Although Florida lawmakers had more than a $1.2 billion surplus to use in the new state budget, environmental groups say the 2014 Legislature shorted conservation efforts in several critical areas, including the protection and restoration of state springs.

The Everglades, Lake Okeechobee and related waterways were the big winners in the 2014-15 budget (HB 5001) that is awaiting a final review by Gov. Rick Scott.

The Everglades-related projects received more than $165 million in funding along with an additional $90 million over the next three years to revamp the Tamiami Trail across South Florida, improving water flow in the Everglades.

But springs funding was less generous, with lawmakers only agreeing to $30 million, although Scott had asked for $55 million. They also rejected a Senate bill that would have provided nearly $380 million to help protect Florida's springs.

Land-buying programs, including the Florida Forever initiative, received only $17.5 million in guaranteed funding, although lawmakers also agreed to provide an additional $40 million if it can be generated through the sale of non-conservation state property.

The lack of funding for land conservation and springs protection is already being cited by environmental groups as reasons for supporting Amendment 1 on the November ballot that would require the state to set aside one-third of the real estate transaction tax each year for conservation funding. The amendment, if approved by 60 percent of the voters, is projected to provide more than $10 billion over the next two decades.

"Water and land conservation in Florida deserves a stable, dedicated source of funding," said Laurie MacDonald, a state program director for the Defenders of Wildlife and chair of the Florida Forever coalition. "This year's budget is another perfect example of why it is so important for voters to say yes on Amendment 1, the

Scott strikes millions from Florida budget

SCOTT

TALLAHASSEE — Florida Gov. Rick Scott, who came into office promising to tame government spending, signed into law on Monday a record $77 billion budget for the coming year.

Scott not only approved the new budget, but he also used a light touch on his budget vetoes during his fourth year in office. The nearly $69 million in line-item vetoes — which included money for a Jacksonville dog park and a Miami observation tower — marked the lowest total during his term.

The Republican governor's handling of the budget was also in contrast to past years. He signed the budget privately with no public fanfare like during his first year when he was surrounded by school children at an event held in an outdoor plaza at a Central Florida retirement community.

Scott's low key handling of the budget comes during a tough re-election campaign where Democrats plan to constantly criticize the governor's record — including his decision in his first year to recommend deep cuts to education.

Gov. Rick Scott signed a $77 billion dollar state budget Monday that includes $1 million to widen County Road 466A to four lanes from U.S. 27 west to the Sumter County line.

Once constructed, the road will run past the 987-acre Pine Ridge Dairy Tract where The Villages of Lake-Sumter Inc. plans a 2,038-home development.

The 3.05-mile 466A widening project will be done in three phases: Phase one will span from Sunny Court to US 27; phase two will cover 1.8 miles, from the Sumter County line to Cutoff Road and phase three will cover 0.8 miles, from Marguerite Avenue to Sunny Court.

The project is estimated to cost $25 million.

Study shows people fear male-named hurricanes more

SETH BORENSTEIN
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON — Which scares you more: Hurricane Victor or Hurricane Victoria? People are slightly less likely to flee an oncoming storm with a feminine name than a masculine one, a new study finds.

But here is Victoria's secret: Hurricanes with feminine names turn out to be deadlier in the United States than their more macho-sounding counterparts, probably because their monikers make people underestimate their danger, the researchers conclude.

In fact, the two deadliest storms to make landfall in the U.S. since 1979, when male names were introduced, were named Katrina and Sandy.

The study, which didn't involve any experts in meteorology or disaster science, is published Monday in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences. Atlantic hurricane season started Sunday.

In six different experiments, more than 1,000 test subjects told behavioral scientists at the University of Illinois in Champaign that they were slightly more likely to evacuate from an oncoming storm named Christopher than Christina, Victor than Victoria, Alexander than Alexandra and Danny than Kate. They found female names less frightening.

"People are looking for meaning in any information that they receive," said study co-author Sharon Shavitt, a professor of marketing. "The name of the storm is providing people with irrelevant information that they actually use."

Scott slams brakes on higher speed limits

JIM SAUNDERS
THE NEWS SERVICE OF FLORIDA

Pointing to concerns raised by law-enforcement officers, Gov. Rick Scott on Monday vetoed a bill that could have led to 75 mph speed limits on some highways.

"Although the bill does not mandate higher speed limits, allowing for the possibility of faster driving on Florida's roads and highways could ultimately and unacceptably increase the risk of serious accidents for Florida citizens and visitors," Scott wrote in a veto message. "I strongly respect the opinion of state and local law enforcement officers who have contacted me to warn about the possible serious negative consequences should this bill become law. While the evidence suggests that increased driving speeds are not the sole cause of traffic accidents, they clearly contribute to the increased severity of vehicle crash outcomes in the form of needless injuries and deaths."

Scott said last month he planned to veto the bill (SB 392), which was heavily debated during the legislative session that ended May 2. The bill passed the House in a 58-56 vote.

The bill would have allowed — but not required — the state Department of Transportation to raise highway speed limits by 5 mph, including going from 70 mph to 75 mph on some roads. While supporters pointed to the department's role in deciding the proper speed limits, the bill drew opposition from the auto club AAA, along with law enforcement.

Water and Land Conservation Amendment, this November."

Janet Bowman of The Nature Conservancy said it was a "disappointment" that the Legislature did not embrace the Senate's ambitious plan on springs protection and funding. She also said it was surprising that lawmakers did not meet Scott's request for at least $55 million in springs funding.

However, she said the reluctance to support a more expansive move in water resource policy was a result of the declaration by the incoming legislative leaders, Rep. Steve Crisafulli, R-Merritt Island, who will become the next House speaker in November, and Sen. Andy Gardiner, R-Orlando, who will be the next Senate president, that water policy will be a focus of their administrations.

Although the Florida Forever funding will not be close to the $300 million a year it once enjoyed, Bowman said she is more optimistic that in the coming budget year the state can generate additional money through the sale of non-conservation lands. The state has already announced the sale of a former state hospital in Palm Beach County for $15.6 million, as part of the overall effort to generate some $40 million for the land conservation program.

The state Department of Environmental Protection tried a similar scheme this year by trying to sell "surplus" conservation lands. But that effort fell through when objections were raised about selling land previously acquired for environmental reasons.

Another land conservation effort approved by lawmakers that did not get much publicity, Bowman said, was language in the annual budget bill that will also let the state water management districts use some $20 million in unspent money from previous years for land acquisition projects in the coming year, including those aimed at water resource protection.

With the prospect of voter approval of Amendment 1, Bowman said it could mean more money for the Everglades, springs restoration, Florida Forever and other environmental initiatives in the coming years. But she said that will depend on how lawmakers react to a passed amendment.

"It will increase the pot. But with more money comes the issue of how it's allocated," Bowman said. "The devil is in the details and the implementation.

"If the amendment passes, it creates a great opportunity for the Legislature to look at what our resource protection priorities are and to reinvest in protecting land and water resources."

stop in Panama City, Scott said that the low number of vetoes this year was not related to the looming election and that his "focus was on taxpayers."

"Our state has turned around," Scott said. "We have more jobs. We've gotten more people back to working. We've strengthened our investments. We've cut taxes on homeowners so families can get some money back."

Scott also contended that the new budget reached his goals for the year since legislators were able to set aside money for more than $500 million in tax and fee cuts as part of the spending package approved this year.

Florida's slow but steady economic recovery left state legislators with a budget windfall of roughly $1.2 billion even after they set aside money for school enrollment and increased costs in Medicaid, the state and federal backed health care program.

The new state budget, which covers spending from July 1 of this year to June 30, 2015, includes increased money for child welfare programs and projects to battle water pollution. The budget also boosted money for colleges and universities, but without raising student tuition rates.

There's an increase for public schools but it's not as large as it was last year. And most of the extra money isn't coming from the state but instead relies on a nearly $400 million rise in local property taxes.

Andy Ford, the president of Florida's teacher union, criticized Scott and legislators for failing to use the budget surplus to pump up funding for schools to what it was prior to the recession.

"For seven years we've been starving our schools despite the growth in the number of students we're educating," Ford said. "This budget represents a squandered opportunity for the governor and the Legislature to make a significant investment in Florida's public school students."

Republican legislators defended their spending priorities

Sen. Joe Negron, R-Stuart, and the Senate budget chief, said that Scott's light number of budget vetoes "validates that the Legislature crafted a very prudent and fiscally conservative budget." He noted that while legislators increased spending they also set aside money for tax and fee cuts and kept $3 billion in reserves.

But even in a "fiscally conservative" budget there was plenty of spending for hometown projects ranging from gun ranges to a military museum and a course designed to teach "sexual risk avoidance."

Scott vetoed more than 100 projects, including money to restore county courthouses in north Florida, money for several programs at private Barry University and funding for a South Florida farmers market.

funding from the state will help the county acquire the final right of way for phase three of the project.

This is one of several projects allocated in the governor's budget, which Florida Tax Watch called budget "turkeys" that should be vetoed because they were not vetted through the normal legislative process., said Kurt Wenner, Tax Watch's vice president.

The governor also allocated $3 million for construction of a new science lab at the south Lake campus of Lake-Sumter State College to jump start a magnet school for the highest performing students in south Lake.

Tax Watch reportedly opposed the funding because "it was not on the Florida College Three-year Public Education Priority List."

LSSC President Charles Mojock was thrilled after the governor approved funding for the science lab and expressed appreciation for the support.

"As health care continues to grow as an economic driver for Lake County, the new science lab facility will help us better prepare students for careers in the health care and STEM fields," he said in a phone interview.

Lake-Sumter State College, South Lake Hospital, the Lake County School District and University of Central Florida have come together and will give final approval soon to the school. It would serve 100 high-performing students in the ninth grade, who would take two years of advanced placement classes, followed by dual-enrollment at LSSC and two years at the University of Central Florida.

"This definitely gives us a big boost that we can have confidence in moving forward with our program knowing we will be able to start working on the planning of the facility," Mojock said.

Also Monday, the governor approved funding for five Baker Act patient beds. This was also identified by Tax Watch as a budget turkey.

Since 2004 Lifestream Behavioral Center has not received funding from the state.

