Biking for Guinness World Record in bandana tying

Bandanas are the fashion accessories that help bikers achieve that rugged edge.

But this morning, bikers and anyone else so inclined will be wearing at least 2,500 bandanas to show off their gentler side as Leesburg Bikefest officials try to set a world record for the “longest chain of bandanas.”

The linked bandanas will be made possible by a $10 donation, which will allow buyers to purchase two officially designated black bandanas — one of which can be used to try for the record, and one to help them remember the event. The black bandanas will be sold until 9:30 a.m. today, when the attempt to break the record will begin at Towne Square — nestled in the heart of Bikefest in front of City Hall.

Proceeds will benefit the Folds of Honor Foundation, which supports the spouses, children and dependents of soldiers who have been killed or disabled.

The Full Throttle Saloon is open for business during Bikefest weekend.

“So many bikers wear bandanas, so we thought it would be the perfect record to try for,” said Rachel O’Ryan, who works in event marketing.

O’Ryan said they hope to have at least 2,500 bandanas to break the current record, which was set in 2011 by the Hiratsuka Coming of Age Day Ceremony Committee in Japan, using 2,450 bandanas that stretched about 4,500 feet.

And in order to count for the Guinness Book of World Records, the bandanas must be tied to each other, with no strings or any other devices helping to hold them together.

Joe Shipes, executive vice president of the Leesburg Partnership, which sponsors Bikefest, said he is optimistic the record will be broken. An online effort to sell the black bandanas, embroidered with “Leesburg Bikefest,” began well before bikers began rolling into Leesburg.

“We basically are already there,” Shipes said.

Kim Waters, one of many people who snatched up bandanas, was wearing one Saturday as a top.

“We all love our freedom and want to support the U.S. military,” said Waters, shortly after showing off her tattoos in a Bikefest contest on Saturday.

City prepares for possibility of medical marijuana

AUSTIN FULLER | Staff Writer
austin.fuller@dailycommercial.com

Preparing for the possibility that Florida voters pass a constitutional amendment this November legalizing the dispensing of medical marijuana, the city of Mount Dora is working on an ordinance regulating it in the city, according to the city’s planning and development director.

The current draft of the ordinance would prohibit the production of medical marijuana in the city as an agricultural product and limit the dispensing of medical marijuana to the city’s most intense industrial zoning district, the WP-2 Workplace zoning district, according to a Mount Dora city council agenda.

“We take a pretty hard line on agricultural production in the city anyway. So, we’re just adding this to the list,” Mount Dora planning and development director Mark Reggentin said.

Reggentin said the heaviest uses in the zoning district where medical marijuana would be allowed would be manufacturing type uses.

The council will have a first reading of the ordinance on May 6, Reggentin said.

Reggentin said the state legislature is working

Sanctions loom as observers held in eastern Ukraine

PETER LEONARD
Associated Press

SLOVYANSK, Ukraine — As Western governments vowed to impose more sanctions against Russia and its supporters in eastern Ukraine, a group of foreign military observers remained in captivity Saturday accused of being NATO spies by a pro-Russian insurgency.

The German-led, eight-member team was traveling under the auspices of the Organization of Security and Cooperation in Europe when they were detained Friday.

Vyacheslav Ponomarev, the self-proclaimed “people’s mayor” of Slovyansk, described the detained observers as “captives” and said that they were officers from NATO member states.

“As we found maps on them containing information about the location of our checkpoints, we get the impression that they are officers carrying out a certain spying mission,” Ponomarev

In Asia, Obama carefully calibrates his China message

JULIE PACE

AP White House Correspondent

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia — President Barack Obama is hopscotching through China's neighborhood with a carefully calibrated message for Beijing, trying both to counter and court.

During visits to U.S. allies, Obama has signaled that American military power can blunt Chinese aggression in the Asia-Pacific region, even as he urges Beijing to use its growing clout to help resolve international disputes with Russia and North Korea.

The dual tracks underscore Beijing's outsized importance to Obama's four-country swing through Asia, even though China is absent from his itinerary.

The president opened a long-awaited visit to Maaysia on Saturday, following stops in Japan and South Korea, and ahead of a visit to the Philippines.

Obama's trip comes at a tense time for the region, where China's aggressive stance in territorial disputes has its smaller neighbors on edge.

There also are continued questions about the White House's commitment to a greater U.S. focus on Asia. In an affirmation, Obama is expected to sign a security agreement with the Philippines clearing the way for an increased American troop presence there.

In Tokyo, Obama asserted that a treaty obligating the U.S. to defend Japan would apply if Beijing makes a move on a string of islands in the East China Sea that Japan administers but China also claims.

Yet at times, the president has tempered his tough talk in an attempt to avoid antagonizing Beijing.

To the chagrin of the Japanese, Obama said the U.S. would not pick sides in the sovereignty claims at the heart of the region's territorial disputes. He repeatedly declared that the U.S. is not asking Asian allies to choose between a relationship with Washington and Beijing.

"I think there's enormous opportunities for trade, development, working on common issues like climate change with China," Obama said.

the event. Representatives of the organization come at a price of $7,500, O'Ryan said.

To help make the record official, officials will use video, photos and media stories to help support the validity of any claim and community leaders will serve as official witnesses — including Leesburg City Manager Al Minner and Daily Commercial publisher Steve Skaggs, as well as an independent surveyor.

Dave Dierinzo, vice president of the Folds of Honor Foundation, applauded the effort.

"It's for a good cause," said Dierinzo, standing at his organization's booth on Saturday.

Of course, bandanas aren't the only biker attire being sold at this year's 18th annual Bikefest, which officially kicked off Friday.

A cluster of thousands of bikes roared throughout downtown Leesburg as onlookers were treated to motorcycle stunting, live music, Texas cheeseburgers, lamb and chicken gyros, egg rolls, rib-eye steak sandwiches and a smorgasbord of other food and drinks.

More than 250 vendors are on hand this year for Bikefest, with many selling the fashions and motorcycle accessories that have become a hallmark of the event.

One booth is selling motorcycle masks designed as animals, skulls, outlaws and other facial takes.

"It's hot, but it looks so cool," said Terri Ann Stanback, a Jacksonville resident, looking at a mask with a smile covered in pink lipstick.

Shipes said the nice weather this year helped to attract a record number of patrons in an event that was expected earlier to welcome more than 300,000 bikers and music fans to the free three-day weekend festival.

Bikefest also gives a number of bikers the chance to show off their motorcycles. Andre Martinez and his wife Maribel, of Davenport, showed off their white Suzuki Hayabusa with its $250 chrome handlebars and other matching accessories that had onlookers snapping a barrage of photos.

"It turns heads," Andre Martinez said.

A 3rd Street mobile set-up of Full Throttle Saloon, the subject of a popular truTV reality show, sold its famous S'loonshine and Jesse James America's Outlaw Bourbon. Michael Ballard, who owns the Full Throttle Saloon in Sturgis, S.D., said they have set up at a number of bike festivals across the country. He said their show is a hit with the blue collar workers.

"This allows people to experience our saloon without having to go all the way to Sturgis," he said.

Other activities include the "World Famous Frisbee Dogs," a bikini contest featuring women from Hooters, a Hot Body contest for the men, a poker run and more than 80 concert performances.

Leesburg Bikefest will conclude today at 3:30 p.m. with a performance by platinum recording artist Uncle Kracker.

assuming the constitutional amendment passes and depending on how the state legislature acts.

"Philosophically, what we're trying to do is get out in front of it... what we're doing is just protecting our right to regulate it," Reggentin said. "The city council hasn't actually said it's a good thing or it's a bad thing. Ultimately, communities may want to embrace the production and distribution of medical marijuana as an industry."

He added that since the city is taking a "conservative approach, it allows us to back off that if we want to a little bit and react."

Morgan Fox, the communications manager with Marijuana Policy Project, said it's good that the initiative is being taken to develop regulations, but also that it might be early to do so as the law has not yet passed and state regulations are not yet in place.

"It's good that they're taking the lead on this," Fox said. "We've seen in places like California where local and state officials were slow to try to regulate the industry. They ended up not really liking what came out of that and when you're able to set up clear and concise regulations you're much better able to enforce best practices in the industry."

Fox added the regulations should not go so far as to prevent dispensing medical marijuana in the city.

"As long as people are able to have access to it and... the dispensaries aren't zoned into places where it's unsafe for patients to travel to, I really think that that's a matter for local discretion," Fox said.

Fox said the Marijuana Policy Project is the nation's largest marijuana policy reform organization and concentrates on state and federal lobbying. He said, however, they are not directly involved in the Florida initiative.

The organization's vision statement says that, "MPP and MPP Foundation envision a nation where marijuana is legally regulated similarly to alcohol, marijuana education is honest and realistic, and treatment for problem marijuana users is non-coercive and geared toward reducing harm."

said, adding they could be released in exchange for jailed pro-Russian activists.

Outside Slovyansk, a city about 90 miles west of Russia, Ukraine government forces continued operations to form a security cordon as it attempts to quell unrest threatening to derail the planned May 25 presidential election.

The U.S. and other nations in the Group of Seven said in a joint statement released Friday night by the White House that they plan to impose additional economic sanctions on Russia in response to its actions in Ukraine. The West has accused Russia of using covert forces to encourage unrest in Ukraine and says Moscow has done nothing to pressure pro-Russian militias to free police stations and government buildings in at least 10 cities across the region.

Condemning Russia's earlier annexation of Ukraine's Crimea Peninsula, the G-7 said: "We will now follow through on the full legal and practical consequences of this illegal annexation, including but not limited to the economic, trade and financial areas."

on creating legislature to regulate medical marijuana and the city wants to have laws in place ahead of time.

"The problem is we don't know what the state's (going to) do," Reggentin said. "So what we'd like to do is sort of control our own destiny, because a lot of times when the state legislature writes laws, they put provisions in it that prohibit cities and counties from doing any regulation different than the statute and many times, if we have regulations on the books they will essentially grandfather those in."

Ceremony set for volleyball complex

Staff report

The Florida Region of USA Volleyball in Eustis will hold a groundbreaking ceremony at 11 a.m. Wednesday at the Hickory Point Beach sand volleyball complex in Tavares.

Organizations taking part will include the Lake County Board of Commissioners, Lake County Water Authority, Central Florida Sports Commission, Lake County Economic Development & Tourism, Mission Inn, Lake-Sumter State College, Mount Dora Community Trust and the Florida Region of USA Volleyball.

"This unique partnership between Lake County, Lake County Water Authority and our non-profit corporation demonstrates how great things can happen when organizations come together with a common goal," Steve Bishop, executive director for the Florida Region of USA Volleyball, said in a press release. "The new sand volleyball complex will bring many volleyball enthusiasts to Lake County in the coming years as we focus on hosting events for amateurs and professionals of all ages. This is truly a win-win for Lake County and for the sport of volleyball."

Hickory Point Beach will be a 20-court sand volleyball complex located on Lake Harris at the Hickory Point Recreational Complex in Tavares. It is set to open over the July 4th weekend.

"Lake County is proud to be at the forefront of one of the fastest growing sports in the world," said Robert Chandler, Lake County Economic Development & Tourism director. ## New local production to focus on schools

Staff report

Lake County Schools and Lakefront TV unveiled a new program this weekend featuring news about local students, activities and school programs.

"Inside Lake Schools" will feature school students and faculty reporting information from around the county's public schools. The show appeared on Lakefront TV at 9 a.m. Saturday, and will air again at 4:30 p.m. today and 4 p.m. Wednesday.

"Each new episode will feature a different student as guest host," Robert Sargent, spokesman for the city of Leesburg, said in a press release. "Lake Minneola High School student Kristyn Evens hosts the first show with several reports, including results from the county's STEM Bowl competition and finalists for the district's rookie teacher of the year recognition."

Chief Academic Officer David Christiansen, who joined Lake Schools in January, provides an extensive interview into improvements for Lake's high schools, Sargent noted. One proposal for a seven-period class schedule will provide more instructional time for students while saving the district $4.6 million in operation costs.

Lakefront TV, the government-access cable channel operated by the city of Leesburg, appears daily on Comcast channel 22, Brighthouse channel 199 and Florida Cable Channel 4. The channel also streams live on the Internet at www.lakefronttv.com.

Does GOP foster anti-Muslim sentiment?

Halifax Media Group

A Florida Islamic group is accusing some Republican Party lawmakers and local party organizations of fostering anti-Muslim sentiment.

HAYES

The Council on American-Islamic Relations, or CAIR, sent letters to almost every Republican Club or party extension in the state, asking the groups to stop bringing speakers who espouse anti-Islamic views.

Florida Islamic group says some lawmakers do

The letter said it represented the interests of more than 150,000 registered Florida Muslim voters.

Hassan Shibly, executive director for CAIR, based in Tampa, said such speakers not only inflame anti-Islam tensions but have also led to discriminatory legislation: notably Senate Bill 864, sponsored by Sen. Alan Hayes, R-Umatilla, which allows school districts to select textbooks instead of adhering to the statewide curriculum.

Shibly said the textbook debate came about after a parent in Volusia County became uncomfortable with the number of pages in a history textbook that described Islam and organized a protest to persuade the school district to stop using the book. The Volusia School District noted that there are many more references to Christianity in the textbook than there are to Islam.

Shibly said the letters were only sent to Republican lawmakers and groups because Republicans drafted and support these two bills and because no other party has invited anti-Islam speakers to give presentations.

"Our office has documented a pattern of local GOP organizations inviting extremist anti-Muslim speakers who promote fear and hatred of the entire Muslim faith and community, often under the pretense of targeting 'radicals,'" Shibly wrote in the letter.

at the Florida Capitol, which included employees of the DOH in Lake County and the BCC, Elisha Pappacoda, a county public information officer, said in a press release.

One program that received recognition is Lake's on-line septic system permitting initiative, the only one of its kind in the state. The county's Growth Management Department web page at www.lakecountyfl.gov/departments/growth\_management/building\_services was created to help streamline the permitting process by assigning a Lake County planner to help residents file their permits with the state.

"Allowing the permitting process to transition online in its entirety for our residents and businesses was a crucial step in our economic development efforts," said Commissioner Sean Parks.

