Lake's jobless rate on the rise

Staff Report

After a half-percentage point increase in May, Lake County's jobless rate crept up another 0.1 percentage point in June.

The unemployment rate here rose from 6.3 percent to 6.4 percent in the last 30 days, according to the Florida Department of Economic Opportunity.

This is above June's state rate of 6.2 percent and the national rate of 6.1 percent.

Lake started out the year with a jobless rate of 6.6 percent in January and February, followed by an increase to 6.7 percent in March. It then dropped to 5.8 percent in April before climbing up to 6.3 percent in May.

Last year at this time, Lake had an unemployment rate of 8.1 percent.

Growing more equal

City eyes representation scheme to keep developments in check

THERESA CAMPBELL | Staff Writer
theresacampbell@dailycommercial.com

November's general election ballot for the city of Wildwood will contain a question on whether or not voters want five electoral districts for its city commission, which would provide equal geographic representation within the city and eliminate the risk of one neighborhood or development, such as The Villages, being in control.

Wildwood currently has commissioners who are elected "at large," which the city voted last month to amend, yet it will be up to the voters, If they vote "yes," the city will be represented by five district areas rather than commissioners elected citywide.

Why does the districting matter?

"We have so many big developments coming on and we want to preserve equal representation within Wildwood," said Jason F. McHugh, assistant city manager for Wildwood. "So what we don't want to have happen, because of the growth that we are under, we don't want one particular group of individuals running for office, getting elected, and basically hurting some other folks that are here or lessening their voting strengths."

THERESA CAMPBELL / DAILY COMMERCIAL

Jason McHugh, assistant city manager for Wildwood, said the city welcomes its growth, "but we want to preserve our community as much as we can."

BUILDING BOOM

In addition to The Villages, three other large developments of regional impact in Wildwood could bring more than 15,000 new residents to the city.

WHITNEY WILLARD / STAFF GRAPHIC

Wildwood is experiencing a growth spurt with several large developments currently under construction — including a total of 1,225 new homes being built by The Villages, Oxford Oaks and Lakeside Landings. Three other large developments are on the drawing board, including Wildwood Springs (3,700 homes), Southern Oaks (3,500 homes) and Landstone (8,000 homes).

McHugh said Wildwood's city charter is currently written that the city has four commission seats at-large and one mayor at-large.

Boat in Astor drowning pulled from the lake

MILLARD K. IVES | Staff Writer
millard.ives@dailycommercial.com

A 10-foot jon boat that capsized Thursday, leading to the drowning of a 14-year-old upcoming Umatilla Middle School student, was recovered from the bottom of Lake Schimmerhorn in Astor late Friday morning.

Using airbags and other devices, officials pulled the boat up about 11:30 a.m., according to a Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission spokesman. The FWC will try to determine what caused the boat to sink.

The drowning occurred off the dead end of Sunset Drive, a street lined with homes containing some private dirt boat ramps.

Eli Ladesic, 17, told the Daily Commercial on Thursday that he and his brother, Nathaniel Ladesic, who was slated to be in the 8th grade this fall, as well as their 16-year-old friend, Jarred Cook, were testing the boat they got earlier in the day when it began to take on water shortly after 4 p.m.

Neither were good swimmers and the younger Ladesic was unable to swim to shore like the other two.

"He was on the surface, but he was struggling," Cook told a 911 operator. "His older brother was trying to help, but he couldn't help because neither of us can really swim."

A recording of that 911 call was released Friday afternoon.

With tears in her eyes, the brothers' mother, Bridget Ladesic, stood outside their nearby home Thursday night and praised Nathaniel — one of her four siblings.

"He was a good son, he was a sweetheart," she said shortly before calling her sons' boat a "piece of junk."

FWC officials said there were no life jackets onboard.

Case being built tying separatists to plane

JULIE PACE
AP White House Correspondent

WASHINGTON — The United States began building a case Friday linking pro-Russian separatists to the shocking downing of a passenger jet in Ukraine. A somber President Barack Obama declared the deaths of those on board, including at least one American, an "outrage of unspeakable proportions."

Obama said the U.S. believes the Malaysia Airlines plane was felled by a surface-to-air missile launched from an area near the Ukraine-Russia border that is basically the election of the mayor by the public. We are adding another commission seat with five commissioners and they (commissioners) annually will elect amongst themselves the mayor," he said, which is the same way that Leesburg commissioners choose their mayor each year.

If the process of commissioners being elected by districts is approved by voters, McHugh said the city will adopt its final district map with an ordinance. McHugh said the city went ahead and conceptually mapped a draft of how the five districts could look by using legal guidelines of equal population being the No. 1 factor.

"We will fine tune the map," McHugh said. He said the large map that is shown at city hall and even the city's website is a conceptual draft. "The (residential) unit counts that the districts are based on are changing every day, and when we go back and do the map in January or February or whenever we do it, we have to go back and draw in the sand where the actual units are and then go in an look at it and fine-tune those boundaries to a T."

McHugh believes it is unusual for a city the size of Wildwood to have so much development going on, which he attributes to The Villages expanding in Wildwood and other developers in the private sector jumping on the bandwagon.

He noted Fruitland Park is booming from The Villages, too.

"They are in a different situation because the growth that they are having is strictly The Villages," McHugh said. "Ours growth is different because it is not just The Villages; we have a lot of other development and stuff going on. … We have 20,000 acres of vacant land and a lot of that is entitled for development, so we are going to be seeing a lot of things happen."

McHugh said Wildwood's commission is independent of The Villages.

"We welcome all of the good things that they've brought to us. But at the same time, we have other needs and things that are going on that are important and that our commission feels is important," he said. "We want to protect our lifestyle and that is what our citizens want too. We just want to be fair. We want to preserve Wildwood, we want to preserve what it is. We welcome this growth, but we want to preserve our community as much as we can."

McHugh said he and other city officials will be talking to the Rotary Club, Wildwood Community Development Corporation, and other organizations in the city and throughout Sumter County about the district changes.

"We want to spread the word to what we are doing, why we are doing it, and then the voters can make an informed decision as to whether it is appropriate or not," McHugh said.

Personally, the assistant city manager believes the amendment would be good for local residents.

"I hope that it does pass, but I don't know if it will, but I hope that it does," he said. "I think that if you give the citizens enough information as to why we are doing something, they will be able to put two and two together and think that this is a good idea."

McHugh said the city will be sending out pamphlets with residents' utility bills closer to the election about the amendment. Information is posted at city hall and on the city's website: wildwood-fl.gov.

"We're really going to start spreading the word more aggressively as we get closer (to Election Day)," said McHugh, who noted he is willing to speak to local groups about the amendment and the city's growth. "I will be happy to talk to anybody who wants to talk to us. It is part of my job."

McHugh can be reached by calling 352-330-1330, ext. 112 or by email at jmchugh@wildwood-fl.gov.

controlled by Kremlin-backed separatists. Even as he cautioned that the exact circumstances were still being determined, the president turned his sights on Russia, saying the insurgents would not be capable of carrying out such an attack without Moscow's support.

"We know that they are heavily armed and they are trained, and we know that that's not an accident," Obama said. "That is happening because of Russian support."

The president spoke shortly after Samantha Power, the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, outlined preliminary evidence against Russia and the separatists during an emergency meeting of the U.N. Security Council. Power said separatists were spotted Thursday with an SA-11 anti-aircraft missile at a location close to the site where the plane came down and that they had boasted on social media sites about shooting down a plane, then later deleted those posts.

Power joined Obama in calling for an immediate international investigation, and she warned that the separatists and those supporting them would have "good reason to cover up evidence of their crime." The U.S. has called for evidence from the crash site to remain in Ukraine until investigators determine who is responsible.

The American killed in the incident was identified as Quinn Lucas Schansman. Officials said they were still working to confirm whether any other U.S. citizens were on board the plane.

For Obama, the downed plane adds new complexity to U.S. efforts to quell the months-long conflict between Russia and Ukraine. Increasingly stringent economic sanctions imposed by the U.S. and Europe, including a new round of penalties announced a day before the plane was shot down, have done little to change Russian President Vladimir Putin's approach.

Obama warned Russia anew on Friday that the U.S. has the capacity to increase the economic pain, but he outlined no specific potential actions. He did say he saw no U.S. military role in the conflict that has stemmed in part from Russia's annexation of the Crimean Peninsula from Ukraine.

All 298 people aboard the Malaysian plane were killed in Thursday's incident. The passengers, including scores of children, came from a dozen countries, spreading the impact of the Ukraine crisis around the globe.

"This certainly will be a wake-up call for Europe and the world that there are consequences to an escalating conflict in eastern Ukraine — that it is not going to be localized, it is not going to be contained," Obama said.

On Friday, he called British Prime Minister David Cameron and German Chancellor Angela Merkel to discuss possible responses to the crisis. He also spoke with Prime Minister Tony Abbott of Australia, whose country lost 27 citizens in the crash.

Rusty Skinner, CEO of CareerSource in Marion County, said the June employment numbers in the region could reflect seasonal employment changes among public education support personnel, which is experienced statewide.

"What we're seeing in June is the churning of individuals entering and leaving employment for a variety of reasons," he said in a press release. "They're not working and they are not looking for jobs, where did they go? Did they get discouraged and just stop looking? Did they go on vacation? It's difficult to say."

"What we're seeing in June is the churning of individuals entering and leaving employment for a variety of reasons."

Rusty Skinner
CEO of CareerSource

Rebecca Rust, DEO's chief economist, said in the same release that "normal seasonality" — summer drops in agriculture and public education employment — is "having a drag on the economy and impacts total employment" throughout Florida.

Sumter's jobless rate in June was 4.8 percent, dropping from 5 percent in May. Sumter's rate was the fourth lowest in the state during June.

In Lake, from a labor force of 134,419 people, 125,754 had jobs in June and 8,665 did not. In Sumter the labor force was 42,082, with 40,066 employed and 2,016 unemployed.

In June 2014, Walton County had the state's lowest unemployment rate (3.4 percent), followed by Monroe County (3.5 percent), Okaloosa County (4.6 percent), Sumter County (4.8 percent), and Wakulla County (4.9 percent).

Hendry County had the highest unemployment rate (10.6 percent) in Florida in June 2014, followed by Flagler County (8.8 percent); Hamilton County (8.6 percent); and Madison and Putnam counties (8.2 percent each).

There was one county, Hendry, with a double-digit unemployment rate for June and none in May.

boaters tried to swim to shore, but Nathaniel couldn't keep up and cried out for help. The two others tried to go back and help Nathaniel but couldn't find him — only bubbles. They turned back for the shore and went door-to-door looking for help.

Valerie Withrow, who lives on Sunset Drive, said she had just pulled into her driveway when she saw one of the boys frantically banging on a neighbor's door and crying.

"I just walked in and he was banging on (my) door, distraught," she told the same 911 operator before handing the phone to Cook.

Her husband, Don Withrow, said by the time he got to the lake, it was too late.

"I didn't see any sign of him, just water," Don said.

Eventually, officials used radar to find Nathaniel's body in 9 feet of water about 50-75 feet off shore, FWC spokesman Greg Workman said.

"It's a tragedy, I just wish they had life jackets with them," Valerie Withrow said.

Valerie said it took a long time for the Lake County sheriff's marine unit to come, and she tried to help Eli and Cook in a futile search for a motorized boat to try to find Nathaniel.

The 911 call was received by the sheriff's Office about 4:15 p.m.; and Lake County Fire-Rescue at 4:19 p.m. Assistant Fire Chief Jack Filman said they made it to the scene in about 6 minutes, and after surveying the lake and seeing no signs of Nathaniel, waited for the sheriff's marine unit to come.

Sheriff's Sgt. James Vachon said it was not clear what time their marine unit arrived on the scene but he refuted some residents' claims that they used to have boats on Lake Schimmerhorn or it took a long time to respond to the drowning.

He said response time is affected by the geographic location of the call and whether or not the marine deputy has to pull his boat out of another waterway before responding to the new call or collect a specialty boat due to lake conditions.

"The marine units respond as quickly as possible to any boating emergency," Vachon said.

UMATILLA

Water rate hike gets initial approval

STEVE FUSSELL
Special to the Daily Commercial

A water rate hike in Umatilla got an initial approval from City Council members this week with little opposition from residents. An ordinance outlining the rate hike will get a second and final reading at the next regular council meeting on Aug. 5.

The rate increase — an average of 11 percent this year and 8 percent per year for three more years — is weighted to favor small and efficient household users over heavy residential, restaurant and other commercial users. Most homeowners will see their water bills go up only a few dollars, officials said.

The rate hike followed an extended study that spotlighted improvements needed in the city's water system. The problem was highlighted last October when a 10-inch water main ruptured along Kentucky Avenue. Crews were unable to isolate the break by turning off water valves in the area and were forced to turn off all water to the city at the main plant for several hours.

The city also hasn't had a rate hike in seven years and existing revenues no longer cover operating costs of the water system, officials said.

"Our last rate hike was in 2008," City Manager Glen Irby said. "With the recession, the council didn't want to ask residents to pay more, but now we have no choice."

Disney, union make deal

Park workers' starting hourly pay to reach $10 by 2016

Associated Press

ORLANDO — Union officials say Walt Disney World has reached a tentative labor agreement with its largest union group that raises starting hourly pay from a little over $8 to $9 this year.

The agreement announced Friday raises starting hourly pay to $9.50 next year and $10 in 2016.

Union members will vote whether to approve the proposed contract on Aug. 1.

The contract covers 21,000 full-time workers at the Florida-based theme park resort, which has around 45,000 full-time and 25,000 part-time employees.

Union officials say the contract freezes employee health care costs in 2015.

Disney World and union officials have been negotiating since March, when the previous contract expired.

Scott administration surprised as immigrants arrive in Miami

LAURA WIDES-MUNOZ
Associated Press

MIAMI — Florida Gov. Rick Scott's administration expressed surprise and concern Friday over reports that the federal government is sending unaccompanied immigrant minors from the Southwest border to Miami — despite immigration attorneys saying the practice has gone on for years.

In the last year, the number of Central American children crossing illegally into the United States from Mexico has skyrocketed, with more than 57,000 children — mostly from Honduras, Guatemala and El Salvador — arriving since Oct. 1.

Many are fleeing gang violence, poverty or both and hope to reunite with relatives already in the United States. Unlike children from Mexico, those coming from Central America are entitled to an immigration hearing and may not be automatically deported under U.S. law. President Barack Obama has asked Congress to approve an emergency $3.7 billion spending bill to deal with the crisis.

