Tea party is losing races but tugging GOP rightward

CHARLES BABINGTON

Tuesday's high-profile primary elections may extend a streak of sorts for tea party Republicans: losing individual races but winning the larger ideological war by tugging the GOP rightward.

Tea party-endorsed candidates are struggling in Tuesday's Republican congressional primaries in Georgia, Kentucky and Idaho. In each state, however, the "establishment" Republican candidates have emphasized their conservative credentials, which narrows the party's philosophical differences.

Citing similar dynamics in other states, Democrats say the GOP candidates who are trying to give Republicans control of the Senate will prove too far right for centrist voters in November.

Republicans need to gain six Senate seats to control the chamber. Holding Kentucky and Georgia against well-funded Democrats, both women, is crucial to their hopes.

Six states hold primaries Tuesday. Georgia, Kentucky and Oregon have closely watched Republican contests for Senate. Pennsylvania and Arkansas have feisty gubernatorial primaries.

In Idaho, tea party-backed lawyer Bryan Smith is trying to oust Republican Rep. Mike Simpson, who's seeking a ninth House term.

In Kentucky, tea partyers would love to

Cemex faced uphill battle with sand mine

Several Lake County commissioners say they had concerns about the effects of a controversial sand mine in south Lake on adjacent landowners, agricultural resources and traffic issues on U.S. Highway 27.

CEMEX proposed the 1,196-acre sand mine in the center of the planning area of the Wellness Way Sector Plan.

The sector plan would transform 16,000 acres in the southeast corner of the county into a hub for high-tech health care jobs and other

FFA helps shape Tavares High School senior Krista Wilson's life

CLASS OF THE CLASS
Meet some special seniors from this year's graduating class

Having been in Future Farmers of America all four years of high school, Tavares High School senior Krista Wilson made it this year to the state level in the tractor operations competition.

"This has pretty much been my high school life," Wilson said of FFA.

In order to reach the state competition, Wilson won both the sub-district and district-level competitions.

"It was pretty much a relief when I won it, because I was so excited because I've worked four years to try to get the state level," Wilson said.

Wilson, who finished seventh out of 12 in the state competition, said she had competed in other competitions in the past, but this year focused only on tractor operations in order to study more for it.

Jessica Holland, the agriculture instructor and FFA advisor at Tavares High School, also saw the level of work Wilson put into preparing for the competition.

"I think her going to the state level for tractor is amazing because she's put so much hard work into it over the last four years," Holland said. "She was a little disappointed to get seventh, but she took it very well and knew what she could improve upon and that shows a great person, in my opinion. … Also, I did some checking and found out that she was the first female to compete at the state level (in Florida) for that contest, and that was very humbling for her and me."

Wilson said she had been involved in music since the first grade and was in band her industries, which would attract people who like to bike, walk and enjoy an active, healthy lifestyle.

Wellness Way has been called the largest piece of undeveloped property left in Lake County. The tract runs east of US 27 along the Orange County border, running south from State Road 50 to U.S. Highway 192.

Commissioner Sean Parks said he was pleased CEMEX withdrew its application.

"I have had serious concerns all along about the compatibility with the Wellness Way Sector Plan," he said. "There were some traffic and health issues that needed to be addressed. I am concerned about the effects on water resources and some agricultural resources."

Additionally, a health expert previously said there are questions about mining and its effects on public health because of the particulates it generates.

Crispin Pierce, an associate professor and program director for the Environmental Public Health Program at the University of Wisconsin-Eau Claire, recently concluded an air quality study at mining sites, which showed higher levels of PM2.5 — the particulates mining generates, including silica — than what was reported by the Department of Natural Resources.

"Even in digging it out and loading it in a truck you are generating those small particulates (of silica)," he previously said. "Without monitoring by an independent agency, we don't have the kind of assurance we need to protect public health."

In a letter dated May 13 to County Attorney Sandy Minkoff, CEMEX's attorney, Roger Sims, wrote the company wished to withdraw its application for conditional use approval "after reviewing a large number of objection letters received … which raise concerns about alleged traffic impacts from the project.

"CEMEX prefers to understand such concerns, determine their validity and determine whether they should be addressed with proactive measures requiring amendments to the application …" Sims wrote.

More than 100 people recently attended a meeting in Clermont to oppose the plans for the sand mine. Many area residents — mainly in the Kings Ridge development — were concerned about traffic, noise and dust from the mine. Some residents talked about chartering buses to the county commission meeting on Tuesday, where the CEMEX request was slated to be heard before it was withdrawn.

Commissioner Jimmy Conner also expressed concerns.

"There were legitimate concerns raised by adjacent landowners and by people who live in Kings Ridge," he said.

But Sara Engdahl, director of communications for CEMEX USA, said in a press release, "There are rumors and statistics regarding our project that are false."

Asked what specifically Engdahl was referring to, she cited the traffic concerns.

"Per an independent traffic study of the potential impacts of the mine, the traffic impacts to Highway 27 would be insignificant, less than 1 percent of the highway's capacity," she wrote in an email message, stating there would be 300 round trips by sand trucks made per day.

There are 21,500 vehicles that travel in that area daily, according to the county's Department of Public Works, which confirmed the sand mine trucks would make up roughly 1.4 percent of the highway's traffic.

Even so, county officials have said they have concerns about dust being kicked up by the trucks on Schofield Road, a clay road in the vicinity of the proposed sand mine.

"A clay road is a dirt road, and if you put 300 trucks on it, it is going to create dust," said Commissioner Tim Sullivan. "I think one of the ways to mitigate that is to pave that road."

Like Parks, Sullivan said he had concerns about the sand mine's impact on agricultural resources.

"Agriculture is a huge part of the Lake County economy," he said. The sand mine "needs to fit the character of the community."

Commissioner Leslie Campione credited CEMEX for recognizing "that issues being raised were genuine and they were of concern to the county commission."

Asked if she believed the county had valid concerns regarding the issues raised, Engdahl wrote: "The project has received all other permits required to construct and operate other than commission approval, as well as from the Planning and Zoning Board."

But at the same time, Engdahl also wrote, "CEMEX believes, however, that taking time to work through these concerns regarding our application is in the best interest of both Lake County and CEMEX."

McConnell, caught off guard by the tea party movement in 2010, has scrambled to win support from conservatives who dislike compromise. He quickly allied himself with Sen. Rand Paul, who defeated McConnell's hand-picked candidate in the 2010 primary.

And in February, McConnell voted against raising the debt ceiling, a never-pleasant vote that past party leaders often swallowed to avert a government default.

Republican primaries. When the U.S. Chamber of Commerce endorsed Kingston, Broun called him "the king of pork."

That tag might have fit a few years ago. Kingston, a longtime Appropriations Committee member, has proudly steered millions of federal dollars to his district.

But tea party-driven attacks on federal spending have sent Republicans scurrying to tighter-fisted ground. Kingston raised eyebrows in January when he voted against an appropriations bill after working hard to insert funding for Savannah's port.

In a sign of the narrowing differences between tea party activists and traditional Republican groups, Kingston was endorsed by Brent Bozell, an outspoken critic of Republican "moderation."

Bozell, who founded the conservative Media Research Center, said of the Republican primaries: "With virtually no exception, everyone is running as a conservative. No one is running as a moderate, no one is running as an anti-tea-partyer."

"I didn't get any questions or hate or putdowns or anything like that," said Barnett, now 18, adding that they called him Isaac immediately — a drama-free coming-out that would have been extraordinary in schools a decade ago.

With children rejecting the birth gender at younger ages and the transgender rights movement gaining momentum, schools in districts large and small, conservative and liberal, are working to help transitioning youth fit in without a fuss.

California this year became the first state with a law spelling out the transgender student rights in public schools, including the ability to use restrooms and to play on sports teams that match their expressed genders.

Another 13 states prohibit discrimination on the basis of gender identity in schools. Dozens of districts, from Salt Lake City and Kansas City to Knoxville, Tennessee, and Decatur, Georgia, have adopted similar protections.

Parents are increasingly seeking a comfortable learning environment for their transgender children, according to Transgender Legal Defense and Education Fund Executive Director Michael Silverman.

There's "a new generation of parents who grew up in the age of the gay rights movement and are saying, 'We want to do what is best for our children,'" he said.

The trend is likely to accelerate with help from the federal government.

Last month, the U.S. Education Department alerted districts in a memo on sexual violence that it would welcome civil rights complaints from transgender students under Title IX, the 1972 law that bans gender discrimination at schools.

Kim Pearson, training director of Trans Youth Family Allies, estimates that for every case that makes headlines there are dozens that are resolved quietly and easily.

Since she co-founded the support and advocacy group in 2007, Pearson has worked with parents and educators in half of the states. "If a school wants to get it, they will," Pearson said.

Dragon returns from space station

MARCIA DUNN
AP Aerospace Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL — The commercial cargo ship Dragon returned to Earth from the International Space Station on Sunday, bringing back nearly 2 tons of science experiments and old equipment for NASA.

SpaceX's Dragon splashed into the Pacific, just five hours after leaving the orbiting lab.

After a one-month visit, the SpaceX cargo ship was set loose Sunday morning. Astronaut Steven Swanson, the station commander, released it using the big robot arm as the craft zoomed more than 260 miles above the South Pacific.

"Very nice to have a vehicle that can take your science, equipment and maybe someday even humans back to Earth," Swanson told Mission Control.

The SpaceX Dragon is the only supply ship capable of returning items to Earth. The others burn up on re-entry. This was the fourth Dragon to bring back space station goods, with 3,500 pounds aboard; it came down off Mexico's Baja California coast.

NASA is paying SpaceX and Virginia-based Orbital Sciences Corp. to make station deliveries. Orbital is next up, next month. Russia, Europe and Japan also make occasional shipments.

Project SOS donates wheelchairs to children

Staff Report

Project SOS recently made another round of motorized wheelchair donations to three students at Lake Hills School.

"Lake Hills is very fortunate that they have graciously reached out beyond their traditional scope of services to assist our children," school Principal Robin Meyers said of Project SOS in a press release. "Their generous donations have given our students a newfound freedom of mobility and independence."

Located in Howey-in-the-Hills, Lake Hills School serves students with moderate to profound disabilities. Three students received wheelchairs last year. This year's recipients were LaFabian Irvine, Jaymie Gleash and Sophie Joseph.

The primary goal of Project SOS is to provide services to veterans and their families in times of need, the press release said. The charity foundation was established in 2009 by Gary Kadow and supports U.S. military serving overseas, disabled veterans and homeless veterans.

Initially, Project SOS provided medical and surgical supplies to U.S. military personnel carrying out humanitarian missions in Iraq and Afghanistan. This resulted in the opening of 22 medical clinics and one pediatric hospital to treat the children caught in wartime conditions, the press release said. All these facilities were operated by U.S. military medical battalions, and thousands of children's lives were saved as a result of the troops' efforts.

During the past year, Project SOS shifted its effort from overseas because of troop withdrawals and now concentrates on the local area by providing motorized wheelchairs to disabled veterans, and also providing clean water, food, clothing, shelter and medical care to our homeless veterans in the Central Florida area.

Project SOS has distributed 42 motorized wheelchairs and numerous mobility devices to local veterans who have served in World War II, up to and including those returning from Afghanistan. This is in addition to caring for our homeless veterans and families living in the Ocala National Forest.

Deltona woman reunited with daughter after nearly five years

Associated Press

A Central Florida woman was joyously reunited with her daughter after nearly five years after authorities tracked the girl down in Mexico.