The Florida Mental Health Act, which is known as the Baker Act, allows "legal procedures for the mental health examination and treatment" of those determined to be dangerous to themselves or others, according to the state and Jon Cherry, chief executive officer of Lifestream.

While approving $88.5 million statewide for water projects, Scott included $300,000 to fund a study of alternative water supplies for south Lake County. This project was not identified by Tax Watch as a turkey.

There will be a demand for an additional 300 million gallons of water a day in 2035, but the Floridan Aquifer, the current traditional source, will be able to provide only about 50 million gallons, according to water experts.

The municipalities of Groveland, Mascotte, Clermont and Montverde recently agreed to share in the cost of a consultant to address the issue in the south part of the county.

Those municipalities are all part of the South Lake Regional Water Initiative, which also includes the South Lake Chamber of Commerce and the county.

In particular, the municipalities will no longer have to foot the major costs of the study, according to Alan Oyler, who represents the SLRWI.

"If everything works out the way we hope it does, the only out of pocket expenses for the communities would be the cost of project management," Oyler said.

Moreover, the funding will move up the timeline by three months for putting out a request for proposal to hire a consultant for the study, Oyler said.

Working in conjunction with the Central Florida Water Initiative, which is developing a unified process to address Central Florida's current long-term water supply needs, SLRWI addresses "regional solutions in the areas of reclaimed water distribution, minimum flows and levels of the region's lakes and rivers, and alternative water supplies and conservation."

Groveland Mayor Tim Loucks, who founded the SLRWI along with Commissioner Sean Parks, was elated Monday afternoon upon learning the news.

"This particular appropriation from the state of Florida shows what can be accomplished when you have five cities and the county all working for the same purpose such as the case of the SLRWI," he said.

Shavitt said both men and women rated female storms less scary and they both "are likely to believe that women are milder and less aggressive." It fits with other research about gender perception differences, she said. Sandy, while it can also be a male name, was chosen as a female name by weather authorities in 2012. Shavitt said it also ranked as rather feminine when she asked a small group of people to assess names on a masculine-feminine scale.

Hurricane and disaster science experts, such as MIT's Kerry Emanuel, were skeptical at first. Then after more consideration some but not all found merit in the work, noting that it is more about psychology rather than physical science.

Emanuel said confusion over whether 2012's Sandy was called a hurricane or post-tropical storm did cause confusion, so maybe names could make a difference too.

But Susan Cutter, director of the University of South Carolina's Hazards and Vulnerability Research Institute, dismissed the idea that female-named storms are deadlier. She considered the study results just coincidence.

Police identify body of missing girl

AUSTIN FULLER | Staff Writer
austin.fuller@dailycommercial.com

Leesburg Police Capt. Rob Hicks said the body of Beyonce Reddick, a 12-year-old autistic girl who was found by divers on Saturday in a pond outside Leesburg Regional Medical Center, has been positively identified.

One officer on the scene, who had previous experience with Reddick, positively identified the body, as did a detective later on.

Police responded to 410 Indiana St. at 5:39 p.m. on Friday for a missing child, according to police. Nancy Manuel reported the missing child after speaking, over the phone, to her stepbrother, who saw the girl at the pond at Leesburg Regional Medical Center.

REDDICK

An incident report states that Manuel described Reddick as autistic with no verbal communication skills.

Officers checked the girl's house as well as Villa Maison, where Reddick previously lived, the Family Food Mart and a Sunoco, according to the report.

A bloodhound tracked her scent from her house near LRMC to the medical facility, according to the report.

Two women also told officers they saw Reddick running in front of the hospital near the pond, the report states. They said they saw Reddick running on Dixie Avenue toward the water. The report says those women talked to an "unknown" security guard who had also seen Reddick but did not know where she went.

Hicks said autopsy results are still pending.

East Ridge Middle band to play at Disney

ROXANNE BROWN | Staff Writer

Members of East Ridge Middle School Spartans symphonic band will be at Downtown Disney's Marketplace the day after school ends, on June 7.

The 45 advanced music students won't be meeting there for pure recreation however, but to play on the main stage at the marketplace, an opportunity that's rare because of the screening and audition process Disney requires of any group interested in making an appearance.

Band Director Robert Walker was recently notified of their performance last month after having submitted an online application and audition video of the band for the chance to play there earlier this year.

This is the first time that any of his East Ridge Middle School groups have played at Disney. Minneola Elementary's fifth grade choir performed there in February.

Percussionists practice for the performance.

"I was looking for an opportunity outside of the annual scholastic events that would celebrate the success of our student musicians, and give them an opportunity to share their music with others at a whole new level," Walker said. "There are opportunities outside of Disney where your group can pay for admission and get in for a performance, but I wanted us to work for this and earn it. That is why I chose the route of the audition. Effort was necessary to prepare and demonstrate that we were ready."

On Friday during class, some of Walker's students shared their feelings about the approaching performance.

"I think playing there will help us grow more in music and give us more experience," said oboe player Nicole Walker, 12, the only seventh grader in the group that is made up of mostly eighth grade advanced-music students. "I feel excited and I think it says a lot about our band because they probably listen to a lot of audition

OBITUARIES

Donald R. Baugher

Donald Ray Baugher of Leesburg, FL died on May 30th, 2014. He was 76 years old. Don was born on August 31st, 1937 in Lamoni, Iowa and lived much of his life until college in Aledo, Illinois. He graduated from the University of Illinois-Chicago College of Pharmacy in 1961. He married Marlene Hofstetter in 1962 and had 3 children. He opened Baugher Pharmacy in Beardstown, Illinois in 1969 and won many national awards and accolades for his innovative approach to pharmacy and home health care, as well as serving on the Illinois State Board of Pharmacy. While living in Beardstown he served as President of the Chamber of Commerce, served on his church council, and loved to support community theatre as both a performer and a patron. After dramatically turning his life over to Christ in 1977, one of his greatest joys was performing with Promise, a traveling gospel group that toured to various churches across the state and recorded two albums. After selling his pharmacy and healthcare practice in Illinois, he and Marlene then moved to Scottsdale, Arizona in 1984 where he owned a Healthcare Recruiters franchise. Eventually, they felt a call to the mission field and attended Dallas Theological Seminary full-time, graduating in 1988 and subsequently accepting a mission assignment through Greater Europe Mission to Barcelona and Banyoles, Spain. After two years overseas, they returned to Arizona where Don served as executive director for Phoenix's 1993 Luis Palau crusade and worked at Phoenix Seminary. Next came years of ministry and health-care service in both Ohio and Tennessee before deciding to to continue their work for God in Leesburg, FL where they became involved at Southpointe Baptist Church, with Don serving as deacon. In addition, he served as the development director for Care for Pastors. Also during this time, Don once again became involved in pharmacy after being informed of a desperate need for a pharmacist on an Indian Reservation north of Globe, AZ. He came to love the people there, as he did everywhere he went. The feeling was mutual for all that came in his path. His last job before he became ill was at Stewardship Advisory Group. In any job or position he held, Don saw it as an opportunity to serve and to minister to everyone with whom he came in contact. He is survived by his wife, Marlene, his mother, Kathryn Baugher of Aledo, IL, his children Shelby Campbell (Dane) of Scottsdale, AZ, Lori Engel (Jeff) of West Bloomfield, MI, and Matt Baugher (Jennifer) of Franklin, TN and 10 grandchildren and great grandchildren, Sig, Jon, Brandon, Josh, Jordan, Lexie, Ellie, Alaina, Abigail, and Lylah. He is also survived by his brothers Bill Baugher and Steve Baugher of Aledo, IL as well as his sister, Barb Finn from Phoenix, AZ. He was preceded in death by his father, John Baugher, and one brother, Mike Baugher, of Aledo, IL. A memorial service will be held on Friday, June 6th at 2:00pm at Southpointe Baptist Fellowship Church, 25900 Highway 27 South, Leesburg, FL 34748. Fla. siblings graduate as back-to-back valedictorians

Associated Press

NEW SMYRNA BEACH — Two siblings from New Smyrna Beach are back-to-back valedictorians at their high school.

Scott Mosher found out last week that he was at the top of New Smyrna Beach High's class of 2014. He followed his sister Kara, who was valedictorian of the class of 2013.

Scott graduated Sunday night and plans to study computer science at the University of Central Florida.

Making the honor even more special is the fact that Scott was diagnosed with autism and a very low IQ when he was 2.

"We didn't believe the diagnosis to be true," said their mother, Mary Francis Mosher.

The siblings were dual-enrolled at Daytona State College, meaning they graduated with their high school diploma and their Associate of Arts degrees.

Their father, Rick, Mosher, echoed her sentiments. "They both worked really hard and they both really deserved it. Scott, in particular, he had to work extra hard because he's an ESE student," he told The Daytona Beach News-Journal.

A thirst for knowledge runs in the family, said Mary Francis Mosher. She is a math teacher at the high school and their father retired from a teaching position at Indian River Elementary School.

his house and found a pornographic website operating on his computer.

According to an arrest affidavit, the daughter told police she was walking her dogs at about 10 p.m. on Tuesday when she noticed her neighbor, Curtis, walking away from her bedroom window in the backyard. She told her father this and, on Saturday night, he staked out her backyard at about 11 p.m.

The father said he told his daughter to turn on her bedroom light and sit on her bed. Two minutes later, the father said, Curtis walked out of his house, entered his daughter's backyard and peered into her window.

Curtis then left the backyard but returned a few minutes later when his daughter went back into her bedroom, the father said, adding the suspect was wearing only boxer shorts at the time.

The father called police as Curtis went back into his house a second time.

"I asked the defendant about the incident and he admitted to me that he was looking into the victim's bedroom," the affidavit states, adding Curtis gave no reason why.

Two police officers said when they looked at Custis' computer, they observed the website showing a couple having sexual intercourse, according to the affidavit, which also noted the suspect only wearing boxer shorts.

tapes. It's cool they picked ours."

"They have such high standards but knowing they picked us felt really good," said Salvatore Como, 14, an eighth grader who has been playing trumpet for nearly three years.

