "kind of sad."

This year will be different — very different. Gibson might call it "kind of awesome."

Six men will be inducted Sunday as the Class of 2014: the managerial trio of Joe Torre, Bobby Cox and Tony La Russa, 300-game winners Greg Maddux and Tom Glavine, and slugger Frank Thomas.

That's enough star power to light up the tiny village of Cooperstown. And it will, as more than 40,000 are expected to cram into the mythical birthplace of baseball for Hall of Fame weekend.

The Hall estimated last year's crowd at the induction ceremony as 2,500.

INDUCTION CEREMONY

WHEN: Sunday, 1:30 p.m.
WHERE: Coooperstown, N.Y.
TV: MLB Network

"Last year, for the community, was a little disappointing, not having any living inductees," said Matt Hazzard, the interim executive director of the Cooperstown Chamber of Commerce. "This year, with there being six that are very prominent names, everybody's pretty excited about that. Hotel rooms have been sold out for quite a while. People are having to stay as far as an hour and a half away if they didn't make reservations too far in advance."

It was the steroid issue that led to last year's induction shutout.

Barry Bonds and Roger Clemens would have been shoo-ins for the Class of 2013 had their careers not been tainted by allegations of performance-enhancing drug use.

So without any living inductees, the Class of 2013 included former Yankees owner Jacob Ruppert, 19th-century player Deacon White and former umpire Hank O'Day.

MEASURING UP

Evan Longoria is considered one of the more productive hitters in the majors, but this year, not so much. Where he ranks in several key categories going into Monday's games:

Cat.	Longoria	MLB rank	He ranks behind

plate and started doing small things differently in his setup, and he's just now getting closer to getting back to normal.

"I think for me the word is when I've been at my best in the past … it's more rhythmic. It's just a smoother swing," Longoria said. "So the added mechanics I think has maybe hindered me at times this year — that I'm trying to really focus on things that I'm doing instead of just going up to the plate and trusting that my bat is going to get where it needs to, just like I've done in the past. …

"What I've tried to go back to … is really just dumbing it down and just trusting the fact that I'm going to get into the right position to hit."

Shelton said Longoria didn't intentionally change but just drifted away from his usual form and got comfortable with a different style, which makes it feel uncomfortable to switch back.

"Sometimes things get away from guys, and he got away from what his strength was," Shelton said. "We're working toward getting that back. … I think the three (or) four days before the break he started swinging the bat a little more aggressively, so I think we're going to see the extra-base hits come back and we're going to see the balls go out of the ballpark."

Longoria has had other issues this season as well, talking opening about putting too much pressure on himself to try to do too much to get the team out of its extended early season struggles.

There has yet to be any extended stretch in which he has felt locked in.

"To be honest with you, not really," he said. "It seems like I say this every year at a certain point, whenever it is, but this game is tough, man. There'll be maybe a day or two when things feel good and it's clicking, so to speak, then the next day it's gone, and you feel like you never played the game.

"So this year has been probably the toughest year for me … because I don't really know what it is. It's been kind of a struggle to figure it out. Hopefully at the end of the year I'll be answering different questions about what happened and the outcome overall of the team and the season."

That would be a powerful statement.

Jones lifts Marlins in 10th

By The Associated Press

ATLANTA — Garrett Jones drove in two runs with a bases-loaded single in the 10th inning, lifting Miami to a 3-1 victory over Atlanta on Monday night.

Christian Yelich led off the 10th with a single off Shae Simmons (1-2) and moved to second on Jordany Valdespin's sacrifice bunt. Following an intentional walk to Giancarlo Stanton, Simmons walked Casey McGehee to load the bases.

Jones broke a 1-1 tie with his grounder past Simmons into center field.

Bryan Morris (7-0) stranded two runners in a scoreless ninth. Steve Cishek pitched a perfect 10th inning for his 22nd save.

Jarrod Saltalamacchia hit his 10th homer for Miami in the fifth for a 1-1 tie that held until the ninth.

Giants 7, Phillies 4: In Philadelphia, Adam Duvall hit a two-run homer to spoil Cliff Lee's return from the disabled list and San Francisco beat Philadelphia.

