Poll: Voters still focused on economy

JENNIFER AGIESTA

WASHINGTON — It's not Obamacare or climate change. It's not yet terrorism or fear of the Islamic State group. Those issues are on the minds of voters as they begin casting ballots in this year's midterm elections, but nothing matters to American voters as much as the economy.

In a new Associated Press-GfK poll released Wednesday, 9 in 10 of those most likely to go to the polls or mail in a ballot in this year's midterm elections call the economy an extremely or very important issue.

The poll found that concerns about the spate of foreign policy challenges facing the U.S. have grown since July, with 6 in 10 Americans now calling the U.S. role in world affairs an important issue, up from 51 percent in July.

And most people remain dissatisfied with those in power. Just 7 percent of likely voters approve of the way Congress is handling its job, 42 percent approve of President Barack Obama's job performance.

Neighbors respond to arrest of suspected serial rapist

MILLARD K. IVES | Staff Writer

For years, 53-year-old Shelly Olson has taken regular strolls at night along her Fern Circle street in the Sunnyside area of Lake County.

Many of her outings took her past a white cinderblock home with powder-blue shutters and a tall wooden fence wrapped around the back yard.

Olson said she was aware an elderly woman was allegedly raped on the same street in July. But it came as a shock to her when word began to spread in her neighborhood Saturday that a man living in the cinderblock home, 46-year-old Anthony Maurice Foster, not only had been arrested in the rape case but may also be linked to several other assaults on elderly woman.

"We thought it was just something that randomly happened," said Olson of the July rape. "We never thought he (the suspect) lived here and had kept on doing it."

Foster was arrested Saturday after DNA tied him to that rape as well as to two similar ones in Leesburg. He is also a suspect in eight similar cases in Leesburg.

According to three probable cause affidavits, the 300-pound Foster used a pillow to cover up the faces of his older female victims as he raped them, with his own face usually wrapped with some type of clothing. He apparently targeted women living alone in homes in 55-and-over communities, including Lake Griffin Mobile Home Park and Coachwood Colony Mobile Home Park in Leesburg.

"We thought it was just something that randomly happened. We never thought he (the suspect) lived here and had kept on doing it."

Leesburg police Maj. Steve Rockefeller said they are trying to determine if Foster is the suspect in 11 cases in the city while DNA has tied him to four other cases there, including the two that he was arrested on this week. Rockefeller said one victim has since died and his department is consulting with the State Attorney's Office on how to proceed.

The case, out of Coachwood, only resulted in a partial DNA match and detectives are waiting on the full analysis report before filing charges.

"It needs direct comparison to Anthony Foster's DNA before we can proceed but that is in process; we do expect to file on him for that case in the coming weeks," Rockefeller said Wednesday.

Christiansen charts success for Lake school district

LIVI STANFORD | Staff Writer
livi.stanford@dailycommercial.com

With 45 percent of third graders not proficient in reading in Lake County, Chief Academic Officer David Christiansen is putting a majority of his efforts into changing that statistic.

Christiansen said this week that the district must focus on pre-kindergarten through third-grade students by allotting more resources to help students better grasp reading concepts.

"They learn to read pre-K to second grade," he said. "Once you come out of that third grade, you are reading to learn."

Specifically, the district is putting in place a software program known as Istation, which allows teachers to track students where they are in the reading continuum, Christiansen said.

"That improves our ability to diagnose where kids are," he said.

Secondly, Christiansen said he has put more teaching assistants in schools for small-group instruction.

Christiansen said approximately 60 teacher assistants were added to the district.

"What is more exciting is we are doing 54 hours of training for all teaching assistants at the elementary level," he said. "We are working with them on small-group instruction."

Recently, Christiansen released the academic district-wide review, showing areas for initially arrested Foster on Saturday after linking him to the July 20 rape of the woman who officials said is in her 70s after he allegedly broke into her Fern Circle home.

According to a probable cause affidavit, on April 17, 2006 a 56-year-old woman from Lake Griffin Mobile Home Park reported she woke up just after 1 a.m. to go to the bathroom when she was suddenly confronted by a man in her home wearing a green sweatshirt partially covering his face.

The man then put a pillow over her face and raped her.

Some of the rapes were so long, Foster allegedly allowed the victims to stop for a drink of water, according to the reports.

Sheriff's spokesman Lt. John Herrell said a joint effort including Leesburg police and the Florida Department of Law Enforcement uncovered information leading to Foster.

Rockefeller said a reserve Lake County deputy tipped off investigators after he was out shopping one day and ran into a woman and the subject of the rapes came up.

"She was like, 'that sounds like him,'" Rockefeller said.

Sumter sheriff Lt. Bobby Caruthers said Foster had been suspected in several Peeping Tom cases more than 10 years ago when he was the resident of Lake Panasoffkee.

Foster refused to provide officials with a DNA sample. But investigators were able to collect samples from his family members.

"We are thrilled to have this suspect behind bars so he cannot offend again and so our victims can perhaps experience some closure," Rockefeller said.

Officials said Foster owns a pool maintenance company and Olson added she regularly sees him driving around in a company truck and they wave to each other. Rockefeller and Vachon said it wasn't clear how Foster picked out his victims or if he used his job to find them.

"We are looking into all aspects of that now," said Rockefeller of the pool job. "We're hoping to discover some links either through previous addresses, employment, associates

... that may aid detectives in linking him to some of the additional cases."

Tom Dahne, 53, who lives in a home in the back of Foster's residence, said after the July rape, several residents walked the streets trying to determine if the suspect lived in the area. He added he was also stunned that the suspect lived on the same street as the victim.

"I guess he thought going after elderly women was kind of easy," Dahne said.

On Wednesday, the residential neighborhood surrounding Foster's home was quiet and his house appeared vacant. Elaine Morrison, who lives across the street from Foster, described him as a quiet man whom she would have never suspected as the rapist.

"We have been more aware of our surroundings," she said.

Anyone with information on any rape can call the Leesburg Police Department at 352-728-9862; Lake County Sheriff's Office at 352-343-2101 or Crimeline at 1-800-423-8477 (TIPS), where you can remain anonymous and may be eligible for a reward.

improvement in reading scores in specific grade levels, the need to close the achievement gap for some subgroups, improve attendance rates and reduce disciplinary infractions.

The review is one tool district officials hope to analyze in understanding how they can improve the district's "C" grade and the individual grades of many schools in the district.

This summer, the Florida Department of Education released its report card based on FCAT scores, showing five schools in the district received "F" grades.

In total, 14 schools showed letter-grade declines.

Overall, 13 percent of Lake's schools had "A" grades, 21 percent had "B" grades, 41 percent had "C" grades, 13 percent had "D" grades and 13 percent had "F" grades, according to the report card.

Christiansen said he is raising expectations for the master schedule and making sure each school is spending at least 60 minutes in math instruction and a minimum of 150 minutes in social studies and science a week.

The problem, Christiansen said, is the amount of instruction time in those core areas varies, not only from school to school, but also by grade level and teacher within the same school.

BRETT LE BLANC / DAILY COMMERCIAL

Dr. Patrick Galatowitsch, principal of Leesburg Elementary School, participates in a panel about recess for Lake County schools in Tavares on Tuesday.

"There needs to be more clear parameters on expectations," he said.

At the same time, Christiansen said he is implementing specific expectations for curriculum instruction and assessments known as blueprints.

"I am really talking about quality and quantity," he said. "It is all about making kids better readers, writers, speakers and better listeners. Now you can really say we do need to change the way we do things. We can't use worksheets for everything. We can't use lower cognitive demands on kids and expect them to become critical thinkers."

These changes come amid many other modifications in the district, from continuing to adopt and implement Florida State Standards, to a new academic schedule, to a new online grade book.

Critics have questioned whether the district is putting too much pressure on teachers at once, causing overload and stress. Others have questioned the blueprints themselves.

Even though the Lake County School Board did not have a quorum Monday to hold a meeting, 70 teachers addressed board members Bill Mathias and Tod Howard separately about their concerns with changes in curriculum and schedules, which have overwhelmed them, according to board members.

"Some things are going to have to be set back a little bit," Howard said. "Trying to do all these changes has proven to be too much. We are not going to get everything done today. Not only are we facing the challenges of the state mandates, but we are also facing the challenges within our own county."

Howard said there are significant problems with the district's "blueprint curriculum."

Teachers told Howard some of the skills were being brought in too early for the students, as dictated in the curriculum.

"There were concerns with reading and writing levels being too high too early," Howard said. "There were some mistakes made, but I don't think it is anything we can't fix."

Stuart Klatt, president of the Lake County Education Association, agreed.

"On one hand, you are told to use the blueprint, research the material and make it applicable to your class, and use it as a framework," Klatt said. "But on the other hand, you have to be on the same page as the person next to you. Students are not all the same. Teachers are being told to move on before the student has the mastery of the skill."

But Christiansen said there are not problems with the blueprints at every grade level.

Board member Bill Mathias said the blueprints are clearly noted as drafts.

"They are subject to be modified," he said.

Howard added: "We need to be cognizant that while our changes are meant to be good, there are so many changes going on right now and teachers feel like they don't have the time they need."

Christiansen said the district has provided teachers with collaborative time to help with the changes alongside one another.

"People would be foolish to think they are not going to make mistakes," he said. "That is how we learn. Failure is how we learn. Acceptance of failure is a big part of this and creating a safe environment. Lake County has wonderful potential to improve."

district officials.

"If we don't have a teacher willing to spend the time on the club, engaged in moving it forward, that club will cease to exist," School Board member Tod Howard said.

At the same time, he pointed out that many clubs currently have sponsors who don't receive stipends.

"We don't pay a stipend to every single person who sponsors a club," Howard said.

The change in the club's policy comes after several lawsuits were filed against the district by members of two clubs, citing discrimination and lack of access to school facilities other clubs were granted.

The Liberty Counsel, an Orlando organization that promotes religious freedom, filed a lawsuit in U.S. District Court in April on behalf of the Fellowship of Christian Athletes at Mount Dora High.

The lawsuit claimed the FCA had been refused access to school facilities granted to other student clubs, wasn't permitted to post announcements in the hallways and on the school's marquee and couldn't make announcements over the school's public address system, club web page or on the district's website.

FCA students also wanted to wear a colored cord at graduation to signify club membership, have a club section in the school yearbook and receive a stipend for the club's faculty advisor.

The settlement gave the FCA the same access to school facilities as other non-curricular student clubs.

As a result, the board granted all clubs "the ability to place club announcements in the hallways and on the school's marquee; to place flyers and posters in and outside of classrooms where clubs meet; the ability to present announcements over the school's public address system; to maintain a club web page on the district's website; the ability to wear colored cords at graduation to signify club membership; and free inclusion of the club in the year book," according to district documents.

Further, an ACLU suit was settled last May when school officials agreed to allow the Gay-Straight Alliance to meet at Carver Middle for three weeks until school let out for the summer. The school district then came up with new policy for middle school clubs and decided the GSA was not an extension of school curriculum and could not meet, resulting in the second ACLU suit in December 2013.

In a hearing before a federal judge at the United States District Court in Ocala in February, the ACLU argued for a preliminary injunction to allow the Gay-Straight Alliance club at Carver Middle School in Leesburg to meet.

The suit was filed on behalf of Hannah Faughnan, a 12-year-old seventh-grade student, who said she has been trying since October to get approval for the GSA to continue meeting at Carver.

The board initially was sued by the ACLU on May 1 after Bayli Silberstein, a 14-year-old eighth-grader, saw her efforts to establish a GSA at Carver blocked for nearly a year. A day after the suit was filed, the school district said the GSA could meet until the end of the 2012-13 school year.

Carolina Gonzalez, communications officer for the ACLU, said the trial is scheduled for March 2015.

"What is happening is because of the lawsuits, the language within the policy is being narrowed," Howard said. "This is not something the board wants to do. We have to stop the lawsuits."

fore board members Monday involves the elimination of the club designation "co-curricular," meaning those that have to do with curriculum but not a direct relation.

As a result, those co-curricular clubs will be designated as either "non-curricular" or "curricular." Only curricular clubs are given stipends for teachers. The National Honor Society and the SGA have been designated non-curricular clubs.

Chris Patton, district spokesman, said the stipend for teachers that oversee the National Honor Society is $582 a year.

Although those specific clubs are being designated non-curricular, Patton said DECA and the Future Business Leaders of America will become curricular clubs if the policy is approved.

Fleeing motorist ejected after wreck

An Orlando motorist allegedly fled from a Lake County traffic stop Tuesday afternoon and then crashed.

Jason Colon, 32, was charged with fleeing and attempting to elude and driving with a suspended license. He remained in the Lake County jail Wednesday night in lieu of $3,000 bail.

COLON

According to a Florida Highway Patrol report, troopers spotted a green Lexus traveling 85 mph in a posted 70-mph zone on the Florida Turnpike.

The trooper said he made a U-turn to go after the car and it appeared to try to drive on the shoulder of an exit ramp in an attempt to pass a tractor-trailer.

The trooper added the car eventually stopped for him and he approached Colon. He said he asked him three times to step out the car after learning he didn't have a license.

The report adds Colon said something before he put the vehicle in gear and drove off — only to get in an accident that threw him from the vehicle.

Colon was taken to Orlando Regional Medical Center to be treated for his injuries then to jail. It is not clear what injuries he sustained but his mug shots appears to show lacerations on his face and head.

Fight over feeding dogs leads to arrest

A Leesburg man was arrested Tuesday after allegedly beating his live-in girlfriend in an argument over feeding dogs.

