Drug-planting probe intensifies

People share their stories about officer

By Jeff Burlew

MARIANNA — They were heading down the back roads of Jackson County in their beat-up old Camry when they passed a Sheriff's Office patrol car coming from the other direction.

On their way to a wedding, Jeffrey Helms and his girlfriend April Middleton watched from rear view mirrors as the deputy turned around and accelerated behind them with lights flashing.

When the deputy got out of his car, Middleton recognized him instantly from her days waiting tables in Marianna. It was Zachary Wester, a 26-year-old Jackson County deputy who happened to come from a prominent law enforcement family.

Middleton and Helms weren't too worried. They'd had run-ins with the law over drugs before, but they knew they didn't have anything on them at the time. There were scales in the car, but nothing

Faced with crisis, chief finds no easy fix in Central America

By Nick Miroff
The Washington Post

GUATEMALA CITY - Kevin McAleenan, the United States' top border security official, was halfway through a three-country tour of Central America, worriedly looking at his phone.

Photos sent by Border Patrol agents in Arizona showed a long column of Guatemalan migrants, mostly women and children, trudging through the desert single file as they were taken into custody.

"Look at that," McAleenan said, scrolling through images that resembled the refugee caravans of Syria, or Myanmar, not the mountains west of Tucson. "One hundred seventy people," he said.

Groups of Central Americans nearly that large had been coming across the Rio Grande in South Texas in recent months, turning themselves in and claiming

Las Vegas pauses but looks ahead

By Tim Dahlberg
The Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — A small bouquet of dried flowers was wedged inside the padlock on Gate 5 of the killing ground that was the Route 91 Harvest Festival one recent day, the only visible reminder that it was the site of the worst mass shooting in modern American history.

A peek inside the chain-link fence, covered in green sheeting to keep out prying eyes, revealed a sprawling patch of asphalt and little else. Towering above were the gold windows of the Mandalay Bay, where a gambler spent the last minutes of his life in room 32-135 taking the lives of 58 others in a meticulously planned slaughter.

Around Las Vegas, there are scattered remembrances of the horrors of that night a year ago.

Almost every week, there's another court-ordered release of police body-camera videos that provide flashbacks to the night the gunman turned the fun of the glittering Las Vegas Strip into a nightmare of death and despair. And lawsuits by MGM Resorts International to force survivors to give up their right to sue the casino company that owns Mandalay Bay opened fresh wounds over the summer.

But the "Vegas Strong" T-shirts and car stickers have largely been put away. The original handmade white crosses for each victim have long since been taken away from the "Welcome to Fabulous Las Vegas" sign to eventually reside in a museum in neighboring Henderson, though some new ones were brought in for the anniversary.

There has been no closure, at least officially. Authorities say they will likely never be able to determine what it was that turned a high-limit video poker player into a mass murderer.

But in a city that has always looked ahead relentlessly, there's not a lot of time devoted to reflection. Even while pausing to remember the victims on the anniversary of the shooting, Las Vegas moves forward.

"A lot of the feeling among people is more, 'Let's move on,'" said Pauline Ng Lee, a community activist and chairwoman of the Nevada Republican Men's Club. "We don't have a lot of long traditions here. You can see it with buildings. Casinos come up, casinos get knocked down. People tend to look forward, not back."

Indeed, a look out one side of the high windows of the Mandalay Bay shows the normal sight of dozens of tourists lined up to have their pictures taken in front of the Welcome to Las Vegas sign. A glance to the left draws the eye to the vacated and somber site of the shooting on 15 acres of valuable Las Vegas Strip land that for the foreseeable future simply cannot be used for anything.

Owner MGM Resorts International has no plans for the venue and no timeline for making any decisions.

Meanwhile, on the other side of the hotel, work goes on around the clock on a new $1.9 billion stadium that will be the home of the NFL's Las Vegas Raiders beginning in 2020. It's a reminder that Las Vegas moves on like it always has, through the good times and the bad.

It's not that the city has forgotten the shooting or the victims. The white crosses adorned with pictures of those killed were moved recently for the anniversary to the rotunda of the Clark County government building, accompanying a heart-wrenching display of paintings of each person.

The victims are portrayed as surviving relatives wanted them to be. One young woman is wearing a Philadelphia Eagles jersey; a man is strumming a guitar. There's a police officer in his uniform, and a man smiling while enjoying a day on the beach.

Gathered together for one night to enjoy country music , they are now linked together in eternity.

There's a makeshift memorial garden downtown, just around the corner from an adult bookstore, where painted stones and pictures hung in newly planted trees tell stories of lives lost.

"Rest easy with my grammy, Beebra," read the inscription on one framed picture of a smiling woman and her young children.

On a recent day, a few workers were digging a hole for a 3,000-pound rock with the victims' initials. A permanent memorial will eventually be located elsewhere — no word from MGM on what will happen to the shooting site itself — but has yet to be planned and is likely years away.

Funeral services set for child who disappeared at park

Funeral services have been set for a 6-year-old North Carolina boy who went missing at a park and was found dead after an extensive search.

According to an obituary , a visitation for Maddox Ritch will be held Thursday at a funeral home in Huntersville, followed by a funeral service the next day. The burial will be private.

The boy's father has said Maddox ran off as he and a friend walked at Rankin Lake Park in Gastonia Sept. 22. Ian Ritch has said he couldn't catch up with his son, who was autistic, because he has neuropathy in his feet due to diabetes.

Maddox's body was found in a creek slightly more than a mile east of the park after days of searching. An investigation is ongoing.

Gun raffle for soccer team bothers ex-students

A gun raffle for a Georgia high school soccer team has drawn criticism from former students.

Some former students of Dodge County High School are bothered after learning through Facebook that 30 guns were being raffled in September to benefit the soccer team, the Telegraph of Macon reported . An organizer of the raffle said they are trying to raise money to help with uniforms and feed kids on out-of-town trips.

Organizers believe the raffle is a great idea, but alumna including Crystal Velasquez and Lena Smith Nations are opposed to it.

Proposal on Colorado peak leads to altitude issues

A Texas man found a scenic location in the Colorado mountains to propose to his girlfriend, but the couple ran into trouble on the way down.

The Boulder County sheriff's office says 27-year-old Joshua Mason of Denton, Texas, took 28-year-old Katie Davis on a hike Saturday to Jasper Peak at an elevation of nearly 13,000 feet.

They got lost as darkness fell.

The couple were showing signs of altitude sickness and dehydration when a hiker found them. He led them to his camp and gave them food, water and a place to warm up. Another camper called for help.

ANKARA, TURKEY
Boat capsizes off Turkey's Aegean coast, 5 migrants killed

Turkey's state-run news agency says a boat carrying migrants has capsized off Turkey's northern Aegean coast, killing at least five people.

The capsizing occurred as a rare and powerful Mediterranean storm is causing torrential rains in parts of Greece and Turkey.

The Anadolu Agency said the rubber boat capsized Sunday off the town of Enez in Edirne province. The town is not far from the northern Greek coastal town of Alexandroupolis.

It said it was not immediately clear how many migrants were on the boat and rescue crews were scouring the area for possible survivors or more bodies.

LONDON
UK to send troops to Arctic, cites concerns about Russia

Britain's defense secretary says the U.K. plans to boost its military presence in the Arctic next year amid concerns about increasing Russian aggression.

Gavin Williamson told The Sunday Telegraph that the government is preparing a "defense Arctic strategy" that would deploy 800 army and marine commandos to Norway in 2019 and establish a new military base there.

The newspaper says Britain's actions are prompted partly by anticipation that Russia will keep expanding its presence in the Arctic and of a rush for the region's oil as polar ice melts due to climate change.

MIGRANTS

a fear of return to prevent their quick deportation. Now it was happening in Arizona.

McAleenan, the commissioner of U.S. Customs and Border Protection, traveled last week to Central America's Northern Triangle - Guatemala, Honduras and El Salvador - to seek their governments' help and bring attention to a migration surge he has declared "a crisis."

But instead of quick solutions, his trip mostly highlighted the deep structural forces threatening to send even more migrants north: hunger, joblessness and the gravitational pull of the American economy. The Trump administration has already tried to stop them with one of the harshest measures in its tool kit - separating parents from their children - and the strategy failed.

In the three months since President Donald Trump halted the separations amid a public outcry, the trend it was intended to deter has gotten significantly worse. In August, 12,774 migrant family members were taken into custody along the Mexico border, a 38 percent jump from the previous month, and agents say September's numbers appear to be headed even higher.

Trump erupted earlier this year when border arrests skyrocketed, but on Friday he signed a spending package that did not include the billions he sought for construction of a wall between the United States and Mexico. The measure requires lawmakers to revisit the issue after the November elections.

The stream of families arriving at the border each week has left McAleenan and other Homeland Security officials making futile appeals to Congress to fix the problem, while maneuvering to detain migrant parents and children long enough for courts to process their immigration claims, which could take months.

In the meantime, parents who arrive with children and cite a fear of return are typically released from immigration custody within days of arrival. U.S. family detention centers don't have enough bed space to accommodate them, and U.S. courts are too clogged to process their cases within the 20-day period that children can be held in immigration jails.

"Our legal framework continues to act as a powerful magnet for families and children seeking a better life," McAleenan, who invited a small group of reporters on his trip, said in an interview. "As a result, transnational criminal organizations are profiting from a billion-dollar human smuggling industry that treats people like a disposable commodity."

"We see it every day on the border and at our ports of entry," he added. "High-speed chases, people being smuggled in tractor-trailers, and bodies found in the desert and on our riverbeds are all terrible symptoms of the same complicated problem. CBP cannot fix this problem by ourselves."

The number of Guatemalan migrants arrested at the U.S. border this year has nearly doubled as more indigenous villagers abandon the country's impoverished western highlands, where malnutrition rates exceed 65 percent, the highest in the Western Hemisphere, according to U.S. Agency for International Development data. That crisis has been exacerbated by consecutive years of drought and meager harvests.

Guatemalan community leaders told McAleenan that smuggling guides who charge $10,000 for a trip to the United States capitalize on the dysfunction of the American immigration system.

"They say that if you bring a child they'll let you into the United States and give you citizenship," said Dora Alonzo Quijivix, describing the sales pitch during a meeting McAleenan attended with indigenous leaders in Quetzaltenango, the largest city in the western highlands. "Now they're saying pregnant women who go will also get citizenship."