Some of these youths are being sent to shelters around the country, including in Florida.

"I just don't get it. We've been seeing children for years who've fled Central America and other countries and arrive here. We interact with them (at the shelters) all the time. We're not afraid of catching any horrific diseases. Maybe a child has a common cold. The concerns being raised here are so farfetched in our experience."

Miami immigration attorney

In a letter to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Friday, state Health Secretary John Armstrong wrote: "The Florida Department of Health has received unconfirmed reports that the federal government is bringing unaccompanied minors from the border to Florida today."

Armstrong, who shared the letter with reporters, cited an ABC News report that the federal government was so overwhelmed that it was not providing basic medical screenings to the children and demanded to know what steps the department was taking to screen the children and track infectious diseases.

The federal government is not calling the state to say where or when it is placing the children in Florida or for how long, said governor

FRUITLAND PARK

Commission candidates must qualify by Friday

STEVE FUSSELL
Special to the Daily Commercial

Candidates for Fruitland Park City Commission have until noon on Friday to qualify to run for office in the non-partisan, at-large election to be held in November.

No petition or filing fee is required.

Two commission seats will be on the ballot: Commission Seat Group One, held by Al Goldberg, and Commission Seat Group Four, currently held by Sharon Kelly.

Goldberg, who currently serves as vice-mayor, was first elected to the commission in 2005. A respiratory therapist, Goldberg moved to Fruitland Park from Miami 34 years ago.

Kelly, who has served on the commission since 1995, is the board's only woman. The Rochester, N.Y., native is a former financial advisor who has lived in Fruitland Park for more than 35 years.

Commissioners Kelly and Goldberg have both said they intend to run for re-election.

Qualified candidates must be city residents and must subscribe to the oath of candidacy required by Florida statutes.

Prospective candidates should contact Fruitland Park City Clerk Esther Coulson at City Hall, 565 W. Berckman St., at 652-360-6727, or ecoulson@fruitlandpark.org.

FDA warns against powdered caffeine

MARY CLARE and JALONICK ANN SANNER
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Food and Drug Administration is warning people to avoid pure powdered caffeine sold on the Internet after the death of an Ohio teen.

Even a teaspoon of the powder could be lethal — it is equivalent to 25 cups of coffee. Eighteen-year-old Logan Stiner of LaGrange, Ohio, died May 27 after consuming it.

The FDA said it is investigating caffeine powder and will "consider taking regulatory action." The agency said it is recommending consumers stay away from it.

Teenagers and young adults may be particularly drawn to the powder, which is a stimulant. Caffeine powder is marketed as a dietary supplement and is unregulated, unlike caffeine added to soda.

FDA spokeswoman Jennifer Dooren said those who drink coffee, tea or soda may be aware of caffeine's less serious effects, like nervousness and tremors, and may not realize that the powdered form is a pure chemical.

"The difference between a safe amount and a lethal dose of caffeine in these powdered products is very small," she said.

The powder is also almost impossible to measure with common kitchen tools, the FDA said. Volume measures like teaspoons aren't precise enough and a scale may be needed.

The agency added that the products may carry minimal or insufficient labeling. Consumers may not be aware that even a small amount can cause an overdose.

FDA Commissioner Margaret Hamburg recently said that the agency needs to better understand the role of the stimulant, especially on children.

Realtor set to compete in duathlon championship

ROXANNE BROWN | Staff Writer

Diane Travis of Travis Realty in Clermont, who has been competing in duathlons since 1998, will take part in the USA Duathlon Nationals today in St. Paul, Minn.

On May 31 and June 30, Travis, 60, was in Pontevedra, Spain for the World Duathlon Championship, an international competition where she took second place in her age group with a time of 1:22:46.

In Minnesota, Travis said she is going for the gold.

"I am ready to compete and plan on coming back to Clermont with a gold medal," she said before leaving.

Her time and placement after Nationals will determine whether or not she qualifies for next year's world competition, set for October 2015 in Australia.

"I never thought I would still be competing, but it's just so much fun," Travis said. "I get to travel all over the world with people and fellow athletes I've come to know, what can be better than that? I'm blessed."

Travis said she has always been athletic, having waterskiied and played racquetball for years. Then she began attending the local duathlons put on by Sommer Sports in Clermont.

TRAVIS

Travis said she never knew about duathlons, which involve running and biking, but once she caught wind of them, she started training.

"Once I started, I never stopped," she said.

According to the USA Triathlon 2014 National Championships website, the race distances for Saturday are as follows: Standard Distance: 4.6k run — 31.2k bike — 4.4k run; Sprint Distance: 2.9k run — 20.8k bike — 2.7k run.

Travis said when she returns, she will jump right back into campaign mode — considering that this year, she's set out on another running venture. For this race, however, the prize is a two-year stint as a councilwoman for Seat 5 on Clermont's City Council.

The primary election for that race is Aug. 26 and Travis is running against opponents Tim Murry and Dr. Thomas Spencer.

The seat is currently held by Councilman Rick VanWagner, who is now running for mayor.

The general election this year falls on Nov. 4.

spokesman John Tupps.

Miami immigration attorney Cheryl Little said she was confused by the letter since the federal government has for years housed unaccompanied children who have crossed the U.S.-Mexican border in South Florida shelters. She said her organization, Americans for Immigrant Justice, meets with dozens of these youth each week.

The letter, which was also addressed to the Federal Emergency Management Agency, requests details about "any records of infectious diseases associated with the children currently in federal care in Florida..."

"I just don't get it," Little said. "We've been seeing children for years who've fled Central America and other countries and arrive here. We interact with them (at the shelters) all the time. We're not afraid of catching any horrific diseases. Maybe a child has a common cold. The concerns being raised here are so farfetched in our experience."

Little said the number of youth her organization has provided services to has increased drastically in the last year — up from about 1,600 in 2013 to that many as of July of this year.

She said the two main youth shelters in Miami together house about 200 youth and are adding another 24 beds. She said minors are sent there as they await their legal cases, often for asylum or to reunite with parents in the country. They tend to stay in the shelters from a week to a month, depending on the case.

The federal health department on Friday acknowledged a recent outbreak of pneumonia and the flu among youngsters at a temporary shelter at a Naval base in California's Ventura County but said the general public was not at risk.

In a statement, Florida health department spokesman Kenneth J. Wolfe said the agency does provide medical exams to the children, as well as vaccines and that if children do have communicable diseases, they are quarantined.

"This week, HHS took additional measures to ensure that children previously screened, vaccinated and medically cleared while in Customs and Border Protection (CBP) custody had not fallen ill while pending transport to Unaccompanied Alien Children program facilities," Wolfe said.

Not far behind is former Lake County teacher union leader Belita "B" Grassel, 66, who received 11 percent. Rounding out the race is Apopka businesswoman Terri Seefeldt, 52, with 8 percent, and Altamonte Springs fraud examiner Joseph Stephens, 51, with 6 percent. Stephens has said he will move to District 31 if elected.

Some 42 percent of the likely voters remain undecided at this point, according to the poll.

The winner of the Aug. 26 primary gets a two-year term paying $29,697 a year.

The poll was conducted by an automated calling system.

‘Funnel of fire’ destroys homes in Washington

NICHOLAS K. GERANIOS and GENE JOHNSON
Associated Press

PATEROS, Wash. — A fire racing through rural north-central Washington destroyed about 100 homes, leaving behind smoldering rubble, solitary brick chimneys and burned-out automobiles as it blackened hundreds of square miles in the scenic Methow Valley.

Friday’s dawn revealed dramatic devastation, with the Okanagan County town of Pateros, home to 650 people, hit especially hard. Most residents evacuated in advance of the flames, and some returned Friday to see what, if anything, was left of their houses. There were no reports of injuries, officials said.

A wall of fire wiped out a block of homes on Dawson Street. David Brownlee, 75, said he drove away Thursday evening just as the fire reached the front of his home, which erupted like a box of matches.

“It was just a funnel of fire,” Brownlee said. “All you could do was watch her go.”

Next door, the Pateros Community Church appeared largely undamaged.

The pavement of U.S. Highway 97 stopped the advance of some of the flames, protecting parts of the town.

Firefighters poured water over the remnants of homes Friday morning, raising clouds of smoke, steam and dust. Two big water towers perched just above the town were singed black. Ash fell like snowflakes.

The fire consumed utility poles from two major power lines, knocking out power to Pateros as well as the towns of Winthrop and Twisp to the north.

Gov. Jay Inslee said about 50 fires were burning in Washington, which has been wracked by hot, dry weather, and gusting winds and lightning. Some 2,000 firefighters were working in the eastern part of the state, with about a dozen helicopters from the Department of Natural Resources and the National Guard, along with a Washington State Patrol spotter plane.

ELAINE THOMPSON / AP

A firefighter drags a hose past a line of fire Friday in Winthrop, Wash.

Karina Shagren, spokeswoman for the state’s Military Department, said 100 National Guard troops were on standby, and up to 1,000 more in Yakima could receive additional fire training. Active duty military could be called in as well, Inslee said.

“This, unfortunately, is not going to be a one-day or one-week event,” he said.

Sections of several highways were closed in the Methow Valley, a popular area for hiking and fishing about 180 miles northeast of Seattle.

“There’s a lot of misplaced people, living in parking lots and stuff right now,” said Rod Griffin, a fly-fishing guide who lives near Twisp. “The whole valley’s in disarray.”

He described long lines for gasoline, with at least one gas station out of fuel, and said cellphone towers must have been damaged as well because there was very little service.

In Brewster, 6 miles to the south, a hospital was evacuated as a precaution. The smoke was so thick there Friday it nearly obscured the Columbia River from adjacent highways. The smoke extended all the way to Spokane, 150 miles to the east.

Officials said the fire, known as the Carlton Complex, had blackened 260 square miles by Friday morning, up dramatically from the prior estimate of 28 square miles.

US appeals court tosses Oklahoma gay marriage ban

SEAN MURPHY and TIM TALLEY
Associated Press

OKLAHOMA CITY — A federal appeals court ruling Friday that Oklahoma’s ban on gay marriage is unconstitutional spurred celebration among gay rights activists but sparked sharp anger among Republican leaders in a conservative state that prides itself on being the buckle of the nation’s Bible Belt.

The decision by a three-judge panel of the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver upholding a federal judge’s ruling is the latest in a decade-long legal battle. That fight was launched by two couples — Sharon Baldwin and Mary Bishop, and Gay Phillips and Susan Barton — shortly after 76 percent of Oklahoma voters backed the ban in 2004.

“There are so many gay and lesbian Oklahomans who are celebrating, and they have every right to, because this is a victory for all of us,” Baldwin said. “We may be the people at the front of the line holding the flag, but never think for one minute that there’s not a huge army behind us. We are far from alone in this.”

Friday’s decision marks the second time the federal appeals court has found the U.S. Constitution protects same-sex marriage, after its June ruling in a Utah case. As in the Utah case, the court put its 2-1 ruling on hold pending an appeal, meaning same-sex couples won’t be allowed to marry in Oklahoma for now.

Officials: Unlicensed mortician had remains of 50 people

Associated Press

BOSTON — An unlicensed funeral director accused of stealing more than $12,000 from an elderly couple could face more charges after authorities found 12 bodies and the cremated remains of more than 40 others in two self-storage units he rented, authorities said Friday.

Joseph O’Donnell, 55, of Boston, was being held on $10,000 bail in a larceny case when investigators found the cremated remains Wednesday at a Somerville self-storage business. On Thursday, they found 12 sets of human remains at a similar business in Weymouth.

Suffolk District Attorney Daniel Conley said no foul play is suspected and investigators were working to identify the remains.

Conley’s spokesman, Jake Wark, said no charges have been sought against O’Donnell in the discovery of the human remains, but authorities are conducting a criminal investigation.

Israel PM says expansion of Gaza assault possible

IBRAHIM BARZAK and ARON HELLER
Associated Press

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip — Israeli troops pushed deeper into Gaza on Friday to destroy rocket launching sites and tunnels, firing volleys of tank shells and clashing with Palestinian fighters in a high-stakes ground offensive meant to weaken the enclave's Hamas rulers.

The assault opens a new, potentially extended and bloodier stage in the conflict following a 10-day Israeli campaign of more than 2,000 airstrikes against Gaza that had failed to halt militants rocket fire on Israeli cities. Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said he told his military to prepare for a possible "significant" expansion of the operation.

The government said its goal is to stop rocket attacks, destroy the network of Hamas tunnels into Israel and weaken Hamas militarily. But there are calls from hard-liners in Israel to completely crush Hamas and drive it from power in Gaza. That could mean a longer operation with the danger of mounting casualties in a conflict that has already seen more than 274 Palestinians killed in Gaza, around a fifth of them children.

Israel had been reticent about a ground offensive for fear of endangering its own soldiers and drawing international condemnation over mounting Palestinian civilian deaths.

But after an attempt by Hamas to infiltrate Israel on Thursday — when 13 armed militants sneaked through a tunnel from Gaza, only to be killed by an airstrike as they emerged inside Israel — Netanyahu gave the order that evening for thousands of troops on standby to enter Gaza.

"We chose to begin this operation after the other options were exhausted and with the understanding that without the operation the price we will pay can be very high," he said Friday before a special Cabinet meeting in Tel Aviv.

He said he had instructed the military to "be ready for the possibility of a significant expansion of the ground operation."

Israel saw its first military death of the conflict in the early hours of the ground assault. The circumstances behind the death of Staff Sgt. Eitan Barak, 20, were not made clear: Hamas's military wing said it ambushed Israeli units in the northern town of Beit Lahiya, but Israeli media said Barak was likely killed by friendly fire. An Israeli civilian died from mortar fire earlier in the week, and several have been wounded.

The Israeli military said it killed nearly 20 militants in exchanges of fire. Gaza health officials said 25 Palestinians have been killed since the ground operation began, including three teenage siblings from the Abu Musallam family who were killed when a tank shell hit their home. At the morgue, one of the victims' faces was blackened by soot and he and his siblings were each wrapped in a white burial shroud.

Their father, Ismail, said the three were sleeping when the shell struck, and that he had to dig them out from under the rubble.

Israel says it is going to great lengths to avoid civilian casualties and blames them on Hamas, accusing it of firing from within residential neighborhoods and using its civilians as "human shields."

In Iraq, Syria militants try to govern as a state

ZEINA KARAM and BASSEM MROUE
Associated Press

BEIRUT — Across the broad swath of territory they control bridging Syria and Iraq, extremist militants from the group known as the Islamic State have proven to be highly organized administrators. Flush with cash, they fix roads, police traffic, administer courts, and have even set up an export system of smuggled crude from oil fields they have seized.