Walker shares his students' sentiments, but that didn't cause him to go easy on the group during Friday's classroom rehearsal, talking to them after a rehearsal of highlights from the Disney movie Frozen about staying in tune leading up to the final crescendo.

He also talked to them about proper posture, breathing; and maybe because of the excitement surrounding their impending Disney performance, Walker asked the students to imagine what Cinderella movie characters their instruments could represent.

The students have one more week to prepare for their performance, which will include songs like John Williams' Star Wars: The Phantom Menace, Pharrell Williams' Happy and classical pieces.

"It is an honor and a privilege to be selected," Walker said. "Many excellent groups perform on this stage, and now we join the ranks. It is a good opportunity for our students as it allows them to take their music outside of the school and perform for a whole new audience."

Anyone interested in attending the Disney performance in support of the East Ridge Middle School Symphonic Band can do so by arriving at the Marketplace located at 1490 E. Buena Vista Drive in Orlando before 1:30 p.m. when the students are expected on stage.

night, when he got upset and began calling her names. The woman, who said she is three months pregnant with a child by Lopez, claims she was trying to get out of bed to leave the room when the first alleged attack occurred.

"The arrestee forcefully kicked her in the stomach one time when she was trying to get up," the affidavit states. "The victim stated it was extremely painful. The victim was transported to Florida Hospital Waterman for examination by LC EMS (Lake County Emergency Medical Service)."

When the victim returned home to collect her belongings, she claims Lopez began yelling at her again.

"The suspect then started striking her with closed fists and she 'curled up in a ball' on the bed," the affidavit said. "The suspect continued striking the victim in the legs and body as she tried to protect her body from the attack."

A family friend chased Lopez from the house, Lake County Sheriff's deputies reported. He went to another family friend's house to "hide from police," but that man held him until deputies arrived and arrested Lopez, the officers said.

According to the affidavit, Lopez said he knew his girlfriend was pregnant.

weather," said Norman Leppla, a University of Florida professor and Institute of Food and Agricultural Sciences Integrated Pest Management coordinator.

What Leppla was referring to was not the weather in May, when the lovebugs made their first appearance of the year, but from last October to April. It is in that annual time frame that lovebug eggs, laid by the females each September, develop from the larva state into a lovebug.

"The lovebug spends most of its life as larva at the soil surface, usually beneath decaying vegetation," Leppla said. "In that situation, it depends on its environment to be fairly stable. If it is too dry or too wet the larva will die. We don't have any data that confirms (it was the weather), but the environment probably wasn't supportive during last year."

Air temperature also could have played a part in the decreased number of lovebugs this year.

"If you think back to the weather that we have had this spring, it stayed cool longer than normal and it was wetter than normal," said David Holmes, UF/IFAS Marion County Extension Director. "My guess would be that combination of that cool, wet weather has lessened the population."

According to www.idcide.com, an online weather-tracking site, the average rainfall for the Leesburg area is 2.54 inches in October, based upon measurements taken at a rain gauge near Lisbon. However, information from the Lake County Water Authority put the average rainfall last October — at a half-dozen rain gauges it operates across the county — at 3.49 inches. This included a monthly high of 8.21 inches of rain at a gauge at Villa City, north of Mascotte, and 4.06 inches near Four Corners.

In addition to the weather, Holmes said he noticed that a predator of the lovebug might have been around longer than usual this spring.

"While there is no scientific data to support this, I saw robins longer this year than I normally do," he said. "They seemed to be around for about a month. Normally, they are here about two weeks and then they go north. If you think of the weather they had up north, it was cold for a long time. The robins could have sensed that and stayed longer."

The decreased number of lovebugs this May was probably welcomed by most. Quite possibly it will be the weather over the next three months that will determine if lovebugs will be a nuisance or not come September.

Questions loom over Bergdahl-Taliban swap

KEN DILANIAN and DEB RIECHMANN
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon concluded in 2010 that Army Sgt. Bowe Bergdahl walked away from his unit, and after an initial flurry of searching the military curbed any high-risk rescue plans. But the U.S. kept pursuing avenues to negotiate his release, recently seeking to fracture the Taliban network by making its leaders fear a faster deal with underlings could prevent the freedom they sought for five of their top officials, American officials told The Associated Press

The U.S. government kept tabs on Bergdahl's whereabouts with spies, drones and satellites, even as it pursued off-and-on negotiations to get him back over the five years of captivity that ended on Saturday.

Bergdahl was in stable condition Monday at a U.S. military hospital in Germany, but questions mounted at home over the way his freedom was secured: Five high-level members of the Taliban were released from the U.S. prison in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, and sent to Qatar. The five, who will have to stay in Qatar for a year before going back to Afghanistan, include former ministers in the Taliban government, commanders and one man who had direct ties to the late al-Qaida chief Osama bin Laden.

A U.S. defense official familiar with efforts to free Bergdahl said the U.S. government had been working in recent months to split the Taliban network. Different U.S. agencies had floated several offers to the militants, and the Taliban leadership feared that underlings might cut a quick deal while they were working to free the five detainees at Guantanamo, said the official and a congressional aide, both of whom spoke only on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to speak publicly about efforts to release Bergdahl.

OTTO KITSINGER / AP

Jani and Bob Bergdahl speak to the media during a news conference at Gowen Field in Boise, Idaho, on Sunday.

There was plenty of criticism about how the deal came about.

"Knowing that various lines of effort were presented and still under consideration, none of which involved a disproportionate prisoner exchange, I am concerned by the sudden urgency behind the prisoner swap, given other lines of effort," said Rep. Duncan Hunter, R-Calif., who has criticized the government effort to seek Bergdahl's release as disorganized.

One current and one former U.S. official said Obama had signed off on a possible prisoner swap. The president spoke to the Qatari emir last Tuesday, and they gave each other assurances about the proposed transfers, said a senior administration official, speaking on condition of anonymity because the official wasn't authorized to discuss the deliberations in public.

One official briefed on the intelligence said the Taliban also may have been worried about Bergdahl's health, having been warned that the U.S. would react fiercely if he died in captivity. The Landstuhl Regional Medical Center in Germany, which is caring for Bergdahl, said he was suffering from nutritional issues.

Bergdahl's handoff to U.S. special forces in eastern Afghanistan was never going to lead to an uncomplicated yellow-ribbon celebration. The exchange stirred debate over a possibly heightened risk other Americans being snatched as bargaining chips and whether the released detainees would find their way back to the battlefield.

Republicans in Congress criticized the agreement and complained about not having been consulted, citing a law that requires Congress to be given 30 days notice before a prisoner is released from Guantanamo.

Reid vows quick vote on VA health bill

MATTHEW DALY
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A refashioned bill to address problems plaguing the Veterans Affairs Department should be approved by the Senate as soon as possible, Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid said Monday.

The bill, sponsored by Sen. Bernie Sanders, I-Vt., would give the VA authority to immediately remove senior executives based on poor job performance while preventing "wholesale political firings" that Sanders said could be allowed under a similar bill approved by the House.

The Senate bill also would allow veterans who can't get timely appointments with VA doctors to go to community health centers, military hospitals or private doctors and would authorize VA to lease 27 new health facilities in 18 states.

"This is really good legislation," Reid said Monday on the Senate floor. "Every senator should support this."

The bill comes amid a growing scandal over patient delays and cover-ups at VA hospitals and clinics nationwide that led to the resignation last week of former Veterans Affairs Secretary Eric Shinseki. A federal investigation into the troubled Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid of Nev. points to a reporter during a news conference on Capitol Hill in Washington to discuss immigration reform.

Phoenix VA Health Care System found that about 1,700 veterans in need of care were "at risk of being lost or forgotten" after being kept off an official waiting list.

The investigation also found broad and deep-seated problems throughout the sprawling health care system, which provides medical care to about 6.5 million veterans annually.

While those who have lied or manipulated data must be punished, "we also need to get to the root causes of the problems that have been exposed," said Sanders, chairman of the Senate Veterans Affairs Committee. With 2 million more veterans coming into the system in recent years, after the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, "there are many facilities within the VA that do not have the doctors, nurses and other personnel that they need to provide quality care in a timely way," Sanders said.

Rep. Jeff Miller, R-Fla., chairman of the House Veterans Affairs Committee, said the Senate should approve a bill he sponsored to give the VA secretary authority to immediately fire VA senior executives based on performance. The House approved the bill, 390-33, last month.

Miller dismissed concerns expressed by Sanders and other Democrats that the House bill would "trample" on due-process rights and protections for VA employees. The House bill also could allow firing of whistleblowers, Sanders said.

"Ironically, the same lawmakers voicing these concerns do not afford similar 'rights' and 'protections' to their own employees, making their opposition to (the House bill) all the more incomprehensible," Miller wrote Monday in a column on Time Magazine's website.

A White House spokeswoman said the Obama administration shares the goals of the House-passed bill and has worked with Sanders to move legislation forward while addressing some technical issues with the House-passed version.

"We hope Congress can finish its work on a bill that addresses accountability and makes important reforms (at the VA) and will continue to work closely with them to get that done," spokeswoman Amy Brundage said.

Paul Rieckhoff, CEO and founder of Iraq and Afghanistan Veterans of America, urged the Senate to approve the House-passed bill "as its stands" and send the measure to Obama.

At a Capitol Hill news conference Monday, Rieckhoff described the Senate as the place "where good ideas go to die."

Rieckhoff called for a criminal investigation into the VA's health care system and said anyone who falsified records or other wrongdoing should be prosecuted.

12-year-old girls charged in stabbing

Associated Press

WAUKESHA, Wis. — Prosecutors say two 12-year-old Wisconsin girls stabbed their 12-year-old friend nearly to death in the wood to please a mythological creature they learned about online.

Both girls were charged as adults with first-degree attempted homicide Monday in Waukesha County Circuit Court; they each face up to 60 years in prison if convicted. A court commissioner set bail at $500,000 cash per child. According to a criminal complaint, the girls had been planning to kill their friend for months and finally made the attempt in a park on Saturday morning, after a slumber party.

One of the girls told a detective they were trying to become "proxies" of Slender Man, a mythological character they learned about on creepypasta.wikia.com, a website about horror stories and legends. They planned to run away to the demon's forest mansion after the slaying, the complaint said.

