Lawsuit accuses state leaders of failing to address climate change

By John Kennedy
GateHouse Capital Bureau

TALLAHASSEE — Eight Florida youths backed by an environmental organization sued state leaders Monday for failing to address climate change and refusing to blunt the use of polluting fossil fuels.

The lawsuit by Our Children's Trust claims the eight young plaintiffs face current health hazards and a future where life in Florida will be sharply changed by the effect of sea level rise and a loss of natural resources.

"These actions by our government leaders are destroying our basic rights," said Oscar Psychas, 20, of Gainesville, a freshman at Vermont's Middlebury College and one of those filing the suit in Leon County Circuit Court.

Gov. Rick Scott, Agriculture Commissioner Adam Putnam, and other state leaders are named as defendants. A spokesman for Scott dismissed the lawsuit as "political theater."

"The governor signed one of the largest environmental protection budgets in Florida's history last month – investing $4 billion into Florida's environment," said Scott spokesman McKinley Lewis. "The governor is focused on real solutions to protect our environment – not political theater or a lawsuit orchestrated by a group based in Eugene, Oregon."

Our Children's Trust is based in Oregon and filed a federal lawsuit there in 2015 against U.S. government policies it claims violate the younger generation's constitutional rights to life, liberty and property, while failing to protect natural resources.

The lawsuit is scheduled for trial in October. State lawsuits such as the one filed Monday in Tallahassee are expected to multiply, advocates say.

NEW YORK — A legal fight over what should happen to records the FBI seized from President Donald Trump's personal attorney took a surprise twist Monday when the lawyer, Michael Cohen, was forced to reveal a secret — that he had also done legal work for Fox News host Sean Hannity.

The disclosure came as attorneys for Cohen and Trump tried to persuade a New York judge to delay prosecutors from examining records and electronic devices seized in the raids on TAVARES — David Mariotti had a childhood and history of drug abuse so horrific it damaged his brain and impaired his ability to act like a normal person. Or, he was still able to make good choices and have a stable life.

These are the issues jurors must weigh today when they decide if Mariotti, 36, should spend the rest of his life in prison or die by lethal injection for murdering 84-year-old Bernadine Montgomery in June 2016.

Jurors on Monday learned of reports from Mariotti's

Underwood, Vegas among winners at ACM Awards

By Mesfin Fekadu
The Associated Press

The 2018 Academy of Country Music Awards marked a memorable night for the victims of the massive Las Vegas shooting, comeback queen Carrie Underwood and triple-winners Chris Stapleton and Miranda Lambert.

Jason Aldean paid tribute to the 58 people who died at the Route 91 Harvest Festival in Las Vegas last October when he was named entertainer of the year Sunday for the third consecutive time.

"It's been a rough year," Aldean said, thanking those "that showed us love and support over the last six months."

The ACMs brought the country music community back to Vegas six months after the deadly tragedy. Aldean was performing onstage when the shooting occurred.

"You guys are in our hearts always," Aldean said. "We love Las Vegas. Vegas strong."

Though Aldean beat out Stapleton for the top honor, Stapleton's Sunday was met with many high points: His wife, Morgane, gave birth to twin boys; he celebrated his 40th birthday; and the leading nominee, who didn't attend the show, won male vocalist of the year and album of the year, where he

Keystone XL developer to meet with landowners

The developer of the Keystone XL pipeline plans to meet with landowners along its planned route through Nebraska, South Dakota and Montana this week and will start aerial surveying of the route in all three states, a company spokesman said Monday.

TransCanada Inc. spokesman Matt John said the company will make financial offers to all landowners along the proposed route, including those who have already granted the company access to their land.

Company officials are forging ahead despite pending lawsuits in Nebraska and Montana that aim to derail the project.

Meteorologist rants on-air about reaction to his forecast

The winter that won't end has taken its toll on a TV meteorologist in western Michigan.

Garry Frank of WXMI-TV in Grand Rapids, Michigan, went on a rant to colleagues because they weren't excited about his forecast.

Video of the rant has gone viral with more than 1.3 million views since it originally aired Tuesday.

Frank told them they were dragging him down. He said he'd like to hear some praise because it was going to be 60.

His co-workers pointed out that snow was in the forecast.

Frank asked his colleagues if they wanted him to lie to them about the weather.

Hundreds of Romanian health workers protest wage cuts

Romanian health workers are protesting pay cuts following government promises to hike salaries in the health care sector amid a general tax and wage overhaul.

Some 200 medics, nurses and other health workers protested Monday at the regional Emergency Hospital in the southern city of Craiova, threatening to strike if the situation was not resolved. In the capital of Bucharest, health workers protested at the Bagdasar Arseni Hospital and the Marius Nasta Institute, saying their wages had also fallen in March.

Romania's left-wing government has significantly increased pay for most health workers.

Comey: Russians may have info on Trump

By Catherine Lucey and Eric Tucker
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — In his scathing appraisal of the man who fired him as FBI chief, James Comey cited "some evidence of obstruction of justice" in President Donald Trump's actions and speculated that Russians might have dirt on the president. Trump struck back, branding Comey a criminal.

Their war of words escalated Monday after Comey, in an ABC interview broadcast the night before, labelled Trump "morally unfit" for office.

Trump tweeted that Comey drafted an exoneration of Hillary Clinton long before he talked to her as part of an investigation into her email practices. He labelled Comey "disgruntled" and accused him and allies of having "committed many crimes." For his part, Comey has said that nine or 10 months into the Clinton probe, he had a "clear picture" where it was going and it's common to draft statements before an investigation is complete.

Comey's remarks, coupled with the release of his forthcoming book, offer his version of events surrounding his firing and the investigations into Russian election meddling and Clinton's email practices. Several of the episodes he describes in detail, including a private conversation about former White House national security adviser Michael Flynn, are central to special counsel Robert Mueller's investigation and his recollections are presumably valuable for prosecutors examining whether the president's actions constitute obstruction of justice.

The ex-FBI director, who until his firing in May led an investigation into possible ties between Russia and the Trump campaign, acknowledged that it was "stunning" to think that Russia could have damaging information about a U.S. president. But he said that in Trump's case, he could not discount the possibility that the president had been compromised.

"These are more words I never thought I'd utter about a president of the United States, but it's possible," Comey told ABC News' chief anchor George Stephanopoulos. He also acknowledged he had no proof that Russia has dirt on Trump: "I think it's possible. I don't know."

He also answered "possibly" when asked if the president was attempting to obstruct justice when he cleared the Oval Office of other officials in February 2017 before encouraging him to close the investigation into Flynn, who by that point was suspected of lying to the FBI about his Russian contacts. The retired general pleaded guilty in December and is now cooperating with Mueller's investigation.

Comey also said he believed Trump treated women like "pieces of meat."

"A person who sees moral equivalence in Charlottesville, who talks about and treats women like they're pieces of meat, who lies constantly about matters big and small and insists the American people believe it — that person's not fit to be president of the United States, on moral grounds," Comey said.

Trump on Sunday rejected Comey's assertion that Trump had sought his loyalty at a January 2017 dinner, saying "I hardly even knew this guy. Just another of his many lies." He also suggested Comey should be imprisoned, tweeting, "how come he gave up Classified Information (jail), why did he lie to Congress (jail)." There is no indication Comey is under investigation for doing either.

The president began assailing Comey even before the interview came out.

He seized on an excerpt shown Saturday in which Comey said his belief that Clinton would beat Trump in the 2016 presidential election was probably a factor in his decision to disclose the investigation into her emails. Comey, Trump tweeted, "was making decisions based on the fact that he thought she was going to win, and he wanted a job. Slimeball!"

That argument was startling given that Comey's handling of the email investigation, including his disclosure shortly before the election that the FBI had reopened its probe, enraged Democrats. After Clinton's loss, many Democrats blamed Comey, and Clinton herself has said it hurt her election prospects.

Comey again defended his actions, telling ABC that he made what he thought was the best decision at the time. Comey said he did not remember "consciously thinking" about the election results as he decided to disclose that the FBI had reopened its investigation into candidate Clinton's email use. But, he acknowledged, "I was operating in a world where Hillary Clinton was going to beat Donald Trump, and so I'm sure that it was a factor."

"I don't remember spelling it out," he added, "but it had to have been that she's going to be elected president and if I hide this from the American people, she'll be illegitimate the moment she's elected, the moment this comes out."

Trump fired Comey in May 2017, setting off a scramble at the Justice Department that led to the appointment of Mueller as special counsel overseeing the Russia investigation. Mueller's probe has expanded to include whether Trump obstructed justice by firing Comey. So far, 19 people — including Flynn and Trump's former campaign chairman, Paul Manafort —have been charged in the investigation. Flynn and two of the president's campaign aides, Rick Gates and George Papadopoulos, have pleaded guilty and are cooperating with Mueller.

LEESBURG
Woman killed crossing U.S. 441 Sunday

LEESBURG – A Tavares woman was killed when she was struck by a car while crossing U.S. Highway 441 in Leesburg Sunday night.

According to a press release from the Leesburg Police Department, officers responded to the main entrance to the Lake Square Mall about 9:55 p.m. and discovered that a 2004 Toyota Highlander driven by Emmanuel Claudio-Vargas age 36 of Leesburg and a pedestrian, Lisa Grantham age 43 of Tavares.

Police believe Ms. Grantham was crossing U.S. 441 and walked into the path of the Toyota. Ms. Grantham was pronounced dead at the scene. Northbound U.S. 441 was shut down for approximately four hours.

The crash is still under investigation by the Leesburg Police Department. Anyone with any further information should contact the Leesburg Police Department Traffic Unit at (352) 787-2121.

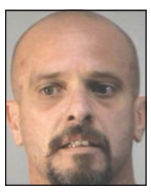
Walmart shoplifter should have quit while he was ahead

According to an arrest report, James Michael Robinson, 46, was nabbed on Saturday trying to leave the store on Johns Lake Road with a shopping cart full of bread, meat, flowers, a cooler and a fan – an estimated $450 in merchandise in all.