The Volusia County Sheriff's Office said Jodie Borchert of Deltona was reunited with her 12-year-old daughter Saturday in Miami, where the girl was transported after being found in the mountainous region of Hidalgo, Mexico, about two hours outside Mexico City. The child's father, Aaron Cox, fled with the girl in August 2009, police said.

Cox, 55, was arrested and charged with interference with child custody. He is being held in Miami, awaiting extradition to Volusia County. It's not known whether he has obtained an attorney.

"It is such a huge relief to bring this case to a successful conclusion," said Brandon Haught, a spokesman for the Volusia County Sheriff's Office. "Reports are the girl is extremely happy to be reunited with her family."

Authorities have pursued the case since the girl's disappearance, but said no viable leads had emerged until Monday, when a tip was received at the National Center For Missing and Exploited Children. Over the following five days, the Volusia County Sheriff's Office worked with U.S. Marshals, the State Attorney's Office and the Florida/Caribbean Regional Fugitive Task Force.

Cox was arrested without incident, authorities said. The man and his daughter had been living in Mexico under assumed names.

In tiny Cortez, no mail delivery is no problem

CHRIS ANDERSON
Sarasota Herald-Tribune

CORTEZ — A few times a week 88-year-old Mary Green hops in her 2005 Honda and drives three blocks to the post office. She has to. There is no mail delivery to her home.

In fact, no one in the historic fishing village of Cortez — population of roughly 4,000 — receives home mail delivery or has a mail box.

"We like it that way," Green said.

United States Post Office, Cortez, Florida, 34215, is usually a busy place most mornings. Residents walk or take their cars or ride their golf carts to pick up their mail.

The mail is kept locked up in one of 1,318 small post office boxes residents can access with a key. Until the mid-1990s, the mailboxes had combination locks on them.

It is not unusual for small towns in Florida not to receive home mail delivery, but it is not commonplace either.

Residents say they like it this way for several reasons: it is a way to meet socially, get exercise, check the neighborhood message board on the side the building and retain part of the village's rich history.

They also don't want home mailboxes for safety reasons. "I've heard lots of stories and seen people lose checks in mailboxes," resident Richard Culbreath said. "When you raise that red flag, that's a telltale sign and people will come in.

"We've never had any mailboxes. Whenever there is any talk about bringing them in we always say we don't want them."

Culbreath is 80 and walks about a mile most days to the post office on Cortez Road.

The post office is in a small strip mall next to a barbershop, restaurant and laundry. Some residents, like former Postmaster Wyman Coarsey, walk up for coffee at the restaurant and then check their mail.

"Sometimes I see people here I wouldn't see otherwise, so it's kind of a social thing," resident Atlas Kight said.

She moved to Cortez in 1961 and believes the current post office has been at its present site since 1960. She worked at the Cortez post office for many years, retiring in 1989.

Green — who, at 88, is the oldest woman living in Cortez who was born there — is well-known for her historical knowledge of the village.

The original post office was built in 1895 and was part of what was called "Bratton Store." That building has been preserved in the village.

Green said a man named Henry Foreman used to carry mail back and forth between Cortez and Bradenton on a one-seat horse buggy.

Green said the post office moved to a fishing dock, but was destroyed by a fierce hurricane in 1921.

It then was moved to a grocery store owned by her uncle, Thomas Fulford, until it was given to an 18-year-old woman named Elizabeth Guthrie, who became the postmaster.

"I think it was remarkable," Green said. "She was probably the youngest postmaster in Florida, and she was a woman."

Her parents, Bessie and Joe, ran the post office. They also owned the Albion Inn, which is where the post office was.

It also moved to a house across the street from the hotel for a time before it landed at its current location.

Green remembers attending Florida State College for Women in the 1940s and sometimes receiving several letters a day from back home. Her friends thought she had a lot of boys trying to date her.

"Everyone thought I was some hot chick," she said.

The letters were really from a boy in Cortez who had a crush on her but she never dated. He kept writing her anyway.

On Friday she was planning on driving her Honda to the post office to drop off a birthday card for her 10-year-old great-grandson.

The Cortez post office has long been part of her history as well as the fishing village's history. "And we like to keep our history alive," she said.

STOGIES

Mark Cleveland, Travis Gilrane and Amanda Cooksey.

Graham said Boleros wants to make Suds, Stogies and Songwriters an annual event.

"There has been good feedback about seeing all the artists do only original works. A lot of these artists perform here on a regular basis throughout Lake County, but they all do covers, because that is what the audience usually wants to hear," she said of the singers performing popular songs recorded by other artists.

"It was really a cool idea to put them together to just do original works," said Graham, noting Suds, Stogies and Songwriters was the brainchild of her boyfriend, Mark Zinkiewicz, a local muisican, who books musicians for bars and restaurants at Al's Corner in Tavares.

"He knows a lot of musicians, and he knows that a lot of them have great original stuff," she said.

Graham has owned Bolero's Cigar and Wine Bar since June 2013, and the event allowed her to showcase a variety of craft beers and wine for attendees to sample in a taste-testing hosted by national craft beer company, Sierra Nevada.

Ceijas Ernesto, a professional cigar roller, and Dayana Allegues, both from Tampa, also were at the event demonstrating the cigar-making craft for attendees inside Boleros.

"It takes about three minutes," Ernesto said of the amount of time he spends rolling one cigar before it is placed in a press for one hour.

"The cigars are very popular," Graham said, marveling over Ernesto's talent in creating each one.

"He's doing a hand-rolled demonstration and it's an awesome part of [the event]."

Coffee fungus raising prices for high-end blends

MARY CLARE JALONICK
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The U.S. government is stepping up efforts to help Central American farmers fight a devastating coffee disease — and hold down the price of your morning cup.

At issue is a fungus called coffee rust that has caused more than $1 billion in damage across Latin American region. The fungus is especially deadly to Arabica coffee, the bean that makes up most high-end, specialty coffees.

Already, it is affecting the price of some of those coffees in the United States.

"We are concerned because we know coffee rust is already causing massive amounts of devastation," said Raj Shah, head of the U.S. Agency for International Development.

On Monday, he was expected to announce a $5 million partnership with Texas A&M University's World Coffee Research center to try to eliminate the fungus.

But the government isn't doing this just to protect our $4 specialty coffees, as much as Americans love them. The chief concern is about the economic security of these small farms abroad. If farmers lose their jobs, it increases hunger and poverty in the region and contributes to violence and drug trafficking.

Washington estimates that production could be down anywhere from 15 percent to 40 percent in coming years, and that those losses could mean as many as 500,000 people could lose their jobs. Though some countries have brought the fungus under control, many of the poorer coffee-producing countries in Latin America don't see the rust problem getting better anytime soon.

Guatemala, El Salvador, Honduras, Panama and Costa Rica have all been hard hit.

Much of the blander, mass-produced coffee in this country comes from Asia and other regions. Most of the richer, more expensive coffees are from small, high altitude farms in Central America. Because the farms are smaller, farmers there often don't have enough money to buy the fungicides needed or lack the training to plant in ways that could avoid contamination.

The rust, called roya in Spanish, is a fungus that is highly contagious due to airborne fungal spores. It affects different varieties, but the Arabica beans are especially susceptible. Rainy weather worsens the problem.

"We don't see an end in sight anytime soon," said Leonardo Lombardini of Texas A&M's World Coffee Research.

So far, major U.S. coffee companies have been able to find enough supply to avoid price increases. But some smaller outfits already have seen higher prices, said Ric Rhinehart of the Specialty Coffee Association of America.

Rhinehart said the worst-case scenario is that consumers eventually will pay "extraordinarily high prices for those coffees, if you can find them at all."

He said some very specialized varieties from a single origin — Guatemalan antigua coffees, for example — have been much harder to source. If the problem continues, he says, some small coffee companies either will raise prices or use blends that are easier to find, decreasing the quality of the coffee.

Larger companies such as Starbucks and Keurig Green Mountain Inc. have multiple suppliers across the region and say they have so far been able to source enough coffee.

"It's a little bit too soon to tell what the impact will be on supply and long term quality over time," said Lindsey Bolger, who heads up coffee sourcing for Keurig Green Mountain.

freshman year, but had to make a difficult choice to quit band in order to do FFA.

"So, it was kind of a tough decision, but I think it was one of the best decisions," she said.

Wilson said she wants to become an agriculture teacher, because she loves helping students and other FFA members. She is currently thinking about joining the Navy before going to college.

"She's also stepped up in a big way this year and last year, as a junior, with helping teach the younger students, 'This is how you groom your steer. This is how you should be feeding and finishing out your hog. This is the stuff you need to gather for fair,'" Holland said.

Wilson said she was soft-spoken and shy as a freshman, and FFA helped her become better at public speaking.

"This year I'm loud and proud. I'll get up in front of a hundred people and talk to them. I love talking in front of people now, it's one of my favorite things to do," Wilson said.

Wilson was the FFA parliamentarian her sophomore year, started as vice president her junior year before becoming president during that year and was the president for her senior year.

Holland said this is her first graduating class as she has been teaching for four years, and it has been rewarding to see Wilson blossom over the four years they have known each other.

"I've seen Krista grow tremendously, in not only being more comfortable speaking with people, from her freshman year to her now senior year, but also being more willing to take on those initiatives," Holland said.

In addition to the tractor competition this year, Wilson also had numerous animals in the Lake County Fair and won multiple awards. She has shown animals and won awards each year.

"Raising livestock, that's like one of my favorite things to do, and I love showing. It's one of my big drives that I love," Wilson said.

"I always look forward to April when the county fair is in town."

She added it was somewhat hard balancing taking care of her animals with the preparation for the tractor competition.

Holland said Wilson has been a big exhibitor at the fair all four years.

"She's always come to me and said, 'I want to show this, I want to show this.' I didn't have to go and push her to do anything, it was her drive, her initiative," Holland said.

Bosnia flooding triggers landslides, unearths mines

SABINA NIKSIC and JOVANA GEC
Associated Press

DARKO VOJINOVIC / AP

A man walks in front of a his flooded home in the village of Veliki Crljeni, some 18 miles south of Belgrade, Serbia, on Sunday.

BRCKO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Floodwaters triggered more than 2,000 landslides across much of the Balkans on Sunday, laying waste to entire towns and villages and disturbing land mines left over from the region's 1990s war, along with warning signs that marked the unexploded devices.

The Balkans' worst flooding since record keeping began forced tens of thousands of people from their homes and threatened to inundate Serbia's main power plant, which supplies electricity to a third of the country and most of the capital, Belgrade.

Authorities organized a frenzied helicopter airlift to get terrified families to safety before the water swallowed up their homes. Many were plucked from rooftops.

Floodwaters receded Sunday in some locations, laying bare the full scale of the damage. Elsewhere, authorities warned that the water would keep rising into Sunday night.

"The situation is catastrophic," said Bosnia's refugee minister, Adil Osmanovic.

Three months' worth of rain fell on the region in three days, producing the worst floods since rainfall measurements began 120 years ago. At least two dozen people have died, with more casualties expected.

The rain caused an estimated 2,100 landslides that covered roads, homes and whole villages throughout hilly Bosnia.

The cities of Orasje and Brcko in northeast Bosnia, where the Sava River forms the natural border with Croatia, were in danger of being overwhelmed. Officials in Brcko ordered six villages to be evacuated.

Rescuers urged people to go to the balconies or rooftops of their houses with bright fabric to make themselves visible.

Brcko Mayor Anto Domic said that unless the Bosnian Army is able to reinforce from the air, the city will be flooded completely. He called for the Defense Ministry to use helicopters to lower steel barriers that could be backed by sandbags to contain the water.