Harold Craig Martin, 53, was charged with domestic aggravated battery. He was released from the Lake County jail after posting a $10,000 bond.

MARTIN

According to an arrest affidavit, the woman said Martin had been drinking and an argument started over her not feeding the dogs. Afterward Martin allegedly picked up a "pipe-like object" and struck her multiple times on the head and arm.

The woman added she left the home after Martin began looking for something else to hit her with.

The report states when Lake County Sheriff's deputies reached the home, they found the woman with lacerations on her finger and bicep.

Martin told deputies that during the argument the woman grabbed a broom and tried to hit him and he took it from her and left the home.

Fifteen bankers traded their suits and ties for hammers and nails Wednesday morning as they framed a house Wednesday on Hampton Road in Leesburg.

It was Bank of America's way of supporting Habitat for Humanity of Lake Sumter, which provides low-income families with interest-free mortgages to make homeownership more affordable. The financial institution also gave Habitat a $10,000 grant to continue its community development and neighborhood revitalization efforts.

Brian Chilton, market senior vice president for Bank of America in Lake and Sumter counties, has been involved with nine Habitat building projects over the years. He touted Wednesday's build as the most significant.

Downtown kicks off streetscape project

THERESA CAMPBELL / DAILY COMMERCIAL

Leesburg's streetscape project got underway Wednesday morning with the placement of orange barricades.

A $3.8 million construction project to improve nearly half a mile of Main Street in downtown Leesburg kicked off at 8 a.m. Wednesday.

The westward lane of the roadway will be blocked off with orange barricades that were delivered to the project site Wednesday morning, according to a press release from the city. Only eastbound traffic from Ninth to 14th streets will be allowed and the barricades will direct westbound traffic to nearby streets, city spokesman Robert Sargent said.

The project contractor, Apopka-based Stage Door II, will be setting up equipment for the eight-month project and, on Saturday morning, will start pulling up asphalt from the westbound lane, Sargent said. Illuminated traffic signs

Betty Joyce Richey

Betty Joyce Richey age 82 passed away Tuesday, September 30, 2014 in Leesburg, Florida. Betty was born in Miami, Florida and moved to the Leesburg area from her birthplace in 1952. She had a long career with Citizens National Bank in Leesburg and retired as head bookkeeper after more than 20 years of service. She was a member of the Morrison United Methodist Church in Leesburg, and the Order of the Eastern Star. She enjoyed shopping and reading but it was clear that Betty's hobby was her family, and she exhibited her commitment to family through her unconditional love and dedication to her husband Bud who passed away in 1966 and her children and extended family members. Family was everything and truly defined her. Those close to her use words like caring, kind, gentle, and dedicated to describe her; but most of all she had a generous spirit and often gave of herself and provided for others never seeking credit. She is survived by her son — Tommy (April) Richey — Leesburg; Daughter — Joyce Huey — Leesburg; Twin Sister and best friend — Barbara J. Morphet — Leesburg; 2 Grandchildren — Justin T. (Sarah) Richey and Michael P. Huey; and 4 Great-Grandchildren — Makenna, Harper, Tenley and Asher. A celebration of her life is planned for 3:00 PM. — Saturday, October 5, 2014 at the Page-Theus Funeral Home and Cremation Services to inform motorists about construction will be set up on 14th Street.

The project requires only one lane closure at a time and access to businesses along Main Street will be maintained.

The city is inviting affected business and property owners to attend a public meeting on Monday to learn more about the Streetscape project, Sargent said. City staff and representatives from Stage Door II will be available beginning at 1 p.m. in the City Commission Chambers at City Hall, 501 W. Meadow St.

"The primary purpose of the meeting is to give the contractor an opportunity to talk with business owners within the work zone," Leesburg Public Works Director D.C. Maudlin said in the release.

The groundbreaking ceremony with city officials, the architect Belomo-Herbert and Stage Door II representatives is set for 9 a.m. Tuesday at 1313 W. Main St.

The Streetscape will improve the appearance of Main Street, and allow for upgrades to water lines, sewer lines and stormwater collection, Sargent said. Construction will be scheduled on weekdays and some Saturdays.

The project is contracted to last through May 2015 with Main Street to re-open in early April.

Residents take legal action against city over ordinances

EUSTIS

Two men are asking a judge to overturn decisions by the city of Eustis to allow more intense development on parcels that they say had been designated for rural use and conservation.

Robert Panuska and John Smith, both of whom are affiliated with the Trout Lake Nature Center, filed a writ of certiorari appealing the decisions and asking for a judicial review.

At issue are two ordinances the city passed. One changes the design district for land on the corner of County Road 44 and Hicks Ditch Road from a "rural district" designation to "suburban corridor." The other ordinance makes nearby land, which was designated as conservation on the design district map, suburban neighborhood and suburban corridor.

Design districts govern how land may be developed.

Panuska and Smith contend that the design districts must follow the city's comprehensive plan map, which calls for rural and conservation uses on those parcels.

"The city has violated its own comprehensive plan and land development code by re-designating these lands to a suburban category, which would allow more intense and dense development in this area that is supposed to be preserved as conservation and rural lands," said Daniel Langley, an attorney representing Panuska and Smith against the city.

Acting City Manager Dianne Kramer said conservation is not a design district. She said the change also makes sense because the rural land in question is closer to the town center than other parcels further away that are designated as suburban.

"The normal progression is, close to downtown you have urban, then you have suburban, then you have rural. And so to have suburban farther out than your rural, it conflicts with the transect," she said.

Much of the dispute involves how the two sides interpret the various maps and regulations that govern how land may be developed in Eustis. The comprehensive plan, future land use map, development patterns map, design districts and land development regulations all come into play. Langley argues that the city is picking and choosing which maps and regulations it wants to observe.

"All the maps matter," he said. "They can't just ignore the maps that are inconvenient for them."

"Let's say you have a future land use designation that would allow ... a Super Walmart, but your development pattern restricts you to the form of a building of a single family structure. You obviously could not build a Super Walmart in the form of a single-family structure," Langley said.

The lawsuit also alleges problems with the way the ordinances were passed. Langley said the city did not follow its own "procedures and state law requirements for adoption of these design district map amendments."

And he claims the process was not fair.

"The bigger issue is that what they did is not consistent with their comprehensive plan, land development code. The secondary issue is the process, of course, was not fair," Langley said. "The commissioners had a pre-determined bias to approve these ordinances because they are attempting to cover up the fact that they have already started construction on a fire station that was not permitted under their design district map designation for that property."

Kramer said Langley filed several letters of protest in regards to the process and how the public was informed, and the city had those reviewed by a land use attorney.

"The whole purpose of due process is to... make sure people know what's going on, to allow them a voice in what is being done, and certainly all these affected people participated in the process, had an opportunity to speak, had an opportunity to present their information," she said. "So the whole basis for due process was covered, because they were there, they were notified, they participated, they made their points."

The legal documents also call for "the demolition of all structures and site improvements upon the property." This property includes the new city fire station that was constructed this year.

may have inadvertently drowned.

She said Ginestra, wearing scuba gear, was first spotted on the oyster bar by a crabber.

"It was really stormy and he probably became disoriented" Blair said.

Recent modifications Ginestra made to his vehicle, an upcoming job interview and items found in his pocket contradicted the possibility that his death could have been a suicide, she added.

Ginestra had worked as a plastic surgeon at Mesos Plastic Surgery and Laser Center in Lady Lake.

His wife filed a missing person report the night of July 15 with the Lake County Sheriff's Office, which found his black BMW on the Fort Island Trail. A search by dive teams, as well as marine and aviation units, turned up his body the next day.

According to the Lake County sheriff's report dated July 15, family and friends of the doctor said Ginestra had been acting "more isolated than usual" after he lost his sister six months earlier. The report added he had become depressed over the past couple of weeks after losing his job at the clinic when his contract was not renewed.

Ginestra also was being sued for medical malpractice by the husband of a former patient who died in 2013, court records show. Jimmy Ryan of Leesburg claims his wife Mary died after being diagnosed with necrotizing fasciitis, an aggressive flesh-eating bug, 17 days after Ginestra performed liposuction on her jowls, neck and abdomen.

Ginestra's wife told detectives that on July 14, Ginestra asked her for the passwords to their bank accounts so he could check their finances — something he had never done in the past. She said that on the morning of July 15, as she was leaving for work, her husband apologized for "ruining her life and that things would get better very soon."

At no point did Ginestra ever make suicidal comments, but hinted at the issue, his wife told detectives.

Ginestra left a $3 million life insurance policy, which stated "no matter how the person dies, the family would receive the pay-out to include suicide," according to the sheriff's office report.

In a plea deal, both Klemm and Bobilya were each sentenced to 180 days in the Sumter County jail.

Ebola patient told Dallas hospital he was from Liberia

PAUL J. WEBER and LAURAN NEERGARD
Associated Press

DALLAS — The first Ebola patient diagnosed in the U.S. initially went to a Dallas emergency room last week but was sent home, despite telling a nurse that he had been in disease-ravaged West Africa, the hospital acknowledged Wednesday.

The decision by Texas Health Presbyterian Hospital to release him could have put many others at risk of exposure to the disease before he went back to the ER two days later, after his condition worsened.

Thomas Eric Duncan explained to a nurse Friday that he was visiting the U.S. from Liberia, but that information was not widely shared, said Dr. Mark Lester, who works for the hospital's parent company.

Duncan's answer "was not fully communicated" throughout the hospital's medical team, Lester said.

Instead, the patient was sent home with antibiotics, according to his sister, Mai Wureh, who identified her brother as the infected man in an interview with The Associated Press.

Antibiotics, which target bacteria, are generally ineffective against Ebola, which is caused by a virus.

A day after the man's diagnosis was confirmed, a nine-member team of federal health officials was tracking anyone who had close contact with him.

The team from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention was in Dallas to work with local and state health agencies to ensure that those people are watched every day for 21 days.

"If anyone develops fever, we'll immediately isolate them to stop the chain of transmission," Dr. Tom Frieden, the CDC director, said in an interview.

Duncan has been kept in isolation at the hospital since Sunday. He was listed in serious but stable condition.

Ebola is believed to have sickened more than 7,100 people in West Africa, and more than 3,300 deaths have been linked to the disease, according to the World Health Organization.

Officials are monitoring 12 to 18 people who may have been exposed to the man, including three members of the ambulance crew that transported him to the hospital and five schoolchildren.

Some of the people are members of his family, but not all, Dallas city spokeswoman Sana Syed said.

The ambulance crew tested negative for the virus and was restricted to home while their conditions are observed. The children, who attend four separate schools, apparently had contact with the man over the weekend and then returned to classes this week. But school officials have said they showed no symptoms.

a fundraising webpage was set up to raise funds to help Jerred's homeless family of six. They will have to find somewhere to live close to Jerred as he endures months of medical treatment to recover from his injuries and then physical therapy to learn to walk again.

As of Wednesday, the fundraising drive had already garnered more than $19,000, and Galatowitsch said much of it has come from his staff. Students also are making a quilt to give to their recovering classmate.

"We want to help him and his family get back on their feet," Galatowitsch said Wednesday.

Galatowitsch said the child was dragged about 50 feet and has two broken femurs. Jerred underwent several surgeries over the weekend, including skin grafts and having rods planted in his leg.

"He's going to spend weeks in bed, then he will have to learn to walk again," Galatowitsch said.

The accident occurred Friday afternoon in the parking lot near where Jerred's family was staying nearby with relatives. According to a preliminary crash report, Jerred was playing with sidewalk chalk with a group of children when Alfreida Louse Brown, 39, pulled into the complex where she lived.

One witness said the car was speeding and she held up her hands and yelled at Brown to slow down. A second witness said Brown had been speeding and he tried to warn Jerred.

"But (I) was not fast enough," the second witness said.

The crash report states the car struck the 45-pound Jerred and he went under the vehicle as it went about 10 to 15 feet and stopped. Brown told investigators she didn't see any children in the area but stopped after hearing a noise under her car.

But after believing she only had struck a small dog, she continued driving another 35 feet or so to a parking space.

"It's a tragic situation made even more heartbreaking because it involves such a young child," said Leesburg police Maj. Steve Rockefeller, who added the department also will support the fundraising efforts.

Rockefeller said Wednesday they are still waiting on results from a blood alcohol test from Brown and she has not yet been charged.

Jerred's family couldn't be reached for comment. But his mother, Ashley Byrd, has posted comments on her son on a website set up by the school to raise money for the family.

"I want to thank (you all) from the bottom of my heart; he is such an awesome child who is my hero," stated Byrd, who posted a picture of her son in a Florida State University shirt.

"... My son is the bravest 'lil boy I know. I love you my son we will get through this..." stated Byrd in a comment posted Wednesday.

But Jerred's road to recovery will only be part of the struggle the family now faces. Galatowitsch said the boy's father is unemployed. The family lost their home in April and had been staying with relatives.

And while the family is on the waiting list for the Ronald McDonald House in Gainesville, where families in need can stay for free, there is a possibility Jerred could be moved to a hospital in Jacksonville. After hearing this, Galatowitsch went to work to help the family with lodging.

Galatowitsch, who took over as principal in July, not only helped set up the fundraising drive, but used his credit card reward points so Jerred's family could stay in a Gainesville Marriott hotel and be close to the boy. And when Galatowitsch's points ran out, he was able to convince the hotel's general manager to give the family a reduced rate.

General Manager Steven Bradshaw said Wednesday the rooms typically run for $139 a night but he gave the family the cut rate of $39 — the employee discount rate — while their son is there.