Quijivix said she's heard smugglers say this on local radio stations.

McAleenan told the group such claims were false and that the United States needed to do a better job of countering them. "There's no ability to stay in the U.S. if you bring a child with you," he said. "There's no ability to just stay if you are pregnant. But our court system is very slow, so you might actually have a false promise of being able to stay in the U.S. for a year or two before you are repatriated."

White House: FBI not limited in Kavanaugh probe

Administration says it is opposed to investigation that sets out as 'fishing expedition'

By Mike DeBonis

WASHINGTON — The White House has not placed any limits on the FBI investigation into claims of sexual assault leveled against Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh but is also opposed an open-ended "fishing expedition" that could take a broader look at Kavanaugh's credibility, two Trump administration officials said Sunday.

The statements, made by press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders and presidential counselor Kellyanne Conway in television interviews, followed reports that federal investigators are pursuing allegations made by two women but not a third, Julie Swetnick, who signed a sworn affidavit accusing Kavanaugh of sexually aggressive behavior and being present at parties where gang rapes occurred.

Trump himself tweeted late Saturday that he wanted the FBI "to interview whoever they deem appropriate, at their discretion."

Sanders said on "Fox News Sunday" that the White House is "not micromanaging this process" but also said an open-ended probe into Swetnick's claims and whether Kavanaugh may have misled lawmakers in his Senate Judiciary Committee testimony would not be acceptable.

"The Senate is dictating the terms. They laid out the request, and we've opened it up," she said, adding, "This can't become a fishing expedition like the Democrats would like to see it be."

Conway said on CNN's "State of the Union," "It's not meant to be a fishing expedition." She added that who will be interviewed was "up to the FBI" in its expanded background investigation into Kavanaugh.

The remarks Sunday added to the swirl of public confusion over the parameters of the FBI inquiry and who is setting them. The order to the FBI was signed by Trump but has not been made public, while the White House has sought to lay responsibility for the details on the Senate.

The only official description of parameters has come from Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, who said Friday the FBI probe would be no more than a week long and would be limited solely to "current credible allegations" against Kavanaugh. Grassley and other senators have provided few other specifics, and a committee spokesman declined to comment after Trump's tweet Saturday endorsing a broader approach.

Thursday's riveting hearing, featuring testimony from California professor Christine Blasey Ford about her allegations that Kavanaugh assaulted her when both were high school students in the early 1980s, prompted several wavering Republican senators to demand a more thorough federal probe of the alleged incident.

At the hearing, Kavanaugh angrily and categorically denied assaulting Ford or any other woman. Two others, Swetnick and Debbie Ramirez, have publicly come forward to accuse Kavanaugh of other sexual misconduct.

They pulled over in someone's driveway. Wester ordered them to get out of the car and onto the ground. It was the afternoon of Sept. 23, 2017. A small crowd of onlookers began to gather and gawk.

Wester said he smelled marijuana, which gave him probable cause to search the car without consent. After rifling around in the front and back seats, he went to his own vehicle for a few moments before coming back to search their car again.

Not long after that, he held up a clear film canister he claimed he found under the driver's seat.

"He said, 'Oh, what do we have here? You all need to be a little more careful,' "Middleton said. "And I said, 'Yeah, of who pulls us over. At this point I looked at (Helms) and he looked at me. And he was like, 'That's not ours.' And I said, 'Oh, I know. Believe me, I know.' "

The crystal substance from the baggie tested positive for methamphetamine and weighed more than 3 grams. Wester handcuffed Middleton and Helms and put them both in the back of his patrol car.

"I said, 'This is crazy,' " Middleton recalled. "This is just bull----. And (Helms) said, 'I'm about to go to prison.' "

After complaints about Wester surfaced in courthouse circles, the Florida Department of Law Enforcement opened an investigation Aug. 1. The probe is ongoing, and no charges have been filed. Prosecutors have said they're waiting for a final report from FDLE.

The allegations are that Wester was pulling over drivers — some with records, many unable to afford their own lawyers — and planting drugs in their cars before hauling them to jail. A number of the encounters were captured on Wester's own body camera, but it's unclear how many.

As the investigation unfolded, FDLE investigators briefed State Attorney Glenn Hess of the 14th Judicial Circuit. He was shown body camera footage in which Wester can be seen holding what appears to be a baggie in his hand before starting a search.

"I saw a video and I saw still photographs that caused me to do a whole lot of things that state attorneys usually don't do," Hess said in an interview with the Tallahassee Democrat.

Over recent days, a torrent of motions filed by Hess and Public Defender Mark Sims have been filed in Jackson Circuit Court. Charges have been dropped in at least 48 cases that were initiated by Wester or hinged on his testimony.

A Jackson County judge ordered sentences vacated for at least eight people locked up in prisons and other state correctional facilities across North Florida. He demanded at least five be returned to Jackson County and released immediately. In all, some 263 cases spanning a two-year period are under review, Hess said.

Betsy White, a noted civil rights and criminal defense attorney from Jacksonville, said Wester could face charges from official misconduct, a third-degree felony, to perjury, drug possession and even conspiracy if more people were involved. Under any scenario, if he's charged and convicted, he could face substantial time, she said.

She said there's been "great reluctance" among many law enforcement agencies to embrace body cameras, devices she said are key in exposing officer misconduct.

"Bad police officers do more damage to the community than we can ever know," White said. "They poison police/community relations and create distrust. So we should be glad that these types of events are coming to light. There can be no justification for this crime."

Sitting in the back of Wester's squad car, Middleton decided she'd take the fall for her man. He had a record, and she figured another drug charge would send him back to prison. She told Wester that he knew full well the film canister wasn't theirs.

"But since somebody has to take this charge," she said, "it was mine."

Wester arrested both on possession of methamphetamine and drug paraphernalia, according to court records. Helms was slapped with additional charges, including felony fleeing and eluding and reckless driving.

In arrest reports, Wester wrote that he pulled them over after noticing Helms wasn't wearing a seatbelt. He said he had to go more than 90 mph to catch up with the couple. But Middleton, in an interview, said none of that was true.

Wester also wrote in reports that Helms told him he was trying to "get away" because he had an unregistered tag and didn't want to get pulled over. Middleton conceded the car had an illegal plate.

The arrest report says Wester's body camera was running when he made the arrest. But it's unclear whether it still exists in evidence. Middleton went down to the Sheriff's Office to ask for the video and the reports and was told she'd get them.

Helms and Middleton were taken to the Jackson County jail after their roadside arrest. During their time behind bars, they each heard from other inmates who claimed Wester set them up, too.

"Their stories are exactly like ours," Middleton said.

On Feb. 15, Wester pulled a pickup truck over in the median of Highway 231 in Cottondale. He seemed friendly enough as he approached the truck and spoke with the driver, Teresa Odom. He engaged in affable chit chat with her and allowed her to answer her cell phone after it rang.

"Hi, how are you?" he said through the driver's side window. "Deputy Wester with the Jackson County Sheriff's Office. The reason for my stop is your brake lights — they work one minute and the next minute they don't work."

His body camera was on during the nearly 18-minute encounter. State Attorney Hess told the Democrat this month that the footage prompted him to "lose confidence" in Wester.

During the traffic stop, Wester asked whether there was anything in the car he should know about. "Absolutely nothing," she said before agreeing to a search.

"Alrighty," he said after opening the driver's side door. As he fumbled to put a pair of black gloves on, he can be seen holding what appears to be a plastic baggie in his left hand. Moments later, he produced a tiny white baggie from Odom's purse.

He didn't announce the discovery right away, even as another deputy stood nearby. He rummaged around in the truck another few minutes before finally confronting her.

"Oh, Ms. Odom, how about this?" the 6-foot-4 Wester asked as he walked toward her.

"That is not mine," she said emphatically. "No sir. No sir." Visibly stunned, she asked, "What is it?"

"I have an idea," Wester said. "We're going to test it."

"Oh, no," another deputy said. "Teresa, you're going to jail."

Odom, back on her cell phone, told someone on the other end that the baggie tested positive for meth.

"I guess I'm gonna go to jail," she said. "It damn sure ain't mine. I'm under arrest, OK. I love you."

Aside from the state attorney, few people are going on the record about the Wester case. Jackson County Sheriff Lou Roberts declined to comment. Public Defender Sims did not return a phone call.

The Democrat has been unable to reach Wester by phone or at his home off Highway 71 in Marianna. His lawyer, Steve Meadows of Panama City, who's the former state attorney for the circuit, didn't return a phone call either.

According to Wester's personnel file, he graduated from Sneads High School in 2010. He made the dean's list and was active in Future Farmers of America, he wrote on his job application. He had a clean record, aside from a traffic ticket.

He worked at Verizon Wireless stores in Marianna and Tallahassee and a Nissan dealership before enrolling at Chipola Law Enforcement Academy in 2014 and earning his certification the following year.

He followed in the career footsteps of his dad, Robbie Wester, a former Jackson County Sheriff's Office captain who worked under Meadows when he was state attorney. The elder Wester, who ran for sheriff in 2008, declined to talk on the record when reached by phone.

Wester worked as a deputy in Liberty County for a few months before he was hired in Jackson County in May 2016. Two high-ranking sheriff's officials said they knew him most of his life and "highly recommended" him for the job.

One local businesswoman wrote the Sheriff Office earlier this year to praise Wester and another deputy for their handling of a call about a threatening former employee.

"They left no stone unturned in their investigative efforts to determine the level of threat," she wrote. "Please extend our gratitude and appreciation to both deputies for their exemplary performance."

Wester described his skills on his job application, writing, "Ability to use good judgment and to problem solve, capacity for multi-tasking, ability to demonstrate courage and to take responsibility, ability to be resourceful and show initiative."

Odom was charged with possession of methamphetamine and drug paraphernalia, according to court records. She eventually pleaded no contest and was sentenced to four years of probation. Her sentence was vacated on this month.

Middleton spent a couple of weeks behind bars before she posted bail. Her charges were consolidated and she pleaded no contest Jan. 16 to a misdemeanor paraphernalia charge, according to court records. Prosecutors told her this month that the charges will be dismissed.