Hunter Pence had three hits and two RBIs, Buster Posey drove in two runs and the Giants remained tied with the Los Angeles Dodgers for first place in the NL West.

Dodgers 5, Pirates 2: In Pittsburgh, Hyun-Jin Ryu pitched seven strong innings, Adrian Gonzalez reached base five times and the Los Angeles Dodgers beat Pittsburgh.

Ryu (11-5) joined Zack Greinke and Clayton Kershaw in making the Dodgers the first team in the majors with three 11-game winners. The left-hander allowed two runs and five hits with a walk and five strikeouts.

Brewers 5, Reds 2: In Milwaukee, Milwaukee scored three runs on two misjudged balls in the outfield by Chris Heisey, and Wily Peralta pitched seven strong innings in the Brewers' 5-2 victory over the Cincinnati Reds on Monday night.

Rangers 4, Yankees 2: In New York, Miles Mikolas earned his first win as a starter, pitching into the eighth inning and leading Texas over the sloppy New York Yankees.

Trailing by a run with none on and two outs in the sixth, Texas got run-scoring singles from Geovany Soto, Rougned Odor and Shin-Soo Choo to go ahead in only its third win in 17 July games.

Red Sox 14, Blue Jays 1: In Toronto, David Ortiz hit the 452nd and 453rd home runs of his career, moving past Boston great Carl Yastrzemski into 36th place on the all-time list, and the Red Sox won their fifth straight game.

Ortiz matched Yastrzemski with a two-run blast to center off left-hander Brad Mills in the fourth, then broke the short-lived tie with another two-run shot off Mills in the fifth, his 21st and 22nd homers of the season.

White Sox 3, Royals 1: In Chicago, Chris Sale pitched seven effective innings in his first outing since the All-Star break and Adam Dunn had two RBIs and scored a run to lead the Chicago White Sox over slumping Kansas City. Sale (9-1) wasn't at his best, allowing seven hits and a walk in seven innings, but he worked out of jams in the fourth and sixth innings. He struck out eight and has allowed three runs or less in 14 of his 15 starts this season. Jake Petricka pitched the ninth for his fourth save.

Twins 4, Indians 3: In Minneapolis, Josh Willingham's tiebreaking home run in the eighth inning spurred Minnesota past Cleveland. Kurt Suzuki had a two-run double among his three hits, Trevor Plouffe hit an RBI double and the Twins beat the Indians at home for the first time in more than 11 months.

Nibali focused on the finish

Leader wants to be symbol against doping in cycling

By JAMEY KEATEN
Associated Press

CARCASSONNE, France — Barring a disaster for him on French roads from now until Sunday, the man who looks set to win the Tour de France says he understands that cycling is still paying for its longtime doping plague.

Italy's Vincenzo Nibali knows that more than many. Both of cycling's other "Grand Tours" that he has already won were marred by doping cases. Last year's Giro d'Italia was tarnished by three positive tests while in the 2010 Vuelta Nibali's runner-up, Ezequiel Mosquera, later tested positive for a masking agent that can hide blood-booster EPO — long cycling's designer drug.

But on the rest day Monday before the pack heads to the Pyrenees, the serene, talented and methodical 29-year-old Italian was focusing on the race, saying he wants to make sure he avoids a "crisis" like the crashes that forced out rivals 2013 Tour champ Chris Froome and two-time winner Alberto Contador. In post-stage news conferences, he has confidently fielded and answered questions about doping.

"Unfortunately, those questions arise because we're paying (for) the past years. I try to answer in the most correct way, like I already did at the Giro last year," Nibali said after Sunday's Stage 15. "I'm here to give the best answers I can, and clarify everything about myself."

"I've always been a flag-bearer of anti-doping."

As the race embarks Tuesday on three days in the Pyrenees mountains, Nibali leads Alejandro Valverde — a 34-year-old Spaniard who once served a two-year ban after being implicated in a blood-doping ring — by 4 minutes, 37 seconds. Romain Bardet is third, 4:50 back, and fellow Frenchman Thibaut Pinot is fourth: 5:06 behind. American Tejay van Garderen is fifth, 5:49 back.