Robinson

The store's loss prevention officer said Robinson also walked out of the store Monday, April 9, with a $170 Ozark Trail cooler and on April 10 with a $120 Poulan chainsaw.

Robinson, of Orlando, reportedly told the officer that he'd been shoplifting from the store three or four times a week but also paid for at least one item on every trip.

He was charged with grand theft and two counts of retail theft.

Clermont Walmart to get makeover

Company announces upgrades in technologies, products

Staff Report

CLERMONT – Walmart will renovate its Clermont store as part of a $200 million investment in 43 Florida stores over the next year.

The spend is part of Walmart's total capital expenditures guidance of approximately $11 billion for 2019, which was outlined last October at the company's annual meeting for the investment community and reiterated in February 2018, company officials said in a press release.

"Walmart recently reported strong comp sales growth of 2.1 percent for the fiscal year ending Jan. 31, 2018, indicating customers are responding well to the company's business strategy," the release states.

Raul Castro leaving Cuba with new freedoms, deep problems

By Michael Weissenstein and Andrea Rodriguez
The Associated Press

HAVANA — In 2008 Raul Castro took over a country where most people couldn't own computers or cellphones, leave without permission, run most types of private businesses or enter resort hotels.

Castro set about re-engineering the system he had helped create and Cuba opened dramatically over his decade in office. But when Castro steps down as president Thursday he will leave his successor a host of problems that are deeper than on the day his brother Fidel formally handed over power.

Cuba has nearly 600,000 private entrepreneurs, more than 5 million cellphones, a bustling real estate market and one of the world's fastest-growing airports. Foreign debt has been paid. Tourism numbers have more than doubled since Castro and President Barack Obama re-established diplomatic relations in 2015, making Cuba a destination for nearly 5 million visitors a year, despite a plunge in relations under the Trump administration.

On the other side of the ledger, Cuba's Soviet-style command economy still employs three of every four Cuban workers but produces little. Private sector growth has been largely frozen. The average monthly state salary is $31 — so low that workers often live on stolen goods and handouts from relatives overseas. Foreign investment remains anemic. The island's infrastructure is falling deeper into disrepair. The break with Washington dashed dreams of detente with the U.S., and after two decades of getting Venezuelan subsidies totaling more than $6 billion a year, Cuba's patron has collapsed economically with no replacement in the wings.

Fur flies over repeated 911 calls

Groveland woman rages at cops to catch her dog, ends up in jail

Staff Report

GROVELAND — A Groveland woman who needed help corralling her dog after it got outside ended up being corralled herself when she refused to stop calling 911 and then reportedly threatened to kill the deputy who showed up at her door.

According to an arrest affidavit, Julie Ogden Franks called 911 "multiple times" on Friday to say her dog had gotten out and she couldn't get it back in the house. The deputy arrived to find the dog sitting in front of the door, but Franks stepped outside and started yelling for the deputy to get her dog. He repeatedly explained that the 911 line was for emergencies only and advised her to call the non-emergency line if she needed help.

Franks

The deputy left but returned a short time later when Franks called 911 again. He said he reminded her that the 911 line was for emergencies and not to call about her dog running around on her own property, but she started screaming, "Shut the (expletive) up and get my dog," and "Get my dog, you mother(expletive)."

He arrested her on a charge of misuse of 911 and called Animal Control to get the dog. Franks reportedly became enraged, saying she would get a shotgun and shoot him dead, then stating "she would kill me multiple times, multiple different ways..." according to the report.

She was also charged with corruption by making a threat against a public official.

Voters to get say on education changes

By Jim Saunders
News Service of Florida

TALLAHASSEE — The Florida Constitution Revision Commission on Monday signed off on a proposed constitutional amendment that could lead to term limits for county school-board members and make a revision that one critic called a "game changer" for charter schools.

The commission voted 27-10 to put the proposed education amendment (Proposal 6003) on the Nov. 6 ballot. It was one of a series of ballot proposals — ranging from issues dealing with oil drilling to victims' rights — that the commission considered during a day-long debate.

The education proposal, if approved by 60 percent of voters in November, would impose eight-year term limits on school-board members. That would make school boards similar to the Legislature and state Cabinet, where members are generally limited to eight years.

The proposed constitutional amendment also would direct the Legislature to put in law efforts to promote civic literacy in schools.

But while the term-limits and civic-literacy issues drew little discussion Monday, another part of the proposed constitutional amendment related to school governance spurred controversy.

Under current law, school boards operate and control public schools within their counties. But the proposed constitutional amendment could lead to the state having control over public schools that would not be established by school boards.

Commissioner Roberto Martinez, a Coral Gables attorney and former member of the State Board of Education, said the proposal is designed to create a state process to oversee charter schools. That would come after years of clashes between some county school boards and charter-school operators about whether charter schools should be allowed to open. Charter schools are public schools that are typically run by private organizations.

"It (the proposal) is a big deal," said Martinez, who voted against the proposal. "It's a game changer."

But Commissioner Patricia Levesque, who is a top official with two education-advocacy organizations founded by former Gov. Jeb Bush, said the proposal is not only about charter schools. She said it also could help lead to more university lab

Crime victims measure to go on November ballot

By Jim Saunders
News Service of Florida

TALLAHASSEE — With the measure drawing support from state leaders and law-enforcement officials, Florida voters in November will decide whether to approve a proposed constitutional amendment that would spell out a series of rights of crime victims.

The Florida Constitution Revision Commission on Monday voted 34-3 to approve the measure (Proposal 6001), which largely focuses on a victims' rights initiative known as "Marsy's Law."

The proposal, which will need support from 60 percent of voters in November, would seek to ensure the rights of victims to receive information and provide input during criminal cases. Also, for example, it would ensure victims have the right to talk with prosecutors about issues such as plea agreements, restitution and sentencing.

Commission member Tim Cerio, a Tallahassee attorney who sponsored the proposal, said Marsy's Law is about "making sure victims have a right to be engaged in the process."

Among other things, the proposal also would establish a right for the safety of victims and their family members to be considered when bail is set in criminal cases.

Before approving the proposal, the commission rejected a series of changes sought by member Hank Coxe, a Jacksonville defense attorney. One of the changes, for instance, sought to add wording that would have said victims are entitled to the rights "to the extent that these rights do not interfere with the constitutional rights of the accused."

But with Cerio and others opposed, Coxe's proposed changes were rejected. Coxe, former Sen. Arthenia Joyner, D-Tampa, and Orlando attorney Rich Newsome voted against the overall proposal.

The Constitution Revision Commission approved the measure as it began taking final votes on a dozen proposals for the November ballot. The 37-member commission, which meets every 20 years, has the unique power to place issues on the ballot. Proposals need support of 22 members of the commission to advance.

Several of the proposed constitutional amendments bundle more than one issue. The measure including Marsy's Law also would change a mandatory retirement age for state judges. If approved by voters, the age would go from 70 to 75.

The measure also includes a proposed change that would affect legal cases involving the interpretation of state laws or rules. The proposal would direct judges to not "defer to an administrative agency's interpretation" of the laws or rules in the cases.

The commission Monday had a lengthy debate about whether the measure including Marsy's Law and other proposed constitutional amendments should be "unbundled" — which would effectively require each issue to be voted on separately.

Commission member Roberto Martinez, a Coral Gables lawyer, argued the commission was bundling unrelated issues and that voters should be given clear choices on approving proposed constitutional amendments.

"Do they (the three issues in Proposal 6001) all deal with the courts? They do," Martinez said. "But are they really related? They are not."

But Brecht Heuchan, chairman of the commission's Style and Drafting Committee, which bundled issues, said it was "absurd" to think voters would get confused. He and other commissioners defended the process, in part arguing that they were following precedents from when the commission put measures on the ballot in 1978 and 1998.

"The whole process is being attacked," Heuchan said.

Commissioners rejected an attempt by Martinez to send the measure including Marsy's Law back to the Style and Drafting Committee to be unbundled.

The Marsy's Law proposal has drawn support in recent months from state leaders such as Gov. Rick Scott and many sheriffs and prosecutors. It also has the backing of Attorney General Pam Bondi, who serves on the Constitution Revision Commission.

The proposal is part of a broader national movement stemming from the 1983 death of a California woman, Marsy Nicholas, who was stalked and killed by an ex-boyfriend.

WALMART

"The plan is to continue improving stores and accelerating innovation during the coming year to make shopping faster and easier for customers in Florida.

"Making every day easier for busy families is at the forefront of everything we're doing as a company," said Elise Vasquez-Warner, a vice president and regional general manager for Walmart in Florida. "Customers have told us they want the convenience of shopping how, when and where they want. And, here in Florida, we'll achieve that by building off the momentum we had last year, accelerating the rollout of customer-centered innovations, creating more than 1,000 jobs this year alone, and maintaining a sharp focus on improving our store experience."

The company did not release details of each store's planned remodeling but said many of the changes involve improving technologies to make customers' experience better.

The massive retailer is introducing a number of changes to stores nationwide, including online grocery pickup; the ability for customers to scan items with their mobile devices; and the use of Tower Pickup, which allows customers to pick up their online orders in less than a minute by scanning a bar code sent to their smartphone.

A Walmart spokeswoman said other changes may include:

State-of-the-art electronics department with interactive displays

Additional self-checkouts to save customers time

Updated pharmacy with addition of private consultation room

New look in hardware with additional products

New signage and flooring throughout the entire store, new fixtures and lighting, and refreshed bathrooms

Wider aisles and lower fixtures for an improved store flow and easier navigation throughout the whole store

Walmart also plans to upgrade the product lines in its cosmetics, home, auto, baby and produce sections.

SCHOOLS

schools or collegiate high schools at state colleges.

