Trump: Military to guard border

WASHINGTON — Frustrated by slow action on a big campaign promise, President Donald Trump said Tuesday he wants to use the military to secure the U.S.-Mexico border until his promised border wall is built.

Trump told reporters he's been discussing the idea with Defense Secretary Jim Mattis. "We're going to be doing things militarily. Until we can have a wall and proper security, we're going to be guarding our border with the military," Trump said, calling the move a "big step."

It was unclear exactly how the proposal would work or what kind of troops Trump wanted to deploy.

Federal law prohibits the use of active-duty service members for law enforcement inside the U.S., unless specifically authorized by Congress. But over the past 12 years, presidents have twice sent National Guard troops to the border to bolster security and assist with surveillance and other support. An official said the White House counsel's office has been working on the idea for several weeks.

Trump has been annoyed by the lack of progress on building what was the signature promise of his campaign: a "big, beautiful wall" along the Mexican border. He's previously suggested using the Pentagon's budget to pay for building the wall, arguing it is a national security priority, despite strict rules that prohibit spending that's not authorized by Congress.

The Department of Homeland Security and White House did not immediately respond to requests for comment. At the Pentagon, TAVARES — David Mariotti helped his lawyers Tuesday pick the jury that will decide his fate in his first-degree murder trial. That fate could mean a date with the state's executioner if he is found guilty of killing 84-year-old Bernadine Montgomery in her Leesburg home.

The 12 jurors — six men, six women and one alternate, will hear opening statements this morning.

Mariotti, 35, looking tired and pale at times, the knot of his tie loosened and slumping in his seat, perked up during the jury selection process. At one point he could be heard

Study: Midlife 'wealth shock' may lead to death

By Carla K. Johnson
The Associated Press

A big financial loss may shorten your life, a new study suggests.

Middle-aged Americans who experienced a sudden, large economic blow were more likely to die during the following years than those who didn't. The heightened danger of death after a devastating loss, which researchers called a "wealth shock," crossed socio-economic lines, affecting people no matter how much money they had to start.

The analysis of nearly 9,000 people's experiences underscores well-known connections between money and well-being, with prior studies linking lower incomes and rising income inequality with more chronic disease and shorter life expectancy.

"This is really a story about everybody," said lead researcher Lindsay Pool of Northwestern University's

50 years after King's death, his children are still grieving

By Errin Haines Whack
The Associated Press

ATLANTA — On April 4, 1968, a movement lost its patriarch when the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. was killed on a hotel balcony in Memphis.

Yolanda, Martin, Dexter and Bernice King lost their father.

The loss has not gotten easier in 50 years, but his three surviving children each bear it on their own terms.

"That period, for me, is like yesterday," said Dexter King, now 57. "People say it's been 50 years, but I'm living in step time. Forget what he did in terms of his service and commitment and contribution to humankind ... I miss my dad."

His children cling to the few memories they have left of him. For years, they have had to publicly mourn a man who was among the most hated in America at the time of his death — a task they have been reluctant and, at times, angry to carry out.

Now that King is among the most beloved figures in the world, his heirs are forced to share him with the multitudes

MOSCOW China's defense chief calls his Moscow trip a signal to US

China's new defense minister says his visit to Russia is a signal to the United States about the increasingly close military ties between Moscow and Beijing.

The unusually bold statement Tuesday by Gen. Wei Fenghe at the start of his talks with Russian Defense Minister Sergei Shoigu reflected the growing military cooperation between the two former Communist rivals.

Speaking in Moscow, Wei emphasized that he chose Russia for his first trip abroad since becoming the international face of China's military last month to "show the world a high level of development of our bilateral relations and firm determination of our armed forces to strengthen strategic cooperation."

GAZA CITY, GAZA STRIP Israel vows tough response to Gaza protests

Israel's defense minister said Tuesday that the military will not change its tough response to Hamas-led mass protests near Gaza's border with Israel, warning that those who approach the border are putting their lives at risk.

Avigdor Lieberman spoke near Gaza, where 18 Palestinians were killed by Israeli fire Friday, the first day of what Hamas says will be six weeks of intermittent border protests against a stifling blockade of the territory.

Officials: YouTube shooting investigated as domestic dispute

By Ryan Nakashima and Sudhin Thanawala
Associated Press

SAN BRUNO, Calif. — A shooting at YouTube headquarters Tuesday that wounded three people is being investigated as a domestic dispute, two law enforcement officials said.

The officials with knowledge of the investigation spoke to The Associated Press on the condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to discuss it.

The shooter killed herself after opening fire with a handgun in a courtyard, police said.

After receiving multiple 911 calls reporting gunfire, officers and federal agents swarmed the company's suburban campus sandwiched between two interstates in the San Francisco Bay Area city of San Bruno, as terrified employees huddled inside.

A 36-year-old man was in critical condition, a 32-year-old woman was in serious condition and a 27-year-old woman was in fair condition, a spokesman for San Francisco General Hospital said.

YouTube employee Dianna Arnsperger said she was on the building's second floor when she heard gunshots, ran to a window and saw the shooter on a patio outside.

She said the woman wore glasses and a scarf and was using a "big huge pistol."

"It was a woman and she was firing her gun. And I just said, 'Shooter,' and everybody started running," Arnsperger said.

She and others hid in a conference room for an hour while another employee repeatedly called 911 for updates.

"It was terrifying," she said.

Television news footage showed people leaving the building in a line, holding their arms in the air. Officers patted them down to make sure none had weapons.

Officers discovered one wounded victim when they arrived and then found the shooter with what appeared to be a self-inflicted gunshot wound several minutes later, San Bruno Police Chief Ed Barberini said.

He said two additional gunshot victims were found minutes later at an adjacent business. Barberini initially said there were four shooting victims but later clarified that a fourth person suffered an ankle injury.

The headquarters has more than a thousand engineers and other employees in several buildings. Originally built in the late 1990s for the clothing retailer Gap, the campus south of San Francisco is known for its sloped green roof of native grasses.

Inside, Google, which owns the world's biggest online video website, famously outfitted the office several years ago with a three-lane red slide for workers to zoom from one story to another.

Zach Vorhies, 37, a senior software engineer at YouTube, said he was at his desk working on the second floor of one of the buildings when the fire alarm went off. He got on his skateboard and approached a courtyard, where he saw the shooter yelling, "Come at me, or come get me."

There was somebody lying nearby on his back with a red stain on his stomach that appeared to be from a bullet wound.

He said he realized there was an active shooter when a police officer with an assault rifle came through a security door. He jumped on his skateboard and took off.

Google said the company's security team worked with authorities to evacuate buildings and was doing whatever it could support the victims and their families. The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives said it also responded.

"Today it feels like the entire community of YouTube, all of the employees, were victims of this crime," said Chris Dale, a YouTube spokesman. "Our hearts go out to all those who suffered."

The White House said President Donald Trump was briefed on the shooting and that officials were monitoring developments.

LEESBURG
Cops: Woman stabs fiance to stop domestic violence attack

A man with a history of domestic violence may have gotten the worst of it this time when his girlfriend stabbed him in the stomach after he choked her during an argument.

According to an arrest affidavit, when Jayson Dullum's fiance arrived home in the middle of the night, he began to question her about where she'd been and then looked through text messages on her cell phone. They began to argue, and the woman said Dullum spit in her face, then poured a Mountain Dew soda on her. When she went to the bathroom to wash and change, he reportedly followed her in there and began choking her, and she started to black out.

The woman said Dullum, of Leesburg, released her, but then grabbed her again when she started to run and choked her again. She broke free and ran to the kitchen, where Dullum reportedly threatened to kill her and approached again. This time, she grabbed a knife and stabbed him in the stomach.

She drove him to the hospital a short time later. Police said she had scratches and red marks on her neck consistent with her description of the altercation.

Dullum, 43, was charged with domestic battery by strangulation and child neglect for leaving infants alone in the apartment when the couple left for the hospital.

Dullum was arrested in 2015 and 2016 for various charges, including domestic violence. He is currently on probation.

Detectives arrest man for rape of Eustis woman

A Sorrento man was jailed Monday on charges that he raped a woman at her home in Eustis.

According to an arrest affidavit, Jose Santoyo Crosby, 46, sent the woman, who he knows, a message on Facebook telling her he was coming over Sunday night. The woman loaded her dogs in her car and was getting ready to leave because Crosby has been violent toward her in the past, but he pulled into the driveway before she could leave and blocked her car in.

He brought her back into the home, undressed and led her to the bedroom, where he reportedly raped her. The woman told deputies she complied because she was afraid of what he might do if she didn't.

Detectives took her to the Haven to be examined, and forensic technicians collected evidence from her home.

A detective returning to the Sheriff's Office in Tavares a little while later spotted Crosby's car and arrested him on a charge of sexual battery.

Rubio statements draw fire

Officials publicly condemn senator for conflicting stances on gun control

By Ashraf Khalil
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — It was one week after the fatal shootings at a Parkland, Florida, high school, and Republican Sen. Marco Rubio was looking to show solidarity with an angry crowd of parents and students in his home state. He told them — and a national television audience — that 18-year-olds should not be able to buy a rifle and said, "I will support a law that takes that right away."

About 1,000 miles (1,600 kilometers) north, District of Columbia officials could only shake their heads in disbelief. The city already had a law barring 18-year-olds from buying rifles, yet Rubio was the main senator pushing legislation to end that ban, as well as D.C.'s prohibition of assault weapons.

"Rubio's gun bill should be a public embarrassment as well as a personal embarrassment to him," said Eleanor Holmes Norton, Washington's non-voting delegate in Congress.

Gun control has long been a sore point in relations between officials in this heavily Democratic city, home to some of the nation's toughest gun control laws, and

State prisons to limit visitations

DOC says it is looking to blunt a rise in contraband material

By John Kennedy

TALLAHASSEE — Dozens of family members of Florida prison inmates crowded a hearing Tuesday to protest a proposed Department of Corrections rule that would cut visitation times in half across the short-staffed system.

DOC says it is dropping initial plans to enact every-other-weekend visiting beginning Saturday. The agency, instead, will go through a state rule-making process that would allow for another public hearing before the new scheduling goes into effect.

But DOC isn't looking to abandon the new policy, and Tuesday's hearing drew outrage and warnings from those attending.

"They're not taking into account the impact this has on our humanity," said Kyle Williford, 30, of Orlando, who was released last month after serving three years at Hardee Correctional Institution following a burglary conviction.