"The staff from the BCC and the Health Department worked hand-in-hand to make the online permitting process work smoothly, and we have received several calls from other counties around the state inquiring as to how we made it work between the two agencies."

The Lake County honorees were Amye King, Elias Christ, Diane Fox, Mike Cates, Anita Greiner, Erikk Ross, Carmen Carroll and Skip Nemecek for their work on the septic system and online permitting initiative.

The 26th annual awards honored 432 people and teams of state employees for creating and implementing innovative solutions and productivity improvements in cost savings, cost avoidances, and increased revenue for state government. Of the 432 award winners, 195 will receive cash or plaques during the regional awards ceremonies this summer.

SpaceX CEO signals his favor for Texas launch pad site

Associated Press

BROWNSVILLE, Texas — SpaceX founder and chief executive Elon Musk has signaled his company's intent to put its much-sought launch pad project on a beach near Brownsville.

The signs came Friday in final comments Musk gave at an unrelated news conference in Washington, D.C. SpaceX is "developing a launch pad on the south coast of Texas, near Brownsville. We're waiting on the final environmental approvals for that. We expect those soon, and we'll probably have that site active in a couple of years," said Musk, who also co-founded PayPal and Tesla Motors in addition to the California-based private rocket maker.

A final environmental impact assessment is pending from the Federal Aviation Administration.

Lower Rio Grande Valley promoters are assuming nothing regarding the region's prospects for becoming a space base.

"There is no spaceport project in Brownsville — yet," Gilberto Salinas, executive vice president of the Brownsville Economic Development Council, told the Houston Chronicle.

However, "I think it is all looking very, very positive," Cameron County Judge Carlos Cascos told The Brownsville Herald. "If he (Musk) is saying that, all that is left now is the results of the EIS (environmental impact statement). And I think what he is trying to say is if this comes out in a positive light, then they are going to come to South Texas."

will greatly improve the county's sports infrastructure and positively impact our economy for years to come."

On April 8, The Lake County Board of County Commissioners approved spending $398,000 — fully funded by the tourist development tax — to help pay for construction of the complex. On April 23, the Lake County Water Authority approved a lease agreement with the county.

The Hickory Point Beach sand volleyball complex will reside at the 68-acre Hic-ory Point Recreational Complex that currently has five soccer fields operated by Lake County Soccer. The sand volleyball complex will have professional level net systems, lights, permanent restrooms, an intercom system, web cams and 24 inches of top-grade sand.

Bishop said events at Hickory Point Beach will include tournaments, leagues, camps and clinics.

A local beach volleyball league will be scheduled for Tuesday and Thursday nights beginning in July. Additional information will be available on the Florida region website in the coming weeks.

about Senate Bill 386, referred to as the "Anti-Foreign Law Bill" and the "Anti-Sharia Law Bill," legislation that would keep Florida judges from applying foreign laws. The only exception would be if the foreign law guarantees the same constitutional protections found in the Florida and U.S. constitutions.

The bill also is sponsored by Hays in the Senate and Rep. Neil Combee, R-Polk City, in the House.

Gov. Rick Scott has voiced his approval for the measure, but critics say the law is unnecessary and there are virtually no examples of foreign law previously intervening with state laws.

Shibly said the bill is thinly veiled anti-Islam legislation, citing a booklet Hays handed out to other Senators.

According to the Miami Herald, the booklet was called: "Shari'ah Law: Radical Islam's threat to the U.S. Constitution."

"It's unconstitutional, and we'll seriously consider litigation if it passes," Shibly said of the bill. "Florida has real problems and we don't have time to fix imaginary ones driven by a discriminatory agenda."

Santorum undecided in 2016 bid

PHILIP ELLIOTT
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The once and perhaps future presidential candidate Rick Santorum has lots of policy ideas for fellow Republicans seeking public office.

He's just not sure he'll be one of those hopefuls ever again.

"Yeah, I don't know if I can do this. It's just tough," Santorum said about another White House run.

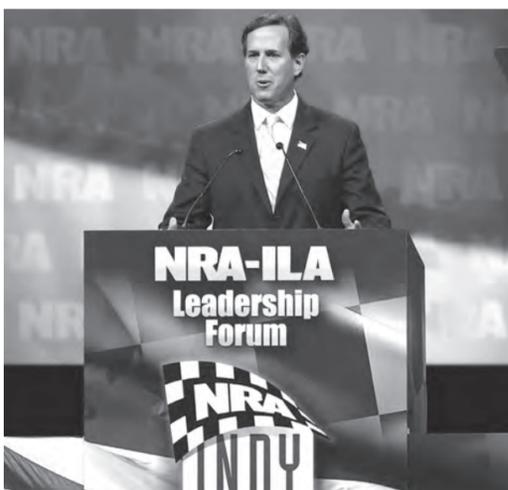

The former Pennsylvania senator tells The Associated Press in an interview that he isn't ruling out a 2016 candidacy.

But, he says, there are plenty of reasons why he wouldn't do it.

He is enjoying a second career as a movie studio executive. His daughter's health remains a concern.

And, Santorum writes in a new book, he can help shape his party's future from off-stage.

In the interview, Santorum said the GOP will struggle to win races unless candidates came up with policies that help working Americans.

AJ MAST / AP

Former Pennsylvania Sen. Rick Santorum speaks during the leadership forum on Friday at the National Rifle Association's annual convention in Indianapolis.

Victories will be tough, he said, unless elected officials stop being obstructionists.

Santorum said the libertarian streak running through his party distorts the definition of freedom, and that politicians wrongly look to President Ronald Reagan's policies to address today's challenges.

Then there's Santorum's slap at Republicans who demonize social welfare programs.

"Do Republicans really care less about the person at the bottom of the ladder than Democrats do? To be painfully honest, I would have to say in some ways 'yes,'" Santorum writes in his book, "Blue Collar Conservatives: Re-committing to an America That Works."

The tough talk raises questions about Santorum's viability in what could be a crowded 2016 primary field.

Also, he's not rushing to camp out in early nominating Iowa or New Hampshire again.

"A while. A year at least, probably," he said of his timeline to decide on a 2016 bid.

Santorum ran an upstart campaign in 2012, surviving long enough to be Mitt Romney's last remaining rival. He struggled to raise money or support among establishment-minded Republicans, but his socially conservative profile drew enough backing for Santorum to pick up victories in 11 states.

Even in victory, his disorganized campaign cost him, including failing to qualify for the ballot in Virginia.

"We cannot run the campaign we ran last time if we run this time," Santorum said.

How Republicans win is the focus of Santorum's latest book, to be released Monday.

Santorum offers ideas on energy, education, the economy and health care. It comes across as part think tank policy paper, part campaign playbook and part communications advice on how to connect with working-class voters.

For instance, Republicans should not focus exclusively on business leaders and "job creators" and should speak to employees, Santorum said.

"The competition is based on an engineering challenge presented to the teams in the form of a game," Patton said. "This year's event is 'Toss Up,' which requires robots to perform stunts that include picking up various sized balls and tossing them into goals, climbing over bumps and hanging from walls."

Carver Middle and Beverly Shores Elementary students have been working year-round using the VEX Robotics Design System to build robots designed to score the most points possible in qualification matches, elimination competitions and skills challenges. According to Bart Nash, robotics teacher at Carver Middle, students have been working diligently to come up with solutions to play the predetermined robotics game.

"For the past four or five years I have been invited over to Carver Middle School for the state tournament that Mr. Nash has held," School Board Member Rosanne Brandenburg said.

In its first year of competition, one of the teams from Beverly Shores Elementary won the state title.

"I am very proud of my students," said Joseph Newton, fifth-grade teacher at Beverly Shores Elementary. "We just started this year and we haven't even had these robots for more than six months and our kids went all the way."

West Point seeking more female cadets

MICHAEL HILL
Associated Press

WEST POINT, N.Y. — West Point wants more women.

With female cadets representing less than one in five cadets in the Long Gray Line, the U.S. Military Academy is taking steps to boost the number of women arriving here this summer and beyond.

West Point's new superintendent said the moves will help keep the storied academy ahead of the curve now that the Pentagon is lifting restrictions for women in combat jobs.

"We obviously have to increase the female population for a number of reasons. One is because there are more opportunities in the branches for the females," Lt. Gen. Robert Caslen Jr. said.

Women have been a presence at the nation's military academies since 1976. Female cadets here can grow their hair longer than the standard military buzz-cut and can wear stud earrings. But they carry the same heavy packs, march the same miles and graduate with the same second lieutenant bars the men here do.

Congress returns to work but will anything be accomplished?

ANDREW TAYLOR
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Congress gets back to work Monday after a two-week vacation, and it's looking like lawmakers will do what they do best: the bare minimum.

Forget immigration, a tax overhaul, stiffer gun checks. They're all DOA.

Raising the minimum wage or restoring lost unemployment benefits? Not going to happen. Forcing government approval of the Keystone XL pipeline? Veto bait.

The only things likely to become law in a Congress bitterly divided between House Republicans and the Democratic-led Senate are those that simply have to pass, such as a measure to avoid a government shutdown.

That's a short, short list.

It gets even shorter if you leave off things that can wait until a post-election lame-duck session.

Atop the list is a short-term spending bill to keep the government running past the Oct. 1 start of the new budget year. Votes on the bill aren't needed until September.

After stumbling into a politically costly partial government shutdown last fall, Republicans won't let it happen again, especially with an election just around the corner. This year's measure should be no problem.

J. DAVID AKE / AP

Tulips bloom in front of the Capitol recently in Washington. Congress gets back to work on Monday after a two-week vacation, and it's looking like lawmakers will do what they do best: the bare minimum.

Much more difficult, however, is the second main item of must-do business: finding more money for the Highway Trust Fund to keep road and bridge construction projects afloat. The fund is running critically low on cash. The administration says that could mean a slowdown in construction projects this summer and fall when lawmakers are back home asking voters to return them to Washington for another term. The current highway bill expires at the end of September.

"The number of (must-do) items is small," said GOP lobbyist Hazen Marshall of the Nickles Group. "But the degree of difficulty, particularly for the highway bill, is very high."

Top lawmakers and the administration all say they want to pass a multiyear highway and transit funding bill. Most Capitol Hill watchers think a temporary extension of funding is far more likely. That's still complicated.

Lawmakers will have to agree on perhaps $10 billion to $15 billion in funding to cover expected trust fund shortfalls. Optimally, Congress would act before its August vacation.

Passing those two bills is probably all that has to happen before Election Day. Congress has taken care of must-do legislation to increase the debt limit and fix Medicare's flawed payment formula.

So what will Congress do for the next few months? Not much.

There will be efforts to get the troubled appropriations process back on track in the aftermath of last year's shutdown and modest follow-up budget bargain.

Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., has promised the head of the Senate Appropriations Committee, Sen. Barbara Mikulski, D-Md., a few weeks of floor time after last year's failure to pass a single appropriations bill through the Senate.

The House will try to pass as many bills of the 12 spending bills as it can, but measures funding implementation of the Affordable Care Act, the Internal Revenue Service and the Environmental Protection Agency are candidates to bog down.

School stabbing suspect under mental evaluation

MICHAEL MELIA
Associated Press

HARTFORD, Conn. — A teenager charged with stabbing a fellow high school student to death on the day of their junior prom is being held in a hospital under psychiatric evaluation where he will likely remain for two weeks, one of his attorneys said Saturday.

The name of the 16-year-old suspect was not officially released but people who saw him taken into custody identified him as Chris Plaskon, a friend of the victim's and an athlete described as genial and respectful.

Plaskon is accused of stabbing to death Maren Sanchez, 16, in the hallway of Jonathan Law High School in Milford. The attack occurred Friday morning, hours before the school's junior prom, and authorities were investigating whether Sanchez was stabbed after turning down his invitation to the dance.

The suspect, who is charged as a juvenile offender, will not appear at an arraignment scheduled for Monday in New Haven, attorney Richard Meehan said.

The hospital commitment can last for up to 15 days, according to Meehan. He said doctors typically order such involuntary commitments in cases where someone in custody is considered a danger to himself.

Meehan said the suspect's family is also reeling from the attack.

"His family is devastated not only for him, but the youngster who was killed. It's a terrible situation all the way around," Meehan said.

His client is expected to be charged as an adult, but he would need to appear in court for that to happen, Meehan said. State's Attorney Kevin Lawlor said several factors go into that decision, including the seriousness of the charges.

Polish pilgrims hold a flag portraying Pope John Paul II during a vigil in the Sant'Agnese in Agone church on Saturday in piazza Navona, Rome.

Benedict to join in double sainthood ceremony

FRANCES D'EMILIO
Associated Press

VATICAN CITY — Retired pontiff Benedict XVI will help Pope Francis celebrate the sainthood ceremony today for John Paul II and John XXIII, setting the stage for an unprecedented occurrence of two living popes canonizing two of their predecessors. About 1 million pilgrims are expected at the event and many were flooding into Rome on Saturday.

Vatican spokesman the Rev. Federico Lombardi told reporters on Saturday that Benedict will be in St. Peter's Square for the canonization of John and John Paul. He said Benedict and many cardinals will "concelebrate" the Mass with Francis.

Benedict resigned from the papacy a year ago, and since has largely dedicated himself to prayer in a monastery on the Vatican grounds. Today's appearance will be his highest-profile one since he retired. Francis, who lives elsewhere in Vatican City, in a guesthouse, has been quite welcoming to his predecessor, occasionally paying a call on Benedict. It was Francis who sought to include Benedict in today's ceremony, expected to draw hundreds of thousands of tourists and pilgrims.

"Emeritus Pope Benedict XVI has accepted the invitation, and has let Pope Francis know that he will be present at the canonization ceremony and will concelebrate" along with other prelates, Lombardi said. "That doesn't mean that he will go up on the altar" on the steps of St. Peter's Basilica, Lombardi said of the outdoor Mass. He noted that during the ceremony, cardinals and bishops will be seated on one side of the esplanade, with, presumably, Benedict, among them.

"We will all be happy to have his presence" at the ceremony, the Vatican spokesman said.