But the extremists — a mix of Iraqis and Syrians but also foreign fighters from Arab countries and non-Arab regions like the Caucasus — run the risk of provoking a backlash from the people they have come to rule.

Unlike Lebanon's Hezbollah or the Palestinian militant group Hamas, which have deep roots in their communities, the Islamic State group is not a grassroots movement and its sway over its populations is ultimately based on violence, not necessarily a groundswell of support for its vision of a hardline Islamic caliphate. While it has been welcomed by some disenfranchised Iraqi Sunnis as potential saviors from the Shiite-dominated government in Baghdad, many consider the group an alien entity.

In recognition of that, the group has varied the imposition of the radical version of Islamic law they advocate. In their main stronghold in Syria, the city of Raqqa, they have unleashed it without reserve, killing perceived offenders and cutting off the hands of thieves in public.

But in Iraq's second largest city, Mosul, they have been more cautious. They've taken some steps like banning alcohol and painting over street advertisements that show women's faces — but have held off on strict punishments.

Ex-general alleges massive fraud in Indonesia vote

NINIEK KARMINI and MARK BAKER
Associated Press

JAKARTA, Indonesia — Indonesian presidential candidate Prabowo Subianto alleged Friday there had "been quite massive incidences" of fraud in general elections, which he said might prevent him from winning the most divisive polls in the fragile democracy's history.

The Suharto-era general has been claiming to be ahead in the vote count, whose official results will be announced next week.

But in an interview with The Associated Press, Subianto for the first time suggested he might lose to his challenger, former Jakarta governor Joko Widodo, due to voting fraud.

"Half of the Indonesian people support me," he said. "In my conviction, is it more than half, if there is no cheating."

Several reputable organizations have carried out a "quick count" of a sample of the votes that show Widodo with a small but decisive lead. The quick counts have accurately forecast past regional and national elections in Indonesia, and independent analysts say there is no reason to think otherwise this time.

Subianto's insistence that he was on course for victory, and his allegations of fraud, have led to speculation in some quarters that the super-rich candidate might be trying to himself fix the results or will refuse to concede. That would put pressure on the country's democratic institutions and could possibly lead to violence.

Executions rise worldwide in 2013

COLLEEN BARRY
Associated Press

MILAN — The number of executions worldwide rose last year despite a general global trend toward capital punishment abolition, according to a report released Friday by an Italian anti-death penalty group.

The organization Hands off Cain, based in Rome, said Friday that at least 4,106 people were executed in 2013, up from 3,967 in 2012, due to increases in Iran, which recorded the highest number of executions in 15 years, and Iraq, which had the highest number since the 2003 fall of Saddam Hussein.

China remains the world's top executioner, with more than 3,000 executions carried out last year, about equal to 2012. Still, the report noted that executions in China have halved since 2007 — largely due to a legal reform requiring a high court review of death penalty sentences.

Hands off Cain said 12 states were considered to have abolished the death penalty in 2013 or so far in 2014, either through a moratorium or de facto by not carrying out an execution in a decade.

Many killed as extremists attack Nigerian town

HARUNA UMAR
Associated Press

MAIDUGURI, Nigeria — Boko Haram gunmen killed many villagers and set homes ablaze in a northeastern Nigerian town just 85 kilometers from the strategic center of Maiduguri before dawn Friday, according to survivors.

Residents of Damboa town called The Associated Press to say they were "piling up corpses."

Half the town is up in flames, say civilian defense fighters there according to Nigerian Vigilante Group spokesman Abbas Gava.

Well-armed Islamic extremists attacked as residents were preparing for the 5 a.m. dawn prayers and the civilian defense fighters could only resist with clubs and homemade shotguns, he said.

Damboa has been besieged for two weeks, since Islamic extremists on July 4 attacked a new tank battalion base set up on its outskirts. The Defense Ministry reported it repelled the attack and killed at least 50 insurgents, with the deaths of six soldiers including the commanding officer. But locals said the soldiers were driven from the base and that extremists twice have ambushed military convoys trying to reach it in the past week.

The militants had cut off access to the town from the south on Monday when they blew up a bridge further south. Damboa is on the main road south from Maiduguri, the Borno state capital.

Both Nigeria's military and Boko Haram have been claiming victories on the battlefield in the rapidly spreading Islamic insurgency in Africa's most populous nation and biggest oil producer.

Boko Haram has attracted international condemnation for the abductions of more than 200 Nigerian schoolgirls who have been held in captivity for 3 months.

Boko Haram, which means "Western education is sinful," has increased the number and deadliness of attacks this year, particularly in its stronghold in the Nigeria's northeast, though it also has detonated bombs as far away as Lagos, the commercial capital in the southwest. Human Rights Watch published a report this week which said the insurgency has killed at least 2,053 civilians in an estimated 95 attacks during the first half of 2014. That compares to an estimated 3,600 people killed in the first four years of the insurgency.

The New York-based advocacy group said there has been "a dramatic increase" in casualties from bombs, with at least 432 people reported killed in 14 blasts so far this year.

Boko Haram wants to enforce an Islamic state in Nigeria though half the country's population of 170 million is Christian.

Mexico's mix of oil and drugs

Mexico has witnessed a dramatic economic expansion since the North American Free Trade Agreement went into effect in 1994 and opened the country to foreign competition. But one area where its progress remains stalled is in its petroleum sector, where outside competition has remained largely off limits.

To get where Mexico needs to go economically, its legislature must keep moving forward with the petroleum reform package that President Enrique Peña Nieto initiated in April to alter the monopoly status of the state-owned oil company, Pemex. Equally important are the security mechanisms his government must put in place to ensure that drug violence and corruption don't turn Mexico's oil and gas potential into just another high-profile symbol of a failing state.

Petroleum sales provide one-third of Mexico's government income and more than 10 percent of export revenue, making it a crucial component of the nation's economic stability. Yet Mexico's production has declined 20 percent since 2004. It cannot afford to let this trend continue.

The regions where Mexico has the best prospects for new oil and gas development also are areas where organized crime is most active. That's no coincidence.

The drug cartels are diversifying their sources of illicit income, and the petroleum sector is one of their biggest and most potentially lucrative targets. Some cartel members are siphoning oil from pipelines to sell on international markets. Others are extorting protection money from drilling and exploration operations.

The presence of armed groups engaged in these activities is nothing new. American oil companies have had to cope for years with theft and extortion demands while working in war zones such as Colombia, Indonesia and various African countries.

A crucial difference, however, is that the Mexican government places heavy restrictions on the security measures that foreign companies can take to protect themselves. Private ownership of weapons by foreigners is prohibited, making it difficult for energy companies to provide their own security.

That leaves a stark choice for Peña Nieto's government. If it allows insecurity and corruption to prevail, foreign companies almost certainly will stay away, and the country's crucial petroleum revenue will continue declining. But as the drug cartels have demonstrated all along the border, any government action that threatens their income elicits more violence.

The stakes get higher, and the challenge gets tougher, every time the government cedes ground to the cartels.

The nation's prosperity depends on maximizing the country's petroleum potential, but that won't happen if foreign petroleum experts can't do their jobs safely. Mexico cannot afford to let criminal drug and extortion organizations effectively become an oil cartel.

Texas border situation is complicated

Cynthia Allen

MCCLATCHY-TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

I'm willing to make the wildly optimistic assumption that the majority of Americans appreciate the complexity of the current situation on our border.

As such, their feelings in response to the influx of women and unaccompanied Central American minors are, well, complex.

Their hearts break at the images of small children with tear-stained cheeks and searching eyes. The phrase "We are a nation of immigrants" cycles through their minds.

They also feel an instinctive inclination toward order, an appreciation that borders and laws exist for good reasons (economic, military and cultural), and a sense that our commitment to the rule of law is meaningless if we continue down a path that subverts our national sovereignty.

Despite these emotions, the prevailing narratives perpetuated by commentators on the left and the right have been condensed into single incendiary, and frankly, obtuse phrases: "Let them stay!" and "Send them home!"

It's unhelpful that some blundering but isolated voices on the right are calling these children invaders and "illeagles," suggesting that the best course is to greet the buses transporting these travel-weary minors with protests. Their frustration would be better directed at elected leaders whose responsibility is making meaningful policy and, for God's sake, enforcing our laws.

But it's equally unhelpful that some on the left have taken these isolated voices and used them as an excuse to weigh in with reflexive insults and self-righteous disdain.

By now, we all know the 2008 law — aimed at deterring the traffic of sex slaves — under which tens of thousands of now nonlegal residents can stay in the U.S. pending an immigration hearing, was a law of unintended consequences.

As Washington Post columnist Charles Lane writes, "Half a decade later, the Wilberforce Act has mutated into a source of chaos, the victims of which are children, and the greatest beneficiaries, human traffickers."

Some immigrant minors have family in the U.S.; others do not. Regardless, they come to this country, many of them teenagers, absent language skills, proper education, money and friends, things they need to succeed as prospective Americans. Once the well-intended humanitarian aid runs dry, they will again be vulnerable to the very same societal evils — destitution and gangs, but this time in the U.S. — that drove many of them north.

It's evident that this law has been a boon to the coyotes who scavenge Central American towns, promising desperate parents that a better life awaits their children in the U.S.

But this law became remarkably easier to exploit after President Barack Obama's 2012 decision to bypass Congress and order border agents to no longer enforce immigration laws against certain illegal immigrants brought to the U.S. as children.

Wall Street Journal columnist Peggy Noonan argues that the president, whose response to the crisis has been inexcusably slow, "let the crisis on the border build to put heat on Republicans and make them pass his idea of good immigration reform." After all, this migration began building two years ago, increasing significantly after Obama's announcement.

And while these children are frequently escaping poverty and crime — circumstances that are lamentable but do not qualify them for refugee status — other evidence, including a recent assessment by the El Paso Intelligence Center, confirms "the perception of U.S. immigration laws granting free passes or permisos to UAC (unaccompanied children) and adult females OTMs (other than Mexicans) traveling with minors" is an equally potent force behind the massive migration.

Some immigrant minors have family in the U.S.; others do not. Regardless, they come to this country, many of them teenagers, absent language skills, proper education, money and friends, things they need to succeed as prospective Americans. Once the well-intended humanitarian aid runs dry, they will again be vulnerable to the very same societal evils — destitution and gangs, but this time in the U.S. — that drove many of them north.

Like the emotions surrounding the crisis, solutions will be equally complex.

Those calling for compassion are right to do so. Americans can be charitable to those in immediate need without undermining their own principles or the law.

But defining compassion requires thought and emotion. What ultimately is best for these children — and the common good of both the U.S. and the nations from which they are fleeing — may not be the compulsory "Let them stay."

Without any meaningful attempts at deterring future waves of children (the government estimates 160,000 next year), they will be subjected to a perilous and possibly futile journey that only benefits the unscrupulous coyotes and the drug cartels that would love to see this crisis continue indefinitely.

Chris Blanton was one of the most decorated student-athletes in Lake-Sumter State College history.

As he prepares to move on to the University of Central Florida, Blanton has added another honor to his growing trophy case.

BLANTON

The National Junior College Athletic Association has presented Blanton with the Lea Plarski Award, an honor the organizations gives to a student-athlete the exemplifies NJCAA's goals of promoting sportsmanship, leadership, academic excellence, community service and athletic achievement.

"It's a great honor to be recognized with the Lea Plarski Award," Blanton said. "To be recognized with this distinction is something that means an incredible amount to me. Lea Plarski was an amazing ambassador for athletics and being able to win an award named for her is something I know will help carry me a long way in life and I am extremely grateful for it."

Plarski is a member of the Women's Basketball Hall of Fame Class of 2002. She was recognizeed by the National Association of College Directors of Athletics as one of 15 people who significantly influenced Nicole Wright, who previously worked for the NCAA, will join the Central Florida Sports Commission as the Manager of Business Development and Events for the organization.

One of Wright's goals, according to CFSC officials, will be to "bring new events to and grow sports tourism in Lake County."

Wright will begin her stint with the CFSC on Monday, said CFSC spokeswoman Georgiana Brown. She joins the commission after a stint with the NCAA, where she worked in the Championships and Alliance Department in Indianapolis.

Before that, Wright attended Miami University and worked in the school's athletic department.

"We are excited to have Nicole join our high-performance team," said John Bisignano, president and CEO of the CFSC. "Her sports background, particularly her experience with the Championships and Alliance

Bond between team, fans gets tested during rain-filled season

Lightning head coach Dave Therneau argues with an umpire.

Doug Aldrich turns to watch the game after hearing the crack of a bat while waiting on his hot dog and unsweetened tea.

The Leesburg Lightning loves its fans.

And the fans love the Lightning.

That love affair between the two entities actually began a year before the team played its first game. That was when nearly 2,000 fans shoehorned their way into Pat Thomas Stadium-Buddy Lowe Field for a "showcase game" between Winter Park and Altamonte Springs that was designed give fans a taste of the Florida Collegiate Summer League.

Fans were so enthused about the game that league officials awarded Leesburg a team during the game. Team officials held contests to pick a nickname and the bond between fans and team was established.

Since beginning play in 2007, the Lightning have led the FCSL in attendance every year and won two league championships in five title-game appearances. On Thursday, another milestone was reached when manager David Therneau became the first skipper in league history to surpass 100 career wins.

Leesburg lead the FCSL in attendance for the eighth-straight year this season. The Lightning are averaging

McIlroy builds a 4-shot lead at Open

HOYLAKE, England — Rory McIlroy only saw birdies at Royal Liverpool, mostly on his scorecard, and even one pheasant that trotted across the eighth green as he was lining up a putt. That was but a minor interruption in his command performance Friday in the British Open.

Once he made a birdie, and then another, nothing could stop McIlroy.

Not another collapse in the second round. Not anyone in the field. And certainly not Tiger Woods.

After a bogey on his opening hole stirred memories of another "Black Friday," McIlroy looked more like the Boy Wonder who won two majors in a runaway. With three birdies in his last four holes, he posted a second straight 6-under 66 to build a four-shot lead over Dustin Johnson.

McIlroy spoke of an "inner

1,425 fans per game in nine dates, which would establish a new record for per game attendance.

No other team in the league has played fewer than 13 home games. After Friday's game against Sanford at Pat Thomas Stadium-Buddy Lowe Field, Leesburg has only three regular season games left on the schedule.

