Eustis police investigating shooting death

Staff Report

Eustis police are investigating the shooting death of a 21-year-old ex-convict found in the woods adjacent to the 1000 block of Wall Street.

According to a press release by Senior Office Robert Simken, Kyle Joseph Morgan, 6822 Osage Drive, Mount

Dora, died from a single gunshot wound. An anonymous tip led police to the body.

Detectives determined the incident occurred sometime Friday night or Saturday morning.

"At this time, the detectives are establishing witnesses and investigating suspect leads," Simken said.

In February 2012, Morgan was arrested on 33 counts of burglary, larceny, grant theft, possession of burglary tools and possession of drug equipment, Lake County jail records show. He was given five years probation.

In May 2013 and again

in May of this year, Morgan was arrested on multiple counts of violating that probation. In July, he was sentenced to 18 months in prison on the probation violation charges, only to be released in September because of time served in jail, court records show.

Police are asking anyone with information concerning this incident to contact Det. Sgt. Gary Winheim at 352-483-5400 or anonymously through CrimeLine at www.cfcrimeline.com, by phone at 1-800-423-TIPS (8477) or by texting CRIMES (274637) with information.

Clocks were turned back one hour on Sunday, and thousands of festival-goers stepped back in time to 1606 to meet King James I, the monarch of England, and experience fantasy and history of a medieval-style village, games and jousting at the 13th annual Lady of the Lakes Renaissance Faire.

The fair's new home on 27 acres on County Road 448 in Tavares was a big hit with the crowd and renaissance performers who raved about the venue being more authentic with its forest setting.

"Here it is all in the woods and I think it is absolutely spectacular," said Greg "Tank" Olson, of Tavares. "It's real easy to fall into the imaginary reality of what it's like with all of the characters walking around. ... It's truly worth coming here and I'm enjoying every minute. I would have driven 100 miles for something like this."

Olson said he will make a return visit to the fair this weekend with his daughter and grandson.

That's music to the ears of the Educational Foundation of Lake County, sponsor of the event, and more than 70 renaissance performers who have traveled from as far as California and New York to portray historical characters, peasants, jugglers, musicians, knights in armor, pirates, dancers and villagers dressed in period costumes,

Republicans mull strategy if they control Congress

Charles Babington
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Republican control of the House and Senate seems tantalizingly close, so leading Republicans are turning to a matter often overlooked in campaigns: how to actually govern.

They say it will be crucial to show the GOP can legislate, lead and solve problems after years of lobbying political grenades at President Barack Obama and Senate Democrats.

If they add Senate control to their House dominance, Republicans say they will pass some bills that Obama is sure to veto, as they try to highlight their ideological differences with Democrats. But they also will push for changes in taxes, trade, regulations and other policies that both parties might accept.

China slowdown will bruise global economy, leave US mostly unhurt

Christopher S. Rugaber
AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON — China's roaring economy for years has pulled much of the rest of the world with it, soaking up oil, iron ore and other commodities from developing countries and autos and luxury goods from Europe.

But its role as a global engine is fading as its economy slows — and many other nations, in the view of economists, will feel the pain. An Associated Press survey of 30

“We have to prove in two years the Republican Congress can govern,” said Sen. Richard Burr, R-N.C.

Republicans know their new majority might last only two years — assuming, that is, they first obtain it this fall by picking up at least six net seats, as many predict they will. The 2016 Senate election map is far more favorable to Democrats. The contest to replace the term-limited president will add further distractions and uncertainty.

In interviews, GOP senators talked at times of an ambitious conservative push for fewer regulations, lower taxes and other long-held priorities.

But they also outlined more pragmatic, modest agendas that might avoid Obama's veto and the filibuster powers Senate Democrats will hold even if they're consigned to the minority.

There was virtually no talk of balancing the budget, repealing Obama's health care law or achieving similar GOP campaign pledges that prove politically impossible in Washington. These senators noted that even small achievements will require levels of bipartisanship rarely seen these days.

“It's very possible to get a number of things done if the president is willing to come to the table, and I believe he will,” said Sen. Rob Portman, R-Ohio.

Portman, a former White House budget director and U.S. trade representative, said goals should include lowering the 35 percent corporate tax rate, enhancing the president's ability to make trade agreements, approving the Keystone XL pipeline and passing what he called responsible budget bills.

Significant numbers of Democrats and Republicans have shown interest in all these ideas, he said, and “we should focus on where we can find common ground.”

Yet these proposals, not to mention more ambitious ones, face strong pockets of resistance, mainly but not entirely from the political left.

Many environmentalists strongly oppose the Keystone XL pipeline, which would carry crude oil from Canada to Texas. Obama has blocked it, but several congressional Democrats support it.

As for lowering the corporate tax rate, the parties repeatedly have failed to resolve several issues, including where to set the new rate, how to tax U.S. companies' overseas profits and which tax loopholes to close in exchange for a lower rate.

Prominent members of both parties say a GOP-controlled Congress could open the way to major trade deals with China, Japan and Europe. Obama has requested the power to negotiate trade agreements that Congress can approve or reject, but not cripple with amendments.

But some labor unions and Democrats oppose enhanced negotiating clout for the White House.

Republican Sen. Bob Corker of Tennessee hopes a GOP-run Senate would end the stalemate over trade and several other issues. “Congress would be speaking with one voice,” he said, and Republicans “would have to be in a governing mode.”

economists have found that 57 percent of them expect China's decelerating economy to restrain growth in countries from Brazil and Chile to Australia and South Korea.

A notable exception is the United States, which the economists see as largely insulated from China's troubles.

China's once-explosive growth has slowed in part because of its government's efforts to restrain its speculative real estate sector and shift its economy toward consumer spending. China's economy expanded 7.3 percent in the third quarter from a year earlier, its slowest pace since 2009. A growth rate above 7 percent would be the envy of most major economies. But for China, it marked a sharp slowdown after three decades of double-digit expansion.

Last week, the Conference Board, a business group, forecast that China's growth would slump to 4 percent by 2020.

China's deceleration is rippling around the world. Brazil and Australia are selling it less iron ore, a key ingredient in steel, as China's construction boom slows. Chile is exporting less copper to China. Indonesia is selling it less oil and lumber.

And South Korea's electronics exports have faltered, hampering its growth, as Chinese consumers buy fewer smartphones or choose cheaper domestic alternatives.

China is also cracking down on corruption, which threatens European designer brands. Sung Won Sohn, an economist at California State University's Smith School of Business, estimates that one-third of luxury Swiss watches are exported to China. In addition, China is the fastest-growing market for Mercedes-Benz and BMW.

U.S. automakers, particularly General Motors, also sell lots of cars in China. But nearly all are built in China and don't contribute much to the U.S. economy, Sohn said. That's true of many other U.S. goods sold in China, including electronics. As a result, weaker sales in China wouldn't much hurt the United States. Capital Economics, a forecasting firm, calculates that only 6.5 percent of U.S. exports go to China — equal to just 0.9 percent of the U.S. economy.

“It's hard to see a slowdown in China having a really significant impact on the U.S. economy, barring a complete collapse,” said Paul Ashworth, an economist at Capital Economics.

The AP surveyed a range of corporate, Wall Street and academic economists from Oct. 24 through 29.

“Year after year I have children come up to me and say, ‘I remember you from last year.’ So we are a mixture of entertainment and history,” Fraley said. “We are educating you while you are having fun.”

The FAITH Neighborhood Center, a help organization in existence since 1972 that provides food, clothing and other items for local families, has announced a $500,000 capital campaign to build a new facility.

According to Jerry Colyer, FAITH's executive director, the organization has been given a lucrative offer that will only last for a few months.

"An anonymous donor is offering to match donations up to $100,000 collected from Oct. 1, 2014 through Jan. 31, 2015, to be used exclusively for the construction of this much needed building," Colyer wrote in a letter to potential and past sponsors of the organization.

"We are soliciting donations and support from across the community, especially now, when through the kindness of one of our supporters, donations received will be matched dollar for dollar. ..." Colyer said. "We don't want to pass that up."

Colyer said the center, staffed by volunteers, provides assistance to more than 800 low-income families every month, in the form of food, clothes, financial aid for utilities

Republican Gov. Rick Scott and Republican-turned-Democrat former Gov. Charlie Crist have each spent tens of millions of dollars on a race that is still too close to call and turned Sunday to popular party figures to help them in the homestretch.

Vice President Joe Biden appeared with Crist at an event targeting Hispanic voters at Florida International University. He noted the growing influence of Hispanics and said they could be at the point where they decide the outcome of this and every future election.

"Stand up and show it! Speak up! Vote!"

Biden said to cheers.

Scott planned a rally with former Gov. Jeb Bush later in the day. Biden also was set to appear with Crist at a "souls to the polls" event at a black church in Fort Lauderdale.

In Miami, Biden criticized Scott for not taking climate change seriously, handing out tax cuts to corporations

Seniors could be key on pot initiative

MATT SEDENSKY
Associated Press

PEMBROKE PINES — The debate over legalizing medical marijuana in Florida constantly generates talk of young people potentially flooding the polls. But seniors are the most reliable voters and could be key to the outcome of the measure.

Though polling on Amendment 2 has been erratic, seniors have been showing a level of interest in the initiative that underscores the fact they may benefit most from its passage.

"You get older, you get sick, you start getting diseases, your bones stop working as well as they used to and you're presented with this pharmacopoeia of different drugs that you have to take just to get through the day," said Ben Pollara, who leads United for Care, the pro-Amendment 2 campaign. "To the extent that seniors can use marijuana to supplement or replace any of those drugs I think is a good thing."

Similar arguments have been made by older people themselves, who have turned up at events

Mount Dora recognized as a 'Great Place'

Professionals in the area of development and redevelopment have named downtown Mount Dora a "Great Place in Florida."