Helms spent more than a month in jail before pleading no contest to his most serious charges, according to court records. He was sentenced last month to 18 months in prison for those charges and a previous one, according to Florida Department of Correction records.

His charges from Wester's arrest were dropped this month. However, he remains incarcerated at the Hamilton Correctional Institution Annex in Jasper.

Middleton wants Helms released and Wester arrested. She said few people believed them when they proclaimed their innocence.

"It's unexplainable," she said. "Because you see it in the movies. You see it in TV shows. And you don't think it's going to happen in your hometown."

Wester lives next door to Helms' father. Helms' brother, Grady Helms, said Wester often made small talk with his dad when they were outside.

"The guy has been my dad's 'friendly' neighbor right next door and did this to his neighbor's son," he said. "Ain't that something? My dad — he didn't want to believe all this. He's believing it now. He knows now he was planting stuff on people."

APP

Panama City is also coming in spring 2019. The historic neighborhoods were awarded matching grants up to $5,000 for the app tours from the Florida Humanities Council.

The St. Andrews tour has audio snippets discussing notable points, including Oaks by the Bay Park and the St. Andrews Marina, and also gives Google map directions to different sites. App users can download it for free and start and stop the audio at any time.

For instance, the entry on the Panama City Publishing Company Museum explains the building was constructed in 1920 by George M. West, "credited as the founding father of Panama City," who managed newspaper printing. The building was purchased by the City of Panama City in 2006 and is now a museum.

"It speaks a lot about the pedestrian nature of the historic districts and how interested people are in the heritage and culture that we have here in the city," Destination Panama City President and CEO Jennifer Vigil said. "Panama City is well known for the role it played in some of the various military battles we had. It goes back to the salt works raid and ship building that went on during the world wars. ... As a coastal county, tourism is a huge draw and economic driver for all of us."

The downtown tour will "provide insight on how Panama City got its name, historic architecture and historic events," a news release stated. It will cover McKenzie Park, the Martin Theatre and Massalina Bayou.

A "kick-off" celebration for the new app will be held at the Panama City Publishing Museum, 1314 Beck Avenue, on October 6 at 2 p.m. The Hill in Apalachicola, Tallahassee and Pensacola are among the other Florida communities also on the app.

150 Years of 'Little Women'

Mini Fact: Louisa May Alcott was ambidextrous: She could write with both hands.

Do you have heroes who are fictional characters? Whether it's Harry or Hermione, Katniss or Gale, there are many boys and girls in books and movies today who are worthy of our admiration.

Louisa May Alcott

In 1867, there weren't so many female characters for girls to read about and admire. A wise publisher, Thomas Niles, thought girls would like to read about characters like themselves, so he wrote to a young author, Louisa May Alcott, to see if she would write a book for girls. "Never liked girls or knew many, except my sisters," Alcott wrote.

But Alcott did like to make money, so she set about writing the story of the March sisters, also known as "Little Women."

A year later, the first part of her famous book was published, with the second part following in January 1869. This week The Mini Page celebrates 150 years of "Little Women" and the author behind the classic.

Louisa's life

Louisa May Alcott was born in 1832 in Germantown, Pennsylvania. She grew up as one of four sisters. Their father, Bronson Alcott, was an educator and philosopher, and the family moved around a lot.

She and her sisters worked from an early age, as her father didn't make enough money to support the family. The girls sewed and took care of children, and Louisa wrote and sold stories and articles to make money.

The sisters

In "Little Women," Alcott, her sisters and their mother are the main characters. She named the girls Meg (her sister Anna), Jo (herself), Beth (Lizzie) and Amy (May). Their mother is known as Marmee.

While there are differences between the book and Alcott's real life, many of the events in the story come from actual facts. For example, in the book, Amy is an artist. In real life, May was also an artist.

Louisa and Jo

This picture of Jo, writing at her desk, appeared in part two of "Little Women."

The character Jo is different from others in the book. She is tall and sometimes clumsy, rather than small and ladylike. She likes to run and play sports. Her best friend is a neighbor boy, Laurie (short for Laurence), and as an adult, Jo is not interested in marrying. Jo thought boys were more free to be themselves than girls.

Alcott modeled Jo after herself; although Jo finally does marry in the book, Alcott herself never did. She took in her sister May's daughter after May died, and she loved her nieces and nephews, but she was not interested in having a husband.

After 'Little Women'

In her time, Louisa May Alcott became as popular as "Harry Potter" author J.K. Rowling is today, according to experts. Her book made her one of the wealthiest women in the United States.

In 1933, the first of many movies was made of the famous story.

Lessons of 'Little Women'

Alcott's book is about family and how the sisters worked together to help provide for each other. Her characters are all very different, but they love and support each other, especially through terrible times or conflicts.

May Alcott's drawing of Jo skating on a pond.

• "Rich or poor, we will keep together and be happy in one another." — The Marches

Readers also learn that there isn't just one way to be a girl ...

• "I'll try to be what Father loves to call me, a 'little woman,' and not be rough and wild but do my duty here instead of wanting to be somewhere else." — Jo

... and that family love is strong.

• "Don't let the sun go down upon your anger; forgive each other, help each other, and begin again tomorrow." — Marmee

Testing the politics of red tide science

Science is hard.

So is politics.

Science combined with politics is really hard.

Ask Michael Crosby, the chief executive officer of Sarasota-based Mote Marine Laboratory, who has been swept up in the politics of red tide science.

Red tides, including the episode that has ravaged the Southwest Florida coast this summer and threatens to linger, have long been the subject of study by Mote and other science-based organizations.

This isn't the first time harmful algal blooms have devastated marine life, decimated the tourist-based economy and caused respiratory ailments among residents and visitors. The 2005-06 and 1994-96 events, for example, had similar impacts.

But the current event, which has dissipated but not disappeared, has created an unprecedented level of public outrage and political reaction for at least four powerful reasons: the intensity of the outbreak and its impacts on wildlife and businesses; the popularity of social media, which is spreading images of tons of fish washed up onshore, as well as fact and fiction; dramatic photographs of bright, blue-green freshwater algae making their way from Lake Okeechobee to the Gulf of Mexico; an election year that features closely fought, high-profile campaigns for state and federal offices.

Red tides have put Mote Marine on the defensive in the past, due in part to widely held expectations that the research institute should have found a cure for the harmful algal blooms by now.

Tensions have been exacerbated recently as Gov. Rick Scott, whose commitment to limiting nutrient-level runoff has been questioned, proposed increased funding for research and testing by Mote and other organizations.

On Monday, when new state initiatives were unveiled during a press conference at Mote, Crosby was asked to reconcile the sudden political interest in red tide with regulatory and environmental decisions made in Florida during the past decade.

Caught between a rock and a hard place, Crosby responded truthfully yet defensively, warning against blaming individual politicians, including Scott, for red tide — a naturally occurring phenomenon observed for centuries.

Indeed, the conditions that created the freshwater blooms and fueled red tide have been brewing for decades.

But the challenge for Mote, credible environmental organizations, business interests and the public is to leverage the political outrage that has emerged to demonstrate the need for continued research aimed at pinpointing the most cost-effective strategies for minimizing red tide's effects.

Crosby on Monday said he applauded the "renewed focus" on red tide and "strategic" investments in research, no matter the timing and political season. We do too.

But, as those of us who have experienced previous red tides have witnessed, a serious threat to achieving these goals is the "out of sight (and smell), out of mind" syndrome.

Here is the question about the science of politics: Once this red tide dissipates and returns offshore, will currently outraged Floridians continue to demand change with the force that makes elected officials respond as if their political careers are at stake?

Tracking Trump's convoluted immigration policy

Jim Hightower

Racially and ethnically speaking, I'm not sure who I am: Irish, Black, Anglo, Native American, Italian? Yes ... and more. My father always said that our family was "Heinz 57," a zesty blend of 57 ingredients. Good enough for me!

One of America's great strengths is our highly diversified population, continually fueled by generations of immigrants who come here as refugees or who simply seek opportunity. Consider the example of Fredrich, a 16-year-old boy who fled his tiny German village, where he faced a dreary future of poverty. He arrived in Manhattan in 1885 with no money and little education. An unaccompanied minor, he was nonetheless greeted by America's open immigration policy of the time and welcomed into citizenship. The enterprising Friedrich soon prospered, eventually opening hotels and taverns.

And — God bless America — only three generations later, Friedrich Trump's grandson would become president of the USA!

But alas, grandbaby Donald would not have let Friedrich in. Indeed, he denigrates and has ruthlessly shut out modern-day immigrants like his grandfather, though such seekers are now more likely to be named Frederico and be poor migrants from Latin America. Donald Trump especially hates a process he calls "chain migration," whereby American citizens can obtain U.S. residency for their foreign relatives. "They bring their whole family with them," Trump repeatedly rants. "NOT ACCEPTABLE!" he barked.

But — psst — guess who just set aside his immigrant-bashing tantrums long enough to benefit his own family? Yes, The Donald. In August, the Slovenian parents of Trump's immigrant wife, Melania, quietly became American citizens through the "chain migration" process their son-in-law so loudly denounces as "not acceptable."

In June, Trump ordered an end to his own warped and politically disastrous policy of forcibly tearing terrified migrant children from the arms of their asylum-seeking parents. "I didn't like the sight or the feeling of families being separated," he declared self-righteously.

Motive aside, at least Trump's cruel separation policy has ended, meaning he — and we — no longer have to witness nightly coverage of shrieking toddlers being seized by border agents and incarcerated in chain-link child cages in federal warehouses. But wait: out of sight just means we don't see it. Some 500 of the 2,900 children who were snatched last spring are still in government custody, scared they'll never see their parents again and traumatized by the uncertainty of what'll happen to them.

Worse, more refugee children are being incarcerated by Trump's border agents every day as they seek asylum from the ongoing horrors of rapacious gang wars and starvation-level poverty in their Central American homelands. More than 12,000 migrant children are now being held out of sight and out of mind in our government's warehouses, military bases and sprawling "tent cities." And Trump is presently requesting money to lock up another 20,000 refuge-seeking children expected in the near future.

All this trauma and cost is the result of the Trumpeteer's inhumane and failed "zero-tolerance" policy meant to dissuade refugees. Rather than by rushing in hundreds of lawyers and judges to process the asylum requests and thereby deal with the humanitarian crisis they created, Trump and his rabidly anti-immigrant ideologues are taxing us by building more jails for refugees, while also openly violating the law that says immigrant children can't be locked up for more than 20 days.

