Officials: Taxes may be needed to fill budget gaps

LIVI STANFORD | Staff Writer

Facing tough budget decisions ahead, several Lake County commissioners said they are left with two options: raise taxes or cut services.

There has not been a tax increase in the last five years, county officials said.

"We knew this day was going to come and we have cut and cut and there is nowhere else," County Commissioner Welton Cadwell said. "We are in a position where we have to provide the basic services. We don't want public safety to suffer, so some tough decisions are going to have to be made."

Cadwell said the county's past practice of tapping into reserves to balance the budget is not a viable option anymore.

"The only other way is to create additional revenues," he said.

The county's budget has a $7 million shortfall because of declining property values and an estimated $3 million increase to the Lake County Sheriff's Office budget to replace aging vehicles and for pay raises for deputies whose salaries are falling behind other jurisdictions, county officials said.

In order to maintain 7 percent in reserves, that shortfall must be met, according to Stephen Koontz, budget director.

Koontz said there could be an effect on any of the services the county provides, including parks and libraries, dependent on what the commission decides. In estimating the fiscal year 2013-14 budget, Koontz said he has already taken into account a 3 percent increase in property values.

"I don't feel (property values) are going to be up more than 3 percent," he said of the values, which will be released on June 1.

What's more, Lake Emergency Medical Services is facing cuts to service beginning in October if the organization has to chop an additional $750,000 to balance its budget for fiscal year 2015.

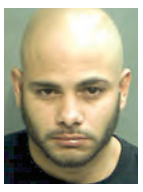
No bail yet for man in deadly day care crash

MIKE SCHNEIDER
Associated Press

ORLANDO — A man who authorities say drove an SUV that crashed into another vehicle, sending it spinning into a day-care center where a girl was killed and 14 people were injured, was ordered Friday to stay in jail until a judge can determine whether he is a flight risk.

Robert Corchado, 28, will be held in jail until at least Monday when a judge will hear arguments on whether he can be released on bail, Circuit Judge Jerry Brewer said during a first appearance hearing.



CORCHADO

Bail was initially set for $100,000, but a prosecutor told the judge that Corchado was a flight risk and that he should be held without bond.

"I have a witness here, a trooper, who can testify that he is a flight risk," prosecutor Austin Price said. "He has it on good authority that this defendant, is planning, once he posts bond, to leave the country."

Police ID man sought after body found in woods

MILLARD IVES | Staff Writer
millard.ives@dailycommercial.com

The Lake County Sheriff's Office reported Friday afternoon they have identified a man seen at an Ocoee Walmart with a woman whose body was found two days later in Clermont.

The man appeared to be walking with Cheri Amber Houston, 28, at the store at 6:15 p.m. on April 2.

Lt. John Herrell, sheriff's spokesman, said detectives received call-in tips of the man's identity after the media ran pictures of him starting Wednesday.

Herrell would not reveal if they have located or talked with the man, who has only been labeled as "someone detectives want to speak with" regarding Houston's disappearance. Herrell did say the man's vehicle has been positively identified and crime scene investigators are currently processing it.

Houston was found on the morning of April 4 near the intersection of Hancock and Hartwood Marsh roads. A woman walking her dog discovered the body in a wooded area about 300 feet from the intersection. Detectives believe the body had been there less than 24 hours. Detectives have not said how she died.

Detectives believe Houston, who was from Newnan, Ga., had been in the Ocoee and Winter Garden areas along the Highway 50 corridor since March 31.

Anyone with information can call the Lake County Sheriff's Office at 352-343-2101, or Central Florida CRIMELINE at 1-800-423-TIPS, where callers may remain anonymous.

Local residents are sharing some "great ideas" for the future of Venetian Gardens, according to officials involved with the visioning sessions Leesburg is hosting to create a master plan for the picturesque 110-acre waterside park on the shores of Lake Harris.

The next visioning session will be 9 a.m. to noon today at the Leesburg Community Building. The public is invited.

Leaks paint pattern of CIA deception

BRADLEY KLAPPER
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A controversial torture report by the Senate Intelligence Committee paints a pattern of CIA deception about the effectiveness of waterboarding and other brutal interrogation methods used on terror suspects after the Sept. 11 attacks, according to leaked findings. The committee said it will ask the Justice Department to investigate how the material was published.

The McClatchy news service late Thursday published what it said are the voluminous, still-classified review's 20 findings. It concludes that the "enhanced interrogation techniques" failed to produce valuable intelligence; the CIA misled the Bush administration, Congress and the public about the value of the harsh treatment; the agency employed unauthorized techniques on detainees and improperly detained others; and it never properly evaluated its own actions.

Both the CIA's interrogation techniques and confinement conditions "were brutal and far worse than the agency communicated to policymakers."

The reported findings are consistent with what senators have detailed about the investigation since its 2009 inception and with what numerous news reports, human rights organizations and various governmental and non-governmental studies have suggested in the decade since the CIA's program started to coming to light. President Barack Obama has likened the harsh interrogations to torture, but the spy agency defends its actions and says much in the Senate committee's report is inaccurate.

The committee voted last week to declassify the summary and conclusions of the 6,600-page review and is now waiting for the Obama administration to censor material sensitive to national security.

The panel's chairwoman, Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., said an investigation into how the findings were published was underway. The two pages of findings published by McClatchy did not include the names of any U.S. government employees or terror detainees, locations of secret CIA prisons or anything else that might threaten national security. They also did not indicate how or why the committee reached its conclusions.

Corchado's public defender, Jon de Armas, asked that the $100,000 bond remain in place.

The judge said that if Corchado is released, he will be prohibited from driving a car as a condition.

Police say Corchado crashed his Dodge Durango into a convertible, which in turn smashed into the KinderCare building on Wednesday. Corchado fled the scene, authorities said.

A manhunt across Florida ended Thursday with Corchado's arrest. He was charged with leaving the scene of a deadly accident almost precisely 24 hours after the KinderCare facility in Winter Park was torn open in the wreck, killing 4-year-old Lily Quintus, who was sitting in a classroom awaiting her afternoon snack. Fourteen others were injured, most of them children.

Family members say Lily Quintus loved princesses, ranch dressing — on everything — and "Star Wars."

"Families are emotionally destroyed because of what he did," Nicole Quintus, Lily's mother, said in an interview with The Associated Press

The mother softly sobbed as she spoke of her daughter. She said Lily also loved the TV series "Doctor Who" and put ranch dressing on even pizza and hot dogs. Nicole Quintus said a teacher called her soon after the crash, screaming but unable to say what happened.

"One minute everything was normal, and the next there was an explosion and smoke and screams," she said.

The girl's 7-year-old brother is an aspiring engineer who wants to design a time machine to bring Lily back, the mother added.

"She was beautiful and passionate and innocent," the mother said, "and she deserved so much more."

Eight patients, including Lily, were initially taken to Arnold Palmer Children's Hospital in Orlando. One remained in critical condition Friday, and three were listed in fair condition, according to a statement. Three had been discharged. The remaining victims were taken to other hospitals. There were no updates on their conditions Friday.

visioning session last weekend: Restaurants on the grounds; a lighthouse; boardwalk to connect the entire park; connecting Venetian Gardens to downtown with both pedestrian and golf cart paths; and some special attractions on the islands, such as a dog park and children's activities.

"Most people made suggestions to improve the park; there were not very many at all who said to leave it alone," said Robert Sargent, Leesburg's spokesman. "The majority of the suggestions were ideas of what we can do to attract people to Venetian Gardens, and the good thing is that we had a good cross section of the community. ...The park really is there for the residents, so as we move forward and plan for improvements, we really want to do something that the community is going to be proud of."

Greg Beliveau of LPG Planners was hired by the city of Leesburg to coordinate the workshops, prepare a draft and conceptual plan for Venetian Gardens. He was pleased by the turnout of 50 people who also discussed their wishes for the swimming pool and the community building. Among the first session group attendees were residents from Palmora Park, local business owners, city staff members and Commissioners David Knowles, Bill Polk and Mayor John Christian.

The Lake Mirror Complex is a multi-faceted entertainment complex located on Lakeland's scenic Lake Mirror. Leesburg residents will visit Lake Mirror and other sites on Thursday to get ideas for Venetian Gardens.

"What was neat about the day is overall a lot of the discussion was the same," said Beliveau, who noted the group was broken down into six tables sharing their ideas. "Even though all tables were working independently, there seemed to be some good consensus within the room."

"I was encouraged by the turnout," said Sandi Moore, executive director for the Leesburg Area Chamber of Commerce. "It was nice to see people really take the process seriously and really looking down the line, not just what it is going to look like tomorrow or next week. Any visioning that you do, you really have to think about what it's going to be like in five years and 10 years from now."

The Leesburg Area Chamber of Commerce will host a one-day visioning bus trip from 7 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. on Thursday for interested participants to visit Lake Mirror and Lake Morton in Lakeland; Cranes Roost in Altamonte Springs; and Wooton Park in Tavares to see the park improvements in these cities that may spur some ideas for Venetian Gardens.

"It helps you to get outside of where you are to see what the possibilities are in other cities, and sometimes you pick up one little idea and it can really change the course," Moore said. "It's important to realize what are the possibilities and what is out there."

Residents interested in going in the one-day visioning trip may call the Leesburg Area Chamber of Commerce, 787-2131 by Monday.

said they are struggling to come up with funding to make needed repairs at county buildings and to replace obsolete technology. With 41 percent of the county's buildings more than 20 years old, the HVAC controls system and IT file servers must be replaced to avoid system and operational failures.

There is a backlog of $12.2 million in facilities needs, while IT is reporting $950,000 for critical updates to file servers, data storage units and telephone systems.

Moreover, county officials are also projecting a $450,000 shortfall in the Parks and Stormwater Municipal Service Taxing Unit, which levies taxes to fund improvements.

In 2012, commissioners voted against the rollback rate, which would have allowed the county to raise taxes to generate the same amount of revenue as in the previous year.

If commissioners had voted for the rollback rate, there could have been more revenues in reserves, one county official said.

"We have kind of cut all around the edges and it may be time where we are going to have to make the decision to probably raise taxes or cut services drastically," Commissioner Tim Sullivan said. "We put off capital improvements. Putting off some of those decisions has now come back to haunt us. I don't see any huge increases in revenues coming in without raising taxes."

But commissioners Jimmy Conner and Sean Parks said it is premature to speak about tax increases without knowing exactly what the property values will be.

Even so, Conner said if the county is forced to raise property taxes in the name of public safety, it would be deemed essential.

"Cutting public safety means increasing response times," he said. "Increasing response times is the difference of people living or dying. I would rather be criticized for raising the millage than having to live with myself for not protecting the people who have confidence in me."

Jerry Smith, executive director of Lake EMS, said he was informed the ambulance's allocation, which it receives through the Municipal Service Taxing Unit, has been reduced by $400,000 for fiscal year 2014-15 because additional funds left over from the Lake-Sumter EMS split have been depleted.

Sumter County dissolved its contract with the organization in 2011.

The allocation from the MSTU funds one third of Smith's budget with the ambulance service collecting the remainder of its revenue from user fees, which have not been increasing at anticipated levels.

Smith has to replace four truck chassis, 16 LifePaks (known as cardiac monitors) and 14 stretchers by 2016. The cardiac monitors are $30,000 apiece, and each stretcher is $14,000.

"To maintain our state of readiness, our current deployment of 19 ambulances and for capital, Lake EMS needs more than a million" in additional revenue, Smith said.

One option commissioners could consider is to raise the MSTU for Lake EMS, Koontz said.

If the ambulance organization is forced to make cuts, it could result in one or two fewer ambulances on the road, Smith said.

"It could adversely impact our response times," he said.

Further, with a third of its fleet out of warranty, it could get more costly to fix repairs.

"We currently have 10 ambulances out of warranty, and we have five above 200,000 miles," Smith said, adding that the more mileage on a vehicle, the more repairs are needed. "We put a million miles on our fleet annually."

Previously, Smith had added 12 floater positions to avoid ambulances being down when someone calls in sick.

Some of those positions could be on the chopping block if revenues are not raised, Smith said.

"This is why I have frozen five positions," he said.

Senate approves school book bill

Staff Report

TALLAHASSEE — Florida's school districts will be required to review and select textbooks under a bill passed by the Florida Senate.

The Senate voted 21-19 for the bill which was pushed in response to a backlash over national education standards called Common Core on Friday. The bill was also inspired by complaints over a high school world history textbook that some said gave too much attention to Islam.

School boards currently select textbooks from a list drawn up by the Florida Department of Education.

Sen. Alan Hays, R-Umatilla, who introduced Senate Bill 864, said the legislation was needed so that school board members will be accountable to parents and voters.

Hays said the bill, which would shift responsibility for instructional materials from the state to county school boards, affirms "local control."

He said parents have approached him with concerns about the content in instructional materials and that they have "no voice" in controlling it.

"The school board members are members of the community, just like you and I are," Hays said, adding school boards should be accountable to local citizens.

Novice canner wins nine awards at fair

CINDY DIAN
Special to The Daily Commercial

Although June Perry has only been canning a year, the 58-year old Eustis resident entered five canning entries in the Lake County Fair Creative Art competition and four of them won first-place awards.

Perry's fifth canning entry took second-place and three of her four first-place entries went on to win Best of Show awards, for a total of eight awards for five food entries. A sixth entry, one for a homemade blanket, also won a first-place award.

"This is the first time I've ever entered anything in my life," she said. "I am encouraged beyond belief."

"The judges were raving over her recipes," Creative Arts Co-Chairman Annie Lewis said. "They were begging for the recipe and asking her to bring more next time."

However, Perry was very surprised at the outcome of her creations since she only started canning last year.

"I began canning and creating recipes for my family," she said. "I started out just making jams but eventually made my way into canning everything from carrots to meats."

It was her stepdaughter who first encouraged her to enter the fair competition.

"I didn't have any expectations, since I was so new to this," Perry said. "My stepdaughter really encouraged me to at least try."