"We wanted to do something," Bradshaw said.

To donate, go to www.gofundme.com/f5a-fr4. Checks also can be made out to the Byrds and addressed to c/o Principal Pat Galatowitsch at Leesburg Elementary, 2229 South St., Leesburg FL 34748.

Waldo votes to disband its police department

AREK SARKISSIAN
Halifax Media Group

Within 15 minutes on Tuesday afternoon, Waldo Police Officer Tim Logan spotted three drivers moving well over the speed limit on U.S. 301.

Indeed, there is a speed problem in Waldo, but the city cannot afford its police department.

On Tuesday night, the Waldo City Council voted in favor of disbanding its department, effective at midnight.

"We're all going to be unemployed," Logan said as a silver Mercedes sedan whizzed by his black and white police sport utility vehicle. The equipment in the cruiser showed the luxury car was traveling at 60 mph in a 45-mph zone.

"I don't like the idea of letting my wife know when I wake up in the morning that I will be out of a job," Logan said.

The City Council voted 4-1 to disband the department and to allow Waldo's officers to collect pay until Oct. 31 as city officials determine how to tie up loose ends. There are still plenty of cases — primarily traffic citations — awaiting court dates, and equipment that needs to be inventoried or sold.

Waldo has long carried the notoriety as a speed trap with black and white patrol cars working busy stretches of U.S.

MATT STAMEY / AP

Waldo police officers listen as council members discuss their department during a meeting on Tuesday in Waldo.

301 and State Road 24, but that began to change last month when its last police chief, Mike Szabo, was suspended pending the results of a Florida Department of Law Enforcement investigation.

On Aug. 26, five Waldo officers revolted against Szabo and Cpl. Kenneth Smith with a presentation before the City Council that was rife with allegations that included an unlawful ticket quota, deceptive court appearances and unethical evidence storage.

Shortly after the presentation, Waldo City Manager Kim Worley also suspended Smith, with the launch of a second FDLE investigation. Both Szabo and Smith later resigned.

In the absence of a chief, Worley signed a month-long contract with Alachua County Sheriff Sadie Darnell on Sept. 3 to receive the temporary services of her training lieutenant, Steve Maynard, who she temporarily promoted to captain for the assignment.

Last week, Darnell told Worley she would not extend the contract, which apparently left Waldo with little option but to close its police department.

"The cost is just too high," Worley said.

Waldo City Councilwoman Carolyn Wade was reluctant to vote in favor of the police department closure, but said she understood it was inevitable.

Conversations with State Attorney Bill Cervone led her to believe it was the only decision to save the city from more bad publicity, she said.

Wade said Cervone told her that if the city chose to keep the department open, he would bring a case before the Alachua County grand jury, and it would return with a humiliating presentation.

"Too much has gone too far and I don't think we can recover," Wade said.

Iraqi Kurds fight Islamic State with aged weapons

VIVIAN SALAMA
Associated Press

MAHMOUDIYAH, Iraq — The exhausted Kurdish fighters leaned against a pair of antiquated green cannons on a hill overlooking this northern Iraqi village, the ground around them littered with shrapnel from fierce battles with Islamic State militants.

One of them, Moustafa Saleh, tapped the cannon with his mud-caked boots. “Russian-made,” he said, with a smirk.

While some newly sent arms have stacked up in the Kurdish capital, including a shipment from Germany this week, Kurdish officials say they can't be distributed until the Kurdish fighters are trained.

“My grandfather used the same one.”

Iraqi Kurdish fighters on the front lines of battle say they have yet to receive the heavy weapons and training pledged by the United States and nearly a dozen other countries to help them push back the Sunni militants.

U.S.-led airstrikes have forced the militants to retreat or go into hiding in towns and villages across northern Iraq, paving the way for ground forces to retake territory seized by the militant group in its lightning advance since June across western and northern Iraq.

But without more sophisticated weaponry, the Kurdish fighters, known as peshmerga, have had to rely on aging arms like the Soviet-era cannons, a centerpiece of the offensive Tuesday to retake Mahmoudiyah and the nearby strategic towns of Rabia and Zumar.

While some newly sent arms have stacked up in the Kurdish capital, including a shipment from Germany this week, Kurdish officials say they can't be distributed until the Kurdish fighters are trained. The delay shows the difficulties on the ground as the U.S. and its allies bomb the militants from the air.

Incoming NATO Secretary General Jens Stoltenberg addresses a first media conference at NATO headquarters in Brussels on Wednesday.

New NATO chief: Better ties with Russia possible

JOHN THOR DAHLBURG
Associated Press

BRUSSELS — NATO's new secretary-general struck a more conciliatory tone Wednesday on Russia, saying there's a chance now for improved relations between Moscow and the West.

“We see opportunity in the cease-fire, which has now been established in the eastern part of Ukraine, but we also see violations of the cease-fire and that it's a fragile situation,” Jens Stoltenberg said.

On his first day in office, the 55-year-old Stoltenberg also welcomed the bombing campaign being waged by the United States, France, Britain and other NATO and non-NATO nations against Islamic State militants, who he said have committed “horrific atrocities” in Iraq and Syria.

He told reporters he finds “no contradiction” between his desire for a strong NATO and the quest for better ties with Russia. But he also demanded that Moscow adhere to international law and that there be a “clear change” in Russian actions toward Ukraine.

He also said the alliance would react with an “open mind” if Russia were to seek to revive the NATO-Russia Council, which has virtually ceased to operate since Russia annexed the Crimean Peninsula in March.

A former two-term Norwegian prime minister, Stoltenberg became the 13th secretary-general in the trans-Atlantic organization's 65-year existence. Analysts predicted his consensus-building style would mean softer rhetoric than his predecessor, Denmark's Anders Fogh Rasmussen.

“I expect more moderate language, and that he will try to keep the dialogue open,” said Kristian Berg Harpviken, director of the Peace Research Institute Oslo, an independent Norwegian research institution.

To allies like Germany, the expectation of a dial-back of the rhetoric was one factor in Stoltenberg's favor.

Stoltenberg was unanimously chosen as Rasmussen's successor by NATO's policy-making North Atlantic Council in March. The choice won swift approval from Russian President Vladimir Putin, who had dealt with Stoltenberg when he headed a center-left government in Norway, a Russian neighbor.

“We have very good relations, including personal relations,” Putin told Russian state television at the time. “This is a very serious, responsible person, but we'll see how our relations develop with him in his new position.”

Saudi overhaul transforms Mecca, Islam's holiest city

AYA BATRAWY
Associated Press

MECCA, Saudi Arabia — As a child, Osama al-Bar would walk from his home past Islam's holiest site, the Kaaba, to the market of spice and fabric merchants where his father owned a store. At that time, Mecca was so small, pilgrims could sit at the cube-shaped Kaaba and look out at the serene desert mountains where the Prophet Muhammad once walked.

Now the market and the homes are gone. Monumental luxury hotel towers crowd around the Grand Mosque where the Kaaba is located, dwarfing it. Steep rocky hills overlooking the mosque have been leveled and are now covered with cranes building more towers in row after row.

“My father and all the people who lived in Mecca wouldn't recognize it,” said al-Bar, who is now Mecca's mayor.

HASAN JAMALI / AP

Essam Kalthoum, left, managing director of the Bawabat Makkah Company, which oversees several projects around the city, shows a prototype of what the heart of Mecca will look like after construction around the Grand Mosque is complete on May 11 in Jiddah, Saudi Arabia.

As Muslims from around the world stream into Mecca for the annual hajj pilgrimage this week, they come to a city undergoing the biggest transformation in its history.

Decades ago, this was a low-built city of centuries-old neighborhoods. Over the years, it saw piecemeal renewal projects. But in the mid-2000s, the kingdom launched its most ambitious overhaul ever with a series of mega-projects that, though incomplete, have already reshaped Mecca.

Old neighborhoods have been erased for hotel towers and malls built right up to the edge of the Grand Mosque. Historic sites significant for Islam have been demolished. Next to the Kaaba soars the world's third tallest skyscraper, topped by a gigantic clock, which is splashed with colored lights at night.

Ukraine rebels close in on Donetsk airport

DARKO VOJINOVIC
Associated Press

DONETSK, Ukraine — Pro-Russian rebels in eastern Ukraine advanced Wednesday on the government-held airport in Donetsk, pressing to seize the key transportation hub even as the two sides bargained over a troop pullout under a much-violated truce.

Fighting for the airport has raged for months as the insurgents have tried to dislodge the government forces using it to shell rebel positions in Donetsk, the largest rebel-held city. At least nine people were killed in the crossfire Wednesday in residential areas near the airport.

DARKO VOJINOVIC / AP

Alexander Zakharchenko, center, the leader of pro-Russian rebels in Donetsk, observes the damage at a school after shelling in the town of Donetsk, eastern Ukraine on Wednesday.

casualties have continued to rise in eastern Ukraine despite a cease-fire Sept. 5 and a second agreement Sept. 20 that spelled out how to create a buffer zone. While that helped to enforce the cease-fire in areas where Ukrainians troops and rebels chose to retreat, non-stop fighting has continued at the airport and other strategic locations.

While the Donetsk airport building has been gutted by shelling, its long runway would let the rebels handle heavy cargo planes carrying supplies, instead of relying solely on truck convoys from Russia.

While it was impossible to get close to the airport Wednesday because of the fighting, an AP reporter in Donetsk saw that artillery fire hitting the airport was coming from government-held positions outside the city — an indication that Kiev may no longer hold the airport.

But Ukraine's National Security and Defense Council spokesman, Col. Andriy Lysenko, told journalists in Kiev the airport was still under the control of government troops who were “brilliantly carrying out their duty.”

Hong Kong protesters threaten to occupy buildings

JOANNA CHIU and KELVIN CHAN
Associated Press

HONG KONG — Raising the stakes in their standoff with the authorities, Hong Kong's pro-democracy protesters threatened to occupy government buildings unless the territory's top official resigns by the end of the day Thursday.

The Chinese government, meanwhile, appeared to be losing patience. An editorial solemnly read Wednesday on state TV said all Hong Kong residents should support authorities in their efforts to “deploy police enforcement decisively” and “restore the social order in Hong Kong as soon as possible.”

And the Communist Party-run People's Daily warned of “unimaginable consequences” if the protests persist.

Storming government buildings would risk inviting another clash with police like the one over the weekend. It also would put pressure on the Chinese government, which has backed Hong Kong Chief Executive Leung Chun-ying's attempts to end the protests but has not openly intervened.

The protesters' demands for freer elections in Hong Kong represent the biggest challenge to Beijing's authority since China took control of the former British colony in 1997.

In Washington, Secretary of State John Kerry met with Chinese Foreign Minister Wang Yi and said the U.S. supports the “highest possible degree of autonomy” in Hong Kong. He said he hopes Hong Kong authorities exercise restraint and allow the protesters to express their views peacefully.

Airlines sink US stocks; Dow drops 200 points

KEN SWEET
Associated Press

NEW YORK — It was a rough start to October for financial markets.

Disappointing economic news in the U.S. and abroad drove down stocks on Wednesday. The Dow Jones industrial average slumped 200 points. And nervous investors shifted their money to havens like bonds and gold.

At first U.S. stocks were driven lower by word that German manufacturing had slowed last month. The selling accelerated after a separate survey indicated U.S. manufacturing slowed as well.

"A lot of people thought this economic data was going to be robust, so when it was weak, everyone moved to reposition," said Tom di Galoma, head of rates and credit trading at ED&F Man Capital.

Investors also were skittish following news that the first case of Ebola had been diagnosed in the U.S. They dumped airlines on concerns that travel will decline and bought a handful of drug companies working on experimental treatments for the deadly disease.

The declines follow a weak performance in September, just the third monthly loss for the stock market this year. Geopolitical worries, a weakening European economy and the prospect of higher interest rates have weighed on stocks, even though corporate earnings and the economic outlook remain healthy in the U.S.

The report that set off most of the selling in the U.S. was the Institute for Supply Management's monthly manufacturing survey, one of the more closely watched economic indicators that investors look for each month. The ISM index came in at 56.6, below the 58.5 economists expected.

In European markets, Germany's DAX finished 1 percent lower, France's CAC 40 lost 1.2 percent and the U.K.'s FTSE 100 ended down 1 percent.

"We're in a global economy these days, and U.S. companies get a lot of their revenue and earnings from outside the U.S.," said Matthew Rubin, director of investment strategy at Neuberger Berman.

Truck deals boost auto sales

DETROIT — Big discounts on pickup trucks kept U.S. auto sales strong in September.

General Motors Co. and Chrysler Group led the industry with 19-percent sales increases over last September. Toyota sales rose 2 percent; Ford and Volkswagen were down.

The pace was expected to slow from a blistering August, which was the best month for the industry in eight years. August got a boost from 2014 model year clearance sales and Labor Day promotions.

While August was fueled by incentives on midsize cars, September saw good deals on pickup trucks. Chevrolet was advertising up to $8,500 off the price of a crew cab Silverado with a trade-in, while Chrysler's Ram was offering zero-percent interest.

The second half of the year is usually stronger for pickup sales, and stable gas prices, employment gains and higher consumer confidence have more people shopping for trucks, automakers said.

But GM and Chrysler were also hoping to take advantage of Ford, which has temporarily closed a truck factory to retool for its new aluminum-clad F-150. Ford cut back on discounts in order to keep more trucks in stock during the shutdown.

Bond market may be fragile

BERNARD CONDON
Associated Press

NEW YORK — A bottleneck is building in the global market for bonds.