In TrumpWorld, integrity and consistency aren't virtues. All that matters is "What's in it for me right now."

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Stop with the junk mail

I would like to cover a couple of subjects that have recently presented themselves to me.

I am a 20 year retiree from the U.S.A.F. who retired at the ripe old age of 37. A few years ago I was lucky enough to retire again at the age of 62 to be able to care for my wife of 46 years. Subject number one pertains to the amount of junk mail I receive daily. I will soon be turning 65 this November and have already received my Medicare card with part A and B coverage. Being retired military I have no need for part D which is prescription coverage. So far I have received not one but two 139 page Medicare handbooks (2018 and 2019) both exactly the same. Also showing up daily are numerous letters telling me how much I need part D — which I don't need. My point here is wouldn't Medicare be better served and more cost efficient by not stuffing my mail box daily? Just a thought.

Which brings me to subject number two — charities. I like donating to as many charities as I can. What I don't get is the amount of extemporaneous materials sent after my donation asking for more donations. I already have a mountain of address labels, American flags, dreamcatchers calendars and Christmas cards. Again, wouldn't these charities be better served by stopping the production of all these less than quality items and keep the money spent on them in the first place?

Maybe since I am approaching the age of 65 I am morphing into my dad, which is not a bad thing now that I think of it.

TIPS & TRICKS

What is blind baking?

If you're new to pie baking, you'll likely be utterly confused about blind baking. All it means, though, is to cook the crust a bit before adding your fillings. This step is particularly useful for very loose and liquidy fillings, such as pumpkin, as well as for pies that don't need to bake very long.

On the other hand, pies with a sturdy fruit filling, such as apple, or those that cook for quite a while at a lower temperature, such as pecan, don't need a blind-baked crust. Double-crust and lattice-topped pies, likewise, are not blind baked, as it is difficult to get that top layer to adhere to a partially-baked bottom crust.

If you've decided you need to blind bake, cut a large piece of parchment paper and press it on top of the crust in the pie plate. Now fill the plate to the brim with heavy pie weights, uncooked rice or dried beans (You'll likely want to reserve these as pie-only rice or beans afterwards, though). Spread out your weights evenly across the crust and pop the whole thing in a 350 to 375 degree oven for 10 minutes.

At this point, the crust will still be very pale, but will start to look set. Very carefully remove the hot pie weights by pulling up on the edges of the parchment paper. Stick the weight-free crust back in the oven, to continue to bake for another five minutes. You'll see the teensiest bit of browning around the edges.

Congratulations! You've successfully blind baked! Let the crust cool completely before adding your filling.

Women who retire when their husbands do often lose out

By Liz Weston | NerdWallet.com

Women who retire when their husbands do may be giving up more wealth than they realize.

Married women overall are still in their peak earning years in their 50s and early 60s, while married men's earnings are on the decline, says economist Nicole Maestas, an associate professor of health care policy at Harvard Medical School and the author of a recent study about couples' income and retirement patterns.

As a result, married women typically sacrifice more Social Security wealth than married men when they retire early, says Maestas, who analyzed the University of Michigan's Health and Retirement Survey of more than 20,000 people 50 and older.

Social Security benefits are based on a person's 35 highest-earning years, so each additional year an older married woman works could replace an earlier year when her income was lower or she took time out of the workforce — for instance, to raise children. Because older married men are typically past their peak earning years, the same is not true for them, Maestas found.

But women do typically retire at the same time as their husbands, Maestas says. Because women in heterosexual couples typically marry men two or three years older, that means married women leave the workforce at younger ages.

Women face extra risks

Earlier retirements also mean less time to save for retirements that can stretch decades. That should give women pause, says Jean Setzfand, senior vice president of programs for AARP.

"We live longer. We spend more years in retirement. There are more years we have to consider financing," Setzfand says.

Women's longer life expectancies mean they're likely to outlive their husbands, and they're at greater risk of outliving their savings. Women are 80 percent more likely than men to live in poverty after age 65, according to the National Institute on Retirement Security.

Social Security checks, if they're big enough, can be a powerful antidote to late-in-life poverty. Social Security benefits can't be outlived, reduced by stock market downturns or stolen by fraudsters, Maestas notes.

Delay Social Security, if not retirement

People don't have to claim Social Security when they retire, although many do. Thirty-nine percent of women and 35 percent of men in 2017 filed at the earliest age, which is 62, according to the Center for Retirement Research at Boston College. That locks them into checks that are significantly smaller than if they'd waited a few years.

Benefits rise by about 7 percent each year between age 62 and full retirement age, which is currently 66. After that, checks increase by 8 percent each year until benefits max out at age 70. A $1,000 monthly benefit at 62 could be over $1,300 at 66 or over $1,700 at 70, even if someone stops working.

No other investment can offer that kind of guaranteed return, which is why planners often encourage their clients to tap other retirement funds if that allows them to delay claiming Social Security.

It's not just about money

Financial considerations are just one part of the decision, financial planners say. Couples also have to consider the emotional and psychological issues of retiring together or apart.

"The beginning of retirement is an exciting time, and many couples enjoy starting that journey together," says Stephanie Mushna, a certified financial planner in Grand Rapids, Michigan.

People approaching retirement age are often keenly aware that their time on earth, and their good health, won't last forever. That can make it harder to stick it out, especially if it's at a job they don't like. But working even a year or two longer can have a dramatic impact on the viability of a couple's financial plan and the amount they can spend in retirement, planners say.

Other options are stepping down to a lower-stress job or one with more flexibility. Instead of traveling full-time with a retired spouse, wives may be able to schedule some extended vacations, Setzfand suggests.

That assumes, of course, that women can find such jobs. Many of the women who will be most dependent on Social Security may be locked into jobs with little flexibility, she notes. Health concerns and caregiving for family members also can push women out of the workforce earlier than they expect.

What to know to be able to vote Nov. 6

By Deena Bouknight
More Content Now

The upcoming Tuesday, Nov. 6, midterm election is considered important because, as the name implies, it is at midpoint in the current president's term and voters have a chance to weigh in on scores of federal, state and local races. This year garners particular attention as to whether Republicans will maintain the most House and Senate seats.

Although voting is a foundational right for Americans, voting rules are different in each state — and it is important that aspiring voters not be caught unprepared on Nov. 6. USA.gov spells out the voting process in simple step-by-step instructions that include:

• KNOW STATE'S REQUIREMENTS. Often they include such stipulations as, must have lived in the state for a number of days prior to voting, must not be serving a sentence or probation for a felony conviction and must rescind previous registration in another state. Typically, a driver's license or Social Security number is required to register, or an identification number provided by the state. Some states require proof of citizenship.

• REGISTER. American citizens must be 18 years old to vote. Check with a local Board of Elections for upcoming registration deadlines. Often there are ways to register online, or automatic registration can occur at the Department of Motor Vehicles when securing or renewing driver's licenses. Or, download or pick up from a local election office a National Mail Voter Registration Form; fill out and mail in. According to nonprofit Vote.org, you must register in advance in 33 states, in many as much as a month early (which is right about now).

• KEEP YOUR VOTER REGISTRATION CARD. This is mailed and includes the address of an assigned local polling place. Know the address and keep the card in a safe place.

USA.gov recommends checking voter registration before Election Day to make certain all information is correct. Find a local election office at usa.gov/election-office. Check that your name is spelled correctly, address and party affiliation are up to date, and polling place location is accurate. When clarifying information, find out what the state requires you to bring to vote: Most require photo identification, such as a driver's license or passport, while some allow nonphoto IDs, such as a birth certificate.

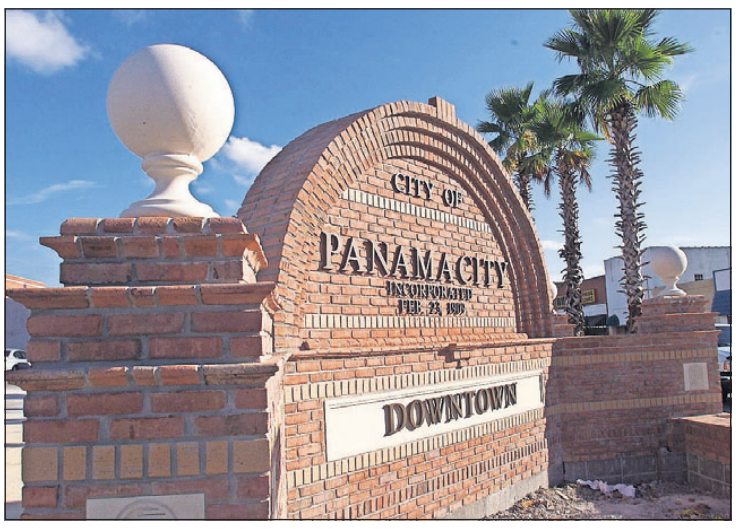
PC supports restoring felons' right to vote



Gateway signsto downtown Panama City at the intersection of Harrison and 6th Streets.

klandeck@pcnh.com

PANAMA CITY — Every day, J.C. Carlisle works with children in the Glenwood neighborhood — playing football, organizing block parties, etc. — hoping to inspire them to stay out of trouble.

Many of the kids he works with come from troubled or single family homes, and a lot of them have a parent who is incarcerated, he told the Panama City Commission during their Tuesday meeting. Convicted in 1999 of cocaine possession, he related to these families in a way not everyone can.

Since his conviction, he said, he's turned his life around, went through drug court, found the Lord and learned to give back.

But there's one thing he hasn't gotten back — his right to vote.

Florida is one of four states where convicted felons don't regain the right to vote until a board restores the individual's voting rights. The process to get in front of the board is arduous and doesn't begin until five-to-seven years after being released from prison. Then, a board comprised of Gov. Rick Scott and his cabinet members will make the final decision.

In Scott's own words from a 2016 hearing there are "no standards."

On top of that, it's a numbers game, with about 11,000 people in line.

"The governor right now sees less than 300 people a year," said Cecile Scoon, the President of the Bay County League of Women Voters. "That means – it's simple math – the last person in line, right now today has to wait 36 years ... It's just too arbitrary."