Benedict also showed up Francis' ceremony to elevate churchmen to cardinal's rank in February. But that ceremony wasn't a Mass, meaning today's appearance by two popes would be the first Mass concelebrated by two pontiffs.

As German Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger, Benedict presided over John Paul II's funeral in the square in 2005. He was soon elected pontiff himself, going on to lead the ceremony to beatify his Polish-born predecessor in 2011, also in the square. Beatification is the last formal step before sainthood. It was John Paul who, early in his papacy, appointed the German prelate to a key Vatican post in charge of safeguarding church teaching, and eventually, also dealing with the mounting cases of sexual abuse of minors by priests in the United States and elsewhere.

Benedict has a connection to John XXIII's papacy as well. As a young theologian, he attended the Second Vatican Council, the gathering of prelates from around the globe that the Italian pope set up as a way to bring modernizing reforms to the Catholic church.

On Saturday, pilgrims were pouring into Rome in big groups or as individual families or travelers, eager to be among those taking their place in the square before dawn on the day of the ceremony. The sound of hymns, in Polish, English and Italian, echoed suddenly in some of Rome's streets Saturday, then just as abruptly faded, as faithful joyfully sang as they made their way through the Italian capital.

Interior Minister Angelino Alfano said an estimated 1 million people were expected to flood into Rome for the event.

Ex-colonel who admitted torture killed in Brazil

SAO PAULO — A former army colonel who acknowledged he tortured and killed political prisoners during Brazil's 1964-1985 military regime was murdered in his home outside Rio de Janeiro, police told local news media on Saturday.

Citing the victim's widow, police inspector Fabio Salvatore told the UOL news portal that Paulo Malhaes was suffocated to death on Thursday by three men who broke into his house and stole two computers and some of the antique guns he collected.

Last month, Malhaes gave Brazil's National Truth Commission a detailed account of how he participated in the abduction, torture and killing of political prisoners. He also said he helped in the "disappearance" of the bodies. He said that at the time he did not regret his actions which he justified saying "they were guerrillas and enemies of the state."

Malhaes was the first member of the Armed Forces to openly acknowledge that he tortured, killed and hid the bodies of political prisoners.

Created in 2012, the Truth Commission is investigating human rights abuses committed under Brazil's military regimes. It does not have powers to prosecute anyone because of a 1979 amnesty law that released civilians and the military from liability for politically motivated crimes committed during the dictatorship. It can, however, reveal the abuses and the names of those who committed them.

Iron Jungle has 2 more qualifiers for nationals

FRANK JOLLEY | Staff Writer
frank.jolley@dailycommercial.com

Iron Jungle Weightlifting continues to move along.

Lake County's only weightlifting club competed recently at the Florida Youth Trials, a tune-up meet at Port Orange Spruce Creek High School and Iron Jungle Weightlifting had two more lifters earn spots in USA Weightlifting's Youth National Championship in June.

"I only had four lifters compete, so half of our competitors qualified for nationals," said Iron Jungle Weightlifting coach Josh Boyer. "That gives us four team members who have qualified (for nationals). We have a tough six-week prep period coming up, and our success at Youth Nationals will be a direct correlation to the approach to our training. We are past the level of being content with qualifying and now it is time to bring home medals each time we attend a national championship.

"I have confidence that we will have our best training days over this next month-and-a-half."

Alexis Smith and Carlos Molano had solid performances at Port Orange Spruce Creek to join teammates Morgan Rhone and Brett Olila at nationals. Smith competed at 75 kilograms (about 165 pounds) and Molano lifted at 69 kilograms (about 152 pounds).

Smith entered the competition needing 97 kilograms (213 pounds) to qualify for nationals and Boyer said she turned up at the meet "ready to succeed." She hit personal records of 41 kilograms (90 pounds) in the Snatch and another personal record weight of 56 kilograms (123 pounds) in the Clean-and-Jerk for a total of 97 kilograms, a third personal mark.

Smith hit on four of her six total lifts and qualified for nationals with her second attempt in the Clean-and-Jerk. Her performance earned Iron Jungle its only medal of the competition.

"I couldn't be more proud of Alexis because she has come so far in reaching this point,"

NBA probing alleged recording of owner

ANTONIO GONZALEZ
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — The NBA is investigating a report of an audio recording in which a man identified as Los Angeles Clippers owner Donald Sterling tells his girlfriend not to bring black people to games.

NBA spokesman Mike Bass said in a statement Saturday that the league is in the process of authenticating the validity of the recording posted on TMZ's website. Bass called the comments "disturbing and offensive" and said the league would have no further comment.

In the recording posted on TMZ, the man questions his girlfriend's association with minorities. TMZ reported the woman, V. Stiviano, who is of black and Mexican descent, posted a picture of herself with Lakers Hall

Pacers win, even series with Hawks

PAUL NEWBERRY
Associated Press

ATLANTA — Paul George and David West hit key 3-pointers down the stretch, and the top-seeded Indiana Pacers held off the Atlanta Hawks 91-88 Saturday to even the opening-round series at two wins apiece.

In a game they had to have, the Pacers finally showed some grit and regained the home-court edge. George put the Pacers ahead 86-85 with a jumper beyond the arc, and West hit another trey with 1:33 remaining.

Atlanta had a chance after Kyle Korver was fouled in the corner and knocked down three free throws, taking advantage of a do-over after the Pacers were called for a lane violation on the third attempt. But George pulled down an offensive rebound to set up George Hill's driving shot with 56 seconds left.

Pero Antic missed a 3-pointer at the buzzer that would've forced overtime.

Game 5 is Monday in Indianapolis.

George scored 24 points and West added 18. Paul Millsap led the Hawks with 29, but the All-Star forward struggled in the final minute.

First, he turned the Car Buyers Beware of a Common Dealership Gimmick

THE BUMP STICKER

A bump sticker is a window sticker that is usually located next to the official MSRP window sticker. It will list various things the dealer added to the vehicle that are useless and overpriced making the vehicle look like it's worth more than it really is. The buyer will negotiate the inflated price and think they got a good deal, when they actually got duped!

ball over with a bad pass. Then, he missed a spinning shot in the lane after Atlanta passed on a chance at a tying 3-pointer. Indiana left the door open by missing its final four free throws, including a pair by George with 7.5 seconds left when only one would have been enough to seal the victory. But the Pacers buckled down at the defensive end, forcing Antic to throw up a desperation 3 that clanked off the rim. The Pacers decided against benching Roy Hibbert to go with a smaller lineup against the Hawks, who have taken the 7-foot-2 center out of his comfort zone by spreading the court with their big men and taking advantage of every chance to run. Hibbert continued to struggle, with just six points and three rebounds in a little less than 25 minutes. But he did have his first two blocks of the series, and his teammates took care of the rest. Cheered on by a raucous crowd at Philips Arena, where they even took down a curtain that normally covers part of the upper deck, the Hawks looked as though they were headed for a commanding lead in the series as they pushed out to their biggest lead, 54-44, early in the third quarter. But Millsap picked up two fouls just 7 seconds apart, giving him four in the game and forcing him to the bench for much of the period. The Pacers took advantage of

Montoya's transition continues in Alabama

JOHN ZENOR
Associated Press

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Juan Pablo Montoya is still in the transition phase, where a fourth-place finish is good enough.

The grace period won't necessarily last long for Montoya, who returned to IndyCar after five seasons in Formula One and seven in NASCAR. He heads into race No. 3 today at Barber Motorsports Park with expectations still of contending quickly after the Top-5 finish at Long Beach, Calif.

Montoya saw no need to get overly aggressive gunning for an even higher spot, a play-it-safe approach that is unlikely to continue much deeper into the season.

"I think it was the right thing under the circumstances," Tim Cindric, president of Penske Performance, said Friday. "Later in the season, he'll be disappointed with fourth and we'd certainly be disappointed if later in the season we were happy with fourth. He's smart. He hasn't had all the success that he's had without understanding when to go and when not to.

"Certainly, I think later in the season that mind-set might be a bit different."

In the meantime, Montoya is still effectively a rookie at new tracks like Barber, a 2.38-mile road course. He practiced at the track in much cooler conditions back in February. The goal for Montoya was to crack the top 10 at Long Beach on April 13, and he easily topped that standard.

Juan Pablo Montoya drives through a turn in the IndyCar Grand Prix of Long Beach on April 13 in Long Beach, Calif. He continues his transition from NASCAR to IndyCar today in Birmingham, Ala.

Now, Cindric said the team is hoping Montoya makes it into the second qualifying session and secures a Top-12 start.

"Barber's going to be a bit of a challenge for him, because it's a really close race," Cindric said. "The amount of grip that there is, it's very hard to pass."

"I think he's somebody that's on cold tires here because it'll be a three-stop race. I think you'll see him gain more spots in the pits but qualifying will be tough for him again."

Montoya had the eighth-fastest lap in practice Friday, at 1:09.1484. The fourth-place finish at Long Beach was better than he'd had in practice or testing, but there are further indications he's getting closer to his form of 14 years ago. Beating Penske teammates Helio Castroneves and Will Power in a testing session is a step forward, too.

"We tested last week in Texas and I was quicker than my teammates," Montoya said. "I think that's a good sign."

He won his first pole position in NASCAR some 40 miles down Interstate 20 at Talladega Superspeedway.

That move came after Montoya spent five seasons in Formula One following his Indianapolis 500 win in 2000. Now, he's back dealing with both technical and not so technical changes involved in getting comfortable in the driver's seat in open-wheel racing, from adjusting to the braking zones to just getting comfortable.

"With NASCAR you drive with the elbows out, because the seat is really big so you have to drive with the elbows out," Montoya said. "Here you have no elbow room, so you do a little wrist movement. In the beginning it was like, 'Oh my God.' Now it's good. I got in the car (Friday) morning and it's becoming more natural."

The next stop will be the Grand Prix of Indianapolis, followed by the Indy 500. Barber, which he calls "a really technical track," is another opportunity to get better before IndyCar's signature race.

"This is the last chance, the way I look at it, to get really good before we get to Indy," Montoya said. "Indy's the key. We want to really peak at Indy, so we'll see."

In Alabama, he has the benefit of teammates Power — a two-time winner at Barber — and Castroneves, who won the track's inaugural IndyCar race in 2010.

Castroneves isn't sure the veteran Montoya needs many pointers.

"He certainly came up very quick," Castroneves said. "His background is with open-wheel, so it's like riding a bicycle. Everything is coming back. There was not much advice from us."

Bass fingerlings stocked in Polk lake by FWC

STAFF REPORT

Lake Pierce bass anglers will be happy to know the Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission (FWC) has stocked 160,000 largemouth bass fingerlings into the 3,728-acre Polk County lake. The FWC stocked 2.5-inch fish, from its Florida Bass Conservation Center at Richloam, in Sumter County, to supplement low natural reproduction attributed to a relatively small adult bass population, documented in FWC samples.

"The larger-than-normal fingerlings we stocked have growth advantages over smaller fingerlings because they can readily consume abundant larval shad found in the lake," said FWC fishery biologist Chris Wiley.

Stockings on April 16 and 17 should help ensure the viability of the bass fishery, while lake managers wrestle with the problem of an aging lake, characterized by algal blooms and significant muck deposits over portions of the lake's bottom.

It typically takes one to two years before stocked bass become available for anglers to catch but in the long-run, hopes are that many of these bass will become the parents of future generations of Lake Pierce bass.

For more information on freshwater fishing, visit MyFWC.com/Fishing and select "Freshwater" or call the FWC Lakeland regional office at 863-648-3200.

1994 — Scott Erickson, who allowed the most hits in the majors the previous season, pitched Minnesota's first no-hitter in 27 years as the Twins beat Milwaukee 6-0.
1996 — Barry Bonds became the fourth major leaguer to amass 300 homers and 300 steals when he homered in the third inning of the San Francisco Giants' 6-3 victory over the Florida Marlins. His father, Bobby Bonds, godfather Willie Mays and Andre Dawson are the only other players to reach 300-300.
2000 — Chicago White Sox shortstop Jose Valentin hit for the cycle and drove in five runs in a 13-4 victory over the Baltimore Orioles. Valentin hit for the cycle in single, double, triple and home run order.
2002 — Derek Lowe, who struggled to keep his job as a closer last season, pitched a no-hitter against Tampa Bay. Brent Abernathy was the only baserunner Lowe allowed in Boston's 10-0 victory.
2003 — Kevin Millwood pitched a no-hitter to lead the Philadelphia Phillies over the San Francisco Giants 1-0. Millwood struck out 10 and walked three.
2005 — Mark Grudzielanek hit for the cycle in his first four at-bats in St. Louis' 6-3 victory over Milwaukee.
2005 — Jose Mesa earned his 300th career save in Pittsburgh's 2-0 victory over Houston. Mesa became the 19th pitcher in major league history with 300.
2007 — Kirk Radomski, a former New York Mets clubhouse manager, pleaded guilty to distributing steroids to major league players for a decade and agreed to help baseball's steroids investigators.
2009 — West Virginia State's Bo Darby hit home runs in five consecutive at-bats over two games, including four in one contest. The sophomore outfielder homered in his first four trips to the plate against Salem International. He also connected in his final at-bat two days earlier against the University of Charleston. Darby homered twice more in the second game of the doubleheader, giving him six for the day with 14 RBIs.
1909 — The Chicago White Sox win their third straight 1-0 game over St. Louis in three days.
1918 — The Brooklyn Dodgers got into the win column after a major league record 0-9 start, with a 5-3 victory over the New York Giants in the opening game of a doubleheader.
1929 — Brooklyn relief pitcher Clise Dudley homered on the first major league pitch he saw at Philadelphia's Baker Bowl.
1930 — Chicago White Sox first baseman Bud Clancy had no chances in a nine-inning game against St. Louis.
1944 — Jim Tobin of the Braves pitched a no-hitter against the Dodgers in Boston, winning 2-0. He also hit a homer.
1947 — Babe Ruth Day at Yankee Stadium drew a crowd of more than 58,000 to honor the ailing star. In the game, Sid Hudson of the Washington Senators beat Spud Chandler 1-0.
1963 — Two two-spot players pitched in the fourth inning in a game at Fenway park. NBA players Gene Conley of the Celtics and Dave DeBusschere of the Knicks pitched for their respective Major League Baseball teams, Conley for the Red Sox and DeBusschere for the White Sox. The Red Sox won 9-5.
1968 — Tom Phoebus of the Orioles no-hit the Boston Red Sox 6-0 at Baltimore.
1973 — Kansas City's Steve Busby pitched his first of two career no-hitters with a 3-0 victory over the Tigers at Detroit.
1983 — Walter Johnson's record of 3,508 career strikeouts was eclipsed by Houston's Nolan Ryan — a record which stood for 56 years. Ryan fanned Montreal pinch-hitter Brad Mills in the eighth inning of the Astros' 4-2 win over the Expos.