Perry attributes much of her success to the support of her family. The recipes were created for them and it was only with their encouragement that they were entered.

"I told her — when I came in with her to enter — that no matter what happens, you're a winner in my book," Perry's husband Charley Bradley said. "I knew she was very talented and am so proud of her for this accomplishment."

Perry's and other creative art winners' awards are being displayed at the main art building for the duration of the fair.

Artists to take to the streets

Staff Report

The Clermont Downtown Partnership, the city of Clermont, Lake Apopka Natural Gas and Creative Therapy are sponsoring the "Got Kidz?" Festival from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. today on Montrose Street in downtown Clermont.

This event features the Sidewalk Chalk Art contest, now in it's eighth year, where people will line the sidewalks and create art on the spot. Participation is free but limited to the first 50 artists, most of whom are preregistered.

Those still interested can check for available spots before the start of the event.

"Got Kidz?" will also showcase children friendly vendors. Other activities include entertainment and festival foods.

While at the event, attendees will get the opportunity to watch art in progress as participating artists will be drawing on site, including this year's featured artist Emily Mason.

According to organizers, Mason has been developing her skills as a pencil and watercolor artist with the help of her mentor Christine Harris.

"Emily's proficiencies and techniques have improved so much over the past year. She is truly a natural talent," Harris said.

Mason will be participating in the Sidewalk Chalk Art contest as well as displaying her work at the event.

Controversial development clears first approval hurdle

STEVE FUSSELL
Special to the Daily Commercial

Fruitland Park commissioners gave Coral Gables developer Jonathan Penner tentative approval Thursday night to develop a 110-unit apartment project on the northwest corner of Spring Lake Road and Poinsettia Avenue.

The vote to amend the city's zoning and comprehensive plan is a first reading. The issue will come before the commission for a public hearing on April 24.

When Penner proposed a 156-unit project on the 14.28-acre site in January, residents near the site packed commission chambers and commissioners voted to deny the proposal. About 20 residents attended Thursday night's meeting, and five spoke against the project.

Commissioner Chris Chesshire agreed with project opponents.

"I don't think we need more apartments," Chesshire said. "We are a community of predominantly single-family homes and I don't see a need for multi-family," Chesshire said.

After a spirited discussion, commissioners agreed to accept Penner's proposal for reconsideration. Once the proposal was on the table, discussion was brief. Commisisoners voted 4-1 to approve the development; Chesshire voted against the project.

Wanted man found hiding under mattress

MILLARD IVES | Staff Writer
millard.ives@dailycommercial.com

A man wanted by the Sumter County Sheriff's Office on charges of failing to appear in court on drug charges was arrested this week when authorities found him hiding in a house underneath a mattress.

Bob Turner IV, 29, of Oxford, was taken into custody Wednesday on arrest warrants for driving with a suspended license and failure to appear in court on charges of the sale of cocaine and possession of the drug with intent to sell and deliver, as well as resisting arrest.

TURNER

He remained in the Sumter County Jail Friday morning in lieu of $82,500 bail.

Sheriff's spokesman Lt. Bobby Caruthers said Turner had been on their most wanted list since February. The importance of catching him increased after they recently received tips that Turner had been walking around neighborhoods displaying a handgun and making threats toward law enforcement.

With the assistance of the Wildwood Police Department and the U.S. Marshals Service, Turner was located on High Street in Wildwood. The sheriff's tactical team surrounded the home and reportedly found Turner lodged between a mattress and box spring.

But Sen. Dwight Bullard, D-Miami, said the bill might cause an undue burden financially on many districts. He said school boards did not request the measure.

Sen. Bill Montford, D-Tallahassee, called it a "bad bill." In part, he said the state Department of Education has done a good job of working through the process of instructional materials.

Montford said he is worried about added costs to school boards because the instructional material process is time-consuming.

"This is a monumental task to undertake this," he said.

Montford also said he is worried about losing continuity throughout the state, with textbooks being chosen in 67 different school systems.

Sen. Rob Bradley, R-Fleming Island, said local officials want control.

"This is one of my favorite bills of the session," he said.

Sen. Geraldine Thompson, D-Orlando, said she thinks the bill "opens the door to censorship." She said local school boards could object to such material as the works of Mark Twain.

Other issues taken up by the Florida legislature include:

■ ABORTION RESTRICTIONS: A bill that would change the exceptions to late term abortion was passed by the House Friday, opening the door to a legal framework that would take into account viability for life, rather than a designated time period, for when the procedure could be performed. The bill (HB 1047) passed with a 70-45 vote. At issue is when viability, defined in the bill as a point at which a fetus can survive outside the womb through standard medical care, can be determined.

■ KILLING OF FETUSES: Killing or injuring a fetus at any stage of development would be a crime under a bill passed by the Florida House on Friday. The House voted 74-42 for the bill that expands a current law, which allows for murder or manslaughter charges if a fetus dies after it has developed to the point where it can survive outside the womb.

■ DRUG SENTENCES LIGHTENED: The Florida House passed a bill increasing the weight threshold for trafficking in oxycodone and hydrocodone in a move to ease what have been called overly harsh sentencing guidelines. The measure (SB360) passed by a vote of 113-2 Friday. It aims to distinguish between those selling drugs and those caught in possession. The bill moves the current threshold of four grams of either drug to seven grams of oxycodone and 14 grams of hydrocodone.

■ SPEED LIMITS: The House Economic Affairs Committee on Friday voted 12-4 to approve a measure (HB 761) that could push speeds on some state highways from 70 mph to 75 mph. The measure, which now heads to the House floor, directs the state Department of Transportation to determine the safe minimum and maximum speed limits on all divided highways that have at least four lanes. A companion (SB 392) in the Senate — where the proposal originated — awaits an appearance on the floor.

■ FIREARMS DURING EMERGENCIES: The Florida House passed a bill that would allow the public to carry concealed firearms while evacuating their home during an emergency. The bill extends carry-and-conceal privileges to those fleeing during a mandatory evacuation declared by the governor or local officials.

Workers tend to a well head during a hydraulic fracturing operation at an Encana Oil & Gas Inc. gas well outside Rifle, in western Colorado.

Geologists link quakes to fracking

JULIE CARR SMYTH
Associated Press

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Geologists in Ohio have for the first time linked earthquakes in a geologic formation deep under the Appalachians to hydraulic fracturing, leading the state to issue new permit conditions Friday in certain areas that are among the nation's strictest.

A state investigation of five small tremors last month in the Youngstown area, in the Appalachian foothills, found the injection of sand and water that accompanies hydraulic fracturing, or fracking, in the Utica Shale may have increased pressure on a small, unknown fault, said State Oil & Gas Chief Rick Simmers. He called the link "probable."

While earlier studies had linked earthquakes in the same region to deep-injection wells used for disposal of fracking wastewater, this marks the first time tremors in the region have been tied directly to fracking, Simmers said. The five seismic events in March couldn't be easily felt by people.

The oil and gas drilling boom targets widely different rock formations around the nation, so the Ohio findings may not have much relevance to other areas other than perhaps influencing public perception of fracking's safety. The types of quakes connected to the industry are generally small and not easily felt, but the idea of human activity causing the earth to shake often doesn't sit well.

The state says the company that set off the Ohio quakes was following rules and appeared to be using common practices. It just got unlucky, Simmers said.

Gerry Baker, associate executive director of the Interstate Oil and Gas Commission, said state regulators across the nation will study the Ohio case for any implications for the drilling industry. A consortium of states has already begun discussions.

Fracking involves pumping huge volumes of water, sand and chemicals underground to split open rocks to allow oil and gas to flow. Improved technology has allowed energy companies to gain access to huge stores of natural gas but has raised widespread concerns that it might lead to groundwater contamination — and, yes, earthquakes.

A U.S. government-funded report released in 2012 found that two worldwide instances of shaking can be attributed to actual extraction of oil and gas, as opposed to wastewater disposal in the ground — a magnitude-2.8 quake in Oklahoma and a magnitude-2.3 quake in England. Both were in 2011.

Later, the Canadian government tied quakes in British Columbia's Horn River Basin between 2009 and 2011 to fracking. Those led to stricter regulations, which news reports indicated had little effect on the pace or volume of drilling.

Obama blocks Iran's envoy to UN

JULIE PACE
AP White House Correspondent

WASHINGTON — In a rare diplomatic rebuke, the United States has blocked Iran's controversial pick for envoy to the United Nations, a move that could stir fresh animosity at a time when Washington and Tehran have been seeking a thaw in relations.

The Obama administration said Friday that the U.S. had informed Iran it would not grant a visa to Hamid Aboutalebi, a member of the group responsible for the 1979 takeover of the U.S. Embassy in Tehran. While U.S. officials had been trying to persuade Iran to simply withdraw Aboutalebi's name, the announcement amounted to an acknowledgement that those efforts had not been successful.

"We've communicated with the Iranians at a number of levels and made clear our position on this — and that includes our position that the selection was not viable," White House spokesman Jay Carney said. "Our position is that we will not be issuing him a visa."

ABOUTALEBI

Aboutalebi is alleged to have participated in a Muslim student group that held 52 Americans hostage for 444 days during the embassy takeover. He has insisted his involvement in the group Muslim Students Following the Imam's Line was limited to translation and negotiation.

Hamid Babaei, a spokesman for the Iranian U.N. Mission, said the decision was not only regrettable but "in contravention of international law, the obligation of the host country and the inherent right of sovereign member-states to designate their representatives to the United Nations."

As host country for the United Nations, the U.S. must provide rights to persons invited to the New York headquarters. However, exceptions can be made when a visa applicant is found to have engaged in spying against the U.S. or poses a threat to American national security.

Denying visas to U.N. ambassadorial nominees or to foreign heads of state who want to attend United Nations events in the U.S. is extremely rare, though there appears to be precedent. According to a paper published by the Yale Law School, the United States rejected several Iranians appointed to the U.N. in the 1980s who had played roles in the embassy hostage crisis or other acts against American citizens.

Former Leesburg official out at Winter Haven

Halifax Media Group

Five months ago, Doug Drymon was Leesburg's assistant city manager. A week ago, he was Winter Haven's assistant city manager. Today, Drymon is unemployed.

Winter Haven City Manager Deric Feacher on Wednesday announced Drymon's departure after only five months in an email to employees. Prior to becoming assistant city manager there in November, Drymon was second in command at Leesburg City Hall.

Feacher's email did not elaborate on why Drymon left or whether he resigned or was fired.

DRYMON

Drymon said it was an "amicable" split decided on mutually in a Tuesday evening meeting he had with Feacher.

"(Feacher) pointed out that it just didn't seem like the community and I were a good match for each other," Drymon said.

"We just felt that we probably needed to go different ways. I said, 'I understand, I have been in your shoes before.' Sometimes that's the way it works out."

Feacher could not be reached for comment.

City spokeswoman Joy Townsend confirmed Drymon is no longer employed by the city and said no resignation letter exists.

Drymon, 57, became assistant city manager in November after the position sat vacant for months following Feacher's promotion in February 2013 from assistant city manager to city manager.

Drymon, who was paid $95,014 per year, had not yet completed his six-month probationary period. All employees are subject to a 6- to 12-month probationary period, Townsend said. An employee can be released without cause during that time.

Pro-Russian groups further rip Ukraine

PETER LEONARD
Associated Press

DONETSK, Ukraine — To reach the People's Republic of Donetsk, you need to pass a few club-wielding young men in masks, wind through a narrow corridor of sand-filled sacks and enter a gray office tower standing in the heart of this eastern Ukrainian city.

The self-styled autonomous territory — really just an 11-story government building and its surroundings — insists it is the true voice of the 4.3 million people living in the Donetsk region. It has become the latest focus of protest in the largely Russian-speaking east since Kremlin-friendly President Viktor Yanukovych was overthrown in February.

The patch of Donetsk real estate where pro-Russia activists have been squatting for nearly a week is a hotbed of resentment against the perceived chauvinist Ukrainian nationalism taking hold among the nation's leadership.

"They hate us. They take it in with their mother's milk," said retiree Nelya Vladimirovna Ivanova, sitting along with hundreds of fellow rally members on the square.

EFREM LUKATSKY / AP

A pro-Russian activist with a Russian flag pass by a barricade at a regional administration building that they had seized earlier in Donetsk, Ukraine on Friday.

In its current form, the Donetsk Republic poses little real threat to the central government's authority, and rallies demanding autonomy have drawn at most a few thousand people.

Nonetheless, Prime Minister Arseniy Yatsenyuk visited Donetsk on Friday with a pledge to give more powers to the regions.

"We must tell people that we know it's tough, but we know how in the future to secure jobs, increase salaries, attract investors, distribute more authority, and what to do so people are content with life," Yatsenyuk said, laying out what he described as a recipe for national unity.

And some Donetsk residents say the Republic's hostility to western Ukraine doesn't represent their views.

Vladlen Nebrat, a youth activist, said that most people in the city see few differences between Russians and Ukrainians, and that younger generations see even less of a difference.

"The problems we see today are problems created by political elites," Nebrat said. "It's the same in Russia and Ukraine. I don't see a problem between the people themselves."

Since Sunday, crowds of hundreds have been standing round the clock in and around barricades of tires, sandbags, bricks and razor wires lining the regional administration headquarters in nervous anticipation of a raid that never arrives. Masked young men carrying bats and truncheons stand guard over the area. Groups huddle around barrel-fires for warmth against an early spring spell of drizzle and cold.

On an improvised stage, orators deliver angry speeches, often to chants of "Referendum!" — demanding a vote for total autonomy that constitutes the only clear policy of the Donetsk Republic, whose leadership is a ragtag band of about dozen political unknowns.

The movement is a pale imitation of the secessionist drive in Crimea that led to Russia's annexation of the peninsula — but the palpable unhappiness here points to deeper national tensions.

Much of the conversation on the square revolves around well-rehearsed grievances over language, history and a sense of economic injustice.