Main Street investors have poured a trillion dollars into bonds since the financial crisis, and helped send prices soaring. As fund managers and regulators fret about an inevitable sell-off, the bigger fear is that when people go to unload, there won't be anyone to buy.

Too many funds own the same bonds, making them difficult to sell if panic ensues. On top of that, the banks that used to bring bond buyers and sellers together have pulled back from the role. If investors started looking to sell, they'd be slow to find buyers, spreading fear through the $100 trillion global bond market and sending prices tumbling.

It's a situation known as "liquidity risk" and some bond pros are scrambling to prepare for it.

Worried portfolio managers are hoarding cash. BlackRock, the world's largest fund manager, is suggesting regulators consider new fees for investors pulling out of funds. Apollo Management, famous for profiting from a bond collapse 25 years ago, is launching a fund to bet against bonds.

What's at risk is more than money in retirement accounts. Big investors often borrow when buying bonds and so losses can be magnified. Trillions of dollars of bets using derivatives ride on bonds, too. A small fall in prices could lead to losses that reverberate throughout the financial system.

HIGH PRICES

Demand and prices have soared for nearly every kind of bond, even the diciest. Since the start of 2009, funds invested in "junk" bonds from risky companies have returned an average 14 percent each year, double its average in the prior six years.

RISE OF QUICK-HIT INVESTORS

The biggest owners in many bonds are small Main Street investors more easily spooked than traditional holders like insurers and pension funds. Main Street investors buying through mutual funds and exchange traded funds, vehicles for quick-trading, own 40 percent of corporate bonds, according to the International Monetary Fund. The insurers and pension funds that help stabilize the market by sticking with bonds through busts hold 25 percent.

RATE HIKES

This market faces a big test next year when the Federal Reserve is expected to start raising interest rates. When the Fed announced a series of surprise rate hikes in 1994, bond prices plunged, a big hedge fund collapsed, companies like Procter & Gamble were hit with losses and Orange County, California, had to file for bankruptcy.

Many people don't think the rate increases next year will roil the bond market much because the Fed is telegraphing its every move. But given the high prices and lack of liquidity, not everyone is confident.

TRADING PROBLEM

To buy or sell many kinds of bonds, you have to phone or email brokers at banks and other firms who pair buyers and sellers. If they can't find a match for you, they dip into their own stash of bonds to buy and sell themselves.

But banks and other middlemen are pulling back from this match-making because of new regulations limiting their activities. And they have largely abandoned their role as a buyer or seller of last resort.

The result is a shallow market in which buyers and sellers struggle to find each other.

Facebook apologizes to drag queens

BARBARA ORTUTAY
AP Technology Writer

NEW YORK — Facebook is apologizing to drag queens and the transgender community for deleting accounts that used drag names like Lil Miss Hot Mess rather than legal names such as Bob Smith.

The world's biggest online social network caught heat recently when it deleted several hundred accounts belonging to self-described drag queens, other performers and members of the lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender community. Facebook has long required its users to go by their "real names" on the site for security purposes, to stand out from other social networks and so it can better target advertising to people. Now, the company says the spirit of its policy doesn't mean a person's legal name but "the authentic name they use in real life."

"For Sister Roma, that's Sister Roma. For Lil Miss Hot Mess, that's Lil Miss Hot Mess," Chris Cox, Facebook's vice president of product wrote in a blog post Wednesday.

Though the real names policy isn't changing, the way Facebook enforces it might.

Last month, the company suggested that performers such as drag queens have other ways of maintaining their stage identities on the site, such as creating pages that are meant for businesses and public figures. But a fan page is not the same as a regular Facebook account and users were not happy with the suggestion.

While standing by the real names policy on Wednesday, Cox said "we see through this event that there's lots of room for improvement in the reporting and enforcement mechanisms, tools for understanding who's real and who's not, and the customer service for anyone who's affected."

Toast-worthy quarter?

Wall Street expects that Constellation Brands' latest quarterly earnings improved from a year ago.

The wine, liquor and beer company is due to report fiscal second-quarter financial results today. Constellation has benefited this year from strong sales at its Crown Imports beer business, which it acquired through its purchase of the Grupo Modelo U.S. beer business last summer.

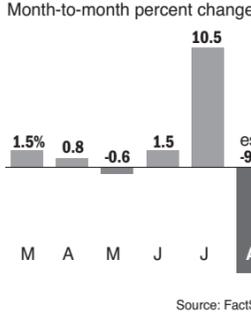

Economic bellwether

Manufacturing has been a source of strength this year, helped by robust demand for new cars and other products.

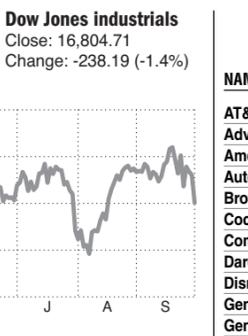

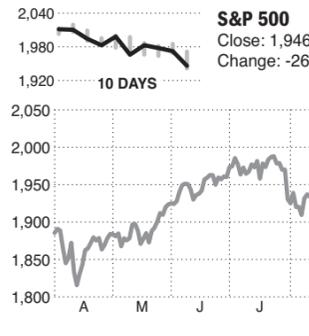

A surge in commercial aircraft demand helped propel business orders for U.S. factory goods in July. Outside of transportation, overall orders fell slightly. Economists anticipate that the Commerce Department will report today that factory orders fell sharply in August from a month earlier.

Market debut

Laboratory products provider VWR is expected to make its market debut today. The company, which is based in Radnor, Pennsylvania, supplies general and specialty laboratory products. It generated more than $4.1 billion in sales globally last year. Its proposed stock symbol on the Nasdaq is "VWR."

MLB: Angels' Trout to make postseason debut /

Bacon leads Eagles to win over Hurricanes

FRANK JOLLEY | Staff Writer
frank.jolley@dailycommercial.com

GROVELAND — Josh Bacon said he wasn't feeling any added emotion when he reached the tee of the final hole in the last regular-season home golf match of his high school career.

Then he stepped up and hammered his drive nearly 300 yards.

Bacon earned medalist honors with a 2-over par 38 on Wednesday to lead South Lake to a 166-203 win against Mount Dora at rain-soaked Green Valley Country Club. Teammates Tyler Horn added a 41, Nick Puerto chipped in with a 42 and Tyler Johnston carded a 45 for the Eagles.

Mount Dora was led by Sean Schillinger with a 42.

Bacon tried to downplay his final regular-season match on his home course. He said he struck the ball well and was pleased with his putting, but felt he lost a couple of shots on the green because the abundance of rain recently, including a 30-minute shower that stopped play on Wednesday, made it difficult to read the greens.

On the ninth hole, a 358-yard, par 4 that featured water down the right side and houses on the left, Bacon launched a missile that ended up near a couple of trees about 50 yards from the center of

Jags receiver Sanders back from suspension

MARK LONG

JACKSONVILLE — Jacksonville Jaguars receiver Ace Sanders won't get to ease back into football.

With rookie Marqise Lee (hamstring) ruled out against Pittsburgh and fellow receiver Cecil Shorts III (hamstring) doubtful to play Sunday, Sanders likely will see a heavy workload in his return from a four-game suspension.

"I don't know what to expect," Sanders said Wednesday. "I'm just going in, whatever they ask me to do, I'll do it. If it turns out, I'll be ready for it."

Sanders missed the first quarter of the season for violating the NFL's substance-abuse policy. He practiced Wednesday for the first time since Aug. 26. It was his fourth time on the field with the Jaguars (0-4) since organized team activities ended in June.

Sanders took a 31-day leave of absence in late July, missing all of training camp and most of the preseason. He returned Aug. 24, practiced for three days and played in the preseason finale against Atlanta.

He has been in meetings since, but unable to practice or attend games with the team.

Knights meet Silver Hawks in search of first victory

FRANK JOLLEY | Staff Writer

For the East Ridge High School football team, the best shot at a victory could come today.

The Knights (0-5) travel to Winter Park for a rare school-game against Lake Howell, a team that is also winless and struggling to find its rhythm on offense.

East Ridge enters the game having been shut out for the past three games. The Knights' last score came in the fourth quarter against Tavares on Sept. 5 in a 27-13 loss.

Since then, East Ridge has been outscored 132-0. The defense has played well at times, but has worn down over the course of the game because of the offense's inability to sustain drives and give the Knights' defenders a rest.

Despite his team's struggles, coach Ashour Peera remains positive and finds bright spots in an otherwise rebuilding season. Peera feels the Knights are continuing to buy into his system and play hard every game.

Zach Honnold has been a workhorse on offense for the Knights and tight end Mike Turner had a breakout effort against Orlando Oak Ridge last week. In addition, Hunter Bush reached double digits in pass completions and punter Zach Block was successful at flipping the field, averaging 48 yards per kick.

Winter Park Lake Howell (0-5) has scored nine points in the past two games and 12 for the season. The Silver Hawks have been shut out twice.

GAINESVILLE — Florida coach Will Muschamp calls every game a must-win. Following a lopsided loss at Alabama, it's really starting to look and feel that way for Muschamp and the Gators.

Florida's season and Muschamp's future could be decided in the next month.

The Gators play four games over the next five weeks that might determine whether they're back in the Eastern Division race or in the market for a new coach. It begins Saturday at Southeastern Conference rival Tennessee, which is a slight favorite despite losing nine consecutive games in the series.

"It's very critical because the East is wide open right now and everybody has a loss," running back Matt Jones said Tuesday. "To go in there and beat Tennessee is going to be good."

It would be a much-needed confidence boost for a program (and fan base) that is coming off its first losing season since 1979, had a scare

MLB postseason opens with epic game, but baseball is in need of fixing

TIM DAHLBERG
AP Sports Columnist

Opening night of the baseball playoffs provided some great theater, assuming you could stay awake long enough to watch.

That the 12th-inning win by Kansas City over Oakland took nearly five hours to play highlights a problem baseball still has to address. Still, the return to small ball in a sport plagued by steroids should be celebrated just as much as the first postseason win by the Royals in 29 years.

But as Bud Selig prepares to take a victory lap on behalf of the owners he represented so well, there are issues he hasn't handled nearly as well. While the game is awash in cash that is making both owners and players richer than ever, it has become increasingly marginalized as a national sport as attendance sags in some cities and television ratings continue to sink.

Incoming commissioner Rob Manfred has a chance to do something about that. As the playoffs begin, here are a few suggestions to help the grand old game:

HIRE VINNY — Clayton Kershaw may get the Dodgers in the World Series all by himself, but how about giving us a treat once they're there? Put Vin Scully in the broadcast booth for Game 1 and let of the rest of the nation find out why the 86-year-old announcer is so revered in Southern California.

the green. His second shot landed about 12 feet from the cup and he two-putted for a par.

"The only thing I was thinking about on the ninth hole was breaking 40," Bacon said. "I wanted a big drive to give me a chance to do that. I wasn't thinking about my last regular season home match or any of that stuff.

"I just wanted a good score."

Nonetheless, once Bacon had holed out and the remaining groups were finished with their rounds, he kept a promise he made before beginning play by taking a celebratory leap into the pond that borders the ninth hole.

The round began and ended under sunny skies, but play was halted for about 30 minutes with the lead group approaching the fourth hole due to heavy rain. Even though no lightning was in the area, the rain left standing water on the greens, which forced a stoppage of play. After the rain subsided, the greens quickly dried out enough to resume play. There were puddles in the fairways and in the sand traps as the course struggled to absorb the water left behind by abnormally persistent rains that have fallen over the past two weeks.

Because of the rain, the course's characteristics changed three times during the round. Puerto said he was unable to put spin on his ball, particularly on the greens, which made it tough to stop the ball near the hole. Players were permitted to lift, clean and replace their balls over the entire course due to the wet conditions.

"It was tough out there," Puerto said. "The fairways were so soft, the ball wouldn't roll after it landed. It was better than it could've been, though, considering how much rain has fallen on the golf course. We were able to get out and play, but it certainly wasn't a great day for scoring.

"Plus, I didn't have a towel to dry my hands and that made things even tougher."

Schillinger said the biggest problem he had with the weather was that it made it more difficult to grip his clubs.

"I had to add two extra clubs to most of my shots after we went back out because of the moisture," Schillinger said. "I couldn't take a normal swing with the club I would've normally used. The course, in my opinion, didn't change a whole lot after the rain."

In addition to Schillinger, Mount Dora got scoring from Bryce DeMott (52), Tyler Stapleton (54), and Carson Caulk (55).

The Hurricanes dropped to 3-6 on the season, while South Lake improved to 9-1.

Both teams will wrap up their regular season next week, with district tournaments set for the following week. The Class 3A-District 9 tournament will be held at Green Valley beginning at 9 a.m. on Oct. 13.

In addition to South Lake, Eustis, Lake Minneola, Tavares, Mount Dora and Umatilla will complete for a chance to advance to regional competition on Oct. 21 at Sanctuary Ridge in Clermont.

Howell is coached by David Wensyel, a former assistant coach at East Ridge under long-time head coach Bud O'Hara. After leaving East Ridge, Wensyel spent a season as interim head coach at Orlando Edgewater and a year as an assistant at Orlando East River before taking over at Winter Park Lake Howell during the summer.

Like Peera, who was hired at East Ridge after Ken Knapczyk abruptly resigned during spring practice, Wensyel has been forced to install his system as the season moved on.

In many ways, the regular season has been an extended spring practice session for both coaches.

Wensyel has been working to replace 26 seniors — most of them starters. Among those lost to graduation include a record-setting quarterback (Garrett Kruczek) and eight starters on defense.