The state's pass-the-buck Legislature

When the Florida Legislature's annual session ends next month and campaigning for state offices begins, incumbents seeking re-election to state offices will brag how they have kept taxes low.

Their claims will be correct. Florida ranked 47th in total per capita taxation heading into this year's session. What's more, legislators are likely to reduce some revenues this year by, for example, lowering vehicle-registration fees. In this context, Florida TaxWatch, an independent organization that studies state taxation and spending policies, cites these state revenue sources: lottery proceeds, documentary stamps on real estate transactions, a sales tax (6 percent) and taxes on utilities, cellphones, motor fuels, insurance, alcoholic beverages and tobacco.

Indeed, Florida's statewide taxes are low compared with those in other states.

But, there's more. Florida's place on the bottom rungs of state-level taxation and total revenue are due in part to an extraordinary reliance on local governments — not only to provide services, but to generate dollars.

Thanks to the folks at TaxWatch, who recently issued their 2014 "How Florida Compares" report, we know that:

- The state has the fifth-highest percentage (50 percent) of state and local taxes generated by local governments.

- Florida has the second-highest percentage (55 percent) of state and local revenue generated by local governments.

- Local revenues include not only property taxes but local-option sales taxes, impact fees, franchise fees for utilities and special assessments.

In general, cities, counties and other local entities in Florida are assigned and assume disproportionately greater responsibility for courts, social services, infrastructure, health care for indigent patients and education.

Nowhere is the state government's reliance on locals more evident than in public education.

The Florida Constitution requires the state to adequately fund high-quality education and also prohibits the state from levying a property tax.

Yet, each year, the Legislature requires school boards to levy property taxes at specific rates.

Even though local, per capita revenues in Florida rank seventh nationwide and local, per capita taxes rank 22nd, the combined state and local tax burden is below average.

Ranked 33rd, Florida's state and local governments collect $5,599 per person in total revenues; the average in the United States is $6,303. In terms of state and local taxes, Florida ranks 37th — $3,420 per capita; the national average is $4,287.

It would be polite for incumbents in state offices to thank local governments and their taxpayers for making them look good.

Guest columns should be limited to 550 words in length. The writer also must submit a recent photo to be published with the column, as well as a brief biographical sketch.

LETTER of the WEEK

The generosity of bikers

I have lived in Leesburg for 24 years and I have been a biker for more than 50 years. Having said that, here are the good, bad and the ugly sides of Bikefest.

I have gone to every Bikefest since the first one. I even have the original T-shirt. The good is that the Leesburg Partnership puts on a great rally. The bad is that non-bikers hate it.

Now the ugly. The "Sound of Money." That was the front-page headline on Easter Sunday in the Daily Commercial. Bikers are the most generous group of people on the earth. They will assemble in masses to donate to charities. So why does the Partnership and every vendor screw them?

Basically, Leesburg is a charity, a depressed community. Hundreds of thousands of bikers come to Leesburg each year and bail them out by pouring millions into the economy. What do they get for this? Michael Vassell, general manager of Holiday Inn Express

FILE PHOTO

Hotel & Suites in Tavares, says this, "A standard room normally goes for $101 to $125, but during Bikefest that goes up to $150 because rates are based on demand." Don't you really mean greed?

I remember when beer cost $2 at Bikefest. It is now $5 to $6, not counting the cost of a commemorative cup. Parking used to be free. Food prices have soared because the vendors have to pay so much for their spaces. The list goes on, and on and on.

Leesburg, think about this: The bikers come here to help, and what do they get? What would happen if Bikefest came and no one showed up? Where are your millions then?

Get back to reality before you become Daytona. A lot of bikers don't go there any more for the same reasons I mentioned above. Be thankful for the bikers. Don't screw them.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Oppose corporate greed

In the April 6 edition of the Daily Commercial there was a great article by Kevin G. Hall, of the McClatchy Washington Bureau, "U.S. companies chipping away at retiree benefits."

Employees need to get organized and unionize against these companies who only show their support through their stockholders and their CEO's large salaries.

The poor and middle class Americans need to boycott these companies. And everyone in America needs to vote Democrat in upcoming elections for a better Congress who will increase the minimum wage and protect Social Security, allow immigrants who were born here to become U.S. citizens and also keep women's rights intact.

The founding fathers would have been pleased

Russ Sloan in his diatribe on Easter Sunday on the welfare system wrote, "The Preamble to the Constitution reads, "provide for the common defense and promote the general welfare," not vice versa. That is absolutely correct, but he fails to mention the Preamble has no legal standing when we interpret the Constitution.

The Founding Fathers in their great wisdom wrote in Article 1 Section 8, Congress shall have the power to, "Provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States ..." Sloan has a propensity for not telling the whole story, just what fits his ideological beliefs.

The founding fathers also added in Article 1 section 8, "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the fore going powers ..." In essence, they gave the Congress the power to make any law necessary and proper to provide for the general welfare.

Sloan also wrote, "We have so distorted the intent of our founding fathers that they would be in shock to see what a welfare mentality we have accepted."

I do not have the clairvoyance Russ seems to claim, but most probably would be pleased to see Congress has used the power they gave them to provide for the general welfare.

There are some things they probably would be shocked about, like non-property owners, women and blacks voting, that corporations are people, money is speech and a black man is president.

Not the place of the Supreme Court

I am referencing an article on the front page of the Daily Commercial on April 17 by Jim Turner of the News Service of Florida, "Amazon to start collecting sales taxes."

The article goes on to say if the entity has a presence in the state that a person is ordering from, then they will be charged sales tax. The Supreme Court ruled some years ago that if the business had a presence in a state that a person orders from then a tax can be collected. This is a classic example of the court legislating from the bench.

Article 1 section 9-10, states that no tax can be collected from items crossing any state line or from port to port. The proper way to handle it would have been to amend the Constitution but they knew that the amendment would never fly. I imagine that political influence was exercised in this process.

I do not pay sales tax on items ordered across state lines. If the shipper hints at charging a tax, I cancel the order. I refuse to be a part of this tax, tax, tax! It is just another way of draining the citizen of a few more drops of blood in the form of taxes. I would rather do without the product than pay the tax.

The state of Florida had to return $700 million to people who were charged a tax for bringing their cars into the state. The person taxed had to make application for it. The state should have been required to purge the archives and see who paid the tax and notify them at their last known address. But then again, they never do the right thing.

This ruling by the Supreme Court should have been revisited by a more competent Court than made the ruling. I do remember that one of the judges on the ruling court had a stroke at the time the 5 to 4 decision was made.

I have no problem with a 6 to 3, or 7 to 2, but a 5 to 4 is no good.

The intolerance of those espousing tolerance

I am constantly amazed by the frequent examples, across America, of those who profess tolerance yet are extremely intolerant if you disagree with their viewpoints.

The most recent and notable example of intolerance was the forced resignation of Mozilla co-founder Brendan Eich. His dastardly action which forced his resignation was the revelation that he legally gave $1,000 to California's Prop 8 Measure in 2008 which banned gay marriage in that state.

His position on gay marriage in 2008 was the same as that of President Obama and Hillary Clinton. No matter. The spokeswoman hypocrite for Mozilla, Executive Chairwoman Mitchell Baker, issued the following statement after the forced resignation: "Mozilla believes in both equality and freedom of speech. And you need free speech to fight for equality. Figuring out how to stand for both at the same time can be hard."

Really! I would wager a friendly cup of coffee that Chairwoman Baker voted for president in 2008 knowing that Obama's stated view on marriage was that "it is between one man and one woman." In 2008 that was the same position as Brendan Eich.

Another recent example of intolerance from those professing tolerance comes to us courtesy of the students and faculty of Rutgers University.

The administration at Rutgers had invited one of the most accomplished women in America, Condoleezza Rice, to be their commencement speaker. What apparently drew the ire of the faculty and students was her support of President Bush in ending the tyrannical regime of Saddam Hussein in Iraq. We had gone to war with Hussein to end his aggression in Kuwait, and we knew he had used chemical weapons against his own people (the Kurds). His continuous refusal to let U.N. inspectors explore his possible weapons of mass destruction sites led to Bush's decision. Condoleezza Rice concurred with that decision.

RUSS SLOAN

At this point I expect some readers to utter the phrase "Bush lied and people died." I would like to remind those that feel that way the following assessments made by Democrats regarding Hussein: "We know he has stored secret supplies of biological and chemical weapons throughout his country," said Al Gore on Sept. 23, 2002. Then Senator John Kerry said: "I will be voting to give the president of the United States the authority to use force, if necessary, to disarm Saddam Hussein because I believe that a deadly arsenal of weapons of mass destruction in his hands is a real and grave threat to our security."

Finally there was Senator Ted Kennedy who said, "We have known for many years that Saddam Hussein is seeking and developing weapons of mass destruction." (Sept. 27, 2002)

I can cite similar quotes from Hillary Clinton, Rep. Nancy Pelosi, Senators Carl Levin and Jay Rockefeller and more.

Getting back to the credentials of Condoleezza Rice. Born in Alabama, before desegregation, she received her master's at Notre Dame and her PhD from the University of Denver's Graduate School of International Studies in 1981. In 1993, Rice became the first African American to serve as provost of Stanford and she also served as the university's chief budget and academic officer. She went on to become the first black woman to serve as our nation's national security advisor, as well as secretary of state.

But all of these accomplishments did not satisfy the academic hypocrites at Rutgers. Apparently they ignored the Democrat leaders taking the same position as she did regarding Iraq. Our colleges and universities are supposedly bastions of free speech and where ideas and concepts are exchanged. I wish.

Check commencement speakers at both public and private colleges. In 2012 only one Republican elected official was invited to speak at a top 50 liberal arts college and that was at the University of Richmond in his home state. The top 100 universities invited three Republican office holders, but all three spoke within their state.

Conservative commencement speakers are on the endangered species list. This comes as no surprise as the majority of the faculties at universities who champion tolerance exclude conservative thought on campus. Don't take my word for it, go Google the conservative or Republican speakers at colleges and see how many times rude and disruptive behavior, including pie throwing, is conducted among our campuses of tolerance.

Academically, we too often tolerate most anything on campus except conservative political thought and speech.

Thanks for your kindness to our animals

The last month has been a very busy and successful time for the Humane Society/SPCA of Sumter County.

We owe it to the great showing of community support from local clubs, businesses and volunteers who supported four of our largest fundraising events in March and April.

Our annual Paper Shredding event (sponsored by the Rainbow Family and Friends Club, Buffalo Ridge Animal Hospital and Hill's Shred Express), Fun Time Follies (sponsored by show producers Kim and Jim Krum and their talented performers) and the Above Par For Animals Golf Ball Drop (sponsored by Remax Premier Realty of The Villages/Ocala, George Nahas Chevrolet, Nathan Thomas State Farm Insurance, Columbia ParCar) and the Villages Charter Middle School Builder's Club (sponsored by the Kiwanis and HighFive Frozen Yogurt) pet supply drive have raised numerous donations to help our non-profit continue with much needed community programs as the challenges of summertime in Florida fast approach. Spay/neuter funding and pet food assistance are only made possible through donations from the community.

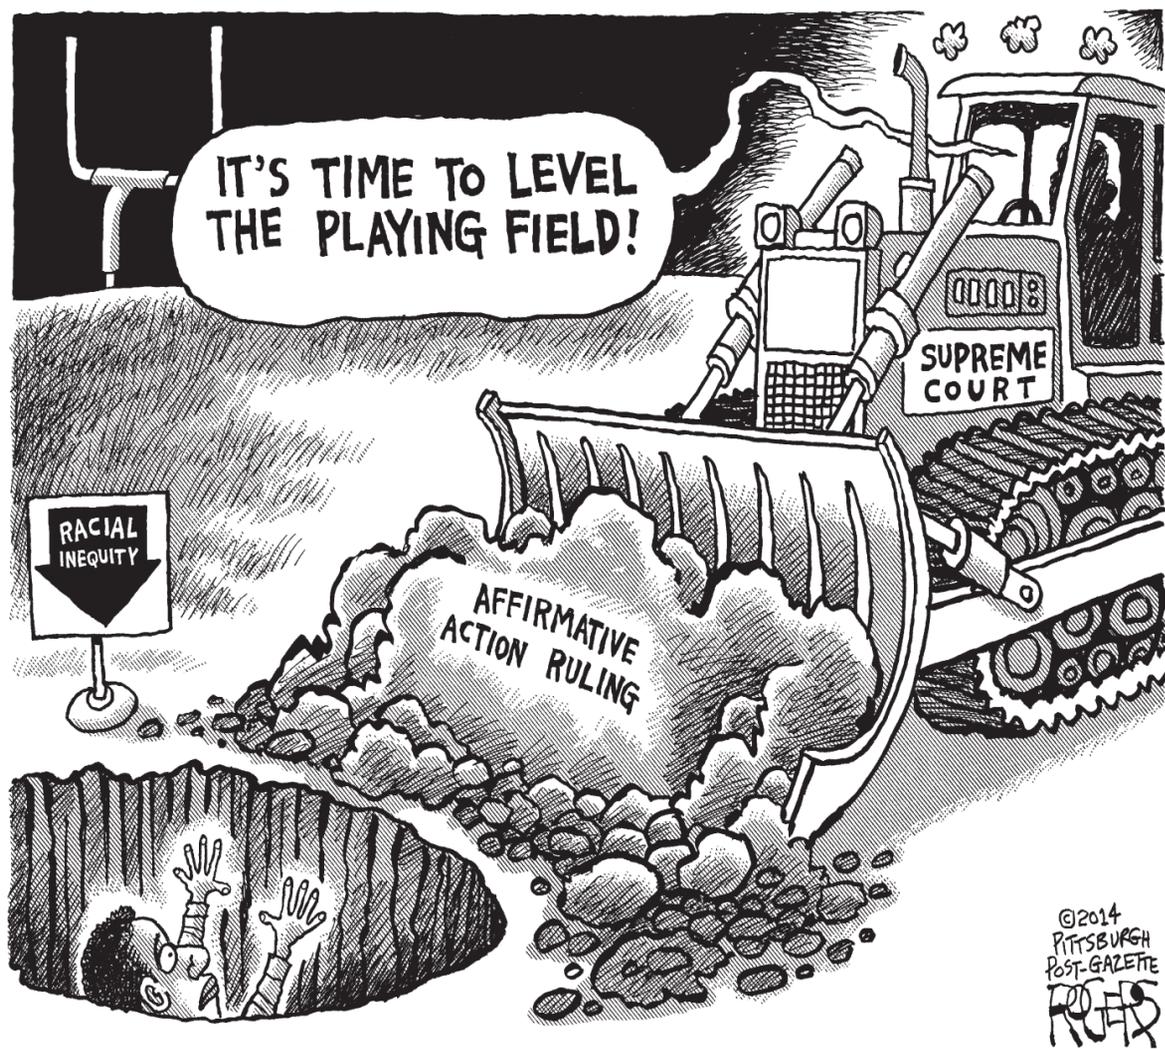

As April is also Volunteer Appreciation Month, we would like to acknowledge the tremendous kindness shown by the HS/SPCA volunteers for their compassion, teamwork and gifts of kindness to allow the many helpless animals we in turn help find happier lives.