After Yanukoych's downfall, a nationalist party handed opponents of the new authorities a valuable lifeline by pushing measures through parliament to strip the Russian language of its official status in regions where it is widely spoken.

Dreams dashed in fatal college tour bus crash

FENIT NIRAPPIL and MARTHA MENDOZA

ORLAND, Calif. — It was a busload of opportunity: young, low-income, motivated students, destined to become the first in their families to go to college, journeying from the concrete sprawl of Los Angeles to a remote redwood campus 650 miles north.

Those dreams shattered for some Thursday in an explosive freeway collision that left 10 dead — students, chaperones and both drivers — and dozens hospitalized.

Desperate families awaited word about loved ones Friday, while investigators tried to figure out why a southbound FedEx big rig swerved across the grassy divide of California's key artery before sideswiping a car and slamming into the tour bus, which burst into a furious blaze.

The Serrato family, whose identical twin 17-year-old daughters set off on the adventure on separate buses Thursday, had a panicked, sleepless night. Marisol made it to their destination, Humboldt State University, but there was no word from Marisa, who had been aboard the now-gutted bus.

Friday morning when a sheriff's deputy asked for Marisa's dental records, a grim request made to several families, 23-year-old brother Miguel Serrato said his family was "getting a little bit scared." His mother booked a flight north.

Humboldt alumni Michael Myvett, 29, and his fiancee, Mathison Haywood, who were chaperoning, also were killed. Myvett was a therapist at an autism treatment center.

"He just died," his grandmother Debra Loyd said, her voice breaking with emotion in the early afternoon Friday. "They have already confirmed it."

Obama: Right to vote under threat

JIM KUHNHENN
Associated Press

NEW YORK — In an unsparing critique of Republicans, President Barack Obama on Friday accused the GOP of using voting restrictions to keep voters from the polls and of jeopardizing 50 years of expanded ballot box access for millions of black Americans and other minorities.

"The stark, simple truth is this: The right to vote is threatened today in a way that it has not been since the Voting Rights Act became law nearly five decades ago," Obama said in a fiery speech at civil rights activist and television talk host Al Sharpton's National Action Network conference.

Obama waded into the acrid debate over voting access in an election year where control of the Senate, now in the hands of Democrats, is at stake, as is Obama's already limited ability to push his agenda through Congress.

Republicans say the voting measures guard against voter fraud, but Democrats say they erode the landmark 1965 law that helped pave Obama's path in politics.

"Across the country, Republicans have led efforts to pass laws making it harder, not easier, for people to vote," he said, relating anecdotes of voters turned away because they didn't have the right identification or because they needed a passport or birth certificate to register.

"About 60 percent of Americans don't have a passport," he said. "Just because you can't have the money to travel abroad doesn't mean you shouldn't be able to vote here at home."

Obama's speech to a crowd of about 1,600 in a New York hotel ballroom came a day after he marked the 50th anniversary of the Civil Rights Act at the LBJ Library in Austin, Texas, where he praised President Lyndon Johnson's understanding of presidential power and its use to create new opportunities for millions of Americans.

The president pinned efforts to curb access to the ballot box directly on the GOP, declaring that the effort "has not been led by both parties. It's been led by the Republican Party." Mocking the Republicans, he said, "What kind of political platform is that? Why would you make that a part of your agenda, preventing people from voting?"

Ruling could end Japanese whaling

MARI YAMAGUCHI
Associated Press

TOKYO — The international court ruling against Japanese whaling last week may have given the government a convenient political out.

The Antarctic program was nearly bankrupt, but if the government had overhauled it on its own, it would have incurred the wrath of a strong anti-whaling lobby, and could have been criticized for caving in to foreign anti-whaling activists. Now officials can say the court forced their hand.

"It seemed to me they were anxious to lose," said Masayuki Komatsu, a former fisheries official known for his battles at the International Whaling Commission to defend Japanese hunts. He accused Japanese officials of losing "passion and love" for whaling and not fighting hard enough in court.

In a March 31 ruling, the International Court of Justice in The Hague ordered Japan to stop granting permits for its Antarctic whaling program, which allowed an annual cull of about 1,000 whales. The world court, upholding arguments made by Australia, rejected Japan's contention that the program was scientific.

Though top Japanese officials called the ruling regrettable, they announced within hours that Japan would abide by it. A day later, the Fisheries Agency said Japan would skip the next Antarctic hunt.

"We didn't go to court in order to lose," a government official close to the case said on condition of anonymity, because he isn't authorized to speak publicly about the issue. "But it was obvious that the whaling program had to be changed."

In a way, the ruling was an example of "gaiatsu," the external pressure that Japan has traditionally relied on to bring about change when vested interests are strong. It was the arrival of U.S. Commodore Matthew Perry and his warships that forced Japan to end a long period of isolation. More recently, gaiatsu (roughly pronounced gah-ee-aht-soo) has pushed market opening and deregulation of the economy.

Pope Francis waves as he leaves after his weekly general audience in St. Peter's Square at the Vatican.

Pope assumes responsibility

For first time, Francis takes the blame for sex abuse scandals

NICOLE WINFIELD
Associated Press

VATICAN CITY — Pope Francis said Friday he took personal responsibility for the "evil" of priests who raped and molested children, asking forgiveness from victims and saying the church must be even bolder in its efforts to protect the young. It was the first time a pope has taken personal responsibility for the sex crimes of his priests and begged forgiveness.

Francis' off-the-cuff remarks were the latest sign that he has become sensitized to the gravity of the abuse scandal after coming under criticism from victims' advocacy groups for a perceived lack of attention to, and understanding of, the toll it has taken on the church and its members.

The evolution began last month when he named four women and an abuse survivor to a sex abuse advisory panel that the Vatican has suggested will address the critical issue of sanctioning bishops who cover up for pedophiles.

Francis delivered the comments to members of the International Catholic Child Bureau, a French Catholic network of organizations that protects children's rights. Sitting with them in his library Friday, Francis spoke slowly, deliberately and softly in his native Spanish, deviating from his text.

"I feel compelled to take personal responsibility for all the evil that some priests, many — many in number, (although) not in comparison with the totality — to assume personal responsibility and to ask forgiveness for the damage caused by the sexual abuse of the children," he said.

"The church is aware of this damage," he continued. "We don't want to take a step back in dealing with this problem and the sanctions that must be imposed. On the contrary, I think we must be even stronger! You don't play around with the lives of children."

No pope has ever taken personal responsibility for the tens of thousands of children who were molested by priests over decades as bishops moved them from parish to parish rather than reporting them to police. Pope John Paul II denounced priests who abused children, saying there was no place for them in the priesthood. Pope Benedict XVI expressed sorrow and regret to victims, met with them and even wept with them. But neither ever took personal responsibility for the crimes or begged forgiveness as Francis did.

Last month, Francis named the initial members of a commission to advise him on best practices to combat sexual abuse in the church. Half of the eight members are women and one, Marie Collins, was assaulted by a priest as a child. Collins, who became a well-known activist in the fight for victims' justice, had previously called on Benedict to ask personal forgiveness for the scandal and those church leaders who put loyalty to the church ahead of the safety of children.

The Vatican has said Collins and the other members will now draft the statutes of the commission and would look into the legal "duties and responsibilities" of church personnel, a suggestion that they might take up the critical question of disciplining complicit bishops. Church law provides for sanctions if a bishop is negligent in carrying out his duties, but to date no bishop has been disciplined for protecting an abuser.

American describes search for missing plane

NICK PERRY
Associated Press

PERTH, Australia — Every day from the Perth airport and a nearby military base, about a dozen planes from several countries take flight to search for debris from missing Flight 370 — so far without success. The U.S. Defense Department alone committed $7.3 million to the effort in the first month of the search, much of it spent on two U.S. Navy P-8 Poseidon planes that cost $4,000 per hour to fly.

Lt. Cmdr. Adam Schantz is the officer in charge of the 32 air and ground crew manning the surveillance aircraft, which are modified Boeing 737s. This is an edited version of the interview:

Q: What does a typical day involve?

A: The maintenance crew have to come in very early in the morning, well before the sun comes up, to prep the airplane for the day's flight. Our typical mission is about nine hours. We fly anywhere between 900 miles and 1,500 miles to the search zone and spend about five hours out there searching. The air crew are often working 15-hour days and the maintenance crew sometimes even more. So we are putting in really long hours, but doing well, and our crew and maintainers are motivated, and proud to be here. We haven't missed a mission yet.

AP FILE PHOTO

A Royal Australian Air Force P-3 Orion flies past HMAS Success during the search for missing Malaysia Airlines Flight MH370 in Southern Indian Ocean, near Australia.

SCHANTZ

Q: How do you conduct the search?

A: So the P-8 has a very advanced set of sensors, from radar to a series of cameras, both electro-optical and infrared, that allows us to search the ocean in different ways. And, in addition to that, we have our trained observers in the windows, monitoring the ocean with binoculars and just their eyes. It's the needle in the haystack that we are looking for. It's a massive amount of area. I don't think anybody's ever really taken on a search of this much area before to find such a small target.

Q: What are you seeing?

A: It's incredibly monotonous out there searching. That's one of the reasons I'm so proud of our aircrew, and how well they're doing, because it takes a lot of concentration to keep paying attention when hundreds and hundreds of miles of ocean are passing by.

We've found a collection of fishing nets, fishing equipment. It's just garbage.

Q: Is that discouraging?

A: Absolutely not. When we go to search an area, if we don't find anything, then we are able to eliminate that area from any additional searching and move on to the next one. So it gives a good way to be able to concentrate our search assets on new areas.

Q: How low do you fly when the visibility is bad?

A: At times we go down to 200 feet.

Q: Two hundred feet in a 737? Isn't that a bit crazy?

A: Maybe not crazy, but different. I don't know that anybody else has operated 737s in this manner. But it's an excellent airplane, and it handles the mission very well. And it's a standard part of our mission, particularly in the defense role. So we are practiced at it, and it's not an issue for our aircrews to go down that low.

Q: Did you ever think you'd be working alongside, say, crews from China?

A: I did not. But the Chinese are great. It's a very unique opportunity for countries to come together. We're all united in the same goal.

Q: What would it mean to you to find some wreckage from Flight 370?

A: I think, beyond myself, it would mean closure for the families of these 239 victims. For every person who has gone missing on this plane, that's somebody's father, brother, mother, son, daughter, friend or sister. So there's a lot of relationships out there beyond the people who are missing. There's a lot of other people affected by this tragedy.

Medicare's doctor payment problem

The news that a small percentage of the country's physicians collected billions of dollars from Medicare in a single year may or may not be a testament to individual greed; some of the top recipients are under investigation for allegedly bilking the system, while others work long hours delivering costly care. But it is a powerful reminder that the program needs to stop rewarding doctors for the quantity of care they deliver rather than the quality. Happily, there's a bipartisan plan to do just that; unhappily, lawmakers haven't been able to agree on how to cover its cost. If Congress needed any further incentive to settle its differences, the fact that 1,000 doctors raked in $3 billion from Medicare should provide it.

The Obama administration released details Wednesday on $77 billion worth of payments made in 2012 by Medicare Part B, which pays for doctors and other health-care professionals. Part B is financed mainly by the government, so taxpayers have a keen interest in the program's financial integrity. The new data, however, reveal some alarmingly large payouts. For example, more than a dozen physicians each collected more than $10 million from Medicare in 2012, and thousands of specialists in four disciplines — three cancer-related fields and ophthalmology — averaged more than $300,000.

It's risky to leap to conclusions just from the numbers, given that the payments may include reimbursements for expensive drugs that doctors provided or services by multiple members of a team. Yet the concentration of payments — a mere 2 percent of the doctors participating in the program took in almost a quarter of the fees — exemplifies the problem with Medicare's "fee for service" payment system. This system ignores the value and effectiveness of the care provided, paying attention only to how many treatments are rendered. That gives doctors an incentive to provide the most expensive and intensive forms of care, not necessarily the treatments that work best.

Earlier this year, the top Republicans and Democrats on three influential congressional committees came up with a plan that would have encouraged Medicare doctors to switch from fee-for-service to alternative payment plans that reward quality and efficiency. It also would have replaced an ineffective formula for slowing the growth in Part B costs by cutting the fees paid for most doctors' services.

Unfortunately, the plan stalled because of a dispute over how to pay for the measure, and Congress enacted minor Medicare reforms that left the fee-for-service system intact for at least another year. The new disclosures about enormous Medicare payouts should send lawmakers back to work on the bill to steer doctors into payment plans that yield better results for patients — and taxpayers.

Our nation's immigration prejudices

Christine Flowers

MCCLATCHY-TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

Jeb Bush made some very provocative comments about immigration the other day. They were red meat for a conservative base that thinks in broad brushstrokes about foreigners. Actually, they were more like a bullfighter's red cape, or scarlet blood in the water.

Commenting on the wave of illegal bodies present in our country, this brother of one compassionate conservative president and son of another observed: "The way I look at this is someone who comes to our country because they couldn't come legally, they come to our country because their families — the dad who loved their children — was worried that their children didn't have food on the table. ... They broke the law, but it's not a felony. It's an act of love. It's an act of commitment to your family."

Frankly, those observations were a little too Jean Valjean for me. It is a simplification to say that everyone who crosses the border does so to provide a better life for his children (unless you believe that drug traffickers are also loving parents). But on the whole, Bush is absolutely right: The men and women who take a short-cut around the legal process generally do so for the most basic of reasons — desperation.

That doesn't mean we should just throw up our hands and let the floodgates open. Of course there needs to be order and, as the great Charles Krauthammer said, Americans have a right to decide who comes in and out of the country.

But this brings me to another point about the whole immigration debate. There is a mean-spiritedness that infects the discussion and keeps us from arriving at an equitable result.

We don't need the saccharine comments of a presidential hopeful, but neither do we need the vitriol spewed by some of the anti-immigrant groups who equate "the other" with disease, crime and a "brownification" of society.

I think we need to take a step back for a moment and understand the animating principles that define this country and undergird all the great religions.