"Violence is deterred by visitation," he added. "This is bad for the inmates, and the correctional officers."

The schedule change was unveiled after the Florida Times-Union began reporting on concerns surrounding prison visitations — obtaining records that revealed thousands of strip searches, mostly of inmate wives, mothers, girlfriends and female family members seeking to enter lockups.

Republicans, who as the congressional majority have power over D.C.'s laws. The strong feelings have intensified with the nation at a crossroads moment in the gun control debate after the Feb. 14 shootings at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School and a subsequent "March for Our Lives" gun-control rally in Washington.

Rubio, in particular, is seen as the villain. City officials accuse him of playing cynical political games with the lives of Washington residents to curry favor with the National Rifle Association.

Following the town hall, Washington Mayor Muriel Bowser challenged Rubio to withdraw his bill. Rubio sent her a letter saying that he and Bowser "share a common goal" and that his bill seeks only to bring Washington "in line with federal law." If federal law changes - which Rubio said is his goal - then Washington's laws would change as well.

Bowser, a Democrat, posted the letter on Twitter with her handwritten notes and objections written in the margins. Those notes include Bowser calling Rubio's stance "the epitome of hypocrisy."

"He's just using it to boost his NRA score," Bowser said in an interview with The Associated Press. "What we think Marco Rubio should be focused on is his job."

Asked for comment by The Associated Press, Rubio staffers responded by providing the Rubio letter that Bowser had posted.

Rubio introduced the bill, known as the Second Amendment Enforcement Act, in 2015 and again in 2017. According to the NRA website, Rubio has an A-plus rating. Among its list of Rubio accomplishments is that he "sponsored legislation that would repeal Washington, D.C.'s draconian gun control laws and restore the right of self-defense to law-abiding individuals in our nation's capital."

the charities they will be helping to support.

Last-minute preparations are also in full swing for 21 education-themed challenges that participants will face during the race.

Totten said details of the challenge stations are kept secret until the night before the race, but one is called Picky Eaters sponsored by My Favorite Things. Others are called Airborne Delivery, sponsored by Front Porch Realities; Prom Cheese sponsored by AC Pros of Florida; Spike Pong sponsored by 1884 restaurant; Hungry Hippos 2.0, sponsored by Florida Hospital Waterman; and a double-bellied obstacle course at Anytime Fitness and many more.

All the challenges are carried out by volunteers from the charities at area businesses, schools, churches, parks and city buildings throughout the city. In years past, the challenges have involved tasks like putting on a team member's makeup while blindfolded, crawling through the mud and being washed off like an animal at the dog groomer, building a 2-person tent or rappelling off a tower.

A finish line festival, sponsored by the City of Eustis, will be held afterwards.

"This race has grown every year, and I think it is because people don't feel like it's an obligation. When it is not fun and interesting is when people usually don't want to participate in something like this," Totten said.

And since the theme is education this year, Totten said participants are each required to donate to a school supply drive for Eustis Elementary.

Totten said between the money that is raised and the school supplies that are collected, the race's reach is substantial.

"A lot of us, people in general, donate to various charities and causes every day, but if 600 people or more do that all in one day, we make a tremendous impact," Totten said.

The organizations benefiting from the fifth annual Amazing Race for Charity are Alee Academy Charter School, the Abracadabra Foundation, Bay Street Players, the Early Learning Coalition of Lake County, the Education Foundation of Lake County, Florida Cancer Specialists Foundation, the Golden Triangle YMCA, the Lake County Humane Society, the Open Door homeless drop-in shelter and Life Stream Foundation, the Ruth House with Hand in Hand Lake County and Take Stock in Children.

"I have suffered with teeth problems all of my adult life. As result I have had several procedures over the years, all of which were to be the "final correction". Dr. Vaziri recommended the mini implants as a method of securing my lower denture. I agreed to the procedure and we started the process that day. Now years later I can say my problem has been solved. I am without problems eating, talking and I have learned to enjoy life again. This was the "BEST" dental decision I have ever made. I only wish this option was given years ago."

meeting area, where young and old can study or just enjoy each other's company.

Radzik said the idea for the center grew out of a community meeting five years ago in the Blue Street area. This year, it is in the budget, with $100,000 allocated for the project. The anticipated completion date is May 25, according to City Manager Mike Hein.

The community to be served by the new facility is the oldest of the city's historically African-American neighborhoods. Its namesake was, for years before her death in 2012 at the age of 107, the oldest living Grovelander. To her church family at Greater Harmony Missionary Baptist Church, she was the church mother. To members of the community, she was Mama Lee.

Billy Lock was Tomlin's long-time pastor at Harmony Baptist.

Speaking at the groundbreaking, he said, "It's an honor to be here at this ceremony. I'm just honored this is to be the Elsie Tomlin Center. She was a legend in this area, and all the churches around here. She served wherever she could."

Mary Harris is one of Tomlin's granddaughters and lives in Tomlin's old house.

"She would really be proud of this," Harris said. "She always had a love for kids and finding a place for them to further their education. She would be proud."

The Florida Department of Corrections is seeking to reduce inmate visitations as it struggles to stem the flow of contraband into the prison system. [GATEHOUSE MEDIA FILE] third largest prison system, with 97,000 inmates scattered across almost 150 institutions statewide, including 50 major prisons.

DOC has said it is looking to blunt a rise in contraband material — drugs, cell phones and material that could be used as weapons. The agency also has been dealing with a shortage of correctional officers, particularly at prisons across North Florida.

But while the amount of contraband seized at prisons has been rising over the past five years, the amount directly tied to visitors has remained steady at about 2.5 percent.

DOC, though, says that 2.5 percent mostly is contraband seized at visitor entry points and does not include what may be successfully smuggled into cells and dormitories.

Still, many who spoke at Tuesday’s hearings said that inmate families are being singled out for punishment and that contraband concerns are just an excuse.

“We are not to blame for the increase in contraband,” said Judy Thompson of Jacksonville, whose son has been at Florida State Prison in Raiford for the past 18 years.

“It’s important to be able to visit, to be able to look into someone’s eyes, to talk with them. For many people, that’s all they have,” she added.

Thompson is a leader with Forgotten Majority, Inc., one of the inmate advocacy organizations pushing for DOC to drop the rule change, which would reduce weekly visitation to twice monthly.

DOC is adding video call kiosks as an addition to every-other-weekend visitation, allowing inmates to pay $2.95 for 15 minutes of time to speak with family members and friends when visits are not allowed.

Corrections spokeswoman Michelle Glady said the video calls are not intended to replace personal visits.

“We are very aware of how important visitation is,” Glady said. “We take it very seriously.”

The video calls are a poor substitute for more frequent visits, said Angel Garner.

“We want to be able to see with our own eyes, in person, not over a monitor,” she said.

Eileen Fritz, a retired psychotherapist, also said that DOC was relying on a “faulty assumption” that inmate visitors were the source for rising levels of contraband.

“The department is just shifting the blame and consequences to the visitors,” Fritz said.

CLERMONT Clermont teen shoots lawn man with pellet gun

Authorities were trying to coax a teen out of a Clermont home Tuesday morning after the boy reportedly shot a lawn maintenance worker with a pellet gun.

The shooting occurred in the gated King’s Ridge community on U.S. Highway 27. It wasn’t clear if the lawn worker was injured, but a Lake County Sheriff’s spokesman said the teen ducked into his house afterward and officers are trying to convince him to surrender. They believe the boy has emotional or mental health problems.

who have laid claim to his legacy. For more than a decade, they have had to do this without two of the family's cornerstones: their mother, Coretta Scott King, who died in 2006, and eldest child, Yolanda, who died in 2007.

As adults, the siblings have earned a reputation over their infighting, which has spilled into rancorous lawsuits over heirlooms including their father's Bible and Nobel Peace Prize. Today, the three say they are in a "good place" and have managed to compartmentalize their differences and come together as a family in times of difficulty.

Their recollections are a reminder that at the center of this tragedy was a young family, robbed of a loving husband and father, who was just 39. All are older now than King was. The tributes to their dad — from the buildings and streets that bear his name, to statues in his home state and in the nation's capital — are points of pride, but also constant reminders of the void he left.

Martin Luther King III's eyes crinkle into a smile as he recalls the happier times: in the pews at Ebenezer Baptist Church on Auburn Avenue in Atlanta helping his dad greet new members, tossing a football or baseball on the lawn of the family home, swimming lessons at the YMCA.

When he came home from the front lines in the fight against racism, King's somber expression would give way to smiles and a playful mood. For them, he was not an icon, but a buddy.

King III and his brother also traveled with King. Months before he was killed, they accompanied King as he mobilized people in South Georgia to attend his upcoming Poor People's Campaign in Washington.

"That was our time for camaraderie," recalled King III, now 60.

King III said he can still get emotional around his father's death. If he listens too closely to King's "Drum Major Instinct" speech, in which the preacher muses about wanting to live a long life, he still gets moved to tears.

For years afterward, King III tensed whenever he saw a news bulletin like the ones that told him his father was killed, or that his uncle, A.D. King, had been found dead in his swimming pool, or that his grandmother had been killed by a madman while playing the organ at Sunday service at Ebenezer — all while he was still a child.

"I was afraid, because I was like, 'Is this going to be something else that happens to our family?'" he said.

Bernice King, the youngest, was once envious of her siblings, who had many more memories of King. Shared stories from her mother, sisters and brother, as well as home movies, helped humanize her father.

Nicknamed "Bunny," Bernice King said she cherishes the scant moments she remembers sharing between father and daughter, like the "kissing game" they would play.

"That stayed with me so vividly," said Bernice, now 55. "I'm glad I had that, because everything else, other than a few memories of being at the dinner table, I don't recall. I wish I knew him more."

She admitted to struggling with having to share her parents with strangers over the years.

"It bothered me," she said. "It's hard to have the private moments ... It's like everybody else has a part of him, and that's always hard to deal with. But I won't let it get in the way of what they have done and what they mean to the world."

That night and the days that followed the killing remain frozen in Dexter King's memory. He remembers his mother telling them something had happened to their father as she prepared to head to the airport. After Coretta Scott King left, their caregiver answered the kitchen telephone, started screaming and fell backward.

WEALTH

medical school. Stress, delays in health care, substance abuse and suicides may contribute, she said. "Policymakers should pay attention."

Overall, wealth shock was tied with a 50 percent greater risk of dying, although the study couldn't prove a cause-and-effect connection. The study was published Tuesday in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Researchers analyzed two decades of data from the Health and Retirement Study, which checks in every other year with a group of people in their 50s and 60s and keeps track of who dies.