The victim suffered 19 stab wounds; one missed a major artery near her heart by a millimeter, doctors told police. She was in stable condition Monday.

Obama: New plant rules will shrink power prices

DINA CAPPIELLO and JOSH LEDERMAN
Associated Press

JOHN AMIS / AP

The coal-fired Plant Scherer is shown in operation early Sunday in Juliette, Ga.

WASHINGTON — In a sweeping initiative to curb pollutants blamed for global warming, the Obama administration unveiled a plan Monday aimed at cutting carbon dioxide emissions from power plants by nearly a third by 2030. But it delays the deadline for some states to begin complying until long after President Barack Obama leaves office.

The 645-page plan, expected to be finalized next year, is a centerpiece of Obama's efforts to deal with climate change and seeks to give the United States more leverage to prod other countries to act when negotiations on a new international treaty resume next year. Under the plan, carbon emissions are to be reduced 30 percent from 2005 levels, in what would amount to one of the most significant U.S. actions on global warming.

Obama, in a conference call hosted by the American Lung Association, said the plan would both shrink electricity prices and protect the health of vulnerable Americans. He scolded critics who he predicted would contend anew that the limits would crush jobs and damage the economy.

"What we've seen every time is that these claims are debunked when you actually give workers and businesses the tools and the incentives they need to innovate," Obama said.

The proposal sets off a complex regulatory process, steeped in politics, in which the 50 states will each determine how to meet customized targets set by the Environmental Protection Agency, then submit those plans for approval.

"This is not just about disappearing polar bears or melting ice caps," said EPA Administrator Gina McCarthy. "This is about protecting our health and our homes. This is about protecting local economies and jobs."

Some states will be allowed to emit more pollutants and others less, leading to a nationwide reduction of 30 percent.

Many states that rely heavily on coal will be spared from cutting a full 30 percent. West Virginia, for example, must reduce the pollution it puts out per amount of power by 19 percent compared to the rate in 2012. Ohio's target is 28 percent less, while Kentucky and Wyoming will have to find ways to make 18 percent and 19 percent cuts in their electricity generation's efficiency.

On the other extreme, New York has a 44 percent target, EPA figures show. But New York already has joined with other Northeast states to curb carbon dioxide from power plants, reducing the baseline figure from which cuts must be made. States like New York can get credit for actions they've already taken, lest they be punished for taking early action.

Initially, Obama wanted each state to submit its plan by June 2016. But the draft proposal shows states could have until 2017 — and 2018, if they join with other states.

That means even if the rules survive legal and other challenges, the dust won't likely settle on this transformation until well into the next administration, raising the possibility that political dynamics in either Congress or the White House could alter the rule's course.

Pro-Russia rebels attack Ukrainian border guards

NEBI QENA and PETER LEONARD
Associated Press

LUHANSK, Ukraine — Hundreds of pro-Russia rebels armed with automatic weapons and rocket-propelled grenades mounted a day-long assault Monday on a key government base used to coordinate the defense of the country's border with Russia, prompting the deployment of air support by government forces.

Border guards killed at least five rebels in repelling the attack on their base, a spokesman for the border guard service said.

In the center of Luhansk, some six miles away, a blast at an administrative building held by the insurgents claimed more lives. A health official for the Luhansk region told Interfax news agency that at least seven people had been confirmed dead in what rebels described as a government airstrike.

The government denied carrying out an airstrike and said the blast was caused by misdirected rebel fire from a portable surface-to-air missile launcher.

Russia's Foreign Ministry swiftly condemned what it said was a government attack on the rebel-held building and urged U.S. Assistant Secretary of Defense Derek Chollet, who was visiting Kiev on Monday, to help calm unrest in Ukraine.

VADIM GHIRDA / AP

A pro-Russian rebel fires his weapon during clashes with Ukrainian troops on the outskirts of Luhansk, Ukraine on Monday.

"We urge our Western partners to use their influence on Kiev, to stop Ukraine from descending into a national catastrophe," the ministry said in a statement.

Russia also called an emergency meeting of the U.N. Security Council to introduce a resolution calling for an immediate halt to the violence and talks to establish a cease-fire. Moscow has almost daily demanded that the Kiev government halt its military operations in the east, but it was the first time it has called for a Security Council resolution. It was unclear how much support the proposal would have.

The rebel assault on the government base continued into the night, ending around 9 p.m. with the border guards succeeded in repelling the insurgents.

Earlier, rebels in camouflage had promised safe passage to the government troops if they surrendered and laid down their arms. The pro-Russian insurgents, who have seized government and police buildings across eastern Ukraine, have waged increasingly aggressive attacks on government-held checkpoints and garrisons in an attempt to seize weapons and ammunition from Ukrainian forces.

The attacks are deeply troubling for Ukraine's new government, whose president-elect, Petro Poroshenko, has pledged to crush the separatist movement in the east. The conflict has escalated markedly in the past week, with rebels attempting to seize a major airport and the shooting-down of a Ukrainian military helicopter.

Serhiy Astakhov, the spokesman for the border guard service, told The Associated Press that five rebels were killed and eight wounded in Monday's attack on the walled compound on the western fringes of Luhansk, a major city not far from the Russian border. He said seven servicemen were wounded.

Peru postpones coca crop destruction

FRANKLIN BRICENO
Associated Press

LIMA, Peru — Peru's president is indefinitely postponing plans to forcibly eradicate coca fields in the world's top cocaine-producing valley.

President Ollanta Humala's announcement in a televised interview Sunday night came a week after he fired his drug czar, Carmen Masias.

She had announced in January that a militarized eradication effort, half-funded by the United States, would begin this year in the Apurimac, Ene and Mantauro river valley.

Critics said that strategy would only help drug-funded Shining Path rebels based in the region turn its coca growers against authorities, with violent results. Coca is the remote valley's lone cash crop and growers have already mounted protests and threatened resistance.

The U.S. Embassy issued a statement saying U.S. officials would consult with Peru's government about the revised strategy.

Humala said that while he was not ruling out forced eradication in the valley, he wanted to first try crop substitution, led by the Agriculture Ministry.

An estimated 12,000 families live off coca in the valley, where authorities say more than 300 labs produce semi-refined cocaine, most of it destined for Europe. The government says 54 percent of Peru's coca crop is produced in the area.

Humala said his government would spend $214 million on roads in the valley to help farmers get alternative crops to market.

Spain: King abdicates for his more popular son

ALAN CLENDENNING
Associated Press

MADRID — King Juan Carlos, who led Spain's transition from dictatorship to democracy but faced damaging scandals amid the nation's financial meltdown, announced Monday he will abdicate in favor of his more popular son so that fresh royal blood can rally the nation.

While the monarchy is largely symbolic, Juan Carlos' surprise decision may hold implications for the burning issue of Catalonia, which is to hold a secession referendum this fall.

A constitutional revision is required to ensure Crown Prince Felipe's firstborn daughter will succeed him, and there was speculation other changes might be made to dull secessionist fervor in the wealthy northeastern region.

Juan Carlos said 46-year-old Felipe is ready to be king and will "open a new era of hope." The son already has greater command over the hearts of his people: Felipe's 70 percent approval in a recent El Mundo newspaper poll dwarfs Juan Carlos' 41 percent.

Juan Carlos didn't mention the scandals or Catalonia, or specify what issues his son must prioritize as the next head of state. He stressed only that Felipe will need to "undertake the transformations and reforms demanded by today's circumstances and to address the challenges of tomorrow with renewed intensity and dedication."

In his nationwide address, the king said he started making plans to give up the throne after he turned 76 in January.

Since then, Spain has embarked on a sluggish but steady economic recovery. Its biggest problems are a 25 percent unemployment rate and Catalonia's drive to hold a secession vote in November — labeled illegal by the central government in Madrid.

Spain is expected to change its constitution to ensure Felipe's daughter, Leonor, can succeed him, should Felipe's wife get pregnant again and give birth to a boy, who would become monarch under the current constitution.

Changing the rule on succession could open the door for additional changes, including demands by the opposition Socialist Party to grant Catalonia more autonomy or special financial benefits to blunt separatist sentiment there.

"I think both parties could agree on a change to accommodate the needs of Catalonia," said Antonio Barroso, a London-based analyst with Teneo Intelligence, a political and business risk consulting firm.

Still, Catalonia's president, Artur Mas, said the king's abdication would not derail his plans to hold a vote on succession. "We have a date with our future on Nov. 9," Mas told reporters after the speech.

"There will be a change in king, but there won't be a change in the political process that the people of Catalonia are following."

The abdication was first announced by Prime Minister Mariano Rajoy, who said he hoped for a quick handover but did not specify when because the government must first craft a law creating a legal mechanism for the abdication and for Felipe's assumption of power.

Rajoy said he would preside over an emergency cabinet meeting Tuesday to draft the law, which is assured of passing because his center-right Popular Party has an absolute majority in Parliament.

Quebec police: 2 dead after train, car collide

Associated Press

ST-LIBOIRE, Quebec — A 42 year-old man and his one-year-old son died after their car was struck by a Via Rail passenger train at a crossing in Quebec and police are investigating whether the man parked there on purpose, officials said Monday.

The collision happened in St-Liboire, south of Montreal. A Via spokesman said the barriers were down at the crossing and lights were flashing.

The car was sliced in half. Quebec provincial police spokeswoman Joyce Kemp said authorities were not ruling out the possibility the driver deliberately positioned his car at the crossing.

"We cannot exclude that this could be a voluntary act and, for that reason, the investigation has been transferred to the homicide squad," Kemp said.

Kemp said the infant was declared dead after being transported to hospital.

Later on Monday, another provincial police spokesman said the two victims, who lived in the area, were father and son. Sgt. Claude Denis identified the victims as Thierry Patenaude-Turcotte and his son, Nicolas Turcotte.

25 years on, Tiananmen barely known by most Chinese youth

DIDI TANG
Associated Press

BEIJING (AP) — Born in 1989, Steve Wang sometimes wonders what happened in his hometown of Beijing that year. But his curiosity about pro-democracy protests and the crackdown on them passes quickly.

"I was not part of it," he said. "I know it could be important, but I cannot feel it."