Levesque said the current system was set up in the state's 1968 Constitution and that the Legislature could be "very innovative" with changes.

"Right now, we have a governance model that was built 50 years ago," said Levesque, CEO of the non-profit Foundation for Excellence in Education and executive director of the Foundation for Florida's Future.

Martinez and other critics sought unsuccessfully to break apart the proposed constitutional amendment and take up the issues separately. In part, they said voters should be able to consider each of the issues rather than taking an up-or-down vote on the bundle.

"They are not related sufficiently to stay bundled, in my opinion," said Commissioner Bill Schifino, a Tampa lawyer who is a former president of The Florida Bar.

But Levesque said all three issues deal with kindergarten through 12th-grade education and part of the Constitution that governs education.

"Absolutely, these issues are related," she said.

CASTRO

Castro's inability or unwillingness to fix Cuba's structural problems with deep and wide-ranging reforms has many wondering how a successor without Castro's founding father credentials will manage the country over the next five or 10 years.

"People in Cuba really haven't processed yet what it means to have a government without Raul or Fidel leading it," said Yassel Padron Kunakbaeva, a prolific 27-year-old blogger who writes frequently from what he describes as a Marxist, revolutionary perspective. "We're entering unknown territory."

Tens of thousands of highly educated professionals are abandoning the island each year, leaving Cuba with the combination of third-world economy and the demographics of a graying European nation. After a 2016 recession, Cuba said growth was 1.6 percent last year, although official accounts remain opaque and questioned by experts. The single-party government controls virtually all forms of expression and organization, with near-zero tolerance of public criticism or dissent. The mood on the street is pessimistic, with few expecting a better future anytime soon.

"The political future of whoever takes over in April depends on the economic question," said Jose Raul Viera Linares, a former first deputy minister of foreign affairs. "It's the possibility for young people to dream, to design their own future. That's all based in the material wealth that this country is able to achieve."

The greatest immediate challenge for Castro's expected successor — 57-year-old Vice President Miguel Diaz-Canel Bermudez — is unwinding a byzantine dual-currency system featuring one type of Cuban peso worth 4 cents and another that is nearly a dollar. The system was designed to insulate a state-run, egalitarian internal market using "national money" from trade with the outside world denominated in "convertible pesos."

The barrier between the two worlds swiftly collapsed and the system has fostered big economic distortions. Inefficient state enterprises receive mammoth subsidies by obtaining expensive convertible pesos for the price of the cheaper "Cuban peso." The dual-currency system also allows private businesses to receive subsidized goods and services like water and electricity in Cuban pesos, then turn around and charge their relatively wealthy clients in convertible pesos at a significant profit.

Castro called for elimination of the dual currencies from the beginning of his presidency, but never got around to it. In one of his final speeches last year he called once again for the system's urgent elimination, a process that many expect to start in Diaz-Canel's first year in power. Eliminating dual currency is widely seen as necessary for Cuba's economy to grow, but it carries risks of inflation and major disruption for inefficient state businesses whose subsidized balance sheets will finally become understandable when they are denominated in a single currency.

Those state businesses gained new competitors as Castro expanded the space for capitalism in the Cuban economy by permitting private enterprise in dozens of fields ranging from agriculture to hospitality to construction.

"We've risen up economically. The new possibilities have changed my life, of course," said Yanelis Garcia, a 44-year-old mother of three who saved money from raising pigs in her backyard to slowly build a prosperous six-room bed-and-breakfast and taxi business in the central city of Santa Clara. "I've always liked having my own business to be able to provide for my family. It's been really good."

Cubans fill thousands of flights a year to Miami, Panama and Cancun, where they cram duffel bags with gym socks and Xboxes for the vibrant private sector and rising middle class. But last August, the Cuban government froze new licenses for private bed-and-breakfasts, restaurants and other popular businesses, leaving many Cubans questioning how their government envisions a path to prosperity.

"We've seen necessary reforms and I think that in the future there will have to be more," said Norma Chiang, a 77-year-old state accountant and auditor. "Self-employment needs to be broadened, little things like bakeries or food stands that can be in the hands of individuals and not the state."

Despite the image of Raul Castro as an all-powerful military strongman, many Cubans say back-and-forth moves and the overall slow pace of reform have shown the difficulty of modernizing a Soviet-era bureaucracy controlled by hundreds of thousands of civil servants who would be threatened by a transition into a market economy, a difficulty Castro's successor will also face.

"No one dares to disobey Raul to his face. They quietly don't get things done and search for ways to cover their backs so no one can accuse them of not getting things done," Padron said.

Cuba's next president also must find a way to make its economy grow while maintaining social stability and satisfying the millions of Cubans who depend on the state and a shrinking list of subsidized essentials sold in Cuban pesos for their survival. While Cuba sees Russia as one of its closest allies, Cuba's leaders are desperate to prevent the sort of shock transition to capitalism that marked the end of the Soviet Union.

"I can't eat, dress myself and live on $20 a month," said Adela Arpajon, a 54-year-old accountant for the Communist Party. "I either eat or buy clothes. It's hard, but that's the way it is."

Wariness of disruption is exacerbated by Cuba's increasing economic dependence on the Cuban emigres and exiles once seen by the Communist government as a threat to its survival.

As part of his broader immigration reforms, Raul Castro changed Cuba's relationship with its diaspora by allowing Cubans to maintain their rights to own property and receive social benefits as long as they return once every two years. That change fueled the growth of a new class of Cubans who earn money overseas but invest at home and are responsible for hundreds of millions, if not billions, of dollars in small-scale investment on the island in recent years.

More than 20,000 Cuban emigres have "repatriated" and regained their property rights since the emigration reforms, according to Cuban figures. Still, the flow of emigres back to Cuba is swamped by the outward flood of Cubans unleashed by Castro's elimination of the hated exit permit known as the "white card." According to U.S. Homeland Security statistics, the United States admitted 463,502 Cubans between 2006 and 2016, with tens of thousands more heading to countries such as Spain and Ecuador.

"I don't think people have realized how momentous that is in terms of for the first time having circular migration," said Lisandro Perez, an expert on the Cuban diaspora at New York's John Jay College of Criminal Justice. "They take back things, they finance private restaurants. It's a totally different ballgame."

Castro's successor will have to manage the delicate relationship with Cuba's prosperous exiles at a time when relations with the U.S. have dropped from an unprecedented high under President Barack Obama to a deep low under President Donald Trump.

For Reinaldo Taladrid, a popular commentator on state television, tensions with the U.S. will serve as a brake on any reforms sought by Raul Castro's successor.

"While there's a sense of a state of siege, there's an instinct of self-preservation that doesn't have anything to do with politics. It's the human instinct for self-preservation. You have the world's most powerful state, the most powerful government in the history of humanity that has regime change in Cuba as its official policy," Taladrid said. "While that's true this little, poor country's government will have a siege mentality, and it's logical to have it."

SCOTT

emissions are enormous," said Guy Burns, a Tampa securities lawyer representing the eight youths suing the state. "The governor and Adam Putnam have neglected their obligation to pass programs that will stem these emissions."

Scott last week announced he is running against Democratic U.S. Sen. Bill Nelson, and Putnam is a leading Republican candidate for governor.

Burns said that politics was not driving the lawsuit, but raising questions about the two Republicans' environmental record "may be one of the unintended consequences."

Burns defended citing Scott and Putnam, saying that among state leaders, the pair have unique authority over environmental policy and regulations. Among others named are the state's Department of Environmental Protection, DEP Secretary Noah Valenstein and the state's Public Service Commission, which regulates utilities.

Florida's energy policies have led it to become one of the world's largest producers of greenhouse gas, outstripping that of many countries, Burns said.

While the state under Scott's predecessor, former Republican Gov. Charlie Crist, pushed a plan to encourage the reduction of greenhouse gas, those efforts failed in the state Legislature. Scott has not revisited the issue and also has refused to acknowledge climate change, saying, "I'm not a scientist."

The lawsuit also argues that climate change will have a profound effect on Florida's economy.

Governments in the Miami-area expect to spend $1 billion in coming years to slow seawater intrusion and flooding in many coastal areas. Property values across Florida could also decline by $15 billion by 2030, studies show.

The state's tourist industry will be affected by the loss of many beaches and coastal destinations, the suit claims.

Psychas, the Gainesville college student, said that especially for his generation, climate change is alarming.

"Without a stable climate system, everything is at risk," he said.

ACM

won twice as a singer and producer.

Underwood also had a big night, returning to the stage like an A-List veteran in her first television appearance since injuring her face and wrist last year due to a fall at her home. Her powerhouse vocals shined when she performed her new song, "Cry Pretty," earning a rousing — and long — standing ovation from the audience.

Immediately following the performance, she won vocal event of the year for the dance-infused country song, "The Fighter," with Keith Urban.

"I am still kind of shaking right now," she added, appearing teary-eyed.

"Seeing her stand up there and be so beautiful, she's one of the greatest singers of all-time in any genre of music," Lambert said backstage of Underwood. "I am just proud of her and I know how strong she is and how hard she's worked."

But Lambert's hard work also paid off: She made history when she surpassed Brooks and Dunn as the most decorated act in ACM history with 32 wins on Sunday. Lambert won her ninth consecutive female vocalist of the year trophy and won twice for song of the year — as the performer and co-writer of "Tin Man."

"I cannot believe this. I really can't. ...I love country music. It's my entire life," Lambert said onstage. "I will never ever take it for granted."

Florida Georgia Line's Tyler Hubbard wore an all-red ensemble and Brian Kelley was in all-white when they hit the stage with pop singer Bebe Rexha to perform the massive hit "Meant to Be," which is spending its 19th week on top of Billboard's Hot country songs chart. It ties Leroy Van Dyke's "Walk On By" as the third longest-running song of all-time on the chart.