If the Knights don't beat the Silver Hawks, it could be tough for East Ridge to pick up a win this season as the final four games present significant challenges.

Following the bye week, East Ridge will be back in action on Oct. 17 at Apopka Wekiva, followed by home games against Winter Springs and Ocoee.

Manning one TD away from 500

ARNIE STAPLETON
AP Pro Football Writer

ENGLEWOOD — Peyton Manning's next touchdown throw will be his 500th, and he's spreading the credit around just like he does the football.

The five-time MVP doesn't like to talk about individual accomplishments.

As he approaches another milestone in a career filled with so many big moments, however, Manning took time Wednesday to reflect on all the help he's received on his 499 TD passes.

He acknowledged that yes, he looks at his TD throws and interceptions every year because if the former is high and the latter low, "that means you're getting your team in the end zone and that means you're protecting the ball. I think that particular statistic usually leads to winning football games."

"As far as the other thing, obviously, you're just trying to win this football game," Manning said. "But when asked about it, I have reflected on how many great teammates and coaches that I've been with along the way that have been a part of that. You don't throw that many touchdowns without a lot of help."

It's not just the 44 players who have caught one of Manning's TD throws, but the rest of his teammates and coaches.

"As my old center Jeff Saturday said, the only reason I've thrown that many is because I had great protection for so many years. Typical lineman speaking, especially one in the media now," Manning said. "But to tell you the truth, he's right. There are so many people that have helped me along the way."

He'll face men who made big early impressions on him Sunday when the Denver Broncos (2-1) host Arizona (3-0).

Cardinals coach Bruce Arians was Manning's first quarterback coach when Manning arrived in the NFL in 1998. And Arizona's assistant head coach Tom Moore was his offensive coordinator during his 13 seasons in Indianapolis.

The Cardinals would love to delay Manning's milestone another week, but they know as well as anyone that it's probably just wishful thinking.

"That's tough because Peyton always finds a way to get the ball in the end zone," Cardinals cornerback Patrick Peterson said.

The last time Manning didn't throw a TD pass was Nov. 14, 2010, against Cincinnati.

So, chances are No. 500 will come sometime Sunday.

Brady hopes to snap out of slow start

HOWARD ULMAN
Associated Press

FOXBOROUGH, Mass. — Tom Brady tries not to get too high when things are going well or too low when they're not.

Good thing, considering how poorly the season has gone for him and the New England Patriots offense.

The winner of two MVP awards in both the regular season and the Super Bowl is ranked 27th in completion percentage, 29th in passer rating and 33rd in the 32-team NFL in average gain per attempt.

Now, coming off the second most lopsided loss in his 15 NFL seasons, he'll face the team that has allowed the fewest points per game (11) this season, the unbeaten Cincinnati Bengals, on Sunday night.

"It's important not to ride the wave of emotion of, 'Yeah, we're really great,' and, 'Yeah, we're terrible this week,'" Brady said Wednesday. "It doesn't serve any purpose other than to understand the things that you need to correct."

There are plenty of those. The offensive line has struggled with frequent personnel changes. Only one wide receiver has more than 10 catches.

In the last 14 quarters, Brady has led the offense to just 46 points. Backup Jimmy Garoppolo produced seven more when the rookie replaced Brady with just over 10 minutes left in Monday night's 41-14 rout by the Kansas City Chiefs.

Since, then Brady has been criticized by television analysts.

He said he's not listening as he prepares for the Bengals (3-0).

"I probably don't pay attention too much because I understand what's going on," Brady said. "I know probably a lot more information than you guys have, a lot more information than they have, and we're just trying to focus on the things we can do to get better."

But is he past his prime? "I'm trying to do the best job I can do," he said.

The Patriots (2-2) have little depth at any offensive position and the usually positive Brady was restrained in assessing the team.

Does he have the talent around him and blocking protection to succeed?

"We'll see," he said.

Arizona likely to key in on Oregon quarterback Mariota

ANNE M. PETERSON
Associated Press

EUGENE, Ore. — Last season Arizona went after Oregon quarterback Marcus Mariota early and kept on hassling him.

Expect the same when the Wildcats visit the No. 2 Ducks tonight at Autzen Stadium.

"Last year, getting to Mariota early on in the game probably threw him off a little bit. It always helps when we come out on fire in all cylinders. But it's a 60-minute game, and sometimes longer, so we need to try and keep the pressure on him and contain him the entire time," Arizona senior safety Jared Tevis said.

The 42-16 rout last November was Arizona's first over a top-five team since knocking off No. 2 Oregon in 2007.

STEVE DYKES / AP

Oregon quarterback Marcus Mariota runs with the ball during the second quarter against Wyoming earlier this season at Autzen Stadium in Eugene, Ore.

The Wildcats intercepted Mariota's pass on his first play from scrimmage, ending his Pac-12 record streak of 353 passes without a pick. Oregon's quarterback would finish with 308 yards passing with two touchdowns and two interceptions.

Mariota wore a brace on his knee in that game and later it was revealed that he had partially torn his medial collateral ligament in a game four weeks before.

Much like last season before his injury, Mariota is considered a leading Heisman candidate. He has thrown for 1,135 yards and 13 touchdowns with no interceptions. He's also run for three scores.

"It could be tough at times, but at the end of the day, it's only yourself that you can blame for the reason you were out," said Sanders, who also was the team's primary punt returner in 2013. "You couldn't harp on it too much. Just have to look at some of the positive stuff. You actually get a chance to sit down and be a spectator and actually take what you see watching the game and remember that stuff when you get back to play. That's really what I did."

Sanders announced July 22 that he was leaving the team and seeking treatment. The NFL suspended him the next day without pay. Sanders said "personal issues" caused his misstep and added that he was dealing with "a lot of stuff, just with life and family and a lot of issues going on."

He said Wednesday he's "in a better place."

Being back on the field made him feel even better.

"I think he's in a really good place right now," coach Gus Bradley said. "I know these last couple of weeks were tough on him, but it went fast for him and now he's got a chance. I think he's truly just looking forward where he's at."

Rookie managers Williams, Ausmus reach postseason

HOWARD FENDRICH
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Matt Williams was in his 18th game as a major league manager, still learning on the job, when he went with his gut.

Williams saw Bryce Harper hit a comebacker in the sixth inning, jog out of the batter's box and veer off toward the home dugout, several strides before first base. Williams yanked Harper from the Washington Nationals' lineup. That decision in April was one of many that made clear Williams would do things his way, something he was taught by a couple of his managers, Dusty Baker and Bob Brenly.

"Dusty told me to be me. You can't ... try to be somebody that you're not. When Bryce didn't run to first, it made me mad," Williams said. "You've got to be who you are, warts and all."

Williams, whose Nationals host Game 1 of an NL Division Series on Friday, and Brad Ausmus, whose Tigers open their ALDS at Baltimore on Thursday, are attempting to accomplish something only four men have in baseball's long history: win a World Series as a first-time manager.

Brenly was the most recent, with the 2001 Diamondbacks, whose third baseman happened to be Williams. The others: Bucky Harris, 1924 Senators; Eddie Dyer, 1946 Cardinals; Ralph Houk, 1961 Yankees. Only 11 other rookie skippers reached a World Series, according to STATS.

Both Williams and Ausmus are recently removed from lengthy playing careers (Williams, 48, retired in 2003 after 17 years; Ausmus, 45, stopped in 2010 after 18 years). Both replaced long-time managers (Davy Johnson; Jim Leyland) and kept the predecessor's bench coach and pitching coach. Both took over talented teams (the 2012 Nationals won 98 games; the Tigers' 2014 AL Central title is their fourth straight).

And both get credit in their clubhouses for keeping an even keel, connecting with players and, above all, being themselves.

"It's: How do you get the most out of these individuals and humans to win?" Ausmus said. "I think that's the most important part, and sometimes in this sabermetric age, that's lost."

The Tigers went 9-20 from mid-May to mid-June. Starter Anibal Sanchez got injured in August. They slid to second place when the Royals went on a tear. Ausmus never wavered.

"Whether we were winning six in a row or losing — whatever it was, he was the same guy," Detroit's Don Kelly said. "I don't know about inwardly, but at least to everybody else, he was the same guy."

Williams dealt with Harper, Ryan Zimmerman, Wilson Ramos and Doug Fister each spending more than a month on the disabled list. Stephen Strasburg lobbied to stay in games longer. Bullpen management didn't come naturally.

There were three potentially disruptive moments involving Harper: what Williams called "lack of hustle" in April; Harper publicly voicing lineup opinions in June; a radio-interview flap in August over whether a

Let Scully work alone as always and spin stories, like the time in 1956 he called Don Larsen's perfect game at Yankee Stadium on NBC and was afraid to say much more than "Strike 3" because he had been told the new medium would tell the story. Nothing to lose, because World Series ratings have been sinking for decades now.

SET THINGS STRAIGHT — Selig will be gone in January, which is probably a good thing for baseball. Selig did what commissioners are supposed to do, which is make owners money and get taxpayers to build new ballparks. But he turned a blind eye to the steroid scandal and will leave office still thinking Barry Bonds is the career home run leader. The new commissioner should on his first day of the job declare any offensive mark set between 1988 (Jose Canseco's heyday) and today void simply because they can't be believed.

ALL STARS — If Manfred still has time on his first day he should abolish Selig's rule giving the league that wins the All-Star game home-field advantage in the World Series. The desperate attempt to make the All-Star game meaningful in some way was a joke from the beginning.

SOLVE THE DH — Either ban the designated hitter all together or make it mandatory in the National League, too. No other sport plays by different rules in different divisions, but baseball hasn't figured out the DH dilemma since it was introduced in the American League 41 years ago. It's an issue in the postseason when AL pitchers are ill-prepared to hit in NL parks, and NL rosters are not built with a slugger to plug in the middle of the lineup.

FIX INSTANT REPLAY — Baseball was a latecomer to the instant replay party, but got it mostly right in its inaugural season. What needs to go away is the dance that has developed when managers come out of the dugout to stall while getting word whether to appeal a call or not.

LET PETE IN — It's way past time to allow Pete Rose back into the game. Selig's refusal to revisit the subject of the hits king doesn't make sense anymore, if it ever did. Rose has more than served his time for betting on games, yet his only connection to the game remains signing baseballs in Las Vegas. Meanwhile, others who have disgraced baseball by using steroids are working in dugouts and keep appearing on Hall of Fame ballots.

SPEED THINGS UP — In one of his final acts in office, Selig formed a committee to come up with recommendations to speed up games that now top out at an average of more than three hours apiece. No committee needed because it's mostly common sense. Make batters stay in the box; don't let pitchers stroll from the mound. Add to that some batting gloves that don't need to be constantly adjusted, and the game will suddenly be a half hour shorter.

ONE SONG IS ENOUGH — Playing the national anthem before the game is a time-honored tradition that began in baseball and has been embraced by almost every sport. But is there really a need for another song during the seventh-inning stretch to remind us we live in the greatest country on earth? "God Bless America" is a fine tune, but fans buy tickets for a baseball game, not a patriotic rally.

CELEBRATE KERSHAW — He's most often compared to Sandy Koufax, but it may not be long before Clayton Kershaw is the one that others are compared to. He's an artist on the mound, with four straight ERA titles, and will likely be the National League MVP as well as Cy Young winner.

He's also the highest paid pitcher in the game, but he and his wife are heavy into charitable activities, including building an orphanage in Africa. About the only thing Kershaw hasn't done is pitch well deep into the postseason.

Trout makes playoff debut tonight

GREG BEACHAM
Associated Press

ANAHEIM — Mike Trout asked Albert Pujols for advice on his playoff debut before the Los Angeles Angels stepped into the October spotlight, and the veteran slugger with two World Series rings had some simple guidance for baseball's best young player.

"He told me to just be myself, and not try to hit that home run when you don't need it," Trout said. "Just keep that same swing that got you here, and go from there. (But) it's definitely a bigger game, for sure. All eyes are on you."

Trout reaches the milestone he craves most Thursday night when he runs out to center field at the Big A for the Angels' AL Division Series opener against the Kansas City Royals, who must concoct a quick encore to their incredible 12-inning comeback victory in the wild-card game.

Trout led the majors in RBIs, runs and extra-base hits this season for the major league-leading Angels (98-64), capping nearly three full seasons of electrifying play with a likely MVP campaign — and a playoff berth.

It sure beats last October, which the New Jersey native spent back home in a tree stand when he wasn't watching the playoffs on television.

"Now I'm hunting a ring instead of deer," Trout said with a laugh.

While the Royals are in their first postseason since 1985, the Angels hadn't been in the playoffs since 2009, and several regulars share Trout's lack of experience on the big stage. But Pujols has a vaunted postseason history from his time in St. Louis, and third baseman David Freese was the MVP of the World Series and the NL Championship Series for the Cardinals just three years ago.

While Freese was having the best month of his career in 2011, Trout was coming off his season in the Double-A Texas League. Trout spent just 20 more games in the minors before heading to Orange County to stay.

"I don't think I need to say anything to Mike Trout," Freese said. "He's been in the spotlight since Day One, and he's going to be in it again. The game is better with Mike Trout in the postseason. I think we all understand that, and it's exciting to get him in there and get Albert back in there."

Indeed, the big-budget Angels are getting a return on their lavish investments in Trout, Pujols and Josh Hamilton, who will return to the Angels' lineup for the opener, batting seventh and playing left field after missing 21 of the last 22 games with injuries.