Team officials are hoping Mother Nature gives the Lightning a break for their last three home dates. That way, they hope, fans will turn out in even larger numbers to help propel the team into its annual postseason drive that has resulted in five appearances at Tropicana Field in St. Petersburg to play in the FCSL Championship Game.

Not counting games that may be added to the remaining home dates in an effort to make up for previously rained out contests, Leesburg will play College Park at 7 p.m. Wednesday and will close out its regular season by hosting Winter Park at 7 p.m. on July 26 and July 27.

The team also is asking fans to dig a little deeper into their pockets and help overcome an operating deficit of about $16,000 for the year. Primarily because so many home dates have been rained out, donations through the franchise's "pass the hat" program are down.

Leesburg pays the FCSL $52,000 each year to play in the league, according to Lightning officials. The team's entire budget for the 2014 season is $67,000.

In previous seasons, the Lightning have hit their budget figures with a combination of sponsorship dollars and donations from fans.

The team is averaging about $250 each night this season from its "pass the hat" campaign, said Chuck Johnson, a member of the Lightning board of directors.

"This year, the amount being generated by passing the hat is considerably less than in previous years, due primarily to the rainouts and the rescheduling of those games as doubleheaders," Johnson said.

Because the team doesn't charge admission, accepting donations is one vehicle the franchise's uses to raise money. Officials are asking fans to write a check, if possible, to help the team make their budget for the season.

the growth of women's athletics. She was the first woman elected president of the NJCAA and was the first woman to receive a lifetime officiating license from FIBA, the international governing body for basketball.

Blanton's coach at LSSC considered him to be logical choice for the award.

"Chris exhibited each of the cornerstones of the Lea Plarski Award on a daily basis during his two years at Lake-Sumter State," said Josh Holt. "I think that shows the character of Chris and a testament to how he was raised by his parents and other people that influenced him in a positive way."

Blanton graduated from LSSC with a degree in finance and a 4.0 grade-point average. He was recognized earlier this year for his academic accomplishments with the NJCAA's Pinnacle Award for Academy Excellence.

In addition to his classroom work, Blanton has maintained a presence in the community, spending countless hours helping others in Fruitland Park, according to Holt. Blanton volunteered with Habitat for Humanity and helped with the North Lake Miracle League — a baseball league for children with disabilities.

In addition, Holt said Blanton volunteered to help with baseball clinics and mentored area elementary-school students.

"Selflessly serving people of the community and showing you are willing to help others when there is no physical benefit for yourself proves to them, and everybody around you, that you are there for the greater good," Blanton said. "If members of the community start to notice you are willing to help other people just for the sake of being a good person, it becomes contagious. All of a sudden one person witnesses you helping others and realizes how good it would feel to do something selfless. He or she then goes out and does something altruistic for somebody else. Then somebody else observes that good deed take place and follows suit with a benevolent act of his or her own.

"The next thing you know, everybody is helping everybody and that is a beautiful thing. It becomes a domino effect of people helping people, for the sake of helping people, that leads to a better community overall."

Blanton was the Lakehawks catcher last season and produced a solid sophomore campaign, hitting .231 with one homer and 10 RBIs. He played in 35 games and started 33, compiling a .992 fielding percentage. He was particularly effective holding runners on base, limiting them to 35 stolen bases in 49 attempts (71 percent).

The values Blanton displayed in the community helped him to become a team leader on the field and in the classroom.

With his junior-coller career over, Blanton is staying close to home in pursuit of his four-year degree. The Orlando-native will attend the University of Central Florida next year. Although he doesn't currently have a spot on the baseball team, Blanton is hoping to walk on in September.

The CFSC represents Lake, Orange, Osceola, Seminole, and Volusia counties. The organization's goal, according to its website, is to enhance the region's economy by strategically soliciting, creating and supporting "marquee sports-related events and businesses."

The CFSC has helped host the Florida High School Athletic Association Football Finals at the Citrus Bowl in Orlando since 2007 and led the push to host second- and third-round games of the NCAA Division I Men's Basketball tournament at the Amway Center in March.

Locally, Mission Inn Resort and Club will be the site for the the Division II Men's Golf regionals in 2016, the Division II Men's Golf finals in 2017 and the Division III Women's Golf finals in 2018.

In addition, the CFSC won the right to host seven NCAA championships from 2016 to 2018, including the 2016 and 2017 Women's College Cup, the final four for the national championship soccer tournament. Co-hosted by the CFSC and UCF, the tournament will be played at the new Orlando City soccer stadium, which will host Orlando's Major League Soccer franchise beginning in 2016.

peace," and the two secret words that triggered his powerful swing and set up birdie chances on just about every hole.

"People call it the zone, people call it whatever," he said. "It's just a state of mind where you think clearly. Everything seems to be on the right track. I've always said, whenever you play this well, you always wonder how you've played so badly before. And whenever you've played so badly, you always wonder how you play so well. I'm happy where my game is at the minute. And hopefully, I can just keep up the solid play for another couple of days."

Woods is fortunate to even play for two more days.

He started the second round only three shots behind. He finished it on the 18th hole, standing over a 6-foot birdie putt just to avoid missing back-to-back cuts for the first time in his career. Woods made the putt for a 77, matching his second-worst round as a pro in the British Open.

Woods hit driver five times — four more than he hit all week when he won at Royal Liverpool in 2006. None found the fairway. Woods was 14 shots out of the lead and still thought he had a chance, referring to Paul Lawrie making up 10 shots in one round to win at Carnoustie in 1999.

That was against Jean Van de Velde. This is Rory McIlroy, who has won both his majors by eight shots.

"Two 66s from Rory is a bit special, but he is just that — he is a bit special," Graeme McDowell said. "So he's going to be tough to catch this weekend if he keeps that up."

McIlroy was at 12-under 204 — the same 36-hole score of Woods in 2006.

Dustin Johnson birdied the last two holes for a 65, the low score of the week. That ordinarily would put him in the last group with McIlroy, except they will have company in a historic decision at golf's oldest championship. Because of a nasty storm approaching England, the Open will go to threesomes teeing off on both sides Saturday.

Francesco Molinari (70) will join them. He was part of a large group at 6-under 210 that included Rickie Fowler (69), Sergio Garcia (70), Charl Schwartzel (67), Louis Oosthuizen (68) and Ryan Moore (68).

NATIONAL FOOTBALL LEAGUE

Preseason watch: New coaches, star rookies

BARRY WILNER
Associated Press

NEW YORK — It's time to climb out of the pool, put down that frosty drink, discard the shades and fire up the high-definition TV.

The NFL is back.

Some training camps open this weekend, and the first preseason game is Aug. 3, at the Pro Football Hall of Fame. If it seems like the Texans just ended the draft by taking Mr. Irrelevant (defensive back Lonnie Ballentine of Memphis), well, it was only two months ago.

Players, coaches and front office staffs got some down time, albeit less than in past years, and with the Bills and Giants headed to the Hall of Fame game, their break was even shorter.

"You've got to be very smart this time of year with how you're conducting yourself, what you're doing," Giants coach Tom Coughlin said. "You can never lose sight of the prize."

Certainly, a Vince Lombardi Trophy is hard to see through the haze of summertime heat and humidity. Even opening day is still a long way off, but the preseason will be here soon.

Here are some things to watch for during the NFL preseason:

MARK DUNCAN / AP

Cleveland quarterback Johnny Manziel runs the ball on June 11 during minicamp at the team's facility in Berea, Ohio. With LeBron James' return, Johnny Football might not be the top star in Cleveland, but Manziel will still get plenty of attention for what he does on and off the field this summer.

KEEPING COOL

While the 2011 collective bargaining agreement has placed limitations on the length and frequency of practices, Mother Nature doesn't care. From Berea, Ohio to Bourbonnais, Illinois, and from Renton, Washington to Richmond, Virginia, there is no hiding from the heat.

NFL teams have become more cognizant of that, and incidents of heat-related illnesses at training camps are rare. Thankfully, there has been nothing approaching the tragedy of Korey Stringer, who died of heat stroke in 2001.

"When athletes do intense exercise in the heat, the risk of exertional heat stroke is ever-present," says Dr. Douglas J. Casa, CEO of the Korey Stringer Institute at the University of Connecticut. " The NFL has taken some important strides to make players stay safe."

RULES CHANGES

A few alterations will be noticeable, and fans will have to look hard for the others.

Extra-point kicks in the first two exhibition games (three for the Bills and Giants) will come from the 15-yard line. Commissioner Roger Goodell has suggested that conversions need more excitement. But even from that distance, fewer than 10 percent of kicks fail.

The goalposts NFL kickers are trying to put the ball through will be extended another 5 feet in height, making it easier to judge what's good and what misses.

When there's a loose ball in the field of play, the recovery now can undergo video review. Also, when the referee uses review, there will be consultation with the league's officiating department in New York. The ref still has final say.

The clock won't stop momentarily after a sack outside of two minutes remaining in a half. And, to Saints tight end Jimmy Graham's chagrin, no more dunking over the crossbar to celebrate a touchdown.

ALREADY FAMOUS ROOKIES

With LeBron James' return, Johnny Football might not be the top star in Cleveland, but Manziel will still get plenty of attention for what he does on and off the field this summer.

Jadeveon Clowney, when he recovers from hernia surgery, will dominate the headlines in Houston. So much is expected of the top overall pick that if he doesn't look like a star in the preseason, the critics will be chirping.

Whether or not Michael Sam makes the Rams final roster, becoming the first openly gay player in the NFL, will remain a hot topic.

THE INJURY BUG

Long before the first whistle sounds in training camp, three premier linebackers are gone for 2014. Dallas lost Sean Lee to a torn ACL suffered during 11 on 11, non-contact drills. Buffalo's Kiko Alonso wrecked his knee while working out back home in Oregon. Atlanta's Sean Weatherspoon tore his Achilles' tendon while under the supervision of team trainers.

The one clear goal in training camp is to escape it without any major injuries.

"I think there is a fine line between making sure the team is ready to play the season, both from a contact standpoint and also from a health standpoint, so we'll keep a good gauge on that," said Texans coach Bill O'Brien.

NEW BOSSES

O'Brien is one of seven new head coaches in the league. His task might be the most difficult, taking a team that lost its final 14 games in 2013 and straightening it out. He's also got a potential holdout by his top veteran, receiver Andre Johnson.

Then again, all of the new coaches have mighty challenges, or else their new teams would not have made changes.

Jay Gruden is in Washington needing to find a way to keep QB Robert Griffin III healthy. Mike Zimmer can't be sure who he can rely on in Minnesota other than star running back Adrian Peterson.

Mike Pettine has the Johnny Football festival in Cleveland; Lovie Smith has a drastically altered roster in Tampa; and Jim Caldwell inherits a team in need of discipline in Detroit.

Ken Whisenhunt, who helped turn Arizona into a Super Bowl team, landed in Tennessee and might have the best shot at fast improvement if he can get the offense to click. That's his specialty.

Former players sue union over concussions

BARRY WILNER
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Former NFL players Christian Ballard and Gregory Westbrooks are suing the union for not providing accurate information about the risk of head injuries.

The lawsuit was filed Thursday in the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Missouri, with both claiming the NFL Players Association "withheld information from the players about the risks of head injuries."

The former players are seeking medical monitoring and financial compensation for long-term chronic injuries, financial losses, expenses and intangible losses. It refers to the "pathological and debilitating effects of traumatic brain injuries (TBI) caused by concussive and sub-concussive impacts."

Ballard and Westbrooks named former union presidents Trace Armstrong, Troy Vincent and Kevin Mawae in the suit.

"This lawsuit has no merit and we will defend our union and our past presidents," the NFLPA said in a statement. "It erroneously alleges that the NFLPA knowingly and fraudulently concealed from players the risks of head injuries players faced by playing in NFL games and practices over the last several decades.

"The NFLPA has made the health and safety of its members a priority and the advancements in professional football on concussion education, prevention and treatment are a result of our efforts."

Ballard, a defensive end in 2011 and 2012, left the Vikings last September. Coincidentally, he is being represented by the union in a grievance concerning about $240,000 in 2013 salary that he collected but the team is trying to recoup.

Westbrooks, now 61, played parts of seven seasons from 1975-81 as a linebacker and special teamer with four clubs.

Wiggins, Cleveland being hounded by Love trade rumors

JON KRAWCZYNSKI
Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — Andrew Wiggins came to summer league to get an early education on the NBA game, from playing against better competition to learning about what his new coach with the Cleveland Cavaliers will demand of him as a pro.

The 19-year-old Canadian is also receiving a crash course in the NBA rumor mill.

Since he arrived in Las Vegas and found out LeBron James was coming to Cleveland with him, Wiggins has heard his name brought up in possible trade scenarios as the Cavaliers pursue Minnesota All-Star Kevin Love. They continued on Thursday, with several outlets reporting that the Cavaliers have decided to make the No. 1 overall pick available, a prerequisite from the Timberwolves to get any deal for Love done.

But two people familiar with the situation told The Associated Press that the Cavaliers' position has remained unchanged and that no offer including Wiggins has been made to Minnesota. The people requested anonymity because neither team was publicly commenting on trade talks.

"Rumors are rumors. That's why they call them rumors," Cavs coach David Blatt said. "Sooner or later in one's career, you're going to have to deal with it. If he has to deal with it now, then so be it. It's summer league. He's learning everything as he goes along."

Wiggins scored 21 points in 31 minutes on Thursday night in a loss to the Houston Rockets. He showcased his superior athleticism by creating mismatches and getting to the free throw line at will, making 15 of 20 free throws and getting one jaw-dropping, chase-down block in transition.

Several fans made remarks during the game about the Cavaliers getting Love, but Wiggins was unfazed. He was unavailable to reporters after the game, but Blatt said he felt no need to talk to him about the speculation.

"What you've got to like about the kid is that it doesn't make a difference if it's the fourth game of summer league in seven or eight days, or if people are keying on him or the crowd has funny things to say to him," Blatt said. "He goes out there and really plays and has a nice calm about him and a real good demeanor. Andrew's going to be a high-level player. It's good to see."

The Cavaliers and Timberwolves have been engaged in discussions since before the draft for Love, who can opt out of his contract next summer. That stipulation gives Love tremendous influence on where he ends up, and he initially balked at joining a Cavaliers team that appeared to be in rebuilding mode after missing the playoffs and firing coach Mike Brown.

ALAN DIAZ / AP

Minnesota forward Kevin Love (42) works the ball against Miami center Chris Bosh (1) during a game in 2014 in Miami. Cleveland is reportedly considering including Andrew Wiggins, the top pick in this year's NBA Draft, in a trade package for Love.