Without our volunteers and contributions from the community, we couldn't do the necessary work we do to better the lives of both animals and their people in Sumter County.

Stay tuned for upcoming events we have planned and please don't forget that the need continues during the difficult summer months.

Donations will be accepted at local dropoff sites including the shelter at 994 County Road 529A in Lake Panasoffkee, or mail to the Humane Society/SPCA of Sumter County, Inc., P.O. Box 67, Lake Panasoffkee, Fla., 33538, or online at www.hsspsca.org.

A party with too many walls

Republican leaders are getting ready for elections in November, 2016.

Ron Paul wants the GOP to appeal to those voters who are usually ignored by Republicans. He refers to "minorities."

Ted Cruz wants a traditional view of the GOP, which he says is "growth and opportunity" for the Hispanic community. He said, "Washington D.C. ain't listening."

Mike Huckabee enjoyed applause from the audience when he mentioned Benghazi, the IRS, and photos at voting polls. All three GOP politicians agreed that the GOP is at a crossroads because many Republicans are saddened by the lack of progress promised by conservatives.

Then Donald Trump took the microphone and told the GOP audience that he is passionate about his new real estate development in Florida. Trump said, "I'm a builder." He promised the audience that he wants to build a big fence along the southern border of the U.S. It will be a fence "like you've never seen," he promised. The audience roared.

The three GOP leaders probably think the great wall of Texas will provide some "growth opportunity" for common laborers. It appears that the GOP leaders probably have not read about other great walls around the world that were built to keep low class people out of the promised land, and each wall is a failure.

Here is a list of walls that tried to keep people from migrating: Hadrian's Wall in England. The Great Wall of China. The Walls of Jericho. Trajan's Wall in Romania. The Berlin Wall came tumbling down. Belfast Wall in Ireland. The Wailing Wall, Jerusalem. Walls of Ston, Croatia. Walls of Babylon. Walls of Troy, Turkey. Walls of Constantinople, Turkey. Aurelian Walls in Rome.

Ron Paul, Ted Cruz, and Donald Trump appear to be the best GOP candidates today. However, anybody can see that their ideas for the GOP are like a "mental wall" which looks to be as ineffective as the stone walls listed above.

Kia tucks plenty of features into its quirky Soul hatchback

MARK PHELAN
Detroit Free Press

Saints preserve us from the day when some wannabe-hip automaker decides to name its cars and trucks with emoticons. Kia brings us one step closer to that vomitous “Look at me! Aren’t I clever?” level of cuteness with the 2014 Soul !.

That’s right. The top trim level of the new Soul hatchback is called the exclamation point. Kia has freed us from those tiresome words, letters and numbers other companies use. Colon: Give me a break. Dash — bring me the head of Kia’s chief marketing officer. Frowny face.

Aside from the cloying self-consciousness of its name, the Soul ! has much to recommend it, including a quirky design and loads of interior room.

The Soul comes in three flavors: base, (plus) and !. The period at the end of that sentence is a punctuation mark, not a name. Sorry to disappoint you.

Kia thoughtfully suggests you call the upper two trims “plus” and “exclaim,” two perfectly fine words for which — coincidentally enough — words actually exist.

The base model starts at $14,900. It comes with a 130-horsepower, 1.6-liter four-cylinder engine and six-speed manual transmission. Automatic transmission models start at $16,900 for a base model with the same engine and a six-speed. The Plus and Exclaim mate a 164-horsepower, 2.0-liter engine to the automatic transmission. They start at $18,400 and $20,500, respectively. All models have front-wheel drive.

I tested a well-equipped Soul

2014 KIA SOUL EXCLAIM

TYPE OF VEHICLE: Front-wheel-drive five-passenger hatchback

RATING: Three out of four stars

REASONS TO BUY: Looks; passenger and cargo space; features

SHORTCOMINGS: Fuel economy; handling; interior noise

ENGINE: 2.0-liter 16-valve DOHC four-cylinder

POWER: 164 horsepower at 6,200 rpm; 151 pound-feet of torque at 4,000 rpm

TRANSMISSION: Six-speed automatic

EPA FUEL ECONOMY RATING: 23 mpg city/31 highway/26 combined. Regular gasoline

WHEELBASE: 101.2 inches

LENGTH: 163.0 inches

WIDTH: 70.9 inches

HEIGHT: 63.0 inches

CURB WEIGHT: 2,837 lbs.

BASE PRICE: $14,900

PRICE AS TESTED: $25,400

Prices exclude destination charge.

Exclaim with features including a touch screen, Bluetooth phone and music compatibility, USB input, heated and ventilated front seats, a large power sun roof and heated rear seats. It stickered at $24,500.

The Soul’s most direct competitors are small cars and crossover utilities that combine striking looks with roomy interiors. The Buick Encore, Nissan Cube, Scion xB and Volkswagen Jetta wagon come to mind. Soul prices compare favorably to them.

The Honda Element originated this class of roomy, offbeat little cars. It’d compete with the 2014 Soul, but — to the dismay of surfers, mountain bikers and dog owners everywhere — Honda sent the Element to live on a beautiful farm upstate a few years ago.

The 2014 Soul is bigger and more sophisticated than its first generation. It has plenty of interior and cargo room. The high seating position, big windows and upright design provide excellent visibility. The glove box is huge. A dish in the center console for phones and iPods looks sloppy when loaded with devices and wires.

The touch screen is large and easy to use. Conventional buttons and dials control audio and climate. The Soul’s voice recognition and Bluetooth work well, but the interior gets noisy at highway speed.

The 2.0-liter engine provides adequate power, but acceleration and handling are not the Soul’s strengths. The steering lacks feel, particularly at highway speed. Body roll is noticeable on fast curves.

The Soul’s fuel economy is poor. The EPA rates the car I tested at 23 mpg in the city, 31 on the highway and 26 combined.

The combined figure trails comparable models of the Encore, Sonic, Fiesta and Cube. It beats the Scion xB by 2 mpg and matches the larger 2.5-liter Jetta wagon.

The combined rating is also several mpg worse than such bigger compact sedans as the Chevrolet Cruze, Ford Fusion, Honda Civic, Hyundai Elantra, Nissan Sentra and Toyota Corolla.

The Soul’s mechanical systems are nothing to exclaim about, but its room and quirky looks largely offset that. Period.

GMC gives Sierra truck a carlike feel

GMC’s Sierra 1500 pickup has been completely redesigned for 2014, offering an array of model and engine choices, just like its Chevrolet Silverado sibling.

The regular cab model, with two doors and only a front seat, begins at $26,075, while crew cab prices begin at $34,200 for the rear-wheel-drive base version. Double cab models, which have slightly smaller cabins but still carry up to six, start at $30,100.

But the fanciest version is the Denali crew cab, our test vehicle for a week, whose prices begin at $48,315 for the two-wheel-drive, short-box version and range as high as $51,765 for the four-wheel-drive

Mustang owners’ devotion hasn’t waned

ERIK LACITIS
The Seattle Times

They crank up their Ford Mustangs, among them, a 1965 Fastback and a 2012 Boss.

You can hear that growl. This is a real American car. No whiny sounds like in the European makes.

“A lot of Mustangs have that nice rumble. I roll down my windows so I can hear the engine,” says Linda Hallberg.

She’s 64, a retired postmaster. Her husband, Gary Hallberg, 67, worked in planning for a manufacturer. They own four Mustangs.

They loved the cars when they were young and in their 20s; they love them now.

Among their collection was a 1998 GT that they’ve now sold.

Gary made sure that when Linda first drove it, the CD player blasted Wilson Pickett’s “Mustang Sally” when she turned the key. They so love Mustangs that they had the trunk of a red Mustang convertible made into a couch for their Renton, Wash., home.

April 17, 1964 is a day etched for the keepers of the Mustang flame. That’s when their beloved brand debuted at the New York World’s Fair.

Over 50 years, more than 9 million of the vehicles have sold, says Ford.

The Mustang has been in at least 3,000 movies and TV shows, including the classic 1968 Steve McQueen film, “Bullitt,” with its nine-minute-long chase scene.

Icon drives icon. The car was a marvel of “Mad Men” marketing when it first came out, with its long hood like European sports

While wooing electric automaker’s factory, Texas won’t let Tesla sell cars in-state

LAYLAN COPELIN
Austin American-Statesman

AUSTIN, Texas — Susan Abplanalp of West Lake Hills, Texas, flew to San Francisco last year to test drive a car before buying it over the Internet.

Not just any car: the Tesla Model S, a $70,000 to $130,000 electric car that got Consumer Reports’ highest marks ever.

The manufacturer, Tesla Motors Inc., is battling powerful auto dealers around the country, including in Texas, trying to block how it sells cars — even as Texas and three other states compete for the company’s $5 billion battery plant and its 6,500 jobs.

Selling directly to consumers in Tesla-owned dealerships, as Tesla wants, would cut out franchised dealers who are the middlemen between car manufacturers and consumers.

The Texas Automobile Dealers Association last year easily defeated California billionaire Elon Musk’s effort to exempt his Tesla Motors from selling through dealerships, but auto dealers are suddenly playing defense because of the possibility of Texas landing the plant and its jobs.

“I think all this talk about 6,500 direct jobs has gotten the Legislature’s attention,” said state Rep. Eddie Rodriguez, D-Austin, who carried Tesla’s exemption bid last year. “That’s what my colleagues are talking about.”

The association responded last month with a letter to all Texas lawmakers saying the law shouldn’t be changed for “any special interest or potential project.”

It is an issue that pits technological innovation against Main Street, if lobbying

I was referred to Dr. Qamar when I began to experience heaviness in my legs while walking. I felt like I was carrying around bricks every day. I have also been a diabetic for the past twenty-five years. My first visit with Dr. Qamar went well and I was set up for diagnostic testing. The tests came back to show I had blockages in my legs. The blockages were a complication due, in part, to my diabetes. I could have completely lost the circulation in my legs, resulting in an amputation. The staff at ICE showed me my test results and pointed out the blockages so I could fully understand my condition and options. I have gone through a series of stents and have felt calm and cared for each time. The ICE facility is wonderful and the nursing staff is the best. They have made my outpatient procedures and recovery as comfortable as possible.

Dr. Qamar is a thorough doctor who cares and loves his patients; I put him on the top of the list. The staff is wonderful and I enjoy my appointments at ICE. I recommend Dr. Qamar to all my friends as they have seen me achieve life-changing results. Today, I feel 100 percent better. Not only is there a huge difference in my walking, I am even doing a water aerobics class three times a week! Aquasize is something I could have never considered before going to ICE. I am able to be active and I feel more energetic than I could have ever imagined!

And for 2014, the Double Cab comes with four regular doors, replacing the previous-generation's Extended Cab model.

Three engines are offered: a 4.3-liter V-6, 5.3-liter V-8, and 6.2-liter V-8. EPA ratings for the 5.3-liter engine are the best in the segment at 16 mpg city/23 highway with rear-wheel drive, and 16/22 with four-wheel drive.

Standard in the four-wheel-drive short-box Denali, such as the one I tested for this report, is the 5.3-liter engine. But the test vehicle came with the upgraded 6.2-liter engine.

In keeping with its carlike, fancy qualities, it came with the optional power sunroof, and also had the Driver Alert package and trailer brake controller.

Just like the Chevy Silverado LTZ Crew Cab I tested recently, the Sierra Denali had a full four-wheel-drive system that includes low-range gearing through a two-speed transfer case, and an automatic-locking rear differential.

That made the truck suitable for almost any terrain. But as fancy as the Denali is, it's not likely that many buyers would relegate it to serious trail-driving much of the time — if any.

So instead of exploring the wild, the Sierra Denali is intended more as a truck version of the traditional luxury sedan, giving its owner premium carlike amenities in a vehicle that's a whole lot more versatile than the typical car.

With the front bucket seats and rear bench, the Denali can carry five passengers in leather-upholstered comfort, but it also can haul whatever you can load in the cargo bed, and can pull a trailer weighing up to 9,800 pounds (9,600 pounds for four-wheel-drive versions).

GMC / MCT

The Denali has a full four-wheel-drive system that includes low-range gearing through a two-speed transfer case, and an automatic-locking rear differential.

That makes it practical for a variety of personal and business applications, whether it be to take the family on a trip or haul a crew to a work site. As with the Silverado High Country model, the Chevy equivalent of the Sierra Denali 1500, this vehicle is a bit fancy to dedicate to crew hauling, but a rancher or business owner could easily use it as a combined personal and work vehicle.