Angels ace Jered Weaver (18-9, 3.59 ERA) starts against Kansas City's Jason Vargas (11-10, 3.71), who pitched for Los Angeles last year. The pitchers have been close friends since their days at nearby Long Beach State — but before their families take their joint vacation already planned for this winter, they'll attempt to keep their clubs rolling.

"There aren't very many players like (Trout) that come along," Vargas said. "(But) you're going to have to negotiate that whole lineup, and if you think about one hitter, your work is going to be cut out for you."

Tigers hope starters can outdo O's bullpen

DAVID GINSBURG
Associated Press

BALTIMORE — The Detroit Tigers' starting pitchers in the first three games of the AL Division Series have a combined 329 wins, three Cy Young Awards and 35 games of postseason experience.

Baltimore's starters carry less impressive credentials, yet they don't necessarily have to outpitch their Detroit counterparts for the Orioles to advance.

All they have to do is keep it close, then hand the baseball over to one of the best bullpens in major leagues.

Detroit (90-72) didn't win as many games as the Orioles (96-66), who ran away with the AL

East title to earn home-field advantage in the best-of-five series that begins today. But the AL Central-champion Tigers have been installed as a slight favorite — mainly because of their formidable starting rotation.

Max Scherzer (18-5, 3.15 ERA) starts on Thursday, followed by Justin Verlander (15-12, 4.54) and David Price (15-12, 3.26). That also happens to be a list of the last three AL Cy Young winners.

Advantage, Detroit? "I think we all know what it looks like on paper," Orioles manager Buck Showalter said Wednesday. "But there's a lot of things that look a certain way on paper for us that we were able to overcome."

Orioles right-hander Chris Tillman (13-6, 3.34 ERA) will make his first foray into the postseason in the opener. Although Showalter declined the announced his starters for Friday and Sunday, they will likely be Wei-Yin Chen (16-6, 3.54) and Miguel Gonzalez (10-9, 3.23), each of whom has pitched in exactly one playoff game.

If playoff experience and Cy Young Awards mean anything, then Detroit has a decent chance to reach the AL Championship Series for a fourth straight year.

"Pitching. That's what wins ballgames," Price said. "If we put up zeroes early, that kind of gives our offense a chance to kind of settle into the game."

QUESTIONS & ATTITUDE

Compelling questions ... and maybe a few actual answers

Associated Press / NICK WASS

Aric Almirola and the No. 43 have been Chased away. And that should come as no surprise.

Well, any surprises?

No, but maybe that in itself is sorta surprising. With 16 "playoff teams" at the start of the Chase's first three-race segment (oops, sorry ... the "Challenger Round"), many of us assumed that at least one of first four to be eliminated would be someone who didn't belong on that first bus out of town. But it didn't happen, which means it's practically certain to happen after this next three-race segment (there I go again ... I mean the "Contender Round").

Care to explain why the "Four out the door" didn't shock you?

Kurt Busch has been hit-and-miss all year, mostly miss, with a startup team. AJ Allmendinger made the Chase by winning a rain-shortened race, and Greg Biffle made it despite not winning anywhere but staying close enough to the lead pack to gather points and make a Chase cameo.

Now what?

Good news for the four departing contestants. No parting gifts, but unlike other sports teams and competitors, they can keep playing instead of going home and making a tee time. Wait, is that good news?

HOT TOPICS: 3 ISSUES GENERATING A BUZZ

The drive for 5

Associated Press / NICK WASS

Four wins this year, four championships in the past — celebrating in Dover's Victory Lane is the whole Gordon clan, including wife Ingrid and kids Ella and Leo (along with the very cool "Monster Mile" trophy).

What is the deal with Jeff Gordon? Is a fifth championship in the works?

For several years now, he seemed content to win a few races, make it into the Chase, then head from Homestead to his New York City apartment to celebrate the holidays with his family.

Between the 2008 and 2010 seasons, Gordon won just one race. Three seasons. One Sprint Cup victory.

He picked up the pace over 2011-13 with six wins, but watched as Tony Stewart, Brad Keselowski and teammate Jimmie Johnson dominated the championship scene.

This year, he's been hot right out of the gate and won for the fourth time this season at Dover in Victory Lane on Sunday by his two young children.

Something has energized the veteran driver, but nobody is quite sure what to make of this surge, which is somewhat reminiscent of his "Wonder Boy" years, when he wrestled the championship mantle from Dale Earnhardt Sr. Gordon credits crew chief Alan Gustafson. Team owner Rick Hendrick credits the 2014 rules package, which produced tighter race cars.

"As soon as we showed up with this package, Jeff has been solid," Hendrick said. "Alan leaves nothing undone in every area of that team, and I think Jeff has really just stepped it up," Hendrick added. "He's really enjoying himself."

Sunday's win was Gordon's 92nd, third-best on the all-time list behind Richard Petty and David Pearson. With his latest contract extension, Gordon has at least three more years to crack the 100-win mark.

"I never dreamed in a million years that I would be here talking to you after 92 wins, and especially at this point in my career, this many years in the sport, to be having the year that we're having, it's just something I never thought could happen," Gordon said. "It feels amazing."

MR. CLEAN

There was a lot of tiptoeing around Dover on Sunday as several drivers were just looking for a solid finish in order to advance to the next chapter of this year's Chase. The Chase field was clipped to 12 drivers when the checkered flag fell on the AAA 400. Playing it safe? There were just five yellow flags during the race, and three of those were for debris on the track.

TALLADEGA TREMORS

The next elimination round includes races at Kansas, Charlotte and Talladega. The mere mention of the "T" word had Chase drivers rolling their eyes and holding their collective breath. Brad Keselowski predicts a nerve-wracking experience. "Surviving Talladega is its own horror film title, but it's also a reality," he said. "There are gonna be a lot of guys on the bubble and it's probably all gonna change on the last lap and the last corner."

Alan Gustafson, Gordon's crew chief, hopes to win again before heading to Alabama.

"The two guys who are able to lock in at Kansas and Charlotte are going to go there in a lot better mood than the rest of the competitors," Gustafson said.

SPEED FREAKS

A couple questions we had to ask — ourselves

Associated Press / NICK WASS

Jeff Gordon has rediscovered his "game face."

Do you really think Jeff Gordon can finally get that fifth championship?

GODSPEAK: He's deep in the hunt, and he should be hungry; it's been a while since No. 4.

KEN'S CALL: This new format was built for him. Hang around, hang around, go big at Homestead. No problem.

Any chance Kevin Harvick's luck will ever change?

GODSPEAK: His car is so fast, he may go into a time warp, like Marty McFly. Back to the future!

KEN'S CALL: He'll be out front on the last lap at Homestead, then get hit by a meteor.

DOVER REWIND

Edwards says he's looking forward to Talladega Chase race

Carl Edwards made the first Chase cut, but just barely, in his No. 99 Roush Fenway Racing Ford. The three-car Roush team has been down all season. Ricky Stenhouse Jr. didn't make the Chase, and Greg Biffle missed the first cut Sunday at Dover.

Edwards, who is exiting RFR at season's end, finished 11th at Dover and is ranked 10th in the standings. He talked about the race, the season and championship hopes with the media after the AAA 400.

How did your race go?

"It was just a solid day. The car was actually pretty decent and everybody did a really good job. The pit crew did great, and (crew chief) Jimmy (Fennig) did a great job with the car, and that's what we needed. We had a top-10 car and finished 11th, but I think if I would have done a little better job on the restarts we would have been better."

Any anxious moments?

"Yeah, there were a lot of anxious moments. We were running 21st at one point, and that's tough."

How do you view the next three races?

"This is built for us. We're having a hard time here. We keep making small gains, and getting the opportunity to be put back in the same position as the guys in front of us is a huge opportunity for us. We've got to capitalize on it and go run well at Kansas and Charlotte. We know we can win Talladega, so I look forward to that race. That's the first time I've ever looked forward to Talladega in the Chase, but I'm looking forward to it."

This keeps your hopes alive of winning a title for car owner Jack Roush. What does that mean to you?

"There are a bunch of things important to me right now. I want to do very well for Jack and finish strong. This is Jimmy Fennig's last year on the box, but, honestly, more important than that to me is I understand how fleeting and how rare these opportunities are to win championships. They come once a year if you're very lucky, so I just want to make the most of it."

Kvitova, Venus rematch set at China Open

JUSTIN BERGMAN Associated Press

BEIJING — Petra Kvitova and Venus Williams will meet in the third round of the China Open in a reprise of their dramatic, three-set encounter at Wimbledon.

The third-seeded Czech defeated Peng Shuai of China 6-4, 6-2 beneath the roof on center court on a cold, rainy Wednesday in Beijing. Williams advanced on Tuesday with a win over France's Caroline Garcia.

In June, Kvitova was two points from defeat in a third-round match with Williams, but came back to prevail 5-7, 7-6 (2), 7-5 and ride that momentum all the way to her second Wimbledon title.

"Every match (I have) played with Venus was a really great fight until the end," Kvitova said. "It's the third round in the tournament. It's very early to meet each other again, same as Wimbledon."

Kvitova leads their head-to-head series 4-1, but each match has gone three sets. Both players are on a roll, too, with Kvitova coming off a title at the Wuhan Open last week that qualified her for the WTA Finals in Singapore, and Williams reaching two finals in Canada this summer. "I feel well on the court," Kvitova said. "My confidence is a little bit higher than after the U.S. Open."

The rain wiped out play on the outer courts, leaving only a handful of matches scheduled for center court.

Former U.S. Open champion Samantha Stosur upset No. 6-seeded Caroline Wozniacki 6-4, 7-6 (9).

Wozniacki, who is having a resurgent season and had won 25 of her last 31 matches, wasted five set points and double-faulted three times in the second-set tiebreaker, including on match point.

Nobody delivers like the Daily Commercial.

Don Magruder:
Chief Executive Officer
Ro-Mac Lumber & Supply, Inc.

For 34 years, Don Magruder, Chief Executive Officer of Ro-Mac Lumber & Supply, Inc., has been supplying building materials for projects across the South, but his most successful projects have come in his service to others.

As manager of the Leesburg 16U Babe Ruth Girls Fastpitch Softball Team, he led the team to a 2006 State Championship. Don is a sponsor and proponent of Habitat for Humanity of Lake-Sumter, and he has helped the organization provide affordable housing for local working families.

As a sponsor of Lake Cares Food Pantry, Magruder has organized food drives and fundraisers to feed the hungry in Lake County. He believes no one should ever go to bed hungry. Don Magruder reads the Daily Commercial because it has the best local news coverage, plus he can keep up with all of the local community projects that are the most important to him.

We deliver more than the news to Lake and Sumter counties. Being involved - at work and outside of business - is just another way that we're connected to our community.

THE DAILY COMMERCIAL IS LOOKING FOR WRITERS, PHOTOGRAPHERS AND PART-TIME COPY EDITORS WHO WANT TO CONTRIBUTE TO THIS AWARD-WINNING PUBLICATION. Writers and photographers will be paid by the assignment. Copy editors will work in the Daily Commercial office and will be paid per shift. We strongly prefer applicants with experience in the publishing field. The positions we are filling include:

ENTERTAINMENT/CULTURE WRITER: Should be someone who is brimming with ideas and is curious about culture, the arts and nightlife. Must be creative, passionate and adept at finding quirky features and writing the kind of trend stories that get attention.

SPORTS WRITER: We're looking for people who can cover high school sports in the fall and winter. Must have an expansive knowledge of sports, be strong writers and have the ability to turn around 300-400 word articles quickly. Ability to shoot photos is a plus.

OUTDOORS WRITER: Love fishing, biking, hiking and camping? Spend all your free time outdoors? We're looking for someone who lives for outdoor recreation, knows what Lake and Sumter counties have to offer and can write about it with style and substance. Ability to shoot photos is a plus.

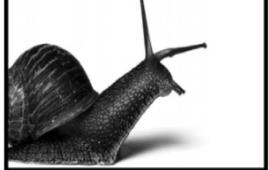

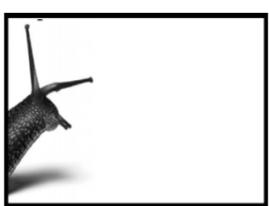

PHOTOGRAPHER: When you look through a camera, do you see special moments where other people see average events? Whether it's the city council meeting, a photo feature on the person turning 100, a rodeo, fair or fire, we need a photographer who can document the events and draw people into the newspaper. Must shoot digital and be able to transmit photos to my email quickly and efficiently.

COPY EDITOR: Candidates must be able to demonstrate skill in editing, headline writing and page layout. The job will include evening and weekend work. Strong knowledge of InDesign is essential.

If you're Interested In being part of our team, please send a brief cover letter, resume and samples of your work to Executive Editor Tom McNiff at tom.mcniiff@daillycommercial.com

'TWO FACES': A tense thriller with a nice cast / C3

Sudan's 'Lost Boys'

'The Good Lie' earns its tearful moments, and that's the truth

ROGER MOORE
MCT

The saga of Sudan's "Lost Boys," following refugees who wound up in America after fleeing the civil war there, earns an engaging, tear-jerking retelling in "The Good Lie," a fictionalized account of what faced them.

Sudanese children, often orphaned, fled the country in the 1980s and spent much of the '90s in refugee camps in neighboring countries. About 3,600 of them were allowed to emigrate to America pre-9/11. "Good Lie" follows a handful of them, from the brutal assault on their village to their 1,000-mile trek to safety.

But "safety" is just the first long leg of their journey. Safety means, in the case of Mamere, Jeremiah, Paul and their sister Abital, merely escape from the free-fire zone, where Islamic rebels burn, shoot or kidnap anything in sight. These children have seen death, buried friends and comrades and crossed rivers and deserts just to grow up in a Kenyan refugee camp.