A quarter century after the Communist Party's attack on demonstrations centered on Tiananmen Square on June 4, 1989, it is little more than a distant tale to most young Chinese. The ruling party prohibits public discussion and 1989 is banned from textbooks and Chinese websites.

Many have managed to learn something about the crackdown, through people they know, by navigating around China's tight Internet controls or by traveling abroad. Some are aware of the iconic image of resistance — the lone Chinese man standing in front of a line of tanks moving down the Avenue of Eternal Peace.

AP PHOTO

High school students dressed in uniforms march on Tiananmen Square to stand at guard posts of Young Pioneers, a youth group under the Communist Party of China, around the Monument to the People's Heroes in Beijing.

But often, they seem not to care. They grew up in an atmosphere of nationalism and pride over two decades of strong economic growth. The turmoil caused by a student movement 25 years ago seems irrelevant to a generation more worried about finding jobs and buying an apartment.

"They basically don't bother to try to find out further," said Fu Kingwa, a journalism professor at Hong Kong University. "Even if they learn about it, they believe in the government version."

Rowena He, author of the book "Tiananmen Exiles," about lives of student protesters after the crackdown, said many Chinese students abroad claim they know a lot about it, but in fact know little. "Some others would say, 'We knew what happened, so what?' That's typical," said He, who teaches at Harvard University.

Young Chinese tend to find it hard to empathize with students of the late 1980s, she said. "The younger generation is more influenced by cynicism and materialism," said He. "A Chinese student once said to me, 'I really do not believe they took to the street for ideals.'"

Born in July 1989, in a Beijing hospital not far from the sites of the bloody crackdown, Wang grew up without hearing a word about the student movement from parents or teachers. He first heard about it from friends in college in China.

"I was quite curious and wanted to know about it. But I could not find anything," Wang said.

In 2010, the young man went to school in England, where he met a Hong Kong student who showed him a video of the crackdown.

"All I could remember was a young man trying to stop a tank from rolling forward," Wang said. The Hong Kong student "asked me why it has to be like this. I was stupefied."

Back in Beijing, Wang does not think the student movement would come up in any discussion.

"Who would bring it up? There's been no reason to talk about it," Wang said. "Much time has passed since then, and China will not report it anymore. Now the foreign media want to make a fuss out of it. They are talking up the negative things about China."

At Peking University, once a center of student protest, Tiananmen seems to have little relevance to today's students.

"It is not something that concerns us anymore," said Zhang Yu, a graduate student in sociology.

Although some bold Peking University professors have shared their knowledge with their students, most keep the topic out of the classroom.

Chen Haoyun, a freshman majoring in aeronautics, said he first heard about it when a teaching assistant mentioned it in a history class.

"I do not know much about it. All I know is that it cannot be talked about," said Chen. "I am interested, but the school does not talk about it."

Think twice before confronting drivers in handicapped spots

JEANNE PHILLIPS

DEAR ABBY

DEAR ABBY: I suffered a serious accident at work and have endured numerous surgeries, with another on the horizon. Because the injuries are in the cervical and lumbar areas, they are not visible.

Last week, I parked my car in a handicapped spot in the supermarket parking lot. Having a proper tag on my license plate, I didn't think twice about it. As I entered the store, a woman who had parked nearby started shouting at me, saying I shouldn't have parked where I did. I indicated she should read my plate, to which she then replied that I was "phony" for taking advantage of the system. I imagine she thought this because I was walking unaided that day.

Abby, please inform your readers that not all injuries are visible and not to assume that someone is taking advantage because he or she doesn't meet your expectations of how a disabled person "should" appear. — HURTING IN NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

DEAR HURTING: Gladly. This subject has appeared in my column before. You are correct that not all disabilities are visible. One that comes to mind would be a heart problem that prevents a patient from walking long distances. Another would be multiple sclerosis.

Readers, if you are concerned that someone is gaming the system, rather than confront the person, write down the license number of the car with the handicap plate and inform the Department of Motor Vehicles. If you are correct, the authorities will be interested in that information. And if you are not, you won't have caused someone who already has problems additional distress.

DEAR ABBY: I have been married to "Gilbert" for more than 30 years. We have always managed to resolve our differences in a relatively short time, but this time I'm not too sure.

Our son was married last weekend, and because we're of Celtic heritage, I chose to wear a beautiful dress from Ireland. Because it has short sleeves I brought a shawl to keep warm. When I asked my husband why he never said I looked nice, he replied he didn't know whether I looked nice because he "couldn't see me under that damned blanket!"

I was stunned. I wore the shawl only when I was near the door because it was cold there. I danced with him and several others many times and didn't have it on then. I must have told Gil at least 20 times how handsome he looked, and so did everyone else. The shawl may have been a little big on me because I am only 5 feet tall and weigh 95 pounds. But I didn't think I looked hideous.

I'm hurt over his remark, and we haven't really spoken for several days. What can I do to get past this awful feeling that we're going in opposite directions? — OFFENDED IN THE EAST

DEAR OFFENDED: A good beginning would be to ask your husband why he made such a mean-spirited remark. He owes you an apology for his tactlessness. If he really hadn't thought you were dressed appropriately for your son's wedding, he should have mentioned it BEFORE you left the house so you could change if you wished. Slamming you afterward wasn't helpful, and your hurt feelings are understandable. But unless you have other reasons for worrying that you might be headed "in opposite directions," don't let this be blown out of proportion.

Opening lead — king of spades.

It isn't possible for a defender to find the winning defense on every occasion. Nevertheless, the great majority of defensive miscues can be avoided by proper reasoning.

Consider this deal, where West got off on the right foot when he led the king of spades. East played the deuce, but, given the bidding, West had no problem reading the deuce as a singleton.

So West continued with the ace and another spade, ruffed by East. However, that was the end of the party. Declarer won East's diamond return with the ace, drew trumps, discarded dummy's jack of diamonds on the queen of spades and so made the rest of the tricks.

West should have given more thought to his play at trick two. Had he led a low spade instead of the ace, he would have maintained control over the spade suit, instead of relinquishing it by cashing the ace. Even without studying the matter deeply, West should have realized that it must be better to give East a ruff and remain in control than to give East a ruff and lose control.

East would have ruffed the spade at trick two and returned a diamond, and in due course East-West would have scored the A-K of spades, a spade ruff and a diamond to set the contract.

Tomorrow: Eliminating the risk element.

JACQUELINE BIGAR

BIGAR'S STARS

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Tuesday, June 3, 2014:

This year you often see what others don't. They have no way of understanding what they cannot grasp. Explanations will need to be made, and you are the person for the job. If you are single, you are likely to meet someone from midsummer on. This person could light up your life. You also might find yourself in a predicament where you have two suitors to choose between. If you are attached, your emotional bond becomes much stronger after spring. Others might think you are newlyweds by the way you act. You will enter one of the more romantic periods in your life. LEO always has the capacity to make you smile.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) You could choose to let a problem hold you back, or you might choose to bypass it. You initially won't know what is best for you. Make an adjustment to your schedule, and you will be drawn to the idea that allows you the greatest self-expression.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) You know how to deal with people effectively, yet when it comes to a roommate you hit a whole slew of problems. Be more forthright in how you handle a problem. Understand that there is likely to be a reaction, no matter what path you might choose.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You might be very tired and want to try something different. Your ability to manage and solve a problem will come to the attention of several people. They will be quite impressed by your ability to respond even when you're worn out.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) You might see a financial situation developing that makes you quite uncomfortable and insecure. Get advice from someone you trust who is in the know. Don't act until you feel sure of yourself. For now, stay on the alert.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) You might feel as if you are on a roll, yet you still hit your share of obstacles. Your ability to move past a restriction will delight the others involved. A general sense of well-being allows more give-and-take. Don't let a family member rain on your parade.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Be an observer. This action will allow greater give-and-take in the near future. You might be trying to assess the integrity of someone you deal with on a daily level. Understand that you have no way of determining what the end results could be.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) You might be more in touch with what a group of friends wants than you are with what you need. Pull back some, and allow others to respond. Though you might not always be delighted by what you hear, you could be quite content at this juncture.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) You might be too focused on the conclusion of a problem. Loosen up, and drop the uptight exterior. You will be delighted by how others respond to a more relaxed you. On some level, you also could be uncomfortable with this new change.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Detach, and tension will melt away. You could have difficulty seeing a matter the same way someone else sees it. You can't seem to understand this person's logic. Accept it anyway, and his or her response easily could change.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You might want to rethink a personal matter during a talk with a trusted confidant. Hopefully this person has a totally different perspective to offer. You might decide to open up to even more people in order to make an educated choice.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) You'll see an associate try to negotiate his or her way through a problem. You might gain a better sense of what this person's priorities are. You could feel as if you are finally gaining a new perspective of this person. Be open to a conversation.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) You'll read into a situation much more than others will. You understand people's motivations. Don't allow someone's criticisms get to you. Be willing to reveal more of your values in a conversation. You can be strong-willed when you need to be.

Obama's old vigor absent in his foreign policy

Like any politician's speech, President Barack Obama's address Wednesday to the graduating class at West Point on his foreign policy as he intends it for the rest of his term has to be read for timing as well as content.

Obama still has a long two-and-a-half years remaining until he leaves the White House. In spite of the consistent recalcitrance he encounters in Congress, and whatever the outcome of this year's midterm congressional elections, his speech comes at a time when, with no longer any elections to face, he is free to use his executive authority to do whatever the traffic will bear.

Obama has quite a lot of leeway in terms of policy, particularly foreign policy where the president always has more freedom to act than he does when trying to fix strictly national problems. The West Point speech showed decidedly less vigor, imagination and originality than one might have expected of the Obama who campaigned on "Change you can believe in."

Taken as it must be in the context of his overall foreign policy, Obama announced Tuesday that he was prolonging a significant presence of U.S. troops in Afghanistan from the end of 2014, still the end point set by the Afghans pending the results of the second round of their presidential elections, to 2016.

By the end of that year, Obama will be finishing his second term as president, enabling him to pass the buck to the next American president on the final decision on the full withdrawal of U.S. troops from Afghanistan that most Americans still clearly want after 13 years of war there.