This inaugural award comes from the American Planning Association (APA) of Florida, a non-profit organization of students and allied professionals involved with helping to build communities.

APA Florida members work both in the public and private sector; for federal, state and local government; for firms both large and small; in long-range planning and development review; in master planning, as well as site planning; in transportation planning, land use planning, environmental planning, design and in many other capacities, according to the organization's website.

Downtown Mount Dora beat out four other Florida hotspots, including downtown Venice, Clematis Street in downtown West Palm Beach, downtown Winter Park and Riverside Arts Market in Jacksonville, city spokeswoman Kelda Senior said.

According to the APA of Florida: "a great place represents the gold standard — having a true sense of place, cultural and historical interest, com-

Five voting suppression tactics to avoid

JESSE J. HOLLAND
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Voter turnout is key in many races around the country, and so voter suppression tactics from people who think their candidate might benefit from lower turnout tend to crop up right before an election are likely.

The Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights Under Law, which is gathering reports on its website, has already fielded complaints during early voting of poll workers questioning voters' citizenship in Texas, police officers hanging around polls in Florida and robocalls in Georgia and Florida urging voters to "Do what you did in 2010, stay at home," said Barbara Arnwine, the group's president.

These tactics are rarely effective and often backfire, said Richard L. Hasen, a professor at the University of California Irvine School of Law. For example, he said, spreading the word in heavily Democratic neighborhoods that the election would be held the next day "is not likely to cause people to vote on the wrong day but sure is something that gets people upset."

To avoid being tricked, voters should check their voting eligibility, make sure they have proper identification if their states require it and check their precinct location and hours in advance, Arnwine said.

Five common voter suppression tactics that experts look for:

ELECTION DATE CHANGE

Emails, robocalls or paper flyers placed in mailboxes or on car windshields telling voters that one political party votes on one day, and everyone else on another, are simply not true. After early voting and absentee voting periods close, the only day to vote is Election Day, which falls this year on Nov. 4.

INTIMIDATION

In the past, billboards with ominous messages have appeared in neighborhoods, "observers" have threatened to challenge the eligibility of certain voters or employers have told workers that voting a across the state, even when they've been intended for more youthful crowds. Such was the case at a recent forum at Broward College: It was held at an on-campus theater, with a promise of pizza for the droves of young people who passed by. But inside, the audience was full of faces far older than expected.

Among those who attended was M.J. Seide of Hollywood, who pays about $450 for an ounce of marijuana every six weeks to help her avoid painkillers that left her incapacitated and worried about addiction. She begins to explain her congenital disease, countless surgeries and the pills doctors pumped her full of, when her phone brings things to a pause.

"My stuff is in," she says, before adding: "At 64, I'm a criminal because I have to buy this stuff on the street."

Around the state, similar voices have sounded from seniors who say they've used marijuana for everything from easing pain to helping them to sleep. If they end up being representative of the overall population of older voters, it would delight supporters of Amendment 2, which requires 60 percent approval to pass. To obtain marijuana, patients would have to get a doctor's certification of their condition, which in turn would qualify them for a patient ID card they can use at licensed dispensaries.

In Florida and across the U.S., a greater percentage of seniors vote than any other age group, and their share of the total electorate is even more pronounced in years without a presidential contest. In the last midterm election in 2010, about 56 percent of Floridians 65 and older voted, far higher than any other age group. They represented nearly one-third of the total ballots cast.

Overall public opinion on marijuana has been shifting nationally and medical use enjoys far broader support than recreational use, though polls on Amendment 2 have varied widely.

A July survey by Quinnipiac University found 83 percent of Florida voters aged 65 and older supported medicinal marijuana. An October poll by the University of Florida found about 37 percent of voters 60 and older support Amendment 2. Experts agree seniors show less support than younger voters, and most observers believe senior support is somewhere in the middle of those two surveys.

"The seniors, to a degree, are being targeted in that this is a wonderful thing for them because they don't have to use opiates, etcetera, etcetera," said Jessica Spencer, who is leading the Vote No on 2 group, and who says seniors who read the amendment are becoming aware it is riddled with holes. "Seniors are, of course, interested in protecting our younger generations."

Supporters of Amendment 2 have far outnumbered opponents at forums. But Spencer says she has found a sympathetic ear in seniors around the state who worry what its passage could mean.

Sandi Trusso, 73, of Ocala, has been opposed to marijuana for decades, since her 28-year-old brother was killed by a driver who was drunk and high. She believes many of Amendment 2's younger supporters see it as a gateway to legalized recreational marijuana, or that medical permits will be so easy to obtain anyone can get them.

"If someone's severely ill and they could control that, to limit it to that, and we knew that they could control that, who would have a problem with that?" she asked.

The most ardent supporters of medical marijuana say it hasn't just cut out other drugs' side effects, but has relieved symptoms in ways those drugs couldn't. Beth Ann Krug, 61, of Delray Beach, traveled to Colorado earlier this year to see if marijuana could help her Parkinson's disease. She was amazed: Within 20 minutes, she said, her tremors were gone for the first time in years.

"He says when asked about climate change, 'I'm not a scientist.' But he sure the hell thinks he's a doctor when he tells women what do." Biden said to the loudest applause of the event.

He added later, "We can't afford Rick Scott anymore, we really can't ... We can't afford any longer to be so narrow."

Bush and Biden are both considered potential 2016 presidential candidates and Crist and Scott were relying on their star power on the last day of early voting. So far, 3.1 million Floridians have already cast ballots in the race, with a nearly even split among Republicans and Democrats.

Crist and Scott began Sunday by visiting churches, Crist in Palm Beach County and Scott in Miami-Dade County.

Crist was already praying on Saturday, saying at an event at Florida A&M University that the election is about helping people and Scott is ignoring them by refusing to accept federal money that could help the state.

"I don't pray him no harm, but I do pray to God, deliver us from evil," Crist said.

Today, each candidate is also getting outside help. Louisiana Gov. Bobby Jindal and Texas Gov. Rick Perry are planning to campaign with Scott, while former President Bill Clinton will appear at an election eve rally with Crist in Orlando.

De Blasio's plan: A steady voice in the time of Ebola

JONATHAN LEMIRE
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Within hours of New York City's first confirmed Ebola case, Mayor Bill de Blasio made a point of following in the patient's footsteps: riding the subways, eating at a meatball restaurant, even visiting the hospital's isolation chamber.

De Blasio's actions in the first week of the city's Ebola crisis were aimed at calming a jittery New York, the result of what administration officials say was a studied, carefully planned strategy put in place weeks before.

That game plan — to make frequent public appearances, to calmly repeat how difficult it is to catch the disease and to stress how prepared the city is — has apparently worked. At least so far, there have been no reported incidents of full-blown hysteria. De Blasio has received high marks from experts who applauded his consistency, which stood in sharp contrast from the up-and-down rhetoric espoused by the region's two governors.

"This is what you really pay a mayor to do," said Bill Cunningham, former communications director for Mayor Michael Bloomberg. "Do we want him to pick up garbage and shovel the snow? Of course. But it's times like this when the public gets a real image of their mayor."

The command center at the city's Office of Emergency Management had already come to life the morning of Oct. 23. Though at that moment the only confirmed cases of Ebola in the U.S. were in Texas, the de Blasio administration had spent months preparing and selected that morning to practice what would happen were there a diagnosis in the nation's largest city.

After the drill, the command center was supposed to shut down. It never did.

An ambulance was summoned that morning to the Harlem apartment of Dr. Craig Spencer, who had recently returned from treating Ebola-stricken patients in Guinea. Though there had been other false alarms in the previous weeks, Spencer — due to his symptoms and background — was quickly assessed as a high risk to have the disease.

Results from an Ebola test take more than six hours to complete, and in the interim, de Blasio dashed to a Queens hospital where a police officer was recovering from a hatchet attack and then to a union's and medical treatment. In addition, computer training and life skill workshops are offered, along with scholarships for academic and job-related training. Assistance in applying for food stamps is also provided.

In 1972 when it first opened, the organization was located in downtown Clermont and was known as the Clermont Neighborhood Center. Several years ago, the center moved to a warehouse on the east side of Groveland (7432 State Road 50) and became the FAITH Neighborhood Center.

A recent change in ownership and new lease terms that go along with it, however, have Colyer wondering whether he should begin looking for a new home once again.

Colyer said the new owner is honoring the lease for at least three years, but with less space available, leaving them with only about 2,500 "very cramped" square feet.

If enough money can be raised, however, FAITH could have its own building on land it already owns across State Road 50, just north of the existing facility it rents.

The only other option, Colyer said, is to find another building to lease.

"I've looked around at what's available and the going rate is about $1,000 for every 1,000 square feet of space, and we're looking for about 4,000 square feet, which for us is not doable, since every dollar we spend on rent is one dollar less for food and other things people who come to us need," Colyer said.

So far, only about $30,000 has been placed into a building fund. Colyer said the goal is $500,000 in total, but with approximately $300,000, some construction can begin.

dinner dance in the Bronx. He was there when the call came to confirm the positive diagnoses.

That night at Bellevue Hospital Center, flanked by New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo and city Health Commissioner Mary Bassett, de Blasio stressed that "there is no reason for New Yorkers to be alarmed."

"A panic here would be a disaster," said Robert Shapiro, political science professor of Columbia University. "De Blasio has chosen to go with the science and not restrict the liberties of any people."

The plan went awry the next afternoon. Shortly before 5 p.m., the phones started ringing in the mayor's press office with reporters asking about the new quarantine policy just announced by Cuomo and New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie.

De Blasio's actions in the first week of the city's Ebola crisis were aimed at calming a jittery New York, the result of what administration officials say was a studied, carefully planned strategy put in place weeks before.

Confused, City Hall staff quickly checked the TV and their Twitter feeds and found that the governors had announced a stricter policy at the area's airports and had not informed the mayor's staff.