They are young adults — played by Arnold Oceng, Ger Duany, Emmanuel Jal and Kuoth Wiel — by the time the United States agrees to take them in.

Canadian director Philippe Falardeau ("Monsieur Lazhar"), working from a script by Margaret Nagle ("Warm Springs"), then finds the lighter side of this tragic tale of survival. And he does it with such a deft touch that the weight of that long prologue never leaves the movie — even after pixie Reese Witherspoon shows up.

She plays Callie, a Kansas City employment counselor, entirely too provincial to know what she's getting into when she picks up the three boys (Abital, their sister, has been sent to Boston) at the airport. Their preparations for America consisted mainly of being handed a piece of ice to show how much colder it is in the Midwest than it is in Africa.

"The Good Lie" — the titles come from Huckleberry Finn's lesson in lies that serve a moral purpose — shifts from survival epic to fish-out-of-water comedy as "Stone Age"

Amazon series 'Transparent' is astonishing

Sometimes a slow start pays off.

Netflix may have overshadowed Amazon's entrance into the world of original-content "television," but the site formerly known as a bookstore is stepping into the klieg lights and undoubtedly onto the red carpet with Jill Soloway's "Transparent."

Debuting last year as part of Amazon's rather gimmicky pilot process (where viewers vote on which shows should become series), "Transparent" combines the "House of Cards"-like thrill of watching an established star do breathtaking work with the new-world fearlessness of "Orange Is the New Black."

David Fincher, Ben Affleck and the vanishing 'Gone Girl'

RENE RODRIGUEZ
MCT

When Gillian Flynn, author of "Gone Girl," which has sold more than two million copies, finished writing her screenplay for a film, she gave it to her husband to read — along with a yellow magic marker.

"I told him to underline anything he objected to," says Flynn, author of two other novels and a former writer for Entertainment Weekly. "I told him I would delete or rework anything he objected to, because these characters are pretty mean to each other, and I didn't want anyone to think I had based any of it on him."

Her husband read the script and returned it unmarked.

One of the bleakest and most honest depictions of a troubled marriage to hit the best-seller list — as well as a corker of a mystery and a commentary on the country's economic instability and the carnivorous nature of the media — "Gone Girl" seemed perfect for a movie, except for one thing. The novel was filled with flashbacks and diary entries that would require voiceovers, the bane of most filmmakers. The story also had the chronology of a puzzle, with not everything making sense until the last page.

Still, when Flynn's script started making the rounds, it caught the attention of David Fincher ("The Social Network," "Seven," "The Girl with the Dragon Tattoo"), who asked Flynn if she would have dinner with him in St. Louis, where he was shooting a project.

"My wife had read the book and told me there was something really interesting there," says Fincher. "I was blown away by it. But I also knew Gillian was contractually bound to deliver a first draft of a script soon, so I waited for that. I didn't know if you could solve the diary, the flashbacks, if you could integrate all that without it feeling intrusive. I wasn't convinced it was possible. And then I read her script and thought 'You can do this! She had cracked it.'"

Except for a slightly different ending (which still preserves the tone of the book) and the omission of a few minor characters, "Gone Girl," which opens Oct. 3, is one of the most faithful film adaptations ever made. Ben Affleck and Rosamund Pike play Nick and Amy Dunne, whose happy existence in New York City is derailed when they lose their jobs writing for magazines and move back to Missouri to take care of Nick's ailing mother. He opens a neighborhood bar with his sister and settles down into a blue-collar life, while Amy becomes increasingly unhappy about their new home. Then, on their fifth wedding anniversary, Nick is at the bar when he gets a call from a neighbor, saying his front door is ajar.

Nick rushes back home and finds signs of a struggle — broken furniture, shattered glass, traces of blood — and no Amy. The police become involved and, as usual, the husband becomes the primary subject. But without Amy's body, which has vanished, no charges can be brought against anyone. And the longer the body is missing, the more guilty Nick appears.

Like the book, "Gone Girl" is a terrific thriller. But it also has a lot to say about the nature of marriage and questions how well we can ever really know another person. When Nick and Amy are lying in bed, and he caresses her hair, his hand looks like a claw trying to extract information

Friday, complete with complimentary wine, beer and hors d'oeuvres, before the curtain opens at 8 p.m. The celebration will continue with an after-party for theatergoers, cast and crew at Two Old Hags.

After Friday's opening, the play will run for two more weekends through Oct. 19.

J. Scott Berry, who stars as Vanya, was introduced to "Vanya and Sonia and Masha and Spike" while watching the Tony Awards on television — his favorite annual ritual — and he was intrigued by seeing a clip of the Broadway show.

As president of the theater's board of trustees, he sent off for the script, loved it and purchased it for the other board members to read.

"They all read it and said, 'This is hysterical and we should do this play,'" Berry said of the show, which revolves around three siblings in their 50s as they deal with envy, family and aging during a weekend reunion when the oldest sister, a former movie star diva, returns home with the news that she is selling the family home.

J. Scott Berry, left, portraying Vanya, is shown with Mary Rose Gray (Sonia), Laney Clark (Masha) and Lauren Morgan (Nina) in "Vanya and Sonia and Masha and Spike."

"Nobody has heard of this show because it is so new," he said. "It's very funny, but it is a smart comedy in that it will make you think and evaluate your life a little bit, and it will inspire you to hope and to keep dreaming."

Melon Patch was hoping to be the first theater to premiere the show in Florida, but it has since learned "Vanya and Sonia and Masha and Spike" has been performed in St. Petersburg and Daytona.

"We are definitely the first in Lake County," said Berry, who believes the comedy, geared for adults only, will be a hit. He noted the show features language and adult material not appropriate for younger audiences.

"It's really about us as adults and what we go through," he said. "I like to say it is about me, but I think the play is about when you realize that you are not going to achieve all of your goals and dreams in life. I am not going to do all of the things that I wanted to do, and you look back on your life and you begin to feel bitter. At the end, the play is about hope."

In addition to Scott as the sarcastic brother, Vanya, others in the cast are Mary Rose Gray as adopted sister Sonia, who detests her life; Laney Lavine as Masha, who struggles to come to grips with her fading celebrity as a superstar; Jakob Preston as Spike, Masha's hunky boy toy; Charlotte Jardine as Cassandra, the cleaning lady; and Lauren Morgan, portraying Nina, the young, sweet neighbor next door.

The show marks Gray's return to the theater.

"Back in the 1980s and 1990s, she was a huge leading lady and has done some professional work and tons of theater and has not been on stage in a very long time, and this is her return to the stage," said Scott, who also praised Derek Wallman's in his directing debut.

Melon Patch is located at 311 N. 13th St., Leesburg, and tickets are $16 for Friday's opening night, which is $2 off the regular price. Tickets may be reserved by calling 352-787-3013. After Friday, tickets will be $18 for adults and $9 for college students.

'How to Get Away With Murder' keeps spotlight on Viola Davis

Many things have changed about television lately, but murder still makes the world go 'round.

An astonishing variety of characters, environments and scenarios can be wrapped around the sturdy framework of a crime/legal procedural and coaxed into bloom. In ABC's "How to Get Away With Murder," which premieres Thursday, it's the high-anxiety bubble of law school, previously best captured in the 1973 film "The Paper Chase."

Centered on a career-redefining performance by Jeffrey Tambor as a retired professor finally allowing himself to live his true life as a woman, the half-hour, 10-episode series is, quite simply, astonishing to watch.

Soloway ("Six Feet Under," "The United States of Tara") is working somewhat from personal experience — her father came out as transgender — but that feels less important than her big heart and gimlet eye. From the moment it opens, "Transparent," being billed as a "dark comedy," plants itself in familial and environmental reality.

In the leafy hills near Hollywood, by the "shores" of Silver Lake, dwell the various members of the Pfefferman family, the sort of Angelenos instantly recognizable to frequenters of eateries like Toast and Little Dom's.

Sarah (Amy Landecker) is the high-strung, super-organized mom in denial about her mortifyingly lifeless marriage; Ali (Gaby Hoffman) is still trying to rock the dreamy waif persona; and Josh (Jay Duplass) is a successful record producer who sleeps with his lovely young clients.

They are equal parts lovable and irritating in their utter narcissism, which is in turn over-chronicled. "Transparent's" biggest flaw is Soloway's determination to give each of her children equal attention, which means everyone's in some state of crisis or another and they all talk about it way too much.

But if it is a sin, it's one of overenthusiasm. Whatever harm that brings is more than compensated for by the slow and quiet miracle of Tambor's Mort, the Pfefferman patriarch who is transitioning to Maura, and who doesn't quite know how to tell the kids.

Tambor is not the first to attempt such a role — John Lithgow played Roberta Muldoon in "The World According to Garp," Tom Wilkinson transitioned from Roy to Ruth Applewood in "Normal," Hilary Swank won an Oscar for "Boys Don't Cry," among others — but Maura is the first transitioning transgender character to anchor a television series. And Tambor is a revelation.

The contrast between his quick, bright smile and those mournful eyes has never been put to better use. His ability to summon two characters — Mort burdened by frustration and shame, Maura buoyed by anxious joy — often with his posture alone offers audiences not just enlightenment on transgender issues but a master class in acting.

'Two Faces' builds tension, has nice cast

DEBORAH YOUNG
MCT

LOS ANGELES — Who can say no to a good Patricia Highsmith adaptation? Though her 1964 suspense thriller "The Two Faces of January" is not the easiest story to bring to the screen. Still, the production, shot in Greece and Turkey, is truly lush and the actors — Viggo Mortensen, Oscar Isaac and Kirsten Dunst — almost too subtle and nuanced for the roles they play. The result is easy viewing.

Built around a trio of greedy, lying, vapid losers, the film opens in Athens at one of the world's most clichéd tourist sights, the Parthenon. But it's 1962 and things looked newer then. Rydal (Isaac), a good-looking young American expat living in Greece, is playing tour guide to a group of breathless college girls while portentously talking about "the cruel tricks gods play on men," when a swanky American couple frolicking around the ruins catch his eye. Chester McFarland (Mortensen) is not easy to warm up at first glance. Much older than his pretty wife Colette (Dunst), there's a shrewdness about him that allows him to size Rydal up on the spot, watching as the boy brazenly short-changes one of the girls on his tour. Rydal tells the couple he's a Yale grad who's in Europe while he tries to figure out what he wants to do in life. Chester says he's an investment broker and hires the boy to take them around. Neither one seems particularly trustworthy and the viewer makes a note. Over dinner that evening, Rydal can't take his eyes off the light-hearted Colette, though his own date (Daisy Bevan) seems equally worthy of attention, not to mention rich and available. Since the underground Colette-Rydal attraction is so crucial to the plot, it would have behooved everyone to work on a little chemistry.

In addition to jealousy, Chester has new problems to deal with when a private eye sent by the mob (played tough by a hard-nosed David Warshofsky) tracks him down to his luxurious hotel room, just as he and Colette are tucking into bed. Awkwardly, the men decide to talk in the bathroom, and by the next scene Chester is dragging his unconscious nemesis down the thickly carpeted hall back to his own room. Rydal appears at the wrong moment and is forced to help him, not realizing the trouble he's getting into.

The most puzzling piece of plotting is why the McFarlands check out of the hotel in the dead of night, leaving their passports behind. The moment they leave the hotel they are on the lam, in a foreign country, without any way to get home. Sensing easy money to be made, Rydal follows them like a guardian angel and whisks them into hiding on the scintillating island of Crete, where a lot of story takes place. Suffice it to say things go from bad to much worse.

The film's major plus is its exotic atmosphere. It's a time when you could still meet men like Chester who had been on the European front in World War II and returned as tourists, and when smart Ivy League grads could bum around the continent instead of paying off student loans.

'Gone With the Wind' at 75: Celebration and censure

MIKE CIDONI LENNOX
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — As its 75th anniversary approaches, "Gone With the Wind" is again being celebrated as a timeless movie classic. But now, even the film's distributor acknowledges the Civil War epic's portrayal of slavery is dated and inaccurate.

"Gone With the Wind" screened this weekend in 650 theaters nationwide, was broadcast Monday by Turner Classic Movies and was reissued Tuesday in a lavish home-video box set, including a music box, an embroidered handkerchief and more than eight hours of bonus features.

To produce something new for yet another "GWTW" box set, Warner Bros. Home Entertainment brought in filmmaker and historian Gary Leva. "There's been a ton of stuff about the making of the film," Leva recalls the studio telling him.

"Can you give us a deeper look at how the movie portrays the Civil War?"

Leva responded with the 30-minute documentary "Old South/New South," which drew a surprisingly frank conclusion for a studio-commissioned commemorative project: One of the world's all-time great films also has great shortcomings.

In the documentary, which is included in the box sets out Tuesday, historians discuss how the film has perpetuated mythology dubbed "The Lost Cause," which proposes Southern involvement in the Civil War was solely for noble reasons, including defense of states' rights.

"But when you get right down to it, what state right are you talking about?" asks University of North Carolina history professor David Goldfield in the Leva film. "You're talking about the right of individuals to own slaves."

Based on Margaret Mitchell's 1936 best-seller, "Gone With the Wind" is fiction, about a spoiled Old South socialite, Scarlett O'Hara. But the real-life war that serves as her story's backdrop looms too large in the film for many to overlook.

"(Slavery) is such a component of the movie, and the characters who you are rooting for are oblivious," noted film critic and TCM host Ben Mankiewicz.

him as a slave. Combined, the albums reveal a muse blissfully free of constraints.