A few components go into the calculation to understand those gaps, after more than 66 hours of total racing since the Tour's start in Yorkshire, England on July 5. They include Nibali's nearly indomitable performance in the mountains, which often prove crucial to separating the strong contenders for the Tour title from the rest of the pack; his relative strength in the time trial, which looms on the next-to-last race day; and the luxury that Nibali has: To focus on the few riders who could threaten him.

If any one of them tries a breakaway in the coming days, expect Nibali and his strong Astana team to lay chase. He'll be keeping close watch in today's 237.5-kilometer (147.5-mile) Stage 16 from Carcassonne to Bagneres-de-Luchon in the Pyrenees. It's the longest stage this year and features the punishing Port de Bales climb.

In this race, Nibali has shown maturity — by cannily winning Stage 2 — and exceptional bike control, such as over the cobblestones in Stage 5. In that stage, Froome crashed out due to injury and Nibali nibbled more than 2 minutes on Contador, forcing the Spaniard to start contemplating how to attack. Five stages later, he too crashed out.

"Over the years, I've really learned a lot from all the big races: That every second counts," Nibali said. "You can never know."

KIRILENKO ENDS ENGAGEMENT TO OVECHKIN

MOSCOW (AP) — Another sports power couple's engagement is off.

Two months after golfer Rory McIlroy broke off his engagement to Danish tennis star Caroline Wozniacki, Russian tennis player Maria Kirilenko said she has called off her planned wedding to three-time NHL MVP Alex Ovechkin of the Washington Capitals.

The two had been together since 2011 and became engaged in December 2012.

Kirilenko said in comments distributed by the Russian Tennis Federation that there were "a lot of reasons" behind her decision.

She says "our relationship is over, but I respect Sasha (Ovechkin) as a person and as an athlete and I respectfully wish him further sporting success."

Ovechkin had faced questions from Russian media about the relationship when he did not accompany Kirilenko to Wimbledon last month.

England's Gerrard retires from international play: England captain Steven Gerrard announced his retirement from the national team to focus on playing for Liverpool.

The 34-year-old midfielder made 114 appearances for England over 14 years.

Gerrard said he "agonized" over his future after the World Cup in Brazil, where England went out in the first round.

He told the Football Association that "this has been a very difficult decision, one of the toughest I've had to make in my career."

He is third all-time in appearances for England behind goalkeeper Peter Shilton (125) and David Beckham (115). Gerrard was captain for 38 international games and scored 21 goals, including three in his 12 World Cup appearances. . . .

World Cup scoring leader James Rodriguez of Colombia is said to be leaving Monaco for Real Madrid. The 23-year-old striker scored six goals in Brazil, including a spectacular volley against Uruguay in the second round. . . .

Troicki wins match at Swiss Open after 1-year ban: In Gstaad, Switzerland, Viktor Troicki returned from a one-year ban for a doping rules violation with victory in the Swiss Open first round.

Now ranked No. 847, the 28-year-old Serbian beat No. 8-seeded Dominic Thiem of Austria 7-6 (4), 6-4.

Troicki was ranked No. 53 last July when the International Tennis Federation imposed an 18-month ban. He had refused to give a blood sample after losing at the Monte Carlo Masters in April 2013. . . .

Sultan said that during two hearings this month, a private conversation between Hernandez and his lawyers, and a separate conversation between Hernandez's lawyers, were broadcast live over the Internet. The motion doesn't describe the contents of the conversations.

VETERANS

who could use a good showing in August to ensure that they still have a nameplate over their locker in September.

DE Da'Quan Bowers: A year ago, Bowers was all but handed a starting job at defensive end but he couldn't take it. He came to training camp a few pounds overweight and struggled with the heat.

Entering his fourth pro season, Bowers faces an uphill climb to secure a roster spot.

The Bucs have added defensive line help: free agents Michael Johnson and Clinton McDonald. Adrian Clayborn moves to Bowers' left side and second-year pro William Gholston finished '13 strong.

Bowers has only 5.5 career sacks and last season was his worst, with seven tackles and one sack in 13 games.

TE Luke Stocker: A fourth-round pick from Tennessee in 2011, Stocker has never been able to avoid the injury bug. He strained a calf muscle preparing for the conditioning run last year and played two games before a hip injury ended his season.