Moreover, Cuomo had done a turnaround from his measured tones the night before, criticizing Spencer's movements and claiming that "hundreds and hundreds" of people could be infected by riding on a bus with an infected person.

A series of angry phone calls between the governor's and mayor's staffs soon followed, according to a person familiar with the situation who spoke to The Associated Press on condition of anonymity because the person was not authorized to speak publicly about the matter. Frustrated, the de Blasio team opted to double down on the strategy to calm the public and scheduled the mayor's lunch at The Meatball Shop the next day.

That was followed by a rally at Bellevue on Sunday in which the mayor cheered the nurses working there and denounced any attempts to criticize Spencer or nurse Kaci Hickox, who had been quarantined in New Jersey after returning from West Africa and subsequently drew Christie's ire.

"While other leaders have zigged and zagged, de Blasio has repeated factual information over and over," Cunningham said. "The public is looking for those assurances."

certain way could cost them their jobs. All are scare tactics.

ARREST THREATS

Polling places do not have access to voters' criminal records. Anything that says you can be arrested for showing up to vote if you have unpaid parking tickets, outstanding arrest warrants or a criminal record is untrue, activists say.

There are only three states where felony convictions can lead to a permanent loss of voting rights: Kentucky, Florida and Iowa, according to Project Vote. Everywhere else, former criminals can eventually get their voting rights restored, so check your state's laws. And all states require conviction, so ongoing cases have no effect on the right to cast a ballot.

CHANGE OF POLLING LOCATION, HOURS

Polling places are assigned at the time of voter registration, and those locations are the only places voters can cast an in-person ballot on Election Day. Last-minute telephone calls, emails or paper flyers that purport to tell voters of a change in polling places and voting times are more likely an attempt to frustrate voters into going home without voting.

'DO NOT VOTE' MESSAGES

Some sides try to depress voting by telling the electorate that polls show a certain race is already over, or that one candidate or the other is so far ahead that one more vote won't matter. The truth is, every vote counts — as shown by many close elections in the past.

Under Obama, US is Israel's closest frenemy

It's a remarkable fact that Barack Obama's presidency — marketed, it should be remembered, as an occasion for rapprochement both at home and abroad — has given rise to so many needless conflicts. On the domestic side, this has played out primarily through an unnecessary antagonism toward Republicans — though, since the GOP seems content to return the favor, it's hard to place too much blame in the president's lap.

In foreign affairs, however, Mr. Obama has a regrettable tendency to be far more indulgent of America's adversaries than her allies. That's been the case with the United Kingdom, where the president seems to have exhausted whatever good will still underpinned the "special relationship." It was the case in Poland and the Czech Republic, where the White House decided to forego planned missile defense sites. And it has been most acutely the case in regard to the nation of Israel.

The fact that Mr. Obama and Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu don't think very highly of each other is probably the worst-kept secret in foreign affairs. Personal animus, however, ought not to threaten a long-standing relationship between two nations with as many common values and strategic concerns. Increasingly, however, that seems to be precisely what's happening.

In a report released this week by the Atlantic's Jeffrey Goldberg, one anonymous senior Obama administration official referred to Prime Minister Netanyahu with an epithet unfit for print (it involved the waste product of poultry). Another senior official in the same story seconded that verdict and referred to Mr. Netanyahu as a "coward" in regard to the threat of a nuclear Iran. This from the administration whose foreign policy was supposed to be all about winning friends and influencing people.

Needless to say, this sort of public backbiting represents a low-water mark in Obama administration diplomacy. It also, however, fails to pass the laugh test. Mr. Netanyahu — a former member of Israel's Special Forces who was wounded in combat — may be many things, but a coward is not one of them. That the insult originated within an administration whose reflexive approach to foreign policy is temporizing only makes it that much more risible.

We don't expect Mr. Obama to suddenly discover a newfound affection for Mr. Netanyahu. Some things are just not meant to be. But we do expect him to understand that, as president of the United States, he has a deeper obligation to preserve relationships that advance the values and national security interests of the country he leads — and will hand off to a successor. It is exceedingly late in the day for the president to still be learning such rudimentary lessons.

OTHEr VOICES

'The Affair' will shatter your comfort zone

Want to watch something really scary? Want to see something on television that's practically guaranteed to keep you and your spouse awake, lying rigidly next to each other in bed and attentive to clues about whether anything wicked is lurking outside your peripheral vision?

Just start watching Showtime's series "The Affair" on Sunday nights. It's enough to scare the pants right back onto you.

Even when you're happily married, watching "The Affair" with your spouse sitting beside you is like watching an R-rated movie with your parents when you're a teenager.

It's not something you feel good about even if it can be used as a starting point for serious discussions about important issues afterward.

Let's just say "The Affair" doesn't exactly help you drift dreamily to sleep once you hit "off" on the remote.

It lingers. It makes you itchy. You'll find yourself flipping the pillow over, searching for the cool side, and more or less spinning in the sheets like a rotisserie chicken and not — let me repeat this — not because it's erotically arousing.

What it arouses, at least in folks who consider themselves paired-off for life like pieces of Tupperware or the blades of scissors, is a good old-fashioned frisson — a shudder and the goose-bumps.

It displays for us that while infidelity may have its treats, it always depends on a trick. Somebody gets left holding the bag, and that bag usually doesn't have any sweets in it.

That's why "The Affair" is the most frightening show on television.

magnifying mirrors), but "The Affair" makes you think that joining the circus might just be a really peaceful alternative to the usual domestic routine. After "American Horror Story" I sleep soundly.

It was also much easier to fall asleep after watching "True Blood," where characters chewed each other's necks and wrists in search of sustenance, where manic apocalyptic marauders took the law into their own hands, and where the undead clashed with a variety of shape-shifting life forms.

Far easier, too, to fall asleep after watching "Boardwalk Empire," where realistically terrifying characters created the kind of physical, psychological and financial damage that makes vampires, maniacs and werewolves look positively cuddly in comparison.

Even though Scorsese's "Boardwalk Empire" went so far as to include showing politicians — I'm talking the portrayal of actual politicians here, including members of Congress and (gasp!) Warren G. Harding — I would nevertheless argue that "The Affair" is even more disquieting. "The Affair" is divided into conflicting perspectives offered by the two characters who, although both married to other people whom they seem to love and with whom they are still intricately and passionately involved, nevertheless embark on that clandestine relationship which gives the series its title. With its emphasis on the he said/she said split, the narrative in "The Affair" proceeds with a lurch and a stumble, unnervingly portraying the dissonant, clashing versions of the event from various viewpoints.

Exploring, as it does, both the allure and the terror of the unknown, as well suggesting that there's something potentially grotesque and monstrous beneath even the most familiar domestic and social costumes we wear, it forces you to take sides.

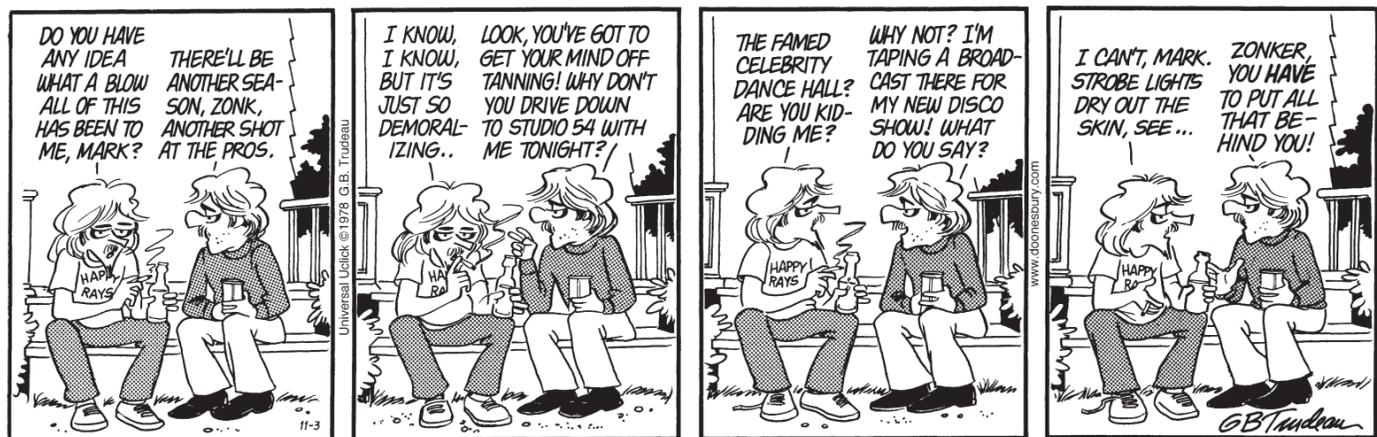

Picture my husband and me, then, on Sunday evening, each with a cat on a lap, replete from a good dinner, finishing a nice glass of wine and ready to watch the show. So far, so good, right?

Dominic West appears on the screen. You'll remember him from playing McNulty on "The Wire" and as the only English actor never to slip into any kind of UK-accented twang ever (sorry, Charlie Hunnam from "Sons of Anarchy" — you're almost as good). But then Ruth Wilson shows up. You'll remember her from the award-winning BBC's 2006 adaptation of "Jane Eyre," as well as from her convincing portrayal of a charming sociopath in the BBC crime drama "Luther."

You just know there's going to be trouble. I scooch over to my husband, huddle down and watch between my fingers as West and Wilson remove their masks. I can't watch and I can't look away.

After head injury, woman finds strength for next stage

PAULA SCHLEIS
MCT

LAKE TOWNSHIP, Ohio — Clayton Betz leaned against a door frame inside his daughter's house, fighting to keep his composure. Behind him, his daughter moved among family and friends, smiling easily and exchanging hugs.