That all changed when James decided last week to leave the Miami Heat and return to Cleveland, where the Akron native played for the first seven seasons of his career. James' signing changed Love's mind about going to Cleveland and the Cavaliers again started conversations with the Wolves.

General manager David Griffin, Blatt and owner Dan Gilbert have to this point refused to include Wiggins in any offer.

That has been a deal-breaker for the Wolves, who want Wiggins to headline any package that the Cavs would offer.

It's not known if James would prefer the Cavs to hold onto Wiggins in any deal for Love, his U.S. Olympic teammate. But what's certain is that the Cavaliers will take James' feelings into consideration before making any move. The four-time MVP is hugely influential, and his return to the Cavaliers has restored hope in a franchise that has been down and out since he left for Miami in 2010.

COLLEGE BASKETBALL

Pinson could bolster Tar Heels' perimeter defense

AARON BEARD
Associated Press

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — Theo Pinson knows how to guarantee himself a significant role as a freshman at North Carolina — play defense.

The 6-foot-6 swingman arrived this summer to help fill the Tar Heels' need for backcourt depth and bolster UNC's defense on the perimeter, where opponents blistered the Tar Heels in last season's final two games.

"You just have to worry about making the right play and playing defense at all times," Pinson said. "That's Basketball 101, basically."

Pinson joins fellow McDonald's All-Americans Joel Berry at point guard and swingman Justin Jackson in a touted recruiting class. All three will help replenish a perimeter that was shorthanded last year and leaned on rising junior Marcus Paige, an all-Atlantic Coast Conference player.

CHARLES REX ARBOGAST / AP

East All-American Theo Pinson, left, saves the ball from going out-of-bounds as West All-American Kelly Oubre defends on April 2 during the McDonald's All-American boy's basketball game in Chicago.

Pinson, who is from Greensboro and played at High Point's Wesleyan Christian Academy, was versatile enough to score, rebound and distribute in high school. He could provide a bigger jolt on the other end of the court at UNC.

Keith Gatlin, his high school coach and a former Maryland player, said Pinson defended point guards, shooting guards and small forwards at Wesleyan.

"You can't put him in a box and say he's a defensive player because he can handle it, he can pass it, he can shoot it — he can do so many things," Gatlin said. "Theo is a two-way player that likes to play both sides of the floor. The way Carolina likes to get up and down the floor, it suits him perfectly."

His mother, Barbara Pinson, described her son as a humble kid with "a special IQ for the game."

"If he sees you've run up and down the court a couple of times and hadn't touched the ball, he'll make a special effort to make sure you're involved, too," she said. "He has a good mindset to know when to make a play as well as try to make a play for other people."

During recruiting, Pinson said Indiana coach Tom Crean pointed out his potential to disrupt offenses by getting his hands in passing lanes for deflections that take opponents out of rhythm.

If that creates steals at UNC, it will ignite the break in coach Roy Williams' fast-paced attack.

"It can take time off the shot clock," Pinson said. "It can destroy a whole lot of stuff you don't even think about. ... You focus on stopping the man, but if you get the ball, they can't do nothing with it."

Paige has seen Pinson's potential during summer pickup games.

"He shows flashes of being really good defensively," he said. "He's really quick and athletic and can use his length ... We have a lot of guys that are rangy athletes and are capable of pressuring the ball. I think Theo's going to help us a lot in that regard."

Last year's Tar Heels never had eventual NBA first-round draft pick P.J. Hairston because of NCAA rule violations. Rising junior J.P. Tokoto took the lead defensively on the wing, but departed senior Leslie McDonald was never a stopper, while Paige and rising sophomore Nate Britt are only 6-1.

That limited the Tar Heels' options, which showed in their two NCAA tournament games. First they allowed a smaller guard in Providence's Bryce Cotton to score 36 points, then gave up 24 points to the bigger DeAndre Kane in the Iowa State loss two days later.

If Pinson can defend both kinds of players on the college level, it could help the Tar Heels make a deeper push in March.

"I'm not worried about going out there and trying to score 50 points, which I know won't happen," Pinson said. "If we win and win the national championship, which is my No. 1 goal coming into next year, we'll be all right. Everybody will get recognized."

Tour leader Nibali dominates Stage 13 in Alps

JAMEY KEATEN
Associated Press

CHAMROUSSE, France — Stamping his dominance in the mountains and on the race overall, Vincenzo Nibali won Stage 13 of the Tour de France in the Alps on Friday up the hardest climb so far.

The Italian race leader collected his third Tour stage win by overtaking two other breakaway riders at the end of a grueling 122-mile trek from Saint-Etienne to Chamrousse ski station.

With eight stages to the finish, Nibali's yellow jersey looks an ever more permanent part of his wardrobe. Since the race began, he has held the overall lead for all but two stages — winning three of the hardest climbing legs of the race this year.

It's looking increasingly likely that only a riding disaster will strip him of it.

The first of two days in the snow-capped mountains lived up to its billing as the daunting final ascent of 18 kilometers (12 miles) with an average 7.3 percent gradient shook up the overall standings.

The main casualty was Richie Porte. The Australian, who became Team Sky leader after 2013 champion Chris Froome crashed out in Stage 5, had begun second to Nibali overall but lost time on the final climb and finished nearly 9 minutes off the pace.

CHRISTOPHE ENA / AP

Vincenzo Nibali crosses the finish line to win Friday's 13th stage of the Tour de France cycling race over 122.7 miles with start in Saint-Etienne and finish in Chamrousse, France.

Nibali, who has been calm and savvy in this race, crossed the line alone and thrust his hands in the air after finishing 10 seconds ahead of Poland's Rafal Majka in second and Germany's Leopold Konig in third, one second further back. The trailing two were far back in the overall standings, and not in contention to win the three-week race.

More important to Nibali was increasing the gap on his rivals for victory on the Champs-Elysees on July 27. Spain's Alejandro Valverde fared relatively well by placing fourth — 50 seconds behind Nibali — and taking second overall from Porte. But he's now 3 1/2 minutes behind overall.

"Today, I essentially wanted to gain some seconds," Nibali said. "And by doing that, I won."

Porte's troubles also meant others climbed in the standings: France's Romain Bardet, countryman Thibaut Pinot, and American Tejay van Garderen each moved up a spot to third, fourth and fifth, respectively.

The stage was scorching, with temperatures well over 86 degrees — with the black tar on the recently resurfaced road to Chamrousse melting. Big crowds lined the route up to the finish, including fans dressed up as superheroes and one as a scantily-clad Borat — a wink to the Sacha Baron Cohen film character.

As riders embarked on the final climb, the pack was mostly together and Valverde's Movistar team was pushing the pace. But when it hit the steepest part, Porte struggled and dropped off the back and Nibali briefly turned his head to look. Valverde attacked a short while later, but Nibali and the others reeled him in.

After Konig, and then Malka raced ahead, the Italian leader struck — jumping out of his saddle and pedaling while standing in the upright riding position known in French as "la danseuse," or the dancer.

Nibali appeared to be taking a risk, notably that his hard effort to distance his rivals could come back to haunt him. By his own admission a day earlier, he said that he feared the second Alpine day more out of concern that his legs may be worn out if he pushed too hard.

Still, some of his rivals seem to be accepting that Nibali may win.

"Vincenzo is the strongest rider in the race, but after him, there is a place to take," Bardet said.

Today's 110-mile stage takes riders over three tough climbs from Grenoble to Risoul — including the Izoard pass that is one of the hardest under cycling's ranking system.

Hamilton fastest in 2nd practice for German GP

CIARAN FAHEY

HOCKENHEIM, Germany — Lewis Hamilton beat teammate Nico Rosberg to the fastest time in the second practice session at the German Grand Prix as Mercedes set the pace on Friday.

Hamilton completed his best lap on the Hockenheimring in 1 minute, 18.341 seconds, edging Rosberg by 0.024 seconds.

"A pretty good day today," Hamilton said.

Rosberg had been leading but he went off track on the second turn and his teammate then topped the leaderboard on supersoft tires for the first time.

Red Bull's Daniel Ricciardo was third, 0.078 behind Rosberg, followed by Ferrari's Kimi Raikkonen and McLaren's Kevin Magnussen.

"It's tomorrow when we'll see how close we really are," Ricciardo said of his team's challenge. "I think we had a good car today and we extracted pretty much everything we could out of the practice."

Felipe Massa of Williams and Jensen Button of McLaren were sixth and seventh, respectively, followed by Red Bull's Sebastian Vettel, Ferrari's Fernando Alonso, Williams' Valtteri Bottas, Sauber's Adrian Sutil, and Toro Rosso's Daniil Kvyat, who was within half a second of Raikkonen in fourth.

Track temperatures hit an astonishing 136 degrees at one stage during the afternoon session. Rosberg's brakes were smoking as he waited for Hamilton's tires to be changed.

"We had a bit of a situation in the pit lane when my teammate came in suddenly just before I was called in too," Rosberg said. "But the boys reacted quickly and cooled my car and brought his tires out."

The forecast is for more of the same temperatures on Saturday, while rain and summer storms could arrive on Sunday.

PETR DAVID JOSEK / AP

Mercedes driver Lewis Hamilton gets pit service during Friday's free practice session at the German Formula One Grand Prix in Hockenheim, Germany. The German Grand Prix will be held on Sunday.

"The heat was a challenge, particularly in the car, but that's how I like it," Hamilton said. "We need to analyze as much as we can tonight."

Mercedes also finished 1-2 in the opening practice, with Rosberg beating Hamilton by 0.065.

Rosberg leads his British teammate by just four points going into Sunday's race at the halfway stage of the season.

Red Bull is not far off the pace, however. Both Ricciardo and Vettel posted very similar lap times to Hamilton on their respective longer runs in the afternoon.

"I think we are maybe a bit closer than previous weekends, but it is close between us, Ferrari and Williams as well," Vettel said.

Caterham endured a frustrating afternoon. Marcus Ericsson stopped on the track early in the session before teammate Kamui Kobayashi had to pull up with smoke coming from his bodywork.

Kobayashi jumped out of the cockpit and ran across the track for an extinguisher, before running back to put out the fire with the aid of marshals.

"It looks like it was a fuel leak that started the fire but we need more time tonight to find out exactly why that happened and then fix it," Kobayashi said. The Japanese driver reported problems with his brakes before that.

Earlier, turns 1 and 8 proved the most problematic on a morning of minor errors. Alonso was among a number of drivers to run off the track at the eighth turn.

"Today, we concentrated on setup to try and adapt to the temperatures, which are going to be extremely high all weekend. I had no problems with either the soft or supersoft compounds," the Spaniard said.

The drivers had to adjust to the removal of the front and rear interconnected suspension from their cars after FIA said the system could be illegal. All teams opted to remove the system rather than run the risk of docked points.

Hendrick and Penske headed for tight Sprint Cup title fight

JENNA FRYER
Associated Press

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Hendrick Motorsports seems to have the edge, at least on paper, in the race with Team Penske for the top organization in NASCAR.

Hendrick has three drivers ranked in the top five of the Sprint Cup Series standings, and Jeff Gordon has been the points leader for 12 of the last 13 races. Combined, Hendrick drivers have six victories this season.

Team Penske has both its drivers in the top nine in points, with Brad Keselowski charging hard after Gordon's lead. Keselowski's victory last week at New Hampshire was his third of the season, tying him for the most in the series with Jimmie Johnson.

With only seven races until the Chase for the Sprint Cup championship begins, it's shaping up to be a Hendrick vs. Penske battle for the title.

"You've got the Ford versus Chevy, and both organizations seem to be on top of their game right now," Gordon said. "To me, there's that competitive rivalry that we have among all our competitors, and when one rises to the top, then they put a target on their back and you go after it, and you have that sort of rivalry."

But Gordon doesn't want to be drawn into a personal rivalry with the Penske organization or drivers Keselowski and Joey Logano.

"There's been a little bit here and there, but you know, I think Brad certainly doesn't mind a little controversy and stirring it up as we've seen social media wise and just in the media," Gordon said. "For us, it's just going about our business trying to be the best that we possibly can, and those guys seem to be the teams to beat right now.

"If there's any rivalry, it's just that we're working hard to go out there and be the most competitive team out there," he added.

Keselowski has indeed been vocal about Penske's pursuit of the Hendrick team. He felt Penske had taken huge strides toward the top in 2012 when Keselowski beat Johnson for the championship, but has complained through 2013 and this year that it's a challenge to keep up with the Hendrick organization.

Now that Keselowski and Logano are winning and seem to be the most consistent qualifiers, Keselowski was asked if Penske is in the same position as 2012.

IT'S A BOY

Kyle Larson announced he'll be a first-time father last month, and now the Sprint Cup Series rookie knows he's having a boy.

Larson and girlfriend Katelyn Sweet learned the sex of the baby on Tuesday night during a gender reveal party. The two then shared the news with fans on social media, with Sweet posting photos of her and Larson, who was wearing a blue shirt and pink shorts, holding up a sign that declared "It's a Boy."

Church of England's national assembly votes to allow women bishops

MATTHEW KNIGHT
Associated Press

The Church of England ended one of its longest and most divisive disputes Monday with an overwhelming vote in favor of allowing women to become bishops.

The church's national assembly, known as the General Synod, voted for the historic measure, reaching the required two-thirds majority in each of its three different houses. In total, 351 members of the three houses approved of the move. Only 72 voted against and 10 abstained.

Archbishop of Canterbury Justin Welby said the long-awaited change marks the completion of a process that started more than 20 years ago with the ordination of women as priests. He called for tolerance and love for those traditionalists who disagree with the decision.

The church's national assembly, known as the General Synod, voted for the historic measure, reaching the required two-thirds majority in each of its three different houses. In total, 351 members of the three houses approved of the move. Only 72 voted against and 10 abstained.

"As delighted as I am for the outcome of this vote I am also mindful of whose within the church for whom the result will be difficult and a cause of sorrow," he said in a statement.

British Prime Minister David Cameron called it a "great day for the Church and for equality."

Opponents argued that allowing women into such a senior position in the church goes against the Bible. Others warned that the church should not be guided by secular ethics.

Lay member Lorna Ashworth, who did not support the move, said the church has entered new territory. "This is something we have to work out as we go along," she said.

GROVELAND

New Baptist pastor here for long haul

RICK REED
Special to the Daily Commercial

When Billy Stephens grabbed the baton from Interim Pastor Phil Messinger on June 1, it symbolized that he was the new pastor of the First Baptist Church in Groveland.