About 1 in 4 people in the study had a wealth shock, which researchers defined as a loss of 75 percent or more in net worth over two years. The average loss was about $100,000.

That could include a drop in the value of investments or realized losses like a home foreclosure. Some shocks happened during the Great Recession of 2007-2009. Others happened before or after. No matter what was going on in the greater U.S. economy, a wealth shock still increased the chance of dying.

Women were more likely than men to have a wealth shock. Once they did, their increased chance of dying was about the same as the increase for men. Researchers adjusted for marital changes, unemployment and health status. They still saw the connection between financial crisis and death.

The effect was more marked if the person lost a home as part of the wealth shock, and it was more pronounced for people with fewer assets.

The findings suggest a wealth shock is as dangerous as a new diagnosis of heart disease, wrote Dr. Alan Garber of Harvard University in an accompanying editorial, noting that doctors need to recognize how money hardships may affect their patients.

saying, "I like that one." When it was over, Circuit Judge Don Briggs asked him if he was satisfied with the panel.

"For the most part," he said, acknowledging that he couldn't exclude everybody he would have liked to reject. Both sides had 10 possible strikes.

The lengthy two-day selection process, which began Monday, was even more interesting, considering the people who didn't make the cut.

Not included was an elderly man whose 3-year-old grandson was hit by a car, left paralyzed and died at age 23. Also left out was a retiree who said he would follow the law and the judge's instructions because it is his responsibility to do so. He teaches citizenship to immigrants.

Also rejected by lawyers was a man who said he grew up in a violent neighborhood and knew of people killed by criminals.

One woman said she suffers from post-traumatic stress syndrome. She was afraid that hearing details about the murder could be a setback.

Others were on the fence about the death penalty and whether they could put their names on a jury verdict form recommending death.

By late Tuesday morning, the prospective jury pool had been cut to 34 — about half its original size.

Before that, a few had been excused because they had learned too many details about the case through news accounts. Others were let go because they could not put their anti-death penalty feelings aside. On the first day, several were excused because of work or personal hardship issues.

By afternoon, the lawyers began showing their hand with their questions. Assistant State Attorney Rich Buxman explained premeditation, including the fact that under the law it doesn't mean long-term planning. It could be seconds.

Authorities allege that Mariotti killed Montgomery in June 2016 when she realized that Mariotti's companion, Tracie Jo Nafziger, was stealing from her. He reportedly picked up a rope from her couch and strangled her.

Buxman also explained "felony murder." Defendants can be charged with murder if someone is killed during certain kinds of crime — like, robbery or armed burglary — even if that was not the defendant's intent.

Only one man seemed to immediately understand it at first, and that is because he is a longtime fan of "Law and Order" on TV.

One man said he thought the concept was unfair. He was not picked for the jury.

Buxman also asked if anyone had a problem with the fact that Montgomery's body was never found. "No body, no crime?" No one raised their hand.

The prosecutor also cautioned that real cases are not like TV, where "someone waves a test tube in the air," goes back to the lab, gets DNA and the suspect's picture shows up on a computer screen. "Abby from 'NCIS' is not going to come in and testify," he said.

Assistant Public Defender Jamie Kane, meanwhile, was steadily doing what lawyers call "mitigation shopping," to see what kinds of circumstances might lead to jurors recommending life in prison instead of death. He repeatedly asked if brain damage; being raised by criminal, frequently absent, drug-abusing parents; and adolescent drug use might be something they might consider in recommending a life sentence.

Kane also asked if anyone expected Mariotti to take the stand in his own defense. The group said they understand Mariotti's Constitutional right not to incriminate himself.

officials were struggling to answer questions about the plan, including rudimentary details on whether it would involve National Guard members.

But officials appeared to be considering a model similar to a 2006 operation in which President George W. Bush deployed National Guard troops to the southern border.

Under Operation Jump Start, 6,000 National Guard troops were sent to assist the border patrol with non-law enforcement duties while additional border agents were hired and trained. Over two years, about 29,000 National Guard forces participated, as forces rotated in and out. The Guard members were used for surveillance, communications, administrative support, intelligence, analysis and the installation of border security infrastructure.

In addition, President Barack Obama sent about 1,200 National Guard troops to the U.S.-Mexico border in 2010 to beef up efforts to battle drug smuggling and illegal immigration.

Texas has also deployed military forces to its 800-mile border with Mexico. Former Texas Gov. Rick Perry, now serving as Trump's energy secretary, sent 1,000 Texas National Guardsmen to the Rio Grande Valley in 2014 in response to a sharp increase in Central American children crossing the border alone.

White House officials were scheduled to meet Tuesday with Homeland Security personnel and attorneys to discuss further details, according to a White House official who spoke on condition of anonymity to discuss internal plans. The person also revealed the White House counsel's role.

Trump's latest comments came a day after administration officials announced they were crafting a new legislative package aimed at closing what they say are immigration "loopholes" and amid a flurry of tweets by the president on the subject over the last several days.

Trump has been fixed on the issue since he grudgingly signed a spending bill last month that includes far less money for the wall than he'd hoped for.

ANOTHER OPINION

Protect our elections

In addition to peddling fake news and hacking into email systems, Russia apparently tried but failed to interfere with the machinery of 2016 U.S. elections. No votes were changed, as far as we know, but Russian hackers attempted to invade election systems in 21 states and succeeded in penetrating Illinois' voter registration database.

The U.S. intelligence community believes that the Russians — and others — will keep trying to interfere with U.S. elections, not only through the dissemination of disinformation but also with continued attacks on computer systems. Testifying before Congress earlier this year about election security, Director of National Intelligence Dan Coats warned that “the United States is under attack.”

Better late than never, Congress is responding to the threat from foreign hackers and targeting other weaknesses in the so-called election infrastructure. That includes not only voting machines but also computer systems used in the tabulation and reporting of results and for voter registration.

Last month, both the Senate and the House Intelligence committees called for new initiatives to protect elections from interference, and several senators unveiled an updated version of the Secure Elections Act. That measure would create a federal-state advisory panel to develop a set of guidelines for election cybersecurity and establish a grant program to help states improve their procedures.

The bill also seeks to improve communications between the states and the federal government about cyberthreats to election systems.

Finally, the omnibus spending bill signed by President Trump includes $380 million in grants to enable the states to strengthen the security of their election systems. The funds can be used to reduce vulnerabilities in computer systems and to replace obsolete voting machines.

Welcome as the new spending is, it may not be enough. The Brennan Center for Justice at New York University Law School warns that, because the way the funds will be allocated, there won't be sufficient funds to replace all the country's insecure paperless systems. Election security experts are virtually unanimous in calling for states that use electronic voting machines to include a paper trail.

That's one reason Congress needs to pass the Secure Elections Act authorizing additional grants to the states, which, if matched, could lead to the replacement of more voting machines that lack a paper backup. (The grants would have to be voted on again in appropriations bills.)

It might seem paradoxical at a time of ever more sophisticated technology that paper records would be the gold standard for accurate voter tallies. Yet, when many voting machines break down, the absence of a paper backup can make it impossible to record an accurate count. Moreover, the knowledge that such a safeguard exists increases public confidence in the integrity of the process and discourages conspiracy theories.

Perhaps in the future, advances in computer security will make paper records obsolete and even make it possible for voters to cast their ballots on their computers or smartphones. For the foreseeable future, however, it's vital that states have backup paper copies of votes that are cast electronically. As Harris has noted: “Russia cannot hack a piece of paper like they can computer systems connected to the internet.”

Although the Secure Elections Act is aimed at the integrity of federal elections, it would also make elections for state offices more secure, not only from cybersabotage but also from technical malfunctions and human error.

It shouldn't have taken reports of Russian hacking to concentrate Congress' attention on this longstanding problem. As the Secure Elections Act itself states, safeguarding the integrity of voting systems isn't just a matter of national security; it's important because “free and fair elections are central to our democracy.” Expenditures to protect that promise is money well spent.

Repeal the Second Amendment? No, let's enact the 28th

John Crisp

Last week retired Supreme Court Justice John Paul Stevens made the dramatic suggestion that the nation repeal the Second Amendment, the enigmatic constitutional text at the heart of our national debate over gun policy.

I'm no big fan of firearms. I've previously written with considerable skepticism about open carry laws, about permitting concealed weapons on college campuses and about the doubtful notion that arming teachers is a solution for school shootings.

Nevertheless, I would not support repealing the Second Amendment, and even the suggestion may do more harm than good.

The National Rifle Association has elevated the “keep-and-bear-Arms” amendment to the status of a near-sacred text that establishes the right of Americans to own powerful weapons in large numbers. An attempt to repeal it — and it would probably fail, anyway — would merely stoke the NRA's already overwrought fear that liberals are determined to take away their weapons.

Besides, I feel a bit queasy when people start talking about revising the Constitution.

Certainly, the Constitution isn't perfect. Some provisions deserve reconsideration. The Electoral College, for example. Or the undemocratic gerrymandering that the founders failed to prevent. Or the fact that Montana is allotted a senator for every 378,000 citizens, but California gets one for every 20 million.

So the Constitution has certain undesirable anachronisms, but if we start tinkering with it too freely, before long we're enacting amendments such as the 18th, which abolished a free citizen's right to take a drink.

The Second Amendment is one of those anachronisms. The right to keep and bear arms is best understood in the military context of the amendment's preamble, the “well regulated Militia.” Historian Garry Wills makes this case in the New York Review of Books in an argument too extended and complex to summarize here. But it's readily available online, and an open-minded reader may find it convincing.

But Wills was writing in 1995, long before District of Columbia vs. Heller, the 2008 Supreme Court ruling that held that the Second Amendment supports the private right to gun ownership apart from a military context.

The decision was controversial, a 5-4 vote. Justice Scalia wrote 64 reasonably well-argued pages conveying the majority's opinion. Justice Stevens wrote 46 pages in dissent and Justice Breyer, 44. As you can see, it's complicated.

I think that just over half of the court got it wrong in Heller, but the NRA has won that battle and established its claim on the Second Amendment. It's unlikely to ever be reclaimed by an honest, historically contextual interpretation.

And even though the right to personal gun ownership is a stretch for the Second Amendment, many liberals, including me, would object to its repeal simply because they support the right of individuals to own guns to protect themselves or for sport.