Stocker has 28 career receptions entering his fourth year and the Bucs are no longer waiting for him. They signed Giants free agent Brandon Myers and drafted Washington tight end Austin-Sefarian Jenkins in the second round.

Moreover, Tim Wright exploded onto the scene last year with 54 catches, five for touchdowns. But the lack of a pure blocking tight end makes Stoker valuable.

G Carl Nicks: The Pro Bowl guard has played nine games in two years.

* Night scrimmage at Raymond James Stadium

That's the most damning thing that can be said for Nicks, who is among the NFL's most dominant guards when healthy.

But a foot injury, compounded by surgery as a result of MRSA, has led to nerve damage.

Nicks insisted he will be ready for training camp but there's reason for skepticism. Six million dollars of his '14 salary is guaranteed, so the Bucs will give him every chance, even if it means placing him on the physically-unable-to-perform list.

RB Bobby Rainey: Three players rushed for more than 500 yards for the Bucs last season, including Rainey, who was claimed off waivers from the Browns.

Season-ending injuries to Doug Martin (shoulder) and Mike James (ankle) gave the 5-foot-8 Rainey a chance to shine. He rushed for 127 yards in a victory against Buffalo.

But with the addition of rookie Charles Sims, Rainey or James could get caught in a numbers game.

S Kelcie McCray: Last season, after being claimed off waivers from the Dolphins, the safety from Arkansas State was pressed into service after Dashon Goldson's suspension and injuries.

McCray played 101 snaps on defense and had a huge game in a win over the Lions, recovering a fumble and dislodging the football from Calvin Johnson near the goal line to seal the victory.

But the Bucs have added former Bears safety Major Wright and cornerback D.J. Moore, who can also play on the back end in a crunch.

Troubled Bills player to enter drug program

By The Associated Press

PITTSFORD, N.Y. — Buffalo defensive tackle Marcell Dareus agreed to enter an NFL substance abuse program in a bid to have felony drug charges in Alabama dismissed, his attorney said on Monday.

Rod Giddens wrote in an email to The Associated Press that Dareus was allowed to enter the program during a hearing at Calhoun County Court in Alabama earlier in the day. Dareus attended the hearing while being excused from training camp in suburban Rochester, New York.

Buffalo's WKBW-TV first reported the agreement.

Dareus, who is from Alabama and played for the Crimson Tide, was arrested and charged with possession of a controlled substance and drug paraphernalia after being stopped by a state trooper on May 5.

The charges will be dismissed and potentially expunged should the 2011 first-round draft pick successfully complete the program.

Dareus was placed on the active/non-football injury list after failing a conditioning test on Saturday. Dareus must pass the test before he can be cleared for practice.

Manziel has top-selling jersey: Rookie quarterback Johnny Manziel had the league's top-selling jersey since April 1 on NFLShop.com. Dick's Sporting Goods also said that Manziel's jersey is its top seller. …

Manziel is followed on the NFLShop.com list by three quarterbacks: Seattle's Russell Wilson, San Francisco's Colin Kaepernick and Denver's Peyton Manning. Seahawks cornerback Richard Sherman is fifth followed by St. Louis rookie Michael Sam, the league's first openly gay player.

Eagles player charged: Philadelphia first-year safety Keelan Johnson faces charges in Tempe, Ariz., after authorities said he pushed a police officer investigating a bar brawl. Johnson played for Arizona State.

Roster moves: New Orleans placed nose tackle John Jenkins on the physically unable to perform list three days before the start of training camp. Jenkins has not practiced this offseason because of a pectoral injury. Players on PUP lists cannot practice, but can come off the list at any time during camp. …

Houston placed linebacker Brian Cushing on PUP list as he recovers from a left knee injury. Houston also placed second-year linebacker Trevardo Williams and rookie nose tackle Louis Nix III on PUP. …

Around the league: New York Giants running back David Wilson was cleared for contact work after recovering from neck surgery. Although he attended offseason workouts with the Giants, Wilson was held back from many activities by medical staff. New York's first practice is today. …

NETWORK

"It's not something you get into and get out of real quickly. We want to be diligent. And by we, I'm talking about us, the league, but also ESPN. You don't take that step unless you feel pretty confident it will be a successful business venture for both entities."