I think we need to take a step back for a moment and understand the animating principles that define this country and undergird all the great religions. And, then, we need to remember a time when those principles, among them compassion, were horrifically rejected. I hope we can take some philosophical lessons from that tragedy.

Earlier this week, I listened to a radio interview with a man whose grandfather and uncle had been murdered in the Holocaust. The most wrenching part of the story was the fact that they could have been saved had it not been for politics and politicians. In 1939, a group of German Jews attempted to flee the Nazi regime on an ocean liner called the "St. Louis." They sought admission at numerous ports, including the United States and Canada. Fearing the political repercussions, FDR refused to allow the passengers to disembark and, after having the door closed in their faces during a three week "voyage of the damned," the ship returned to Europe. Not surprisingly, the majority of the passengers ended up dying in concentration camps.

We obviously can't analogize the cross-border journey of a Mexican to the desperate flight from Hitler. The comparison is as ridiculous as Bush's comments about loving parents: too gross, too broadly aimed, too discordant and polemical. But it's legitimate to point out the similarity in the way that Americans have come to approach the issue of immigration, one that echoes the "not in my backyard" anxiety of 75 years ago.

Realistically, we cannot open our arms in a universal embrace. Emma Lazarus was a great poet, but she would have failed miserably as a diplomat. In a world of limited resources, we have to do human triage. I spent four hours the other day in front of an immigration judge trying to convince him that the deep scars on my client's face and the shadow in his eyes had earned him a grant of asylum. The judge had the difficult job of deciding whether to believe his story and, even if credible, whether the tales of beatings and threats warranted a refugee's welcome. It's not an easy calculus to make, and I'm not one to second-guess judges or, for that matter, crippled wartime presidents.

Still, it does put things into a better perspective than any of the talking heads on television, the ones who might never in their lives have met a refugee or who think that turnstiles at the border are feasible.

When Bush started talking about the "loving" father, I knew he was firing the opening salvo for 2016. He might be sincere, but his timing leads me to believe that there's a lot more politics in his comments than principle. And that's OK, since even the most revered among us, the ones with our names engraved in marble and on coinage, are capable of selling our souls for a few votes.

But it would still be good for conservatives to soften the sharp edges of their tongues. And it would be good for liberals to remember that it was one of their own who padlocked the Golden Door.

Eustis' Michael Koenig (6) and Jeremy Migliori (21) react to Matthew Lusignan's grand slam after scoring during Friday's game against Mount Dora at Heim Field in Mount Dora.

Eustis tops MDHS

The Eustis High School baseball team has dominated its district in the four years since David Lee returned to the Panthers' dugout.

Eustis entered Friday's Class 5A-District 13 contest against Mount Dora at Heim Field with a 34-1 district record under Lee, including a 4-1 mark in the current campaign.

Matthew Lusignan had two hits and five RBIs, including a double and a grand slam homer to power the Panthers to a 6-2 win against the Hurricanes. Lusignan was the only Eustis player with multiple hits.

The win raised Eustis' overall record to 14-8 and 5-1 in Class 5A-13. Mount Dora fell to 7-9 overall and 1-5 in district play.

Eustis also won the district's regular season title.

Tyler Perry started on the mound for Eustis and picked up the win. He went six innings and allowed both runs, although only one was earned.

Jeremy Migliori pitched the seventh for the Panthers and struck out three.

Migliori also contributed at the plate with a hit in three at bats. Michael Koenig went 1-for-3, as well.

Yellow Jackets outlast Hurricanes in softball thriller

FRANK JOLLEY | Staff Writer

Sometimes a softball looks like a beach ball to hitters.

That must have been the case in Thursday's game between Leesburg and Mount Dora high schools at the Yellow Jackets' softball complex.

In what has to be one of the wildest fast-pitch games played in Lake County in recent memory, Leesburg survived two four-innings and a five-run frame by Mount Dora to win 19-17 in eight innings. Leesburg improved to 6-14 with the win, while Mount Dora dropped to 8-11.

Jacinda Alvarez had the big hit for the Yellow Jackets. The junior blasted a two-run walk off homer to seal the win. Alvarez had two hits and four RBIs in the game. She also scored four runs.

After taking a 3-0 lead in the home half of the first inning, Leesburg fell behind in the second and trailed 13-6 heading into the bottom of the AUGUSTA, Ga. — Bubba Watson likes the way he looks in green. He wants to get that color back in his wardrobe.

Watson surged to the Masters lead with a spree of birdies on the back side Friday, positioning him for a weekend run at his second green jacket in three years.

"I'm trying to get the jacket back," Watson said. "I want that feeling again."

The 2012 champion at Augusta National sparked the best run of the tournament so far when he stuck his tee shot at No. 12 within 3 feet of the cup. He fifth inning.

Mount Dora built its advantage with four runs in the second and five more in the fourth.

In the bottom of the fifth, the Yellow Jackets plated eight runs to take a 14-13 lead, but were unable to hold the lead, giving up the advantage when Mount Dora scored four in the top of the sixth. Leesburg tied the game at 17-all in the bottom of the inning.

Bethany Guild forced extra innings when she stole home for the Yellow Jackets to tie the game.

The two teams combined for 37 hits, including 20 by Leesburg.

Taylorose Long had five hits to lead the Yellow Jackets. Guild and Sarah McKinney, who made a diving catch in her final home game, had four hits apiece.

Katrina Lanier had three hits.

Alvarez and Long scored four runs apiece. McKinney, Lanier, Guild and Taylor Sullivan scored two runs each.

Kailey Stephens earned the win in relief of Lanier.

Leesburg played at Ocala Lake Weir on Friday in both team's regular-season finale, but results of the game were not available at presstime. The Yellow Jackets will play next week in the Class 6A-District 6 tournament at Ocala Forest.

tapped in for the first of five straight birdies that propelled him to a 4-under 68.

Even after making his second bogey of the tournament by missing a short putt at the 18th, Watson walked off with his second straight round in the 60s, a 36-hole score of 7-under 137, and a three-stroke lead.

"It's not science here," Watson said. "It's try to hit the greens, and if you're hitting the greens that means you're obviously hitting your tee shots well. So that's all I'm trying to do, just hit the greens."

Look who's in the mix again, too: 54-year-old Fred Couples, who posted his second straight 71.

This is the fifth straight year the 1992 winner has gone to the weekend in the top 10 — he was leading two years ago — but he's never been able to hang on.

"I can't panic," said Couples, looking to become the oldest major champion in golf history. "You're not going to pick up two or three shots here because you want to. It's not that kind of course. You've got to hang in there, expect a tough shot here and there. It's going to be a tough day tomorrow."

Watson opened Thursday with a 69 and went bogey-free through the first 26 holes, finally stumbling at the ninth. But that bogey was quickly forgotten when he put on a dazzling display of the golf that had the patrons roaring. He took advantage of both par 5s, sandwiched around a curling, 40-foot birdie putt at the 14th that prompted him to throw both arms in the air.

Watson made it five in a row at the par-3 16th, pulling off another magnificent tee shot with the 9-iron, the ball rolling up about 4 feet short of the flag. He became only the fifth player in Masters history to run off nothing but birdies from the 12th to 16th holes.

A year ago, the lefthander finished in a tie for 50th last year as the defending Masters champion, his worst showing in five previous appearances. He likes being two years removed from his championship a whole lot better.

"I was in awe when I was the champion," Watson said. "I didn't know how to handle it the best way, so I didn't play my best golf."

Watson's closest pursuer was Australia's John Senden, who birdied 14 and 15 on his way to a 68 and 140 overall.

Defending champion Adam Scott rallied for a 72 after making the turn at 3 over, keeping him solidly in contention at the midway point with a 141. He was joined by Denmark's Thomas Bjorn, who birdied four of the last five holes for a 68, and Sweden's Jonas Blixt, who managed 71 despite a double-bogey at the 11th.

Five shots back, Couples was joined at 142 by Jimmy Walker, a three-time PGA Tour winner this season who shot 72, and Jim Furyk, whose 68 matched Watson, Senden and Bjorn for the best round of the day. Twenty-year-old Jordan Spieth also was at 2 under as he headed to the 18th hole in the final group of the day.

First-round leader Bill Haas, teeing off on a warm, sunny afternoon with the wind picking up and the greens getting firmer, was still at 4 under approaching the turn. Then came a miserable stretch of holes starting at No. 9: bogey, bogey, double-bogey, bogey, bogey. He staggered to a 78 — 10 shots higher than the day before, knocking him nine shots back.

At least Haas gets to keep playing.

Three-time winner Phil Mickelson missed the Augusta cut for the first time since 1997.

Lefty had a triple-bogey at the 12th, where he knocked three straight shots in bunkers for his second triple of the tournament. Three birdies on the back side gave him a glimmer of hope, but 73 totaled up to 149 — one shot too many.

"It's tough to overcome those big numbers," said Mickelson, who had plenty of big-name company beyond the cut line.

Sergio Garcia, Luke Donald, Ernie Els, Graeme McDowell, Dustin Johnson, Angel Cabrera and Charl Schwartzel were all headed home as well before the weekend.

Former Hawks All-Star Lou Hudson dies at 69

CHARLES ODUM
Associated Press

ATLANTA — Dominique Wilkins hopes young fans take the time to learn about Lou Hudson.

Wilkins says they'll discover "Sweet Lou" was one of the best shooting guards in NBA history.

Hudson, a smooth-shooting star for the Hawks who averaged more than 20 points during 13 NBA seasons, died Friday. He was 69.

He died in Atlanta, where he was hospitalized and listed in grave condition last month after a stroke, the Hawks said.

Hudson was a six-time All-Star while with the Hawks in St. Louis and Atlanta, often playing away from the national spotlight.

"Young people today don't know how good Lou Hudson really was," Wilkins, a Hall of Famer, told The Associated Press. "He was a hell of a player. The guy could score with the best in history. He was a phenomenal basketball player.

"He should be a Hall of Famer and it's amazing to me he's not. He was one of the best (shooting) guards and that's a fact. You go back and look at his career and look at the numbers and see what he did and you understand."

Hudson was the first face of the Hawks franchise in Atlanta. He then passed the torch to Wilkins.

Hudson, who at 6-foot-5 could play guard and forward, averaged 20.2 points for his career. He spent 11 seasons with the Hawks and finished with the Los Angeles Lakers in 1979.

His No. 23 was retired by the Hawks, joining Bob Pettit and Wilkins as the only other Hawks players so honored.

"His jersey is not retired for nothing," Wilkins said. "Only three jerseys are up there, so you know he had to be a heck of a player to have his jersey hanging in that building."

His No. 14 was retired by the University of Minnesota, where he was one of the school's first black players.

"Lou Hudson holds a special place in the Hawks family, in the hearts of our fans and in the history of our club," Hawks co-owner Michael Gearon said. "As a fan growing up with this team, I'm fortunate to say I was able to see almost every game Sweet Lou played as a member of the Hawks.

"He was an integral part of successful Hawks teams for over a decade, and is deservedly recognized with the ultimate symbol of his significance to the franchise with the number 23 hanging inside Philips Arena."

Beginning with the 1969-70 season, Hudson averaged at least 24 points in five straight seasons. In his years with the Hawks, he averaged at least 20 points seven times. He set a career high with his 27.1 points per game in 1972-73.

He scored 57 points against Chicago on Nov. 10, 1969, matching the franchise record also set by Pettit and Wilkins.

Hudson was a first-round pick by St. Louis in 1966 and made the NBA all-rookie team. He missed part of his second season while serving in the Army.

Following the team's move from St. Louis, he scored the first points for the new Atlanta team in 1968. He helped lead the Hawks to the 1970 Western Division championship.

Foreign substances on mound nothing new

NOAH TRISTER
Associated Press

Michael Pineda is only the latest in a long line of pitchers suspected of nefarious conduct on the mound.

After the New York Yankees' right-hander kept Boston's offense in check for six innings Thursday night, postgame talk centered on the dark, seemingly tacky substance that had been on the lower palm of Pineda's pitching hand. The game was never stopped for an umpire to examine Pineda.

Previous hurlers haven't been so lucky. Here are six other noteworthy controversies involving the men of the mound:

PERRY EJECTED

Well after the end of his Hall of Fame career, Gaylord Perry could still joke about his infamous spitball. In 1982, the Seattle star was ejected for allegedly throwing the pitch against the Boston Red Sox. It was the first ejection for Perry, who was subsequently suspended for 10 days.

SANDY SITUATIONS

In 1987, Philadelphia pitcher Kevin Gross was suspended for 10 days after he was caught with sandpaper in his glove. That same year, Minnesota's Joe Niekro also got 10 days for carrying an emery board and sandpaper in his back pocket.

PLAYOFF BAN

Los Angeles Dodgers reliever Jay Howell was suspended for two games during the 1988 NL championship series against the New York Mets after he was found to have pine tar on his glove.

SUSPICIOUS SMUDGE

Early in Game 2 of the 2006 World Series, umpires asked Detroit pitcher Kenny Rogers to clean off his left hand, concerned about a brown smudge on the base of his thumb. Rogers insisted it was just a mix of mud, resin, spit and dirt. Rogers' hand was clean when he came out for the second inning, and he went on to pitch shutout ball in the Tigers' only victory of the series against St. Louis.

Home plate umpire John Flaherty checks Cleveland pitcher Gaylord Perry's cap, at the request of Milwaukee manager Del Crandall, during a game in 1973 in Milwaukee. Well after the end of his Hall of Fame career, Perry could still joke about his infamous spitball, but in 1982, the Seattle star was ejected for allegedly throwing the pitch against Boston.

MANAGERIAL SQUABBLE

Davey Johnson, who managed the Mets in the 1988 NLCS, was leading the Washington Nationals in 2012 when he raised questions about the glove of Tampa Bay reliever Joel Peralta. Umpires found pine tar, Peralta was ejected. The incident led to a testy back-and-forth between Johnson and Rays manager Joe Maddon, who insisted it was "underhanded" of Johnson to use inside information against Peralta, who had previously pitched for the Nationals. Maddon said pine tar use is "common knowledge in the industry" and doesn't help a pitcher that much anyway. Johnson's response: "Read the rulebook."