So let's produce an amendment to the Constitution — the 28th — that clearly establishes that right. But let's acknowledge, as well, the interest that our society has in regulating the kinds of weapons that citizens may own, and under what conditions. After all, the Constitution is concerned with the rights of all citizens as a whole, as well as those of individuals.

Even though most of the 38,000 annual firearms casualties in our country are not victims of military-style, high-capacity automatic and semiautomatic weapons, they are the ones that terrify us and the nation's schoolchildren. They're not suitable for self-defense and they're not necessary for sport shooting. They are, however, the weapon of choice for mass shootings.

These weapons are the logical concern of the Second Amendment, which, if freed from the burden of defending the right of a mentally unstable youth to own a weapon of war, is better suited to implement the “well regulated” part of its preamble.

The inherent right to defend yourself with a weapon probably transcends the Constitution. But if we're going to start tinkering with our founding document let's clarify that right in a new amendment, as well as establish measures to free ourselves from the terror of weapons more deadly than the founders could have imagined.

Facebook's privacy woes are a good reminder nothing comes free

It's easy to forget how young the Silicon Valley companies that dominate so much of our lives really are. One need be only a freshman in high school to have been born in a time before Facebook existed. And a baby delivered on the day Google was incorporated would turn 20 only this September.

In just the single lifespan of a teenager, those two firms — along with many other competitors and allies — have generated riches and international clout to rival the nation's grandest commercial enterprises.

Vast as these companies are, it's not the dollars involved that reveal how deeply embedded they have become in our lives. Some 1.4 billion people worldwide use Facebook daily.

Google conducts as many as 40,000 searches per second.

In addition to greatly enriching the firms, this ubiquity has also created whole new digital economies and marketplaces for countless other companies. For the rest of us, it has provided constant and often extraordinarily helpful services and conveniences.

And it's all been free of charge. In lieu of payment, the companies ask merely for us to provide a peek into our most private lives and telling habits. We provide real-time information about families, friends, our likes and dislikes, locations, travel, eating, drinking, reading and viewing habits — and much more.

In short, we consent to be not their customer, but their product. They sell to third parties an opportunity to sell us things, to tell us all kinds of stories — true or trivial or just made up — and to influence our behavior as consumers and citizens.

For many, it has seemed a healthy exchange. You keep me in touch with my friends, long-lost cousins and classmates, and I'll let you have access to everything you want to know in order to sell my attention to your clients.

But the tides are turning. Many have been outraged by revelations that Russians and other have exploited Facebook's close knowledge of we, the users, to further inflame our public discourse, and how third-parties unscrupulously used users' personal data without their consent.

In its wake, more of us are second-guessing our relationship with Facebook, and with the countless other firms that trade access to our private lives for their otherwise free services.

Most Americans aren't ready to cut ties to their social media sources. But the companies would be foolish to ignore this moment of recalibration. The companies, and the users and everyone involved, should commit to auditing these relationships, if they are to remain healthy.

What should happen next?

We need a three-part compact between the Internet titans, users and government:

1. Companies are going to want to use our information to better target the ads they sell to third parties. Fair enough. But they should make it easier for users to opt out and limit what information can be used.

They must enable users to block any firm from providing that information in a way that identifies the user to a third party. When exceptions are required by law, the users should be informed and the companies should insist on a subpoena or warrant.

2. Users should audit privacy settings on each app they use, and take the critical step of reconsidering which apps they sign into through Twitter, Google or Facebook.

3. Congress and other governments must demand accountability from Facebook and others and insist on strong firewalls between the identities of the people whose data they use to sell ads and the firms who purchase them.

ALL-PURPOSE FLOUR

TIPS FOR STORAGE

If you have a large bag of flour to store, try these tips from the University of Missouri Extension Office:

- Put the bag in a container with a tight-fitting lid. This will keep out dust, insects, dampness and odors.
- Store the container in a cool, dry, dark place off the floor.
- Each time after the bag is opened, squeeze out the air in the bag and tightly roll down the top of the bag.

SEAFOOD

MAKE 'GREEN' CHOICES

Sustainably sourced seafood that meets the Marine Stewardship Council's standards is marked with a blue fish label to show it:

- Represents only wild fish or seafood from fisheries assessed by an independent third party to meet strict science-based criteria.
- Supports sustainable fishery practices and good management that adapts to environmental changes.
- Traces back to a certified sustainable fishery and is kept separate from non-certified fish and seafood.

FREEZER TIP

KEEP FOOD FRESH

The next time you're about to toss something in the freezer, the University of Missouri Extension recommends that you use only moisture- and vapor-proof materials such as heavy-duty aluminum foil, polyethylene bags, freezer film wraps, glass, plastic and metal containers.

Leftovers from Easter? Try these deviled egg recipes

Ze Carter

Last week I lost one of my most faithful readers, my grandmother. She was an awesome cook, and I'm not just saying that because she was my grandmother.

What made her such an awesome cook? It was her dedication to certain products, consistency, then add a little love and you have a great meal. She wrote down a few recipes for me from memory but many of her ingredients were a dash of this and a handful of that, which made making her recipes interesting. They never turned out like hers, but it is always fun trying to recreate a dish or two of hers. She always had an honest opinion of the recipes that I would share with you, some she liked and some she would respectfully decline. I loved her sweet honesty. She will forever be missed.

How to turn a sweet potato into a burger

By Joe Yonan

The Washington Post

There are veggie burgers, and then there are vegetable burgers. What's the difference? To my mind, it's this: A veggie burger is a patty made of a carefully concocted blend that typically includes beans, grains, various flavorings and a binder. A vegetable burger, on the other hand, is just what it sounds like: a vegetable on a bun.

In his book "Green Burgers" (Hardie Grant, 2017), Swedish cook-author Martin Nordin covers both categories, and his ideas are captivating. This is someone who clearly takes vegetarian burgers seriously, with multicomponent recipes that include inventive sauces, lots of textures and garnishes galore.

For one, he deep-fries a mixture of king oyster mushrooms, dried shiitakes and more, then combines them on buns with a kimchi made from zucchini.

I was after something a little simpler, and I couldn't stop returning to his idea of salt-baked sweet potatoes. The salt pulls out enough moisture so that when you peel back the skin and scoop the flesh out of each one in one piece, it holds together enough to be eaten between soft hamburger buns.

The other key is a pungent sauce, made from black garlic, vinegar, spices and charred scallion tops. It tastes like the best (vegan) Worcestershire sauce ever. You brush it on the thick "patties" and top them with a very generous amount of crumbled feta, scallion whites and fresh oregano.

When you take a bite, the first surprise is that the sweet potato doesn't squish out the way so many veggie burgers do. The second is the interplay of flavors. If you're like me, you'll taste, inhale — and start thinking about when to make these again. And again.

Sweet potato burgers (4 servings)

Ingredients

- 2 scallions
- ½ teaspoon ground coriander
- ½ teaspoon ground Sichuan pepper (see headnote)
- ½ teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
- 2 tablespoons red wine vinegar
- 3 black garlic cloves (see headnote)
- ¼ teaspoon salt, or more as needed
- 2 medium sweet potatoes (12 to 16 ounces each; see headnote), scrubbed and dried

- 4 teaspoons extra-virgin olive oil
- 2 tablespoons coarse sea salt
- 4 soft hamburger buns, lightly toasted
- One 4-ounce block feta cheese, crumbled
- Leaves from 3 stems fresh oregano, chopped

Steps

Position an oven rack 4 to 6 inches from the broiler; preheat to broil. Line a baking sheet with aluminum foil.

Cut the green parts of the scallions, placing them on the baking sheet in a single layer. Broil them until blackened, 8 to 10 minutes, then transfer to a mini food processor or blender. Reduce the oven to 400 degrees. Thinly slice the white parts of the scallions, and reserve them for garnishing the burgers. Add the coriander, Sichuan pepper, black pepper, vinegar, black garlic and ¼ teaspoon salt to the burnt scallion tops; puree until smooth. Taste, and add more salt, as needed. You should have about 2 tablespoons of sauce.

Place the sweet potatoes on the same foil-lined baking sheet, rub each with 2 teaspoons of the oil and sprinkle each with 1 tablespoon of the coarse salt. Roast until they are completely soft to a skewer, 45 minutes to 1 hour.

Make a shallow cut (just through the skin) of each sweet potato, and peel off the skins. Use a large spoon to carefully scoop out two halves from each potato, trying to keep the flesh in one piece without mashing. Discard the skins.

Gently shape the sweet potato flesh, being careful to not mash it, into 4 thick, round patties (about ½ cup's worth of flesh each). Use a spatula to place a sweet potato patty on each bottom bun. Brush black garlic sauce on each patty, then crumble the feta on each. Top with the sliced scallion whites, oregano and the top buns. Serve warm.

Garlic and Tomato Fish Stew. [STACY ZARIN GOLDBERG/THE WASHINGTON POST]

This fish stew is light, easy, and only the flavor lingers

By Bonnie S. Benwick

The Washington Post

Some stews are of the stick-to-your-ribs, hearty variety while others are light and won't weigh you down. This low-fat recipe is in the latter category, and that seems just right for our tentative lean into spring.

If you have qualms about cooking fish — fear of overcooking, lingering odors — you can place them on hold. The tomato-y broth flavors the onion, potatoes and chunks of cod, rendering them tender in no time. The aroma is faintly sweet, with a touch of garlic. Lemon zest and a finishing squeeze of lemon juice brighten the pot.

Have warm corn bread or crusty bread on hand for sopping up what's left in the bowl, and you'll be set.

Garlic and tomato fish stew (2-3 servings)

Ingredients

- 4 cloves garlic
- ½ medium onion
- ½ lemon
- 1 tablespoon extra-virgin olive oil
- 1 cup vegetable broth, preferably no-salt-added
- One 28-ounce can whole tomatoes
- 8 small Dutch Gold potatoes (yellow-fleshed)
- 12 ounces cod fillets
- Sea salt
- Freshly ground black pepper
- Leaves from 4 stems parsley

Steps

Cut the garlic cloves into very thin slices, discarding any green sprouts within. Cut the onion into thin half moon slices. Scrub the potatoes well, then cut them into halves or quarters (bite-size).

Use a Microplane zester to grate a teaspoon of lemon zest from the lemon half, then cut the fruit into wedges for serving.

Cut the fish into large chunks, then season it all over with salt and pepper.