The Big Ten was the first conference to launch its own network, in partnership with Fox, and turned the per-subscriber fee it charged cable and satellite providers into a revenue stream lucrative enough to coax Maryland out of the ACC.

Four years ago, the ACC decided to stick with a mix of ESPN and its traditional Raycom syndication rather than pursue its own network, but the landscape continues to change.

With the addition of Louisville, the ACC has more television households and population in its geographic footprint than any other conference. Meanwhile, the market is booming, even if it turns out to be a bubble in the long term. Now appears to be the time to strike.

"I made a speech in 1985 where I said I think we've reached the end of our ability to pay rights fees," said Neal Pilson, a former president of CBS Sports. "That didn't prove to be the case. The value of sports programming, relative to other types of programming, has escalated, has increased, because of the live nature of it and the loyalty of the American public toward players and teams."

Not everyone has cashed in. Start-up costs are astronomical. The University of Texas' Longhorn Network has struggled. The Pac-12 Network is not widely available. And the ACC would have to buy back the rights to games ESPN has sublicensed to Raycom and Fox Sports.

Even a successful conference-specific channel always requires a tradeoff between exposure (on ESPN and other mass-market networks) and money (subscriber fees). For the ACC, that means weighing the reach of the so-called ACC Network, the rebranded Raycom syndication, against the financial benefits of an actual ACC Network. The relative success of ESPN's newly launched SEC Network will have a lot to say about the direction the ACC goes.

"Time will tell," Swofford said. "There's at least a belief right now by what you see happening that a devoted conference channel is the way people seem to be going. We're all a little different. From our standpoint, you don't want to go down that road simply because it's the fad or the sexy thing to be doing. You want to go down the road because you strongly believe it's in the best interests of your conference."

For now, the ACC will watch and wait. The decision about whether to start its own network is a big one. It's one the ACC has to get right. Nothing the ACC does will have as much to say about the long-term future of the conference.

Former Minnesota All-American dies

Big 12 assigns first female official to game

By The Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — Bob McNamara, an All-American football player for Minnesota in the 1950s and later a major fundraiser for the university, has died. He was 82.

The university announced McNamara's death on Monday. The school said McNamara died after a long illness on Sunday night.

McNamara played for the Gophers from 1951-54. He was an All-American halfback and the team MVP in 1954. He played professionally for the Winnipeg Blue Bombers in Canada and the Denver Broncos in the AFL.

After his playing career was over, McNamara was one of the school's leading fundraisers. He played a big role in raising money for the new outdoor football stadium.

Bowlsby warns of pending change: Big 12 Commissioner Bob Bowlsby warned that anyone who likes intercollegiate athletics the way they are now will hate what's coming. During his opening address at Big 12 football media days Monday, Bowlsby said significant changes are on the way. Bowlsby said new funding challenges, including legal battles and expenses increasing at a higher rate than revenue, will eventually result in the elimination of some minor sports teams. The former Stanford athletic director also anticipates tension among sports on campus and among institutions with different resources.

Big 12 commissioner Bob Bowlsby speaks at the opening of the Big 12 Conference's football media days in Dallas on Monday.

Around the nation: The Big 12 Conference assigned a female official to work one of its games for the first time in league history. Commissioner Bob Bowlsby said Monday that Catherine "Cat" Conti will be on the crew for Kansas' season opener at home Sept. 6 against Southeast Missouri State. While calling this a good opportunity for Conti and the league, Bowlsby said Big 12 officiating supervisor Walt Anderson assigned Conti "because she is just a darned good official." …

Texas quarterback David Ash was cleared to participate in contact drills when the Longhorns return for training camp. Ash missed most of last season with concussion symptoms. Sophomore running back Johnathan Gray and senior linebacker Jordan Hicks also were cleared. …

The Southern Intercollegiate Athletic Conference (Division II) announced its football championship game will move to Montgomery for the next three years. The game was played in Atlanta the past three years.

FISHER

media Monday at the ACC Football Kickoff in Greensboro, N.C., and the common theme during his hour-long session was how he would keep his team focused. The Seminoles outscored opponents by an average of 39.5 points per game last year, the largest margin by an undefeated team in modern college football, so it's easy to understand why Fisher is wary of his team becoming complacent.