The speech itself was a fair-to-middling attempt to somehow place the United States somewhere between the exceptional, necessary leader in world affairs that it is, whether it wants to be or not, and a still large and powerful country that attempts to lead the world through collective relationships with the rest of the world, through NATO, through cooperation with Asian and other Pacific nations and through the United Nations and other international organizations.

That has not worked awfully well, if one looks, for example, at the results in Afghanistan, Iraq and Libya. One outcome has been that the Europeans showed themselves in the recent European parliament elections to be turning more isolationist in their national policies.

Obama's attempt to set out his foreign policy for the next few years is useful. The speech and his decision on extending the Afghanistan War gives Americans something to chew on, but it was not something that would work on a bumper sticker as a rallying cry for a United States going forward in the world. Perhaps the worst part is that Americans know he can do better.

OTHERVOICES

Congress long past the point of harmless inaction

DAN K. THOMASSON
MCCLATCHY-TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

The humorist said of Calvin Coolidge, "He didn't do anything, but that is exactly what we wanted done." In 1948, Harry Truman won his own term in the White House by railing against the do nothingness of the Congress controlled by the Republicans.

That easily could be repeated about both the current president and most of the Congresses in the 21st century with the exception of the adoption of a highly controversial health-care reform ... an act that passed on a one-party vote that cost the Democrats control of the House.

Is there much doubt left that the people's government as represented by 1600 Pennsylvania and Capitol Hill is in big trouble? Faced with an intransigent Republican majority in the lower chamber and not much of a Democratic majority in the Senate, Barack Obama seems paralyzed by his own inability to game the system, relying largely on Coolidge-like appearances (sans war bonnets or a big fish) with school kids and statements to the public from the bully pulpit.

He seems destined to be preserved in history mainly as the first African-American to win the job with a nod for bringing health insurance to millions of Americans who didn't have it previously (and the verdict is still out on that). His lofty goals of 2008 and 12 will remain unfulfilled unless by a miracle he could gain back what his party lost in 2010, the House, and maintain the narrow hold on Senate. Republicans may lose a seat or two in the House but not control and the Democratic fortunes in the upper chamber remain vulnerable at this point partly because of the president's unpopularity.

Once again the major problems facing the nation from immigration to energy to tax reform to climate change most likely will have to wait for another administration. And the odds of success for the next person in the White House are long under the current atmosphere on the Hill. The Congress has taken on the characteristics of a failed institution with mediocre leadership from both parties. The list of put off "to do" things gets longer every week. Fewer and fewer bills are being introduced and less and less time is being spent in session.

If the House majority leader's calendar for the year holds true, the "statesmen" we elect to oversee our well being will come to together officially only 112 of about 264 working (excuse the expression) days this year. That number could change with a weekend session or two which come only in a crisis. Statistics provided by the New York Times the other day showed that there were 18 percent fewer bills introduced through May than last year's number.

That might not be such a bad thing considering the fact large numbers of its members seem more interested in ideological purity than a sensible approach to legislating. As Will Rogers said all those years ago, Congress might be the largest collection of comedians in history — every time they tell a joke it becomes a law. While that might be a bit extreme, it clearly depicts today's atmosphere.

It has been years since the essentials of providing the wherewithal for running the government have been accomplished in regular order. Appropriations are not handled with individual bills but are consigned to continuing resolutions that are omnibus in nature and full of waste in fact. At the end of each legislative year, the congressional hands dip into the taxpayer's pockets and outcome the bills to hang on a Christmas tree full of goodies designed to raise campaign funds and preserve incumbency.

The costs of the latter have become so extraordinarily high that much of those days out of session are spent hustling for bucks, in fact. All this once again testifies to the accuracy that we have the best Congress money can buy.

How do we solve the problem of a democracy so imbued with a culture of self-preservation that it is feeding on itself? We probably can't. Doing nothing may be just the way of life we have brought upon ourselves by not paying more attention to the quality of those we elect to public office. There may be some solace in the fact that when they're not doing anything, they aren't doing any harm. But inaction is good only to a point. We long ago reached that.

Uncertain path leads to opportunity

Those who know me well know that one of my all-time favorite movies is "Forrest Gump."

My roommate and I watched it three times in one weekend during my sophomore year of college. I wish I was joking.

But anyway, remember the line when Tom Hanks says, "I ran to get where I was going. I never thought it would take me anywhere."

That's how I felt about sports writing. When I started, I never thought it would take me anywhere.

As a sophomore at Bowling Green State University (Bowling Green, Ohio) in 2009, I got my first writing job working as a sports reporter for the campus newspaper, The BG News. I figured I would write a few articles here and there and be done with it.

So I thought.

The following year, I was the assistant sports editor. The year after that, sports editor. The next thing I knew, I was driving up to Ann Arbor, Mich., to cover the Michigan-Bowling Green football game, coming home to Cleveland to cover the Mid-American Conference basketball tournaments, and traveling to Louisville, Ky., and Columbus to cover the women's NCAA basketball tournament.

When I graduated in Florida hurler allows just four hits in sturnning opening-game victory

OKLAHOMA CITY — Hannah Rogers threw a four-hitter to help Florida defeat Alabama 5-0 in Game 1 of the best-of-three national championship series Monday night.

Rogers had a perfect game through four innings and a one-hitter going into the bottom of the seventh in the matchup of Southeastern Conference rivals.

Florida (54-12) now is just one win from its first national title after runner-up finishes in 2009 and 2011. Game 2 will be played Tuesday night.

Jackie Traina got the loss for Alabama (53-12). She gave up five runs in 6 1-3 innings after having allowed just one earned run in her first three games during the World Series.

The Crimson Tide hadn't been shut out since Feb. 16.

Aubree Munro got the Gators going with a solo homer to left-center in the third inning. It was her third of the season.

In the top of the fifth, Florida got it going with two outs. Leadoff hitter Kelsey Stewart had a bunt single, then Kirsti Merritt doubled to left center to score Stewart. Stephanie Tofft singled to score Merritt and push Florida's lead to 3-0.

Alabama's Kaila Hunt broke up Rogers' perfect game with a single in the bottom of the fifth, but the Crimson Tide couldn't score after getting a runner to second.

Florida got two insurance runs in the top of the seventh.

Heat locking in on Finals

MIAMI — For the Miami Heat, it's all about June.

July can wait.

Four years ago, when LeBron James uttered that now-infamous phrase — "not two, not three, not four, not five ..." — about how many championships he hoped to win with the Heat, it was almost immediately turned into a punch line. It rings prophetic in some ways now, with the Heat back in the NBA Finals for a fourth consecutive season.

ZACHARY HANKLE
Special to the Daily Commercial

Players in the Florida Collegiate Summer League represent universities across the nation, but this summer, the Leesburg Lightning have focused on adding Florida talent to their roster.

The Lightning have scouted players from the top baseball institutions in the Sunshine State, including: the universities of North Florida, Florida State and Tampa. Two locals who will be playing for the Lightning are David Wood and Kyle Shackne.

Wood and Shackne will be introduced to Lightning fans, along with their teammates at today's Meet The Players dinner at 7 p.m. at Pat Thomas Stadium Buddy Lowe Field.

Fans are invited to watch the Lightning's final preseason practice at 5 p.m. Players will be introduced at 7 p.m. and the first 400 fans in attendance will be treated to a free dinner provided by the Oakwood Smokehouse.

What is interesting about Wood and Schackne is how their pasts are intertwined. They were teammates at Lake Sumter State College happens in July, when James, Chris Bosh and Dwyane Wade can become free agents if they choose. A looming offseason of decisions has been a taboo subject for the Heat "Big 3" this season, and Wade insisted Monday that Miami's stars have not said a word to each other about what may or may not happen.

"I'm not lying," Wade said.

Still, as long as Miami keeps winning, it seems logical the "Big 3" will stay together.

"I want to come back. That's OK to say, I think," Bosh said Monday after the Heat finished their first workout in preparation for the NBA Finals, which begin Thursday in San Antonio. "I can't speak for anything else and I don't want to take away from the subject at hand, but I like it here. It's Miami. Enough said. People are dying to get here."

Regardless of the outcome of this Heat-Spurs series, there will be changes to the Heat, which is an annual rite for just about every team. James, Wade and Bosh can all opt out of their current deals. Shane Battier is retiring, Ray Allen may think about doing the same, while Mario Chalmers, James Jones and Rashard Lewis are notable free-agents-in-waiting.

It's not just the "Big 3" who aren't thinking too far ahead, yet.

Allen said no one in the room is looking past anything but this series — especially with the Spurs' Tim Duncan saying San Antonio will get it done this year after falling short against the Heat last season. But as James noted, both teams have their own motivation.

"That's the great thing about having veterans," Allen said. "Nobody worries about what's not here yet."

Winning a third straight title could make some of those stay-or-go decisions pretty simple. And Wade believes Miami's legacy has been secured.

"Whenever it's all said and done, the legacy of this team, it's going to be a great team," Wade said. "It's going to go down in history as an unbelievable team not only in South Florida but in NBA history."

Given that, it's easy to see why so much attention gets paid to how long this team can stay together.

Bosh, Wade and James all made it very clear in September that they were not going to let the summer of 2014 turn into the circus that the summer of 2010 was, when all three became free agents and decided to bring their talents together.

Entering the season, James said that his teammates "understand where I stand" regarding the future. And on Monday, James said he wasn't going to let himself be distracted by thinking about what impact the result of these NBA Finals will have on the legacy the Heat have created over the last four seasons.

"No, because I live in the moment," James said. "It's almost the same with my individual accomplishments. I never really understand them. The only time I'll be able to appreciate it is when I'm done playing the game. I'm in the moment."

man in singles, No. 10 John Isner, exited before the quarterfinals, too.

There was more Monday, though.

The No. 1-seeded men's doubles team, defending champions Bob and Mike Bryan, lost in the quarterfinals, beaten 6-4, 6-2 by the 12th-seeded duo of Marcel Granollers and Marc Lopez of Spain. That left no Americans in men's or women's doubles, either.

And the No. 1-seeded boy in the junior tournament, 16-year-old Francis Tiafoe of College Park, Maryland, lost in the second round to Jan Choinski of Germany 3-6, 6-2, 6-3.