PLEADING IGNORANCE

Last season, Miami's Alex Sanabia was caught spitting directly onto the ball and said he didn't know that was illegal. His actions were so blatant that the explanation seemed credible. He would pitch only once more for the Marlins before going down with a groin injury.

April 12

1906 — Johnny Bates of Boston became the first modern player to hit a home run in his first major league at bat. Irv Young allowed one hit as Boston beat Brooklyn 2-0.
1912 — The Chicago Cubs' Tinker-Evers-Chance double play combination played its final major league game together.
1955 — In their first game in Kansas City, the transplanted Athletics defeated the Detroit Tigers 6-2 at Municipal Stadium. The standing-room crowd of 32,147 was the largest paid crowd for any event in Kansas City.
1965 — The first National League home run in the Houston Astrodome was hit by Richie Allen of the Philadelphia Phillies off Bob Bruce in a 2-0 victory over the Astros.
1966 — A crowd of 50,671 welcomed the Braves to Atlanta, but Willie Stargell spoiled the occasion with a two-run homer in the 13th inning to give the Pirates a 3-2 victory.
1980 — In an awesome display of power, Cecil Cooper and Don Money each hit grand slams in the second inning of Milwaukee's 18-1 rout of the Boston Red Sox.
1992 — Boston's Matt Young pitched eight no-hit innings at Cleveland but lost 2-1. In the second game, the Indians managed only two hits off Roger Clemens to set a major league record for fewest hits (2) in a doubleheader.
1994 — Scott Cooper hit for the cycle and drove in five runs to lead the Boston Red Sox to a 22-11 rout of the Kansas City Royals.
2003 — The Detroit Tigers won for the first time this season, getting a three-run homer from Shane Halter to beat the White Sox 4-3. The Tigers (1-9), the only team since 1900 to start back-to-back seasons with nine straight losses, started 0-11 last season.
2011 — Dan Haren pitched a one-hitter, allowing only Shin-Soo Choo's clean single in the fourth inning, and the Los Angeles Angels beat Cleveland 2-0. Haren struck out eight and walked two in his third major league shutout. Choo's single to center field came with one out in the fourth.

A year after, Boston and its people heal

DENISE LAVOIE
and PAIGE SUTHERLAND
Associated Press

ELISE AMENDOLA / AP

Boston Marathon bombing victim Marc Fucarile waves a "Boston Strong" flag with his fiancee, Jen Regan, and their son, Gavin, partially obscured, on June 19, 2013, before Game 4 of the Stanley Cup Finals between Boston Bruins and Chicago in Boston.

BOSTON — Every time Roseann Sdoia comes home, she must climb 18 steps — six stairs into the building, another 12 to her apartment. It is an old building in Boston's North End, with doors that are big and heavy, not an easy place for an amputee to live.

When she left the hospital, a month after the Boston marathon bombing, she had a choice: She could find another place to live, one more suitable for someone who wears a prosthetic that replaces most of her right leg. Or, she could stay.

"Early on when all this happened, so many people were telling me to move out of the city and move out of my apartment because of the stairs and I don't have an elevator and parking is not very convenient," she recalls. "But I have been able to get past all of that."

In that, she mirrors Boston itself.

"I have to tell you, honestly, Boston is a better city now than it was before," says Thomas Menino, Boston's former mayor. "People learned how to deal with each other, they had to deal with a tragedy."

Not that it's been easy. Three people were killed at last year's Boston Marathon, and more than 260 were injured, and the legacy of trauma and lost limbs remains — as does the shock of having endured a terrorist attack on Marathon Monday. Nor can Bostonians forget the fear that gripped a city locked down in the midst of a manhunt.

But Boston has been able to get past all of that. Copley Square is no longer littered with impromptu tributes to the dead and injured; they're now on display in an exhibit at the Boston Public Library, where Robert White of Lynn saw meaning in every teddy bear and pair of sneakers: "Every last one of the items says 'Boston Strong' or 'I will return next year.'"

Roseann Sdoia is 46 years old, a vice president of property management for a Boston development company. She is a cheerful woman; she smiles broadly when she arrives at the Spaulding Rehabilitation Hospital in Charlestown for physical therapy.

"It's just my nature," she says. "I'm not a negative person. I'm not a Debbie Downer."

Still, she says, she cries every day.

"What is sinking in is that life has changed," she says, her face awash with tears.

Sdoia is a runner, but she did not take part in the marathon. She was at the finish line on April 15, rooting for friends in the race, when the second bomb went off. Aside from her leg injury, she suffered hearing loss.

"Other than losing the bottom of my right leg, I'm still me," she says. "I haven't changed, I am still the same person I was before."

And yet, so much has changed. She had to take more leave from the job she loved. Winter, and snow, were tough to handle. She's had to tackle daily tasks — showering, vacuuming — differently.

Marc Fucarile, a 35-year-old roofer from Stoneham, also lost his right leg from above the knee; he has shrapnel in his heart, and still could lose his left leg.

"Everything has changed," he says. "How I use the bathroom, how I shower, how I brush my teeth, how I get in and out of bed."

His 6-year-old son, Gavin, does not always understand. "Gavin is like, 'Hey, you want to go out and play?' and I'm like, 'There's a foot of snow. I can't do snow. We're not going out and playing right now, sorry buddy.' It breaks my heart."

In the first three months after the explosions, the One Fund collected nearly $61 million in donations. In the next five months, another $12 million in contributions came in.

This big-heartedness was mirrored by a sort of proud defiance, exemplified by "Boston Strong." The amount of merchandise bearing the slogan was astonishing.

"In the immediate aftermath of the bombings, it became a peaceful mantra that people could repeat and believe in. And if they said it enough, tweeted it enough, hash-tagged it enough, it would actually be true," says Dan Soleau, a brand development manager for Marathon Sports.

Jennifer Lawrence, a social worker at Boston Medical Center, says the emphasis on "Boston Strong" had had some unhappy consequences.

"A lot of it is portraying that people are so resilient and so strong. While that is absolutely true, we are neglecting that people still have hard days," she said.

In the aftermath of the bombings, more than 600 people took advantage of the medical center's mental health services. And while most needed no help after the first few months, she has seen an increase in demand in recent weeks, as the anniversary approached.

Still, she says a "vast majority" of those who came through the hospital's programs intend to attend this year's marathon, either as bystanders or runners.

Nicole Lynch will be there. Her brother, Sean Collier, was the MIT officer who was shot to death, allegedly by the two suspects in the bombings. She will be at the race with Team Collier Strong — a group of 25 friends and family members, including two of her siblings, who will run to raise money for a scholarship fund to put one person a year through law enforcement training.

William Evans will be there, but he has little choice. He has run the marathon 18 times — including last year — but this time he will be there as police commissioner, supervising beefed-up security including more than 3,500 police officers (more than twice last year's force), more security cameras, more bomb-sniffing dogs, and restrictions on the kinds of bags runners and spectators can bring.

"It weighs heavy on my mind, that I want this to go off well," he says. "I don't want anyone hurt. I don't ever want a repeat of the tragedy we saw that day."

Prosecutor: Pistorius story doesn't add up

Oscar Pistorius leaves the high court on Friday in Pretoria, South Africa, Friday. Pistorius is charged with the murder of his girlfriend Reeva Steenkamp, on Valentines Day in 2013.

PRETORIA, South Africa — The prosecutor cross-examining Oscar Pistorius at his murder trial Friday tried to shred his version of events on the night he shot and killed his girlfriend, saying they do not add up and go completely against how people would react in the situation the double-amputee Olympian has described.

Instead, chief prosecutor Gerrie Nel said the "only reasonable explanation" for what happened in the predawn hours of Feb. 14 last year was that Pistorius fatally shot Steenkamp multiple times through a toilet door from around three meters away as they argued.

"She was standing behind the toilet door talking to you when you shot her," Nel put to Pistorius right at the end of the first week of the athlete's testimony.

"That's not true," replied Pistorius, one of numerous denials he issued to accusations that he was a liar through three days of rigorous cross-examination by the dogged prosecutor.

Nel cited the trajectory of the three bullets that hit the model in the hip, arm and head and which showed she was standing behind the door and facing it, and not backing away as she would have been if she thought there was an intruder in the house, Nel said. Steenkamp wasn't scared of anyone "other than you" Nel said to the 27-year-old athlete charged with premeditated murder.

Pistorius claims he shot Steenkamp, 29, by mistake, thinking she was an intruder about to come out the toilet and attack him. Pistorius, once the hero of disabled sport and a multiple Paralympic champion, faces going to prison for 25 years to life if convicted on the premeditated murder charge.

Nel also scrutinized the positioning of items in the bedroom. They also indicated that Pistorius' story was a fabrication, he argued. Nel said a duvet strewn on the floor in the bedroom in police photos shows the pair was awake and arguing just before the shooting and not in bed as Pistorius has claimed. Pistorius says it was one of many items moved by police after the shooting.

Nel led Pistorius through his own account of what happened moments before he shot Steenkamp. Pistorius said he heard a noise in the bathroom and moved down a passageway on his stumps toward the bathroom with his pistol while screaming to his girlfriend to get down from the bed and call the police. Pistorius said he then heard a noise in the toilet that he perceived to be the sound of wood on wood, which he said made him think someone was opening the toilet door to attack him. Then, Pistorius said, he opened fire.

At each stage, Nel argued that the account was improbable, questioning why Pistorius did not establish where Steenkamp was and make sure she was OK, why he would approach the alleged danger zone in the dark if he felt vulnerable on his stumps, why Steenkamp would not respond to him and why an intruder would close himself in a toilet stall.

"If you spoke to Reeva, the two of you could have taken lots of other steps," Nel said, adding that they could have merely left the bedroom.

Pistorius said he wanted to put himself between the bathroom and the bed, where he said he thought Steenkamp was.

Nel noted that throughout Pistorius' version Steenkamp "never uttered a word."

"It's not probable. It's not possible," the prosecutor said, asking why Steenkamp never responded to Pistorius' panicked shouts of an intruder when she was in the cubicle.

"I agree with Mr. Nel she would have been terrified," Pistorius said, "but I don't think she would have shouted out ... In her mind I must have been retreating toward the bathroom." Nel responded that gave Steenkamp even more reason to talk to Pistorius, who was meters away.

Nel earlier argued that Pistorius was also prepared to lie about an incident as far back as five or six years ago — when he claims someone shot at him from another car on a highway — to build a backstory that he had a long-held fear of being attacked.

Pistorius said he saw a "muzzle flash" and heard "a banging noise" as a black Mercedes drove past him in the incident, which he said was in 2008 or 2009. Pistorius said he turned off the highway and went to a restaurant parking lot and called someone to come and pick him up. Nel asked Pistorius who he called and Pistorius replied he couldn't remember.

But it was "such a traumatic incident," the prosecutor said. Nel said Pistorius' failing to remember who he called was because it never happened.

''If I could remember who I phoned I would gladly give you their name," Pistorius said.

LEESBURG

Battling cancer and dying well

RICK REED
Special to the Daily Commercial

BRETT LE BLANC / DAILY COMMERCIAL

Don Baugher poses at his home in Leesburg on April 1.

Some men want to leave their children a living legacy.

Not Don Baugher.

"Dying well. That's become the legacy I want to leave my children and my children's children," said Baugher. "I want to be a good example of how to die well."

Baugher, 76, learned he had lung cancer on Valentine's Day 2013.

It began when he went to his primary care doctor with his wife Marlene for a "little hacky cough." The physician decided he should get a chest X-ray.

The imaging company sent Baugher right back to his doctor and friend, Dr. Frank Pelligino. His news wasn't good.

"Both lungs were full of cancer," Baugher said. "Even at that point there was no apprehension. We looked at each other and said, 'We know that in all things God works for the good of those who love him, Romans 8:28.' We both felt very comfortable letting God be God."

They learned the cancer was incurable so chemotherapy was useless and they decided against it.

"I didn't want my last days to be sick," Baugher said. "Our dependence is on God being the Great Physician. We decided where to put our trust and faith and He's been faithful ever since."

That didn't change when they learned the cancer had metastasized to his brain.

Baugher was given six to eight months to live. They decided on radiology therapy.

"That was October," he said. "God has allowed me to live a little longer."

His legacy quest began with some Bible research shortly after receiving his diagnosis. Baugher knew the church hasn't done a good job of preparing folks for dying. And he didn't think his response to his terminal diagnosis should be somber or sad.

"I came out of that time feeling strongly that the church had lost its way a bit on the subject of dying," he said. "I began looking at the Wesleyan church. They are known for dying well."

There, Baugher found dying members weren't mournful of their imminent departure from earth. Instead, they were hopeful of the spiritual life to follow. Though the Wesleyans didn't use it as an evangelistic tool, that's what it became.

"People wanted to find out about this hope they had," Baugher said. "We are the only ones who should be dying with hope. The Wesleyans knew how to die and their church grew and prospered because they had that hope."

Baugher prayed, "Lord what am I to be doing? The medical community indicates that I have six to eight months before coming home to You. What should I be about?"

God made it quite clear to Baugher his mission was to be a demonstration to family, friends and others who were watching of total trust and dependence on the security one has in Christ, which results in the ability to die well.

So last April, Baugher began studying about heaven and spiritual things to prepare him for dying well. And then he began a log of his thoughts and posted them on Facebook.

His idea was to collect his thoughts for his three children, eight grandchildren and soon to be three great-grandchildren.

"I don't know what to call it," Baugher said. "I just log stuff."

He began writing on April 13, 2013, with discussions on heaven. He listed several reasons for folks unsure why they should want to go to heaven, including: "For many of us, passing into Heaven is passing into the unknown. We have only a vague understanding of the place to which we are moving forever! Now that is intimidating."

His purpose was to illuminate what God reveals to us about our final address.