Boredom will likely be FSU's biggest enemy this upcoming season. FSU returns seven starters on offense, including Heisman Trophy winner Jameis Winston, and six starters on defense.

As a result, Fisher has looked for ways to combat satisfaction and motivate his players. He's had his staff study and compile presentations on legendary sports figures Joe Montana, Michael Jordan, John Elway and Larry Bird.

"Those guys all had that killer instinct and were guys who wanted to be on top, stayed on top and one championship wasn't enough," Fisher said. "We looked back and studied those guys, habits they had. They all have that attitude of domination, is what we call it.

"That's what we have to create. If you look at things that failed, that's great, but I'd rather look at things that succeeded and why they succeeded."

Another part of Fisher's strategy is keeping things light so pressure doesn't mount.

"If you worry about losing, you play defensively," Fisher said. "Let's have fun. Let's be aggressive, let's go win a game. We expect to win, we want to win, that's what we think we're going to do, let's play that way. You are what you think."

Fisher believes that every team has a unique identity. One of his strengths as a coach has been his ability to interpret different personality traits and then properly adjust his coaching style accordingly during the ebb and flow of a season.

But coming off a national championship as a coach is uncharted territory for Fisher, so there is no guarantee he will know all the right buttons to push this year.

"There's no formula for it," Fisher said. "How many of you all have kids? You think you've got your pulse, then all of a sudden as soon as you get the pulse, they do something and you're like, 'Where in the world did that come from?' A team is the same way sometimes. I think it ever evolves, and I don't think you ever have the answer. I think it's a constant battle that challenges you all the time.

"I think that's one of the things that makes it so hard to duplicate that success, you're constantly fighting that battle."

Fisher was careful Monday to not mention the word "defend" when answering questions about winning back-to-back championships. He wants last year's team and this year's team to be separate from each other.

Alcohol abuse can inhibit sexual function

Dr. Roach

DEAR DR. ROACH: Please enlighten your readers about too much alcohol causing impotence. My husband drinks beer after beer daily, from noon until night, then expects to be able to perform. He has done this for years, and now cannot get an erection. He is 65 years old. I would like to know the damage he is doing to himself and what to look for in the future, concerning his health. — Lonely Wife

ANSWER: Excess alcohol ravages many of the body's systems, including the heart, liver, pancreas and bone marrow. But hearing the long-term effect of alcohol on sexual function may be a powerful motivator to stop excess drinking. In a 2007 study, 72 percent of men with chronic, persistent alcohol use had sexual problems. With liver damage in particular, men lose testosterone and gain estrogen, leading to gynecomastia (male breast enlargement). If your husband continues to drink, there are many potential perils ahead. Fortunately, stopping allows most of the body's systems to recover, sometimes completely if the damage isn't too severe, but the body can always improve upon quitting.

Shakespeare didn't need a study: He noted that drink "provokes the desire, but it takes away the performance."

DEAR DR. ROACH: I am a 47-year-old male in generally good health. In 1999, I was involved in a nasty car accident, ending up in a trauma center. I needed abdominal surgery to repair a ruptured small intestine. Today, 15 years after the fact, is it possible to have issues with the scar tissue from that surgery? I have some of the symptoms of scar tissue problems, but a doc has told me I have diverticulitis. Can you help me? — M.F.

ANSWER: Well, I can't tell you what you have, but I certainly can confirm that scar tissue, called adhesions, can cause problems even years after the original trauma that caused them.

Adhesions are bands of scar tissue that can envelop the intestine, causing an obstruction. Most of the time the obstruction is partial, and with time and bowel rest, the problem resolves itself. However, sometimes it doesn't, or the obstruction is complete, and in those cases it will require another trip to the operating room.

Diverticula are small outpouchings in the intestinal wall, most commonly in the sigmoid colon. The condition is called diverticulosis and is very common, with about 20 percent of people at age 40 and 60 percent of people age 60 having them. When they get inflamed, that is called diverticulitis, and symptoms include abdominal pain, fever, nausea and vomiting, or bowel changes.

A CT scan usually can diagnose both conditions. It's possible to have both problems coexisting, which makes determining the cause of current symptoms difficult. Still, the CT scan would be the next step if you are having symptoms.