For a brief moment, Betz couldn't fight the memory of that night in July, the post-midnight phone call that told him to hurry to a Pennsylvania hospital if he wanted to see his daughter before she died.

The doctor treating her after a football-sized rock hurled from an overpass crashed through the family car and struck her in the head didn't think she'd make it through the night. The story made national news.

But that night gave way to another. Then another. And here they were, more than 100 nights later, and his daughter's home, suddenly a place of joy and laughter.

And Sharon Budd very much alive.

"You got from that extreme situation to today," Betz said, his words trailing off as emotions threatened to surface again. "Oh, what a difference."

Sharon, 52, left the Geisinger HealthSouth Rehabilitation Hospital in Danville, Pa. recently and was greeted by dozens of well-wishers lining her cul-de-sac as she arrived home shortly before 2 p.m.

Her homecoming marks an end and a beginning, her family said.

The fight for life is over. She has triumphed.

She got to keep the sight in one eye, intense workouts have put her back on her feet, and multiple brain surgeries have opened a door for her to regain some of the abilities she has lost.

But now begins the long road toward normalcy. A few days after her homecoming, she was to start physical, occupational and speech therapy at a regional rehabilitation center. Three days a week. Possibly for years.

"This is the beginning," said her son, Joey Budd.

"This is the very beginning."

"I'm ready to get going," Sharon said, pausing to check with her husband to make sure her appointments had been scheduled.

They had, Randy Budd said with a reassuring smile.

Sharon said she's already drawing on the strength that comes from being home.

As the car that carried her turned into the development where she lives, she noticed every mailbox was decorated with pink and yellow ribbons fluttering in the breeze.

Pink has been the color used by her supporters since the start because it is also the color of breast cancer, another war that Sharon fought and survived.

"I was overwhelmed to see all of the people and all the ribbons," Sharon said.

"It's shocking, really," she said, noting the breadth of the love that has enveloped her since the night of the have somewhat limited appeal," he said. "But hearing the same message from someone with whom you feel a common bond may be more persuasive."

Residents in the neatly groomed enclave of Laguna Woods, where the median age in 2010 was 77, say the leafy plant has become a necessity for many trying to manage pain. They smoke it, eat it, dab lotion mixed with cannabis on sore joints and summon sleep with a pot-spiked candy bar.

Six years ago, when Bob Ring was mayor pro tem of Laguna Woods, he supported those who wanted a dispensary in town. He wasn't a marijuana user himself, but friends had convinced him of the medical benefits.

Ring's council colleagues adopted a law that set out the rules for selling cannabis from a storefront: A dispensary couldn't be within 1,000 feet of any place frequented by children, couldn't be near another dispensary and couldn't be open Sundays.

In the end it didn't matter. None of the commercial landlords in town would rent space to a pot shop.

"We tried," said Ring, who is 81 and remains a City Council member. "Certainly at my age, in this stage of life, I don't want to give anyone a hard time."

Without a pot shop, Johnson, 64, and others struck out on their own, forming and joining collectives. Although there are advantages to a bricks-and-mortar dispensary — they can carry a wider variety of merchandise and are open at predictable times — some collective members appreciate the casual, more personal interaction of meeting with their distributor, often in the comfort of a living room.

Every two or three weeks, Johnson walks the short distance from her home to the apartment of Lonnie Painter, a former chef and restaurant owner who is director of the Laguna Woods Medical Cannabis collective.

On a recent trip, the musty scent of marijuana rolled over Johnson like a wave when she passed through Painter's front door. Guitars were leaning in a corner of his living room; photographs of Frida Kahlo, Che Guevara and Ernest Hemingway hung on the light-green walls.

Johnson sat down on the couch, a pink baseball cap pulled over her bald head. She trusts Painter, 68, and lets him pick out her supply.

The silver briefcase on the low table before them held eight jars, each filled with a different strain of marijuana — Kashmir, Skywalker, Moby Dick. There are differing concentrations of THC, the ingredient responsible for marijuana's psychoactive effects, and of CBD, the compound said to have medicinal benefits.

"Ah, smells so good," Johnson said as Painter unscrewed the lid of a jar of cannabis called Harley Tsu 1.

As an advocate of tighter medical marijuana regulations, Painter said, he worries about "pot doctors" and dispensary operators who don't have proper schooling and collectives that offer inferior products.

He attends conferences, studies the shifting legal landscape and stays up on the latest literature — such as a study from Leiden University in the Netherlands on how to brew pot into anti-inflammatory tea.

In the early going, Painter — who has shoulder-length silver hair, tattoos and a calming voice — grew his own marijuana on a plot in the Laguna Woods Village community garden. Eventually he and several others filled out paperwork with the county to do business as Laguna Woods Medical Cannabis.

Members of the collective are required to have a current physician's recommendation; the group operates as a nonprofit, in accordance with the state attorney general's guidelines.

Although many of the believers in Laguna Woods Village have used marijuana off and on for much of their lives, 85-year-old Pat McClintock had never considered it — until her back pain set in.

At first McClintock, a former convenience store owner from Texas, sought relief with acupuncture, chiropractic treatments and cortisone shots. She gave up pickleball, table tennis and golf.

Nothing helped. So when a physician's assistant suggested she try cannabis, she figured she would "give it a whirl."

McClintock obtained a medical marijuana recommendation from a doctor in March and joined Painter's collective. Now she exercises every morning, goes to the hot tub in the evening, and squirts drops of marijuana oil into her mouth every night.

FTC accuses Gerber of misleading claim

ANNE FLAHERTY
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Baby-food maker Gerber is being accused by the government of claiming falsely that its Good Start Gentle formula can prevent or reduce allergies in children.

In a complaint filed Thursday in federal court, the Federal Trade Commission alleged that the company misled consumers by suggesting that its formula was the first to meet government approval for reducing the risk of allergies.

The FTC said it wants Gerber to pull its claim from labels and advertisements and left open the possibility of asking the court to require Gerber to issue refunds for the $20-plus packages sold since 2011.

"We are defending our position because we believe we have met, and will continue to meet, all legal requirements to make these product claims," said Kevin Goldberg, vice president and general counsel for the New Jersey-based company.

At issue is how far Gerber went when claiming that its formula could prevent one type of allergy in infants known as atopic dermatitis, a skin rash known as baby eczema.

According to the FTC, Gerber had petitioned the Food and Drug Administration in 2009 for permission to connect its use of partially hydrolyzed whey proteins to reducing atopic dermatitis. The FDA agreed, but only if Gerber qualified its statement by making clear that there was "little scientific evidence" for the relationship.

Instead, packages of Good Start Gentle formula in 2011 suggested it was the first formula approved by the FDA to reduce the risk that a baby would develop allergies in general.

No qualifier was included, and the labels could easily be interpreted to mean that the formula could prevent a child from developing life-threatening food or environmental allergies.

Knowing your risk of breast cancer key to survival

MEREDITH COHN
MCT

BALTIMORE — When Beth Stewart was 36 years old, she felt a pebble-sized lump in her breast.

The Odenton mother of two was healthy and active and had no immediate family history of disease or common gene mutations — but she had advanced and aggressive breast cancer.

“I said to my oncologist, ‘Why?’ He looked at me and said, ‘I hate say this, but it’s bad luck. We don’t know why this happens to people like you.’ But it happened and it was a really hard thing to go through.”

Doctors don’t know why many women get breast cancer, the most commonly diagnosed cancer after skin cancer, according to the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. Nearly 233,000 people are expected to be diagnosed with the disease this year, and 40,000 are expected to die from it.

One in eight women will be diagnosed in her lifetime.

“The biggest risk factor is just having breasts,” said Dr. Regina Hampton, a breast cancer surgeon and medical director at the Comprehensive Breast Care Center at Doctors Community Hospital in Lanham, Md.

Doctors are learning more about risk factors. CDC and other federal health data shows family history accounts for about 15 percent of cases, and mutations in the BRCA genes are responsible for up to 10 percent. In about two-thirds of cases, the women are 55 or older. Fewer than 5 percent are younger than 40, like Stewart.

Other smaller risk factors include early periods or later childbearing or menopause. Women taking hormone replacement therapy after menopause were linked to higher rates of cancer, so there has been a decline in that treatment.

But Hampton said advances in diagnosis, such as 3-D imaging, and treatments that target specific kinds of cancer mean the death rate has been declining for decades.

Less invasive surgeries and better reconstructive technique immediately after cancer surgery also enable women to retain or regain their physical appearance, she said.

And there are new tests in the works, including one that checks for many gene mutations that raise a woman’s risk of cancer. That will allow doctors to closely monitor those with the mutations, Hampton said.

Some women avoid doctors, especially in immigrant, Latino and African American communities, apparently because of common beliefs such as that breast cancer is always fatal or surgery can expose tumors to air and cause them to spread, Hampton said.

The delays in treatment have contributed to a disparity that Hampton has been working to close through her private practice called Signature Breast Care. White women are more likely to be diagnosed with breast cancer, but black women are more likely to die from it. Black women also are more likely to have so-called triple-negative cancer that doesn’t respond to the latest medications.

“You need to do your self-exams. You need to get mammograms on schedule. If you have a lump you need to be evaluated,” she said. “You can survive the disease. We treat it so well now.”

Tami Shaw, a 32-year-old African-American mother of three, was one of Hampton’s patients who got the message. She had been doing her self-exams regularly since she was 18, when her grandmother was diagnosed with breast cancer.

When she found a pebble-like lump, she headed to her doctor. When breast cancer was confirmed, at Stage 2 and confined to her breast, she sought information on her options. She opted for a bilateral mastectomy, though research shows no greater survival rates.

She acknowledged it was a radical decision influenced by her age. Shaw was diagnosed once and feared a second, unrelated tumor.

Now cancer free after surgery, she said she felt lucky to be surrounded by her mother, siblings, children and church family, though she separated from her husband after the diagnosis. Shaw now feels driven to espouse the benefits of early detection.