"Let me assure you that He has not been silent," Baugher wrote. "By the time we finish, you will be looking forward to Heaven — not holding back from it!"

In addition to his log, a local videographer named Stan Severance offered to make a video of Baugher speaking about dying well.

He had no idea how far his quest for dying well would spread.

"I was telling some friends recently I now have my second viewer in South Africa," said Baugher. "The wonderful thing about social media is there is no limit to how far you can go and impact people's lives. I give all that credit to God. I ask Him to tell me what to say and I'll say it."

The video, which has almost 700 hits, turned into a second video, "Is Heaven Real?" and they have plans for another.

The Baughers became members at Southpointe Baptist Fellowship in Leesburg in 2007, and Baugher feels his church has taken seriously the charge for preparing members for their death.

The Baughers have lived around the world as missionaries, with 30 moves in their 51 years of marriage, but he didn't become a believer until he was 40.

His life changed when he and Marlene participated in a Marriage Encounter weekend in St. Louis.

"It was that weekend I came to realize how Christ loved me even though I am black inside, like Marlene loved me," said Baugher. "It was like an electric charge. I came back a renewed person with a renewed marriage. I wanted to know more about God.

I couldn't be the same person. I was born again. That phrase was seldom used in the Lutheran church."

His conversion came one week before Thanksgiving 1977.

Though Baugher was just learning, he was put in position to lead a Bible study in their Lutheran church. It quickly grew to 100 people meeting on a Monday night in a town of 8,000. They moved in 1984 and eventually started a music ministry where they traveled on weekends for seven years.

Finally, after all those moves it was time to retire and the Baughers wound up in Leesburg.

After receiving news that sends most people into desperation, it drove the Baughers to their knees — and a purpose. And they're enjoying the ride.

"The Holy Spirit is like a strong wind, and we need to lean back and trust Him to take us where need to go," Baugher said. "When we do that, it's just a peaceful time. I love it, I love living in God's grace. There still has not been one day of apprehension."

Oswald Chambers reminds us to pray about all things

RICK REED
REFLECTIONS

Last week I wrote about prayer. One of my points was that it's easy to study too much about prayer instead of simply praying.

The day after writing it I found something similar written by Oswald Chambers.

"It sounds good to say that we pray, and we read books on prayer which tell us that prayer is beneficial — that our minds are quieted and our souls are uplifted when we pray," wrote Chambers. "But Isaiah implied in this verse that God is amazed at such thoughts about prayer."

The verse is Isaiah 59:16: "He saw that there was no man, and wondered that there was no one to intercede."

Worship and intercession go hand in hand, wrote Chambers. You can't have one without the other.

"Intercession means raising ourselves up to the point of getting the mind of Christ regarding the person for whom we are praying," added Chambers. "The reason many of us stop praying and become hard toward God is that we only have an emotional interest in prayer."

While we're told to pray about all things, including our wants and needs, we are to pray in accordance with God's will. That should probably rule out getting a 2014 BMW when my 2003 Toyota Avalon is running fine.

Are we worshipping God in our prayers, or reciting speeches about what we're supposed to get?

"This is a sure sign that we are not worshiping," wrote Chambers. "When we lose sight of God, we become hard and dogmatic. We throw our petitions at His throne and dictate to Him what we want Him to do. We don't worship God, nor do we seek to conform our minds to the mind of Christ. And if we are hard toward God, we will become hard toward other people."

Are we hard toward others, or do we lift them up in intercession? It dawned on me recently that I am too hard on others if I'm spending more time in my mind complaining about them rather than praying for them.

It makes me sad when I read letters to the editor that blast people and condemn a pet sin or threaten the fires of hell if people don't succumb to a certain way of thinking.

"Are we living in a holy relationship with God, or have we become hard and dogmatic?" asked Chambers. "Are we worshiping God in a way that will raise us up to where we can take hold of Him, having such intimate contact with Him that we know His mind about the ones for whom we pray?"

Our intimacy with God — or the lack of intimacy — will reflect our prayer lives.

Don't be a person who prays just for personal needs or doesn't pray at all.

"Be a person who worships God and lives in a holy relationship with Him," wrote Chambers. "Get involved in the real work of intercession, remembering that it truly is work — work that demands all your energy, but work which has no hidden pitfalls."

Let us pray, continuously.

Gathering Places for Spiritual Worship

Easter is Special

Is Easter still special when the services are over and the eggs have all been found? Will it be special Monday morning? Jesus Christ dies again for each of us every day of the week. When we feel guilty, He is our Redeemer; He forgives us again and again. Sometimes our weaknesses remind us of just how human we are. It is then we can remember that He rises above our humanity; He gave His life on the Cross to save us from ourselves and our sins. Let His goodness and salvation flow from our hearts on Easter and on every day!

Savers beware: Fees could shrink your 401(k)

JOSH BOAK PAUL WISEMAN
AP Economics WritersAP Economics Writers

WASHINGTON — It's the silent enemy in our retirement accounts: High fees.

And now a new study finds that the typical 401(k) fees — adding up to a modest-sounding 1 percent a year — would erase $70,000 from an average worker's account over a four-decade career compared with lower-cost options. To compensate for the higher fees, someone would have to work an extra three years before retiring.

The study comes from the Center for American Progress, a liberal think tank. Its analysis, backed by industry and government data, suggests that U.S. workers, already struggling to save enough for retirement, are being further held back by fund costs.

"The corrosive effect of high fees in many of these retirement accounts forces many Americans to work years longer than necessary or than planned," the report, being released Friday, concludes.

Most savers have only a vague idea how much they're paying in 401(k) fees or what alternatives exist, though the information is provided in often dense and complex fund statements. High fees seldom lead to high returns. And critics say they hurt ordinary investors — much more so than, say, Wall Street's high-speed trading systems, which benefit pros and have increasingly drawn the eye of regulators.

Consider what would happen to a 25-year-old worker, earning the U.S. median income of $30,500, who puts 5 percent of his or her pay in a 401(k) account and whose employer chips in another 5 percent:

■ If the plan charged 0.25 percent in annual fees, a widely available low-cost option, and the investment return averaged 6.8 percent a year, the account would equal $476,745 when the worker turned 67 (the age he or she could retire with full Social Security benefits).

■ If the plan charged the typical 1 percent, the account would reach only $405,454 — a $71,000 shortfall.

■ If the plan charged 1.3 percent — common for 401 (k) plans at small companies — the account would reach $380,649, a $96,000 shortfall. The worker would have to work four more years to make up the gap. (The analysis assumes the worker's pay rises 3.6 percent a year.)

The higher fees often accompany funds that try to beat market indexes by actively buying and selling securities. Index funds, which track benchmarks such as the Standard & Poor's 500, don't require active management and typically charge lower fees.

With stocks having hit record highs before being clobbered in recent days, many investors have been on edge over the market's ups and downs. But experts say timing the market is nearly impossible. By contrast, investors can increase their returns by limiting their funds' fees.

Most stock funds will match the performance of the entire market over time, so those with the lowest management costs will generate better returns, said Russel Kinnel, director of research for Morningstar.

"Fees are a crucial determinant of how well you do," Kinnel said.

The difference in costs can be dramatic.

Each fund discloses its "expense ratio." This is the cost of operating the fund as a percentage of its assets. It includes things like record-keeping and legal expenses.

For one of its stock index funds, Vanguard lists an expense ratio of 0.05 percent. State Farm lists it at 0.76 percent for a similar fund. The ratio jumps to 1.73 percent for a Nasdaq-based investment managed by ProFunds.

"ProFunds are not typical index mutual funds but are designed for tactical investors who frequently purchase and redeem shares," said ProFunds spokesman Tucker Hewes. "The higher-than-normal expense ratios of these non-typical funds reflect the additional cost and efforts necessary to manage and operate them."

Average fees also tend to vary based on the size of an employer's 401(k) plan. The total management costs for individual companies with plans with more than $1 billion in assets has averaged 0.35 percent a year, according to BrightScope, a firm that rates retirement plans. By contrast, corporate plans with less than $50 million in assets have total fees approaching 1 percent.

Higher management costs do far more to erode a typical American's long-term savings than does the high-speed trading highlighted in Michael Lewis' new book, "Flash Boys."

Major economies express confidence about growth

MARTIN CRUTSINGER and PAUL WISEMAN
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Finance officials of the world's major economies expressed confidence Friday that they can meet an ambitious goal of boosting global growth by $2 trillion over the next five years.

That's despite a variety of threats including rising political tensions over Russia's actions in Ukraine.

Finance ministers and central bank presidents of the leading rich and developing nations issued a joint statement that papered over substantial differences in such areas as central bank interest rate policies and whether to hit Russia with tougher sanctions because of its dealings with Ukraine.

The final Group of 20 communique pledged to keep working on concrete economic reforms that could boost global growth by 2 percent over the next five years. But finance officials concede that the economic reforms needed to achieve that goal will in many cases be politically difficult.

Australian Treasurer Joe Hockey said all the finance ministers realized that hard decisions would have to be made in terms of reforming labor market policies and dealing with budget deficits.

"It is hard but that is the only way we are going to grow the economy," Hockey, who is chairman of the G-20 this year, told reporters at news conference following the group's two days of discussions.

The finance ministers agreed to develop concrete proposals for each of their countries and present those plans at a September meeting in Australia in preparation for a G-20 leaders' summit on Nov. 15-16 in Brisbane that will be attended by President Barack Obama and leaders of the other nations.

The United States was represented in the discussions Friday by Treasury Secretary Jacob Lew and Federal Reserve Chair Janet Yellen.

Lew on Thursday had raised the possibility in a meeting with Russian Finance Minister Anton Siluanov on Thursday that the Obama administration was willing to impose "additional significant sanctions" if Russia escalates the Ukraine situation.

Stocks fall on jitters over earnings, tech sector rout

BERNARD CONDON
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Investors drove the stock market lower for a second straight day Friday as they grew anxious that earnings growth was faltering.

Weaker earnings at JPMorgan Chase dragged bank stocks lower. And big drops in once-soaring tech stocks pushed the Nasdaq composite down for a third week.

"The market has been trying to come back, but each time the selling just picks up," said Quincy Krosby, a market strategist at Prudential. "The buyers are just not stepping in."

So much for buying on the dip.

Stocks fell from the open on news that JPMorgan had missed analysts' earnings estimates. Investors, who were worried that technology shares were overvalued, dumped those for a second day, with some of the biggest gainers of late falling sharply. Facebook fell 1.1 percent, after a 5 percent drop on Thursday.

The first-quarter earnings season has just started, but investors already seem anxious about what lies ahead. Financial analysts expect earnings for companies in the Standard & Poor's 500 index to drop 1.6 percent from a year earlier, according to FactSet, a financial data provider. At the start of the year, they expected a jump of 4.3 percent.

If profits do fall, it would be only the second quarterly drop in three years.

"Earnings are going to come in on the sloppy side," said Peter Cardillo, chief market economist at Rockwell Global Capital. "The market needs to correct," he added, referring to sharp downturn in stocks.

Founding Beacon member will give commencement

Staff Report

This year's commencement speaker for Beacon College will be Patricia Latham, a founding member of the school.

Commencement ceremonies will be at 10 a.m. on May 3 at Lake Receptions in Mount Dora, according to a press release from www.newswise.com.

"We are delighted that Pat Latham will be delivering the keynote address to this year's graduates and to our college community," college President George J. Hagerty said.

Latham is a co-author, with her husband Peter Latham, of eight books on learning disability legal topics. She holds a bachelor's degree from Swarthmore College, and a doctorate from the University of Chicago Law School.

Beacon was the first college in the United States to offer four-year bachelor degree programs exclusively to students with learning disabilities. Beacon was established in 1989 with a mission that focuses on the academic and career success of students who learn differently.

The Market In Review

Today

More soda woes?

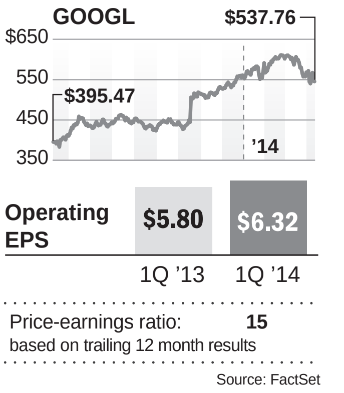
Wall Street predicts Coca-Cola's earnings and revenue fell in the first quarter from a year earlier.

The world's biggest beverage maker, due to report financial results on Tuesday, has been struggling with declining sales of soda in North America. Coca-Cola's sales growth in emerging markets such as India and China also has slowed. To cope, the company has taken steps to boost marketing efforts.

Online ad watch

Google reports first-quarter earnings Wednesday.

Investors will be looking for an update on how the Internet company's average ad rates, a key source of revenue, fared in the quarter. Google's online ad rates have been falling because more people are clicking on smartphones and tablets. Marketers so far have been unwilling to pay as much for ads on mobile devices because they have smaller screens than PCs.



Eye on Toyland

Mattel's latest quarterly earnings should provide insight into the toymaker's efforts to boost sales.

In February, the world's biggest toy company announced plans to buy Mega Bloks owner Mega Brands for about $460 million. The move came after a disappointing holiday season when sales of toys from Mattel's key Barbie and Fisher-Price brands declined. Mattel reports first-quarter financial results on Thursday.

Joy of having a service dog is diminished by public attention

JEANNE PHILLIPS

DEAR ABBY

DEAR ABBY: I use a service dog, and I'm constantly barraged with requests to pet him. Other people who use service dogs warned me this would happen. Although the ADA does not require him to wear a vest, I bought one for him that reads, "Do Not Pet," which he wears in public. They ask me anyway!

They also ask what I use the dog for. Sometimes I'm tempted to say, "First, tell me about your medical history and then I'll tell you mine." I don't mind quietly and discreetly discussing with a store owner what my dog does, but for a stranger to walk up and expect me to share personal information is rude.

As excited as I am about how my dog has expanded my life, I do not want to spend my time answering strangers' questions or hearing about every dog they've ever owned.