"It is a very demanding task," he said, acknowledging that officials would have no other way to protect the port city of more than 70,000.

Civil protection commander Fahrudin Solak said the Sava River was spilling over another portion of the flood barrier in Orasje while emergency workers tried desperately to reinforce it with sandbags.

In Serbia, where floods have inundated towns and villages, authorities braced for high water that could last for several more days.

Serbian Prime Minister Aleksandar Vucic said Sunday that 12 bodies have been found so far in Obrenovac, site of the coal-fired Nikola Tesla power plant, Serbia's biggest.

Parts of the plant and a nearby mine that provides its fuel were underwater.

Serbia's state power company, EPS, said crews were doing all they could to prevent any further damage to the plant. Damage to the mine alone is estimated at more than 100 million euros ($137 million).

Serbia's energy minister, Aleksandar Antic, appealed to people to conserve power, calling the threat to the plant "very serious."

The floods and landslides raised fears about the estimated 1 million land mines planted during Bosnia's 1992-95 war. Nearly 120,000 of the unexploded devices remain in more than 9,400 carefully marked minefields. But the weather toppled warning signs and, in many cases, dislodged the mines themselves.

Beyond the danger to Bosnians, any loose mines could also create an international problem if floodwaters carry the explosives downstream. Experts warned that mines could travel through half of southeast Europe or get stuck in the turbines of a hydroelectric dam.

From the air, the northeastern third of Bosnia resembled a huge muddy lake, with houses, roads and rail lines submerged. Officials say about a million people — more than a quarter of the country's population — live in the worst-affected areas.

The hillside village of Horozovina, close to the northeastern town of Tuzla, was practically split in two by a landslide that swallowed eight houses. More than 100 other houses were under threat from the restless earth. Residents told stories of narrow escapes from injury or death.

"I am homeless. I have nothing left, not even a toothpick," Mesan Ikanovic said. "I ran out of the house barefoot, carrying children in my arms."

Ikanovic said 10 minutes separated him and his family from likely death. He carried his 7-year-old daughter and 4-year-old son to safety.

He said he had secured a mortgage and moved in only last year. "Now I have nothing," he said. "Where will I go now? Where will we live?"

Semid Ivilic's house in the lower part of the village was still standing. But looking up at the mass of earth and rubble that engulfed his neighbors' homes, he said he was worried.

"Nobody is coming to help us," he said.

The final person to evacuate a village near Brcko said he had lost everything he valued.

"I was the last one to leave," said 72-year-old Anto Zuparic. "I left everything behind, my cattle and everything else. I do not know what to do. I am glad I won't live much longer anyway."

Europe's highest court strikes a blow for censoring history

Judges on Europe's highest court may have thought they were striking a blow for individual privacy when they ruled Tuesday that search engines could be ordered to stop linking to sensitive or older information about people online, even if it had been lawfully published. Instead, they were creating an entitlement to censor history, or at least to make parts of the public record harder to find.

The case began when a Spanish lawyer, Mario Costeja Gonzalez, did a Google search on his own name and found links to embarrassing legal notices that a Barcelona newspaper had published in 1998 announcing a real estate auction to pay his social security debts. After Spain's data protection agency ruled that the newspaper could leave the pages online but Google couldn't link to them, Google appealed to the European Court of Justice. Its ruling, which is not subject to appeal, held that individual privacy rights "override, as a general rule," the public's interest in data, particularly if the presentation is "inadequate, irrelevant or no longer relevant, or excessive." It doesn't matter where the search engine does its data-crunching so long as it has an "establishment" within the European Union. As a result, the ruling sets the stage for people to conceal legally published information from the entire world.

One of the many flaws in the ruling is that it unfairly focuses on Google and other search engines, which aren't the real problem here. They're not repositories for the data that people might want to remove; they are just remarkably efficient tools for finding things online. And whether a piece of information is relevant or valuable is in the eyes of the beholder. One of the beauties of the Internet, after all, is the extent to which it gives anyone with a browser access to troves of knowledge that had previously been locked in government offices, publishers' morgues and other storage vaults of the analog era.

Costeja Gonzalez may not want the 1998 dispute included in his online biography, but it may very well be significant to people researching debtors' auctions during that period. And if Google stops indexing those legal notices, the links would be lost to every researcher. It's one thing to make sure people can protect their privacy by forcing sites to remove sensitive personal information, or to provide Internet users a way to erase material they themselves have posted. And policymakers can debate whether information collected by the government should have an online expiration date. But the Court of Justice's ruling would create an overly broad right for individuals to airbrush the historical record, and that just invites abuse by people who have something to hide.

OTHERVOICES

Is fired N.Y. Times editor Jill Abramson the new Lilly Ledbetter?

Is Jill Abramson, the first female executive editor of the New York Times, who was unceremoniously dumped from her job Wednesday, the professional-class equivalent of equal pay heroine Lilly Ledbetter?

Much is still unknown about the circumstances leading up to Abramson's termination by New York Times Publisher Arthur Sulzberger Jr.

But at least two well-sourced media reporters, Ken Auletta of the New Yorker, and David Folkenflik of NPR, confirmed that Abramson, 60, who was less than three years into the top Times job, was fired after she discovered she earned less in pay and benefits than her predecessor, Bill Keller, and asked the newspaper to make it right.

There is obviously more to the story, but if that part is true, the comparison to Ledbetter is apt.

Ledbetter, a retired Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. supervisor, discovered that for years she was paid substantially less than her 15 male counterparts. She sued, and lost because she did not bring the lawsuit in a timely manner. (How could she? She didn't know she was being underpaid.) Thanks to her, Congress passed the Lilly Ledbetter Act, which restarts the 180-day statute of limitations clock each time a discriminatory paycheck is issued. It was the first bill President Barack Obama signed in office.

Many reports say Abramson had other problems, including a conflicted relationship with the publisher and Times CEO Mark Thompson. On her watch, the Times aggressively reported on Thompson's role at the BBC when it was involved in a controversy over a sex scandal investigation. She has also been described as "brusque" and even, yes, "pushy."

The Guardian reported that Abramson tried to hire its U.S. editor-in-chief, Janine Gibson, to be co-managing editor with Dean Baquet, 57, the former Los Angeles Times editor who succeeds Abramson now in the top Times job. Though Gibson turned down the offer, the Times' own story said Baquet was unhappy about Abramson's effort to hire her.

Robin Abcarian
MCCLATCHY-TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

Ledbetter, a retired Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. supervisor, discovered that for years she was paid substantially less than her 15 male counterparts.

Abramson's dismissal was so abrupt, and Sulzberger was so terse about why he fired her (citing only "an issue with management in the newsroom"), that it's only natural for people to wonder what really happened.

The headline over Rebecca Traister's New Republic column reflected the feelings of many women: "I sort of hope we find out that Jill Abramson was Robbing the Cash Register."

"Abramson's firing," wrote Traister, "was among the most harsh and humiliating I've ever seen play out in the media's recent history. Within minutes of the editorial meeting at which the turnover was announced, Abramson's name had been scrubbed from the masthead of the paper she's run for the past two and a half years."

When disgraced New York Times Executive Editor Howell Raines left the paper in 2003 after presiding over the Jayson Blair scandal, Traister noted, he went out with a big newsroom sendoff: "In the paper's report about the departures of Raines and his deputy Gerald Boyd," she wrote, "Sulzberger was quoted as wanting to 'applaud Howell and Gerald for putting the interests of this newspaper … above their own.'"

When Baquet was canned in 2006 by Los Angeles Times Publisher David Hiller after publicly pushing back against proposed newsroom cuts, he stood on a desk in the newsroom for his farewell speech and was treated like a hero.

Like many with a deep interest in the newspaper business and its female leaders, I eagerly anticipate an investigation into Abramson's firing by Margaret Sullivan, the Times' independent and consistently excellent public editor.

Ironically, Sullivan's most recent column is about a new study that finds a continuing gender imbalance in the newspaper industry, and among New York Times reporters in particular. (Of the 10 largest American newspapers, the study found, the New York Times has the biggest newsroom gender gap; 69 percent of its bylines are male. Here at the Los Angeles Times, the study says, men account for 64 percent of the bylines.)

The public editor must explain why, exactly, Abramson was fired, and why she was treated so disrespectfully.

Sullivan noted in her column that she'd recently taken part in a panel discussion at an international journalism symposium called "Where are the Women?"

"Sitting there," she wrote, "discussing the paucity of women in journalism leadership globally I had the surreal feeling: Are we really still talking about this?"

Will California Chrome abandon Triple Crown bid?

It's a possibility if N.Y. officials don't allow colt to wear nasal strip

BETH HARRIS
AP Racing Writer

BALTIMORE — California Chrome might abandon his Triple Crown bid if New York officials do not allow the colt to wear a nasal strip in the Belmont Stakes.

Trainer Art Sherman made no threats about the Kentucky Derby and Preakness winner passing on a chance to become horse racing's 12th Triple Crown winner, but he suggested it was a possibility.

"I'd have to leave it up to the owners," he said Sunday. "I know they'll be upset."

Neither the New York State Gaming Commission nor the New York Racing Association stewards has received a request to use nasal strips in the Belmont on June 7.

"If a request to use nasal strips is made, the decision on whether to permit them or not will be fully evaluated and determined by the stewards," Gaming Commission spokesman Lee Park said Sunday.

Among the Gaming Commission's rules governing Belmont Park is one that states: Only equipment specifically approved by the stewards shall be worn or carried by a jockey or a horse in a race.

In a post on its Twitter feed, NYRA said: "We operate under the rules set forth by @NYSGamingCommission."

Todd outlasts Weir to win Byron Nelson Championship

STEPHEN HAWKINS
AP Sports Writer

IRVING, Texas — Brendon Todd won the Byron Nelson Championship on Sunday for his first PGA Tour title, closing with a bogey-free 4-under 66 for a two-stroke victory over Mike Weir.

It was the 77th career PGA Tour event for Todd. He earned $1,242,000, a two-year PGA Tour exemption and a spot next year in the Masters.

Todd finished at 14-under 266. He took the lead for good with birdies at Nos. 9 and 10, and went on to become the eighth first-time winner this season.

Mike Weir hits off the first tee during the final round of the tournament. Weir finished second by a single stroke.

Weir, the 2003 Masters champion who won the last of his eight PGA Tour titles in 2007, finished with a 67. Charles Howell III and Marc Leishman tied for third at 10 under.

After Todd hit his tee shot at the 195-yard second into a greenside bunker, his shot from the sand landed on the green and rolled in for a birdie. When he knocked in a 14-foot birdie putt at the 181-yard fifth, he tied Weir — who made a bogey on No. 6 — for the lead at 12 under.

Todd took the lead for good with consecutive birdies midway through his round, a 6-footer at No. 9 and a 24-footer at No. 10.

Weir had his best tournament since finishing second behind Dustin Johnson at Pebble Beach in 2009. The Canadian left-hander hadn't had a top-25 finish since 2010, the same year he suffered a partial ligament tear in his right elbow before a stretch when he missed 17 cuts in a row — including all 14 tournaments he started in 2012.

Howell shot a 67 with a three-putt bogey on the final hole, while Leishman had three bogeys in a five-hole stretch on the back nine

Carpenter grabs Indy 500 pole for second straight year

MICHAEL MAROT
Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — When Ed Carpenter, Carlos Munoz and Helio Castroneves were pushed to the edge Saturday, each remained calm and came up with their best-qualifying runs of the day.

Now they have to do it again one more time Sunday.