The longest-running No. 1 song of all-time on the country charts, Sam Hunt's "Body Like a Back Road," won single record of the year at the ACMs; Hunt didn't attend the show.

Little Big Town sang Elton John's "Rocket Man" in celebration of the icon's new album, "Restoration," which features country singers covering his songs. Kane Brown and Lauren Alaina were impressive when they sang their duet, "What Ifs." Kenny Chesney, Toby Keith, Kelsea Ballerini, Alan Jackson, Lady Antebellum and Dierks Bentley also performed.

McEntire, who performed with Kelly Clarkson, hosted the three-hour show a year after Bryan and Bentley did the job.

the grounds that many of them are protected by attorney-client privilege.

U.S. District Judge Kimba Wood said in hearings Friday and Monday that if Cohen wanted the court to declare that some of his files were protected because of attorney confidentiality rules, he would have to divulge the names of the clients he's worked with since the 2016 election.

One was, of course, Trump himself. Another was Elliot Broidy, a Trump fundraiser who resigned from the Republican National Committee on Friday after it was revealed that he paid $1.6 million to a Playboy Playmate with whom he had an extramarital affair. The Playmate became pregnant and elected to have an abortion.

With Cohen by their side on Monday, lawyers initially resisted revealing the name of the third client for privacy reasons, saying it would be embarrassing for the client.

But Wood pressed on.

"I understand he doesn't want his name out there, but that's not enough under the law," she said.

When the name was announced, there were gasps and some laughter in a courtroom packed with journalists. A few of them raced from the courtroom.

Cohen's lawyers did not detail the type of legal work he did for Hannity. Cohen, in a light blue tie and dark suit, spent most of the hearing looking forward, his hands folded.

On his radio show, Hannity said Cohen was never involved in any matter between him and any third party.

"Michael never represented me in any matter," Hannity said. "I never retained him in any traditional sense. I never received an invoice. I never paid a legal fee. I had brief discussions with him about legal questions where I wanted his input and perspective."

Hannity, an outspoken supporter of Trump, has been a fierce critic of special counsel Robert Mueller, who is looking into Russian interference in the 2016 U.S. presidential election.

Monday's hearing began with an appearance by porn actress Stormy Daniels, who was swarmed by photographers and nearly fell as she was hustled into the courthouse, a scene that captured the sensational atmosphere around the case.

The last to enter court, she was among the first to leave. While in court, she smiled several times as she observed the proceedings from a folding chair near the back of the room. Outside afterward, she said Cohen has acted like he's above the law and that she and her lawyer are committed to making sure everyone learns the truth.

The April 9 raid on Cohen sought information on a variety of matters, including a $130,000 payment made to Daniels, who alleges she had sex with a married Trump in 2006.

At issue is exactly who gets to look at Cohen's seized documents and devices before they are turned over to prosecutors. Attorneys for Cohen say they want first crack. Trump's lawyers say they also want some form of prior review. Another option is to set up a "special master" who would vet the material to determine what is protected and what isn't; that is the Cohen team's second choice.

Prosecutors, who say they raided Cohen's office, home and hotel room as part of an undisclosed crime related to his personal business dealings, prefer the ordinary procedure of reviewing the documents with a panel of prosecutors unrelated to the investigation — a so-called "taint team."

At stake is an investigation that could uncover the inner workings of Trump's longtime fixer and image protector. People familiar with the probe told The Associated Press that agents were seeking bank records, records on Cohen's dealing in the taxi industry, Cohen's communications with the Trump campaign and information on payments made in 2016 to two women who say they had affairs with Trump, former Playboy model Karen McDougal and the porn star Daniels, whose real name is Stephanie Clifford.

Lawyers for Cohen filed papers Monday saying investigators "took everything" during the raids, including more than a dozen electronic devices. They said that prosecutors had already intercepted emails from Cohen and executed the search warrants only after discovering that there were no emails between Trump and Cohen.

One of Trump's lawyers, Joanna Hendon, asked the judge to block prosecutors from studying material seized in the raid until Cohen and the president have both had a chance to review those materials and argue which are subject to the "sacred" attorney-client privilege.

MARIOTTI

public school days of a social worker and employees describing his mother, Elsie, as "wacky," said psychologist Scot Machlus, Ph.D. Social workers are usually very careful about not calling someone names, he said. Others at the school told police she was "bizarre," "had one problem after another," "blamed others," and was "slurring," and "seemed to be on something."

When she moved to Lake County, she visited the emergency room at Leesburg Regional Medical Center 103 times between 2002 and 2017, each time claiming to be in pain and needing opiates. One time she said she burned her leg with bleach while cooking pancakes and ribs. She was treated and told to leave the wound exposed to the air so it could heal. She returned a short time later bandaged in duct tape and wanting more pain meds.

Sometimes she would stab herself and blame either Mariotti or her ex-husband, according to reports. She had a running battle with Fruitland Park police, claiming they were harassing her, so she made obscene gestures every time she saw them.

She fought with her neighbors, too, and would scream at people that walked on the sidewalk near her home. Once, she had hallucinations and talked to people that were not really there.

She was involuntarily hospitalized two times at a mental hospital.

In Broward County, she smoked pot with Mariotti at their home, and introduced him to cocaine at 13.

Mariotti tried to protect her in physical fights with her husbands and boyfriends, and looked after his younger siblings because she was not interested in taking care of them, the psychologist said.

He was rejected by everybody that was supposed to love him, Machlus said.

He was abandoned by his father at a very young age when his dad was sent to prison on drug trafficking charges. His mother turned him over to her parents. His grandparents later turned him over to his father after he got out of prison, even though he didn't really know him. The father gave Mariotti back to his mother. When he said he wanted to go back to school after dropping out in the eighth grade, he went to live with a family friend, who had just gotten out of prison for drug trafficking. He then went back to live with his grandparents, and eventually with his mother again.

This all occurred while he was taking drugs, starting at age 10. Drugs later included methamphetamine and heroin, no doubt causing "significant brain damage," neuropsychologist Robert Oulou, Ph.D., testified.

It would have especially taken its toll on the frontal lobes, which control things like memory and cognitive thinking, he said.

Assistant State Attorney Rich Buxman, however, pointed out that the psychologist had not reviewed police records, including his statement to detectives where he kept changing his story, once confronted with evidence.

"Are there people who can take drugs and not kill anybody?"

"Yes."

He asked if he was able to focus. The answer was yes. There were no delusions or hallucinations, he admitted.

The prosecutor also got the expert to concede that the grandparents were "good people" and that he lived with them for a majority of his childhood and had a relatively stable life.

On Friday, a defense radiologist testified that brain scans showed signs of abnormalities in the frontal lobes. On Monday, a prosecution radiologist witness disagreed.

"These are normal," Dr. Lawrence testified looking at a large blow-up of the images in front of the jury box.

Also testifying for the state was psychologist Gregory Pritchard, Ph.D. He said he looked at all the records, including police reports and the reports of the defense experts. He concluded that Mariotti has a mental condition known as anti-social personality disorder. Mental health experts say the characteristics are: a pervasive pattern of disregarding the rights of others; using aliases and other deceit to steal for his own pleasure or use; impulsivity, failure to plan or maintain steady relationships and work; irritable, aggressive, reckless disregard for self and others; irresponsible financial or familial responsibilities; lack of remorse.

Mentioning the last one nearly caused a mistrial, because Prichard said the key example was "...the murder of an 84-year-old woman."

"There is no remedy for this," Executive Public Assistant John Spivey said when the jury was removed from the courtroom. "He said it in front of the jury."

After ordering the court record reporter to read it back two times, Circuit Judge Don Briggs said "it is close," but denied the motion for mistrial.

Upon Spivey's suggestion, the judge instructed the jury that "remorse" applies only to the definition of the disorder.

Under Buxman's questioning, Pritchard gave examples that would seem to dispute defense claims that he couldn't help himself. Using a fake ID to pawn stolen items and disposing of Montgomery's body to avoid detection involved planning, for example.

For a time, Mariotti ran his own flooring business, and was in a stable relationship with a woman who would become the mother of his child. He chose to leave a court-ordered drug rehab program.

Mariotti was also able to control himself when he was doing work around Montgomery's home — until he took some of her things and strangled her.

NEW YORK
Builder optimism slides for fourth consecutive month

Homebuilder confidence slid for the fourth consecutive month with steadily rising mortgage rates and sky-high home prices putting ownership out of reach for more and more Americans.

The National Association of Home Builders/Wells Fargo builder sentiment index for April, released Monday, fell one point to 69. Any reading above 50 indicates more builders see sales conditions as good rather than poor, but it's the most extended decline since the run-up to the housing bust.

The index has been above 60 since September 2016 and it hit a record high in December. April's reading is the lowest since November.

Allegiant Air under fire

The Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — Allegiant Air shares continue to fall in the aftermath of a news report that is raising serious safety questions about the low-cost carrier.

Allegiant is defending its safety and says the report by CBS News' "60 Minutes" tells a "false narrative" about the airline. Investors, however, fear that the negative publicity will cause travelers to avoid Allegiant, which has a fleet including many older planes that typically require more maintenance.

"60 Minutes" reported Sunday night that between January 2016 and October 2017, the Las Vegas-based airline experienced more than 100 serious mechanical incidents, including aborted takeoffs, loss of cabin pressure, and emergency landings.

CBS said that detailed reports from the Federal Aviation Administration indicated that Allegiant flights were three-and-a-half times more likely to suffer an in-flight breakdown than flights operated by American, United, Delta, JetBlue or Spirit. The report also aired a long-running accusation by the Teamsters union local representing Allegiant pilots that the airline discourages pilots from reporting mechanical problems with planes.

Allegiant issued a statement by Eric Gust, vice president of operations, charging that the CBS story told a "false narrative" about Allegiant and the FAA. He said the airline complies with all FAA requirements and takes part in many voluntary safety programs and is subject to "rigorous oversight" by the FAA.