Obviously, I'm still learning what it means to live with a service dog. Would you kindly share with your readers proper etiquette with service dogs and their owners? — LIVING LARGER IN WASHINGTON STATE

DEAR LIVING LARGER: I'm happy to. But you must be realistic. If you have a service dog, you must accept that people will be curious. However, what many people fail to understand is that when a service dog is out in public, the animal is WORKING, and should not be distracted from its task — which is ensuring the well-being of the owner.

The basics for interacting with service dogs are:

1. Always speak to the person first. Do not try to distract the dog.

2. Never touch the service dog — or ANY dog, for that matter — without first asking for and receiving permission.

3. Do not offer food to the animal.

4. Do not ask personal questions about the handler's disability or otherwise intrude on his or her privacy.

5. Do not be offended if the handler refuses to chat about the service dog.

DEAR ABBY: My son "John" and daughter-in-law "Bree" recently announced their second pregnancy via email, and asked that we keep the news in the immediate family for now.

I was so happy and excited that I notified my sister. She is my best friend and lives in another state. As it turns out, my sister shared the news with her daughter, who is good friends with Bree. My niece then texted congratulations to her.

At the end of the day, I received a nasty, dramatic phone call from Bree. She was furious that I had revealed her secret. My heart sank. It wasn't my intention to hurt her in any way. I apologized profusely, but now I'm afraid that this may have solidified the wedge between us because our relationship was never very close to begin with.

I realize I was wrong and apologized. What more can I do to make this the joyful occasion it should be? — NOW WHAT? IN NORTH CAROLINA

DEAR NOW WHAT?: Now you pay the penalty for leaking the news, and gracefully accept that you will be relegated to the second tier when it comes to announcements from your son and daughter-in-law. Perhaps you can eventually get back in their good graces by respecting their wishes in the future.

Dear Abby is written by Abigail Van Buren, also known as Jeanne Phillips, and was founded by her mother, Pauline Phillips. Write Dear Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069.

SOUTH

The bidding:

2 ♣ *	Pass	2 NT	Pass
3 ♥	Pass	4 ♥	Pass
5 ♣	Pass	6 ♣	Pass

* strong, artificial

Opening lead — queen of diamonds.

Assume you're in seven hearts and West leads a diamond. When dummy appears, your first reaction might be that the outcome depends entirely on finding the missing spades divided 3-3. You might therefore draw trumps, play the A-K-Q of spades and hope to discard your club loser on dummy's fourth spade.

But you know from experience that the spades are unlikely to split 3-3. In fact, there's only a 36 percent chance of them being evenly divided. So you start looking for another approach that might add to this possibility.

You can increase your chances considerably by playing for a squeeze, and you can do this without relinquishing your chance of a 3-3 spade split. But, to achieve the squeeze, you must time your plays carefully. Here's what you do:

Trump the diamond lead, play a heart to the queen, trump another diamond, play a heart to the king and trump a third diamond. The purpose of the two extra diamond ruffs is to try to saddle one player in this case West — with the burden of guarding against dummy's last diamond.

You then play another trump and cash the A-K-Q of spades, producing this position:

North
♣ K 4

West
♦ J
♣ Q 8 6

East
♠ J
♣ J 10 7

South
♣ A 9 5

Now you play your last trump. West must keep his diamond, so he discards a club, whereupon you discard dummy's diamond. East, who must keep the jack of spades, also discards a club. You then win the last three tricks with the K-A-9 of clubs. That's all there is to it!

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Saturday, April 12, the 102nd day of 2014. There are 263 days left in the year.

Today's Highlights in History:

On April 12, 1954, the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission opened a hearing on whether Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer, scientific director of the Manhattan Project, should have his security clearance reinstated amid questions about his loyalty (it wasn't). Bill Haley and His Comets recorded "Rock Around the Clock" in New York for Decca Records.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Saturday, April 12, 2014:

This year you enter a period where you want to accomplish a lot. You often could be challenged or distracted by those in your daily life. Keep in mind that they enjoy their time with you. If you are single, it is impossible for a relationship to blossom when you are focused on other matters. Come summertime, you might want to become less focused on your goals and a little more aware of what is going on around you. Someone quite special could meander into your life during this period. If you are attached, the two of you need to make fun plans for the summer. You might want go to the beach often or choose a different pastime you both enjoy. VIRGO sometimes irritates you with details.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Your intuition does not match up with what you are seeing. You could go back and forth when deciding which view to follow. A partner will offer several options that could change your perspective, but you still might be uneasy.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Your ingenuity will take you down an interesting path, if you decide to go. A partner or loved one might present a different view — perhaps one that is not as bold as yours. You could be at a standstill because of the disparity between both of your views.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You will want to make a decision regarding a domestic or personal issue. You might realize that the timing is not right for a discussion at this point. More information will be coming forward. How you see a situation could change as a result.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Wherever you go, you could end up in a lengthy conversation. You even might irritate a child or loved one with your socializing. This person will want to have your attention, so make that a high priority.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) You could feel pushed by a money matter. You know your limits, and you understand what needs to happen. Unfortunately, a family member might not see eye to eye with you. A discussion needs to occur about your home and an investment.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You might be more determined than you realize, and that attitude could be pushing others away. Try to loosen up and be more open to others' suggestions. Not everything needs to happen your way. You could be delighted by what someone offers.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) You still could be overreacting to someone you care about. Be aware of what another person needs, and be willing to respond appropriately. Still, you might need to take a personal day far away from the daily grind as soon as you can.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) A loved one is so charming that you might feel inclined to bend to his or her will. Though you might have other plans, you probably should cancel them. Sometimes a person needs to follow his or her heart; you are no different.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) You might feel pressured once more to visit with a family member. Consider what would happen if you were to do what you wanted. You can't keep giving without having some "you" time. Someone will let you know how much he or she cares.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) What might seem like an excellent plan could have its faults. Pull back and look at the pros and cons of having someone from a distance visit you. Make a choice that you feel comfortable with, and it will work out for the best.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) You'll have a chance to really enjoy a close friend. Screen your calls, and make this day just for the two of you. Catch up on news, and enjoy a favorite mutual pastime. This person is very important to you; time together means a lot to both of you.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Be more forthright in sharing what you feel. A friend might feel as if he or she is in control. An offer could take you away from your normal life. Take a lot of time to think through a decision that could have implications.

"Ask Al"

If It Ain't Broke

I have been in the sewing machine and vacuum cleaner business for some 48 years and I have people ask me about when I should change my belt on my vacuum cleaner. Well there is an old adage that says, "If it ain't broke, don't fix it". While that may hold true for a lot of things, it surely doesn't for a vacuum cleaner! What so many people fail to realize is that a vacuum cleaner is made on the assembly line and placed in a carton or box. Then it is stored in a hot warehouse until it is sold, which may be months. Then it is loaded onto a hot tractor-trailer and carried across country in extreme temperatures where it is unloaded into a backroom or deep discount warehouse until it is sold. After all this time and heat, the belt is "melted" onto the motor shaft and brush roller and has stretched to that shape and size.

Well, to say the least, you should change your belt as soon as you get it home and use it for the very first time. And then there are those people that say, "Well my belt ain't broke but my vacuum cleaner is hard to push". If you turn the vacuum cleaner upside down and turn it on and the brush roller turns but then when it is put on the carpet it stops then your belt is stretched, although it ain't broke it needs replacing. It is the brush rollers job to turn so it can pick-up debris and open the carpet fibers to allow the suction of the vacuum cleaner to suck up the dirt.

And lastly, be sure to purchase an extra belt so you can have a spare in case it's the weekend and you have company coming over and the belt breaks with dirty carpet awaiting the guests! And Murphy's Law of vacuum cleaners is...Guess what?? Yep. No Belt to be found. And be sure to put the extra belt around the handle of the vacuum cleaner so the "Drawer Monster" don't eat it!!!! That's my story and I'm sticking to it. Until next week, it's a dirty job!

Victorian garden style lives on

KIM COOK
Associated Press

Those drawn to 19th century style may be pleased to learn that vintage garden decor is a trend this spring and summer.

The look involves florals, weathered wood, wire, period typography, bird motifs and accessories, and other elements with a Victorian vibe, says Tom Mirabile, a trend watcher for Lifetime Brands.

The appeal lies largely in the era's garden-as-haven aesthetic, he says.

"We look at the Victorian age as an era when there was just a lot of time," he said at an industry trends seminar earlier this year at the NY Now trade show.

Conservatories, greenhouses and aviaries were popular in stately Victorian-era homes, but even modest residences might have a little birdcage. Fashionable too were ferns, palms and terrariums.

Pottery Barn's got miniature greenhouses this season made of white-painted distressed pine and glass, perfect terrariums for small plants. A replica of a vintage birdcage is made of wire painted

Do this, plant that: Productivity tips in the garden

growingagreenerworld.com

Every day that I'm not on the road, I look out my office window toward the garden, and walk the property at least once or twice. My mind never stops turning with all the projects and to-dos I see for my landscape. I'm exhausted just thinking about it.

My dream is to someday experience the term coined a few years back — "staycation." The concept applies to the notion of staying home in an environment that is so pleasant, you feel like you're on vacation. In theory, I love the idea. But in reality, it's another story. Fortunately, for the lawn and garden, there are some pretty helpful ideas along with a number of undemanding plants that can get us a few steps closer to a truly relaxing staycation in our own little corner of the world.

TIPS AND TRICKS

These are a few of my favorite tricks for getting a little bit closer to nirvana.

■ SOAKER HOSES: Keeping up with watering can rob many hours of precious free time. An easy way to cut down on this time consuming event is to make sure your plants are getting water right where they need it by using soaker hoses. These porous hoses allow water to seep out slowly and deeply. Roots have time to absorb the moisture and there is less risk of over-watering.

■ AUTOMATIC TIMERS: Simplify watering duties even more by using automatic timers. Use these in conjunction with soaker hoses and drip irrigation systems and put your watering woes on autopilot.

Diagnosing diseases, unripe blueberries and other plant issues

You may never see a ripe blueberry unless you protect the fruit from hungry critters.

Q: I am growing some blueberries, but the fruit never seems to ripen.

A: Blueberries can be grown in Central Florida if you get the cultivars that are adapted to our short, warm winters. Southern highbush cultivars that grow well here include Emerald and Jewel, and more have been recently released.

The main reason you are probably not getting the fruit is that other creatures are getting it first. Birds and squirrels have an uncanny ability to get the fruit just before it gets blue enough for you to pick it. I never got fruit off my bush until I covered it with chicken wire. Once you protect the fruit from critters, you will finally be able to enjoy the fresh-picked blueberries when they are ripe.

Q: I see trees loaded with orange fruit in the landscape now. Is the fruit edible?

A: You are most likely seeing loquats, or Japanese plums, Eriobotrya japonica. Seedling trees are common in yards because they are very attractive and small with large, evergreen leaves. However, if you want large, consistent fruit, you should get one of the many named cultivars.

Loquats, even the small seedlings, can be eaten fresh off the tree or used in pies and jams. The fruit can be eaten peeled or unpeeled, like a peach, and has one to four seeds in the middle. It is a good source of vitamins and minerals and is very easy to grow. Birds like to eat it too.

Q: I see crape myrtles being pruned back to stubs. Is this the proper way to prune them?

A: There is no reason to prune a healthy crape myrtle at all. Crape myrtles come in a range of sizes from 3 to 40 feet tall. Choose the cultivar that will reach the height you want and has the flower color you want, then let it go. Only dead branches and possibly old flower heads need to be removed. Don't be fooled into thinking that these plants require annual pruning.

Q: My date palm has some problems. All the older leaves are turning yellowish with dead tips. Does it have the Texas Phoenix Palm Decline that I have read about?

A: The Texas Phoenix Palm Decline, or TPPD, is a very serious disease. It is similar to Lethal Yellowing that killed all the coconut palms in South Florida. TPPD is caused by a phytoplasma, a bacterium without a cell wall, and is thought to be spread by a small leaf hopper insect. It has killed a lot of date palms in Lakeland, but not many cases have been officially reported in Lake County.

The symptoms of TPPD are premature rapid drop of all fruit, flower death, discoloration of the leaves — beginning with the oldest leaves — and then death of the spear leaf (the youngest leaf). Leaf discoloration can be confused with other problems like nutrient deficiency or Ganoderma butt rot. The root system is also affected and decays, allowing the palm to easily be rocked back and forth in the ground.

Your symptoms sound more like potassium deficiency rather than TPPD, but check for the other symptoms of root rot and spear leaf death. You can do an assay to determine if it is TPPD, but the analysis costs $75 and requires the collection of wood chips from a hole bored in the trunk. There is no cure for TPPD, although antibiotic injections for the life of the palm can prevent it.

TIPS

The timers can be set to come on automatically from several times a day to once a week. Then, whether you leave home for weeks or want more carefree time in the hammock, you won't have to worry about your plants or lawn not getting watered.

■ MULCH: Usually the most dreaded task in any garden is the weeding. One simple solution to cutting down on the amount of weeds your garden will have is to use mulch. A three-inch layer will block the sunlight most weed seeds need to germinate. The added benefit of mulch is that it keeps your soil cooler, cuts down on moisture loss and helps suppress disease. It even looks great and really shows off the plants.

■ A GARDEN MAILBOX: Even the most organized gardeners find themselves running back to the shed or garage for that must-have tool for the job at hand. Placing a mailbox or similar storage box in the garden can eliminate those unnecessary trips back to the tool shed. Fill the mailbox with your most important small tools and you'll always have them close at hand. Consider adding a trowel, plant labels, waterproof pen, twine, scissors, pruners, insect spray and bottled water.

PLANTS TO PLANT

When it comes to high-impact, low-maintenance plants, here are three of my favorites. Just keep in mind, even the least demanding plants deserve our attention every now and then.