Lawsuit: 'Free Alcohol' ended with Gulf Coast Jam injury

PANAMA CITY — A Bay County man has filed suit against the owners of Gulf Coast Jam and security staff after being furnished with unlimited quantities of "free alcohol" in the VIP section of the music festival and falling off a platform afterward, according to court records.

Michael Ryan, of Panama City Beach, filed the lawsuit recently in the 14th Judicial Circuit Court against Panama City Beach Entertainment LLC, which owns Gulf Coast Jam, and Dothan Security Inc. (DSI), which provided security during the event. Ryan alleged that during the August 2014 country music festival a combination of alcohol, ill-constructed platforms and bad instructions resulted in injury and loss for him. Ryan has now filed claims of negligence against each of the corporations and is seeking compensation for his injuries plus interest, court records stated.

Ryan claims damages of $15,000, which is the Text messages and websites: The week in Florida politics

By Gary Fineout
The Associated Press

TALLAHASSEE — With Florida's 2018 midterm election in full swing, the politics are starting to heat up. The following are items of political interest from the past week:

Gillum's running mate comes under fire

The campaign of Republican Ron DeSantis is going after Democrat Andrew Gillum over comments made by his running mate nearly two decades ago.

Some voters this week got text messages that noted inflammatory comments made by lieutenant governor nominee Chris King back in 1999. King, who narrowly lost a student election at Harvard University at the time, blamed the school's newspaper for his loss. He said at the time that he was "nailed to the cross" and that "most of the editorial staff that was so hard on me, the vast majority were Jewish."

The text messages said that the comments "raise serious concerns about Gillum's ever-mounting ties to blatant anti-Semitism."

King, who is a liberal Christian, previously apologized for the comments when they surfaced ahead of the August primary for governor. King came in fifth in the election won by Gillum.

The Gillum campaign sharply criticized the text messages as a "smear tactic" by the DeSantis campaign.

"Ron DeSantis is running one of the most divisive and toxic campaigns in Florida history," said Johanna Cervone, a spokeswoman for Gillum. "These type of abusive tactics are straight out of the Trump playbook and will not go unanswered."

DeSantis, during a campaign stop Friday in Doral, defended reminding voters of King's comments.

"I think the comments are what they are, right?" DeSantis said.

The text messages sent out by the campaign came a few days after DeSantis faulted Gillum for his support of groups such as The Dream Defenders and said that "I can find anti-Semites around him."

Where savory meets sweet

New crepe food truck rolls into Seaside

SEASIDE — Jay and Liz Eichelberger were destined for Seaside.

The Atlanta-based couple vacationed, got engaged and married in the South Walton community and set their sights opening a business there one day.

Today, the couple's dream has been realized by way of the food truck Crepes du Soleil, which opened recently on Airstream Row.

"We got married down here in October of 2016, and the year before that we got engaged at Modica Market," said Jay.

Liz added that the couple brought on family friend and chef Rob Masone after he catered their wedding. Masone first had the idea for the Seaside food truck.

"He got the wheels turning for the whole Airstream Row," said Liz. "He was the spearhead of this awesome idea."

Masone is a seasoned chef and multi-business owner in Charlotte, North Carolina, and said he hopes this venture will add a Seaside branch to his business repertoire.

As their name implies, Crepes du Soleil serves up French-inspired crepes of both the savory and sweet variety.

"It's a fun concept because none of us are French," laughed Masone. "But food is really all about the experience. We've got some very traditional French concepts on the menu and some nontraditional crepes too."

One of those nontraditional crepes is the Peppered Pig, a savory crepe featuring pulled pork, ham, Gruyere cheese, dried chili pepper mustard and homemade pickles.

"We make everything from scratch and source all of our protein locally from right here at the Seaside Farmer's Market," Masone said. "For the Peppered Pig we use local pork that has been braised for 24 hours, and we make our own pickles right here on the Airstream."

For the sweet tooth, Masone said he is most excited about the Bananas Foster. This sweet crepe features hazelnut mousse and caramelized bananas.

The food truck will also offer Belgian beers and frozen drinks such as Frose' Rose', a frozen rose' wine with a blend of seasonal fruit, and Lemonade Slush, a frozen lemonade with lavender, local honey and champagne.

Jay and Liz said they plan to live in Seaside full time to run the Airstream, while Masone will to split his time between Seaside and Charlotte.

But all three agree that Seaside is where they were meant to be.

"It's a great place with a great vibe, we feel really fortunate to be a vendor here on Airstream Row," Masone said. "We really feel like our concept is going to add to what is already here and complement it."

Clearwater's real-life superhero is hanging up his suit

By Paul Guzzo
Tampa Bay Times

CLEARWATER — For two decades, Dale Pople patrolled the streets feeding the homeless, helping old people carry groceries, extinguishing a car fire. He wore a red, yellow and blue Spandex outfit with an SH emblem: "Super Hero."

Now, Clearwater's real life superhero has retired. But don't say he hung up the cape. In the real world, capes aren't practical. He learned that detail weeks into his superhero career.

"It'll get caught in the toilet" said Pople.

Other would-be heroes around the world are part of the real superhero movement, regular folks who employ characters and costumes to do random good deeds. There are probably hundreds, Pople said. Pople is celebrated as one of the originals.

A short documentary detailing his exploits as an un-caped crusader is making the rounds at film festivals around the world.

For the past 20 years, Dale Pople has dressed up as the character "Super Hero" and wandered around Clearwater doing good deeds. But he has announced his retirement. [JAMES BORCHUCK/TAMPA BAY TIMES]

At 50, Pople has bad knees and shoulders and twice had hernia surgery due to years of weight lifting and "superheroing."

"I don't care how good of shape you are in," said Pople, 6 feet and 220 pounds of muscle. "You are not going to break up a fight between 21-year-old kids at 50."

Even fictional heroes can be slowed by age, said comic book writer Bob Layton, who lives in Brandon. Pople's retirement reminds Layton of his Iron Man: The End book. "Suffering from nerve damage from too many years of being Iron Man," Layton said, Tony Stark trained an apprentice and spent his final years with his wife.

Pople, who will continue his day job behind the scenes in television broadcasting, said he, too, will enjoy more evenings with his wife. He hopes to find someone willing to carry on his superhero tradition in Clearwater.

"Everywhere could use a superhero," he said.

Like comic superheroes, Pople has an origin story. Bullied by classmates and abused by his mother, he said, superhero tales were his escape.

"They overcame everything."

After going to Countryside High School, he spent two years in the U.S. Navy, then graduated from the police academy, he said, but instead chose a career in television.

At 29, he got into professional wrestling. Naming himself "Super Hero" and dressing the part, he envisioned becoming the ultimate good guy. But one year later, he tore his ACL in a match.

"So, I'm a broken-down wrestler with a superhero gimmick," Pople said. "I wondered what would happen if I did it for real."

He drove around Clearwater one day in the summer of 1998 wearing his full superhero ensemble, until he happened upon a fender bender.

"Super Hero, we're so glad to see you," an old English couple told him.

"It was like they expected me to be there because this is America and superheroes are everywhere," Pople said.

They didn't need help, but he was emboldened because they took him seriously. Since that day, Pople estimates, he has assisted hundreds.

Social media has helped Pople connect with other real-life superheroes. There was Orlando's Master Legend in a metallic suit and helmet, and San Diego's Mr. Xtreme in camouflaged body armor and bug-eyed goggles.

For a short time, Pople connected with another five superheroes from Florida to form Team Justice, Inc., collecting items for charities. It included Master Legend and Artiseroi, who promoted himself as a "gadgeteer." Modern day hero groups, Pople said, include San Diego's Xtreme Justice, who patrol the streets and assist charities.

In 2011, HBO produced the documentary Superheroes about the movement. Pople was among the stars.

"That was probably the peak of all this," he said.

At that time, he was superheroing for three hours a night, seven day a week. In recent years, he's crusaded sporadically. No matter their schedule, Pople warns potential superheroes to be patient. He spent more time wandering around than saving people.

"It's 90 percent boredom and 10 percent pure terror."

The Clearwater Police Department has said in past interviews that officers were familiar with Pople, that he had never caused them problems, that he obeyed laws and knew to avoid certain situations.

Pople condemns superheroes who cross the line and become vigilantes. The best heroes understand they are neighborhood watch, not law enforcement.

minimum for a circuit court claim, and has demanded a jury trial. A jury could award more or less or side with Gulf Coast Jam and DSI.

According to the lawsuit, Gulf Coast Jam should have known that the conditions they presented to attendees in the VIP area — unlimited free alcohol, insufficient lighting and an ill-constructed platform — could result in an injury.

"Given the foreseeability that festival attendees with VIP credentials may consume alcohol, (Gulf Coast Jam) should have taken appropriate steps to protect the health, safety and well-being of such individuals which includes providing an area that was free from hazardous conditions," the lawsuit states. Gulf Coast Jam "breached their duty to provide an appropriate, safe and secure area for its attendees with VIP credentials by erecting, promoting and implementing a restricted and reserved area for such individuals which was unfit for its intended purpose."

Ryan's lawsuit does not explicitly admit that he consumed the "free alcohol" but states that Gulf Coast Jam furnished unlimited quantities for festival-goers with VIP credentials, including himself. By doing that, "it was reasonably foreseeable that alcohol would be consumed by some to the point where normal faculties might be impaired," the lawsuit states.

At one point in his festival experience, Ryan was on a "multi-level elevated platform" equipped with railings and stairs in between each level. Ryan claims that while each platform had railings surrounding it, the stairs did not have a similar safety feature. He was then instructed by a DSI security detail to sit down on one of the stairs when he fell, the lawsuit states.

"When he did as instructed by the DSI employee, ... Ryan lost his balance and fell through the opening and the handrail causing him to suffer severe and permanent injuries resulting in loss," the lawsuit states.

The complaint does not specify what his injuries were.

Neither Gulf Coast Jam nor DSI have responded to the lawsuit. A trial date has also yet to be determined.

VOTING

An amendment on the ballot is set to change that this fall. Amendment 4 would automatically restore the right to vote for felons upon the completion of their sentence, except those convicted of murder or felony sexual offenses.

On Tuesday, several community members, including a handful of felons, came to the Panama City Commission meeting to ask the commissioners to pass a resolution supporting Amendment 4. Encouraging them was Commissioner Kenneth Brown, who put the conversation on the agenda.