Heat the oil in a large saucepan over medium heat. Add the garlic, lemon zest and onion; cook for 2 minutes, then pour in the broth, add the tomatoes with their juices (crushing the tomatoes as you go) and the potatoes. Cover and cook for about 12 minutes, or until the potatoes are just tender when pierced with a fork, and then add the chunks of fish. Cover and cook for 4 minutes, until the fish is opaque and cooked through. Taste the broth and add more salt and/or pepper, as needed.

Chop the parsley leaves. Divide the stew among wide, shallow bowls. Top with the parsley, and serve with lemon wedges.

NOTE: The green germ found in some garlic cloves can taste bitter, so we remove it.

Tips that guarantee a better plate of pasta every time

By Becky Krystal

The Washington Post

Dried pasta can be the ultimate convenience food. It's shelf-stable. You can make a little or a lot, throw together a quick sauce from the pantry or even pop open something store-bought. Pasta will always be there for you.

Here are a few tips to make your next pasta dish easier to prepare and more satisfying to eat.

- You don't need a massive stockpot every time. Sure, you want to boil your pasta in enough water to give it room to expand and prevent it from sticking together. But do you have to haul out the giant pot? Not always. Chef Matt Adler, executive chef for Italian concepts at Schlow Restaurant Group (Alta Strada, Casolare, etc.), says if he's making pasta at home to eat with his wife, he often chooses his 4-quart saucepan. He suggests keeping the pasta covered by at least an inch or two of water — in a skillet, for example, keep an eye on how much liquid evaporates. If you're looking for more specific guidance, America's Test Kitchen says 2 quarts of water will suffice for up to ½ pound of pasta, 4 quarts for ½ pound to 1 pound, and 6 quarts for 1 to 2 pounds.

- Know when to salt the water. There are two main problems with salting the water first. One, salt won't dissolve well in cold water. Two, when the undissolved salt comes in contact with stainless steel, it can cause the surface to pit — more of a cosmetic than functional problem, but preventable. Adding the salt as the water comes to a boil resolves both problems. But how much salt do you add?

This is a key step to ensuring your dish doesn't taste underseasoned. Look around, and it seems there are as many answers as fish in the salty sea. Adler recommends 1 teaspoon of kosher salt per quart of water; America's Test Kitchen, 1 tablespoon of table salt per quart.

- Don't overcook it. We've all heard that pasta should be cooked until it's al dente, but what does that mean? There should still be a little firm bite, in other words. Adler says you can judge this by removing a piece of pasta from the water using tongs or a slotted spoon and running it under cold water (do this only for the test bite, not the rest of your pasta). Take a bite — you'll feel a bit of resistance but not a lot. (Adler's mother taught him that if it sticks to your teeth, it's not ready.)

Then take a look at the inside of the pasta. For shapes such as spaghetti or linguine, you'll see a small dot in the center where the pasta's not yet fully cooked, since it cooks from the outside in. With shapes such as penne or rigatoni, you'll see a thin ring around the center.

You've reached the right level of doneness when the ratio is roughly 90 percent cooked to 10 percent uncooked, Adler says. The pasta will finish cooking when you put it back in the pan and toss with your sauce or toppings.

- Save a bit of that water. Before you drain the pasta, grab a coffee cup or handy liquid measuring cup to scoop up some of the salty, starchy water. You can use it to thin out a thick sauce, if needed. That way the sauce has an opportunity to evenly cling to all the pasta. Adler has one more tip for bringing your dish together: a little extra fat. Now that you know how to cook it well, a knob of butter or a drizzle of extra-virgin olive oil is the last step to a polished plate of pasta.

PRACTICAL POT WATCHER

Tuck flavorful and aromatic cooking herbs among the flowers

Mary Ryder

Now that the weather seems to have settled into some semblance of the brief perfection that is spring in Central Florida, I'm telling myself that all danger of frost is truly past, and I can go ahead and plant those packets of flower seeds waiting patiently on my dining table for the last couple of months.

But since the certainty of spring means that summer is just around the corner, I have a good excuse to indulge in a dozen or so already-started flowering plants from local gardening centers and farmers' markets. I always promise myself to stick to a few things that enjoy neglect, and the resolution normally endures just until I get into the garden center, where I'm sure to be ambushed by pots brimming with exotic flowers on one hand, and the modest collection of unassuming but insidious herbs on the other.

It's all too easy to run amok in the herb section and sober up only when you've got home with all these pots of fresh herbs that you just know will add a whole new dimension to your cooking. And now you realize that either you don't have the right kind of habitat to let them thrive, or they simply refuse to flourish in the Florida climate.

So curb that impulse to choose herbs for your garden simply because you've fallen in love with the scent that fills the air when you brush against them, and choose a few of the known winners to tuck in among the flowers.

If I could choose only one herb for my garden, I think it would be basil. It's versatile in the kitchen, and the incredible range of varieties lets you pick and choose for appearance, aroma and hardness. Moreover, it's a marvelous insect repellent — just a sprig in your button-hole or behind your ear will protect you from some of our nastier and more persistent summer biting pests.

The aroma of basil is described as "a cross between cloves and licorice," but there's also a lemon basil, and other types range from a light, spicy scent to overwhelmingly licorice. I'm partial to the little globe basil, so-called from the attractive shape of the plant. It has genteel, refined garden manners — none of this taking over the whole territory — the scent is gently spicy, and it has good staying power, unless we get a really extreme summer.

The variety to avoid is the basil generally sold fresh in small bunches in supermarkets — the one with broad, medium-green leaves. It makes a nice garnish, has good flavor and aroma, but unfortunately it also has a passionate preference for cooler weather.

Oregano has a distinct aroma and an assertive flavor. It's a standard for Italian and Greek cookery, and is particularly good in cheese- and-egg combinations, such as omelets, quiches and sandwich spreads. I really like it with pork, especially pork chops or roast. Cuban oregano has a thick, velvety leaf, and is variegated, lending an ornamental touch to the herb patch, but I've been told it isn't really "a true oregano."

Tarragon works well with most meats (especially turkey), but should be used with restraint. If you'd like to grow your own, look for the Mexican variety. Mexican tarragon grows like gangbusters in Central Florida; French tarragon is more finicky.

Parsley is probably best known as a garnish, but it's also a "liaison herb," meaning that it helps tie together all the flavors in a dish. The flat-leafed

Italian parsley seems to have more flavor, but the curly-leaf variety makes a really attractive garnish.

Rosemary is a really wonderful herb. It comes in both bush form and a creeping form. Once the bush type is established, it almost thrives on neglect. Properly used, it's good with most meats, but I really like it with chicken or pork.

According to British research, inhaling the wonderful, pine-like aroma of rosemary improves short-term memory. Maybe I'll plant a hedge of the stuff.

It would help me remember that, when using fresh herbs, you need about three times as much as you would use of the more concentrated dried leaves.

How to make the most of your fresh herbs

By Becky Krystal
The Washington Post

There are many reasons I love the arrival of spring. One of the biggest is the return of my backyard herbs. That's about the greenest my green thumb gets, especially when a bunch of them — the rosemary, thyme, oregano and mint — reliably grow back every year.

Whether you have your own array of backyard or windowsill herbs, or you rely on the grocery store variety to add freshness and flavor to your cooking, these tips will come in handy.

- Remove the stems easily. I find the harder the stem, the simpler it is to strip its leaves. For herbs such as thyme, rosemary and oregano, all you need to do is hold the top end of the stem with one hand and use the thumb and index finger of your other hand to move along the stem and pull.

- Do some DIY drying. Dry herbs at home by tying them together in small bunches with twine or string and hanging them in a dry spot with good air circulation. You want to check them daily, according to "Cooking With Herbs" by Susan Belsinger and Carolyn Dille, and you'll know when they're ready if they crackle and crumble when rubbed between your fingers. You can extract further moisture by drying them on a baking sheet in a 200-degree oven for 3 to 5 minutes. Then you can store them — off the stem but still as whole leaves — in a clean jar with a tight-fitting lid.

- Make an infused oil. A flavored olive oil is a fun way to use your herbs and add a little flair to your dish. Adding moist components to the oil increases the risk of botulism (this is especially true of garlic). You can find instructions out there on how to treat herbs with citric acid to prevent botulism, but if you are sure to clean and dry your herbs and store the oil in a clean glass jar (bonus if you boil that jar for 10 minutes to sterilize), you should be all right. Heat some oil and herbs together over low to medium heat for a few minutes, then let the oil cool. Discard the herbs and use the flavored oil right away, or cover and refrigerate it for a few days — no longer than a week.

- Don't let them wilt in the fridge. I have had the best luck keeping herbs — especially cilantro — fresh in the refrigerator by wrapping them loosely in a barely damp paper towel and then putting the bundle in a plastic bag, ideally zip-top, but I've also gotten away with grocery store produce bags, especially when I do a good job of keeping them closed. You can also give them the flower treatment and place the stems in a glass or jar with an inch or so of water.

Cover the bunch with a plastic bag and keep it in place with a rubber band. "The New Food Lover's Companion" says this method can keep herbs fresh up to 10 days, as opposed to five for the paper-towel-and-bag strategy.

- Substitute with care. If you don't have fresh herbs on hand, you can sometimes get away with using dried. Dried herbs are more potent and concentrated than fresh, though, so if you are using dried, only add a third of the amount originally called for (i.e., a teaspoon instead of a tablespoon).

over recent years it has become more popular to buy the plastic eggs which are great when hiding them in the yard (no fun in finding last year's real egg outside at this year's Easter egg hunt), but it is still fun to color, decorate and enjoy the real ones — there is no substitute.

Even if you did not color any eggs you may have been like me and took advantage of the sale on eggs in the weeks prior to Easter. Some were less than a dollar in many grocery stores. I was even able to score a few dozen from my neighbor. Seems like her hens were in the holiday spirit and have been generous these past few weeks. There are so many ways to use eggs so having an abundance of them is never an issue in my house.

One of the things I like to do with my eggs that are more than a few weeks old are to boil them to help preserve them a little longer, plus this makes them easier to grab for a quick snack. Boiled eggs have about 7 grams of protein so they are perfect for any meal and enjoyed by the young and the old. One of my favorite egg dishes is deviled eggs. I am a big fan of deviled eggs and I love to experiment with different filling ingredients. Here are a few of my favorites.

If you don't have any leftover Easter eggs that's fine, just boil your oldest eggs for 15 minutes. I start with a pot of eggs covered in cold water. Place on stove on high heat and set timer for 15 minutes. Once the timer goes off I remove them from the heat and place in cold water and peel right away. Blend yolks in a food processor or mash until smooth with a fork. Cooled egg yolk will mash better. All of my favorite filling combinations start with a dozen hard boiled eggs.