At their best, songs suggest an explorer freshly refueled by the Mothership and eager to roam. Tracks burst with aural delight while honoring their creator's noble weirdness — at one point during his rant against cloud computing, "Clouds," Prince zips 45 years into the future after a period of suspended animation — and sense of humor. For example, this "Tic Tac Toe" refrain: "Like a bunch of blind people playing tic tac toe / Who knows where the zeros and the Xs go?"

But the records also reveal his flaws: Prince errs on the side of bounty, is blind to the occasional clunker and still fancies himself a talent scout when he has his pick of could-be collaborators.

The full-lengths are at odds thematically and sonically: "Art Official Age" flows with synthetic beats, fake hand claps, futuristic bleeps, chipmunk-style vocals, rap, modernist R&B and a brand of digital seduction that Prince does better than anyone. The other, "PlectrumElectrum," rocks hard and with great distortion, and it seems a kind of negation of "Art Official Age." At various times, "Plectrum" sounds like a response to the work of the Black Keys, Jimi Hendrix and

NPG RECORDS / AP

On Tuesday, Prince released his first album in four years, "Art Official Age," along with music from his latest protege act, 3RDEYEGIRL, "PlectrumElectrum."

Gary Clark Jr. Both albums share a song, "Funk n Roll," which Prince performs two ways.

Though the rock record has its moments and is ferociously played, its songs are relatively flat. If you're looking for a freaky good time, "Art Official" is your ticket.

Doubt Prince can still bring it? Cue up that album's "Breakdown," your new favorite sad Prince-wails-like-he's-losing-it ballad, replete with laser-gun sounds. I can already imagine actor-comedian Maya Rudolph mimicking Prince's stutter-phrased, falsetto-peaked line, "waking up in places that you would never believe." The not-so-coy seduction of "Breakfast Can Wait" is a musical riff on the funny story that aired on "Chappelle's Show" involving Prince, sibling comedians Charlie and Eddie Murphy, entouragees, late-night basketball and early-morning pancakes.

It's tough to criticize Prince for offering such a welcome bounty, even if some of it's so-so. After all, who among the '80s superstars remains as relevant? U2? Madonna? Bruce Springsteen? I'll take the flawed, weird Prince rock of "PlectrumElectrum" over a conservatively bland U2 or Springsteen album any day. And I'll take an exquisite Prince R&B album like "Art Official Age" over pretty much anything else released this year.

Sudanese villagers are exposed to electricity, telephones, modern appliances and American humor for the first time. Cute.

They've all learned their English from the Bible, and Mamere (Oceng) expresses himself in the most delightfully dated and genteel way.

"You make our hearts throb with your many kindnesses ... May you find a husband to fill your empty house."

Witherspoon plays the straight man to these "lost" lads. But this formulaic feel-good film succeeds or fails on their performances, and the guys are winners. Oceng makes the responsible, guilt-ridden Mamere charming. Jal brings a bitter confusion to Paul, who gets more "lost" as he starts to hang out with the stoners at the factory where he finds a job. And Duany has a lanky soulfulness as Jeremiah, the moral center of their group, a would-be preacher who narrates the story even as he serves as a tall, thin sight gag.

Witherspoon's appearance got the movie made and there was early talk of a "Blind Side" sort of Oscar nomination for it. But Callie's earthy, working class common sense is more the icing on this cake than a central part of it. It's a performance by a performer with the grace to know it's not about her, and she surrenders the spotlight.

"Good Lie" rambles a bit and telegraphs its ending. But its earnestness in reminding us of this story and just what America represents to the world's rising tide of refugees, and why, makes it a winner, a valuable history lesson wrapped in a feel-good bow.

Medications kept under lock and key ensure kids' safety

DEAR ABBY: You missed the chance to communicate a life-or-death message to your readers when you answered a letter from an "Ohio Grandma" (July 14).

Your reply understated the importance of storing medications properly and safely. What if the grandmother had placed a loaded GUN on the desk instead of medications? Both can produce just as deadly a result.

And why didn't those meds have safety lids? Putting them in a suitcase is not enough. They should be stored out of reach, preferably secured with a safety lock. Or better yet, the parents should be told you have dangerous substances with you — and ASKED where you can store them. — MOM OF A TODDLER IN NEW JERSEY

DEAR MOM: I was scolded for not placing more emphasis on the safety issue. However, the question I was asked was, "Are we obligated to help with more of the medical expenses (for the ER visit) because we have already helped (contributed several hundred dollars) and I don't think it's our job to teach our grandchild boundaries?" So that was the issue on which I focused. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: You dropped the ball. No 3-year-old will respect a closed door all of the time. Grandma and Grandpa are responsible for the safe-keeping of their meds while in the child's and even the grandparents' home. Bottles that rattle and pretty colors in a bottle that look like candy will attract any little kid. Grandma and Grandpa should be happy they aren't helping to pay for a funeral instead of an ER visit. Here are the "rules":

1. All medications should be in kid-proof containers.
2. All medications and OTC drugs should be kept out of a curious child's climbing area.
3. Poison Control numbers should be posted on the fridge.
4. Use the original container (NOT one of those daily dosage containers) and know how many pills are in it. Be sure you know the name, strength and dosage for each medication. Just telling the hospital that it's for "blood pressure" doesn't tell them what it is or how to treat an overdose.

JEANNE PHILLIPS

DEAR ABBY

5. NEVER tell the kids that medication is candy!

6. You are the adult. Don't expect any child — or teen — to respect your private property when it comes to medication. — MESQUITE, TEXAS, GRANDMA

DEAR ABBY: "Ohio Grandma's" story of an emergency room visit for suspected medication poisoning is all too common. In 2011, 67,700 toddlers were seen for accidental medication exposure. Of these, 12,390 required hospitalization. Children 13 to 24 months of age accounted for 68 percent of these visits. In ER visits where information was obtained, 38 percent involved grandparents' medications, 31 percent the mother's medications, 12 percent a sibling's, 8 percent the father's and 5 percent an aunt's or uncle's medication.

Family members MUST take precautions to keep their meds out of children's hands. I keep mine under lock and key with the key in my possession whenever I visit my grandchildren.

While I agree with you that children should be taught boundaries and to respect the possessions of others, I believe we have a responsibility to provide a safe environment, especially when we are visiting or when children are visiting us. The consequences of failing to do that can be tragic. — PEDIATRICIAN AND GRANDMOTHER IN MAINE

HOROSCOPES

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Thursday, Oct. 2, 2014:

This year you want to make a difference, and you probably will within your immediate circle. You notice that others often have a strong reaction to you, which is new. Zero in on your mutual priorities when dealing with your differences. If you are single, a friendship could evolve into something more, but it could create some awkward moments. Perhaps honoring the friendship first will help you get through this period. If you are attached, your significant other's opinions often differ from yours. With much back-and-forth, you will realize that you both want the same things. CAPRICORN can irritate you.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Your reactions could come across as strong and harsh. You probably can't hide your feelings, but you might feel very awkward when dealing with a child or loved one. Your response could shock even you. Relax and think before you speak.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Reach out to someone you care about, but know that what you hear might surprise you. You come from a solid point of view. Offbeat thinking will force you to stop and regroup, and you will come up with a practical plan as a result.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Recognize that you have control over yourself but not someone else. In fact, a close loved one or family member will need to figure out his or her own priorities. You can help or comment, but you might risk having this person close down if you do.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) You might consider having a heart-to-heart talk with someone who seems to be in control of his or her life, and it could have a big effect on you. Use good sense with spending. Someone will reach out to invite you to join him or her for some fun.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) You might be at odds with your own plans now that you are at the point of acting on them. A new insight will encourage you to back off and rethink what you are doing. Some caution could go a long way!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You have a lot to share,

JACQUELINE BIGAR

and so do others. Your goodwill and caring will come through. You will see the results of someone's decisions. Communication flourishes. If you are single, you could be looking at more than a friendship.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Keep your priorities straight, and stay anchored. Let others put in their two cents. You might feel as if there is a lack of support from an important friend. Use caution when spending money on an investment or a home repair. Investigate alternatives.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) You could be overly concerned about a call or email. Do some research before reacting — there will be another path to the same result. You might want to rethink a decision with care. Know what you desire from a situation.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) You will like being mellow. You might not be in the mood to take action, but a sudden reversal could cause your adrenaline to surge. Once energized, you naturally will respond and make the right choices. The cheerleader in you returns.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You will think that you are on cruise control, but you are likely to hit some obstacles if you are not careful. A well-meaning friend could make you feel unusually self-conscious. You might need to stop and regroup.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) You might not be comfortable assuming the role you are in, yet you'll see the benefits. You could be dealing with a difficult person and will need to revise your thinking accordingly. Trying to control this person will backfire, and it won't bring what you want.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) A meeting could set the tone of your day. You have so much energy that others won't be able to keep up with you. Take an overview, and question whether you are approaching a situation in the best, most positive way possible.

The bidding:

Opening lead — ten of spades.

Counting how many cards the opponents hold in each suit might be more work than some players would like to undertake, but it sure saves a lot of guesswork.

Take this deal, for example. East won the opening spade lead with the jack and continued with the A-K. South ruffing the third spade high as West discarded a diamond. Declarer then drew three rounds of trumps, West discarding another diamond, and led a low diamond to the king.

East took the king with the ace and returned a diamond, and South was at the crossroads. He had to decide whether to finesse the ten of diamonds, or whether to go up with the queen and hope to discard the ten on dummy's fourth club.

After reviewing the play to this point, declarer correctly rejected the diamond finesse (which would have been fatal) because the contract had by now become a certainty. South knew that East had started with exactly six spades (West discarded on the third round) and had followed to three rounds of trumps. East had then also shown up with the A-6 of diamonds.

With 11 of East's original 13 cards fully accounted for, it was impossible for him to hold more than two clubs. So, after taking the diamond queen, South cashed the A-Q of clubs and led a third club. When West produced the nine, it was a simple matter to finesse the ten, since East could not have the jack of clubs.

The same result could have been achieved if South had cashed his last trump after winning the diamond queen, a move that would have embarrassed West for a discard. The key point, though, is that by resorting to elementary counting, declarer found a way to avoid embarrassing himself.

and find out what she's really thinking. And this is before things turn really bad.

"A truly mature relationship means being completely comfortable and honest with the other person," Fincher says. "People are too complex and too needy. They change. They start off in a great place. The idea of finding our soul mate, no matter how bogus and bullthat is, is incredibly prevalent. That's the conversation I want people to have after they see the movie. But I don't want to have it for them. This is first and foremost a thriller."

For the role of Nick, Fincher cast Affleck, who survived the Bennifer media storm and came out of it unscathed. He's happily married to Jennifer Garner, a Best Picture Oscar winner for "Argo" and cast in the role of the Dark

Knight in the upcoming "Batman vs. Superman."

"Ben is extremely bright, but people don't give him that credit," Fincher says. "I told him I need a character who went through all the she went through in his real life. He got put through the woodchipper. But in the movie, he walks into the firestorm leading with his chin. He has great wit."

Affleck agrees his relationship with Jennifer Lopez, which fed gossip columnists daily, came in handy, because Nick is being constantly watched and hounded by news crews. "On the set, I was the leading authority on that," Affleck says, laughing. "Nowadays, it's much more common. It was a little different 12 years ago before the Internet. Today, these things last two days, and then it's on to the next scandal. But when it happened to me, it was frustrating seeing the false funhouse image of what the media represented."

examine all manner of things, including his own personal integrity.

In "The Paper Chase," the legendary John Houseman gave life to a law professor who is both character and cataclysmic event. In "How to Get Away With Murder," the role is equally formidable, as is the woman who inhabits it. From the moment she comes on-screen, Viola Davis makes Professor Annalise Keating one of those gorgeously enigmatic characters who could either be the ultimate truth teller or great deceiver.

Either way, you, like her students, hang on her every word.

Which may not include instructions for Wes Gibbins (Alfred Enoch) to take this dime, call his mother and tell her that "there is serious doubt about your becoming a lawyer," but Annalise quickly makes it clear that her Criminology 101 is The Class, the one in which students will either learn how to practice law or die trying.

For at least five of her students, however, there appears to be a third alternative: C. Both of the above. The show opens with a quintet of young men and women attempting to dispose of a body on the night of homecoming. They are arguing in legalistic terms, so it is not surprising that when the action flashes back, it is to the first day of Keating's class.

With admirable economy and keep-up-people pace, creator Peter Nowalk reveals both the imperial nature of his lead and quick sketches of the five students from the opening scene. In addition to nice-guy Wes, there's Michaela (Aja Naomi King), who wants to be just like Annalise; Connor (Jack Falahee), who will go to any lengths to win; Laurel (Karla Souza), quietly hanging on to her ideals; and Asher (Matt McGorry), entitled and connected.

As Annalise quickly explains, she teaches through doing. Her class will mirror the cases she is trying as a high-wire, high-profile defense attorney, and the four students who show the most promise will work in her office.

Wes joins the obvious picks when he stumbles upon some after-hours information about his prof, completing one of those teams of people who would never ordinarily become a team. Presumably, early episodes at least will work backward and forward, explaining exactly how the five came to be disposing of a body while featuring various cases that Annalise is handling and peeling back the layers of all the characters, especially Annalise.

Lurking around the background of the pilot is also the shadow of a missing student, whom Wes' new neighbor Rebecca (Katie Findlay) clearly knows something about.

The first episode sets many things in motion while revealing little in terms of tone or intent.

Not that it matters much because all eyes are on Davis, Tony winner and Oscar nominee.