DEAR DR. ROACH: I have lower back pain and have been seeing a chiropractor, which helps a little. Would yoga help? — A.

ANSWER: Yoga does help many people with back pain, but it's important to find an instructor with experience with beginners and in using yoga specifically for back pain. Similarly, tai chi and Pilates exercises have been shown to be useful treatments for back pain.

READERS: Diabetes has become epidemic in North America. The booklet on it provides insight on its diagnosis and treatment. Readers can order a copy by writing: Dr. Roach — No. 402, Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475. Enclose a check or money order (no cash) for $4.75 U.S./$6 Can. with the recipient's printed name and address. Please allow four weeks for delivery.

Dr. Roach regrets that he is unable to answer individual letters, but will incorporate them in the column whenever possible. Readers may email questions to ToYourGoodHealth@med.cornell.edu or request an order form of available health newsletters at P.O. Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475. An update on closed captioning

Hints from Heloise

Dear Heloise: In a recent column, a reader mentioned a closed-captioning feature, and you commented, "Some TVs do not have this feature."

I want all of your readers to know that closed captioning is required by law on all TVs over 13 inches, and on all digital cable boxes. It may not be as easy to set up as simply pressing the mute button, but it may come in handy for some people. Refer to the instruction manuals. Also, you can leave the sound up while the captions are going. — Karen D. in Nebraska

Karen, thanks for the update. All analog TVs 13 inches or larger are required by the government (since 1993) to have closed captioning. All digital television receivers also are required (since 2002) to have it. But for those with older TVs, maybe it's time for a new one! — Heloise

Did carrots cause a spark?

Dear Heloise: I was cooking carrots in the microwave the other day and noticed some sparks. I know not to ever place metal in the microwave (including gold-trimmed dishes), but carrots?! Please explain. — Cynthia D., via email

Yes, it could have been the carrots! Those sparks are from "arcing." Arcing usually happens when microwaves react with something metal. But according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture, arcing also can occur when you cook hot dogs and carrots. How? Hot dogs contain additives and salts that can be unevenly mixed, and carrots can still have minerals on them from the dirt they were grown in. The microwaves react to these things by arcing.

If arcing happens, turn off the microwave ASAP! This will prevent damage to it, and maybe prevent a fire! If it is caused by food, finish cooking that food on the stove. And if it is caused by metal on a dish (which you know NOT to use), use a microwave-safe one. — Heloise

Wreath base

Dear Heloise: After the kids were a little rambunctious in the pool, I was left with a couple of broken pool noodles. I use them as a base for wreaths. You can attach items or specific things to create a holiday theme, and you are recycling! — Michelle P. in Florida

Younger couples weigh in on how they handle money

Dear Abby

DEAR READERS: On April 11, I printed a letter from "Wondering in Washington," a man asking why young men in general today have the attitude that "any money I earn is mine" in a marriage or live-in situation. He said when he married, he and his wife considered what they earned to be "theirs" — not his or hers. When I asked my "younger readers" to chime in, I was inundated. Some excerpts:

DEAR ABBY: My husband was 26 and I was 24 when we got married. To me, how young couples handle money says a lot about their attitude toward marriage.

My mother always said, "If you can't trust a man with your money, why would you trust him with your heart?" I kept that in mind when I was dating, so when my boyfriend and I married, we didn't have serious underlying issues like addiction, compulsive spending, etc. — MOM OF 2 IN SEATTLE

DEAR ABBY: My first husband controlled all the money, my pay and his. He bought what he wanted, but didn't always pay the mortgage or utilities.

In my second marriage, my money is my money and his money is his. If I earn 60 percent of the income, I pay 60 percent of the shared bills. Whatever is left is up to my own discretion to spend, and the same goes for his paycheck. — LEARNED MY LESSON IN FLORIDA

DEAR ABBY: I'm a man in my mid-30s; my wife is in her mid-20s. Many of our friends keep their finances separate, and the reason usually involves hearing their parents argue over money. What I find interesting is that the wife usually came up with the idea.

I believe the separation of incomes starts with young women embracing messages of empowerment they heard growing up and applying them not only to the workplace, but home, as well — plus a healthy dose of entitlement that seems common to their generation. — JUST SAYING, IN WISCONSIN

DEAR ABBY: Male reader here. Gone are the days of the stay-at-home wife who takes care of the house and raises the children. I'm as guilty of those preconceptions as anyone. I thought marriage meant being totally devoted to your spouse and you discussed everything.