Messinger had been preaching from Hebrews 12 and running the race with endurance.

"I grabbed the baton and preached the rest of the message," said Stephens. "But I said it's not just my role, it's all of us. Everyone has a job to do."

STEPHENS

He compared it to a relay race, where every runner is important, especially when passing the baton.

"I said this is our time. He's given us this window in this town and this community," Stephens said. "We can't afford to miss our exchange zone."

But Stephens almost missed his.

"I did not want to come here," he said. "We talked twice and I said no. I think I said no based on what I wanted."

His mind was changed in December.

"I had a providential appointment," he said.

Stephens was attending a wedding when he met a man from the search committee of the Groveland church. They had been talking to someone else but the position was still open, so the church called Stephens back one more time.

"I'm always open to what the Lord wants," he said. "I told them, 'I don't ever, ever want to move again.' I believe the vision given to me here is long term, not just five years or 10 years. I would love to stay here and help people get to know God. I want people to come and grow with us."

It's OK to need reassurance from Jesus, Peter did

RICK REED
REFLECTIONS

Last week I used John's account of Jesus' first appearance to Mary Magdalene after the Resurrection.

Jesus told Mary not to cling to him because he hadn't ascended to God yet. He also told Mary to tell his brothers that he was ascending to the Father. I like John's version because he wrote of Mary clinging to Jesus, something we should all do naturally.

Mark's version is a little different. Instead of Jesus, it was an angel who gives Mary Magdalene Jesus' message to tell the disciples, and a few verses later Jesus appears to her.

See if you can find the two words in this verse that caused me to stop and study this Scripture.

"But go, tell his disciples and Peter that he is going before you to Galilee," said the angel. "There you will see him, just as he told you."

I don't know how many times I passed over those words until I read something by Max Lucado which pointed out "and Peter."

Stop and think about it. Why was Peter singled out? Was it because he was one of the leaders? If so, why wasn't John also highlighted?

The study portion of my Bible suggests the "and" may be emphatic, meaning "tell his disciples — even Peter."

Why Peter? Because Peter needed to be reassured that Jesus still loved him, even after his denial.

When we are at our lowest, when our need for Jesus is its greatest, we need to be reassured we haven't been forgotten or neglected.

While those times are difficult, our lows also highlight the greatness of Jesus' love for us. Need proof? Read Romans 5:10-11: "For if while we were enemies we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, now that we are reconciled, shall we be saved by his life. More than that, we also rejoice in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, through whom we have now received reconciliation."

And look at Romans 8:31-32: "What then shall we say to these things? If God is for us, who can be against us? He who did not spare his own Son but gave him up for us all, how will he not also with him graciously give us all things?"

Even Peter.

Even you.

Even me.

Peter blew it big time. He denied Jesus, again and again.

But Jesus forgave Peter and he made sure Peter knew it.

Even after seeing Jesus resurrected, Peter was under a dark cloud of hopelessness. Feeling unfit for God's work, Peter went back to what he knew — fishing. And he took six of the Apostles with him.

Peter must have felt even worse when their night of fishing produced nothing but blisters and empty nets.

Woman sues Kansas City diocese over firing

RACHEL ZOLL
AP Religion Writer

A parish food pantry worker who was fired over her marriage to another woman sued the Diocese of Kansas City-St. Joseph on Thursday, the latest in a growing number of clashes over gay rights between Roman Catholic leaders and their employees nationwide.

Colleen Simon, 57, said the diocese and the parish where she worked knew she was married and that her wife was a well-known community leader before Simon was hired. She was fired when the couple was mentioned last April in a newspaper article.

"I was mostly shell-shocked," Simon said. "I hadn't thought it would come to this."

Diocesan officials hadn't yet seen the lawsuit, but said in a statement, "As a church, we have the right to live and operate according to our faith and church teachings."

New Ways Ministry, a Catholic gay rights group, has found more than 15 cases since 2010 of U.S. teachers, school administrators or parish musicians who lost jobs or resigned after expressing support for gay marriage or going public with their own same-sex relationships. Several of the former employees have sued.

Colleen Simon fills an order for a family of seven at the food pantry of St. Francis Xavier in Kansas City, Mo. Colleen, who was fired over her marriage to another woman, sued the Diocese of Kansas City-St. Joseph on Thursday.

Dioceses in Cincinnati and Columbus, Ohio; Honolulu; Oakland, California, and elsewhere have added morals clauses to their teacher contracts barring public support for gay rights. Other dioceses have asked volunteer educators to sign pledges on upholding church teaching.

The Missouri lawsuit was filed Thursday by Colleen Simon, who said she worked as a parish bookkeeper in the diocese before she was hired in 2013 as a food pantry coordinator at St. Francis Xavier Church. In each step of the hiring process, she said she told administrators she had married a woman a year earlier in Iowa, where gay marriage is recognized, and diocesan and parish representatives said her marital status would not be a problem.

Simon's wife, the Rev. Donna Simon, is a pastor at a Kansas City congregation affiliated with the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America. Colleen Simon said she underscored her wife's public role in case the Jesuit parish had expectations the couple would be "discrete" about their marriage.

When a new priest was assigned to the church, Simon said she told the new pastor she was in a same-sex marriage. Then, the Simons were mentioned in a news article about the redevelopment of their neighborhood, accompanied by a photo of Colleen Simon working at the food pantry.

Kentucky to license pastoral counselors

Associated Press

ST. MATTHEWS, Ky. — Kentucky is set to become the sixth state to license pastoral counselors to help people with issues such as marital difficulties, addictions and depression.

A law allowing the licensing goes into effect Tuesday and is expected to cover about 30 pastors who also work as mental and behavioral health counselors across the state. They will be called Kentucky licensed pastoral counselors, and their work will be covered by insurance policies for those who desire faith-based mental health services.

The other states licensing pastoral counselors are Arkansas, Maine, New Hampshire, North Carolina and Tennessee.

The legislation, Senate Bill 61, and more than 100 other new laws approved by state lawmakers and Gov. Steve Beshear take effect Tuesday.

For Glenn. D. Williams of St. Matthews, who is chair of the Kentucky Association of Pastoral Counselors and works at St. Matthews Pastoral Counseling in Jefferson County, the new law would help increase the number of mental health providers in Kentucky and provide wage increases for them.

Though he is labeled a faith-based counselor, Williams said his clients included agnostics, atheists and people of different religions. He said it was not his intention to get his clients to join St. Matthews Baptist Church, which provides space for the counseling offices and funding for low-income clients.

"I have never had that conversation with a client," he said.

Immigrant rights group loses grant over gay marriage stance

GOSIA WOZNIACKLISA LEFF
Associated Press

PORTLAND, Ore. — A Catholic organization has decided to cut off long-standing funding to a Portland immigrant rights group that works with day laborers over its affiliation with an organization that supports same-sex marriage.

Voz Workers' Rights Education lost a $75,000 grant in June from the Catholic Campaign for Human Development, which is the national anti-poverty, social justice program of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops.

Catholic Campaign director Ralph McCloud said the group asked Voz to cut ties with the National Council of La Raza, a large Latino civil rights organization that endorses marriage equality, to be considered for the grant. Voz has been an affiliate of NCLR since 2009, primarily as a grantee.

"It's certainly difficult and painful, because Voz has done some tremendous work. But it became obvious that they were assisting in something that was contrary to the teachings of our traditions. And we have to honor our donors' intent that this money be spent on issues that are not contrary to the teachings of the Catholic Church."

Ralph McCloud, Catholic Campaign director

After Voz refused to cut its ties, the organization "self-disqualified" itself from the funding process, McCloud said.

In June, the bishops approved more than $14 million in grants to 205 organizations. The bishops had supported Voz since 1994, via 10 grants, McCloud said.

"It's certainly difficult and painful, because Voz has done some tremendous work," McCloud said. "But it became obvious that they were assisting in something that was contrary to the teachings of our traditions. And we have to honor our donors' intent that this money be spent on issues that are not contrary to the teachings of the Catholic Church."

Voz is not the first nonprofit to lose church funding because of ties to organizations that endorse same-sex marriage.

A coalition of conservative Catholic groups led by the American Life League has criticized what it sees as lax administration by the Catholic Campaign and has been working since 2009 to call attention to CCHD grantees with activities, positions or affiliations with other nonprofits that contradict Church teachings on abortion, contraception and gay rights.

REED

But Jesus was there to reach out to Peter and restore him.

Jesus told them where to cast their net and they pulled up such a great haul their nets were near breaking. Peter apparently didn't remember their first miraculous catch, the day Jesus told him and the others they would be fishers of men.

Then Peter started to get it. He jumped out of the boat and went to Jesus.

It still took Jesus telling Peter to feed and care for his sheep three times. And once more he told Peter to follow him.

Peter still didn't fully understand, but when the day of Pentecost came and the disciples were filled with the Spirit, it was Peter who preached the first Gospel.

Peter still had his moments and Paul needed to admonish him for shunning the Gentiles at meal time. But Peter continued growing in God's love and forgiveness and he lived his life for Jesus. Tradition tells us he was crucified upside down because he wasn't worthy to die as Jesus did.

Peter got it.

He gave his life.

Even you can. And even me.

diverse religious groups from conservative evangelicals to supporters of gay marriage. Major changes can take years, even decades to bring about.

Two years ago similar legislation narrowly failed to reach the two-thirds majority with lay members, despite the approval from bishops and clergy.

After that vote failed, the church worked to build trust with its lay members, who lagged behind church leaders on the question of female bishops, and make the legislation more acceptable to opponents.

At the same time the church came under increasing pressure from the outside to reform in favor of women. Some of those who changed their vote this time around said they did not want to block changes the majority was happy with.

Monday's vote marks the latest advance of women in the church hierarchy.

The General Synod ruled in 1975 there was no fundamental objection to women becoming priests, but it took nearly two decades for the first women to be ordained.

Things are likely to move faster for aspiring female bishops. Welby told the BBC he expects the first woman bishop in the Church of England by next year.

He was less sure when asked if there will be a female Archbishop of Canterbury in his lifetime: "I've no idea. I'd be delighted if I did."

He came to Groveland from First Baptist Church in High Springs, where he served for more than eight years. He spent seven years as the youth pastor and the past year and a half as an associate pastor.

"I would have been glad to stay there for the long haul," said Stephens. "I love teenagers. They're passionate, moldable. But God began working in my heart and giving me a new vision."

That was almost four years ago.

"I had a desire to lead a church and I've patiently waited three or four years now since He called me," said Stephens. "God gave me a very specific vision and message.

"Our mission is to love, grow and go. I want to do it together."

The two greatest commands, said Stephens, are to love God and love man, in that order.

"Then we will grow together, grow in faith and want to go and make disciples," he added. "I see a lot of people and Clermont spreading this way. And lot of potential."

Stephens left a church much larger than the one in Groveland. But that excites him.

"When I look at it, all I can see is potential and people ready to go," he said. "This church full of incredible people with an incredible message do what God wants us to do."

Stephens, 40, grew up in Starke and attended Bradford High School. He served in the U.S. Navy from 1992-96.

"I got out not knowing what I wanted to do," he said.

He married his wife Dede in 1997 and began college the next year, thinking about becoming an electrical engineer.

But God had other ideas.

"God saved me in 1998 and, in that moment, God began to develop me and preparing me for what He had for me," said Stephens.

One day in 2000, while still a young Christian, the pastor at Stephens' church asked him to preach. It wasn't something he really had thought about doing. But he preached his first sermon that December.

"And by June 1, I was full time," he said. "By then I changed my schooling and started attending Baptist College of Florida, eventually getting a master's degree from Liberty Theological Seminary."

His first full-time ministry position was as a youth pastor in Union County for more than five years. Then he was called to High Springs in the Gainesville area.

He moved his wife and four boys to Groveland this spring.

"It was chaos moving when we did," he said. "But it was also a transition time."

One son will be a freshman at South Lake High School, another will begin middle school and a third will begin elementary school. His 8-week-old will remain at home.

"I feel blessed and privileged to be here at this time," Stephens said. "It's been a good ride so far."

Obama opens Eastern Seaboard to oil exploration

JASON DEAREN
Associated Press

ST. AUGUSTINE BEACH — The Obama administration is reopening the Eastern Seaboard to offshore oil and gas exploration, announcing final approval Friday of sonic cannons that can pinpoint energy deposits deep beneath the ocean floor.

The decision promises to create plenty of jobs and thrills the oil industry, but dismays environmentalists worried about the immediate impact as well as the long-term implications of oil development.

The cannons fill waters shared by whales and turtles with sound waves 100 times louder than a jet engine. Saving endangered species was the environmental groups' best hope of extending a ban against offshore drilling off the U.S. Atlantic coast.

The U.S. Bureau of Ocean Energy Management disclosed its final approval first to The Associated Press ahead of an announcement later Friday.

A group of people watch a turtle swim to the ocean after rehabilitation on April 22 in Jacksonville The Obama Administration is opening the Eastern Seaboard to offshore oil exploration for the first time in decades.

The approval opens the outer continental shelf from Delaware to Florida to exploration by energy companies preparing to apply for drilling leases in 2018, when current congressional limits are set to expire. The bureau is moving ahead despite acknowledging that thousands of sea creatures will be harmed.

"The bureau's decision reflects a carefully analyzed and balanced approach that will allow us to increase our understanding of potential offshore resources while protecting the human, marine, and coastal environments," acting BOEM Director Walter Cruickshank said in a statement.

These sonic cannons are already in use in the western Gulf of Mexico, off Alaska and other offshore oil operations around the world. They are towed behind boats, sending strong pulses of sound into the ocean every 10 seconds or so. The pulses reverberate beneath the sea floor and bounce back to the surface, where they are measured by hydrophones. Computers then translate the data into high resolution, three-dimensional images.

"It's like a sonogram of the Earth," said Andy Radford, a petroleum engineer at the American Petroleum Institute, an oil and gas trade association in Washington DC. "You can't see the oil and gas, but you can see the structures in the earth that might hold oil and gas."

The surveys can have other benefits, including mapping habitats for marine life, identifying solid undersea flooring for wind energy turbines, and locating spots where sand can be collected for beach restoration. But fossil fuel mostly funds this research, which produces data held as energy company secrets and disclosed only to the government.

"They paid for it, so I can see why they don't want to share. These things are not cheap," said John Jaeger, a University of Florida geology professor.

Amazon rolls out service that gives users unlimited reading

MAE ANDERSON
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Amazon is rolling out a new subscription service that will allow unlimited access to thousands of electronic books and audiobooks for $9.99 a month in the online giant's latest effort to attract more users.