Stephens has been to the second week at six consecutive Grand Slam tournaments, the longest active streak by a woman. But she has lost in the fourth round of the French Open each of the past three years.

Her match Monday was tied at 4-all in the first set when Halep took control by winning the next four games.

"It's always tough playing someone who is really consistent and has a lot of confidence and just plays a solid game," said Stephens, who is based in Florida.

"I didn't execute my game as well as I thought I could," Stephens said. "That's a little bit disappointing, but obviously that happens."

Stephens was broken in six of the nine games she served and made 35 unforced errors, 10 more than first-time French Open quarterfinalist Halep.

"I dominated the match, I think," Halep said. "I didn't serve very well, but I tried to return better — and I did."

The Bryan twins have now failed to reach the final at any of the last three Grand Slam tournaments — after winning four major titles in a row before that, starting at the 2012 U.S. Open.

Their bid for the first calendar-year Grand Slam in men's doubles since 1951 ended with a semifinal loss at last year's U.S. Open.

The Bryans then lost in the third round at the Australian Open in January.

The brothers own a record 15 major doubles championships, including at Roland Garros in 2003 and 2013.

this year. They were teammates and also held down spots in the Lakehawks' rotation.

While Wood pitched LSSC for two years now, Shackne came into his role as the college's starting pitcher as a transfer from Polk State in Lakeland.

Each pitcher pushed the other to improve and Shackne said Wood took it upon himself toshow Shackne the ropes.

"He helped me find my place in the (pitching) rotation and solidify my role on the team" Shackne said about Wood. "He also let me in on what coach liked and didn't like."

Since Wood and Shackne were starting pitchers, they spent an extended period of time with one another, Shackne said. They became friends off the diamond. When they weren't talking breaking balls or game plans, they would hang out in Shackne's apartment.

This will be Wood's second season with the Lightning, while Shackne is joining the team after spending last summer playing in Myrtle Beach, S.C.

Shackne said Wood was the reason he decided to join the Florida Collegiate Summer League, saying that Wood emphasized the "great competition" in the league. Wood said playing summer ball is an advantage.

"I know how he plays and what his pitching tendencies are which will help in building his chemistry with the Lightning pitching coaches," Wood said.

There are other pairs of college teammates on the Lightning roster this summer and Wood believes that could work to the Lightning's advantage, helping the team come together quickly. Although both Wood and Shackne are transferring to separate schools next Fall, both say they will make the most of their time together with the Lightning this summer.

May 2011, it took me five months to land a sports writing job. I had interviews for newspapers in Arkansas, Illinois, Iowa, Michigan and Pennsylvania — but nothing. Then I found the Morning Journal in Lorain, OH.

Finally! My search was over, and it was only 30 minutes from my home in Lakewood. During my time there I was fortunate enough to cover two state championships in softball and a boys state championship in basketball just this past March.

I'll never forget when I got to meet and interview Roberto Clemente's son, Roberto Clemente Jr., and Len Barker, who pitched the 10th perfect game in Major League history in 1981 as a member of the Cleveland Indians.

I can't forget about last summer, when the Lake Erie Crushers, (an independent baseball team in the Frontier League) played 17 innings against the Southern Illinois Miners. The game lasted five hours and 47 minutes and featured 13 pitchers, 33 hits, 32 strikeouts, 19 walks and 39 runners left on base. I didn't leave the press box until about 1:30 a.m. and was back at the field at 10 a.m.

May 16 was my last day at the Morning Journal after 31 months on the job. It was an unbelievable journey that I'm truly grateful for.

My reason for leaving was 16 hours and about 1,000 miles south in Leesburg. For someone who's never really left the state of Ohio other than to cover games, moving to Florida was a big step for me, but ultimately the right one. Not only career-wise, but physically as well. I no longer will have to break my back shoveling my car out of two feet of snow four months of the year.

In all seriousness, though, I'd like to thank the Daily Commercial for this new opportunity. I'm looking forward to covering the sports scene in Lake and Sumter counties.

Looks like sports writing has taken me somewhere after all. Good thing, too, because I like to run.

California Chrome's story may never repeat

EDDIE PELLS PAT GRAHAM
AP Sports WritersAP Sports Writers

AURORA, Colo. — A message to horse lovers and dreamers out there: This will not happen to you.

Well, almost certainly not.

For all the buzz California Chrome's feel-good run at the Triple Crown is generating for horse racing, his too-good-to-be-true story has virtually no chance of repeating itself, according to the numbers.

The horse that will line up at the Belmont Stakes on Saturday is the product of an unspectacular mare and an equally unheralded stallion, bred in a state not known for producing winners and owned by a couple of racing outsiders who were labeled "dumb asses" for even pondering such a thing.

Byron Rogers, whose business is scientifically analyzing genetic makeup of racehorses, puts the odds at 50,000-to-1 against a horse with the strength and the stamina of a California Chrome ever showing up again among the 21,000 or so thoroughbred foals born each year. It's the sort of horse that shows up maybe once every three years, but even then doesn't always find his way into the spotlight because success requires a magic mix of the right owner, trainer and opportunity.

SETH WENIG / AP

Assistant trainer Alan Sherman leads Triple Crown hopeful California Chrome to his stall at Belmont Park on May 20 in Elmont, N.Y.

California Chrome was born at well-respected Harris Farms in Coalinga, California, and trained by longtime horseman Art Sherman, the 77-year-old who returned to the big-time nearly six decades after going to the Kentucky Derby as an exercise rider for Swaps, who won the 1955 Derby.

"This horse had everything go his way," Rogers said. "He had just about perfect genetics. Art Sherman is a very good trainer. Harris Farms is a good farm. You couldn't predict any of this at the start with this horse."

In fact, Rogers says, if California Chrome's parents were paired again, odds are only about one out of 10 their offspring would make it to a stakes race.

It's a reality that horsemen on the lower end of the sport, which is where California Chrome's owners once lived, are in touch with every day. Most aren't in it to reach the big time, only to break even with their expenses.

"It's all about luck and timing," says Shannon Rushton, executive director of the Colorado horse racing association, speaking recently at Arapahoe Park outside of Denver, where the Kentucky Derby is a distant dream for almost every man and horse. "Every year, you kind of hope that, at some point and time, you might be the one to lead a horse into the paddock on Breeder's Cup day or Kentucky Derby day."

Rangers practice before flight to Los Angeles

IRA PODELL
AP Sports Writer

GREENBURGH, N.Y. — Henrik Lundqvist had his game-day face on at practice.

He still smiled and answered all the questions thrown at him Monday about the Los Angeles Kings — the New York Rangers' long-awaited opponent in the Stanley Cup finals.

"Exciting. Long flight," the star goalie said Monday before he and his teammates headed to California for New York's first appearance in the finals since winning the title in 1994. "East Coast-West Coast. I'll look forward to this matchup."

If there wasn't already enough pressure on Lundqvist to lead his team to the championship, he is now part of the hype machine heading into Game 1 on Wednesday.

Headlines are screaming: "King Henrik vs. the Kings."

"Clever," he said with a slight laugh.

The Rangers have been waiting since Thursday to find out if they would face the 2012 Stanley Cup-winning Kings or the defending champion Chicago Blackhawks in the finals.

They took two days off before returning to practice on Sunday. Most of the players said they watched at least part of Los Angeles' third road Game 7 win of this playoff year that night.

JULIE JACOBSON / APX

New York Rangers goalie Henrik Lundqvist (30) reacts as time winds off the clock to give the New York Rangers a 1-0 win over the Montreal Canadiens.

So practice on Monday had a bit more focus for the Rangers as they knew exactly who was standing in their way next.

"Any team you play at this time of year is a good hockey team, especially a team that has kind of been around the playoffs and the Stanley Cup finals a couple of times in the last few years," forward Derek Stepan said. "This is a very good hockey club, We have a tough challenge in front of us."

The Kings returned to Los Angeles after their 5-4 come-from-behind overtime win at Chicago and took Monday off. They have played a record 21 playoff games before the finals — one more than the Rangers, who eliminated the Montreal Canadiens in six games during the Eastern Conference finals.

Before this year, no team that played seven games in each of the first two rounds had reached the finals. Now, both clubs have done it. The Kings taking it a step further with a trio of seven-game series.

"When you knew you were playing L.A., the adrenaline started coming a little bit more," Lundqvist said.

QB Jim Kelly's presence resonates at charity event he's unable to attend

JOHN WAWROW
AP Sports Writer

BATAVIA, N.Y. — Dan Marino left his Dolphins' colors behind in exchange for a Buffalo Bills' blue T-shirt with the words "Kelly Tough" printed on the front.

"Everybody loves Jim. I love him too, man," Marino said Monday, before the start of Jim Kelly's annual charitable golf tournament. "I just can't wait for him to get better and get back out here with us."

Marino, the former Dolphins star quarterback and Kelly's longtime rival, was on hand in what was one of the largest turnouts of the tournament's 28-year history. The only one missing was Kelly, himself.

Too weak to attend, the Bills' Hall of Fame quarterback is recovering in a hospital in Buffalo less than a week after completing radiation and chemotherapy sessions to treat sinus cancer, which spread from his jaw.

Though absent, Kelly's presence resonated on the golf course about a half-hour outside of Buffalo.

"He's here in spirit," said former Bills general manager Bill Polian, who joined Marino in visiting Kelly on Sunday. "And everybody is here to not only aid his charity endeavors, but to show their support for him and our affection for him."

The pain Kelly was experiencing has subsided, though he will spend about another week in the hospital. Kelly will then need between six and eight weeks of rest.

Advanced stats find their way onto baseball cards

FRED GOODALL
AP Baseball Writer

The advanced-stats movement is making headway in another area: baseball cards.

Topps added WAR (wins above replacement) to its cards last year in a sign that the oft-debated metric is becoming more accepted by the mainstream.

"As a company that's been making baseball cards since 1951, we always want to be in line with the evolution of the game," Clay Luraschi of Topps said in an email.

Luraschi said the first time Topps ventured beyond a more traditional stat line was in 2004, when it introduced OPS to the back of cards.