"They keep up with current events. They read the paper. The discuss things among themselves because they feel no one will listen," Brown said. "I have made attempts to contact and work with felons in order to restore their right to vote. I want their opinion. I want their opinion on everything in the city of Panama City Florida."

To prove his point, Brown invited motivational speaker and convicted felon Chandler Strong to read the resolution as an example of who the system is currently silencing at the ballot.

"I sold drugs, but I am here today to show you convicted felons can change their life and they can make a big difference in the community," Strong said.

After Stong spoke, several others, including Carlisle and Abigail Kingston, shared their stories.

"I just want to stop being punished for my past," Kingston said. "I feel that my rights should be reinstated, especially to vote, so that I can have a voice in my community."

After listening to the speakers, the commissioners voted unanimously to support the passage of Amendment 4.

"It's going to take more than us, it's going to take a strong movement," said Commissioner Billy Rader. "I believe in second chances."

SR commissioners OK incentive package

Distribution company has promised hundreds of jobs

By Ramon Rios
@RamonrSrpg | 850-623-2120
rrios@srpressgazette.com

MILTON — The Santa Rosa County Commission has approved an incentive package to attract a distribution company — and its promise of hundreds of jobs — to the Northwest Florida Industrial Park.

Shannon Ogletree, director of the Economic Development Office, presented an incentive package to commissioners aimed at attracting Project Runner, the code name for the still-secret company, for commissioners' approval at their Sept. 24 meeting. Ogletree said the company wants to build a large facility at the industrial park at the intersection of Highway 87 and I-10.

On Sept. 27, commissioners approved the incentive package. The incentives include a cost-free, 50-acre site at the Northwest Florida Industrial Park, valued at an estimated $2.5 million, a 20 percent local match for a $240,000 state tax incentive, and a 10-year county property tax exemption with an estimated value of $2.5 million.

Those incentives are balanced against the expected creation of 400 jobs when the distribution company begins operations, with the facility projected eventually to employ 600 people.

POLITICS

back in 2013, has been sharply critical of Israel's treatment of Palestinians and has called for a boycott of Israel. Gillum has said he does not support a boycott of Israel.

Candidates ding each other with dueling websites

The two candidates running for Florida's chief financial officer lashed out at each other this week.

Republican and current CFO Jimmy Patronis launched a website called RingsCriminalRing.com that purports to highlight Democrat Jeremy Ring's "shady" campaign donations. The site also delves into an investigation that showed a researcher paid by the Florida Democratic Party accessed Patronis's driving records online. The Florida Department of Law Enforcement, which looked into the incident, concluded that no crime had occurred because the information was not used for fraudulent purposes.

Katie Strickland, a spokeswoman for the Patronis campaign, maintained that Ring's "connections to criminal and scandalous donors yet again reveals his stunning lack of judgment."

It only took a few days for the Ring campaign to launch a rival website called JimmyPatronis.info that bashed some of Patronis campaign donors for their past legal run-ins.

The site also includes a digital ad highlighting an incident where Patronis reimbursed the state for using a state-owned SUV while on private business. Patronis did not reimburse the state until he was questioned about his car use by a reporter. Patronis got a ticket while driving the SUV because he had an accident while traveling to his political consultant's office to pick up thank-you cards.

Clinton to campaign for Gillum

Hillary Clinton may have lost Florida in the 2016 presidential election, but she's coming back to the state to help campaign for Tallahassee Mayor Andrew Gillum.

Gillum's campaign announced that Clinton will join Gillum on Oct. 23 in South Florida. The announcement did not specify exactly where the two would be campaigning.

Clinton made several visits to the Sunshine State ahead of the 2016 election, but the Democratic nominee lost the state to President Donald Trump by nearly 113,000 votes. Clinton, however, still got more votes than President Barack Obama did when he carried Florida in his two elections.

Gillum campaign staffer fired

Gillum's campaign has fired a staffer after offensive tweets dating back to 2012 and 2013 surfaced early Saturday.

The tweets purportedly posted by Manny Orozco-Ballestas depicted messages degrading to women and body-shaming. Screenshots of the deleted tweets were posted by conservative blogger Jacob Engels, who also has contributed to the right-wing conspiracy theory website Infowars and is an ally of Trump associate Roger Stone.

"The type of language this young man used on social media before his employment with our campaign is unacceptable and he will no longer be working with the campaign," Gillum campaign spokesman Joshua Karp said in a statement to the Miami Herald.

Orozco-Ballestas became the campaign's youth director roughly two weeks ago. Engles previously criticized him for a photo posted on Instagram last summer, in which Orozco-Ballestas wore a shirt making an explicit reference about President Donald Trump's voters.

in me. Can't wait to come back and compete in this wonderful festival and see all the great oyster shuckers of the world!"

Over the last several years, Allen has been making a name for himself on the national and international oyster shucking scene.

Allen, who works at Hunt's Oyster Bar in St. Andrews as an oyster shucker, has won the U.S. National Oyster Shucking Champion two years in a row, in 2016 and 2017, making him the fastest shucker on the competitive circuit in the country.

Last year, during his first time at the international festival, Allen placed 13th in the competition, with a time of 3 minutes and 25 seconds. After those results, Allen said the key to further success would be getting used to Irish oysters used at the world games, which are broader and flatter than oysters seen locally or at other competitions in the U.S. He said he would be connecting with an oyster bar in Maine that sells oysters close to that shape to practice.

That practice apparently paid off, as Allen's time this year was 3 minutes and 4 seconds.

Allen will have a chance to defend his national title once again during the U.S. National Oyster Shucking Championship on Oct. 20 and 21st in St. Mary's County, Maryland.

Anti Lepik of Estonia took first place in the competition for the second year in a row.

Woman who faced 120 years in prison helps others on TV

By Annie Geggis
South Florida Sun Sentinel

Her manicured nails, blonde hair and big hoop earrings that dust her shoulders have her ready for her close-up, yet this TV show scene has Alexandria "Allie" Severino helping her friend with some of the dirtiest work there is.

"Uh, is that a cockroach?" she asks, helping the friend clean out the trunk of a car in preparation for a trip to drug rehab.

In her 28 years, Severino of Delray Beach has seen — and lived — just about every part of what has caused South Florida's drug deaths to skyrocket and sober homes to proliferate.

At 17, she had faced 120 years in prison for drug dealing, but a lucky break got her sentence reduced to six years of probation.

She has been homeless and used drugs. And for most of the past 10 years she has earned her living in one way or another in the region's exploding drug rehabilitation industry.

Now, Severino is the co-star of "Dopesick Nation," a new TV show on Viceland, a cable channel that debuted in 2016 under the creative direction of Spike Jonze the filmmaker.

The show, which airs at 10 p.m. Wednesdays, takes Severino and a co-star behind shopping centers, in parks and along train tracks. They try to help recovering addicts by getting them to rehabilitation or a place to live after drug rehab.

Interspersed with shots of the area's beaches and luxury yachts, viewers see characters drift in and out of Allie's orbit as she visits some of the roughest-looking areas in Palm Beach and Broward counties. Sometimes she's summoned by phone. Other times, it's a friend calling.

"It's a lot about the forgotten people," Severino said. "We're showing what's going on."

The drug overdose epidemic killed more than 72,000 Americans last year, an increase of almost two-thirds when compared with deaths in 2013, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

South Florida was particularly hard hit because the sober home industry saw an opportunity to bring people closer to Florida's alluring sand and surf, fresh out of drug rehabilitation. In June authorities announced 124 people in South Florida held as part of a nationwide crackdown on fraudulent health care billing and other crimes.

In recent years, many clients found themselves in an atmosphere that left them vulnerable to relapse.

Severino's co-star, Frankie, is a recovering addict from Toledo, Ohio. In keeping with the Alcoholics Anonymous tradition, he goes by his first name only.

The pair offer an up-close, street-level view of the drug epidemic, said Pat McGee, the showrunner of the TV docuseries. "We go where Frankie and Allie take us, and we don't know where we're going to be," McGee said. He calls them "two people who have been suffering, battling and sometimes winning this fight."

A few years ago, Severino got a call from a West Boca High classmate who now works as a movie producer in New York City.

The classmate noticed how Severino had created Fresh Start, a magazine in Palm Beach County for which she wrote articles and sold ads.

Severino focused on drug recovery, a timely topic amid the rise of the drug-rehabilitation industry. Her phone number has been passed around widely among those on the street and in recovery groups, which keeps her phone vibrating constantly.

"She was covering all the questions we had: what to look for when you go to rehab, what questions you should ask," said the West Boca classmate, Jaime Manheimer, 28, an executive producer for the show. "So we asked, 'What do you think about doing this?'"

The camera followed Severino around for three years. And during filming that lasted through this spring, she had encounters with hundreds of people. Four times she administered Narcan, the antidote that reverses opioid overdoses.

"It's scary," she said. "Here are these L.A. film people, are they going to exploit these people? I'm being vulnerable because they are following me with cameras 13 hours a day."

McGee said he still thinks about how they were filming one day and heard about someone in distress.

"When we got there, Allie administered CPR, chest compressions and worked with 911 and essentially brought him back to life," he said. "It was one of the most amazing experiences I've ever been a part of."

Severino first got involved with drugs in the late 2000s. She was dealing in oxycodone, Roxicodone and ecstasy, and using some of her products, she said. She remembers working part-time at a party supply store, where she could meet people who wanted to buy.

But it all came crashing in when she looked up from her phone on June 28, 2007, to tell her buyer the grand total he owed.

It was a sting. She found herself face to face with the cops.

"They had been watching me for months," she said.

Her case drew headlines because of the severity of her charges, and the decision that she would be considered a youthful offender instead of getting the maximum she faced. Judge Jorge Labarga, now on the Florida Supreme Court, told her he and the prosecutor were "sticking our necks out for you." She said the comments on that news story made her determined to turn her life around.

She was able to get in at South County Drug Abuse Foundation in Delray Beach, despite having no insurance.

Getting that chance is why she believes that everyone needs a second chance, and sometimes third and fourth chances, too.

She is studying business at Palm Beach State College. And her current employer, Daylight Detox and Recovery Center, is one of the treatment places mentioned on the TV show. "She helps us determine if people are serious about recovery," said Sarah Uzzi, operations director for Daylight.