The American, Colombian and Brazilian who have celebrated some of their biggest career moments at Indianapolis each made daring runs over the final 80 minutes Saturday to take the top three seeds heading into Sunday's Indianapolis 500 shootout. Carpenter finished first

CHICAGO — Corey Crawford made 25 saves, Jonathan Toews had a big goal in the third period and the Chicago Blackhawks beat the Los Angeles Kings 3-1 in Game 1 of the Western Conference final Sunday.

Brandon Saad added a goal and an assist for defending Stanley Cup champion Chicago, which remained perfect in seven home playoff games this year. Duncan Keith had a tiebreaking score in the third period.

Indiana Pacers' Roy Hibbert (55) and Paul George celebrate during the second half of Game 1 on Sunday in Indianapolis.

George, West help Pacers outgun Heat for 1-0 series lead

MICHAEL MAROT
Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Paul George scored 24 points, David West had 19, and the Indiana Pacers protected their home court with a 107-96 victory over the Miami Heat on Sunday to take a 1-0 lead in the Eastern Conference finals.

Indiana led wire-to-wire and never even gave the Heat a chance to tie the score after starting the game with a 5-0 lead.

Game 2 is Tuesday in Indiana. The home team has won all five meetings this season.

Dwyane Wade scored 27 points and LeBron James had 25 for the two-time defending NBA champions, who lost for only the second time in 10 playoff games.

Indiana had a 30-point first quarter for the first time since Feb. 27, extended the lead to 19 in the third and Miami couldn't get closer than nine the rest of the way.

For months, people wondered what happened to the Indiana team that dominated the first half of the NBA season.

for a closing 68.

Todd is the fifth former University of Georgia player to win on the PGA Tour this season. He joined Masters champion Bubba Watson, Harris English, Russell Henley and Chris Kirk.

An errant tee shot at the 185-yard 13th that settled at the base of a tree, forcing the slender 6-foot-3 Todd to set up left-handed — which would have been natural for the 44-year-old Weir — and strike the ball with the back of his bladed club. The ball popped up slightly and rolled to 7 feet of the cup, and Todd saved par.

Todd played his last 31 holes at TPC Four Seasons without a bogey.

Weir had birdies on four of the first five holes. He was 13 under and ahead of Todd by two strokes when his tee shot at No. 5 settled 1½ feet from the cup. That came after Weir blindly hit out of a fairway bunker to 3 feet at No. 4.

But Weir missed the fairway and green for a bogey at the 431-yard sixth hole at the same time Todd was tapping in at the fifth.

Boo Weekley (68) was 9 under to tie for fifth with James Hahn (70). Weekley is the defending champion at Colonial, about 30 miles away and the next tournament.

Louis Oosthuizen, the 2010 British Open in the final group with Todd, had already slipped four strokes back at the turn before bogeys at Nos. 10-11. The 2010 British Open champion shot 74, 10 strokes worse than Saturday, to tie for 11th at 6 under.

Martin Kaymer won The Players Championship last weekend and opened at the Nelson with consecutive 67s. But he shot 71 Saturday before a bogey-birdie-bogey start Sunday on way to a 72 and tied for 29th at 3 under.

That was a stroke better than Jimmy Walker, who will remain No. 1 in the FedEx Cup standings.

Jordan Spieth, the 20-year-old Dallas native ranked eighth in the world, had a closing 68 to finish 2-under and tied for 37th at the tournament where he made the cut as an amateur at ages 16 and 17.

CHROME

California Chrome has worn a nasal strip during his current six-race winning streak after co-owner Perry Martin wanted to try it. Sherman is based in California and said he wasn't aware that using one in New York might be a problem. He said he would talk to New York racing officials and the horse's owners.

Some horses, like humans, wear nasal strips to assist breathing. The colt wears the strip only during races, not training.

At 1 ½ miles, the Belmont is the longest and most grueling of the three Triple Crown races.

"I think it opens up his air passage and gives him that little extra oomph that he needs, especially going a mile and a half," Sherman said. "Anytime you can have a good air passage, that means a lot for these thoroughbreds."

Sherman said Martin likes to try different products and the co-owner thought a nasal strip might benefit California Chrome.

"This guy, Perry Martin, he might not run if they say you can't run with a nasal strip. He's very funny about things like that," the trainer said. "I don't know why they would ban you from wearing one. We'll have to cross that bridge when we get there."

Other states allow nasal strips while racing, and even some jockeys wear them.

"It's something nonmedical that can be beneficial to a workout or a race," California-based trainer Doug O'Neill said by phone. "If you think your horse could use some help with their nostrils, you do it."

suddenly reappeared.

Indiana swarmed the glass, exploited its size advantage, knocked down early 3-pointers with regularity and defended well enough to force the Heat to play catch-up the entire game. The fans that occasionally serenaded them with boos during the first two rounds of the playoffs spent most of the first half on their feet and finished the game with repeated chants of "Beat the Heat! Beat the Heat!"

All five of Indiana's starters and backup C.J. Watson reached double figures as the Pacers produced their highest point total of the postseason.

Indiana has lost Game 1 at home in its first two playoff series, but it was obvious right from the start that this game would be different.

George Hill scored the first five points to give the Pacers the lead, which they extended to 20-10. They spent the rest of the game either pulling away or fending off Miami challenges.

When the Heat trimmed the deficit to 30-24 after one and eventually to 41-37 midway through the second quarter, Lance Stephenson scored four points in a 5-0 run to make it 46-37. When James again cut the deficit to 50-45 with back-to-back baskets late in the second, the Pacers closed the half with five straight points to make it 55-45.

Then the Pacers poured it on.

Roy Hibbert and West scored eight of Indiana's first 14 points to open the second half, making it 69-52.

with a four-lap qualifying average of 230.661 mph. Munoz was second at 230.460.

"I wasn't sure we were going to go 230 in our first run, so I was relieved when we did," Carpenter said. "But to be honest, I didn't think going into qualifying I was going to exceed 230."

Others drivers thought Carpenter would, and it only took one practice lap and one qualifying lap to assuage any doubts. Carpenter, the fifth car on the track, averaged 230.114 then sat around all day as other drivers tried to knock him off the top rung.

Nobody caught him until a rain delay ended at 4:18 p.m. Then in a flurry of speed, Andretti Autosport driver James Hinchcliffe knocked Carpenter off the pole, Munoz knocked Hinchcliffe, his teammate, off the pole, and Carpenter retook the pole. He finished the day waiting 65 minutes to see if it would stand.

Normally, the reward for surviving such tension would be celebrating a pole win.

Instead, under the new qualifying format, all Saturday did was assure Carpenter and the other eight top cars of a top-nine starting spot on Indy's traditional 33-car starting grid. Each of the top nine will have one qualifying run Sunday with the fastest claiming the coveted No. 1 starting spot for the May 25 race.

over Anaheim, the Kings got a second-period score from Tyler Toffoli and outshot the Blackhawks 26-20 in the opener of a rematch from last year's Western Conference final. But Crawford made a couple of solid stops in another terrific performance.

Game 2 of the best-of-seven series is Wednesday night.

With the Blackhawks clinging to a 2-1 lead in the third, Toews got loose on a 3-on-1 break and one-timed Johnny Oduya's pass right by Jonathan Quick for his sixth playoff goal at 16:10.

Quick made 17 saves after he played a key role in Los Angeles' rally from a 3-2 deficit in the series against the Ducks. The Kings also battled back from a 3-0 deficit against San Jose in the first round.

Toews' 26th career playoff goal came after he had one waved off in a confusing stretch in the second period.

It looked as if Chicago had a 2-0 lead when Toews' rush to the net resulted in the puck going off the skate of Kings defenseman Slava Voynov and into the goal. But it was waved off after a conference by the officials, prompting a round of boos from the crowd of 21,832 and a waving, yelling display from Blackhawks coach Joel Quenneville.

According to the NHL, the original call of good goal was changed because the officials decided Toews made incidental contact with Quick before the puck crossed the goal line. The league said the ruling was not reviewable, so the call on the ice remained in place.

The sequence seemed to wake up the Kings while deflating the Blackhawks. Los Angeles got its first goal about a minute later, with Tanner Pearson making a terrific pass to the middle to Toffoli for his fourth of the playoffs at 4:35.

The Kings then had a couple of chances to take the lead, but Crawford stepped up each time. He denied Kyle Clifford on a 2-on-1 break with 13:42 remaining, and stopped Marian Gaborik and Dustin Brown in rapid succession midway through the period.

Crawford's solid play bought Chicago some time to shake off the disallowed goal, and it paid off when Keith's slap shot went off the stick of Trevor Lewis and bounced past Quick for a 2-1 lead.

Los Angeles Angels' Albert Pujols follows through on a hit off Tampa Bay Rays starting pitcher David Price, not pictured, during the third inning on Sunday in Anaheim, Calif.

Pujols hits two homers as Angels top Rays

JOE RESNICK
Associated Press

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Albert Pujols hit a pair of solo homers against David Price, and Matt Shoemaker took a shutout into the seventh inning to lead the Los Angeles Angels over the Tampa Bay Rays 6-2 Sunday.

Pujols drove an 0-2 pitch over the center-field fence in the first inning. The three-time NL MVP increased the Angels' advantage to 6-2 in the seventh with his 12th homer this season and the 504th of his career, tying Eddie Murray for 25th place.

Price became the 319th pitcher Pujols has homered off during the regular season.

Shoemaker (2-1) was charged with a run and two hits in six-plus innings. He struck out six, five days after earning his first major league win with a 4-3 victory at Philadelphia. The 27-year-old right-hander was lifted after issuing his third walk, to James Loney leading off the seventh.

Michael Morin relieved Shoemaker with a 5-0 lead and retired his first batter before Kevin Kiermaier hit his first big league homer — a drive to left that kept carrying until it disappeared in the lower seats in the left-field corner. That ended a career-opening streak of nine scoreless innings by Morin.

Price (4-4) gave up six runs — five earned — and 11 hits in 6 2-3 innings with seven strikeouts and no walks. He beat the Mariners 2-1 last Tuesday at Seattle with a complete game.

The 2012 AL Cy Young Award winner, who has allowed no more than one walk in a franchise-record 13 consecutive starts dating to last season, went to a three-ball count on five Angels batters. But he's paid the price for his major league-best strikeout-to-walk ratio. He's given up 78 hits, tying Philadelphia's Cliff Lee for most in the majors.

Howie Kendrick gave the Angels a 2-0 lead with a two-out RBI single in the third, and they increased the margin to 5-0 with three runs in the fourth after Price gave up three straight singles with none out. The third one was a drive by Grant Green over the head of left fielder Matt Joyce scoring Erick Aybar.

Kenny Perry edges Calcavecchia to win Regions Tradition tourney

JOHN ZENOR
AP Sports Writer

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Kenny Perry won his third Champions Tour major in the past year with a one-stroke victory over Mark Calcavecchia on Sunday in the Regions Tradition.

Perry closed with an even-par 72 at Shoal Creek to finish at 7-under 281, while other contenders had up-and-down days and John Cook lost the lead with a double hit.

Perry bogeyed No. 15 but retook the lead with a birdie on the next hole and lined up an easy par putt on the closing hole.

Calcavecchia finished with a 70. Two-time winner Tom Lehman closed with a 67 to tie Jay Haas at 5 under. Haas closed with a 71. Cook's closing 72 put him three strokes back.

Perry got his sixth victory and became the second player to win in three consecutive Champions Tour major starts, joining Gary Player, who did it in 1987-88.

Perry won the Senior Players Championship and U.S. Senior Open in consecutive tour starts last year, then skipped the Senior British Open.