The largest U.S. e-commerce site said Friday that the Kindle Unlimited service will give users the ability to read as much as they want from more than 600,000 Kindle titles such as "The Hunger Games" and "Diary of a Wimpy Kid." They can also listen as much as they like to thousands of Audible audiobooks, including "Water for Elephants."

The service will offer about 2,000 audiobooks from Audible with Whispersync for Voice, which lets users switch between reading and listening to books. Subscribers will get a free three-month membership to the broader Audible service, which has 150,000 titles.

Tthe 8.9-inch Amazon Kindle HDX tablet computer is held up for a photo in Seattle.

Amazon is offering a free 30-day trial to entice users to try the service. The move is a switch from Amazon's latest efforts, which have largely focused on adding services to its Prime loyalty program. The company has recently launched a video streaming box and grocery delivery service, unveiled plans for a smartphone and expanded its Sunday delivery service, all for members of Prime. But Kindle Unlimited is for anyone with a Kindle device or app.

Americans have a growing appetite for e-books. In the U.S., 79 million people will use e-book readers in 2014, up nearly 9 percent from 72 million in 2013, according to eMarketer. People age 45 to 54 are the biggest readers of e-books this year.

Amazon's move comes at an uneasy time for the company and its relationship with publishers, because it has been in a public squabble with Hachette over e-book prices. Amazon did not disclose the terms it worked out with publishers who are part of Kindle Unlimited.

Gauge of US economy rises 0.3 percent in June

MARTIN CRUTSINGER
AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON — A gauge designed to predict the economy's future health increased in June for a fifth consecutive month, supporting the view that economic growth should accelerate in the second half of this year.

The Conference Board said Friday its index of leading indicators rose 0.3 percent last month. That was slightly lower than forecast but the May increase was revised up to a 0.7 percent gain, a bit stronger than first estimated.

The economy shrank sharply in the first three months of the year, reflecting the effects of a harsh winter, but economists say a rebound began in the April-June quarter and will strengthen in the second half of this year.

Conference Board economist Ken Goldstein said that stronger consumer demand driven by sustained job gains remained "the main source of improvement for the U.S. economy."

The unemployment rate fell to a nearly six-year low of 6.1 percent in June as employers added 288,000 new jobs, marking the fifth straight monthly gain above 200,000. That is the best stretch of job growth since the tech boom of the late 1990s.

A second report Friday showed that the University of Michigan's measure of consumer confidence dipped slightly in July to a preliminary reading of 81.3, down from 82.5 in June.

Paul Diggle, U.S. economist at Capital Economics, attributed the small decline to higher gasoline prices which he said offset the strong gains recorded in the stock market and solid growth in employment.

The leading economic index is composed of 10 forward-pointing indicators. For June, six of the 10 indicators showed gains with the positive contributions including interest rates, credit availability and stock prices. The biggest drag on the index was a fall in applications for permits to build new homes and apartments.

US stocks mount strong rebound on company earnings

ALEX VEIGA
Associated Press

Investors jumped on a wave of strong corporate financial results Friday, propelling stocks higher for the third time in five days.

The gains wiped out much of the market's losses from the day before, when the downing of a Malaysian Airlines passenger jet in eastern Ukraine stirred concerns that tensions between Russia and the West could escalate. Israel's launch of a ground offensive into Gaza also stoked geopolitical uncertainty.

Those worries appeared to ease Friday, as world leaders called for an immediate ceasefire in the region and international attention turned toward the task of determining what led to the aircraft being shot down. Investors turned their attention to the latest encouraging company earnings.

"Typically when these events hit the news, it's kind of a sell-now, ask-questions-later moment, and then there is a reassessment, and that's exactly what we had," said Quincy Krosby, market strategist at Prudential Financial. "Today, the market focused again on earnings, which for the most part were good, surprising to the upside, and the markets just basically got back to their normal business."

Signs of a rebound appeared early. The major stock indexes edged higher in premarket trading and demand for bonds waned, sending the yield on the 10-year Treasury note lower. Gold and oil prices also declined.

Strong earnings from several companies kept the market in positive territory after it opened. Investors drove up shares in Google, Honeywell International, furniture company Knoll and Huntington Banchsares, among others.

The Conference Board's latest index of leading indicators, designed to predict the economy's trajectory, stoked the market further. The index climbed in June for the fifth consecutive month. At the same time, investors brushed off a preliminary report showing consumer confidence dipped slightly.

The market built steadily on its gains throughout the day, reversing nearly all of the prior day's losses and putting all three major U.S. indexes into the green for the week.

The Standard & Poor's 500 index added 20.10 points, or 1 percent, to 1,978.22. The Dow rose 123.37 points, or 0.7 percent, to 17,100.18. The Nasdaq composite gained 68.70 points, or 1.6 percent, to 4,432.15.

The three major indexes remain ahead for the year.

Bond prices fell. The yield on the 10-year Treasury note rose to 2.48 percent from 2.45 percent late Thursday.

All 10 sectors in the S&P 500 rose, led by health care. The sector is up 10.6 percent this year.

Sweeping changes

Microsoft reports fiscal fourth-quarter earnings Tuesday.

The financial results come just days after the software company announced plans to slash 18,000 jobs, the biggest layoffs in its 39-year history. The move puts the company on track to save $600 million in annual costs within 18 months after the closing of its acquisition of Nokia's mobile-device unit.

Flying higher?

Wall Street predicts that Delta Air Lines' earnings and revenue improved in the second quarter.

The company, due to report its latest quarterly financial results Wednesday, has been making more money by filling more seats on its planes and paying a bit less for fuel. Like other airlines, Delta also has benefited from higher fares and extra fees. Investors will be listening for an update on the airline's outlook for bookings the rest of the year.

Housing monitor

U.S. sales of new homes increased in April and May after a slow start to the year.

Sales vaulted 18.6 percent in May to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 504,000, the highest level in six years. That followed a 3.7 percent increase in April. Economists anticipate that pace didn't hold in June, however. They expect that the Commerce Department will report Thursday that sales of new homes slowed last month.

Church garden project cultivates beds, beauty and community

MOZES ZARATE

Patrick Powers held up three or four carrots he'd just pulled out of the soil. Before he started gardening, numerous people or things might have touched those carrots before they reached his mouth: farmers, farmworkers, pesticides, food handlers, grocers – all part of a system of efficient food-processing that he had some familiarity with working in the restaurant industry for 35 years.

Now, it's straight from the ground to his plate, a feeling he says he can't describe.

"It's fun being a farmer," he said.

Patrick rents a plot for $40 a year at Redeemer's Field, a year-old community garden on land owned by the Lutheran Church of Our Redeemer in Sacramento, Calif.

The project, which broke ground in March of last year, transformed an empty church lot into a source of healthful and affordable food for community members.

The value of a community garden is clear, said Bill Maynard, who has helped build community gardens around Sacramento for 20 years and works as the community garden coordinator for Sacramento's Department of Parks and Recreation.

"It's about bringing the community in and showing they have worth," he said. Maynard advised the church throughout the construction process, from planning to financing and connecting the church with volunteers.

At Redeemer's Field, there are 20 occupied beds growing anything and everything, from bulbous watermelon and heirloom tomatoes to cinnamon basil and zucchini squash. Red grapevines hug one side of a bordering chain link fence, and a line of burgeoning fruit trees welcomes visitors near the entrance gate, open at all hours of the day. At the center lies a bed of proud sunflowers raised by a member who lives in an apartment across the street.

The garden's construction required many hands, including non-church members, neighbors and community service

One of the most frequent questions I'm asked is, "What color paint should I use?" I have never understood why so many people are intimidated by color. Maybe it's because we all see color differently. Over the years I've tried to take some of the mystery out of color for my clients and viewers. Once you get it, using color is fun and not scary at all.

Start with a color palette. Each room in your home should flow from space to space. That doesn't mean you can't use color; it just means you need to think about where that color is going to be used and, most importantly, in which tone. That's what color selecting is all about. A shade is just a lighter or darker version of a color. That isn't the same as tone.

We've all tried to match one shade of beige to another shade of beige without success. Some beiges look pink, others more tan. That's because every color has undertones. Whites can be tinted with grays, browns, black. It's that undertone that gives a color warm or cool tones. Start by picking your base color. It has to have a tone that matches the furniture, rugs

Brave new gardening for brave new climates

Ripping out the front lawn and its bordering rhododendrons and replacing them with a landscape of native grasses, groundcovers, succulents and rocks once seemed an unfathomable act of defiance. No longer.

As many parts of the United States grapple with drought and rising water bills, "The thought of an English garden in the Central Valley of California is sheer madness. It wasn't meant to be, and it's sucking up precious groundwater we need for agriculture," said Ann Savageau, a design professor at the University of California at Davis, who recently traded in her lush green lawns for a desert look.

Instead of scoffing, neighbors stopped to ask her landscaper for his business card. Other California towns, including Sacramento and Menlo Park, have begun offering rebates to homeowners who remove their lawns.

Gardeners nationwide are feeling the effects of climate change. In the East, and other areas where heavy downpours have become more intense, a sustainable garden might include native grasses and other plants that do well in heavy rain and the dry weather that can follow.

"Awareness is changing in a way that is here to stay," said Brian Sullivan, a vice president for landscapes at The New York Botanical Garden. "Yard by yard, region by region, the overall environmental impact of this trend, which I think is very positive, is substantial."

Mowing and watering a traditional lawn requires a lot of time, money, water and fertilizers. Increasingly, many home gardeners want to focus instead on edible gardens, and rethink the

Ideas for cooking up a color-happy kitchen

KIM COOK
Associated Press

Kitchens in traditional and vintage homes often are dressed in conservative garb: neutral hues, stainless steel, white-on-white or beige-on-beige.

Historically, however, kitchens were actually pretty peppy, according to Deborah Baldwin, editor of This Old House magazine.

"Pastel greens, blues, creams and peaches reigned until the early 1930s, when casual, built-in eating areas were painted Kelly green, red and even black," she says.

"We have readers who are introducing brightly colored cabinets and appliances in tomato, pumpkin and daisy," she adds.

At this spring's Architectural Digest Home Design Show in New York, manufacturers were showing lots of vibrantly hued kitchen equipment.

Bertazzoni's Arancio range came in orange, burgundy and yellow. Big Chill displayed a wall full of paint-box hues including jadite (a milky green), cherry and pink. AGA's Signature line of beefy, professional-grade ranges comes in intriguing colors like aubergine, duck-egg blue, heather, pistachio, claret and British racing green.

HGTV / AP

Designer and host of HGTV's Great Rooms, Meg Caswell, painted the walls red then added a clear glass cover to create a chic, vibrant backsplash.

(www.bertazzoni.com; www.bigchill.com; www.aga-ranges.com)

Fans of metallics might go for Blue Star's dramatic collection of ranges, wall ovens and hoods in copper, gold and a chocolate-y ginger, as well as several hundred other colors and finishes. (www.bluestarcooking.com)

Kitchens of any vintage can look great with colorful walls. Pumpkin, cobalt and deep Prussian blue enhance all kinds of woods, whether you're working with 19th century pine, Craftsman-era oak or midcentury walnut.

Or consider the ceiling. In a small galley kitchen, bold color on the ceiling creates a "jewel box" effect. Deep hues like eggplant, navy, magenta or carmine compliment white cabinetry in a large kitchen, and look great in both natural and artificial light.

New York designer Gideon Mendelson applied a pea-green gingham canvas cloth to the ceiling of a country house kitchen, and painted the island in a similar shade. With a collection of vintage baskets displayed along the tops of snowy wood cabinetry, the vibe is relaxed, fresh and contemporary. (www.mendelsongroupinc.com)

Meg Caswell, a designer and host on HGTV's "Great Rooms," loves to add color to kitchens. She used a backsplash of crisp, blue and green fused-glass tiles as a counterpoint to a rustic, Old World-style metal and wood kitchen island, glossy black cabinetry and citrine wallpaper in an Art Deco-era home. In another home, she mixed sleek teal-and-white glass with farmhouse blue cabinets. (www.megcaswell.com; www.hgtv.com)

Baldwin, of This Old House, advises painting upper and base cabinets different colors, or painting an island or hutch in a contrasting shade.

"This helps reinforce their freestanding furniture look, which harks back to 18th- and 19th-century kitchens," she says. (www.thisoldhouse.com)

"Painting the floor — either one color or in a pattern like checkerboard — can reinforce the vintage look too," she notes. Options include graphic designs or stencils, or illustrated rug motifs. Better Homes & Gardens' website has lots of ideas. (www.bhg.com/kitchen) and accessories that you will be using in that space. No one can afford to start from scratch, so we have to work with what we have.

If you're in a rental with limited decorating options, go for color accents like Fiesta ware, rag rugs, a couple of snazzy stools, and counter appliances in candy hues.

I've been using the same tone base color for my house for over 30 years; a warm soft gold for the walls and creamy white for the woodwork. I've changed the shade of gold and white but never the tone. Before I paint a room blue (or any color), I make sure it works with my base color. That allows me to move my furniture and accessories from room to room because I know they will all match. The gold armchair in my living room is the same tone of gold as the sisal rug that I have in my bedroom, just 2 shades darker. So if I decide to move the chair from the living room to the bedroom, it still matches because they both match my base color.

In my new house, I painted the walls and ceilings in my common spaces with Sherwin Williams Creamy. The woodwork is Pure White. But I used lots of color throughout the rest of the house: The master bedroom in Tidewater blue, another in Repose Gray, an office in Tricorn black, and the laundry room in Crystal Clear aqua with a Lily (pale yellow) ceiling — all Sherwin Williams colors. It all works beautifully together and flows from room to room, because the undertones are right on. These seven colors are my color palette. Nothing comes into my house if it doesn't match this palette.

organizations such as AmeriCorps to till the soil, pave walkways and build wooden box plots. With much of the work done, the project is still expanding: A picnic bench area is planned to give visitors a proper place to sit.

The farm-to-fork movement isn't central to the mission of the church, which has held services at the site for 60 years, said Lisa Mulz, a member of the congregation who helped build the garden.

It's more about addressing hunger in the area. A half-mile west of the garden is one of 22 Sacramento "food deserts," neighborhoods whose residents have little access to healthful and affordable food.

Most garden members live in a ZIP code where nearly one-quarter of residents live below the poverty line, according to a 2012 American Community Survey of the U.S. Census Bureau. The median household income is 35 percent lower than the state average, and around half the residents rent apartments and don't have the space to grow their own food.