“I became passionate about telling women to do self-exams,” she said. “Go to the doctor and get checked out. Don’t assume this and that, and don’t wait until it spreads.”

One thing Shaw and others said was difficult to prepare for in advance was the diagnosis.

Shock is normal, said Dr. Diana Griffiths, medical director of Saint Agnes’ Breast Center in Baltimore. Even though many women know someone with the disease or hear about celebrities’ cases, “There is always an element of surprise. It’s out there but people think it’s not going to be me.”

Griffiths worries that fear of bad news puts off many women from getting mammograms, though she agrees that treatments are so good that most women have multiple options and good outcomes. Griffith said the Saint Agnes center makes sure women are able to make informed choices.

“Most women end up being pretty rational and want to fight things,” she said. “I’m forever amazed by the courage and clarity of what women want to do.”

CANCER

actually free of their cancer?”

This is one of many avenues researchers are following in the hunt for simple, useful blood tests for breast cancer, the most common kind for women after skin cancer, according to the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. Every year more than 200,000 women are diagnosed and 40,000 die.

Most tests remain many years away, if they ever become commercially available. Eventually they may be able not only to reliably predict if breast cancer is likely to return, but to diagnose the disease before there are symptoms and track the effectiveness of treatment.

Most testing now isn’t so simple. Just to differentiate the type of breast cancer a patient has, for example, surgeons must examine a small piece of the tumor under a microscope.

A blood test widely used now only identifies the small number of women with inherited gene mutations that increase the risk of eventually developing breast cancer. There are some blood tests to show if cancer has recurred, but they are often inaccurate.

Park’s test seeks to identify with certainty the 30 percent of early-stage breast cancer patients who will have a recurrence so they can get additional therapies such as chemotherapy, while those not expected to get the disease again can be spared the toxic and expensive treatment.

The test would look for DNA molecules that cancer cells shed into the blood. In early trials, the test was able to tell the difference between these cancerous DNA molecules and normal ones. Now a larger trial at several medical centers is planned.

Park said the test could be easy, quick and cheap to perform in a lab — eventually.

“A lot of companies may jump the gun and begin offering blood tests, but it’s still all research,” Park said.

“We need to prove this is as good as we think it is.”

Beth Thompson said making treatment decisions without knowing her chances of recurrence was among the toughest parts of her breast cancer diagnosis nine years ago.

“It’s scary to make decisions without all of the information you would like,” Thompson said. “As a young person with young children, your knee-jerk reaction is to be as aggressive as possible.”

Wisconsin studies music and memory program

CARRIE ANTLINGER
Associated Press

UNION GROVE, Wis. — Mike Knutson taught himself to play the harmonica as a child, and the 96-year-old sang with his family for most of his life. Even now, as he suffers from dementia, music is an important part of his life thanks to a study looking at the impact of a nationwide music program aimed at helping dementia patients.

The study being led by the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee is the largest yet on the impact of the Music and Memory program, which is in hundreds of nursing homes across the U.S. and Canada, said program founder Dan Cohen. Similar studies will be conducted in Utah and Ohio.

Researchers are monitoring the responses of 1,500 Alzheimer’s and dementia patients who were given iPods at Wisconsin nursing homes through the program, which was highlighted in a documentary honored at the Sundance Film Festival this year.

Their mental state will then be compared to the same number of people in 100 other nursing homes who haven’t received iPods.

Knutson is often sleepy, but he perks up when nurses put headphones on him or when his family sings with him during visits at the Wisconsin Veteran’s Home in Union Grove, south of Milwaukee.

He smiles, taps his feet and gently claps his hands upon hearing big-band music, which is part of his personalized playlist.

“The music really does something to wake him up and help him to be more engaged with what is going on around him,” said his daughter, Barb Knutson.

The state and UW-Milwaukee are investing about $300,000 in the program and study, money received through federal funds acquired from nursing home penalties. The program will be expanded to another 150 Wisconsin nursing homes next year.

CVS exec: Ending tobacco sales the right thing for customers

BRUCE SMITH
Associated Press

CHARLESTON, S.C.— A top executive of CVS Caremark said Thursday that ending tobacco sales at CVS drug stores last month was the right thing to do even though the sales brought in $1 billion in revenue.

“How can you be a health care company providing health care and still sell tobacco?” Dr. William Fulcher III, the company’s vice president of clinical affairs, asked a medical conference on tobacco research at the Medical University of South Carolina.

Fulcher, a family doctor who lives in Birmingham, Alabama, picked tobacco in the fields of eastern North Carolina when he was a young man.

“This is one activity in which being a quitter is good,” for both smokers and for the company, he told doctors gathered at the conference in the No. 5 tobacco-growing state where about 12,000 acres of leaf is grown.

“I’m moderately enthusiastic that other retail companies will come to the same decision,” Fulcher added. “This was really an inside job for us. We were committed as a group of clinicians that this was the right thing to do.”

CVS Caremark, which handles health insurance, is a division of the company that now goes by the name CVS Health, a name change that occurred as it stopped selling tobacco. Its other divisions are CVS pharmacies, CVS Minute Clinics and the company’s specialty pharmacies.

Earlier, doctors heard from Dr. Jonathan Samet, a department chairman at the University of Southern California who was the senior scientific editor on the 2014 Surgeon General’s report.

He said during an AP interview that a half-century of the reports have played a key role in reducing the number of people who smoke in the United States.

The first was issued 50 years ago, back in 1964, and concluded that smoking caused lung cancer in men. There was not enough research at the time to draw the same conclusion about women.

“I still remember the release of the ‘64 report and the headlines and the shock on the part of some people that something that was so engrained in their lives and so pleasurable to them could be so adverse,”

Samet said.

He said while scientific studies were already being done on the dangers of smoking, the Surgeon General’s report put the issue in front of the public. “The reports became the vehicle for saying we need to do something about this,” he added.

The conference also heard from John Steffen, the CEO of the American Cancer Society, who said use of tobacco remains a major health challenge.

He noted that an estimated 20 percent of the world’s population smokes and smoking is the No. 1 risk factor for all major non-communicable diseases.

“If we don’t intervene, it will kill a billion people this century,” he warned.

assault. More than a dozen fundraisers have been held in her name, organized by neighbors and family, by co-workers in the Perry Local Schools district, by Pennsylvania communities appalled by the horrific attack for which four teenagers have been charged.

Was there ever a point when the love and support wasn’t enough? A time early on when the pain, the loss of an eye, the inability to speak or move, the repeated brain surgeries and the realization of the work that lay ahead made it preferable to just give up?

Sharon paused briefly, then looked to her husband, reaching up to touch his face.

“No, I don’t think so,” she said.

“I knew what I was in for because of the breast cancer. I was like, ‘Oh, my God, here we go again,’” she said. But living through breast cancer “made me strong enough for this.”

Randy and Sharon Budd were high school sweethearts who married 31 years ago.

“We’ve been through it all,” Randy said. “Thick and thin. Thick and thin.”

The couple raised four children together. As a devoted language arts teacher for whom 60-hour workweeks were the norm, Sharon took a personal stake in the welfare of many, many more, Randy said. Now, with her story in the national news, her life has served to inspire others, he said.

Her refusal to be angry, her determination to get better, and her trademark sense of humor that often “cracks up everyone” is a valuable lesson for those lucky enough to spend time with her, Randy said.

“She has this refuse-to-lose attitude about life,” he said. When people ask her if she’s bitter, “she says she doesn’t hold any resentments against anybody.”

Sharon’s dad said he encourages other family members to feel the same way.

“Be thankful that she’s still alive. The positive thinking, you’ve got to have that. You can’t let the negative in,” Clayton Betz said.

Randy said he has his doubts his wife will ever be able to return to work.

“From where she was at the start to where she is today, she’s come so far,” he said.

The therapy center that had been home the past couple of months calls her the “miracle girl,” he said. “When they got her, she wasn’t even able to be rehabilitated. They couldn’t do anything with her. They would just pick her up and hold her, and that was her therapy for the day.”

Now she walks on her own, and is learning to talk again.

Still, “when I look back to how she was (before the assault), she’s still so far away from that,” he said.

For her part, Sharon said she’s looking forward to a simple domestic routine. It would feel good just to be able to do a little cooking and cleaning, she said.

Randy said he could see her starting to assert her independence last week.

“She was able to stand without people holding her, so she started shaking things out and moving things around,” he said, breaking into a smile as he gently squeezed her shoulder.

“She’s ready to start taking control again.”

Tough row to hoe

Missing key players, can Leesburg match last season?

PAUL BARNEY | Staff Writer
paul.barney@dailycommercial.com

Israel Ramos isn't afraid to admit it. It will be tough for his Leesburg girls soccer team to repeat last year's success, where the Yellow Jackets advanced all the way to the Class 3A-Region 2 semifinals.

"It's going to be an interesting season," Ramos said. "It's going to be a fun season this year as we try to rebuild. There's no way we're going to be able to replicate what we did last year."

After all, it was a special year. Leesburg, which lost to Palm Coast Matanzas in the playoffs, finished the season 21-2-1.

"The girls gelled really well together and it was a team effort to get as far as we did," Ramos said. "We just felt honored that we were in that situation."

If the team wants to be in that position again, it will have to do so without some key players, including Chelsea Mudd, who was the county Player of the Year as a senior. Leesburg graduated five players who made All-County first and second teams last season, and of the eight seniors Ramos has on his roster this season, only about half were on last year's roster. Of the seniors that weren't on the team last year, Ramos said they're either transfers from out of state or junior varsity players coming up. The senior class includes Kristen Sullivan, Dilan Liner, Cinthia Hernandez, Meghan Wynn, Gabriella Zachar, Jasmine Kasch, Sidney Williams and Melody Smalley.