I now believe both parties in a relationship have financial responsibilities to the other. In my first marriage, the majority of financial responsibilities fell on me. The financial obligations in my second marriage are different. We have a separate maintenance agreement. I pay only part of our living expenses. I can spend whatever I want, when I want, on whatever I want. This has prevented many disagreements.

I think the way to handle finances in a relationship is a rock-solid legal agreement and a lot of premarital counseling. Then there are no surprises. — J.G. IN TEXAS

DEAR ABBY: I'm 32, recently married. I earn more than my husband, and I'm better at managing money.

We plan to set up a joint account for household expenses, etc., and keep individual accounts for any money left. That way, we have a certain amount of independence and freedom.

We don't consider our relationship to be disposable. But when you grow up like we did and don't marry until your 30s, you live a considerable amount of your life independently. We are happy with this arrangement. — MODERN MARRIAGE IN MICHIGAN

BIBLE

"Because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked." — Revelation 3:17.

Material wealth is not necessarily a sign of God's approval or blessing. In fact, it can sometimes stand between us and the Lord. Think it over.

HOROSCOPE

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Your friends are important to you, but they'll never know unless you tell them with words, deeds and gifts. Go there. Tell them sincerely.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). It's as though you have lavender-scented oxygen and are inhaling life on a whole new level. Breathe it all in with the relish of a first breath. And look out for those Gemini!

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). You'll be invigorated by your team. Sure, some of them are loopy, and others are bossy, but the overall effect will be enthusiasm. Go with it! Acting with decisiveness will inspire the group's confidence in you.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). Some associate the Moon with madness, others with romance. Your ruling luminary does command oceans to swell, and your beauty follows the trend.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Should you stretch, learn and grow, or should you stay comfortable and contained? It sounds like a trick question, and yet there are times when it's better to stay comfortable.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Today you may interact with someone as creative and diverse as you are, and it will be important that you stay focused on your own scene. One topic will lead to another.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Plan, take action and complete the mission. This is easy when it's a doable task: grocery shopping, cleaning the house, calling your relatives. It's all important.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Don't take the blame for someone else's mistake, but don't call it out, either. There is a way to be classy and discreet. Justice always wins in the end.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Your fanciful mood creates a reality that you and yours would love to inhabit. At the right time, you'll bring this down to earth. Before that, it's frothy fun.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). The one who doesn't get you seems like an idiot. But have you considered that you are not so easily discerned? Your beautiful complications are not for the faint of heart.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). What you know and what you don't know come together in a yin-yang kind of configuration, and you'll likely be happy with it. Why mess with balance?

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). The old saw goes: The audience can't see and hear at the same time. So if you're delivering important information, which you will be today, make sure you're not distracting the listener with anything extraneous.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (July 22). You'll gain rapport with people who are very different from you and win new customers and fans. This translates into money in the bank in August and a vastly expanding network throughout your solar year. October is for getting the training you need to make a career change. November shows you deeply in love. Virgo and Libra people adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 2, 34, 48, 18 and 5.

Opening lead: Queen of ♢

New bridge players eagerly seek opportunities to take finesses. Experienced players look for ways to avoid them.

South's two-spade bid was an attempt to verify that North had four-card heart support — he might have raised with three. The three-heart bid confirmed this, so South used Blackwood and drove to slam when North showed two aces. South won the opening diamond lead in dummy and saw that his contract was cold if the trumps did not split 5-0 and East had the king of clubs. Could he avoid taking the club finesse? Yes!

Declarer cashed the king of diamonds at trick two, discarding a club and then ruffed a diamond with the king of trumps. Next came the seven of trumps to the board's eight, which East allowed to hold. Dummy's last diamond was ruffed with the trump queen and the 10 of trumps was overtaken by dummy's jack.

East won his ace and shifted to a club. Declarer rose with his ace, crossed to dummy with the ace of spades, and drew both of the outstanding trumps while shedding his remaining clubs. He claimed the balance with only high spades left in his hand. Well done!