It was the highest score for a Tradition winner.

Fred Couples was disqualified Sunday after missing his tee time. He was 9 over after a 73 Saturday, his best round. Couples also withdrew from the Senior PGA next week at Harbor Shores in Benton Harbor, Michigan.

BUTCH DILL / AP

Kenny Perry holds up the trophy after winning the Champions Tour Regions Tradition golf tournament on Sunday in Birmingham, Ala.

Cook's double bogey on No. 14 cost him the lead.

Cook's ball was buried deep in the right bunker just under the lip, and appeared to ricochet backward before winding up a couple of feet out of the sand.

Tour officials reviewed the bunker shot using phone video shot by an event staffer and determined that Cook hit it again on his back swing.

"Golf Channel didn't have a great view of it but there was someone with the event who was shooting social media video of it that had a face-on angle, and it was clear that he double hit it," said Brian Claar, the Champions Tour's vice president for competition.

EUROPEAN TOUR

GIRONA, Spain — Miguel Angel Jimenez won the Spanish Open on Sunday after a three-way playoff to become the European Tour's first winner over the age of 50.

Jimenez extended his own record as the oldest European Tour winner at 50 years and 133 days old.

"There is no secret," Jimenez said. "Good food, good wine, good cigars and some exercise."

Jimenez beat Thomas Pieters of Belgium and Australia's Richard Green in a playoff after he was the only one to make par on the first extra hole. All three players finished on 4-under 284.

It was the Spaniard's 21st European Tour win and his second of the season after he won at Hong Kong in December, also following a playoff, at the age of 49 years, 337 days.

Pieters led by two shots going into the final round at the PGA Catalunya Resort but only managed a 3-over 75 despite an eagle on No. 15. Jimenez shot a 73, while Green carded 72.

It was the first win for Jimenez at the tournament in 27 appearances.

''There's no words to describe what it means to me, you need to be into my skin but I'm not going to let you," joked Jimenez. "It's amazing. I have been close a couple of times. Today it was very tough out there but I got it in the end."

Djokovic dedicates Rome title to victims of flooding

ANDREW DAMPF
AP Sports Writer

ROME — Novak Djokovic is going to the French Open with a big clay-court victory in his pocket. And a heavy heart.

Djokovic extended his recent dominance over Rafael Nadal by rallying for a 4-6, 6-3, 6-3 victory Sunday to win the Italian Open for the third time — then dedicated the title to his flood-hit native Serbia by carving a heart on the clay with his racket.

"This heart on the court is for you," he told the fans in Italian during the victory celebration. "It's also a special dedication to my country, which is suffering a lot right now. My heart is with them."

In the women's final, Serena Williams kept the crowd from being a factor in a 6-3, 6-0 victory over 10th-seeded home favorite Sara Errani to win her third Rome title.

Errani was bidding to become the first Italian to win the tournament in nearly 30 years but the top-ranked Williams quickly took control in both sets and Errani was slowed by a left thigh problem.

Williams had a left thigh problem herself last week that prompted her to withdraw before her quarterfinal match at the Madrid Open but now she appears back on track for the French, which starts next Sunday.

"I'm not 100 percent but I'm just kind of going on adrenaline," the top-ranked American said.

Djokovic found his motivation from a different source.

Authorities say 25 people have died in the Balkans because of the worst flooding in a century after three months' worth of rain fell on the region in three days this week. Tens of thousands of homes were left without electricity or drinking water.

"I'm trying to contribute in my own way," Djokovic said. "These are very critical times for our country and our people. But we're being united and this win and this trophy is dedicated to them."

ANDREW MEDICHINI / AP

Novak Djokovic kisses the trophy after defeating Rafael Nadal at the Italian Open tennis tournament on Sunday in Rome.

Having also been beaten in Monte Carlo and Barcelona recently, it marked the first time in a decade that the top-ranked Nadal has lost more than two matches on clay in the same year.

Nadal was pushed to three sets in four out of his five matches here.

"When he hit the first ball good a lot of times it was very difficult to arrive to the ball and change the dynamic of the point," Nadal said. "I didn't have enough energy to hit the first shot with the right intensity."

The second-ranked Djokovic has now won four straight matches against Nadal — the previous three in straight sets — and takes the psychological edge to Paris.

"It gives me a lot of confidence winning against Rafa in the finals of a big tournament on clay," he said. "It's definitely a confidence booster. It's an ultimate challenge and I'm very happy with my game so far and hopefully I can carry that into Roland Garros."

The French Open is the only Grand Slam that Djokovic has yet to win, with his best result a runner-up finish in 2012. Nadal has won the tournament eight times.

Djokovic was able to dictate play by stepping inside the baseline.

"I tried to be aggressive from the start to the end," said Djokovic, whose other Rome titles came in 2008 and 2011. "I know that the only way to win against him is to be aggressive."

Earlier, Errani left the court for an injury timeout while trailing 5-3 in the opening set and came back with her thigh bandaged. On the final point before she left the court, Errani pulled up and let a shot from Williams pass by her without even attempting to get to it.

"I'm sorry. You were unbelievable all week," Errani told fans during the victory ceremony, as she brushed back tears. "I tried to do my best and stayed on the court only for you."

Williams' other Rome titles came in 2002 and last year — and she went on to win the French Open on both occasions.

"I'm also sorry for Sara today," Williams told the crowd in Italian. "She really played great all week."

Organizers attempted to whip up patriotic fervor by having the Italian anthem sung before the players walked out onto the court, and fans continuously chanted "Sara, Sara" to try and encourage Errani in an atmosphere that more resembled a Davis Cup or Fed Cup setting.

But Williams jumped out to a 3-0 lead and while Errani had a few chances to get back into the first set, Williams overpowered the Italian with her serve — she had seven aces to Errani's none — and overall attacking game.

Still, Errani could console herself by becoming the first Italian finalist in the tournament since Raffaella Reggi took the 1985 title in Taranto.

Jamie McMurray celebrates after winning the NASCAR Sprint All-Star auto race at Charlotte Motor Speedway on Saturday in Concord, N.C.

McMurray and Ganassi share another huge victory

JENNA FRYER
AP Auto Racing Writer

CONCORD, N.C. — In a hurry to fly back to Indianapolis Chip Ganassi, abruptly left the news conference after Jamie McMurray's upset victory in the Sprint All-Star race. Before he stepped down from the podium, Ganassi leaned in and planted a kiss on McMurray's cheek.

Ganassi, often gruff and sometimes just plain grumpy, also has a softer side that he can't hide. It comes out in bursts of emotion, or sentimental moments like Saturday night, when McMurray pulled off a bold upset to win the $1 million prize at Charlotte Motor Speedway.

"He said to me in Victory Lane, 'We've won a lot of great races together, haven't we?'" Ganassi recalled. "I said, 'Yes, we have.' It was kind of special for him to think of that. He understands what it takes to be in this sport and be a driver."

There's no doubt McMurray went out in the final 10-lap segment and took the win. He was second on the restart, lined up on the outside of leader Carl Edwards, and he refused to back down as the two went door-to-door for an entire lap.

McMurray surged ahead after the white-knuckle battle to win in the event he'd never before finished higher than eighth.

It added yet another NASCAR "major" to a resume that exclusively includes big wins. McMurray had seven previous victories in the Sprint Cup Series, all at Daytona, Talladega, Charlotte and Indianapolis. Among those wins? The Daytona 500 and the Brickyard 400, two of the biggest races on the calendar.

Now he has an All-Star victory, making him one of only seven drivers to win the Daytona 500, the Brickyard and the All-Star exhibition. McMurray's won all three with Ganassi and team co-owner Felix Sabates.

"After the race, one of the first things I thought was 'I'm so glad that Chip and Felix are here and I get to share this with them,'" McMurray said. "They were in Daytona, they were in Indy, and when I look back at those races, the memories of Chip being there are really special to me."

McMurray does a burnout following his victory.

CREW CHIEF CONNECTION

McMurray heaped praise on first-year crew chief Keith Rodden, a longtime engineer for Kasey Kahne before he was practically handpicked by McMurray to take control of the No. 1 team. He'd heard of Rodden time and again over the years, and was sold on his capabilities after one 20-minute conversation in the basement of Rodden's house.

McMurray left the meeting and immediately called Ganassi general manager Max Jones, imploring him to lure Rodden away from his supporting role with Kahne at Hendrick Motorsports.

"I'm like, 'That's the guy. You've got to figure out how to make it work. No matter what you have to pay him, what you have to do, get that guy because I like everything about him,' " McMurray said.

BLAME GAME

As McMurray celebrated the win, Kevin Harvick was left contemplating how a victory slipped away for the second consecutive week.

Harvick was the leader headed to pit road for a mandatory four-tire stop following the fourth segment. He'd earned that spot out front by accumulating the highest average finish from the previous four segments, and a strong stop from his Stewart-Haas Racing crew would allow him to stay out front and presumably wrap up the win over the 10-lap sprint to the finish.

Instead, he was beat off pit road by Edwards and McMurray and restarted in third.

He wound up second, but wasn't pleased with the result.

"Cost us the race," Harvick said. "All in all, they put a car on the race track that was capable of winning. We just didn't get it done."

SLICK TRACK

Kahne believed he was the guy to beat after winning the second and third segments of the race. But he smacked the wall hard in the fourth segment, and grumbled after the race his car slid in oil on the Charlotte Motor Speedway surface.

Kahne wound up 14th after leading 20 laps.

"You could see the oil through the speedy dry," Kahne said. "The spotters are even saying something and the guy who drives the pace car said it was clean, it was just stained. No, it was still oil out there. NASCAR just didn't clean the track."

BIG MONEY

Phil Parsons Racing wound up winning more than $100,000 this weekend because the online Reddit community has vigorously gotten behind driver Josh Wise.

Wise was the upset winner of the fan vote, beating out favorite Danica Patrick to earn a berth in the All-Star race.

Reddit users have backed Wise and the underfunded team with the virtual currency Dogecoin. Supporters raised more than $55,000 to sponsor Wise's car earlier this month at Talladega, then set their sights on winning the fan vote for him.

Sam Hornish Jr. bests Blaney in restart to take win

LUKE MEREDITH

NEWTON, Iowa — Sam Hornish Jr. beat Ryan Blaney off a restart with 21 laps to go and hung on to win the NASCAR Nationwide Series race Sunday at Iowa Speedway.

Pole-sitter Ryan Blaney was second, followed by Regan Smith, Chase Elliott and Elliott Sadler in the first stand-alone event of the season.

Hornish, in the No. 54 car usually driven by Kyle Busch, led 167 of 250 laps to win in second Nationwide start of the season for Joe Gibbs Racing.

Elliott has a two-point lead over Sadler and Smith in the series points standings.

From the startl, Hornish and Blaney were the only drivers in serious contention.

Blaney began the race on the outside of the front row after winning his first series pole Saturday. But Hornish, who qualified second, pulled in front on the opening lap. Blaney and Hornish were the only leaders for the first 214 laps, and lapped traffic was often more of a concern that the cars directly behind them.

Blaney eventually caught Hornish at the tail end of a green flag run that lasted roughly 65 laps. But the final restart belonged to Hornish, who failed to secure a full-time ride for 2014 despite finishing second in the points standings last season.

CHARLIE NEIBERGALL / AP

Sam Hornish Jr. holds the trophy after winning the NASCAR Nationwide auto race on Sunday at Iowa Speedway in Newton, Iowa.

It was Hornish's third win in 101 Nationwide starts.

Michael McDowell then briefly took the lead with 30 laps to go by taking just two tires while the rest of the leaders took four. But McDowell's gamble failed to pay off, and he settled for seventh.