"To suggest that Allegiant would engage in the practice of asking team members to violate company and regulatory obligations is offensive and defamatory," Gust said.

Shares of parent company Allegiant Travel Co. fell $3.45, or 2.3 percent, to $147.60 in midday trading Monday. They dropped 8.6 percent on Friday in anticipation of a damaging news report.

Allegiant buys used planes to keep costs down. As of Feb. 2, Allegiant operated 37 McDonnell-Douglas MD-80 planes and 53 Airbus A320 jets. It is phasing out the MD-80s, which burn far more fuel than new planes. Allegiant's used planes range between 11 and 32 years old, according to a company regulatory filing.

Shares of Allegiant Air's parent company tumbled in Monday premarket trading following a "60 Minutes" investigation that expressed serious safety concerns about the airline. [DAVID BECKER/ASSOCIATED PRESS FILE PHOTO]

The CBS report updated reporting by the Tampa Bay Times, which said in 2015 that Allegiant planes were four more times than those of other U.S. airlines to make an unplanned landing because of mechanical problems.

None of those incidents led to enforcement action from the FAA.

The FAA on Monday released a letter in which associate administrator of safety Ali Bahrami defended the agency's performance by pointing to the lack of a fatal crash involving a U.S. airline since 2009.

The FAA increased its monitoring of Allegiant in 2015 because of labor tension with its pilots. In 2016, the agency moved up a routine review of the airline by two years after a series of aborted takeoffs and other safety incidents. FAA officials took no enforcement action against Allegiant and said they were satisfied that the airline was addressing problems found by inspectors.

Allegiant executives termed the FAA's 2016 findings "minor" and hailed the report as evidence of the airline's safety.

STUDY LOOKS AT COMPOUND

New research has found that a compound called an NAD+ precursor helped mice with features of Alzheimer's disease perform better on learning and memory tests, according to the National Institutes of Health (NIH).

The study, published in February 2018 in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences, found that NR-treated mice had less DNA damage, lower levels of neuron damage and death, increased production of new neurons, and lower brain inflammation than control mice, and performed better on learning and memory tests.

Treatment overkill

Older Americans are hooked on vitamins despite scarce evidence they work

BIGSTOCK

By Liz Szabo
Kaiser Health News

When she was a young physician, Dr. Martha Gulati noticed that many of her mentors were prescribing vitamin E and folic acid to patients. Preliminary studies in the early 1990s had linked both supplements to a lower risk of heart disease.

She urged her father to pop the pills as well, recalled Gulati, now chief of cardiology for the University of Arizona College of Medicine-Phoenix.

But just a few years later, she found herself reversing course, after rigorous clinical trials found neither vitamin E nor folic acid supplements did anything to protect the heart. Even worse, studies linked high-dose vitamin E to a higher risk of heart failure, prostate cancer and death from any cause.

"'You might want to stop taking (these),'" Gulati told her father.

More than half of Americans take vitamin supplements, including 68 percent of those age 65 and older, according to a 2013 Gallup poll. Among older adults, 29 percent take four or more supplements of any kind, according to a Journal of Nutrition study published in 2017.

Often, preliminary studies fuel irrational exuberance about a promising dietary supplement, leading millions of people to buy in to the trend. Many never stop. They continue even though more rigorous studies — which can take many years to complete — almost never find that vitamins prevent disease, and in some cases cause harm.

"The enthusiasm does tend to outpace the evidence," said Dr. JoAnn Manson, chief of preventive medicine at Boston's Brigham and Women's Hospital.

There's no conclusive evidence that dietary supplements prevent chronic disease in the average American, Manson said. And while a handful of vitamin and mineral studies have had positive results, those findings haven't been strong enough to recommend supplements to the general U.S. public, she said.

The National Institutes of Health has spent more than $2.4 billion since 1999 studying vitamins and minerals. Yet for "all the research we've done, we don't have much to show for it," said Dr. Barnett Kramer, director of cancer prevention at the National Cancer Institute.

A big part of the problem, Kramer said, could be that much nutrition research has been based on faulty assumptions, including the notion that people need more vitamins and minerals than a typical diet provides; that megadoses are always safe; and that scientists can boil down the benefits of vegetables like broccoli into a daily pill.

Vitamin-rich foods can cure diseases related to vitamin deficiency. Oranges and limes were famously shown to prevent scurvy in vitamin-deprived 18th-century sailors. And research has long shown that populations that eat a lot of fruits and vegetables tend to be healthier than others.

But when researchers tried to deliver the key ingredients of a healthy diet in a capsule, Kramer said, those efforts nearly always failed.

It's possible that the chemicals in the fruits and vegetables on your plate work together in ways that scientists don't fully understand — and which can't be replicated in a tablet, said Marjorie McCullough, strategic director of nutritional epidemiology for the American Cancer Society.

More important, perhaps, is that most Americans get plenty of the essentials, anyway. Although the Western diet has a lot of problems — too much sodium, sugar, saturated fat and calories, in general — it's not short on vitamins, said Alice Lichtenstein, a professor at the Friedman School of Nutrition Science and Policy at Tufts University.

And although there are more than 90,000 dietary supplements from which to choose, federal health agencies and advisers still recommend that Americans meet their nutritional needs with food, especially fruits and vegetables.

Also, American food is highly fortified — with vitamin D in milk, iodine in salt, B vitamins in flour, even calcium in some brands of orange juice.

Without even realizing it, someone who eats a typical lunch or breakfast "is essentially eating a multivitamin," said journalist Catherine Price, author of "Vitamania: How Vitamins Revolutionized the Way We Think About Food."

That can make studying vitamins even more complicated, Price said. Researchers may have trouble finding a true control group, with no exposure to supplemental vitamins. If everyone in a study is consuming fortified food, vitamins may appear less effective.

The body naturally regulates the levels of many nutrients, such as vitamin C and many B vitamins, Kramer said, by excreting what it doesn't need in urine. He added: "It's hard to avoid getting the full range of vitamins."

Not all experts agree. Dr. Walter Willett, a professor at the Harvard T.H. Chan School of Public Health, says it's reasonable to take a daily multivitamin "for insurance." Willett said that clinical trials underestimate supplements' true benefits because they aren't long enough.

Who takes vitamins?

More than half of Americans take vitamin supplements, including 68 percent of those age 65 and older, according to a 2013 Gallup poll.

Among older adults, 29 percent take four or more supplements of any kind, according to a Journal of Nutrition study published in 2017.

TODAY'S WORKOUT

Crisscross hop squat gets you jumping

By Marlo Alleva
More Content Now

Spring has definitely sprung. The days are getting longer and the weather's almost perfect.

You may have a skip in your step, and whether it's motivated by bathing suit season or just feeling the warm sun on your skin, you have extra energy to burn.

Our move today is a crisscross hop squat. It's a perfect combination move to get the heart pumping.

This move will work your inner and outer thighs, glutes, quads and hamstrings. It also doubles as a cardio workout.

Begin by standing tall, feet set slightly wider than your hips. Engage the core, and tuck your arms up by your chest for balance. From your outside stance, hop your feet inward crossing at the ankles. Bouncing off your feet, quickly hop back out to a wide stance, and into a squat. Use the deep positioning of your squat to propel yourself back up into your crisscross position more efficiently.

Continue this in and out motion for at least 10 times per set. Giving yourself a short break, just a few seconds, and continue your next set. Shoot for three to five sets. Use this move as a warm-up or incorporate into a lower body workout, giving you a cardio pick-me-up.

Marlo Alleva, an instructor at Gold's Gym and group fitness coordinator at Fontaine-Gills YMCA, in Lakeland, Florida, can be reached at faluvzpa@msn.com.

OUR OPINION

Tallahassee doesn't trust local voters

Massive bills passed at the end of Florida legislative sessions are like onions: There have multiple layers to peel away, and they often bring you to tears.

School officials statewide are crying foul about an amendment tucked inside page 68 of a 118-page tax bill (HB 7087), which was approved on the last day of this year's session and later signed into law by Gov. Rick Scott. The measure requires all county governments and school districts seeking to pass a sales tax initiative to undergo an extensive "performance audit" that must be completed 60 days before the election.

The issues to be examined include the "economy, efficiency, or effectiveness" of the proposed program and its "structure or design" to accomplish its goals; alternative methods of providing services; performance measures that will be used to monitor the program; and the "accuracy or adequacy" of public documents and reports related to the program and prepared by the local government.

There's nothing wrong with increasing transparency in government, although the way it was accomplished is problematic. The new law injects uncertainty into what should be a decision by local officials and local voters. Local officials statewide said they weren't even aware of the measure until after it passed.

Gumming up the works was the goal of the amendment's author, Rep. Matt Caldwell, R-Fort Myers, who is running for state agricultural commissioner. He opposes the Lee County School Board's half-cent sales tax initiative, believing the district can find better ways to fund its needs. Rather than counting on a majority of local voters to agree with him, he employed his legislative influence to trip up the referendum at the state level.

First he got the Legislature to change the date on when a bill would become law, just so it would prevent the Lee County School Board from holding a special election for the sales tax in May. Then he crafted the audit amendment to force the school district to jump through hoops in hopes of derailing the ballot initiative this year.

The measure started as an amendment to a bill that passed the House but died in a Senate committee. Undeterred, Caldwell made sure his baby found a new home buried deep inside the giant tax bill, 7087.

Caldwell told the Fort Myers News-Press in February that he was "trying desperately not to make this personal" with the school board. It appears he failed mightily.

Alas, it's not unusual for a state lawmaker to use personal pique over a hometown matter as justification for legislation that affects everyone in Florida. That's why bills are frequently filed to limit or prohibit local control over everything from regulating vacation rentals, businesses and land use, to local bans on plastic bags and "back-in" parking at public garages.