Severino also is featured in "American Relapse," a documentary film co-directed by McGee. It won best documentary at the Rhode Island Film Festival last month, an award at the Montana International Film Festival this month, and will be featured at next month's Orlando Film Festival.

Severino said she hopes that people will find out what she did at 18 years old when she got her second chance. "Having a purpose helps," she said. "And making your bed every morning.

"When I make my bed, I say a little prayer every morning, 'Dear God, keep me out of trouble today.'" And going to bed, "I say, 'Thank you, God, for keeping me out of trouble today.'"

Rural Florida sees explosive Airbnb growth

GateHouse Media

Airbnb, the Sunshine State's leading community-driven hospitality company, announced last week that Floridians in rural counties earned $24.7 million in supplemental income while welcoming 125,000 guests through the Airbnb vacation rental platform over the past 12 months, representing a remarkable 110 percent rate of year-over-year growth.

For this report, Airbnb compiled data for the 32 Florida counties officially designated as "rural" by the Florida Department of Economic Opportunity.

In Franklin County, data for 2017 showed 4,100 guest arrivals and $700,000 in host income, a 265 percent growth over 2016. In 2017, Airbnb properties in the county contributed $16,000 in bed tax revenues to the Tourist Development Council.

The 110 percent growth rate of Airbnb guests to all state-designated rural Florida counties nearly doubles the growth rate to urban counties. The data is indicative of an increasing desire among travelers to get off the beaten path and experience all of Florida, not just the big cities or traditional vacation hubs.

This report comes on the heels of new data demonstrating the Florida hotel industry is booming, reporting record rates of hotel development, total hotel rooms available, hotel room nights sold, hotel occupancy rate, and hotel room revenue.

Yet the vast majority of Florida's hotel inventory is centralized in the large metro areas and well-known beach towns. This leaves large swaths of rural Florida with very limited traditional lodging options — and sometimes none at all.

As such, home sharing has allowed homeowners in rural regions throughout the state to fill that void and earn valuable supplemental income while opening up their counties to tourism and the revenue that comes with it.

For example, Wakulla County is home to just three hotels, according to Hotels.com, yet the local Airbnb host community has helped the county take full economic advantage of its growing popularity with visitors, with 205 percent year-over-year guest growth over the past year as local hosts earned a combined $276,000 in income. Similarly, Gulf County — also home to just two hotels according to Hotels.com — is an increasingly popular destination for Airbnb guests. Local homeowners helped catalyze the local economy by hosting 4,700 guests in the past year to the county, earning over $1 million in supplemental income in the process.

"Delivering tourism — and the revenue that comes with it — to rural Northern Florida has been a longstanding goal," said State Sen. Bill Montford, whose district includes 10 of the rural counties adjacent to Tallahassee. "When that tourism is delivering hundreds of thousands of dollars into the pockets of working-class Floridians in the process, that's even better."

"The agricultural communities I represent are hungry for economic development," said State Rep. Ben Albritton, whose district includes the heart of DeSoto County and Hardee County. "Opening up these counties to people-powered tourism is putting valuable extra income into pockets of homeowners and hopefully will encourage more small businesses to invest in rural Florida."

Additionally, in three counties technically state designated as urban, over half of the local Airbnb hosts live in areas that are census-designated as rural tracts. In Citrus County, 60 percent of the 190 active Airbnb hosts live in such rural tracts; in Hernando County, 53 percent of the 150 active Airbnb hosts live in these tracts; and in Marion County, it's 54 percent of the 170 active Airbnb hosts there.

Compromise reached on flood map updates

By Tim Croft
GateHouse Media

PORT ST. JOE — A week or so ago the Board of County Commissioners and officials with the Northwest Florida Water Management District seemed to be talking past each other about updating preliminary FEMA flood maps.

On Tuesday, the two announced a compromise that County Administrator Michael Hammond called a "home run" for citizens, some 900 or so of which will be relieved of the flood insurance burden in the coming years.

And, yes, years is what it is going to take, regardless of the BOCC's approval of the compromise, but nearly 1,000 property owners in the county will see relief under the plan.

Sooner than expected via a shorter path than mapped out a week ago.

For coastal property owners, a significant number of which were facing more stringent requirements and higher costs for flood coverage, the compromise will mean more time to apply updated data.

The coastal maps were particularly impactful to areas such as downtown Port St. Joe.

"This is a home run for the citizens," Hammond said.

The NWFWMD agreed to split the county for consideration of updates to the FEMA flood maps.

Using a mechanism called a Letter of Map Amendment (LOMA), the water management district hopes to complete the process of updating inland preliminary maps in a shorter period of time.

That would mean 63 of the county's 103 flood map panels would move ahead in the process; that process was halted in Gulf County during the appeal and protest phase at the request of commissioners.

They sought to use the latest LIDAR data, which employs lasers and lights for more accurate surveying of lands, to bring better results from the new flood maps to more property owners.

So, by Tuesday's BOCC action, the 63 inland panels will proceed through the appeal and protest period and reach a final window for comments, according to a representative from the NWFWMD.

Ultimately that will lead to a letter informing property owners the flood maps have been finalized followed by a six-month period before implementation.

Those inland maps would be approved in 12-18 months.

Finalizing of those maps will also mean that some 900 property owners, in White City, Overstreet, Dalkeith and the north end of the county, currently paying flood insurance would no longer be required to do so.

BBB®: Halloween Purchases Shouldn't "Spook" You This Year

Halloween is just around the corner and department stores have lined their aisles with ghostly costumes and spooky decorations. Halloween is known for being one of the biggest holiday shopping seasons of the year.

This Halloween, learn how you can save yourself money and avoid a spending nightmare. BBB offers the following tips to avoid getting spooked by a bad Halloween purchase:

- Check out the company. Many Halloween-themed stores take advantage of short-term leases, setting up shop in vacant space for just a few weeks. Businesses will also change their name from year to year as a way of hiding a poor track record. Always check out a company's BBB Business Profile before making a purchase. If the company is not listed, ask employees how long the store will continue to operate and if they will accept returns after the holiday. If they don't, make sure the item is exactly what you want and understand you'll be stuck with the purchase if something were to happen.
- Inquire about policies. Seasonal stores have the same responsibilities as those who serve shoppers year round; they must display their refund and return policies prominently. Read the fine print and be aware of the terms and conditions of your purchase. Some stores may have time limits for returns and may not allow refunds on costumes. Others may only provide store credit for returns.
- Keep documentation. Make your purchases by credit card. If something goes wrong, you may be able to dispute the charges. Save your receipts! The refund and exchange policy should be listed there. It is better to have policies in writing and the receipt is often needed to make a return.
- Shop safely online. When buying online, do it securely. Check a site's security settings. The web address should begin with "https://." When purchasing online, be sure to check the security of the site before providing your credit card number and other personal information. Be sure the business has a working phone number and address. Online businesses that only provide an email address as a way to contact them is a red flag. Make sure to read the terms and conditions and know the return policy for costumes purchased on a website.

Dominant Europe claims Ryder Cup

Europe team captain Thomas Bjorn kisses the cup as he celebrates with his players after the European team won the Ryder Cup on Sunday at Le Golf National in Saint Quentin-en-Yvelines, France. [ALASTAIR GRANT/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS]

The Associated Press

SAINT-QUENTIN-EN-YVELINES, France — Europe waited two long years for that one moment when the Ryder Cup was back in its hands.

Exactly when it happened Sunday was unclear, making it all the better.

At roughly the same time, in two singles matches on two greens at Le Golf National separated by 150 yards of water, Francesco Molinari and Sergio Garcia each made par to secure at least a half-point, either one giving Europe the 14½ points it needed to regain the Ryder Cup from the Americans.

As the celebration was just getting started, Molinari capped off the first 5-0 week at the Ryder Cup for a European.

Three of those points came at the expense of Tiger Woods, who left France without contributing a point. Molinari won his singles match against Phil Mickelson, officially putting the winning point on the board for Europe and putting Mickelson in the record book for the most losses in Ryder Cup history.

Then, Garcia won his match to set the record for the most career points in Ryder Cup history.

It was like that all week.

Europe produced stars old and new with a team that was as strong as ever.

"We got it right this week," European captain Thomas Bjorn said. "We never, ever looked toward their team about what they were about. We were about us as a team and what we do. ... Everything that this Ryder Cup was is what I think the Ryder Cup

Bortles tosses 2 TD passes as Jacksonville handles Darnold, New York 31-12

JACKSONVILLE (AP) — Blake Bortles felt as though Jacksonville's offense wasted a dominant defensive performance last week.

He refused to let it happen again.

Bortles threw two touchdown passes, including a 67-yarder to Donte Moncrief, and the Jaguars offense gave the defense plenty of help in a 31-12 victory over the New York Jets on Sunday. Bortles ended up with a career-high 388 yards passing, topping 375 yards for the second time in three games.

"(The defense) played incredible again today," Bortles said. "There were some sloppy parts of the game that we've got to clean up, but to give them some points to go play with the lead was good."

It was a much different story a week ago, when the Jaguars (3-1) managed just two field goals in a 9-6 loss to Tennessee.

Bortles was clearly off in that one. He was much sharper against the Jets (1-3), who have dropped three straight.

He found T.J. Yeldon wide open for a 31-yard score in the second quarter and then beat a blitz with the deep pass to Moncrief down the sideline.

The pass to Moncrief was Jacksonville's lone offensive highlight in an ugly second half. The Jaguars had three turnovers that led to nine points for the Jets.

"It's just growth. That's the easiest way to say it," Jaguars defensive tackle Malik Jackson said. "We've got to be consistent like this all time. Offense dropped the ball last week, so to speak, but this week they picked it up and put 500 yards on the board.

"That's the best measure of a man and a football player — to put that turmoil behind you and move on and show your growth, and we

Blaney wins as Johnson wrecks out of playoffs

By Jenna Fryer
The Associated Press

CONCORD, N.C. — Jimmie Johnson saw an opportunity to snap a 58-race losing streak, and went for it. It cost him a shot at an eighth NASCAR championship and allowed Ryan Blaney to steal a surprise victory in the debut race of the "roval" at Charlotte Motor Speedway.