Ze's seaside deviled eggs: Combine ½ cup of mayonnaise, ¼ teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon Old Bay seasoning, 1 tablespoon white wine vinegar and ¼ teaspoon dried dill. Mix until smooth. Garnish each half with 1 small pre-cooked shrimp.

Ze's Caribbean curry deviled eggs: Combine ½ cup of mayo, ½ tablespoon of curry powder, ¼ diced red onion, 1 tablespoon pimento peppers, ¼ teaspoon black pepper and mix until well combined. Garnish with chopped pineapple.

Ze's low-calorie deviled eggs: Combine ½ cup Greek yogurt, 1 teaspoon Mrs. Dash, 2 tablespoons chopped pickle relish, 1 tablespoon mustard and pinch of salt. Mix well. Garnish with a sprinkle of paprika.

No matter what ingredients you use, filling them can be easy. Just fill a plastic sandwich bag and cut one of the bottom tips to use as a pastry bag and fill eggs with no mess.

Villanova goes from dominant to dynasty

By Dan Gelston
The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Villanova players flash their fingers in a “V” symbol to celebrate big wins.

For coach Jay Wright, that’s a finger for every national championship ring.

Already cemented as a dominant program in college basketball, the Wildcats are flirting with putting their names on a more opulent D-list: dynasty.

The Wildcats’ romp through the NCAA Tournament that ended Monday with a second national title in three seasons has them up for debate as one of the top programs since the tourney field was expanded to 64 teams in 1985.

You know, the year the Wildcats won their first national title.

There’s plenty of time to talk about Villanova’s place in history after the partying is done this week. The Wildcats were to return home to a raucous celebration at their suburban campus on Tuesday and a parade was planned for Thursday in downtown Philadelphia just hours before the Phillies’ home opener.

Parades have suddenly become a thing in Philly.

See: the Eagles.

Jalen Brunson, Mikal Bridges and breakout star Donte DiVincenzo helped the Wildcats win all six tournament games by double digits, joining Michigan State in 2000, Duke in 2001 and North Carolina in 2009. Villanova also joined the 1968 UCLA team as the only ones to win both their Final Four games by 16 or more points.

“I knew we were good, but you don’t think we can win this,” Wright said.

He should know they can: The Wildcats set a program

SAN ANTONIO — A year ago at this time, Villanova faced the question of whether it could keep rolling after two seasons of key player losses from its 2016 national championship team.

The Wildcats offered an emphatic answer with Monday night’s win against Michigan, the finale for a dominating run through the NCAA Tournament that earned coach Jay Wright his second title and capped the 2017-18 college basketball season.

Now let’s take a look at a couple of threads to watch in the offseason and leading into the 2018-19 season:

Reforms

This issue has the potential to overshadow everything: the federal investigation into corruption in college basketball. And because of it, the sport could look very different come fall.

The probe seized headlines in September with the arrests of 10 agents, coaches and businessmen with basketball ties in a case tied to hundreds of thousands of dollars in alleged bribes and kickbacks designed to influence recruits on choosing a school or an agent.

Speaking at the Final Four, NCAA President Mark Emmert said that the commission on college basketball — led by former Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice — examining reforms to the sport will present its report to the Division I Board of Directors and Board of Governors on April 25.

McIlroy ready to seize history at Augusta

By Paul Newberry
The Associated Press

AUGUSTA, Ga. — Rory McIlroy paused under a towering Georgia pine just off the 14th green, mimicking a swing and going over some of the finer points of Augusta National with practice partner Ian Woosnam.

Good thinking. Woosnam, after all, has one of those coveted green jackets.

McIlroy needs one to join a very exclusive club.

“You have to embrace and relish the opportunity that is put in front of you,” he said, “and go out and grab it.”

Funny thing, it looked like the Masters would be the first major

There’s new Woods at Augusta, with Mickelson along for ride

By Doug Ferguson
The Associated Press

AUGUSTA, Ga. — The power off the tee and the sharpness with his short game made him look like the Tiger Woods of old. The smile on his face and the company he kept Tuesday at the Masters — a practice round with Phil Mickelson — suggested someone entirely different.

Woods and Mickelson had not played together at Augusta National since 2009, and even then it wasn’t by choice. They were paired in the final round, and while neither won the green jacket, Lefty shot 67 and got him by one shot.

This time they were partners, and it wasn’t a fair fight against Fred Couples and Thomas Pieters.

Never mind that Mickelson hit his opening tee shot at No. 10 behind a magnolia tree. Unlike that failed foursomes match they played at Oakland Hills in the 2004 Ryder Cup, Mickelson had to play the next shot, too.

The two loudest roars that shattered the morning calm came from Woods making eagle on the two par 5s at No. 13 and No. 15.

“I made a few birdies in there,” Mickelson said. “We had a five-hole stretch. We were 7 under. That was some fun play.”

This was only a snapshot, and it received far more attention because of the stage at Augusta National and the two leading characters. Woods and Mickelson have been longtime rivals, rarely friends and hardly ever partners.

But it’s not just with Mickelson.

Woods has become a mentor to Justin Thomas, Jason Day and Rickie Fowler among other youngsters. Long respected by his peers as the greatest player of his generation, he now has formed relationships with them. Padraig Harrington hardly recognized Woods at Torrey Pines earlier this year when he saw him walk onto the range, exchange a few high-fives and stop to chat.

Woods turned 42 at the end of last year. He has been away from golf for much of the last few years because of his four back surgeries. The Masters will be the first major he plays since the PGA Championship in August 2015.

Perhaps, as Harrington suggested, he simply has mellowed.

"I think they just missed my sharp needle," Woods said. "This is just like a fraternity. When somebody gets hurt and someone gets sick, we bond. We come and try to support them as best we possibly can. Because we all know what it takes to be at this elite level."

Regardless, he has come a long way in a short amount of time.

Only last year, Woods said he had trouble just sitting through the dinner at the Masters Club of past champions because of pain from his lower back shooting down his legs. That hurt about as much as being at Augusta National without his clubs for the second straight year, not knowing when or even if he would return.

The low point came last summer when he was arrested on a DUI charge in Florida after police found him asleep behind the wheel, his car parked awkwardly on the side of the road with the engine still running. Woods was found to have a mix of prescription pills to help with pain and sleep. He sought treatment, and then perhaps the best therapy was being among players as an assistant captain at the Presidents Cup.

"I don't know the reasoning, but I think your 2009 to win all six games by double figures in the NCAA Tournament. Now the Wildcats will try to become only the third repeat champion since UCLA's run of seven straight ended in 1973, the other two being Duke in 1991-92 and Florida in 2006-07.

"We really feel humbled and blessed to be in this position," coach Jay Wright said after the Michigan win.

It's unclear how the Wildcats will look next year. Associated Press national player of the year Jalen Brunson and NBA prospect Mikal Bridges could decide to leave a year early to pursue a professional career after winning two national championships.

Another shot?

Michigan lost in the national championship game for the second time under John Beilein. Can the Wolverines get back there?

Much will depend on whether juniors Moe Wagner (14.6 points, 7.1 rebounds) and Charles Matthews (13.0 points) decide to return for their final season.

The Wolverines can at least look to some recent history for inspiration; North Carolina lost to Villanova in the 2016 final then made it all the way back to win the title last year.

Duke's top trio

Duke checked in at No. 1 in the AP's way-too-early ranking for next season based on the latest wave of touted incoming recruits. That includes Duke's sweep of the nation's top three recruits — No. 1 R.J. Barrett, No. 2 Cameron Reddish and No. 3 Zion Williamson — though they play the same position as wing forwards.

The Blue Devils also have a top-10 recruit in point guard Tre Jones.

Shake it off

Virginia made an unexpected climb to end the regular season as a unanimous No. 1 in the AP Top 25 — only to become the first No. 1 seed to lose to a 16-seed against UMBC in the NCAA Tournament.

The Atlantic Coast Conference champion Cavaliers could have plenty of guard talent back with Kyle Guy, Ty Jerome and De'Andre Hunter. But coach Tony Bennett — named the AP coach of the year last week — said his players can build from that only if they apply lessons learned from the season.

"Everybody will say, you know, you're going to be better because of this," Bennett said in an interview with the AP. "There's nothing further from the truth. If you don't do anything with it, just because you suffered a loss, that's not going to make you better."

more hardware from his various player-of-the-year awards than he can carry, and he is set to follow his dad, Rick Brunson, into the NBA.

Bridges has played his way into becoming a likely NBA draft lottery pick and should make a serviceable pro. Brunson and Bridges would leave a considerable void in the lineup and be on the small list of 'Nova players under Wright who left early for the NBA.

Hey, it worked out fine for Kyle Lowry.

Who's coming

DiVincenzo, Eric Paschall, Omari Spellman and Phil Booth are all expected to be in the starting lineup and joined by five-star point guard Jahvon Quinerly. Quinerly is one of Wright's more anticipated and prized recruits in his 17 years at Villanova. Quinerly was set to attend Arizona until he reopened his recruitment in the wake of a federal probe.

Cole Swider and

Brandon Slater are also prized incoming freshmen expected to help.

Throw in Collin Gillespie, Dhamir Cosby-Roundtree and Jermaine Samuels, and the Wildcats should keep rolling as national championship favorites.

Wright stuff

Wright's success has again made his future a hot topic at Villanova. He's said many times he wouldn't leave 'Nova for another college job, and with good reason. He's turned the Wildcats into a dynasty even Blake Carrington would envy, and the program is set to move into its $60 million state-of-the-art renovated on-campus arena next season following a year of playing at the Wells Fargo Center, home of the Philadelphia 76ers. Wright, who made $2.6 million this season, is King of the Cats and he's pretty much guaranteed a job for life at Villanova.

But the NBA is a different story.

best in wins (36-4) and won an NCAA-record 136 games over a four-year span.

And if anyone is still stumped about how Villanova could be considered on the short list of college basketball's blue bloods following a decade of dominance, consider:

- In the post-John Wooden/UCLA era, only three other teams have won two titles in three seasons: Duke in 1991 and 1992, Florida in 2006 and 2007 and Kentucky in 1996 and 1998. Villanova became just the ninth program to win three championships (1985 and '16) and has made three Final Fours since 2009.