Elliott's fourth-place finish concluded a hectic weekend for the 18-year-old. He graduated from high school in Georgia on Saturday morning and flew back to Iowa in time to qualify sixth later in the day.

Elliott's crew hung his graduation cap and tassel on the No. 9 pit box for good luck on Sunday.

Rangers players join St. Louis for his mother's funeral near Montreal

Associated Press

RYAN REMIORZ / THE CANADIAN PRESS

New York Rangers NHL hockey players leave the funeral home following funeral services for France St. Louis, mother of New York Rangers hockey player Martin St. Louis on Sunday in Laval, Quebec.

LAVAL, Quebec — New York Rangers coaches and players joined star forward Martin St. Louis at his mother's funeral outside Montreal on Sunday.

St. Louis' former Tampa Bay Lightning teammate Steven Stamkos and Hall of Famer Guy Lafleur also attended.

"It was a very personal matter for Marty," said Rangers defenseman Ryan McDonagh. "We just wanted to be there to support him and his family.

"He's been tremendous through this whole process. It's great to have someone like that on our squad."

His mother, France St. Louis, died suddenly three days before Mother's Day in the middle of the Rangers' series against the Pittsburgh Penguins. She was 63.

St. Louis didn't miss a game and provided a lift to his teammates as they battled back from a 3-1 deficit to win the series.

Then the Rangers beat the Montreal Canadiens 7-2 on Saturday in Game 1 of the Eastern Conference final, with St. Louis scoring the opening goal early in the first period.

The series resumes tonight in Montreal.

New York coach Alain Vigneault's voice cracked as he described the service.

The New York Rangers family has been touched by a little Quebec family in a deep, profound way.

Alain Vigneault
New York Rangers coach

"The New York Rangers family has been touched by a little Quebec family in a deep, profound way," he said. "It was a very emotional, very moving time for our team to have the opportunity to be there and share that with Marty and his family.

"Marty took the podium and shared some incredible moments. It was a deep message. It was a challenging day for us."

Center Brad Richards, who won a Stanley Cup with St. Louis when they played together with the Lightning, said the 38-year-old scoring star has bonded with his new teammates during this difficult time. St. Louis joined the Rangers at the March 5 NHL trade deadline.

"I think it's going to help just to get his mind off two things: trying to play and then trying to make sure he's doing all the right things for his family and his dad, and do what his mom would want," Richards said. "But he's done an unbelievable job keeping everything together and helping his sister and his dad get through this. You wouldn't expect anything else."

Habs fan Jeff Quinn, who drove from Saint John, New Brunswick, with his girlfriend to see Saturday's game, said he's always admired St. Louis and came to pay his respects.

Without Serge Ibaka Thunder still confident

CLIFF BRUNT

Oklahoma City Thunder forward Serge Ibaka (9) defends as Los Angeles Clippers forward Blake Griffin shoots in the second half of Game 5 on May 13 in Oklahoma City.

OKLAHOMA CITY — Thunder players fondly described Serge Ibaka's contributions to the team this season and explained how much he'd be missed.

Then, they moved on.

Ibaka, one of the NBA's top shot blockers, hurt his left calf in Game 6 of the Western Conference semifinal against the Los Angeles Clippers. A day after the team learned it would likely be without its best defender for the rest of the playoffs, Oklahoma City began practicing for the Western Conference finals against the San Antonio Spurs. Game 1 is Monday night, and the Thunder will take a laid back approach.

"It's unfortunate for us and for Serge," league MVP Kevin Durant said after practice Saturday. "He's a guy that loves the game so much and has to sit out at the peak of the season, being in the playoffs. But it happens in this league. Nobody's ever going to feel sorry for us.

"We're not going to panic. We're going to continue to stick to what we do."

During the regular season, Ibaka had career highs with averages of 15.1 points and 8.8 rebounds while leading the league in total blocks for the fourth consecutive season with 219. The Thunder don't expect to duplicate Ibaka's explosiveness or his ability to protect the rim.

"We're going to play team defense," guard Russell Westbrook said. "We're not going to take the onus on ourselves to block shots and do what Serge does, because nobody can do that."

Brooks wouldn't say how he would fill the minutes or who would start in Ibaka's place. He jokingly named almost every reserve as a possible replacement. Based on past patterns, rookie center Steven Adams and veteran forward Nick Collison will likely step in for Ibaka.

Adams has been exceptional recently. The 7-footer from New Zealand was especially effective in Game 6 against the Clippers, when he had 10 points and 11 rebounds in 40 minutes. He had never played more than 31 minutes in an NBA game.

"It was hard," Adams said. "My body afterwards — I felt like an old man. Going forward, I got familiar with playing while I was fatigued. I'm familiar with it. I need to get comfortable with it."

Adams had gained his teammates' confidence throughout the playoffs. They say he's ready for more responsibility.

"The last two series, he played extremely well for us," Durant said. "Doing anything we need him to do, playing hard, physical. We're going to need him this series to do the same thing. The coaches have been preparing him. He's learning, and he's getting better every day."

Shops say pet owners choosing food with care

ANDREW WYRICH
MCT

HACKENSACK, N.J. — Some pet supply store owners say the trend of customers seeking pet food containing all-natural ingredients might cost customers more, but it has brought a growing number of better-informed pet owners into their shops.

In 2007, a massive recall of pet food that contained the chemical melamine, which is used in fertilizer and plastic utensils, shook customers' preferences from generic food that contains corn, wheat or soy toward hormone- and steroid-free, grass-fed, all-meat ingredients, owners said.

In fact, through May 2013, the percentage of dog food brands claiming to be "gluten-free" was 28.6 percent, up from 12.6 percent

"There is absolutely a push for better ingredients. Customers now want grain-free, high-quality food for their pets."

Susan Weinrich,
Owner of Westwood Pets Unlimited

in the full year of 2012, according to a report on United States pet food trends last year by Supply Side Animal Nutrition Insights. In the same report it said natural pet food accounted for $1.5 billion in sales in 2009, and was projected to outpace the sales of traditional pet food over the next five years.

This shift in what customers wanted to feed their pets forced some store owners to expand their offerings of pet food, which added costs to their bottom line. But it also helped build trust with their customers. While large retailers like Petco offer organic and all-natural food, the owners said being a smaller store offers them the opportunity to talk one-on-one with customers and offer specific food recommendations for certain breeds of dogs.

"There is absolutely a push for better ingredients," said Susan Weinrich, the owner of Westwood Pets Unlimited in Westwood, N.J. "Customers now want grain-free, high-quality food for their pets."

Weinrich said over the past five years the number of brands offering higher quality ingredients in their pet food has skyrocketed. She estimated that as many as 25 to 30 brands are offering holistic ingredients, and her store offers about 10 of those brands, she said. Over the past few years, Weinrich said she has attended trade shows, seminars

Parents say son couldn't get help he needed

LUI KIT WONG / MCT

Bill and Jacquie Stanton reflect their sadness while talking about the suicide of their son, Jacob, 19, at their family home.

LARRY LARUE
MCT

TACOMA, Wash. — Jake Stanton had more than 2,000 friends on Facebook and, since early May, hundreds of people have put photographs and memories on a new Facebook page, RIP Jake Stanton.

He was a popular 19-year-old who attended Western Washington University, a Stadium High School graduate who competed on the swim team and played in the school band, a young man whose kindness and smile are being called unforgettable.

Over the last six months, that smile hid his pain and confusion.

"Jake was tortured by voices telling him to hurt himself. He didn't want to die," said his mother, Jacquie Stanton. "He fought so hard to be normal, to just be a kid in school."

Three days after their son suffocated himself in his bedroom, Jacquie and Bill Stanton came to call at The News Tribune in Tacoma, Wash., last week. They wanted to talk about Jake and his decision to be an organ donor. But mostly they wanted to talk about a dysfunctional mental health system.

When they noticed a change in their son about a year ago, the Stantons tried to get him help. They started with their family doctor, who told them "everybody has moods" and recommended Jake see a counselor.

"I started calling counselors and was told I couldn't get an appointment for two months," Jacquie said. "And we couldn't see a psychiatrist — who can prescribe meds — until we'd seen a therapist.

"We started looking for help in October and didn't get an appointment until December."

Delving into the pain of osteoarthritis

DAVID TEMPLETON
MCT

PITTSBURGH — Her foot pain began 15 years ago, leading to a 2002 diagnosis of osteoarthritis, which left her limping and unable to walk for extended periods of time.

And it progressively worsened.

In time, Deborah Cole Thomas, 60, of Plum, Pa., would undergo surgeries to fuse joints in both feet along with a left-ankle replacement, all from the wear-and-tear form of arthritis. She endured shoulder pain and more recent problems with right-knee pain, which she likens to a knife stab.

Round-the-clock pain medications are a must.

"I try not to let it affect me," Thomas said, noting that her husband, Llewellyn, 82, has had both arthritic knees replaced. "It drives me to keep moving. I watched my mom give up, and her hands became so crippled she had to be fed."

Thomas, now retired, worked as a Westinghouse computer engineer, spending hours at a desk that made her "feel like the Tin Man in 'The Wizard of Oz.'" She'd stand and struggle to flex stiffened joints.

In coming years, she faces further surgeries, including knee-replacement surgery. But she's still walking, with the goal of 10,000 steps a day and an average of about 7,000.

She also can't run and isn't allowed to jump. Doctor's orders. But she works around those limitations.

"There's always something I can do just to keep moving."

While people with osteoarthritis struggle to move, there's plenty of movement in research as scientists work through the biological puzzle of osteoarthritis to come up with potential treatments.

A University of Pittsburgh research team, led by Rocky S. Tuan — professor and executive vice chairman of the department of orthopedic surgery and director of the Center for Cellular and Molecular Engineering — is making headway in understanding the complex stew of enzymes (histones), proteins and genes that cause osteoarthritis while identifying a potential treatment to slow the rate of cartilage destruction.

BOB DONALDSON / MCT

Deborah Cole Thomas' arthritis has led to an ankle replacement and two mid-foot fusions.

There's further breaking news from the Tuan camp that sounds like science fiction:

His team is using a 3-D printer, which makes structures one layer at a time, to make new joints. Using a solution containing the patient's stem cells, along with growth factors and scaffolding material, the 3-D printer constructs actual cartilage in the right shape to replace damaged cartilage.

The stem-cell solution extruded through a catheter also could be used to create new cartilage, as guided by a 3-D printer, directly onto the joint bone.