Of course, crew cab models can be bought for a lot less if you can do without all the premium amenities found on the Denali. Sierra two-wheel-drive crew cab base models at about $35,000 can do most of what the Denali can do, just without the premium touches like the heated and cooled front seats, 20-inch chrome wheels, chrome body side moldings and grille, dual-zone automatic climate control, leather-wrapped/heated steering wheel (quite unusual for a truck), standard navigation system with premium Bose audio, universal garage/gate opener, power-adjustable pedals, and a power-sliding rear window with defroster.

very trucklike, either, even on a rough road. The suspension is smoother than you might expect, and the cabin is nearly as quiet as that of a nice sedan.

I found the 6.2-liter engine, with 420 horsepower and 460 foot-pounds of torque, to have plenty of power, coupled with the six-speed automatic transmission and the 3.42 rear axle. The four-wheel drive is activated by a rotary switch on the dash to the left of the steering wheel. EPA ratings are 15 mpg city/21 highway with two-wheel drive, and 14/20 with four-wheel drive.

There are full-size rear doors that open to the rear, allowing for easy passenger or cargo access to the rear seating area. The rear seat has a 60/40 split-folding arrangement so it can be moved out of the way to accommodate cargo that you might want to carry inside, out of the weather (such as your groceries, or the box carrying your new big-screen TV).

The Driver Alert package added high-tech safety features such as lane-departure warning, forward collision alert, and a safety-alert seat that vibrates to warn of a potential forward collision.

Standard on the Denali are the 6-inch oval chrome assist steps, moveable cargo tie-downs, and LED lights for the cargo box.

We also had front fog lights, a chrome exhaust tip, an underbody shield to help protect components from rocks and other off-road obstacles, front tow hooks, power/heated outside mirrors with integrated turn signals, hill-start assist, front and rear body-color bumpers, and the new EZ-Lift locking tailgate.

GM's new CornerStep bumper and built-in hand grips have been added to make it easier to step up into the bed. The tailgate is better balanced to make it easier to raise or lower.

The standard Denali 5.3-liter Ecotec Flex-Fuel V-8 comes with an aluminum block, cylinder deactivation, and ratings of 355 horsepower and 383 pound-feet of torque. Cylinder deactivation cuts out four of the cylinders during level highway cruising to improve gas mileage.

EPA ratings for the 5.3-liter engine are the best in the segment — even better than the F-150's EcoBoost V-6 engine — at 16 mpg city/23 highway with rear-wheel drive, and 16/22 with four-wheel drive.

hyperbole is to be believed, and underscores how government can affect the marketplace.

"For us, it's a matter of life and death," Musk told Texas lawmakers during his failed attempt last year to be exempted from the state law.

Bill Wolters, president of the Texas Automobile Dealers Association, raises the specter of dealerships, particularly in rural Texas, going out of business without legal protection against factory-owned dealerships: "All the Main Street merchants are gone except the car dealers."

Consumers are caught in the middle.

"How hard is Texas going to make it to buy a Tesla?" Abplanalp said earlier this month. "They made it really hard for me."

Tesla's Austin location is what the company calls a gallery.

Customers can look at a car but, under state law, can't test-drive it. The Tesla employee can explain the technology but cannot discuss price, take orders or direct the customer to the company's website.

Instead, the customer goes home to order the car online.

Periodically, Tesla is permitted to host limited test-driving opportunities in Texas. Abplanalp said she was unaware of that option when she combined her test-driving trip to San Francisco with a business trip.

"The average person isn't going to spend that kind of money without test-driving the car," she said.

Texas is one of four states — Maryland, Virginia and Arizona are the others — that prohibit Tesla's direct-sales model. But this year, New Jersey, New York and Ohio, at the behest of auto dealers, also are trying to limit Tesla's sales approach.

The battle over how Tesla wants to sell cars became muddled with the company's February announcement that it wants to build a $5 billion battery factory either in Texas, New Mexico, Nevada or Arizona.

Arizona lawmakers are considering changing their law as part of their incentive package to land the battery factory. Such a law isn't an issue in Nevada, and Tesla has no stores in New Mexico.

Texas Gov. Rick Perry last month called the state's law antiquated and suggested it should be changed, but his staff said he has no plans to call a special session on the topic. So the Legislature won't convene until January, probably after Tesla has named a winner in the battery plant sweepstakes. But the competition raises the issue anew as Texas cities vie for the jobs.

For example, San Antonio Mayor Julian Castro tweeted that the law should be changed when Tesla officials recently met with San Antonio leaders.

"They are the world's greatest at publicity and promotion," Wolters said of Tesla. "GM sells more in a day than Tesla does worldwide in a year."

Indeed, Tesla is a niche player in auto sales.

In his testimony last year, Musk estimated that Tesla would only sell 1,000 to 1,500 cars out of the 1.3 million new vehicles sold last year in Texas.

Tesla expects to increase its worldwide sales to 35,000 from 22,000 this year, but, by building its own lithium-ion batteries, the company hopes to cut the price of its next generation of cars in half and eventually sell as many as 500,000 vehicles worldwide. By comparison, global vehicle sales topped 83 million last year.

cars, and that galloping horse insignia at the front that created the "pony" class of cars.

It had world-record sales of 418,812 in its first year, four times the expected number, says Ford.

Longtime Chicago auto writer Dan Jeddicka said, "There was nothing mechanically advanced about the 2,572-pound Mustang. It was based on Ford's bland, reliable Falcon economy car."

The Mustang was marketed both to men wanting engine power and women seeking economy and style.

A 1966 TV commercial showed a young woman, her hair in a bun, dressed in a business suit, wearing glasses, peering into a Mustang. The male voice-over says, "Everything you could ask for on a secretary's salary. ..."

The commercial asks, "Should a single girl buy a Mustang?" It answers the question with wedding bells.

Another ad, playing on the best-selling Helen Gurley Brown book, "Sex and the Single Girl," said about the Mustang's six cylinders, "Six and the single girl."

The ad tells of the car's "husky, brute of an engine to squire her around."

For men, a print ad showed a photo of a guy yawning over a desk full of paperwork. The headline asked, "Should a harried Public Accountant drive a relaxed private fun car like a Mustang?"

The answer is the happy, smiling accountant sitting in a red Mustang convertible.

Another ad shows a guy in a white shirt and tie and glasses who spends his Sundays collecting seashells.

Then he starts driving a Mustang and suddenly becomes a life-guard, with the glasses gone, surrounded by three adoring "bathing beauties" he has saved.

For thrifty types, the basic model began at $2,368 — about $18,100 in today's dollars.

The money was made with all the additions. Famed car designer Carroll Shelby was even commissioned to build limited-edition versions that could beat Chevrolet Corvettes on the racetrack, Jeddicka said.

The sixth generation of the Mustang begins with the 2015 model, with news reports saying that Ford hopes for sales to increase from the 77,000 sold in 2013. It hopes to build from the momentum of celebrations this week, in which 100,000 Mustang fans, and 10,000 of their cars, are congregating in Las Vegas and Charlotte Motor Speedway in North Carolina.

Online retailers seek to reach, reassure buyers face-to-face

ALEXIA ELEJALDE-RUIZ
Chicago Tribune

CHICAGO — As a first-year law student with job interviews on the horizon, Huy Nguyen was in the market for a well-fitting suit that wouldn't blow his budget.

Online custom suit retailer Indochino enticed Nguyen with the right price and quality, but what ultimately sold him was a Facebook ad offering old-fashioned service: in-person measuring and styling at its "Traveling Tailor" pop-up shop in downtown Chicago.

"I like the in-person contact, having a professional's advice," said Nguyen, 22, who brought three fellow Chicago-Kent College of Law students with him to buy suits at the pop-up shop. "If I measure myself at home, I don't know if I'm doing it correctly."

As many traditional retailers scramble to boost their online presence in an age of rapid growth in e-commerce, a growing number of online retailers are investing in bricks-and-mortar shops to put in valuable face time with their customers.

Online menswear brand Bonobos was among the pioneers when it launched its physical Guidesshops, SEE ONLINE | E4

From farm to table Mount Dora restaurant, farm doing business locally

AUSTIN FULLER | Staff Writer
austin.fuller@dailyccommercial.com

Joshua Jungferman, the operating partner and general manager of Mount Dora's Pisces Rising, prefers smaller farms over big, industrialized farms.

"What seems more natural to me is a working farm. You know, where you can talk to the farmer," Jungferman said. "As a restaurant, it would be nice to be able to meet the farmer ... and maybe talk to him before he's seeding his next crop and let him know what you're looking at, what you want to do."

Jungferman said his restaurant is in the process of exploring its options to buy more of its ingredients locally, like it did in January when it began buying microgreens from ARC Greenhouses in Mount Dora.

Pisces Rising, however, is just one of approximately 15 area restaurants that buys from ARC Greenhouses, according to manager Rachel Vanlandingham. Those restaurants also include Cask & Larder and The Ravenous Pig in Winter Park, and Dally in the Alley in DeLand. ARC Greenhouses is the company and the brand is Mr. McGregor's Greens.

Vanlandingham said it is nice to be able to see where ingredients come from.

"Just like in Dally in the Alley in DeLand, they have a huge blackboard in there and it shows all of their local suppliers," Vanlandingham said. "Just to go in there and see, you know, oh, hey, these tomatoes are coming from so-and-so's farm, and hey, these microgreens are coming from Mr. McGregor's over in Mount Dora."

She added chefs can tour the farm's facilities and are able to talk to her about growing ingredients smaller or larger for their dishes, or suggest something that they might want grown.

"They can specify to me, as the grower and the supplier, exactly what they're looking for," Vanlandingham said.

Onion branches into digital media after exiting print

ROBERT CHANNICK
Chicago Tribune

The Onion is turning funny into money as a digital media company.

Two years after consolidating editorial operations in Chicago, the satirical weekly newspaper has ceased publication, its website is filled with commercial comedy videos and the company has launched its own advertising agency.

While real newspapers struggle to adapt to the changing media landscape, a fake one thinks it has figured out how to thrive in the digital age, with audience and revenue growing at a double-digit pace.

For Steve Hannah, chief executive officer and minority owner of The Onion, reinventing "America's Finest News Source" as a diverse digital media company has worked out better — and faster — than he imagined.

"We made some calculations and we got some of them right," said Hannah, 65. "So far, we haven't screwed it up."

Founded in 1988 by students at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, The Onion grew to national prominence by parodying the gravitas of newspapers with satirical headlines and stories, such as "Drugs Win Drug War." It staked out online turf in 1996 with the launch of TheOnion.com, sharing content between print and digital.

Current owners bought The Onion in 2001, led by money manager David Schafer. The editorial staff relocated to New York that year, leaving the corporate headquarters behind in Wisconsin. A former executive editor at the Milwaukee Journal, Hannah took the helm three years later.

Growing up on Chicago's north-west side, April always brought two things: another year of frustration at Wrigley Field, and the specter of tax day. Neither was a pleasant prospect. headquarters to Chicago in 2007, hoping to consolidate editorial and business operations here. That became an imperative during the recession in 2008 and 2009, when red ink forced The Onion to chart a new course — phasing out print operations and focusing on its websites.

In 2010, The Onion struck a deal with the Chicago Tribune and other partners across the country to publish, print and sell advertising for the publication. The strategy helped return The Onion to profitability, with digital driving revenue growth every year since, according to executives.

"The tough part about digital is getting enough scale to support an entire infrastructure of a company," said Mike McAvoy, 34, president of Onion Inc. "It's paying for everything now."

Last year, The Onion newspaper ended its run with the

Dec. 12 edition, a tongue-in-cheek paean to its "bright" future in print. Copies of the final issue are piled on a table near a couch in the waiting area of its River North offices, an open, 12,000-square-foot space housing giant video props, workstations, play areas and 80-plus employees navigating a dizzying creative maze.

In January 2013, The Onion relocated one block west of its old digs, where its banner still flies from the building. The move to larger quarters came less than a year after recalling its reluctant writers from New York to join The Onion's business staff and sister entertainment publication A.V. Club under one roof.

Bringing everyone together fomented a cultural change, getting editorial and business on the same page. It also laid the groundwork for Onion Labs, an in-house advertising agency that now accounts for more than half of The Onion's revenue, according to executives.

ABEL URIBE / MCT

Mike McAvoy is president of The Onion which, started as a satirical newspaper but has expanded into a digital media company featuring its comedic sensibility.

Last month, Rick Hamann, 41, a former creative director at Energy BBDO, was named to head Onion Labs, reflecting its growth and aspirations as a full-service creative agency.

Begun in 2012, Onion Labs was built to create branded video content for advertisers on The Onion website — basically custom commercials reflecting The Onion's comedic sensibility. Its premise is that advertisers pay much more for video than display ads across the Internet. The lure for marketers is reaching the elusive millennial audience that The Onion serves, with the hope that a commercial video might go viral, offering a jackpot return to the brand.

The Onion has honed its expertise in video through everything from the Onion News Network, an award-winning CNN parody, to Onion Sports-Dome, an ESPN parody. Both shows migrated to cable TV for short runs. Video spoofs abound on The Onion's website and its premium YouTube channel, drawing millions of viewers.

The Onion had 3.7 million unique visitors and The A.V. Club had 2.2 million unique visitors in March, according to comScore, figures that do not include mobile viewers. The Onion touts 15 million unique monthly visitors to its websites using data supplied by Google Analytics, up from 10 million two years ago. Google Analytics uses a different methodology that includes mobile viewers.

More than 47 percent of The Onion's audience is between 18 and 34, according to comScore. Broadly, that demo covers about 26 percent of the total Internet population.

The local restaurant purchases are mixed with distributor purchases, Vanlandingham said, and the farm is located at 3050 Britt Rd. in Mount Dora. The farm expanded to Mount Dora from its other location in New Jersey, according to the company's website.

Vanlandingham advised restaurants looking to participate in the farm-to-table movement not to be afraid to reach out to local farms to see if they sell to the public or restaurants and to establish those relationships.

"There should be more restaurants that are seeking to do farm to table, because ... it's becoming a trend that everybody wants to know where their food is coming from," Vanlandingham said.