Tallahassee clearly believes it knows best — even though its track record in these matters hardly inspires confidence — and doesn't trust local voters to govern themselves without some help from outside and above. The goal of state laws should be to inform taxpayers, not deny them a choice.

ANOTHER OPINION

Government doesn't need a database of journalists

Pop culture has turned former President Richard Nixon's "enemies list" into the butt of jokes 45 years after the famously ruthless and paranoid president created it, in part, to monitor journalists. A new Trump administration effort to compile a database of journalists and "media influencers" is not the least bit funny and represents a clear threat to First Amendment rights.

Congress should intervene to stop the Department of Homeland Security's efforts to monitor 290,000 global news outlets. The department has advertised for a contractor to help compile a database of journalists, editors, foreign correspondents and bloggers to identify top "media influencers," and said it wants the outlets' "sentiment" to be included in the data collected.

Sentiment apparently refers to the contractor's analysis of whether the coverage represents pro-Trump, neutral or anti-administration coverage.

It's particularly threatening that this move comes from a president who regularly uses the term "fake news" to discredit mainstream news outlets that practice nothing more dangerous than reporting on Donald Trump's words and deeds. The fake-news label has been used to confuse citizens as they try to inform themselves about what their government is up to.

The importance of press freedom in this context cannot be overstated. Democracy cannot survive if the public does not keep informed or is deliberately misinformed.

Traditionally the United States has been a world model of press freedoms, providing fertile ground for a vast and diverse society where all views can be shared. Debating the news and criticizing those who provide it is a well-practiced American pastime and symbolic of our free society.

One of the marks of authoritarian political leaders is their penchant for attacking legitimate news outlets that cover them. Sowing divisions and undermining news media credibility help them consolidate control. That's why authoritarian leaders in Russia, Egypt, Turkey, Myanmar and Venezuela so regularly arrest journalists and put them on trial.

When Trump tells baldfaced lies, like saying he "won in a landslide" or had the "biggest audience ever" for his inauguration, he says the media is lying when they report facts that counter his false claims. His constant drumbeat of fake-news denunciation threatens to silence the truth.

There can be no good reason for Homeland Security to collect data on news media operations. The solicitation calls for monitoring of "media coverage in terms of content, volume, sentiment, geographical spread, top publications, media channels, reach, ... top posters, influencers, languages, momentum, circulation."

Trampling on the First Amendment is wrong and dangerous. Seeking to identify and label coverage is a slippery slope in a free and democratic society. Even at a time of heightened vigilance against foreign meddling in U.S. elections, a government list of "media influencers" can only serve to chill those who are contributing to the marketplace of ideas.

Syria raid raises an important question

John Crisp

The video of the aftermath of Bashar Assad's recent chemical attack on his own people displayed gruesome images that would challenge even the most committed pacifist to look the other way.

President Donald Trump's options were extremely limited. Between carefully calibrated airstrikes on one hand and the robust military action that would be necessary to depose Assad on the other, virtually no other possibilities presented themselves.

So on Friday night, Trump chose airstrikes. In coordination with Britain and France, more than 100 missiles were launched at a few Syrian targets that were involved in Assad's production of chemical weapons.

This was risky. Russia, a nuclear power, had threatened to respond to any attack, and it had the military assets in the area to do so. The accidental deaths of Russian or Iranian military personnel would have had unpredictable consequences.

But Saturday morning the New York Times was reporting a "palpable sense of relief" in Moscow. None of its interests in Syria had been affected, relieving Russia of an obligation to retaliate. On the same page the Times reported that the "Pentagon Declares Syria Strikes Successful." Trump tweeted, "Mission Accomplished!"

It was the perfect limited strike. It did not spark a wider conflict. Casualties were minimal. The strike's modest goals provided Moscow and Tehran an opportunity to back down gracefully from their rhetoric. Trump has an opportunity to brag. And Americans who were justifiably horrified by the images of children gasping for breath can comfort themselves with the consolation that at least we did something.

But, really, nothing has changed. Assad's chemical weapons capacity may have suffered a setback, but Lt. General Kenneth McKenzie, the Pentagon's Joint Staff director, concedes that "there's still a residual element of the Syrian program that's out there...I'm not going to say that they're going to be unable to continue to conduct a chemical attack in the future."

And by Saturday morning an unverified video was released showing Bashar Assad, in suit and tie and briefcase in hand, going to work as usual.

Of course. Our faith in the effectiveness of limited airstrikes like last Friday's is unfounded. Assad is in a fight for his life, and the idea that we can teach him a lesson that will dissuade him from the future use of such weapons is far-fetched.

Further, Friday's attack ignores the suffering that can be imposed on innocents by conventional weapons that, for some reason, don't raise our moral hackles in the way that chemical weapons do. With or without chemical weapons, as long as the Syrian civil war continues, women and children will be burned, crushed, buried alive and ripped by shrapnel until Assad has reclaimed full control of the country.

And in some respects, our barely tactical, non-strategic attack last Friday merely prolongs the suffering by maintaining the illusion that we have the power to influence the state of affairs in this part of the Middle East.

It fails to take into account an unwelcome but inevitable reality: Iran has won this round as the result of a series of events that began in March 2003, when the U.S. invaded Iraq. At some point the rise of Iran became inevitable. It's too bad that the Russians got involved, but our inept interference in the Syrian civil war probably made that inevitable, as well.

In any case, we can hope that the power standoff between Shia Iran and Sunni Saudi Arabia will provide enough anxious equilibrium and temporary stability to stop Assad's assault on his own people and to suck the wind out of ISIS.

We have a passing interest in the Kurds — I'd advise them not to depend on us too much — and certainly an abiding and crucial interest in the security of Israel.

So this is not the best outcome that we could imagine, but it is the one that is in place. We're left with this question: What, in our history of intervention in complex parts of the world since 1945, led us to believe that we could have made things turn out differently with military force?

Move to Division II no sweat for Getford

Former Umatilla High, LSSC baseball standout continues solid hitting

By Frank Jolley
frank.jolley@dailycommercial.com

Jesse Getford is a model of consistency over the past two seasons.

The former Umatilla High School baseball standout is hitting a solid .270 in his first season at Southern Wesleyan University in Central, South Carolina.

He also has seven homers and 34 RBIs in 43 games with the Warriors, an NCAA Division II program. Despite not being known as a speed burner on the basepaths, Getford has also managed five stolen bases in five attempts.

And Getford likely will add to his stats in Southern Wesleyan's last four games of the season this week.

But, the comparison between Getford's numbers last year as a sophomore at Lake-Sumter State College and this season is striking. As a sophomore with the Lakehawks, Getford hit .269 with four homers and 24 RBIs — with five stolen bases.

Getford has played in all but two games this season, almost all at third base. Among players with at least 30 at bats, Getford is third on the Southern Wesleyan roster with a .473 slugging percentage.

Getford's had three, three-hit games in his first year with the Warriors.

He went 3 for 4 with a homer, two RBIs and three runs scored on Feb. 16 in a 12-8 win against Virginia-Wise. A day later, Getford proved that effort was no fluke by going 3 for 6 with an RBI, two doubles and two runs scored in a 12-11 loss to Virginia-Wise.

And on March 30, Getford went 3 for 4 in a 13-5 win against Barton. His three-hit games were among the eight multi-hit efforts for Getford this season.

Busch passes Larson to win at Bristol

By Steve Reed
The Associated Press

BRISTOL, Tenn. — Kyle Busch was all smiles and Kyle Larson was all scowls.

Busch passed Larson with five laps remaining at Bristol Motor Speedway on Monday to win his second straight Cup Series race, culminating a rain-delayed weekend when temperatures dipped into the high 30s.

Busch celebrated by thrusting his arms in the air and with a traditional bow to the crowd on top of his No. 18 Toyota while the snow began falling — a fitting end to a long weather-stalled weekend.

Busch said after the race that he didn't have the best car, but "we had the best car right at the end."

The loss left Larson, who led a race-high 200 laps, extremely frustrated.

"I feel like every time I race here I almost get a win," Larson said of his second-place finish. "I've been beat by Kyle (Busch) about every time I race here, too, so that gets frustrating after a while."

It was Busch's 45th career Cup Series win, moving him ahead of Bill Elliott into sole possession of 16th place.

It also was his seventh win at Bristol, while Larson has yet to win at the half-mile track.

Coincidentally, Busch won with the aid of longtime nemesis Brad Keselowski, who wrecked with 30 laps left, bringing out the caution flag.

MDCA hammers out six hits in 5-0 win against Mount Dora

By Frank Jolley

MOUNT DORA — Josh Swearingen had the Mount Dora Christian Academy softball team in the batting cage before Monday's game against crosstown rival Mount Dora.

Nearly three hours before game time.

Swearingen was looking to help the Bulldogs snap out of their collective hitting woes, a slump the Bulldogs have been mired in for at least their last four games – a stretch in which they are 2-2. With the district playoffs about a week away and regionals looming after that, the MDCA coach is concerned about chilly bats at the wrong time.

"You always hope this happens at the start of the year, not now," said Swearingen. "Slumps are part

Linden wins marathon, 1st US woman since '85

Desiree Linden, of Washington, Mich., celebrates after winning the women's division of the 122nd Boston Marathon on Monday in Boston. She is the first American woman to win the race since 1985. [CHARLES KRUPA/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS]

The Associated Press

BOSTON — After slogging through just a few miles of icy rain and a near-gale headwind that made her feel like she was running in place, Desiree Linden decided she'd seen enough of the Boston Marathon for another year.

"My hands were freezing, and there are times where you were just stood up by the wind. It was comical how slow you were going, and how far you still had to go," Linden said.

"At six miles I was thinking, 'No way, this is not my day,'" she said. "Then you break the tape and you're like, 'This is not what I expected today.'"