- In the last five seasons, the Wildcats have four regular-season Big East titles, three Big East tournament titles and two national championships. The list of accolades under Wright stretches longer than the combined distance of the Final Four-record 18 3-pointers hit against Kansas in Saturday's national semifinals.

Wright leads a loaded roster fully positioned to go back-to-back and show college basketball that Duke and Kentucky and Kansas and North Carolina can all be rolled into one program nestled in the Philadelphia suburbs.

Here's what's ahead for the Wildcats:

Who's going

The Wildcats had no seniors in their rotation and should return a nice chunk of their roster. But Brunson, the AP player of the year, and Bridges are both likely to declare for the NBA draft.

Brunson already has two championship rings and championship of McIlroy's career. In 2011, riding the hype as the game's brightest new star, he led after each of the first three rounds and was still out front making the turn Sunday.

Then, in one of the greatest collapses in major championship history, he played the final nine holes at 7 over to shoot 80.

At the time, it felt like his world had collapsed.

Looking back, he considers it a turning point in his career.

"I feel like it made me a better player, I feel like it made me a better person," said McIlroy, who is among many favorites in the loaded Masters field after his victory a couple of weeks ago at Bay Hill. "It took me a while to get over it, but I knew if I looked at the big picture it would serve me well in the long run. And I don't think I would have had the career I've had so far if it wasn't for that day."

A few months later, he won the U.S. Open in a runaway. The next year, he added a PGA Championship to his resume. In 2014, he captured two more majors at the British Open and the PGA.

Only the Masters is preventing him from joining Jack Nicklaus, Tiger Woods, Gary Player, Ben Hogan and Gene Sarazen with a career Grand Slam.

"I know a win here and what that would mean and where that would put me in history alongside some of the greatest that have ever played this game," McIlroy said. "But have I to try and clear my head of that come Thursday morning and go out and play good golf, hit good golf shots, have good course management, hole putts. If you do that enough times, hopefully that score on Sunday evening's the lowest out of all 87 or 88 competitors that are here and you walk away with something that you'll have for the rest of your life."

McIlroy was clearly in a relaxed mood as played the back nine late Tuesday afternoon with Woosnam, the 1991 Masters champion, and Branden Grace — long after many patrons had already headed home for the day.

Before teeing off at the 14th, McIlroy posed for a picture with a boy clad in burnt orange from head to toe, whose father insisted "he's your biggest fan." Someone murmured from afar, "He said the same thing when Rickie Fowler came through," and certainly the young man was dressed in attire more appropriate to Fowler's fashion sense.

As McIlroy headed to the 15th tee, a man asked, "Can I shake your hand?" McIlroy kept right on walking but shouted back, "I'll get you on my way back." The patron looked a bit skeptical, but McIlroy was true to his word after hitting a booming drive.

ROUNDUP/MATCHUPS

Royals 1, Tigers 0: Jake Junis took a shutout into the eighth inning as Kansas City grabbed its first victory of the season. On a chilly, rainy day — with snow a possibility Wednesday — the Tigers and Royals breezed through nine innings in 2 hours, 17 minutes. Jorge Soler, who still doesn't have a major league hit since July 2, drove in the game's only run with a sacrifice fly in the second.

Yankees 11, Rays 4: Didi Gregorius hit a pair of three-run homers and drove in a career-high eight RBIs, and the New York Yankees overcame five strikeouts by Giancarlo Stanton in his first game in pinstripes to beat the Tampa Bay Rays in Aaron Boone's chilly first home opener as manager.

Mariners 6, Giants 4: Mitch Haniger hit a two-run single, Kyle Seager also singled in a run in Seattle's big first inning, and the Mariners spoiled the San Francisco Giants' home opener.

Leesburg city league, travel ball provides winning start

By Paul Jenkins
paul.jenkins@daily-commercial.com

LEESBURG — Marcus Niblack sits in his office at the Leesburg Recreation Department and pulls out picture after picture, acting every bit the proud parent.

Which, of course, he is. With his son, Marcus, and daughter, Kari, having recently helped lead the Wildwood Middle High School boys and girls basketball teams to the Class 1A state titles, Niblack has plenty of reason to feel proud.

But for Niblack, it runs much deeper than just his son and daughter. There are all his other “kids,” like just about every member of the Leesburg High Class 6A boys state championship team.

He pulls out a team photo from years ago, and there are Leesburg stars Dray Graham, Lance Erving and Keon Ellis smiling back at him.

As amazing as it is that Lake and Sumter counties brought home three state basketball titles, it is perhaps even more amazing that so many of the players on those three teams all got their real introduction to the sport through the Leesburg Recreation Department.

Niblack recalls seeing Graham out on the city baseball fields at 8 or 9 years old and asking him about basketball.

“He was a big kid back then,” Niblack said. “Almost the same size he

Most of the players on Leesburg's Class 6A state championship team got their start with the Leesburg city league and the travel ball program Thank God For Basketball. [PAUL RYAN /CORRESPONDENT] is now. But his heart is humongous.”

Graham insisted he was a football player, but Niblack convinced him to give basketball a try. Graham quickly stood out in the city league, and Niblack invited him to join the travel ball program, Thank God For Basketball.

“We worked on everything, dribbling, passing, laying the ball up and he was always asking, ‘What do I need to work on?’ He would be in here every day. Even when other kids didn’t show up, he’d stay and work on things. He was probably a better football player at that age, but he got it in his mind that he was going to be a basketball player and that’s what he did.”

There are similar stories throughout teams around Lake and Sumter counties, such as Leesburg High quarterback Wyatt Rector and East Ridge quarterback Caleb Lynum playing together in the Leesburg recreation league, but nowhere has the success been as evident as on the basketball court.

Niblack’s own children grew up as gym rats, running around while he was coaching games and being immersed in the wonderful world of sports. The young Marcus couldn’t get enough of any sport with a ball while young Kari took a while to take to basketball, trying everything from dance to soccer and softball before coming back to basketball.

It is what the elder Niblack wants for all the kids in the community, a chance to grow and become upstanding citizens. Basketball is just the means to that end. He is quick to praise all those who have helped along the way, from donors to fundraisers to volunteers.

“I’m going to give every kid who comes through that door the same opportunity,” Niblack said. “We try to give these kids a chance to have a better life. We’ve had so many kids who came through here and went on to get a college degree or just become better people. It’s a beautiful thing.”

YMCA sports registration underway

Registration is underway for two sports programs at the Golden Triangle YMCA in Tavares.

Futsal, a version of indoor soccer, is for children from 5 years old through high school and will run from April 23-June 9. Cost is $60 for YMCA members and $105 for non-members with the price increasing by $20 after Sunday.

Futsal is played on a hard court and does not use walls or boards. The ball is heavier and smaller than a regular soccer ball, meaning it stays on the ground more and an emphasis is placed on footwork.

The Rising Stars program is for children 3-4 years old and features T-Ball, basketball and soccer.

The season runs from April 23-June 9 and costs $60 for YMCA members and $105 for non-members. The price increases by $20 after Sunday.

Contact the YMCA at 352-343-1144 for more information.

BRIEF CASE

WASHINGTON Williams picked as next president of NY Fed

John Williams, currently head of the Federal Reserve's regional bank in San Francisco, has been selected to be the next president of the Fed's New York regional bank, considered the most influential position among the central bank's 12 regional banks.

The selection was made by the eligible members of the New York Fed's board of directors and approved by the Fed's board in Washington. Even before the official announcement Tuesday, the choice had generated controversy. Opponents said the search process had failed to come up with a candidate who would diversify the top ranks of the Fed system, which is heavily dominated by white males.

LONDON Sky News could be sold to Disney under new plan

Sky News could be sold to Walt Disney or completely ring-fenced in concessions put forward Tuesday by Rupert Murdoch's 21st Century Fox as it seeks to bolster its chances of taking full control of the U.K. satellite broadcaster Sky.

The proposals are aimed at easing some of the regulatory concerns over the extent of Murdoch's influence on British media if his 21st Century Fox is cleared to buy the 61 percent of Sky it doesn't already own for 11.7 billion pounds ($16.4 billion).

NEW YORK Facebook asks users if they think it's 'good'

Facebook is asking users whether they think it's "good for the world" in a poll sent to an unspecified number of people.

The poll appears under the heading, "We'd like to do better," when users log in. Possible responses range from "strongly agree" to "strongly disagree."

The company has been grappling with a privacy scandal and other troubles. But Facebook says this survey began well before that; versions date back to 2012. The company regularly polls users on other aspects of its service, too.

ARBOR OUTLOOK

Classroom laptops, notetaking and Laguna Beach

Margaret McDowell

"I was so broke I couldn't pay attention."

Southern colloquialism

Innovative communication devices are wonderful.

Until they aren't.

While searching for a restaurant in Laguna Beach, California, last summer, my husband and I pulled over in a parking lot and asked a lady if she knew the whereabouts of the eatery. She assured us that she had lived in Laguna her whole life and knew the town well. Then she pulled out her phone, punched at it for five minutes, and provided difficult, lengthy instructions.

We said thanks and left. Ultimately, we drove about a hundred yards, took one turn and went up a hill, and found the restaurant sitting in plain view of the parking lot. You could actually see the eating establishment from the very spot where we had inquired about its location. All that was required of our guide was for her to turn and gesture and say, "There it is. Turn right and drive up the hill."

It's as if folks have forgotten how to point without assistance from a smartphone. So I was not surprised to read recently that college professors all over the country are banning laptops as note-taking devices. The digital age is fascinating, and there's no denying that technology has revolutionized many businesses, including my own. On a personal level, I love texting with relatives and friends. But I am not joined at the hip with my phone.

It's disconcerting and rude when people can't converse, watch a movie or outdoor event or engage in a business discussion without staring at a tablet or screen. We need human linkups in addition to technical ones.

Professors are weary of staring at the back of laptops in lieu of actually connecting visually with their classroom compatriots. The students hidden behind those screens may be focused on the lecture or they may be surfing the internet, but the teacher can't know without seeing those faces.

Early returns are in from the students. They're complaining that taking notes by hand is tiring and that afterwards, sometimes they can't read their own writing. News flash: no one ever died from a hand cramp. Advice for the students with unreadable hieroglyphics instead of notes? Write more neatly. Develop your own shorthand. And organize your notes in outline form. They can serve as an effective study guide. Many students are recording their classes with cell phones instead of taking notes. What ever happened to paying attention?

One thing that classes without laptops may inspire is actual interaction and discussion among and between students and teachers. Listening to my classmates express themselves was part of our college education. I cannot imagine a more isolating and boring experience than sitting silently in a group where every individual is hidden behind a small computer screen.