LEZLIE STERLING / MCT

Sue Lomolino tends to her garden plots along with her dog Molly at Redeemer's Field located on the property of the Lutheran Church of Our Redeemer.

A little over $3 a month out of his pocket for the plot results in a major savings for Powers, 68, who gets as much as 40 percent of his food out of the garden. He supplements the rest with goods from the farmers market.

The garden is yielding more than vegetables and food security, said Ann Carlson, a garden coordinator.

A natural gallery for visitors and passers-by, children and parents at the on-site preschool take a gander before class, and neighbors stop by while waiting for a bus.

"It's fun for them to watch things grow," Mulz said.

For others, taking a stroll through the garden can be therapeutic. Jason Bense, a pastor at Our Redeemer, will often catch attendees of one of the church's alcohol support groups touring garden walkways.

One garden worker related how a woman one day pulled up to the church to say she was thankful that her son, a war veteran who suffered from post-traumatic stress disorder, now had a venue to gather his thoughts.

"People need beauty as well as bread," said Mark Carlson, one of many garden volunteers and Anne's husband. "This garden can provide both of those."

How much water do tomatoes need?

DEBBIE ARRINGTON
MCT

Keep an eye on soil moisture and your vegetable garden. Don't let tomatoes wilt or dry out completely; that can encourage blossom-end rot. How much water do tomatoes need? Give tomatoes a deep watering two to three times a week and a little more if they look droopy. If your tomato plants are on a drip-irrigation system, figure a gallon per mature (and bearing) plant per day. Water before 8 a.m. to reduce chances of fungal infection and to conserve moisture.

■ Harvest vegetables promptly to encourage plants to produce more. Squash especially tends to grow rapidly in hot weather; keep an eye on the zucchini.

■ If your melons and squash aren't setting fruit, give the bees a hand. With a small, soft paintbrush, gather some pollen from male flowers, then brush it inside the female flowers, which have a tiny swelling at the base of their petals (that's the embryo melon or squash). Within days, that little swelling should start growing.

■ It's not too late to get a few more veggies in the ground. Plant seeds for corn, lima beans, okra, parsnips, pumpkin, summer and winter squash, and watermelon. Remember: Those seedlings will need extra attention and moisture to make it through July's heat. Don't let them totally dry out.

■ Pinch back chrysanthemums for bushy plants and more flowers in September.

rest of their landscaping in a more environmentally sustainable and low-maintenance way.

It's sometimes hard to know where to begin, however, and few people have the funds or time to tackle a total garden makeover all at once.

Some strategies:

TAKE IT IN STEPS

"Transitions should be made at your own pace and you do these things in small steps," Sullivan said. "Lawn has utility. We play on it, sing on it and look at it. You can still enjoy your lawn, but cut it down by a third or half, or go with groundcovers you can walk on. They're not the same, but it's about shifting expectations."

Susan Middlefield, horticulture editor for the Vermont-based National Gardening Association, said "less lawn means you're putting less carbon into the atmosphere. Lawns are fertilizer hogs, and a lot of fertilizer also contributes to oxygen depletion in local waterways."

Savageau retained a small circle of lush lawn about 12 feet across for her grandson to play on. It's surrounded by agave and desert grasses.

CONSIDER YOUR SITE

When taking your yard in a new direction, experts say, the first step is to know your site. Do you have a slope? Is it shady or sunny?

Plants on the top of an incline will be drier and plants at the bottom will be wetter. But when the water dries up, the plants at the bottom need to be fine when it's dry, too.

TALK WITH LOCAL EXPERTS

Many arboretums, botanical gardens, native plant societies and local extension services offer brochures, online help, and classes on suitable plants and landscapes for various climates and regions. Many also maintain native plant gardens to inspire home gardeners, and some communities offer incentives to homeowners making the shift toward more sustainable yards.

With proper care, tropical fruit can be grown in Central Florida

Mangoes are in season in South Florida and they are worth celebrating. I was at a mango festival last weekend and there were a huge variety of cultivars with different flavors, sizes and uses.

They are a wonderful tropical treat, but are too sensitive to the cold for most places in Central Florida. Besides a few areas with warm "microclimates" because they are on the south side of a large lake, any mangoes grown here will require special treatment.

If you get a dwarf mango (often called condo mangoes), you can grow it in a large pot and move it under cover, such as a garage, on cold nights. It will require pruning to keep it small, frequent watering because of the pot and you will need to be prepared to move it several times during the winter. Another alternative is to build a temporary shelter around it for the winter. If you don't want to be bothered with all this cold protection, there are other tropical fruits that can be grown here.

JUANITA POPENOE
LAKE COUNTY EXTENSION

Feijoas, or pineapple guavas, grow on a beautiful, small evergreen tree with silvery leaf undersides. The flowers are tropical-looking and even the petals are edible and sweet. The fruit can be 3 1/2 inches long and varies in shape from round to pear-shaped. The greenish fruit is difficult to see in the canopy, but when ripe it perfumes the air with a scent like pineapple, guava and strawberry all mixed into one. Cultivars will provide better quality fruit than the seedlings often used in the landscape trade.

Pineapples are slightly cold sensitive here but we can usually grow them without problems. They are related to bromeliads and have similar requirements, although they like full sun. They do not tolerate temperatures below 28 degrees F. They are drought tolerant and actually do not like too much water.

The plants flower and fruit only once, but the side shoots continue to grow and produce. It can take 18-36 months for the plant to produce 70-80 leaves and be ready to flower and fruit. It will take another five to seven months from flower induction to harvest.

The most common question is how to tell when the fruit is ready for harvest. The fruit is sweetest when one-third to two-thirds of the peel color has turned from green to yellow. Harvest at the peak of flavor and you will not believe how different it is from store-bought fruit.

Loquats are a common evergreen landscape tree in Central Florida. With a grafted cultivar you can get fruit the size of small apricots with much better quality. The fruit is often called a Japanese plum, but to my mind it is more like an apricot with slightly fuzzy, edible skin.

The trees are easy to grow here and the only problem I have seen is occasional fire blight, a bacterial infection that can turn the flowers or new growth tips black and shriveled. Loquats fruit from February through May and a 5-year-old tree may produce 100 pounds of fruit in a year.

Fruit size can be increased by thinning some of the fruit when it is still small and developing, but this may be difficult to do. Make sure your loquat is in full sun and well-drained soil, and enjoy the harvest of delicious fruit that is too delicate to ship, but makes a wonderful, edible landscape plant.

More information about tropical fruit can be found at trec.ifas.ufl.edu/fruitscapes. Visit the Discovery Gardens and our plant clinic with your plant problems and questions, weekdays from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the Ag Center, 1951 Woodlea Road in Tavares.

Teen's homebody parents prefer to lead a quiet life

JEANNE PHILLIPS
DEAR ABBY

DEAR ABBY: Neither of my parents do anything for fun. When Dad comes home from work, he either reads the newspaper or takes a nap. If Mom has free time after finishing the housework or running errands, she watches the news on TV or goes to bed early.

I never thought it was unusual because it has been this way since I was growing up. But once I was in high school, I started hearing classmates talk about their parents' friends or hobbies and I realized my parents are different. They don't even listen to music or read books.

When I want to go out with friends, my parents act annoyed and wonder why I want to go out instead of staying at home. Are there other people out there like this, or are my folks unusual? — MYSTIFIED IN MAINE

DEAR MYSTIFIED: At the end of a busy day, many people want to simply unwind rather than look for things to do. Reading the newspaper, napping or watching the television news are some of the ways they do that. While your parents may be more introverted than those of your classmates, I don't think they are particularly unusual.

The question you should ask yourself is, "Is their relationship working for them?" And if the answer is yes, be glad. What's natural for some families isn't for everyone, and neither is their idea of what's fun.

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 15-year-old girl and my favorite teacher, "Mr. Brown," is going to another state with some other teachers to start a new school. I'll miss him dearly because he is funny and charismatic.

We have an average student-teacher relationship, but I still would like to stay in contact with him and see how he's doing. Is there any way I can maintain our relationship and contact him on my own to show that I miss him? — TEEN IN NEW HAVEN

DEAR TEEN: If he hasn't already left your district, I suppose you could tell him he has been your favorite teacher and ask for his email address. He may be willing to share it with you, but if he and the other teachers are starting a new school, you can bet they are going to be extremely busy and focused on that — so he may not be able to respond as often as you might wish.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I were invited to a friend's house for dinner. When I asked her if I could bring anything, the hostess handed me a cookbook and said she had marked two items I should make and bring. When I looked at them, I was shocked.

She was asking me to bake bread and make a salad. The bread had many ingredients, and I have never made bread from scratch. I don't even own a stand mixer. The salad recipe was also complicated.

Was I unreasonable to decline the invitation? The ingredients alone were going to cost me at least $30, and the stress was more than I was willing to take on. — AGHAST IN ARIZONA

DEAR AGHAST: I think you cut off your nose to spite your face. All you had to do was level with your hostess and tell her you had never baked bread and didn't have the necessary equipment — and that you were prepared to make her a SIMPLE salad. What was she going to do, disinvite you?

Dear Abby is written by Abigail Van Buren, also known as Jeanne Phillips, and was founded by her mother, Pauline Phillips. Write Dear Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069.

Opening lead — nine of spades.

There are all kinds of feats you can perform as a declarer if you work hard enough at it. Perhaps today's hand represents only a minor triumph, but, even so, it has a neat twist.

West led his singleton spade, declarer covering the nine with dummy's ten. East could have made life easy for South by playing the queen — but he didn't.

South led a low diamond from dummy at trick two, hoping that East might envision a singleton queen and rush up with the ace. But East had the queen and played it, ruffed by South.

Declarer next played the ace and a low club to the queen, hoping to find the trumps divided 2-2, in which case he could safely take a spade finesse. But when East showed out on the second trump lead, South had to try to find another way to make the slam.

Convinced that West had started with a singleton spade, declarer ruffed a diamond, drew West's last trump and cashed the ace of spades before leading the king of hearts. East could not afford to win the king with the ace, since that would give declarer a heart entry to dummy to take the vital spade finesse. So East correctly ducked the king of hearts.

South found the winning counter, however. He cashed his last two trumps, reducing his hand to the K-J of spades and jack of hearts. Dummy at this point consisted of the eight of spades and Q-7 of hearts, while East had the Q-6 of spades and ace of hearts.

Declarer then led the jack of hearts, forcing East to win with the ace and return a spade from the queen to South's K-J, and the slam was home.

JACQUELINE BIGAR
BIGAR'S STARS

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Saturday, July 19, 2014:

This year you might be busier than you think you are. You might have an unexpected responsibility involving an older relative or parent. Your professional life could be dominating your days, which leaves you little time for yourself. You need to make time for your personal life. If you are single, you will meet someone in a most unexpected way or through someone you would never think could introduce you to such a special person. If you are attached, you will want to spend more time with your sweetie. Even with all the demands in your life, you will make an effort to have alone time together. TAURUS has a way with you.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) You might be the source of all your pressure because of a judgment you've made regarding a certain issue. You will be putting a lot of effort into your home or domestic life. A little creativity could save you a lot of money.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) You'll feel better than you have in a while. Dealing with a grumpy person might not even bother you today. Consider taking a drive to the beach or to the mountains, or meet up with a friend who lives far away.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You recently might have gone to extremes in living life to the max. The fast-paced life will catch up with you. Slow down, and do only what you must. Give yourself a little time to recharge your batteries. You will be better for the experience.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Friends will want you to join them. It is clear that you won't be left alone, so you might as well head out the door. Choose your preferred invitation, or do something you have been postponing doing. Expect to be surrounded by people.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Someone could be too difficult and domineering for your taste. You might want to head in a different direction, and you will find a reason to do so. A loved one or special friend will be only too happy to see your detour end wherever he or she is.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You will relate directly to a loved one in order to understand what you need to do to gain favor with a key person. A discussion could help illuminate this person's long-term goals and desires. Do what you can to make his or her dreams a reality.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Defer to others. You have dealt with enough flak for a while. You don't need to be responsible for making plans or for giving out suggestions. You actually might be happiest with one close loved one whom you can be open with.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) It seems as though, no matter what you do, someone has a better idea. Don't cop an attitude; instead, be open to this person's suggestions. Reach out to a loved one at a distance who you have wanted to speak with. Make plans for a visit soon.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) You might decide to pull back and handle a personal matter differently. Given some time, you could complete a project that you have kept on the back burner. Use a window of time just for you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Your imagination could be the source of some intriguing plans. You'll have to decide who you want to invite to this get-together. Follow your intuition, and you can't go wrong. You might find it difficult to kiss logic goodbye, but you will.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) You might want to center yourself and reconsider what to do with a personal situation. Your home life also could be involved in a discussion. A change might be inevitable, so remain open to a new and different idea.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Make an effort to touch base with several people you have not had time to reach out to. Do not be surprised if you get a strong reaction from a friend who has really missed you. Understand what this person's disgruntled attitude means.

"Ask Al"
If It Ain't Broke

I have been in the sewing machine and vacuum cleaner business for some 48 years and I have people ask me about when I should change my belt on my vacuum cleaner. Well there is an old adage that says, "If it ain't broke, don't fix it". While that may hold true for a lot of things, it surely doesn't for a vacuum cleaner! What so many people fail to realize is that a vacuum cleaner is made on the assembly line and placed in a carton or box. Then it is stored in a hot warehouse until it is sold, which may be months. Then it is loaded onto a hot tractor-trailer and carried across country in extreme temperatures where it is unloaded into a backroom or deep discount warehouse until it is sold. After all this time and heat, the belt is "melted" onto the motor shaft and brush roller and has stretched to that shape and size.

Well, to say the least, you should change your belt as soon as you get it home and use it for the very first time. And then there are those people that say, "Well my belt ain't broke but my vacuum cleaner is hard to push". If you turn the vacuum cleaner upside down and turn it on and the brush roller turns but then when it is put on the carpet it stops then your belt is stretched, although it ain't broke it needs replacing. It is the brush rollers job to turn so it can pick-up debris and open the carpet fibers to allow the suction of the vacuum cleaner to suck up the dirt.

And lastly, be sure to purchase an extra belt so you can have a spare in case it's the weekend and you have company coming over and the belt breaks with dirty carpet awaiting the guests! And Murphy's Law of vacuum cleaners is...Guess what?? Yep. No Belt to be found. And be sure to put the extra belt around the handle of the vacuum cleaner so the "Drawer Monster" don't eat it!!!! That's my story and I'm sticking to it. Until next week, it's a dirty job!