She said Pisces Rising purchases micro rainbow mix and micro wasabi from the farm.

Meanwhile, Jungferman said Pisces Rising is exploring its options to source more locally, which includes looking for small-scale, local distributors, and they are currently talking with the company Local Roots. Local Roots' website states that it "only sources food from Florida farms of the highest standards."

He said it is the restaurant's responsibility to push clientele to locally sourced food.

"People look to us to know the right wine to pair with something. They look to us to know which spirits to mix together for a cocktail. They look to us for our recipes. So, I think that's an important platform ... we should use it fully to really explore the benefits of local — local and small, as opposed to the big, industrialized farms," Jungferman said.

Jungferman said buying locally has long been important to him and the chef, but they now are able to pursue sourcing locally as Jungferman became an operating partner of the restaurant in January.

"It is a financial undertaking. Usually, the food is a little costlier and then you're also spending time," Jungferman said. "And it's a newer concept."

He said while the restaurant is transitioning to using more local products, it has always sourced most of its seafood locally.

A study, titled Local Food Systems in Florida: Consumer Characteristics and Economic Impacts, by Alan W. Hodges and Thomas J. Stevens of the University of Florida's Food and Resource Economics Department, estimated the total value of all food purchased annually through local market channels in 2011-2012 in Florida at $8.314 billion.

Of that, the study states, $6.079 billion was through grocery stores; $1.813 billion through farmers markets, u-pick operations and roadside stands; $320 million came through restaurants and food service; $91.2 million came through special arrangements with producers and $11.4 million through Community Supported Agriculture organizations.

The study claimed an average of $1,114 spent annually per household on local food purchases.

The study values vegetables as the largest local food category at $1.699 billion. Fruits were valued at $1.574 billion; fish at $686 million; beef at $641 million; poultry at $569 million; beverages at $541 million; prepared foods, jams or jellies at $530 million; dairy at $489 million; honey at $439 million; pork, lamb and other meats at $393 million; eggs at $372 million and nuts at $315 million.

Local food purchases in 2011-2012 in Florida were estimated by the study to lead to an economic impact of 183,625 full- and part-time jobs.

The research was based on a mail survey in the summer of 2012 to 7,500 households and had 1,599 usable responses, according to the study.

The study also notes that "there was no standard accepted geographic definition of 'local' foods among survey respondents." Some of the definitions included in the survey results were within Florida, in the respondent's county or specific city, the Southeast or within a 100-mile radius from the respondent's home.

"I think it's consumer demand," said Danielle Treadwell, an associate professor of horticultural sciences at the University of Florida, of restaurants buying locally. "I think ultimately consumers pretty much drive demand and there has been a lot of education, a lot of media attention and a lot of word of mouth."

Citing the USDA Census of Agriculture, Treadwell said there are 44,519 farms in Florida, with 93 percent being small farms.

She added numerous reports and data show most small farms sell direct to consumer, which includes selling to a restaurant.

"To me, it's a no-brainer. I really would encourage restaurateurs to work with their local farmers and ranchers," Treadwell said. "Food, we know, is a lot more nutritious when it's consumed as quickly after harvest as possible. Purchasing things from other states that require days, if not weeks, to arrive, just aren't going to taste as good."

She added there are a lot of farmers and ranchers that work closely with chefs to provide specific products.

"Together, they are able to offer a real value to consumers that sort of sets them apart from the competition," Treadwell said.

Goodbye, billfold. Hello, smartphone

SEAN SPOSITO
The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

Here's the thing about Taka Torimoto: He's more likely to remember his smartphone than his billfold. And that spells opportunity for a whole raft of new players in the lucrative payments industry.

A 41-year-old technical consultant with an engineering degree from Georgia Institute of Technology, Torimoto has paid for fast food with the tap of his phone and sent money just as you would attachments in emails. His father digitally sends the grandkids cash for Christmas. No more checks.

Torimoto's voice rises with excitement as he talks about the new possibilities. "Payments is one area that is going in so many different directions."

For the first time since the advent of credit cards, there are new ways to pay that don't involve cash, check or plastic. Most are built on top of the existing payments system, but — courtesy of that hand-held computer in our pockets and purses — offer new vistas for both consumers and tech entrepreneurs.

"It's clear that the mobile phone is the device that people are going to be using in the future to pay," said David S. Evans, chairman of the Global Economics Group. "It's not going to be a plastic card."

By 2017, Forrester Research estimates, Americans will spend roughly $90 billion using a smartphone or other handheld device, a more than seven-fold increase from the amount spent in 2012. The firm's figures include mobile remote commerce; mobile peer to peer payments and remittances; and mobile proximity payments.

Even if its estimate is too optimistic — as projections in this arena have tended to be — the pace at which startups are emerging is already head-spinning: Stripe, PayNearMe and WePay, among more than a thousand others, fueled by billions of dollars in venture capital.

For consumers, mobile payments mean greater convenience and better security. For merchants and banks, they present new opportunities to track you and target sales pitches and rewards to you. And they give tech entrepreneurs a low-cost entry point into the multi-billion dollar payments pipeline.

So why aren't already living in a post-plastic world?

In part, because everyone involved in the chain — merchants, card issuers, traditional processors, tech innovators and consumers — is looking to maximize how much money they keep at the end of the day. Sometimes, the interests of two or more players align, but often they don't.

Sorting it out — via market forces and regulation — is likely to make for a period that's exciting, bewildering, messy and frustrating. And right now, we're at an inflection point, where what emerged as a handful of novelties is becoming a new way of doing business.

That's evident in the changes the incumbents are making. Banks, payment networks such as Visa, MasterCard, Discover and Amex, and the tech companies that serve them, such as FIS and Fiserv, are scrambling to keep up.

"In 2014, you'll see larger payments entities scramble to accelerate the pace of their innovation to catch up to these smaller and more nimble competitors," PayPal President David Marcus predicted in a blog post.

"Meanwhile, smaller players will scramble to achieve the scale and experience needed to compete in a global business," he wrote. "As a result, billions of dollars will be at play in the payment industry, and 2014 will be a year of game-changing disruption."

Last year, PayPal launched 58 new products, partly because of new threats, according to a recent New York Times report.

And earlier this year the e-commerce arm of eBay announced PayPal Beacon, a Bluetooth device that reads payment information from a smartphone. With that device, someone like a restaurant server would no longer have to take your card away from the table to complete a transaction.

That's in addition to a partnership with Discover, which lets folks use PayPal in the check-out line at some of the nation's largest merchants. PayPal has also recently acquired progressive payment processor Braintree, which has regulatory approval to move money nationwide.

It's marketing its services to mobile-based innovators such as Uber, Airbnb and TaskRabbit, which facilitate transactions between individual sellers and buyers of, respectively, rides, lodging and doers of household errands and other tasks.

And we haven't even talked yet about bitcoin and other cryptocurrencies, which operate in a parallel payments universe, completely outside the existing system.

To be sure, some of the innovations won't stick.

"Innovation and disruption is an inherently inefficient and lofty process," said Matt Harris, managing director at Bain Capital Ventures. He harkens back to the first wave of dotcoms, with its rash of failures.

"We are at that now, at least in consumer financial services," he said.

But some of the experiments will succeed, and at least a few will change the landscape for all of us.

A booth at the International Pizza Expo was devoted to costumes that could be worn on the street to advertise a business.

For pizza vendors, Vegas expo is a slice of heaven

JOHN M. GLIONNA
Los Angeles Times

LAS VEGAS — My old pal Vinnie the pizza guy called the other night. He's coming to town, but not to gamble: Pizza sauce makers, cheese peddlers — are gathering for their annual trade show and he plans to be there.

In exchange for use of my spare bedroom, he offers his services as my tour guide to a little-known event that is nevertheless one of the biggest happenings annually in the pizza world: the three-day International Pizza Expo, which this year would draw 8,000 avid attendees.

Vinnie Mineo is a second-generation pizza man who in 1965 opened his first shop, Vince's Pizzeria, in Buffalo, N.Y., where back then they called it pizza pie. Over the next half-century, he ran six pizza shops in western New York and later in Phoenix, before finally throwing in his apron a few years ago.

Now, he wants back into the game, and in a big way. He subscribes to "Pizza Today" magazine and every morning at his home in Mesa, Ariz., scours the Internet for his next pizza opportunity, looking for the lost soul who's so tired of the business he'll be willing to sell cheaply. I tried my first slice of Vinnie's pizza 35 years ago and I'll never forget the thin crust, loaded cheese and, oh man, that greasy pepperoni!

Just maybe, Vinnie figures, the pizza show will offer a few business to whittle their effective tax liability by moving profits overseas and escaping high U.S. corporate tax rates. And hedge fund managers can sometimes pay lower tax rates on incentive profits to lower their liabilities. And it's also true that some super wealthy folks, whose main source of income is from investments, sometimes pay closer to the 15 percent capital gains tax rate than the rate associated with their income level.

But for highly compensated wage earners? Their tax rate just went up, from 35 percent to 39.6 percent. There were also new restrictions on itemized deductions. And even investment income was taxed at a higher rate.

If your AGI is above $300,000, you can't deduct any charitable contributions on Form 1040, Schedule A. If a man making $75,000 a year wants to tithe (give 10 percent, or $7,500) to his church, he can deduct the donation and lower his taxes. But if someone who earned $400,000 last year wants to tithe (give $40,000) and has an AGI above $300,000, he can still give the money, but he can't deduct the contribution.

A proposal is also being considered limiting what high-income earners can contribute to qualified retirement accounts. One problem with this is that not all high earners have been salting away money in a retirement plan for years. Some are 30-year overnight successes, who have traditionally plowed any profits back into their businesses and need to make up for lost time in building up retirement accounts.

Folks with significant incomes are obvious targets in the goal to increase tax revenues. But we may be rapidly approaching a point of diminishing returns by increasing taxes on the highly compensated. More taxes may mean that these same folks have less money to expand their businesses and hire new employees. And this hinders economic growth.

Continuing to increase taxes on top earners may also actually create a wave of outsourcing, as business owners faced with a growing tax liability consider relocating in more tax-friendly climates like the Caymans.

offering fit and style advice, in 2011, and later made its apparel available at Nordstrom. Eyeglass retailer Warby Parker, as well as Gap Inc.-owned Athleta and Piperlime, are other digital success stories that have set up offline locations.

Online crafts market Etsy isn't opening its own stores but is developing a wholesale service to help its sellers get their wares into independent boutiques and large retail shops across the world. Etsy Wholesale, which launched in beta a year ago and will launch publicly in August, screens and assists sellers to ensure they are able to produce at the scale necessary to satisfy orders from buyers such as Nordstrom, West Elm and New York boutique Michele Varian.

The trend, which has accelerated during the past year, doesn't suggest a reverse commute from digital to physical as much as the mounting importance of hitting customers from all angles, said Joe Scartz, chief marketing officer for Digital BrandWorks, a Chicago-based consultant helping retailers thrive in a digital world.

Smartphone-wielding customers have come to expect an always-on shopping experience, including the option to walk into a store, Scartz said. And as many traditional stores face down showrooming — that's the practice of checking out the merchandise in-store and then finding the cheapest price online — by offering price-matching alongside the added value of their associates' expertise, online retailers are having to compete on more than price, he said.

"If these online retailers don't compete in an omnichannel way, they will lose ground to the bricks who are able to do this kind of thing," Scartz said, employing the retail world's favorite buzzword.

Though e-commerce is growing fast, up 17 percent last year compared with 3.5 percent growth for bricks-and-mortar stores, it represented just 5.8 percent of the $4.53 trillion in overall retail sales in the U.S. in 2013, according to eMarketer.

For some online retailers, pop-up shops are low-risk opportunities to dip into the offline waters without making major lease or inventory commitments, Scartz said.

Often, the real moneymaking remains online while the physical locations serve public relations or marketing purposes.

"Physical real estate is very expensive in desirable locations, and brands that choose to do this often have secondary goals other than sales, such as awareness, Web acquisition or branding," said Sucharita Mulpuru, an analyst with Forrester Research.

Gilt City, the local lifestyle arm of designer flash sale site Gilt, has been hosting occasional warehouse sales since its founding in 2011 to connect with its members and drive them to their brand partners' physical locations, said Steven Schneider, president and general manager of Gilt City.

Medications left at home cause vacation headaches

DEAR ABBY: I have worked in a pharmacy for 30 years, and every summer it's the same story. People forget their medication and leave it at home.

Why do people not realize that their meds should be one of the FIRST things they pack? Yes, we can call their pharmacist back home to get a transfer, but if the prescription was just filled, their insurance will not go through, or they'll have to wait while we call for a vacation override.

Please, people — remember your medications, and if you don't plan on spending a while sitting around our pharmacy waiting for us to call your hometown pharmacy, and possibly your insurance company, then don't get angry at us when it takes longer than the 15 minutes you expected.

I love my job. But I'm beginning to dread irresponsible, crabby tourists who know they need their blood pressure meds every day and expect us to drop whatever we're doing to take care of them. — PHRUSTATED PHARMACIST IN MONTANA

DEAR PHARMACIST: I sympathize with your "phrustration," so I'm printing your heartfelt letter, hoping it will help you to lower YOUR blood pressure. I don't think the people you describe are irresponsible as much as they may be disorganized.

The way I have solved this problem is to keep multiple copies of a printed list of items I must have when I travel. As I pack, I check them off my list — and before I close my travel bag, I double-check to make sure nothing has been forgotten. Perhaps others will find this helpful.

DEAR ABBY: What's up with penmanship these days? A few years ago, my mother gave me some old letters written by my grandfather to my grandmother. Some of them are treasures because the written words are not only loving and endearing, but the penmanship is beautiful. The script writings are actually examples of "art" in this modern age.

JEANNE PHILLIPS
DEAR ABBY

I work at a bank, Abby, and many of the signatures I see every day are illegible. Is written communication becoming obsolete? With the electronic age and schools going paperless, will penmanship become unnecessary? — MARY IN HUNTSVILLE, ALA.