A two-time Olympian and the 2011 Boston Marathon runner-up, Linden decided to stick around, outlasting the weather and the rest of the field to win the race's 122nd edition on Monday in 2 hours, 39 minutes, 54 seconds. That was more than four minutes better than second-place finisher Sarah Sellers but the slowest time for a women's winner in Boston since 1978.

IN BRIEF

PITTSBURGH
Longtime Steelers LB Harrison retires again

James Harrison is taking another shot at retirement, and this time it's likely to stick for the longtime Pittsburgh Steelers linebacker.

The five-time Pro Bowler, two-time All Pro and 2008 NFL Defensive Player of the Year announced on Instagram early Monday he is stepping away from the game following a 15-year career that saw him go from undrafted free agent to one of the most feared players in the league.

Harrison, 39, posted a collage of pictures of his two sons and noted he's "missed way too much for way too long ... and I'm done."

Harrison played nearly his entire career with the Steelers, collecting 80.5 of his 84.5 career sacks while wearing black and gold, a franchise record. He spent the 2013 season in Cincinnati and signed with New England late last season, appearing in all three playoff games for the Patriots, including their Super Bowl loss to Philadelphia.

This is the second time Harrison has called it quits. He retired briefly in September 2014 only to be lured back to the Steelers.

PHILADELPHIA
76ers' leading scorer, Hall of Famer Greer dies

Hal Greer, a Hall of Fame guard and the Philadelphia 76ers' career leading scorer, has died.

The Sixers said Greer died Saturday night in Arizona after a brief illness. He was 81.

Greer spent 15 seasons with the Syracuse Nationals and Philadelphia 76ers and finished his career with a record 21,586 points. He's also the 76ers' career leader in field goals, field goals attempted, games and minutes played.

Greer was the first player to have his number retired (15) by the 76ers in 1976. Greer also became the first player to be honored with a sculpture on 76ers Legends Walk at the team training complex in 2017.

ENGLEWOOD, COLO.
Broncos release running back C.J. Anderson

C.J. Anderson is leaving Denver with a million memories, a Super Bowl ring and no hard feelings.

"It's business, I understand it," Anderson told The Associated Press on Monday after he was released by the Denver Broncos. "I've been here five years and it came to an end. So, I'm excited for the next opportunity."

Where that is, "I don't know," Anderson said. "I have no clue at all."

Possible landing spots include Miami, where Dolphins coach Adam Gase offered him a four-year, $18 million deal in 2016 that Denver matched, and New England, where Patriots coach Bill Belichick is also a big fan.

GETFORD

Getford and the Warriors will close out the regular season with a game on Tuesday at Young Harris College in Georgia and a three-game set beginning Friday against Emmanuel College in Franklin Springs, Georgia.

Elicia D'Orazio, Marshall University

Elicia D'Orazio has put together a memorable softball career at the next level.

A former standout at Montverde Academy, D'Orazio, arguably, is the best base stealer in Marshall University history and is also one of the best in college history.

She's also a dangerous threat in the batter's box.

D'Orazio, a senior with the Thundering Herd, is hitting .365 with six RBIs for Marshall this season. She leads the team with 54 hits and is 38-of-44 in stolen base attempts to start the week.

As a junior at Marshall, D'Orazio led the nation with an average of 1.09 steals per game. She finished the season with 59 steals, which was 13th best in NCAA history and established new season marks at Marshall and in Conference USA.

She also managed a career high in batting average (.397) and in a number of other categories, including hits, runs scored, total bases and slugging percentage.

D'Orazio played for Team Puerto Rico at the Canada Cup in 2017 and helped her team to a 5-3 record.

During the tournament, she hit .444 and scored eight runs while stealing five bases.

Next up for Marshall is a doubleheader against James Madison on Wednesday and a three-game set beginning Saturday at Western Kentucky.

Mackenzie Reeves, Lake-Sumter State College

Reeves

Mackenzie Reeves' first season in college has featured its share of highlights.

The Leesburg High School graduate has helped Lake-Sumter State College put together one of the school's best softball seasons in school history. Heading into Monday's double-header against Santa Fe College, the Lakehawks had a 30-27 record — the first time LSSC had won 30 games since 1999 — and were in the running for a postseason berth.

And Reeves took a .211 batting average with two homers and 11 RBIs into Monday's regular-season finale.

She was second on the team in homers and seventh in RBIs.

Reeves has a pair of two-hit games this season. She went 2 for 2 with a homer and two RBIs on Jan. 26 in a 7-6 win against Georgia Highlands College and was 2 for 2 with a homer and four RBIs on March 8 against Wallace State Community College-Hanceville.

Larson appeared to have the car to beat on Monday, running well ahead of the pack on long green flag runs. But after Busch took on tires during the yellow flag stop, he knew he was back in the race with 22 laps to go. He finally caught Larson with five laps left, bumped him out of the way and scooted by.

Larson made a late charge but couldn't catch him.

"When it comes down to crunch time you gotta go," Busch said.

Asked if Keselowski had moved up on his list of favorites, Busch laughed and said, "That's pushing it too far."

"I kind felt bad for him, maybe that much," Busch said, pinching his thumb and index finger close together. "But it certainly helped our cause. So it was much appreciated, let's go with that."

Larson was leading when the race was postponed Sunday with 296 laps remaining after being delayed several times because of rain. The race also was delayed Monday for about 35 minutes, but the cars finally got back on the track after the rain and sleet subsided.

Larson said he wasn't sure why his car got loose late in the race, which allowed Busch to get by him.

"I just really didn't have any grip," Larson said. "I thought it would tighten up for me and I could get going, but it never really did and I was just really loose. I hate that I didn't win. It's another one at Bristol."

MARATHON

Yuki Kawauchi splashed through the pelting rain, temperatures in the mid-30s and wind that gusted as high as 32 mph to win the men's race, passing defending champion Geoffrey Kirui in Kenmore Square to earn Japan's first Boston title since 1987 and the $150,000 first prize.

Wearing a white windbreaker that was drenched and billowing in the wind, Kirui slowed and stumbled across the Copley Square finish line in second, 2:25 back, followed by Shadrack Biwott and three other U.S. men. The winning time of 2:15:58 and was the slowest since Jack Fultz overcame temperatures in the high 90s in 1976.

"For me, it's the best conditions possible," said Kawauchi, who competed in 12 marathons last year — six times the usual number for an elite runner — and also works as a school administrator.

Wheelchair winners Marcel Hug of Switzerland and American Tatyana McFadden, both five-time champions, said they were unable to see through the spray that spun off their wheels.

SOFTBALL

of the game. Nobody is going to hit every game and the only real way to get out of them is to let the girls hit their way out, so we're trying to give them some extra time in the cages.

"We're not that far off ... a lot of our girls are hitting the ball hard, but they're hitting the ball right at people."

MDCA entered Monday's game ranked sixth in the Class 2A with a 15-5 record and its last two losses – Class 9A Oviedo and Class 3A Belle Isle Cornerstone Charter – were against larger teams with a combined record of 28-18.

The Bulldogs have battered their opposition for much of this season, outscoring opponents 196-65, but the timing of his team's slump has Swearingen concerned.

To try and add a spark to the lineup, Swearingen moved around his batting order against the Hurricanes. Emily Allen, normally the second hitter in the batting order, was moved down to the fifth spot and the sixth and seventh hitters were bumped a spot.

"Emily has been hitting the ball great all season, but because she was hitting second, we were taking the bat out of her hands a lot with sacrifice bunts," said Swearingen.

"Hopefully, by changing up the batting order, we'll be able to take advantage of her hot hitting and strengthen the bottom part of our order, as well."

And even though the Bulldogs were favored against Mount Dora (5-13), Swearingen's charges did not take the Hurricanes lightly. MDCA approached the pregame batting practice as if it were preparing for a state Final Four game.

"Our (hitting slump) is a big concern," said Megan Wright, a transfer from Mount Dora. "Hitting is how you score in this game. We just have to keep working at it and get out of our heads."

Added catcher Faith Musselwhite, who has helped the Bulldogs reach the Class 2A Final Four in each of the past two seasons, "We're definitely working to get our hitting going again. We work on hitting all the time and I think we're going to start coming around."

For Swearingen, Musselwhite's prediction can't come soon enough.

And Monday might've offered him an indication the Bulldogs' frosty bats are beginning to thaw. MDCA pounded out six hits, including four over the final two innings in a 5-0 win.

Casey Allen and Emily Allen had two hits apiece. Musselwhite and Casey Allen hit towering doubles off the left-field fence in the fourth and sixth innings, respectively, and the Bulldogs took advantage of a dropped third strike with two outs in the sixth inning to score four unearned runs and put the game on ice behind a dominant effort in the circle by Ari Miller.

Miller permitted only three hits and did not allow a runner past second base.

The sophomore struck out 12.

Cheyenne Atkinson had two of the Hurricanes' three hits. Mount Dora pitcher Olivia Chestnut took the loss, giving up just six hits after holding the Bulldogs hitless three innings and allowed no earned runs.

ROUNDUP/MATCHUPS

Colorado 6, Pittsburgh 2: Trevor Story drilled a three-run home runerman Marquez pitched six effective innings and the Rockies kept their road surge going with a win over the Pirates. Story bounced back from a miserable series in Washington by going 2 for 3 and driving in three runs, all of them coming when he sent a pitch from Steven Brault into the bleachers. Charlie Blackmon added his team-leading seventh home run of the season for Colorado. The Rockies have won five of six overall and are 8-2 in their last 10 games away from Coors Field.