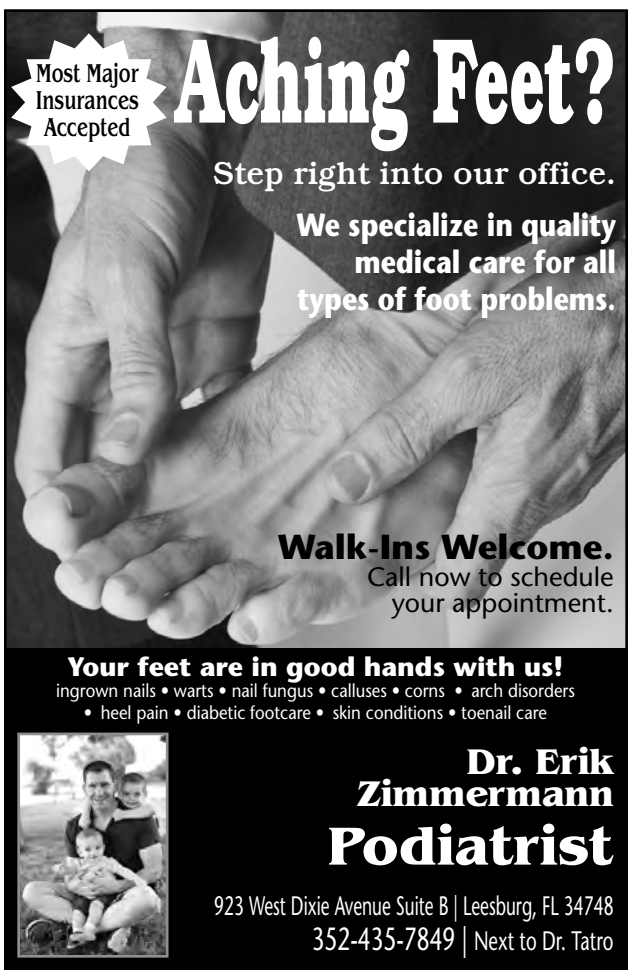
The team's tissue-engineered joints already have shown success in large animals, raising the promise of creating replacement joints for people now dependent on plastic and metal ones. The process could be particularly useful in repairing battlefield injuries.

Tuan announced the success April 27 at the Experimental Biology 2014 scientific sessions and meeting in San Diego.

"We essentially speed up the development process by giving the cells everything they need, while creating a scaffold to give the tissue the exact shape and structure that we want," Tuan said, adding that his team continues working to develop cartilage more closely resembling human cartilage.

"Total joint replacements involving plastic and metal joints work well, but they don't last long enough," Tuan said. "For someone who is 60, that's OK. But if you are in your 30s, that's not good because you may need revision after revision.

Osteoarthritis represents 80 percent of all cases of arthritis, whose various forms plague 27 million Americans, making arthritis the nation's major form of physical disability. The disease burden is particularly acute in the aged population, with one out of two individuals older than 65 having at least one joint affected.



PETS

and devoted hours to self-educating herself about the ingredients used in pet food.

But the demand from customers for higher-quality pet food has driven up the cost on both ends of the purchase. Weinrich said a five-pound bag of lower-quality food once cost her about $8 to order, where the higher quality food popular today will cost between $16 and $18 for a 5-pound bag.

"The idea for customers behind good quality food is that you're spending money now, but will save it in the long run when you don't have to go to the vet down the line," Weinrich said.

Shawn Kim, the owner of Mama's and Papa's Petshop in Englewood, N.J., said he has seen an influx of customers coming to his store looking for better quality food, rather than shopping at supermarkets or chain stores.

While the high-quality food costs him up to 15 percent more for each bag, Kim said his customers are willing to pay higher prices on the retail side of the purchase.

"At least in our community, we are seeing that customers are willing to pay a little extra because in the long run, they are actually saving money with the healthier food," Kim said.

Karl McQuilken, the owner of New Jersey's Wholistic Paws in Ridgewood and Bark Ridge in Park Ridge, said his stores sell only all-natural pet food.

"People love their pets and are passionate about their pets, and we're seeing that at our store," said McQuilken.

But Weinrich said that while all-natural pet food is driving traffic to her store, the food has the lowest markup of the items she sells, so the key to remaining profitable is getting customers who come in for the healthier dog food to buy some of the other items she sells in the store — such as accessories or toys for their pets.

"The dog food isn't a money maker, that's for sure," Weinrich said. "When people realize that our store is knowledgeable and can direct each individual customer to a specific brand of food that is the right fit for their dog, they will oftentimes find something else in the store to buy. That's where we make the money."

McQuilken said most of his customers ask questions about different ailments their pets might have, and he then directs them to the best pet food that would fit that individual pet.

"While the all-natural food is a little more expensive, most people are willing to pay it because of the connection they have with their pets," McQuilken said. "How can you put a dollar sign on that?"

Most important quality in a running shoe? Comfort

MELISSA DRIBBEN
MCT

PHILADELPHIA — Wondering about the best shoes to wear for spring running?

Neutral? Minimalist? Stability? Motion control? Cushioned heel?

Confused? Of course you are. Well, sports medicine specialists have good news. Stop worrying about fallen arches, overpronation, and putting your feet on a paleolithic regimen.

The latest thinking about how to choose the best running shoe is to let comfort be your guide.

Since the 1970s, running shoes have evolved from puny slabs of rubber sewn to canvas shells into engineering feats rivaling 3-D-printed surveillance drones.

Far beyond the latest Nike Flyknit Lunar 2 are plans for running shoes made of computer-generated molecules that will link to living organisms and conform to your foot's ever-changing needs.

In the somewhat-less-distant future are Google Bluetooth-enabled shoes that talk to you and tell you how your run is going.

For now, runners have a hard enough time picking from hundreds of mute, inorganic options.

"Historically, the push has always been to look at foot pronation," said Bryan Heiderscheit, a professor in the department of biomedical engineering at the University of Wisconsin-Madison. Runners were told to wear shoes that would correct for the foot's tendency to roll inward or outward, on the theory that this would correct biomechanical flaws and prevent injuries to the knees and lower back.

MELISSA DRIBBEN / MCT

Danielle Tolbert tries on a pair of running shoes in Philadelphia on April 25.

"But the best studies that have been done in the last 10 years," said Heiderscheit, "have not substantiated that claim."

In 2010, the American Journal of Sports Medicine published a study of 1,400 Marine Corps recruits. Half the group was given shoes based on a careful evaluation of the shape of their feet. The control group's shoes were chosen randomly.

"Assigning shoes based on the shape of the plantar foot surface," the authors concluded, "had little influence on injuries."

When Heiderscheit tries to explain this to members of the running-shoe industry, he gets "pushback."

Not surprising, he said, considering that the $20 billion athletic-shoe market sustains itself on innovation. Most companies release new models twice a year, offering features designed to improve performance and prevent injury.

The idea that almost any shoe is fine if it's comfortable is also apt to meet resistance from runners for whom theory has become dogma. Believers in barefoot running or minimalist shoes, for instance, are unlikely to be convinced.

Both are fine, said Heiderscheit, as long as recent converts do not make the switch too abruptly.

Speaking from personal experience, Heiderscheit said, it is easy to get injured if you decide to toss your cushiony sneakers and immediately start racking up miles in a pair of barely-theres.

It can take months to adapt, he said. He recommends exercises to strengthen muscles in the calf and foot and using the minimalist shoes for short, easy runs at first.

"You should feel so comfortable in a shoe that you could sleep in them," said Jon Woo, a sports medicine specialist at the University of Washington in Seattle.

Experts say that just as everyone's feet are unique, so are their running styles. "There is no absolute biomechanical ideal," said Heiderscheit.

One of the world's fastest marathoners, Pescah Jeptoo, has a knock-kneed gait that has carried her through 26.2 miles in a blazing two hours, 20 minutes, and 14 seconds.

Still, Heiderscheit said, there are "flaws" to avoid.

"You don't want to bounce too much. You don't want to overstride. And the one thing we absolutely don't want people to do is a hard heel strike — truly coming down on your heel with your foot pointed high in air."

Jeptoo, for the record, runs in Nike Zoom Streak 3s, a lightweight, breathable shoe with some support and cushioning. Online reviews of the shoe range from "I got huge blisters" to "Perfect!"

If this proves anything, experts said, it is that the one true authority on which shoes are best is the runner who wears them.

Brain differences found in NCAA football players

Associated Press

CHICAGO — A small study of college football players found that the areas of their brains that control memory were smaller than average, especially if they had suffered concussions. But more research is needed to determine if the differences mean they're headed for problems down the road.

The study of NCAA players is only preliminary, but the differences were seen in a part of the brain affected by a destructive disease linked with head blows and found in autopsies of some former NFL players.

The college players studied did just as well on tests of mental function, including memory, as a healthy control group of college athletes in non-contact sports, although those in the football group who'd played the longest had slower reaction times.

It's unknown when the brain differences occurred and it's possible the football players were born with them, said study co-author Patrick Bellgowan, a neuroscientist at the Laureate Institute for Brain Research in Tulsa, Okla.

The differences were found in the hippocampus, a small sea horse-shaped region behind the front part of the brain. In football players who'd had concussions, the right part of the hippocampus was 26 percent smaller on average than in the control group. In football players without concussions, it was 17 percent smaller. Similar differences were seen in the left part of the hippocampus.

HELP

After that, he started seeing a psychiatrist and was prescribed medications that didn't seem to help.

Jake began losing faith in a mental health system his family couldn't seem to make work.

One January evening, he jumped off a bridge in Dash Point, Wash. That landed him in the hospital for 10 days, followed by another week in the mental health unit. Though his parents wanted him to stay there, he was released.

His mother, a registered nurse, couldn't see reports on her son, because Jake was legally an adult. Trying to get him help, she found obstacles everywhere.

"I've been a nurse for 25 years, so I know the medical system," Jacquie said. "I had no idea until I was in critical need of the mental health system that it's broken.

"The only way to get immediate care was the emergency room, where we could keep him safe for three or four days as a danger to himself. We went through the ER five times in six months, and even then it wasn't working. He wasn't getting help, and they wouldn't keep him and give him help."

Bill Stanton watched Jacob, the oldest of his three children, isolate himself from friends, though never from his family, with whom he lived in Tacoma.

"One night last week, he came into our bedroom where I was watching TV and laid down on the bed with me," Bill said. "His mom came in and asked what he was doing, and he said, 'Watching TV with dad.'"

The voices, however, had been growing worse. Jake would console a neighbor one afternoon, consider killing himself that evening. A few weeks ago, he put all his medications in a blender and made a lethal chocolate shake — then poured it down the sink.

"Jake told me, 'I'm having such a hard time,' and I told him, 'We're going to win, Jake,'" Jacquie recalled.

Last Thursday night, he came home from a night class and talked to his father, then went downstairs to his room. Ten minutes later, Jacquie came home from work, asked where Jake was and called to him.

There was no answer.

"I knew right then," she said.

Jacquie Stanton entered her son's room.

"He was lying on the bed with a … trash bag over his head," she said. "I had to tear the bag off his head and begin trying to resuscitate him."

Bill called 911, then began helping his wife perform CPR. Jake's 15-year-old brother, Kyle, and 13-year-old sister, Avery, watched in horror. Paramedics arrived, found a slight heartbeat and raced him to the hospital.

"He was alive but not alive," Jacquie said. "They kept him alive with machines until the next morning. Jake was an organ donor, so we had to talk to doctors there about the process."

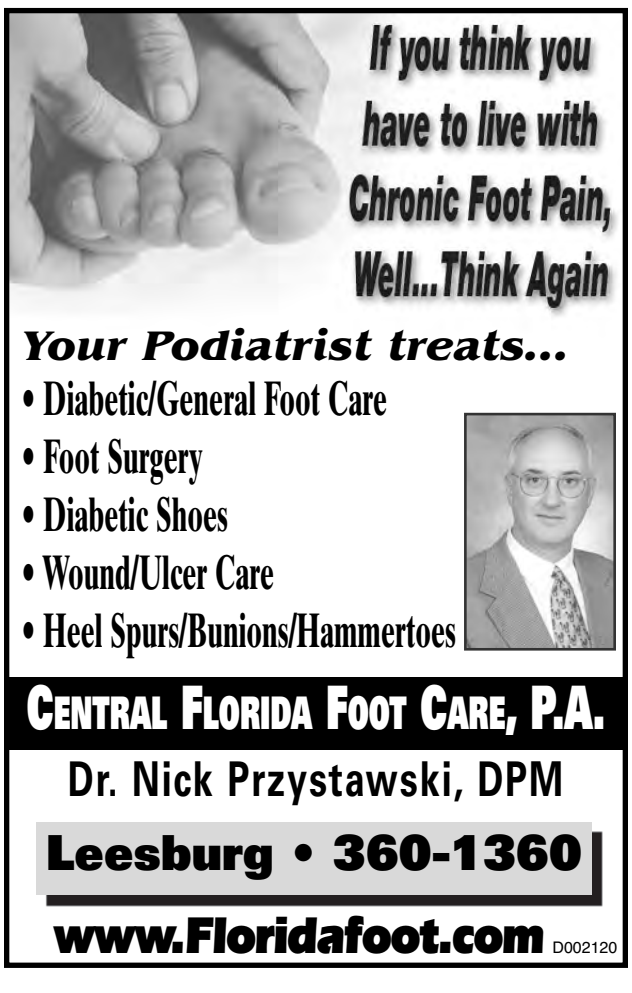
It wasn't easy for the family.