Smalley and Williams were All-County second team selections last year.

The junior class is made up of Tiarra San Nicholas, Angelica Parker, Jordan Peterson, Alyssa Steadham, Karenn Castro and Leydi Montejo. Peterson, a forward, has been on varsity since her freshman year.

"She's really grown into her position and as a leader as well," Ramos said of Peterson.

Lizzy Burry and Alaina Stanley are the only sophomores on the squad, while Phoebe Davis, Stephanie Akehurst and Jordan Williams make up the freshmen class.

Ramos said the team chemistry is great.

Hoyer's late TD pass helps Browns hold off Buccaneers

TOM WITHERS
AP Sports Writer

CLEVELAND — The Browns ended the "easy" part of their schedule with another hard-fought win.

Brian Hoyer threw a 34-yard TD pass to Taylor Gabriel with 8:59 remaining, helping Cleveland complete a favorable three-game stretch with a 22-17 win over the Tampa Bay Buccaneers on Sunday.

Cleveland was trailing 17-16 when Hoyer completed his second TD pass. Hoyer finished 21 of 34 for 300 yards, two TDs and two interceptions. He improved to 8-3 as Cleveland's starter.

Jimmie Johnson wins at Texas, Gordon still irate

STEPHEN HAWKINS

FORT WORTH, Texas — Jimmie Johnson won his third consecutive Texas fall race Sunday, when none of the eight championship contenders were able to clinch one of the final four spots in NASCAR's Chase for the Sprint Cup championship.

Johnson emerged from a frantic finish, the second attempt at a green-white-checked finish after his teammate and Chase contender Jeff Gordon spun out from the front after contact with Brad Keselowski. While Johnson celebrated his fourth victory at Texas, an irate Gordon stopped his car on pit road right by Keselowski and confronted him. There were punches thrown in the melee, with NASCAR officials in the middle of crew members and others around the No. 2 car.

Gordon was leading on the first green-white-checked attempt on lap 335, in

Tannehill leads Dolphins past Chargers

STEVEN WINE

MIAMI GARDENS — With his Miami Dolphins leading by 27 points in the third quarter, coach Joe Philbin stomped along the sideline, angrily waving his fist and screaming in disagreement with an official's ruling.

At the end of an emotional week, Philbin wasn't ready to let up.

The Dolphins channeled their coach's intensity with impressive results Sunday.

Ryan Tannehill threw for 288 yards and three scores, and Miami forced four turnovers to rout the San Diego Chargers 37-0.

Philbin missed two days of practice leading up to the game to be with his father, who died Friday in Massachusetts.

Following a moment of silence for the elder Philbin before kickoff, the Dolphins won one for their third-year coach, whose iffy job security has been bolstered by recent results.

The Dolphins (5-3) earned their third consecutive victory as they began a stretch of four games in a row against playoff contenders.

The Chargers (5-4) lost their third game in a row and remain winless in South Florida since

Palmer, Cards beat Romo-less Cowboys

SCHUYLER DIXON
AP Sports Writer

ARLINGTON, Texas — While Carson Palmer remained perfect this season as Arizona's starting quarterback, the Dallas Cowboys learned that life without Tony Romo might be a little rough. Palmer had three touchdown passes after an early interception the Cowboys returned for a score, and the Dallas offense struggled without the injured Romo in a 28-17 loss to the Cardinals on Sunday.

The Cardinals (7-1), who have sole possession of the best record in the NFC this late in the season for the first time since 1974, won their fourth straight. They have beaten all five conference rivals. Romo was out with his third back injury in 18 months, and backup Brandon Weeden threw two interceptions as the Cowboys (6-3) dropped their second straight after a six-game winning streak. NFL rushing leader DeMarco Murray's record streak of eight straight 100-yard games to start the season for Dallas ended against a defense that didn't allow a back over the century mark for the 18th consecutive time. He rushed for 79 yards on 19 carries.

Palmer put his team in a 7-0 hole when undrafted Dallas rookie Tyler Patmon ducked under a route, made an over-the-head catch and ran untouched down the Arizona sideline, with some nice blocking help from defensive end Anthony Spencer.

But that was his only mistake. He finished 22 of 34 for 249 yards with touchdowns of 7 yards to John Carlson, 11 to Jaron Brown and 1 to Andre Ellington.

All three TDs came on third down as the Cardinals went 9 of 15 on third down. Palmer, who missed three games with a shoulder injury, improved to 5-0 and has won 12 of his past 14 starts.

Ellington outgained Murray on the ground with 95 yards and added another 39 receiving.

Jeremy Hill's 2 touchdown runs lead Bengals over Jaguars

JOE KAY
AP Sports Writer

CINCINNATI — Jeremy Hill pulled the Bengals through a game that was sloppy all-around and still in doubt until his big play.

The rookie ran for a career-high 154 yards and a pair of touchdowns on Sunday, including a 60-yarder in the fourth quarter that helped the Cincinnati Bengals hold on for a 33-23 victory over the Jacksonville Jaguars.

Andy Dalton threw a pair of touchdown passes, one of them to A.J. Green in the Pro Bowl receiver's return from a toe injury, but also had a pair of interceptions that kept it close.

The Jaguars (1-8) turned Dalton's second interception into Denard Robinson's 5-yard touchdown run, cutting it to 26-23. Hill broke his 60-yard touchdown run on Cincinnati's next play from scrimmage and finished with the most yards by a Bengals running back in five years.

Rookie Blake Bortles, who leads the NFL in interceptions, helped the Bengals put it away by throwing an interception to George Iloka in the end zone with 3:55 left. Bortles was 22 of 33 for 247 yards with a pair of touchdown passes to Allen Hurns.

Jacksonville will head directly from Cincinnati to London, England, where the Jaguars will play the Dallas Cowboys next Sunday.

The Bengals held onto first place in the AFC North despite a sloppy game. They host intrastate rival Cleveland on Thursday night.

Dalton was 19 of 31 for 233 yards with two interceptions and two sacks. He had a 19-yard touchdown pass to Mohamed Sanu that put the Bengals ahead to stay in the second quarter. While Green was sidelined for three games by an injured big right toe, Sanu developed into the Bengals' top playmaker.

Sanu had four catches for 95 yards on Sunday, including an over-the-shoulder catch for a 33-yard gain in the first half. He held on for a 36-yard gain on the opening drive of the second half despite being leveled by Josh Evans, setting up Hill's 1-yard touchdown run for a 19-3 lead.

Green could have had a 12-yard touchdown catch in the first half, but it was nullified because he lined up beyond the line of scrimmage. Green finished with three catches for 44 yards in limited plays.

The Jaguars had trouble getting off punts in the first half. One of Bryan Anger's kicks was deflected, giving the Bengals good field position. Mike Nugent's 31-yard field goal made it 10-3.

Jacksonville went three-and-out on its next possession, and Taylor Mays blocked Anger's kick out of the end zone for a safety.

Vikings ruin RG3's return, eke out win over Redskins

DAVE CAMPBELL
AP Pro Football Writer

MINNEAPOLIS — Robert Griffin III had the better start, in his return to the Washington Redskins.

Teddy Bridgewater finished stronger, giving the Minnesota Vikings another comeback victory.

Bridgewater threw a touchdown pass near the end of the first half and didn't have any turnovers, Matt Asiata ran for three scores and the Vikings spoiled Griffin's first game back by beating the Redskins 29-26.

Bridgewater completed 26 of 42 passes for 268 yards for the Vikings (4-5), who sacked Griffin five times.

Griffin went 18 for 28 for 251 yards, one touchdown and one interception for the Redskins (3-6), who lost three leads despite 92 yards and two touchdowns rushing by Alfred Morris and 120 yards receiving and a score by DeSean Jackson.

This was a rough day for the Redskins, starting with a crash between their two buses on the way to the stadium, where, incidentally, a protest of thousands of people decrying their nickname took place outside.

Griffin thrived against the Vikings in games each of the last two seasons, winning as a rookie and losing a close one last year.

But a sack put the Redskins in a third-and-20 situation from the 29 in the waning minutes, and Griffin gained 14 yards to give them fourth-and-6.

But an incompletion ended the game.

Florida finds confidence, identity in big win

MARK LONG
AP Sports Writer

JACKSONVILLE — Florida found two things on offense Saturday that it had long been missing: confidence and identity.

Maintaining both will be critical for the Gators down the stretch.

"A lot of our issues offensively have been confidence, have been timidity," head coach Wil Muschamp said following a 38-20 win against then-ninth-ranked Georgia on Saturday. "For whatever reason, whether it is one position, two positions, we got to have some success. We needed to have some success."

The Gators (4-3, 3-3 Southeastern Conference) spent the last two weeks finding ways to gain yards and minimize turnovers while getting freshman quarterback Treon Harris ready for his first career start. The settled on pounding the ball.

And they did against the Bulldogs (6-2, 4-2).

Kelvin Taylor carried 25 times for a career-high 197 yards and two touchdowns. Matt Jones added a career-best 192 yards on the ground and two scores on 25 attempts. As dominant as the duo was, Mike McNeely's 21-yard run on a fake field goal in the second quarter may have been the biggest play of the game.

The 5-foot-8 former walk-

Florida running back Kelvin Taylor (21) is brought down by Georgia cornerback Damian Swann (5) during the first half on Saturday in Jacksonville.

"We actually did have a plan to throw some passes in the game. I know I'll still disappoint a bunch of Florida fans with it, but why stop running the ball when you're able to gain yards?"

Will Muschamp
Florida head coach

on, who earned a scholarship in August and still bags groceries at a supermarket near campus every Sunday, went untouched around the right side for his first career touchdown. That tied the game at 7.

"I feel like that stole the momentum," Florida defensive back Brian Poole said. "After that, they never got it back."

Florida finished with 418 yards rushing, the program's most since NFL Hall of Famer Emmitt Smith was leading the way in 1989.