THIS DATE IN BASEBALL

1892: In the first Sunday game in National League history, Cincinnati defeated St. Louis 5-1.
1924: Baby Doll Jacobson of the St. Louis Browns hit for the cycle in a 6-3 loss at the Chicago White Sox.
1932: New York first baseman Bill Terry tied an NL record with 21 putouts, and the Giants beat Boston 5-0 behind Hal Schumacher's two-hitter.
1951: In his first major league game, Mickey Mantle went 1-for-4 in the New York Yankees' 5-0 victory over the Boston Red Sox.
1953: Mickey Mantle cleared the bleachers at Griffith Stadium with a 565-foot home run off Chuck Stobbs. The shot came in the fifth inning of a 7-3 win over the Senators.
1964: The New York Mets lost their first game at Shea Stadium. They were beaten 4-3 by the Pirates, with Pittsburgh's Willie Stargell hitting the first homer at Shea.
1969: Bill Stoneman of Montreal pitched a 7-0 no-hitter against the Philadelphia Phillies in the 10th game of the Expos' existence.
1976: Mike Schmidt of the Philadelphia Phillies hit four consecutive home runs and a single in an 18-16, 10-inning victory over the Cubs in Wrigley Field. Hitting .167 going into the game, he connected twice off Rick Reuschel, once off Rick's brother, Paul, and once off Darold Knowles. He drove in eight runs.
2001: Barry Bonds became the 17th major leaguer to hit 500 home runs. Bonds' two-run, eighth-inning drive off Terry Adams went into San Francisco Bay to lead the Giants over the Los Angeles Dodgers 3-2.
2008: Troy Tulowitzki's RBI double with two outs in the 22nd inning scored Willy Taveras and the Colorado Rockies beat the San Diego Padres 2-1 in the longest game in the majors in nearly 15 years, a 6-hour, 16-minute marathon.

Bride accuses mom of using wedding to spotlight herself

DEAR ABBY: Once I announced my engagement, my already thin, fit mother went on a diet and lost 20 pounds. My weight has always been an issue with her, and I can't believe she would draw attention to it in this way.

She called me a bridezilla because I told her I think she's trying to showboat my wedding because she's the one with the insecurity issues. I would have been happy to elope, but she insisted on this big wedding to show off to her friends and "recoup the gifts she gave to their kids."

How do we get through the next six months and keep our already fragile relationship intact? -- DAUGHTER OF MOMZILLA

DEAR DAUGHTER: Weddings are supposed to be about the happy couple, not a means for a third party to "recoup" gifts she gave to her friends' children. If you feel you would be happier eloping rather than be miserable "going on with the show," that's what you and your fiance should do. However, if you do decide to go through with the wedding, you and your mother should agree there will be no further discussion about weight -- hers or yours. Period.

DEAR ABBY: I came into work Monday morning to the news that one of my co-workers had passed away the day before from a massive heart attack. I was shocked and saddened. I was also appalled that my employer posted her death on Facebook less than 24 hours later.

I don't feel that this is an appropriate forum to announce a death, and I also don't think it was my employer's responsibility to notify the world. In my opinion, the family should notify the public if they choose. Are there any rules of etiquette regarding social media and announcing a co-worker's death? -- SAD NEWS IN CALIFORNIA

DEAR SAD NEWS: Of course it is the prerogative of family members to post that kind of news. Ideally, your employer should have waited an extra day or two to allow the family to get the word out. However, unless a family member complained to you about what your employer did, you shouldn't be so quick to judge.

While you have experienced a shocking loss, your boss has, too, particularly if the employee was a longtime one. That he/she shared it on social media isn't surprising these days, considering how much information is being posted online, nor was it a breach of etiquette.

DEAR ABBY: I have been with my boyfriend nearly 19 years, and we both agree that we don't want marriage. I just found out that for the last nine months he has been seeing someone else on his lunch break.

He says he loves me and doesn't want to lose me, but he loves her, too, and she is his friend. He said he would stop the affair, but because she's his friend, he won't stop texting and seeing her "as a friend."

Should I trust what he is saying? We don't have kids together, but we raised his two and my one together as our own. -- SILENT PAIN

DEAR PAIN: Should you trust that your boyfriend won't resume the affair with his "friend" -- or that he has stopped it? I don't think so. Although the two of you aren't formally married, you have had an understanding that lasted almost 19 years, and he has breached it. You now must decide whether you want to be part of a "threesome," and for that, you have my sympathy.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♠	Pass

Opening lead — queen of diamonds.

If you toss a coin in the air, it is even money it will come down heads. If you toss two coins, however, it is 3-to-1 that they will not both come down heads. With three coins, the odds become 7-to-1.

Although it is not essential for a competent bridge player to be able to compute various probabilities precisely, it is nevertheless helpful in many hands to be generally familiar with the fundamental principles of chance.

Bridge is, after all, a game of probabilities, and the player who consistently adheres to the percentages will come out well ahead in the long run.

Consider this deal where South was in four spades. He won the diamond lead and led a spade to the jack, losing to the ace. East returned a diamond to declarer's king. After drawing another round of trumps, South led a heart to the queen, losing to the king. He then lost a diamond and a club to go down one.

Declarer erred by staking the outcome strictly on a simple heart finesse. In effect, he gave himself only a 50 percent chance to make the contract, since it was even money whether East or West had the king of hearts.

But he would have had a 3-to-1 chance in his favor if he had taken the queen-of-hearts finesse at trick two, instead of later on. If it won, 10 tricks would have been assured.

Suppose, however, the queen lost to the king, as in the actual deal. South could then win the diamond return, lead another heart to dummy and finesse the ten. If West held the jack, the finesse would succeed, and South could then dispose of his diamond loser on the ace of hearts to make the contract.

By adopting this method of play, declarer gives himself two chances to get home safely instead of just one. He combines two even-money shots, which, as in the case of the coins, make him a 3-to-1 favorite.

Tomorrow: Searching beneath the surface.

›› HOROSCOPES

HAPPY BIRTHDAY FOR TUESDAY, APRIL 17, 2018: This year you get invitations to a lot of events from your friends and associates. You need to know that you will land on your feet, though at times you might wonder how this is possible. If you are single, your allure is high, and you want a good relationship. You will meet someone this year who intrigues you. If you are attached, if you remain mellow and steadfast, your sweetie will be more likely to agree with you. You will experience more of an attraction between the two of you as a result. TAURUS understands you.

ARIES (MARCH 21-APRIL 19) You wake up in a dreamlike state, and will carry some of your imaginative fantasies into your day. You even might share an idea or two with others. A respected authority figure pushes his or her way into a conversation.

TAURUS (APRIL 20-MAY 20) The Moon in your sign highlights you, your expectations and your personality. If you can get past your insecurities, you will be able to manifest a particular desire or wish. A change of plans or information occurs involving matters at a distance.

GEMINI (MAY 21-JUNE 20) You could feel abandoned by a set of circumstances that no longer suit you. Your smiling ways and open dialogue bring forth an important realization. You might not be sure how to handle an emerging situation. Just take your time.

CANCER (JUNE 21-JULY 22) You could feel overwhelmed by the possibility of a fast change. You will be sensing a lot of energy around you, and might not be sure what the best way to handle it is. Be more open with a partner or loved one, and he or she is likely to stop being so distant.

LEO (JULY 23-AUG. 22) You could be approaching a situation carelessly. A partner reacts to you and your wild ideas. You might need to settle in, rather than cause more problems. A situation around your home life could create havoc, yet somehow it will work out well for you.

VIRGO (AUG. 23-SEPT. 22) Say "yes" to any kind of mental activity. Listen to what is happening, but also do some research to see if the words ring true. You alone can make that judgment. Open up through detachment, and you'll hear many different perspectives.

LIBRA (SEPT. 23-OCT. 22) You could be tired from all the recent activity. Your partner and associates can't seem to leave you alone, and they claim to need you for various reasons. Remain responsive, but know that you will have to say "enough is enough" at some point.

SCORPIO (OCT. 23-NOV. 21) You probably are waiting for a loved one to make the first move. However, consider that this person might be doing the same thing. Ask yourself whether it is worth it to play this game. Let go, and do whatever your heart desires!

SAGITTARIUS (NOV. 22-DEC. 21) You might have given up pushing so hard for now. You could try to persuade someone else to accept your ideas through some flattery. If you follow your instincts, you will land on your feet. Be careful with your finances, as you could create havoc.

CAPRICORN (DEC. 22-JAN. 19) You might see a downside to a recent agreement. You will need to give yourself some space to decide which way you should go. Your caring attitude emerges when dealing with a new friend. Recognize how creative you can be.

AQUARIUS (JAN. 20-FEB. 18) You might want to have some time to work through a problem. Understand what is going on at home and in your work life. The contrast between them could be shocking. Optimism surrounds a family member.

PISCES (FEB. 19-MARCH 20) Reach out to a loved one who seems to want your input. Remain more sensitive to this person's feelings for a while. Let go of needing to have certain situations go your way. Indulge a friend who wants to call the shots.

›› TODAY IN HISTORY

TODAY IS TUESDAY, APRIL 17, the 107th day of 2018. There are 258 days left in the year.

TODAY'S HIGHLIGHT IN HISTORY:

On April 17, 1961, some 1,500 CIA-trained Cuban exiles launched the disastrous Bay of Pigs invasion of Cuba in an attempt to topple Fidel Castro, whose forces crushed the incursion by the third day.

ON THIS DATE:

In 1937, cartoon character Daffy Duck made his debut in the Warner Bros. animated short "Porky's Duck Hunt," directed by Tex Avery.

In 1941, Yugoslavia surrendered to Germany during World War II.

In 1964, Geraldine "Jerrie" Mock became the first woman to complete a solo airplane trip around the world as she returned to Columbus, Ohio, after 29 1/2 days in her Cessna 180.

In 1970, Apollo 13 astronauts James A. Lovell, Fred W. Haise and Jack Swigert splashed down safely in the Pacific, four days after a ruptured oxygen tank crippled their spacecraft while en route to the moon.

In 1972, the Boston Marathon allowed women to compete for the first time; Nina Kuscsik was the first officially recognized women's champion, with a time of 3:10:26.

In 1993, a federal jury in Los Angeles convicted two former police officers of violating the civil rights of beaten motorist Rodney King; two other officers were acquitted.