"Once he was breathing on his own, he died in seven minutes," Jacquie said. "Then the team had to take him within two minutes to do what they had to do."

Jake's liver, kidneys and corneas were given to recipients within hours.

His friends have been stopping by the Stanton home since Friday, staying for hours, talking and crying.

Jake had an appointment with his psychiatrist set up for the day he died, and the psychiatrist was notified of Jake's death, but the family has not heard from him.



Medical marijuana has effect on symptom relief

JAN HEFLER
MCT

EGG HARBOR TOWNSHIP, N.J. — Before buying cannabis at southern New Jersey's only medical-marijuana dispensary, patients must circle one of six animated faces that stare out from a clipboard.

The row of smiling, wincing, frowning, and sobbing cartoon faces is being used to rank the degree of pain that patients experience due to cancer, multiple sclerosis, epilepsy and several other conditions the state deems treatable by cannabis.

When the patients return to the Compassionate Care Foundation dispensary in Egg Harbor Township, N.J., for a refill, they again are handed the Wong-Baker FACES Pain Rating Scale so that the effect of the marijuana can be assessed.

The results so far are "absolutely dramatic," said Suzanne Miller, a researcher with a Ph.D. who sits on the dispensary's board of trustees. Miller is also a professor and the director of behavioral medicine at Fox Chase Cancer Center/Temple Health in Philadelphia. About 80 percent of the 145 CCF patients who completed the rankings at least twice over the last two months have charted significant improvement, she said.

Still being collected and analyzed, the data show that on average, most patients are reporting their pain levels decreased by 30 to 50 percent, Miller said. "You usually see smaller results, about 10 percent, or 20 percent," she said.

DAVID M. WARREN / MCT

Marijuana plants grow in the flowering room at Compassionate Care Foundation, the only medical marijuana dispensary in New Jersey.

An author of four books and a contributor to more than 100 academic articles, Miller will be the lead researcher on a report she plans to submit to medical journals for publication possibly this fall. The dispensary has 600 registered patients and expects to have more data by that time.

On a gloomy, wet morning last week, several patients walked into the dispensary to purchase cannabis, which is packaged in plastic bottles and sold at $428 an ounce. Two patients who agreed to be interviewed afterward said the marijuana they bought had changed their lives. Three other patients who were reached by phone said it markedly eased their pain.

"I was addicted to Vicodin," said Gary Carnevale Sr., a multiple sclerosis patient from Bayville, N.J., shortly after he picked up an ounce of "Red Cherry Berry" marijuana from an employee behind a glass window at the dispensary. Carnevale, 57, a former licensed practical nurse, said increasing amounts of prescribed Vicodin, OxyContin, Percocet, and other narcotics did not relieve the throbbing pain shooting up his back and legs, and he then had to be hospitalized for two weeks early last year.

Carnevale was among the first patients to come to CCF, which opened six months ago inside a cavernous warehouse just outside Atlantic City. Marijuana plants are also grown at that location under special purple, red, blue, and yellow lights.

"I took three or four hits. I laid in bed, and I could not believe the pain slipping away," Carnevale said, recalling the first day he smoked it using a vaporizer. "My pain was like 10. … But when I smoke marijuana, I swear it's zero," he said. While he previously spent most of his days in bed, he said he now is able to function and even took a recent vacation with his family, including his two grandchildren.

Jacqueline Angotti, a nurse-practitioner from Robbinsville, N.J., began sobbing when asked the effect the marijuana had on her 9-year-old son, Miles, who had suffered multiple, daily seizures since he was 2. "He's been seizure-free; he's had none for the past 31 days and has had no side effects," she said. "And he's better cognitively."

In the past, Miles was forced to wear a mask to protect his face and teeth from frequent falls caused by the violent seizures, she said. And, for the same reason, he had to eat meals from a tray while sitting on the floor. Angotti turned the marijuana buds into a tincture, which she gives to Miles in tiny doses three times a day, and he no longer needs his mask, she said. "He eats dinner at the table now," she added.

Husband thinks less is more when wife budgets for clothes

JEANNE PHILLIPS

DEAR ABBY

DEAR ABBY: I have been working hard to advance in my health care career so I can give my family a decent life. I have worked my way up from poverty, paying my own way, earning my degree through the military and sheer determination.

I have reached a point where I would like to enjoy life a little more, but my husband thinks I am being "materialistic." We fight often over my wardrobe spending.

I believe the clothes I wear, mostly nice skirt suits and heels, are part of my job and image. I believe it has helped me to get ahead. I don't buy overly expensive items, but they aren't cheap. I wear the things I buy for years and have a $200-a-month budget for what I may need, even though I don't always spend it.

I think I have earned the right to shop a little, which will ultimately lead to bigger and better things for my family, so why does my husband make me feel so guilty? — CLOTHES MAKE THE WOMAN

DEAR C.M.T.W.: Not knowing your husband, it's difficult to say, but I'll throw out a few ideas. Could he be insecure or intimidated by your professional image? Could he be jealous on some level? In what kind of environment was he raised? Was his mother's "uniform" a housedress?

If you are earning good money and your family is being provided for, then you are certainly entitled to spend some of it on yourself. And you shouldn't have to apologize for it.

DEAR ABBY: I am getting married in October, and my fiance, "Brad," and I are having trouble seeing eye-to-eye on the name change issue.

Brad's family is originally from the North, and my family is from the South. He and his family are convinced that I should drop my maiden name, keep my middle name, and take his name as my new last name.

However, the women in MY family have always kept our maiden names, added their new husband's last name to theirs and dropped their middle names.

This is about the only thing Brad and I can't seem to agree on. What can I do when my mother says one thing and my sweetie says another? With your years of experience, I hope you can steer me in the right direction. — BRAD'S BRIDE IN SOUTH CAROLINA

DEAR BRIDE: It's YOUR name. So do what you are most comfortable doing, because it's the name you will have to carry 'til the day you die (or divorce).

DEAR ABBY: I am under a lot of stress, but the woman I am with doesn't know it. I am 17, and I have been sleeping with my 38-year-old aunty. She's married and has three children. She's my mum's sister. We've slept together seven times and we can't stop doing it. I think I'm in love with her.

I know this is wrong. I need advice. Please help. — LOVESICK TEEN IN THE U.K.

DEAR LOVESICK: Being "in love" shouldn't cause stress; it should relieve it. You know what you are doing is wrong, and YOU must be the adult and end this relationship. If you don't, it will bring heartache and turmoil to you and the rest of the family. By having an adulterous and incestuous affair with you — her nephew and a minor — your aunt is behaving like a sexual predator.

Dear Abby is written by Abigail Van Buren, also known as Jeanne Phillips, and was founded by her mother, Pauline Phillips. Write Dear Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069.

Opening lead — jack of clubs.

Bridge is a truly fascinating game, and here is a hand to prove it. The deal occurred in the French Open Pairs many years ago and was reported by Jean Besse in the British Bridge World magazine.

A brief inspection of the four hands shows that declarer has 12 easy tricks, since the trumps are divided 3-2. However, South went down one, and we can all lend a sympathetic ear to the tale of just how this unexpected result came about.

Declarer won the club lead with the king and led a low trump to dummy's king, on which French star George Theron dropped the queen!

This remarkable play produced the desired effect. South was naturally afraid that East's queen was a singleton, which would make West's original spade holding J-9-7-2. If that were the case, South could not afford to play a spade to the ace next, since West's J-9 would then both become tricks, and the slam would go down.

So, to guard against this possibility, declarer crossed to the ten of diamonds and led a low trump toward dummy's ten. This would ensure only one trump loser if the situation was as South feared. Declarer didn't mind if it turned out that East originally had the Q-J alone, since that would be his only loser.

But West won the spade with the jack, stewed for a while and finally returned a club. Theron ruffed, and six spades went down one.

In the post-mortem that followed, Theron twitted his partner for taking so long to return a club. West replied that he was not sure Theron had another trump, whereupon Theron, with tongue in cheek, said that he had indicated three trumps by playing high-low!

Tomorrow: A small but significant clue.

HOROSCOPES

JACQUELINE BIGAR

BIGAR'S STARS

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Monday, May 19, 2014:

This year you will be more in touch with your feelings. You will be an effective communicator, and you'll also be more expressive when you feel upset or angry. If you are single, potential suitors might notice how you switch back and forth between being conservative and being quirky. You need to relate to someone who is not judgmental. Come summertime, you could meet Mr. or Ms. Right. If you are attached, the two of you are more likely to take up a new hobby together. Your mutual interest will help you both open up more. AQUARIUS can be as stubborn as you are, but your views are very different.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Your calmness will transform quickly into strong action. A partner seems to be a bit difficult at the moment. You might be unusually irritable in the evening as well. Know that this, too, will pass.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Take a leap of faith, and be willing to take risks in order to get past a situation. You could be sorry that you decided to act a certain way with an associate or a loved one. Put in the extra effort that could help this person to relax and ease up.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You might be more interested in what someone else has to say about what seems like a never-ending, difficult work or personal situation. Your creativity is likely to emerge when dealing with someone at a distance.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Zero in on what is important. Your creativity could be stunted by someone else's gesture and/or idea. Help this person add the flourishing touches on his or her concept. You might be driven by your need to get things accomplished.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) What you are thinking is more logical than you might realize. Be willing to take a stand. You might want to start interacting with a friend who demonstrates a similar interest. A discussion will become very lively, except around a family member.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Expenses could go overboard at the drop of a hat. You might regret letting your impulsiveness take the lead. A partner or friend understands much more than you think he or she does. You might not be communicating as well as you think you are.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) You are full of energy and dynamic ideas. Deal with one person at a time. A partner finally might be a lot more easygoing than he or she has been in a while. Be careful — a disagreement still could arise. Resist being combative; instead, go for a brief walk.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) Know when to back down in order to get the best possible results from a situation. The less said, the better off you'll be. You could feel awkward with others, and perhaps also with an associate. Try not to let your frustration get the best of you.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Don't stand on ceremony, just pick up the phone and start a conversation. You might be delighted by how happy the other party is to hear from you. Several people might challenge you in a meeting, but make it your pleasure to be responsive.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You might want to indulge a boss. Your high energy and distinctive ideas will come out, no matter who runs into you. You'll want to be aware of the costs of your actions. Someone could become angrier than he or she has been in a while.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) You tend to flourish, no matter what you're doing. Do research, or call someone you consider an expert. Get as much feedback as possible. Push to get a better grasp of a situation, and know that you will make the right decision.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) You might need to be more detached and not personalize a situation so much. Read between the lines when you speak with a friend. You could be waffling about what you are seeing. Don't allow others to add fuel to any fires that might be smoldering.