DEAR MARY: Years ago, penmanship was routinely taught in the public schools, and students spent nearly an hour a day practicing how to write legibly. Today, I am told that 10 minutes is devoted to teaching students to PRINT. If the emails I receive are any indication, capitalization and punctuation are also being jettisoned. And if the electric grid ever goes down and battery power runs out, we'll have to start over with stone tablets and chisels.

DEAR ABBY: I know it's rude to ask workers how much money they make, but does that also apply to asking a student what his or her grades are? Aside from parents and teachers, I don't think it's anybody's business how I'm doing academically.

In my opinion, asking, "How are your grades?" is as rude as asking, "How much money do you make?" What do you think? — MATT IN EUGENE, ORE.

DEAR MATT: I'm with you. How about coming back with, "I'll forgive you for asking if you'll forgive me for not answering."

Opening lead — eight of spades.

Declarer's best-laid plans gang aft a-gley. So said the Scottish poet Robert Burns — if we may be permitted to paraphrase him — some two centuries ago. South surely planned his play correctly in the accompanying deal, but at the critical moment, East made an unusually good play that foiled South's plan.

West led a spade against two notrump. Declarer held up on the first two rounds and won the third with the ace. South then cashed the A-K-Q of hearts and A-K of diamonds, producing this five-card ending:

Declarer was well-aware that East had to have the ace of clubs for his opening spade bid. So he decided that his best chance to make the contract was to put East on lead with a spade at this point and force him to return a club to dummy's king. This would allow dummy to score the seventh and eighth tricks with the king of clubs and ten of hearts.

But when South led the nine of spades, West discarded a club, dummy a diamond and East, obviously a devotee of Robert Burns, followed with the three! As a result, declarer had to go down one. He unexpectedly scored a second spade trick, but it proved to be a Greek gift!

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, April 27, the 117th day of 2014. There are 248 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On April 27, 1521, Portuguese explorer Ferdinand Magellan was killed by natives in the Philippines.

On this date:

In 1509, Pope Julius II placed the Republic of Venice under an interdict following its refusal to give up lands claimed by the Papal States. (The pope lifted the sanction in February 1510.)

In 1777, the only land battle in Connecticut during the Revolutionary War, the Battle of Ridgefield, took place, resulting in a limited British victory.

In 1805, during the First Barbary War, an American-led force of Marines and mercenaries captured the city of Derina, on the shores of Tripoli.

In 1813, the Battle of York took place in Upper Canada during the War of 1812 as a U.S. force defeated the British garrison in present-day Toronto before withdrawing.

In 1822, the 18th president of the United States, Ulysses S. Grant, was born in Point Pleasant, Ohio.

In 1865, the steamer Sultana exploded on the Mississippi River near Memphis, Tenn., killing more than 1,400 people, mostly freed Union prisoners of war.

In 1938, King Zog I of the Albanians married Countess Geraldine Apponyi de Nagy-Aponyi.

In 1941, German forces occupied Athens during World War II.

In 1967, Expo '67 was officially opened in Montreal by Canadian Prime Minister Lester B. Pearson.

In 1973, Acting FBI Director L. Patrick Gray resigned after it was revealed that he'd destroyed files removed from the safe of Watergate conspirator E. Howard Hunt.

In 1982, the trial of John W. Hinckley Jr., who had shot four people, including President Ronald Reagan, began in Washington. (The trial ended with Hinckley's acquittal by reason of insanity.)

In 1994, former President Richard M. Nixon was remembered at an outdoor funeral service attended by all five of his successors at the Nixon presidential library in Yorba Linda, Calif.

HOROSCOPES

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Sunday, April 27, 2014:

This year you head down a new path, as you are determined to fulfil a goal that could affect your life. You transform, and your desires transform as well. You will discover the importance of staying true to yourself. If you are single, you could meet people who are not authentic and who can't offer you what you desire. Don't worry; someone who is true to him- or herself is likely to appear. If you are attached, your sweetie will need to catch up to you. Know that that might not happen until the new year. ARIES is a natural healer for you.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) You'll smile a lot, as if you have a secret you have not yet shared. Others will try to find out what is going on as they discover that your lips are sealed on this topic. Be spontaneous when making a purchase.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Try as you may, no one seems to be letting the cat out of the bag. The smart move would be to ignore the situation, as someone is likely to spill the beans. Make plans for yourself right now. You need some much-needed downtime.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You seem to have a secret or something you would prefer not to share. You seem to beam with this information, which could trigger a friend's curiosity. Go off and watch a game, but do not push too hard. Fatigue could be high.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) If you are not going on a mini day excursion, plan on going on one very soon. A change of pace always grounds you and helps you gain a new perspective. Whatever you do, you'll do it intensely.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Deal with one person at a time. You might be easily distracted, as a phone call or news from a distance could put you on high alert. A change seems to be flying your way. Are you ready for some diversity in the near future?

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You might want to seriously consider a partner's request. This person needs a change of pace.

JACQUELINE BIGAR
BIGAR'S STARS

Friends are likely to call you to head out and join them. Making a point to get some exercise, whether it is mental or physical, could reduce stress.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Just let others do their thing. Decide when you would like to join in and when you would prefer to do something else. You often give in for the sake of keeping the peace, which is one of the reasons why your anger is so close to the surface.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) You might be hard-pressed to follow through on a project and also get to a game on time. Know that you will manage to do both, if you want to. However, don't hesitate to adjust your plans. You need to let go of stress.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Let your imagination color your plans. You will have a great time, as will others. Curb any frustration you have toward a loved one who seem to be playing out a mock war. Do not feed this person's hostilities.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Stay close to home and handle a personal matter. An older parent or relative could seem out of sorts. Asking this person what is wrong might be a mistake. Invite him or her along if you have plans, but do not create more pressure.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Make some phone calls that you have been putting off. Your ability to read between the lines is an important skill, especially as someone is vested in not sharing. Do not push. Run some errands or meet up with friends.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Be aware of the cost of proceeding as you have been. You could pretend that your actions have no effect on others, and you actually might believe that. Revise your thinking. Make calls to a neighbor or dear friend to get together.

EXPO

leads. But what he really longs for are the expo's sights and smells — the spicy scent of salami and roasted peppers, the white wheels of Parmesan cheese and all the free samples.

He's always been his own boss, making pizzas long before the likes of Papa John and Chuck E. Cheese, and rolled his first ball of dough in a region where pizza is like air: It sustains life. Now 70, he arrives at the airport in a shirt printed with an island motif, sunglasses and long white hair the color of baker's flour.

As we walk toward the Las Vegas Convention Center, he can barely contain his enthusiasm. "You won't believe it," he gushes. "Everywhere you look, people trying to sell you slicers, sauces, ovens, every type of cheese and topping. It's an entire universe of pizza."

Closed to the public, the expo is the reserved domain of those who bring you the world's most popular food: from manufacturers and suppliers down to the proprietors of mom-and-pop pizzerias across America.

Inside, the showroom explodes like a Big Bang for the senses. Even the carpet is a feast for the eyes — a rich red, the color of a nice Bolognese sauce.

Each year, U.S. consumers spend $1 billion on pizza — a lot of dough, if you will. One in 8 people eat pizza on a given day; for males between 6 and 19, the rate rises to 1 in 4.

For pizza makers like Vinnie, the expo is like Christmas morning, full of surprises — only it's scented with anchovies, and the goodies include ventless fryers, auto-saucing machines and sturdy brick ovens.

"Brick ovens are the best," Vinnie says. "Fast and greaseless."

We examine vented pizza boxes with plastic liners to ensure the pie doesn't get soggy; displays for oil, yeast, spices and olives; racks of meats, sauces and cheeses; an app that allows customers to track their pizza delivery online. There are people selling vegan, organic and gluten-free pizzas as well as sauces with non-genetically-modified tomato seeds.

Vinnie eyes a display of pizza paddles; he prefers the metal kind: "It's easier to slide under the pizza."

He scouts for sauce that isn't too sweet; something with a little kick. He loves to try other people's pies — either deep-dish or thin crust, it doesn't matter.

He samples a frozen pizza. "My uncle had the idea for frozen pizza in the 1950s," he says, chewing. "He was ahead of his time. If he hadn't died, he would have been the king."

We pass workshops for aspiring entrepreneurs with titles like So, You Want to Open a Pizzeria and Common Pizza Startup Mistakes and How to Avoid Them. There are panel discussions on Health Care and the Pizzeria, and talks on how to make the best classic Neapolitan pie (with just tomatoes and mozzarella).

Most popular, however, are the World Pizza Games, where people compete at activities like rolling a wheel of uncooked dough along their shoulder blades. There's the fastest dough-rolling contest, the quickest pizza-box folding and the triathlon, which combines box-folding, dough-tossing and dough-stretching skills.

Nearby, Garrett Marlin waits for the dough-stretching contest. He won last year's event — stretching an 8-ounce mound of dough the widest, just over 38 inches — in five minutes. He explains the rules.

Any holes bigger than a dime and you're out. Judges frown on the "lick and stick" trick, in which contestants use saliva to stretch the dough. Three judges decide who wins the $1,000 first prize and, as important, Marlin says, the bragging rights.

JOHN M. GLIONNA / MCT

Andrew Scudera, a cook from Goodfellas Pizzeria School of New York, takes a fresh pie from the oven for the throngs to sample at the International Pizza Expo in Las Vegas.

"I never toss my dough to use gravity in the stretch," said Marlin, who runs a pizzeria in Fort Collins, Colo. "I keep my hands moving that dough as much as I can."

Everywhere we look, it's all one big pizza fraternity. Everybody seems to know each other. Passing men speak Italian. Many greetings involve pecks on both cheeks. We wander past signs with company names like Fontanini, Stella and Mangia Inc. Everybody's into the old-country atmosphere. Quipped salesman John Correll: "I say my real name is Correlli but that my family dropped the I."

Vinnie takes my arm: He wants me to meet his Buffalo pizza cronies. I've met many in the past, ever since my brother-in-law, Neil Downey, took me to Vinnie's shop in 1980. The two had been best friends since grade school and Vinnie always let Neil and his family eat for free.

Buffalo is full of such characters. For Vinnie, they're pizza royalty, guys like "Joey the Wing King," who, Vinnie says, runs the expo's biggest spread — serving up samples to advertise his two Buffalo pizzerias and a frozen chicken wing business.

At 47, Joe Todaro is a Buffalo native who each year hires young women in short skirts to dole out his slices and wings. Dressed in a white chef's jacket, he says his family started in the pizza business in 1957. Nowadays, his company La Nova sells 500,000 pounds of chicken wings a week.

"I'm a pizza guy; it's in my blood," he says. "I love the energy here. Every year, I just wander around here to take it all in."

Then we spot the "Pepperoni Queen," Valarie Rossman, a supplier who once enjoyed making stops at Vinnie's Phoenix shop. "You were always so good to your mother," she says, squeezing his arm.

Pepperoni, along with cheese, remains the nation's most popular pizza topping, studies show. Rossman gestures to a display that includes Italian dry salami, genoa and linguica. Asked why pepperoni pizza is so flavorful, she explains the phenomenon sometimes known as the "grease bomb."

Slide a pizza into the oven and after a while the pepperoni curls up at the edges, creating a little bowl of oil that provides the flavor. "We leave the casing on the pepperoni," she says, "so it curls up."

Our mouths water. Vinnie never finds his pizza opportunity, but it doesn't matter. On the loudspeaker blares the Pharrell Williams hit "Happy." Vinnie is smiling.

Still, our stomachs are full and our feet weary. A day of sampling the pizza universe leads to a quick culinary choice: Cuban food for dinner.

with the ground, which is pushing back. This is not so during a free fall," Criss said.

For this thrill, check out the 150-foot Dr. Doom's Fearfall at Universal's Islands of Adventure or The Twilight Zone Tower of Terror at Disney's Hollywood Studios. The Tower, which opened in 1994, drops riders 13 stories, brings them back up and drops them straight down again, all in the dark.

Opening May 1 is Falcon's Fury at Busch Gardens Tampa Bay. This unique tower will take guests up 300 feet, pivot so they are looking face-down at the ground and then drop at 60 miles per hour.

LIGHTS OUT

When a drop or twist comes without warning, the resulting rush is even sweeter. From Space Mountain at Disney's Magic Kingdom to Harry Potter and the Forbidden Journey at Universal's Islands of Adventure, dark rides rely on the element of surprise to intensify thrills. Many also feature lit scenes and visual effects.

A favorite: Revenge of the Mummy at Universal Studios. As if fire-breathing mummies weren't enough to get the blood pumping, the attraction combines special effects with coaster speeds.

Harry Potter and the Forbidden Journey uses robotic arm technology to make it feel as though you are flying in and out of harrowing scenes from the movies.

SHOT OUT OF A CANNON

No matter how you prepare yourself for the sudden jolt associated with launch coasters, when it hits, it hits hard. One moment you are sitting still then, bam, electromagnets propel the ride car from zero to rocket speed. Cheetah Hunt, Florida's newest launch coaster, is open at Busch Gardens. Others include Rock 'N' Roller Coaster at Disney's Hollywood Studios and The Incredible Hulk at Universal's Islands of Adventure.

A LITTLE LOOPY

Many of Florida's premiere coasters feature signature loops. Loops are exhilarating because the human body experiences multiple sensations in a short period of time, said Tom Henderson of the Physics Classroom.

Though coasters move through a loop in mere seconds, the forces at work change drastically from one point to the next. This explains why riders feel pressed to the seat going into the loop and nearly weightless at the top.

"Roller coasters thrill us because of their ability to accelerate us downward one moment and upward the next," Henderson said.

Get loopy on Florida's Garden's Tampa Bay at SeaWorld Orlando.

SUPER

Water rides are a small drop that ends in real belly flips. At the end. Adventure soakers are Splash Disney World's the Jurassic Park and Dudley saw Falls at Universal of Adventure and Atlantis at SeaWorld end with a r dropping guests.

2014 Basketball Summer Camps

You Want To Play?

Is your player looking for a basketball camp that is challenging, educational, and fun? Former NBA player Pat Burke and 6 time European Champion has created a camp that assists each player in many aspects of the game of basketball and life. Each camp is designed to introduce campers to setting their goals and achieving them throughout the week. Imagine your player taking the next step this summer in getting to his or her next level on and off the court. You don't want to miss it!