Taylor and Jones were so successful that Harris didn't have to do much aside from hand off. The Gators ran 60 times and threw just six passes. Harris was 3-for-6 for 27 yards. He also ran for 37.

"We actually did have a plan to throw some passes in the game," Muschamp said. "I know I'll still disappoint a bunch of Florida fans with it, but why stop running the ball when you're able to gain yards?"

Florida turned the ball over 15 times in its previous four games, including six in an embarrassing, 42-13 home loss to Missouri on homecoming. Many of those came on passing plays. Muschamp benched turnover-prone quarterback Jeff Driskel, and the switch seemed to invigorate the entire team.

"We knew what we needed to do," center Max Garcia said. "We went with a game plan that we thought we thought was going to be successful, and that was running the ball. We were able to do that. ... I'm just glad that we stuck to it and we stuck to our word."

The Gators have struggled to throw the ball for years, ever since Tim Tebow left following the 2009 season really.

They have been able to run it consistently, though, even against stacked lines of scrimmage.

"We've always been a blue-collar identity team, identity offense," Muschamp said. "I think we have to continue to develop in the throwing game. We didn't (Saturday) because we didn't need to, but we're going to have to down the road."

Cousins strikes for 34 points, 17 boards as Kings beat Clips

LOS ANGELES — DeMarcus Cousins had 34 points and 17 rebounds, Rudy Gay added 25 points, and the Sacramento Kings handed the poor shooting Los Angeles Clippers their first loss, 98-92 on Sunday.

The Kings (2-1) rallied from a 10-point deficit in the third quarter and outscored the Clippers 28-18 in the fourth. They took the lead for good on a layup by Gay with just under six minutes to play.

Blake Griffin and Spencer Hawes both scored 17 points to lead five Clippers in double figures. Chris Paul had 16 points and 11 assists, J.J. Redick had 12 points, and Jordan Farmar 10.

The Clippers (2-1) struggled offensively for the third straight game, shooting 33 of 88. They were 9 of 31 from 3-point range, with Matt Barnes, Paul and Redick combining to miss a slew in the fourth.

Even new Clippers owner Steve Ballmer couldn't exhort his team to victory, his fists clenched, his face red and his lips forming the words, "Let's go!" from his baseline seat.

Sacramento's Darren Collison scored 14 points in his first game against his former team.

The Clippers led by two early in the fourth, when their second unit got things going. But the starters returned and couldn't make a difference.

Cousins scored the Kings' first eight points of the game, and he had 11 points in the third when they cut a 10-point deficit to four heading into the fourth.

Sacramento's Ben McLemore received a flagrant-1 for pulling Griffin down from behind in the first.

MIAMI — Chris Bosh scored 21 points and grabbed 11 rebounds and the Miami Heat beat the Toronto Raptors for the 16th straight time, prevailing 107-102 on Sunday night.

Dwyane Wade added 19 points, 11 rebounds and seven assists for the Heat (3-0) — the last unbeaten team in the Eastern Conference. Luol Deng scored 18 points, Shawne Williams added 16 and Mario Chalmers finished with 12 for Miami.

DeMar DeRozan scored 30 points for Toronto (2-1), which hasn't beaten Miami since Jan. 27, 2010.

Kyle Lowry added 22, including a layup that got the Raptors within four with 21 seconds left. Jonas Valanciunas scored 14 and Greivis Vasquez finished with 12 for Toronto, which was outrebounded 43-28.

Miami led by as many as 16 late in the third quarter before the Raptors came roaring back, starting with a 6-0 run to close the third and get within 10. Toronto got within six twice midway through the fourth, before Shawne Williams made a pair of big plays for Miami.

He tipped in a missed 3-point try by Mario Chalmers for an eight-point lead and after DeRozan's 3-pointer with 5:23 left got Toronto t15 within five, he answered with a 3 of his own from the left corner to restore Miami's cushion.

Lowry had a chance to get Toronto within five again when he was fouled on a 3-pointer with about 2 minutes left, but missed two of the three tries. The Raptors missed 15 free throws on the night, after missing a total of 16 in their first two games.

January 1982, a stretch that includes eight consecutive losses to the Dolphins.

Every Miami victory this season has been by double digits, and this was the most lopsided yet. San Diego was shut out for the first time since 1999, and the Dolphins earned their first shutout since 2006.

Tannehill had a career-high passer rating of 125.6 when he called it a day after three quarters. He went 24 for 34 with no turnovers and threw touchdown passes to Charles Clay, Rishard Matthews and Jarvis Landry. He also ran for 47 yards on four carries.

Meanwhile, Miami's front four dominated the Chargers' line, harrying Philip Rivers into a lost fumble and three interceptions, two to Brent Grimes. Rivers passed for only 138 yards and had a quarterback rating of 31.0, his lowest since 2007.

Miami's final takeaway set up a touchdown drive that took five seconds to make the score 37-0 late in the third quarter.

With that, Rivers went to the bench for good, ending his Chargers-record streak of at least one touchdown pass in 28 consecutive games.

The Dolphins, prone to slow starts this season, broke that habit and mounted touchdown drives of 77 and 61 yards on their first two possessions. Reshad Jones then intercepted Rivers to set up a field goal that made it 17-0 after just 21 minutes.

The onslaught continued from there.

In the Dolphins' first seven possessions, the only time they didn't score was when Sturgis missed a field goal.

Wilson Kipsang of Kenya hoists his country's flag after winning the New York City Marathon on Sunday in New York.

Kipsang, Keitany win NYC Marathon titles

NEW YORK — Wilson Kipsang, a former world-record holder, needed to force himself to slow down.

The Kenyan star had entered his first New York City Marathon to challenge himself on a hilly course with no pacemaker. A windy morning made for quite the test Sunday, and Kipsang proved he can win a strategic race.

"I had to really exercise a lot of patience," he said.

Kipsang pulled away in the final mile for his third major marathon title in just over 13 months. Mary Keitany also took the lead late in the women's race for a Kenyan sweep.

Kipsang's record-setting victories in Berlin and London were on flat courses with the aid of a pacemaker, very different from Sunday, when winds were gusting at more than 30 mph at the start. The contenders adjusted by cautiously sticking to a slow pace.

"It was very tactical," Kipsang said. "So it was not easy."

He finished in 2 hours, 10 minutes, 59 seconds — the slowest winning time in New York since 1995, and more than 7 1/2 minutes off the world record he sent just over a year ago in Berlin.

Keitany tried a very different tactic in her last NYC Marathon, surging ahead to a huge early lead in 2011. She was caught that day and had to settle for her second straight third-place finish.

Anti-Redskins groups rally outside Vikings game

MINNEAPOLIS — The action at the Redskins-Vikings game started Sunday morning outside the stadium in Minnesota, as a crowd estimated by organizers around 5,000 rallied against Washington's divisive nickname.

The event began with a march through the University of Minnesota campus to TCF Bank Stadium, where Native American leaders, local politicians, former sports stars and other speakers voiced their disdain for Redskins owner Dan Snyder and his refusal to change the nickname they've derided as derogatory and racist.

With many of the attendees wearing colorful, traditional Native American clothing and more holding signs, the gathering was by far the stiffest resistance for a Redskins road game and the latest push in a nationwide campaign that has cranked up over the last year. Some people wore burgundy T-shirts with gold lettering, mimicking the team's logo with the words "Rethink" and "Rename" instead of Redskins.

"We're not mascots!" said former Vikings strong safety Joey Browner, one of 29 speakers who took the microphone on a lawn just steps from the stadium entrances.

Browner, who is part Native American, wore a black Vikings cap with a feather sticking up out of it.

"As a former player I feel really sad right now. ... This is still standing in front of us," Browner said.

Moore defends CIMB Classic title by 3 shots over Woodland

CHRIS LINES
AP Sports Writer

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia — Ryan Moore knows how to finish a tournament, and how to start a season.

For the second straight year, Moore won the CIMB Classic on Sunday, and for the third year running he won on the PGA Tour's fall schedule to get a flying start to the season, having also won the Shriners' Hospitals for Children Open in October 2012.

Moore shot a 5-under 67 for a three-stroke win, beating fellow American Gary Woodland for the second straight year. He finished on 17-under 271 at Kuala Lumpur Golf and Country Club to become the first player to defend a title on the PGA Tour since Tiger Woods at the Arnold Palmer Invitation in 2013.

Sergio Garcia (69) and Kevin Na (70) shared a three-way tie for second with Woodland (67).

Moore had eight birdies against three bogeys in the final round, and earned his fourth PGA Tour title with superb approach shots at the 14th and 17th holes for birdies, and some nerveless putting on the back nine.

"It was incredible to finish the way I did coming down those last few holes," Moore said.

"I like to tell myself all the time that 'I am a closer. Let's just do what we can, hit good shots and let's close this thing' and I was able to do that."

What he wasn't able to do yet is work out why he wins tournaments early in a new season and not after.

"I've been thinking about that for a while trying to figure out why," Moore said.

"Maybe it's because the end is near. I see that I'm going to have six or seven weeks off pretty soon and it's like 'it's the home stretch, just play some good golf and finish off the year'.

"I've got to figure that out and try to approach every tournament that way."

Woodland, who lost to Moore in a playoff at this tournament 12 months earlier, threatened to reverse that result by firing six birdies without a bogey over the first 15 holes to move within a shot of Moore.

He had a birdie putt at 16 for a share of the lead that lipped out, and at 18 he had the chance for another birdie that would have upped the pressure on

Moore, but missed it, and the close-range par putt.

"The par fives cost me all week," Woodland said. "I played beautifully outside the par fives."

Na birdied three of the first four holes to take a two-stroke lead and still led by a stroke after 12 before his round began to unravel.