■ KNOCK OUT ROSES: This is the un-fussy rose. If you've been intimidated by growing roses in the past or are tired of the work necessary to keep them disease and pest-free, this is the rose for you. Knockout roses are prolific bloomers and are very resistant to black spot and mildew problems typical of so many other roses. Provide full sun and well-drained soil and this rose will reward you with months of carefree beauty.

■ DAYLILIES: They're so easy, you can practically lay a daylily on the ground and watch it grow. Daylilies are beautiful and deer resistant with thousands of varieties in a rainbow of colors. They bloom all summer and return the next year thicker and fuller than before. The only work you'll have to do is to divide them every 3 to 5 years.

■ HOSTAS: If you're looking for a showstopper for the shade garden, hostas are it. From miniature to massive, these plants known for their bold foliage are available in thousands of varieties. Hostas offer many shades of green, from lemon-lime to blue-green and every shade in between.

hunter green; it's tall enough to house an elegant orchid, but would also work as a tabletop accent.

On a grander scale is the retailer's Conservatory bird cage, a nearly 5-foot-long mahogany and wire piece that would fit on a console table or atop a long shelf. While it's dramatic in and of itself, a collection of objects would look amazing inside it. (www.potterybarn.com)

Floral motifs — and roses in particular — were all the rage during the Victorian era. Art and textiles featured illustrated flora and fauna from home and exotic parts of the world.

Bradbury & Bradbury now offers a couple of art wallpapers derived from illustrations by period artists William Morris and Walter Crane. Fenway has an Art Nouveau-style pattern with irises at its heart, while Woodland showcases the artistry of both Morris and Crane — winsome rabbits and long-legged deer cavort across a leafy landscape. (www.bradbury.com)

Designer Voytek Brylowski offers prints of works by Victorian illustrators Mary and Elizabeth Kirby. Parrots, toucans, lilies and hummingbirds are hand-colored, vibrant examples that can be mounted in simple frames and placed near a patio door — or anywhere the gentility and charm of the period might be appreciated.

"By digitally enhancing old images, I feel that I give them new life, and preserve historically significant illustrations and drawings by these famous naturalists," says Brylowski, who is based in Wroclaw, Poland. (www.etsy.com/shop/VictorianWallArt)

Jennifer Stuart, an artist in Tulsa, Oklahoma, has designed a collection of plates depicting damask and floral prints of the 19th century on patio-friendly melamine. (www.zazzle.com)

And Pier 1's Floria collection has a vintage damask pattern in garnet, soft blue and grass-green in a collection of indoor/outdoor rugs and throw pillows. (www.pier1.com)

Cast-iron and wicker furniture and containers were used both indoors and out in the late 19th century, just as today we use rattan chairs in the family room and the garden, or iron plant stands in the kitchen as well as the patio. Restoration Hardware's Hampshire and Bar Harbor all-weather wicker collections include chairs and sofas in restful shades of cream, gray and mocha. (www.restorationhardware.com)

Early visitors to resorts in New York's Adirondack Mountains discovered the eponymous big wooden chair that's withstood hundreds of years of style changes. A good selection in both real wood and Polywood, a recycled plastic resembling wood, is at www.hayneedle.com .

West Elm's collection of soft yet sturdy braided baskets, woven of bankuan grass, evoke French laundry bins. Use them as storage in any room; the natural color makes them versatile. (www.westelm.com)

Turquoise chicken-wire baskets and cloches can be found at www.farmhousewares.com , which also has a vintage-style garden supply shop sign in the form of a hand. Galvanized planter pots in sets of six would make great receptacles for herbs or miniature blooms.

A chicken wire cloche adds vintage flair to a small plant or tabletop display. Those drawn to 19th-century style may be happy to learn that vintage garden decor is a trend for spring and summer.

Ask a designer: Tips for flea-market shoppers

MELISSA RAYWORTH
Associated Press

PHOTOS BY SARAH DORIO / AP

Designer Brian Patrick Flynn furnished this Atlanta loft strictly using vintage seating found at flea markets.

The arrival of spring means that flea markets are reopening for business around the country. Shoppers will hunt for treasures amid acres of used goods. A few will come home with just the right vintage art or quirky piece of furniture to make their home more beautiful.

Jaime Rummerfield, co-founder of Woodson & Rummerfield's House of Design in Los Angeles, sometimes mixes flea-market finds with high-end new furnishings to decorate the homes of her celebrity clients.

"The beauty of flea markets," she says, "is you never know what you will find. There's nothing like being outdoors or in a place off the beaten path rummaging through old treasures."

Los Angeles-based interior designer Brian Patrick Flynn, creator of the FlynnsideOut design blog, also hunts for vintage pieces: "I shop second-hand regardless of my project's budget or client's level of taste," he says. "Vintage and thrift is the best way to add one-of-a-kind flair to a space without insanely high cost."

There is luck involved, of course. But skill also plays a role. As you browse crowded tables of used things this spring, how can you find the treasures that will give your home an infusion of style while avoiding decorating disasters?

Here, Flynn, Rummerfield and another interior designer who shops for vintage decor — Lee Kleinhelter of the Atlanta-based design firm and retail store Pieces — tell how they do it.

Shoppers will hunt for treasures amid acres of used goods. A few will come home with just the right vintage art or quirky piece of furniture to make their home more beautiful.

WHEN TO GO

Winter and early spring are perfect for flea-market shopping, says Flynn.

"Since 'thrifting' and 'antiquing' are often associated with gorgeous weather and weekend shenanigans, many people shy away from hunting for their vintage finds when it's cold or gloomy," he notes, so go now and go early.

"I usually show up just as the flea market opens to ensure I see every new item as it's put out on display," he says. "When you wait until the end of a flea market's run to check out its stuff, you're likely to find mostly leftovers, things priced too highly which others passed over, or things that are just way too taste-specific for most people to make offers on."

TIME TRAVEL

Rummerfield occasionally finds signed artwork and ceramics by noteworthy artists at flea markets and antique malls.

"It is amazing to see what people cast away," she says. "I personally hunt for Sasha Brastoff ceramics because of his unique California heritage as a set decorator and artist." She has also found vintage Billy Haines chairs and Gio Ponti lighting at flea markets.

So read up on the designers and artists from your favorite periods, and then hunt for their work or impressive knockoffs.

A single flea market might offer goods from every decade of the 20th century. Can you put a lamp from the 1970s on a table from 1950? Yes, if the shapes and colors work well together, Kleinhelter says.

If your home has contemporary decor, Rummerfield says it can be powerful to add one statement piece — a side table, say, or a light fixture — from a previous era.

But "a little bit goes a long way. Use vintage in moderation with contemporary spaces," Rummerfield says. "It will highlight the uniqueness of the vintage item. You don't necessarily want to live in a time capsule."

FIXER-UPPERS

You may assume that old upholstered furniture should be avoided, especially if the fabric looks dirty or damaged. But these designers say it's actually a great thing to hunt for: "Hands down, upholstery is the best deal to walk away with at flea markets. Just make sure you train your eye to pay no attention to the existing fabrics," Flynn says. "Zero in on the lines of the frames instead."

Kleinhelter agrees: "I usually gravitate toward the bones and frames of vintage pieces, and I make them my own by adding fun fabric or lacquering the base."

The same goes for lighting. Buy it if you love it, but get the wiring updated by a professional. Flynn usually estimates an extra $50 to $75 per fixture for updating the wiring, so keep that cost in mind as you bargain.

MIX AND MATCH

Be on the lookout for pieces you can use together. "You don't need multiples of the same chair or sofa to make a room work," Flynn says. "Stick with those which have similar scale and proportion, then recover them in the same fabric."

Once you get home, use flea market finds sparingly, Flynn says, mixing them in with the pieces you already own: "A few big pieces mixed with some smaller ones added to your existing stuff can instantly take an unfinished space and make it feel way more finished and remarkably personal."

Caution: Wisteria are known for invading and running wild

MAUREEN GILMER
McClatchy-Tribune News Service

In early spring a massive wisteria in California is so large it's considered among the great horticultural wonders of the world. This single vine that now shades an acre of ground in Sierra Madre was planted from a one gallon sized seedling a century ago. Today the Guinness Book of World Records lists it as the largest flowering plant in the world.

This California plant is one of the exotic Asian species, but there also is a lovely native American species, Wisteria frutescens, from the Southeastern states. Problems begin when exotic wisteria escapes to naturalize in wild lands. It's causing serious problems in the Southeast because they share the same preferences as our native species. Escaped Asian wisterias are listed as potentially invasive in 19 eastern states, primarily those in the southeast where abundant summer rain keeps every seedling growing vigorously all season long.

Though we all love wisteria, think twice before planting because exotic wisteria have escaped to infest valuable wild lands which support old growth forests and protected native species. When vines escape, they can cause unique damage to native plant communities and the wildlife they support.

Sometimes invasive plants actually evolve once they're naturalized in wild lands, a fact which can turn a moderate problem to a severe one over time. It's because all plants are programmed to adapt to changing climate and conditions through natural selection. One example is Japanese honeysuckle (Lonicera japonica), which has invaded the Midwestern woodlands. It reproduces by a prodigious crop of berries that travel long distances with the birds and other wildlife that consume them.

In the past, colder winters have limited this honeysuckle from naturalizing further north. Today the sheer quantity of seed produced has resulted in rare individuals with greater cold resistance. Gradually they are moving into our most important forests.

Wisteria gone wild involve two exotic species, the Japanese (Wisteria floribunda) and Chinese species (Wistera sinensis). In the southeast, species have cross pollinated, which results in naturally occurring hybrids that exhibit new genetic characteristics. If that characteristic allows offspring to survive on less rainfall, exotic wisteria can move further west into arid regions of Texas and beyond.

Wisteria runners can reach 60 feet or more in length, which easily climb into shrubs and treetops. When vine cloaks the entire canopy of a tree, it shades out the foliage to interfere with photosynthesis crucial to plant life. Wisteria becomes so large it can destroy centuries old trees, often great oaks, tulip poplar, beach, pine and elm. The sheer weight of large vines is enough to pull down old growth trees after periods of heavy rain or high winds.

MAUREEN GILMER / MCT

Wisteria grown on the porches of farm houses all over America became the genesis of plants that escaped into the wild.

Wisteria is well known for spiraling around an arbor or porch post. When they twine around a tree trunk, the pressure eventually cuts through the host tree bark to girdle and kill it. Then after the tree falls, it leaves a gap in the forest canopy. This exposes thousands of wisteria seeds to sun, which accumulated over years beneath the parent plant. They sprout to become a thicket of young vines impenetrable to both humans and wildlife.

There's another way that wisteria can reproduce to further its domain. Runners that contact earth strike roots at each leaf node. This is a process called layering, used in propagation of vines. A single wisteria gone wild can use this method to dominate several acres of ground.

Regular soil testing helps keep plants healthy

LEE REICH
Associated Press

If plants could squeal like hungry pigs, we gardeners would pay more attention to their fertilizer needs.

But plants do tell us when they are hungry — with poor or distorted growth and with leaf discolorations. Why wait for your plants to become so desperate? Test your soil every few years.

Testing can be done by you or by a private or state laboratory, and there are options in what to test for. At the least, test the acidity (pH), because if it is unsuitable, plants cannot absorb certain nutrients, even if those nutrients are present.

Most plants like a slightly acidic soil, with a pH about 6.5. A standard test checks levels of the so-called macronutrients — phosphorus, potassium, calcium, magnesium and sulfur. A complete checkup would also include testing for micronutrients, such as iron, manganese and zinc, which are essential but required in only minute quantities.

LEE REICH / AP

A yellowing young leaf, though its veins remain green, indicates that this plant is hungry for iron.

SAMPLING IS MOST IMPORTANT

The accuracy of any soil test depends on how you take the sample. In even a modest-size garden of 100 square feet, one cup of soil — the amount used for the test — represents only 0.001 percent of the top 6 inches of soil, so that sample must be as representative as possible of the whole area to be tested.

The test area should be relatively uniform. Areas devoted to very different kinds of plants — vegetables versus lawn, for example — require separate samples. Vegetable and flower gardens can be sampled together.

Subdivide the area where obvious differences in topography or soil exist, and stay away from walls, sites of old compost piles, etc. Even out small differences over even relatively uniform soil by taking a half-dozen samples from random spots. Sample the top 6 inches of vegetable and flower beds, and the top 2 inches of lawns, first removing any surface debris such as compost, weeds or sod.

Whoa — don't use that first trowelful of soil. It's cone-shaped, with a greater proportion of soil from the surface layers than from lower down. Take a slice, uniformly thick from top to bottom, from along the edge of that hole you just made. Alternatively, use a soil sampling tube, home-made or bought, to get a uniform sample.

Combine all your samples from a test area into a clean plastic bucket. Thoroughly mix the composited soil to average out differences between samples, crumbling it and discarding stones, sticks, insects and other debris as you mix. Spread the soil out on a clean baking pan to air dry for a day, then remove about a cup for testing.

RESULTS COME IN

If you are sending your sample out for testing, follow any instructions supplied by the laboratory about packing the soil. For testing at home, use a portion of that 1 cup subsample you got from the combined samples. Home testing kits involve mixing small amounts of your soil sample with various solutions and noting color changes, which you compare against standards — all detailed in the included instructions.

If you are testing more than one area, label samples from each area and make a note to yourself of the locations. A testing laboratory may also want other information, such as past fertilization history, as well as what you intend to grow. Indicate whether you wish any special tests, such as for micronutrients or toxic elements (such as lead) in the soil.

Your completed soil test will give you information about your soil's organic matter, texture (clay, sand, etc.), acidity and levels of specific nutrients, along with a recommendation for fertilizer and lime. Fertilizer recommendations are based on what is in the soil and what kinds of plants you intend to grow. Follow fertilizer recommendations closely, because too much can be as harmful as too little, causing nutrient imbalances, even death, of plants.

Keep in mind that a soil test determines fertility and acidity, but does not address such problems as waterlogging, pests or insufficient sunlight. An observant eye over coming months is a necessary adjunct to soil testing. There's truth in the old saying that the best fertilizer is the gardener's shadow.