Numbers like batting average, RBIs and ERA aren't about to disappear, but the baseball world is increasingly welcoming additional stats. The scoreboard at Tropicana Field, home of the Tampa Bay Rays, now routinely displays statistics like on-base percentage, slugging percentage and WHIP.

RED-HOT, HEADED HOME

Baltimore's Nelson Cruz is off to terrific start with his new team, batting .315 and leading the majors with 20 homers and 52 RBI's. The Orioles open a three-game series at Texas on Tuesday night, but the slugger's status for a highly anticipated first meeting against his former team is up in the air after Cruz was hit in the left hand by a pitch during Baltimore's 9-4 victory over Houston on Sunday. X-rays were negative and Cruz, a two-time All-Star who has eight homers and 15 RBIs over his last 13 games, is day to day.

Los Angeles Dodgers' Yasiel Puig bats against the Pittsburgh Pirates on Sunday in Los Angeles.

DEVIL RAYS-LIKE

The Tampa Bay Rays were a popular pick to contend for the AL pennant, but find themselves riding a season-high six-game losing streak, 11 games under .500 (23-34) and saddled with the league's worst record. That's the lowest point they've reached since the end of 2007 (66-96), the last season they were known as the Devil Rays. They were shut out 4-0 at Boston on Sunday and have dropped eight straight road games, while being outscored 48-18. They begin this week with a pair of games at Miami before returning home to Tropicana Field to start a stretch in which they'll play 18 of 25 at home.

NOT-SO-FRIENDLY CONFINES

The Chicago Cubs' road woes continue. After splitting the first games of a weekend series at Milwaukee, they lost Sunday's finale 9-0, leaving them 0-11-3 in their past 14 road series — a stint that began late last season.

IMPROVING ASTROS

The last-place Houston Astros are coming off their most successful month in more than three years. They're 7-2 over their past nine games, 13-8 since May 11 and were 15-14 overall the past month — the first time they've gone .500 or better in a month since they went 14-13 in September 2010.

STAT OF THE WEEK

Yasiel Puig batted .398 with 43 hits, eight homers, a .492 on-base percentage and .731 slugging percentage in 28 games in May. In addition to matching the Los Angeles Dodgers record for hits in May set by Willie Davis in 1971, Puig had 19 extra-base hits during the month.

Apple CEO Tim Cook waves after speaking at an Apple Worldwide Developers Conference event in San Francisco on Monday.

Apple expands into health, home with new software

MICHAEL LIEDTKE
AP Technology Writer

SAN FRANCISCO — Apple is expanding into home and health management as the company tries to turn its iPhones, iPads and Mac computers into an interchangeable network of devices that serve as a hub of people's increasingly digital lives.

The new tools for tracking health and controlling household appliances are part of updated operating systems that Apple unveiled Monday in San Francisco at its 25th annual conference for application developers.

The revised software for Apple Inc.'s devices won't be released to the general public until this fall when the company is also expected to start selling the next generation of iPhones and iPads. A spruced-up line of Macs also could be coming before the holiday shopping season.

The lack of a flashy new gadget may disappoint some Apple fans who are still looking for proof that the company hasn't lost its ingenuity since Steve Jobs died in October 2011. Since then, Apple has mostly been making incremental improvements to the devices and software hatched under Jobs' leadership.

While those updates have been enough to maintain Apple's status as the world's most valuable company, they haven't quieted persisting questions about the company's future prospects amid intensifying competition from other device makers.

Apple CEO Tim Cook, Job's hand-picked successor, turned Monday's spotlight over to one of his chief lieutenants — Craig Federighi — to discuss the company's upcoming software changes. The new versions, which will be free, are called iOS 8 for mobile devices and "Yosemite" for Macs.

The iOS 8 operating system includes "HealthKit" and "HomeKit" options that may test how just how much Apple customers trust the Cupertino, California, company to maintain their privacy.

HealthKit works with a new built-in app on the iOS 8 that will store a variety of information about people's medical histories, vital signs, fitness levels and diet. Other third-party apps will be able to access the data with a user's permission.

HomeKit is aiming to set up a system that lets an iPhone or iPad serve as the remote control of an entire household outfitted with an assortment of digital appliances.

Apple hasn't given any indication that it plans to make these "smart" household appliances, although there is recurring speculation that the company eventually will release a TV set that gives its services access to the biggest screen in most people's homes.

For now, Apple appears content serving as a sort of digital butler in homes. In a hypothetical example sketched out Monday, Federighi said a homeowner with an iOS 8 device might be able to announce "it's time to go to bed," at which point doors would automatically lock, lights would dim and the thermostat temperature would be adjusted by Apple's digital assistant, Siri.

The move into health and home coincides with Apple's bid to make its services more accessible in cars. That system, called CarPlay, will be available later this year.

Europe weighs risks of negative interest rates

DAVID MCHUGH
Associated Press

FRANKFURT, Germany — The European Central Bank could be going negative soon.

Among the more unusual steps the central bank is considering this week to boost the eurozone's recovery is cutting to below zero the interest rate it pays on money that banks deposit with it. That effectively means banks would have to pay to park money with the ECB — an unorthodox move that has had some success in neighboring Denmark but hasn't been attempted in the much larger eurozone.

The goal: Push banks to lend that money to companies and consumers to get the economy moving.

The ECB, the eurozone's chief monetary authority, has been resisting such a step, which it considered as long ago as summer 2012 but which President Mario Draghi dismissed then as "largely uncharted waters."

But things are now bad enough that many analysts think Draghi and the 23 other members of the ECB's governing council will try the step Thursday and cut the deposit rate from its current record low of zero, perhaps with a rate of minus 0.1 percent. The ECB is also expected to trim its main interest rate, at which it lends to banks, from 0.25 percent to as low as 0.1 percent.

Slow lending has been holding back the eurozone's economic rebound from its financial crisis. Banks are harboring too many bad loans and, fearful of taking new risks, are not lending to consumers and businesses at the low rates the ECB has set.

So taxing banks, in effect, for hoarding money at the ECB's super-safe deposit facility, could get some of that money moving into the economy instead — or so the thinking goes.

Just as important, a negative rate could push down the exchange rate of the shared euro currency.

By lowering the cost of imports, the strong euro has helped push inflation to only 0.7 percent — so low it has raised concerns the fledgling recovery will slide into deflation, a crippling condition for the economy in which consumers put off purchases in hopes of better deals. The currency has eased to $1.37 from a 2 ½ year high just under $1.40 in the three weeks since Draghi strongly hinted stimulus measures were coming.

Including a cut to the ECB's benchmark interest rate, "the combination could prove a powerful cocktail that boosts bank lending," said Christian Schulz at Berenberg bank.

"But negative deposit rates have not been used at this scale before and could have unpredictable consequences."

Mount Dora company adds unique bucket to product list

AUSTIN FULLER | Staff Writer
austin.fuller@dailycommercial.com

Casey Holder, co-CEO of Global Consumer Innovations in Mount Dora, describes his business as "'Shark Tank' without the sharks," referring to the ABC television show.

Global Consumer Innovations this year added a new product — a bucket with a handle — and has verbal commitments for it with major national companies, according to Casey and his brother Justin, the other CEO.

"The biggest application is probably going to be in the paint industry, because with paint you're pouring it so it needs to be stable. So all the major paint manufacturers are seeing that it's a game changer for them," Justin said.

Casey said when people see the bucket they think it has always been around and is the most self-explanatory product the company has had.

"Probably by the first of next year you won't be able to buy a five-gallon bucket of paint without the handle on it," Casey said.

Casey said they take products that have really good concepts, but "something comes up short.

"Concept is great, but he needs better manufacturing, he needs better marketing and he needs distribution," Casey said.

Justin gave the example of the Tri-Bolt, invented by someone from Eustis. Casey said it was a local success.

"He didn't know how to get it to the next level. He didn't really know how to market it and how to develop national or international distribution," Justin said.

The Tri-Bolt is one of their products, and Casey demonstrated how it would work in a door to help prevent break-ins. They redesigned the product and packaging, the brothers said.

Casey said they now have the exclusive global licensing rights for all of their current products.

Casey Holder shows a bucket with a handle, which his brother Justin Holder said will have a big application in the paint industry.

"So, if we didn't invent it, we now own it," Casey said.

Another of their product lines is Deluge, which has a sandless sandbag that the brothers said uses polymers to absorb water. They also said they have a double-breasted nursing pad product that utilizes the polymers.

The brothers started the company almost four years ago after Casey invented a product to cover recessed light fixtures while he was working in the spray foam insulation business.

"(I) actually went searching and looking for this type of product to use for my clients and nobody made it," Casey said.

According to the product's website, the product is "one solution to energy loss, fire protection and vapor barrier for recessed lighting."

Casey said the product gave them the experience for what they are doing now with other products.

"If that product did nothing else it got us here, without a doubt," Casey said.

Casey said the brothers hear about one or two good ideas a week, and they launch about one or two products a year.

The brothers said they also have recently purchased property in downtown Tavares to build a new four-story building to which they plan to relocate. They plan on having other high-end professional office space in the building and potential retail space on the first floor.

They do not plan to break ground until next year.

Manufacturing bellwether

The Commerce Department reports data on April factory orders today.

Orders to U.S. factories advanced strongly in March for a second month in a row. Those gains followed two months of declines in December and January. The reversal suggests what many economists have been saying: Rising demand should boost factory production as the economy emerges from a slowdown during a harsh winter.

Auto sales

U.S. auto sales have been rising in recent months after getting off to a sluggish start this year due to the harsh winter.

Sales dropped 3 percent in January and were flat in February. March started slowly, but finished with a flourish, while sales rebounded strongly in April. Automakers report May sales figures today. J.D. Power and LMC Automotive predict U.S. sales of cars and trucks accelerated to a seasonally adjusted annual pace of 16.1 million last month, up from 15.4 million a year earlier.

Better quarter?

Wall Street anticipates that Dollar General's earnings and revenue improved in its first fiscal quarter.

Financial analysts will be listening today for an update on how the discount retailer sees customer demand shaping up this year. In March, the company issued a weaker-than-expected outlook for the year, citing tough competition and ongoing uncertainty about consumer spending.