A bogey on the 13th dropped him back into a share of the lead; at 14, a downhill eagle opportunity slid past the hole at pace and turned into a three-putt for par; and at 15 he missed a birdie putt, leaving him two shots behind.

Siem chips in to win BMW Masters playoff

DOUG FERGUSON

SHANGHAI — Marcel Siem of Germany missed an easy putt to win the BMW Masters in regulation. He atoned for that Sunday by chipping in for birdie to win a sudden-death playoff against Alexander Levy of France and Ross Fisher of England.

Siem rallied from a five-shot deficit on a wind-whipped afternoon at Lake Malaren. He was the only player who failed to hit the 18th green in the playoff, and then thrilled the Chinese gallery with a chip from the collar that curled in the right side of the cup.

Even with a bogey-bogey finish in regulation to close with a 1-over 73, the fourth victory of Siem's career sends him to the World Golf Championship next week in Shanghai.

Levy couldn't handle the wind and faster greens and closed with a 78. He was fortunate to even get into the playoff. His approach to the 18th in regulation crossed over the hazard line and stopped a foot away from going into the lake. He chipped to the other side of the green and had to make a 5-foot putt for bogey.

Fisher had a chance at the greatest comeback in European Tour history. He started the final round 11 shots out of the lead and was solid in the wind along the back nine to close with a 67, the best score of the final round. He was the first to finish at 16-under 272 and didn't think it would be enough until Levy and Siem stumbled in the final group.

What had been an easy week for scoring turned into a wild ride for just about everybody because of the relentless 25 mph wind.

Levy lost his four-shot lead on the front nine with back-to-back bogeys, only to build it back to two shots. But the Frenchman drove into the water on the par-5 13th and made double bogey, and then missed short putts — for par on the 14th and birdie on the 15th — that kept him from regaining the lead.

Siem took his first lead of the weekend with a par on the 16th, only to hit his tee shot into the gallery on the 17th and make bogey. A par on the 18th would have been enough for the win, but the German badly missed an 8-foot par putt.

Top-ranked Inbee Park fires 1-under-par 71 to win LPGA Taiwan over Lewis

Associated Press

TAIPEI, Taiwan — Six days after taking the No. 1 spot in the world from Stacy Lewis, Inbee Park was a notch above the American again at Miramar.

Park won the LPGA Taiwan Championship on Sunday for her third victory of the year and 12th tour title, holding off Lewis by two strokes.

The 26-year-old South Korean player closed with a 1-under 71 in light rain to finish at 22-under 266.

The victory capped a hectic Asian trip centered around her marriage last month to swing coach Gi Hy-eob-nam.

"I think this will be my wedding gift for myself," Park said. "It's a good feeling and maybe people who said, 'She's not going to play as well as when she was not married.' I think we can put that wrong."

Park shot 64-62-69 to take a four-stroke lead over Lewis and China's Shanshan Feng into the final round. "I think playing with Stacy, I really wanted to play well," Park said. "Obviously, being able to win the tournament was a great accomplishment. It was a tough day and I got nervous on every hole today, even on the 18th hole."

The second-ranked Lewis, also a three-time winner this year, shot 69.

"I hung in there all day and just made Inbee work for it," Lewis said. "That was the goal. You give Inbee four shots, it's a tough task to overcome. She hit the shots when she needed to coming in."

After Lewis birdied the par-4 16th to pull within one, Park birdied the par-3 17th to regain her two-stroke lead. Her only other birdies came on the first two holes and she bogeyed the last two holes on the front nine.

"I don't think this is the last time we'll be battling at the end of a tournament," Lewis said. "I think we're both playing some really good golf right now. It's unfortunate, I guess, for the fans it's the end of the season, but we have a few tournaments left and hopefully we'll do it again."

Grandfather's to-do list creates special family day

DEAR ABBY: I am a 62-year-old grandfather of a 5-year-old granddaughter. The other day I had her for the entire day. I decided to make a list of the things we were to accomplish throughout the course of the day. It turned out to be a great success. After completing each task, she would ask, "What's next on the list?"

The first item, No. 1, was to do our "strong" (that's what we call exercise). No. 2 was to write her alphabet and numbers. No. 3 was to "go on an adventure" (that's what we call walking the dog and exploring the nearby field).

Nos. 4, 5 and 6 — go to the bank, get the car washed, then go to the park to swing, slide, etc. After the park, she asked if we could go to our favorite restaurant across the street. I replied, "How did you know that was next on the list?" Her expression was priceless.

After lunch we went home and did No. 8 — another adventure, which was take the dogs for a walk again. No. 9 was painting time (what 5-year-old doesn't like to paint?). After cleaning up it was time for No. 10, wash the dishes and Swiffer the floor. No. 11 she could choose something to do. We spent the next two hours playing with her dolls.

At about 5:30 my daughter came to pick her up from an exhausted grandpa. Lists will be part of our routine from now on. I slept like a log that night and hope to have many nights and days just like it in the future. — GRANDPA ROBERT IN LEXINGTON, KY.

DEAR GRANDPA ROBERT: Your grandchild is lucky not only to have such a loving and dedicated grandpa, but also one with your stamina. I sometimes hear from grandparents — and other adults — who ask me for suggestions about how to better connect with their young children. Your letter is a road map that will take them in the right direction.

DEAR ABBY: During one of their "stay up all night drinking beer and talking" sessions six months ago, my husband, "Ralph," and his best friend of more than 20 years, "Jim," had a huge fight. They haven't spoken since.

Ralph has tried at least three times to contact Jim by phone and email with no response. If Ralph's version of the story is true, they both behaved badly. Ralph has sincerely tried to apologize, but Jim refuses to speak to him.

It breaks my heart to see how much this has upset my husband. I am still Facebook friends with Jim, and every time I see him online I'm tempted to say something to him, but so far I have resisted. Would it be crossing the line for me to reach out and see if he'll talk to me about this? Or should I stay out of it? — HOPEFUL PEACEMAKER IN ARIZONA

DEAR HOPEFUL PEACEMAKER: I know you mean well, but it would be a mistake to put yourself in the middle. Whatever happened between your husband and his friend must have been a doozy.

You state that this happened during one of their all-night drinking and talking sessions. To me this indicates that one or both of them may have alcohol issues that need to be addressed. This is what should be mentioned, but only to your spouse. If the loss of his long-standing friendship has been painful enough, he may be willing to listen.

HOROSCOPES

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Monday, Nov. 3, 2014:

This year you often go from being intensely emotional to highly logical. You have a strong intuitive sense that can't be denied; don't allow anyone or any situation to prevent you from following it. If you are single, you might choose to relate to someone quite bohemian in style. Do not commit too quickly. If you are attached, the two of you act like new lovers. You also will develop a new common interest that will add to your relationship. ARIES can be provocative.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Your internal clock might be instrumental in determining which way you go. Your energy could be off in the morning, so maintain a low profile. By mid-afternoon, you'll be more willing to have an uncomfortable conversation in order to balance a situation.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) You will see a big difference in your life if you follow your sixth sense. Move quickly this morning, as strong actions seem to have even more clout. You could be exhausted by a conversation, which might encourage you to lie low.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You could be rethinking an important decision involving a close friend. You would like to see this relationship evolve to a new level. Understand that you have a lot to accomplish right now. Trust that your bond will evolve appropriately.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) You might want to try something new. Pressure is likely to build around some decisions you must make, as those in charge could be quite demanding. Understand that you will need to adjust your attitude.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) A disparity seems to exist between what you say and what you feel. You might not be in a position to reveal your true thoughts. Someone could pick up on the fact that you are not being authentic. Make a point of clearing the air.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Your ability to read between the lines and allow more clarity into an issue will come through for you. What you think about a money situation could be different from reality. Look at a loved one's reaction to you; it will tell you a lot.

JACQUELINE BIGAR
BIGAR'S STARS

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) You might want to have a discussion that is way overdue. Your beliefs and feelings are important, and they could be challenged by someone you respect. Do not get upset; instead, look at what you can do to improve your style of communicating.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) You could be in the uncertain position of having to make a choice. While you might view a solution as being unworkable, others will seem to think differently. Consider asking some deliberate questions in order to tap into their way of thinking.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) You could be out of sync with a friend or in a meeting. You will sense that there is an issue, but you might have difficulty resolving it. You easily could become irritated, and might need to head in a different direction.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You might want to try to improve your situation, but no one seems to be letting you know what you need to do. Perhaps someone is very jealous of you and is influencing others. Open up conversations in the morning, but expect to do some hard thinking later on.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Continue to use care with your finances. How you see an important matter could change after you have a conversation with a special friend. A demanding boss or relative is likely to take up a lot of your time. You might wonder how to say "enough."

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) You could be close to getting past a limitation that has been holding you back. It will be important to have a conversation with a key person in your life. Reach out to someone at a distance who can shed some light on the situation.

and indicated two aces and a king. From then on, the bidding was natural. Garozzo showed his diamonds, and Forquet jumped to three spades, indicating a long, strong spade suit. Garozzo raised to four, and Forquet passed, fearing North's clubs might be of poor quality since North had failed to cuebid the suit. West led his singleton diamond, and Forquet could take no more than 11 tricks to score a seemingly normal 650 points.

At the second table, with a Dutch pair North-South, the bidding was less scientific but more successful:

West	North	East	South
Pass	1 ♣	Pass	1 ♣
Pass	2 NT	Pass	3 ♣
Pass	3 NT	Pass	6 ♣

West led the jack of hearts, and declarer had no trouble taking all 13 tricks. Three clubs was probably meant to inhibit West from leading that suit — though in the actual deal, West would hardly have led a club even if the suit had not been bid.

As seen from what happened at the first table, a diamond lead would have stopped the slam, since it would have cut declarer off from dummy's red-suit tricks before all the opposing trumps could be drawn. As it was, with the actual lead Holland gained 810 points on the deal.