Harmonious debut for Spotify on Wall Street

Spotify's opening bow on stock market strikes a chord with investors

By Michael Liedtke
The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Spotify's opening act on Wall Street struck a chord with investors betting the unprofitable company's trend-setting music streaming service will maintain its early lead over Apple and other powerful challengers.

After several hours of anticipation Tuesday morning, Spotify's shares traded as high as $169 in their stock market debut before falling back slightly. The stock closed at $149.01 — well above its previous high of $132.50 in deals worked out during Spotify's 12-year history as a privately held company.

The stock market's warm welcome left Spotify with a market value of about $27 billion, according to FactSet. By comparison, internet radio station Pandora Media's market value stands at $1.2 billion nearly seven years after that company went public.

The performance left Spotify's market value among the 10 highest ever recorded by a technology company following their first day of U.S. trading, according to Dealogic. Chinese e-commerce company Alibaba Group holds the top spot at $234 billion after its market debut in 2014.

Spotify CEO Daniel Ek who founded the company, emerged as the day's biggest winner. His 27 percent stake in the Swedish company is now worth $7.4 billion.

The good vibes surrounding

A trading post sports the Spotify logo Tuesday on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange. (RICHARD DREW/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS)

Spotify stem from its early lead in music streaming — a still-evolving field trying to hook people on the idea that it's better to subscribe for online access to millions of tunes than to buy individual albums and singles.

Spotify has attracted 71 million worldwide subscribers so far and is aiming to increase that number to as many as 96 million subscribers by the end of the year. It has 159 million total users, including people who are willing to listen to ads for access to free music.

By comparison, Apple's nearly 3-year-old music streaming service has 38 million subscribers. A list of other formidable competitors that includes Google and Amazon also offer similar music streaming services, raising the specter of Spotify being wiped out by far richer rivals.

Apple, Amazon and Google corporate rival have amassed a combined $402 billion in cash compared to Spotify's 1.5 billion euro ($1.8 billion).

Spotify's success in music streaming has drawn comparisons to Netflix, which built upon its pioneering role in DVD-by-mail rentals and then video streaming to create a hugely successful, subscription-driven franchise that has produced spectacular investment returns and has minted the company with a market value of $122 billion.

A $10,000 investment in Netflix's 2002 initial public offering would now be worth more than $2.6 million, leaving some investors wondering if Spotify might be on a similar trajectory in music streaming.

"The similarities here, we believe, are much greater than the differences," RBC

Capital Markets analyst Mark Mahaney wrote in a recent research note assessing the parallels between Spotify and Netflix.

Besides blending technology with a subscription model to reshape a popular form of entertainment, Spotify and Netflix have a common executive in their lineage. Spotify's current chief financial officer, Barry McCarthy, held the same job when Netflix went public and remained in that position until leaving the video service in 2010.

Unlike Netflix, Spotify still isn't profitable, having lost more than 2.4 billion euros ($3 billion) since it started more than a decade ago. After losing 1.2 billion euros, Spotify has also made it clear that it intends to remain focused on adding more subscribers instead of making money for now.

DIVERSIONS

Marriage threatened by wife's online relationship with ex

DEAR ABBY: My wife of 20 years has been electronically unfaithful. There have been covert telephone calls and late-night text messages to a boyfriend from long ago. He's divorced and found her on Facebook, telling her he needed "advice on dating."

She admits to the phone calls and messages and nothing more. I believe her. They haven't met -- just these covert exchanges, which are frequent and sometimes lengthy, over the course of several months. The "whys" behind her behavior are not important. We know our marriage is damaged, and we will work on that. She says she knows she was wrong to let it go on as long as it did, and further communication will stop. Should it include unfriending him on Facebook? I'm perplexed by the new paradigm of relationships. -- COVERT

JEANNE PHILLIPS

DEAR ABBY

EXCHANGES IN THE SOUTH

DEAR COVERT: I disagree that the reasons that led to your wife's behavior aren't important. I hope you two will work out your disconnect with licensed professional help, because it will make the process faster. As to whether she should unfriend her old boyfriend on Facebook, the answer is an unequivocal "yes."

DEAR ABBY: I tutor a 16-year-old boy. His family moved to our city five months ago. They live in a crowded apartment with other relatives. One day, he told me a 20-year-old girl was obsessed with him, and he didn't like her that much. I told him it was unusual and said it was a good thing he had moved.

A month later she showed up, uninvited, to visit him. I think she came here to get pregnant, which she did. Her family now expects him to move back to Oklahoma, quit school and work to support the family. He's a smart kid with the potential to do well in college. His father is dead, the mother is clueless, and I am concerned about this boy. The girl's father and brother are in prison. How can I advise him? -- CARING TUTOR IN CALIFORNIA

DEAR TUTOR: Your student is a minor. The "girl" is an adult. The young man should not move ANYwhere without first insisting that a paternity test be taken to be certain he is the father of the child she's expecting -- if she is, indeed, pregnant. Because of the difference in their ages, she may be guilty of statutory rape, and he may be a victim.

DEAR ABBY: After decades of sucking it up, should I send a letter to the individuals who bullied me incessantly and made my life a living hell in high school? Should I let them know all has not been forgiven or forgotten? -- FORMER VICTIM IN MONTANA

DEAR FORMER VICTIM: No. Why would you want more contact with the cruel and thoughtless individuals who made you miserable? Live your life fully and happily in the present and don't look back. THAT is the best revenge.

two tricks in the suit if East started with the A-K-x and West the singleton jack. Against all other 3-1 divisions, declarer must lose three trump tricks regardless of how he plays after East follows low.

This brings us to today's hand, which occurred in the final of the 1998 North American Open Pairs. South was well-known Canadian-American expert Fred Gitelman. He quickly arrived at four spades as shown, and West led a low diamond.

Gitelman proceeded to make short work of the play. He took East's queen with the ace, ruffed the diamond jack in dummy and led dummy's remaining spade. East followed low smoothly, but Gitelman had no problem finding the winning play — he put up the queen, dropped West's jack and eventually finished with 11 tricks, losing only the A-K of trumps.

As it turned out, Gitelman received 90 percent of the matchpoints on the deal, indicating that many others in the field did not know the correct percentage play with this holding and had lost a trick to the singleton jack.

As he was leaving the table, East complimented Gitelman for his fine play, but was sorely disappointed when he later discovered that he had received such a poor matchpoint score for being minus 650. I know, because I was East.

Suppose you were declarer and your trump holding was Q-10-9-8-x-x-x-x opposite a singleton small card. After leading the singleton from dummy and seeing your right-hand opponent follow low, which card would you play?

Obviously, if the missing cards are divided 2-2, it doesn't matter what you do. But if they are divided 3-1, the correct play is to put up the queen.

This limits declarer's losses to

» HOROSCOPES

HAPPY BIRTHDAY FOR WEDNESDAY, APRIL 4, 2018:

This year you easily could stumble into squabbles that could turn into hostile arguments. Be smart and refuse to comment on others' different lifestyles. Your ability to mentally eye a situation and come out ahead is a skill that helps you in relationships. If you are single, you will make strong judgments about those around you. Take your time when deciding whom to date. If you are attached, the two of you will grow together if you learn to accept and respect your differences. Share more of your wild ideas with your sweetie. SCORPIO sees right through you.

ARIES (MARCH 21-APRIL 19) Your get-up-and-go amazes many people. Your ability to identify with others soars. Therefore, starting and completing projects happens with ease, and friends seek you out for advice. You would be best served if you simply shared your opinion.

TAURUS (APRIL 20-MAY 20) Be mindful when speaking with a partner or boss, as he or she may have his or her hands full. If you can, pitch in and help this person. Doing so will create more trust and closeness between you. Remain easygoing, and a solution will appear.

GEMINI (MAY 21-JUNE 20) Your sense of humor emerges when you run into a friend who is unusually mouthy and confident. Just let this person do his or her thing, and eventually he or she will calm down. Reach out to a loved one to get some feedback.

CANCER (JUNE 21-JULY 22) Your anger is close to the surface in the morning. Your perception of a situation seems to be quite different from others'. Recognize how important it is to move in a new direction. You will come to a better understanding of a key person in your life.

LEO (JULY 23-AUG. 22) Your passion runs high, which allows more give-and-take between you and others. Open up to a more constructive conversation. You might be shocked by some of what you are hearing. Express your compassion later on, when it will be better received.

VIRGO (AUG. 23-SEPT. 22) You might feel great as the day begins, but by noon, tension builds. As a result, you could decide to head home early; know that you will feel better once you do. Make a point of getting together with someone you want to get to know better.

JACQUELINE BIGAR

LIBRA (SEPT. 23-OCT. 22) You might feel as if you need to return all your calls and emails before formalizing any plans. Realize that an associate might be upset with what is going on around you. Lie low and look toward better times. This person will adjust.

SCORPIO (OCT. 23-NOV. 21) Be careful, as the green-eyed monster is likely to rear its ugly head. You can do little to change your feelings. Honor a swift change of pace. You'll be a lot happier if you adjust. Make it OK to spend some money on sprucing up your image.

SAGITTARIUS (NOV. 22-DEC. 21) You feel better and better as the day goes on. You'll discover how centered you are when someone inadvertently changes plans. Your ability to communicate what is needed comes through, creating a conversation in which you both learn something new.

CAPRICORN (DEC. 22-JAN. 19) What is happening might be of significance to you, but don't exaggerate the significance of someone else's gesture. Your sense of humor comes through, allowing more playfulness and caring to be exchanged between you and a dear friend.

AQUARIUS (JAN. 20-FEB. 18) A meeting will be more important than you realize. What occurs around you might be the source of a problem. Could someone be jealous? Gravitate toward those who really are your friends. You won't want a discussion to become too intrusive.

PISCES (FEB. 19-MARCH 20) You recently have been able to detach from a significant problem. How you relate to another person becomes a topic of conversation. Be smart. Do not threaten or bribe someone into doing what you want, as that type of interaction will backfire.

ON THIS DATE:
In 1818, Congress decided the flag of the United States would consist of 13 red and white stripes and 20 stars, with a new star to be added for every new state of the Union.

In 1949, 12 nations, including the United States, signed the North Atlantic Treaty in Washington, D.C.

In 1958, Johnny Stompanato, an enforcer for crime boss Mickey Cohen and the boyfriend of actress Lana Turner,