Had Johnson just settled for second, he'd still be in the playoffs. Instead, he wrecked with Martin Truex Jr. and wound up in a three-way tie for the final transfer position into the second round of the playoffs. The seven-time NASCAR champion was eliminated Sunday on a tiebreaker.

"I knew where I was on the math," Johnson said. "I didn't

NHL teams load up to challenge champion Caps

By Stephen Whyno
The Associated Press

T.J. Oshie stepped to the microphone and apologized for his voice.

It was hoarse from days and nights of celebrating the Washington Capitals' Stanley Cup triumph and fans now had gathered on the National Mall after the championship parade. Oshie had enough left to start a chant among the tens of thousands of fans: "Back-to-back! Back-to-back!"

With a full voice and the shortest summer of his career behind him, Oshie hasn't changed his tune that the Capitals can repeat.

"If we continue with our style of play and everyone chips in like we did, I think we have a really good chance," Oshie said. "I know the odds are against us, we had a short summer, everyone else has a couple more months of training on them. But we still have all the pieces."

Even though the Pittsburgh Penguins went back-to-back in 2016 and 2017, the odds are against Washington repeating despite bringing back an almost identical roster from last year's run. What the Capitals showed teams gunning for the Cup in 2019 is how a championship window is never closed as long you make the playoffs. The Penguins , Boston and Tampa Bay in the Eastern Conference, and the San Jose Sharks and St. Louis Blues in the West, take note: Previous postseason success and failure is little indication of what'll happen next.

"They don't give up after a lot of tough years," Blues winger Vladimir Tarasenko said of the Caps. "They work on their game, play hard and finally reach their goal. This is really good example for us. I think that's what we need to try to do."

The race to the playoffs begins with the Capitals and Vegas Golden Knights not favored to make it back to the Cup Final, Sidney Crosby ready to take back the trophy he has hoisted three times, Connor McDavid looking to lift the Oilers back into contention and an influx of talent in the West again threatening to make this spring another heavyweight rumble.

did that."

Jets rookie Sam Darnold was harassed early and often, getting sacked three times and nearly throwing three interceptions. Tashaun Gipson's pick was overturned by a holding penalty on the other side of the field, and Pro Bowl cornerbacks A.J. Bouye and Jalen Ramsey each dropped INTs that would have ended New York's first two scoring drives.

Regardless, the Jaguars allowed 178 yards, allowed 10 first downs and recorded its first safety since 2014. It was the team's best defensive output since holding Cincinnati to 148 yards last November.

The Jets scored their lone touchdown following Yeldon's fourth-quarter fumble, a 2-yard pass from Darnold to Jordan Leggett. It was hardly the "identity game" the Jets had wanted.

"I felt we took a step back today," Jets coach Todd Bowles said. "Nobody played well. We gave up a bunch of yards. We usually fight to be in ballgames. We're usually in every ballgame. But we shot ourselves in the foot too much in the first half today. It's back to the drawing board in every phase [—] offense, defense, special teams. It's back to the drawing board.

"The other three games, we lost on silly things but we were in ballgames. Today, I don't think we were in the ballgame. We didn't give ourselves a chance."

It was about what the confident Jaguars expected. They improved to 6-1 following losses in coach Doug Marrone's two seasons.

Jacksonville's biggest concern coming out of the victory was the health of running back Leonard Fournette, who re-injured his strained right hamstring. Fournette missed the last two games while trying to get back to full speed, but tweaked it during his return.

Fournette ran 11 times for 30 yards before leaving the game for good. Marrone said he's worried about the relapse.

"I'd be (lying) if I said no," Marrone said. `Anytime you come back and you're ready to go and then all of a sudden you get injured again, it's not a good sign."

QB STATS

Bortles completed 29 of 38 passes, with an interception on a ball tipped at the line of scrimmage.

Darnold was 17 of 34 passing for 167 yards. The 1-2 punch of Bilal Powell and Isaiah Crowell combined for 26 yards rushing.

"We've got to make plays that were there," Darnold said. "I've got to make throws that are there and not think too much, take what they give me and we'll start to find completions and get into a rhythm."

FIRST SACKS

Jets defensive lineman Leonard Williams and Jaguars defensive end Yannick Ngakoue recorded their first sacks of the season. Williams took down Bortles in the second quarter. Ngakoue sacked Darnold on the last play of the first half.

RYDER

should be about for a European team."

Mostly, it's about winning.

The final shot came from Alex Noren, who after conceding a short birdie putt to Bryson DeChambeau on the 18th hole, made a 40-foot birdie putt to win the match.

That made it 17½-10½, the biggest Ryder Cup rout in 12 years.

Two years after the Americans thought they had their Ryder Cup problems figured out, Europe reminded them Sunday which team practically has owned that shiny gold trophy for the last quarter-century.

Europe now has won nine of the last 12. The Americans remain winless away from home since 1993.

And there wasn't much U.S. captain Jim Furyk could do about it.

"They played some great golf this week, and I take my cap off," Furyk said. "Thomas was a better captain and their team outplayed us. And there's nothing else more you can say. They deserved to win."

Molinari was just as good on his own as he was with Tommy Fleetwood, and the best year of his golfing life somehow got better. Just over two months ago, he was posing with that silver claret jug at the British Open as Italy's first major champion. This felt just as sweet because it was a trophy he shared with a team.

"This team has been incredible from the start," Molinari said. "We were determined to do the job. Nothing was going to stop us. And you saw it on the course."

It was the most lopsided victory since consecutive 18½-9½ victories by Europe more than a decade ago when the Americans looked utterly lost. They formed a Ryder Cup Task Force after the 2014 loss. The idea was to build continuity and momentum, and it seemed to work when the Americans won at Hazeltine in 2016.

Now, maybe it's back to the drawing board.

"Let's be honest — the European side played some exquisite golf," Mickelson said.

The same couldn't be said for Mickelson or Woods, two giants of their generation, both with losing records in the Ryder Cup.

Mickelson didn't even play on Saturday and lost his matches on Friday and Sunday. He started the week by setting a record with his 12th appearance in the Ryder Cup, and it ended with 22 losses, a record by either side. At 48, he might not get another chance.

"I did not play well this year," Mickelson said. "This could very well, realistically, be my last one."

Woods was 0-4, the first time in eight Ryder Cups that he failed to contribute a single point. This was one week after he capped a personal comeback following four back surgeries by winning the Tour Championship, the 80th of his PGA Tour career and first in more than five years.

But he looked like he lacked energy on the course and certainly in his speech over the last two days.

"It's disappointing because I went 0-4, and that's four points to the European team," he said. "And I'm one of the contributing factors to why we lost the cup, and it's not a lot of fun. It's frustrating because I thought we were all playing pretty well, and I just didn't perform at the level that I had been playing, and just got behind early in the matches and never got back."

But this was more about the Europeans as a team, and they were tougher than ever on a course they know well.

Trailing 10-6 going into the final day of singles, the Americans needed to put red points on the board early to build momentum. It never happened. Justin Thomas won the leadoff match over Rory McIlroy but not until the 18th hole.

Webb Simpson and Tony Finau, the lone bright spot among the wild-card picks for Furyk, won easily. Behind them, Woods was hanging tough against Jon Rahm and Dustin Johnson started to pull ahead of Ian Poulter.

"There's always a moment where it looks like a spark of light," Furyk said. "When it was there for us, Europe played really well."

It wasn't there long.

Rahm won two straight holes with pars to seize control. Johnson hit into the water on the 13th during a four-hole slide that took him from 1 up to 2 down, a match Poulter wound up winning.

Thorbjorn Olesen, who had played only one match the previous two days, went 5 up at the turn over Jordan Spieth and won in 14 holes. Spieth is now 0-6 in singles matches in the Ryder Cup and Presidents Cup.

Garcia was in tears.

He played so poorly this year that he failed to qualify for the PGA Tour's postseason. Bjorn picked him anyway, saying he was the heart and soul of the European team, and Garcia responded by going 3-1. His victory over Rickie Fowler gave him 25½ points in a Ryder Cup career that began in 1999.

"I think that a lot of people thought that the Ryder Cup was over before it was played," Garcia said. "And I guess, unfortunately, they picked the wrong team."

PLAYOFFS

think that I was going to crash or spin trying to overtake him like I did. I thought I was making a calculated move and giving myself the chance to win and unfortunately it didn't turn out that way."

The roval was a unique combination speedway and infield road course created to improve the racing at Charlotte. The unusual layout and unfamiliarity made it a treacherous circuit for the 16-driver playoff field because it was an elimination race for four of the contenders.

The race was unexpectedly clean until the end, which was marked by two different wrecks among the leaders and a red-flag period of almost 15 minutes. The chaotic close made for a suspenseful post-race period in which NASCAR had to review the results and break the tie between Kyle Larson, Aric Almirola and Johnson.

Larson and Almirola advanced, both by picking up desperation points on the final lap. Eliminated along with Johnson was Daytona 500 winner Austin Dillon, as well as Joe Gibbs Racing teammates Denny Hamlin and Erik Jones.

Blaney had hovered around the cutoff line most of the race and stunningly wound up the winner with an automatic berth for the Team Penske driver into the next round of the playoffs.

"I didn't expect that. Sometimes it is better to have a little bit of luck on your side," Blaney said. "You hate to see two guys take each other out, especially two of the best cars all day."

The two best cars actually belonged to Larson and Blaney's teammate Brad Keselowski.

Keselowski was on track to win for the fourth time in five races until he misjudged the entry into the first turn on a restart with six laps remaining. It triggered a multi-car accident that collected Larson, who had led 47 laps. Keselowski's race ended after leading 29 laps.

Kyle Busch was also in the accident and mocked his fellow drivers for their error.

"All of us are just stupid and don't know where to brake," said Busch. "We all just drove off into a 90-degree wall because I guess we didn't have anything better to do."

Larson, meanwhile, had to limp a wounded race car around the track for the final laps to cling to his spot in the playoffs. Larson's fate was also determined in the final few turns when he passed the stalled car of Jeffery Earnhardt.

"I couldn't even drive my car it was so destroyed," said Larson, who was married last Wednesday to get the ceremony done during the season. "He was like 100 feet from the start/finish line and I could see him (Earnhardt) creeping and I was like, 'Don't go, don't go!'"

Johnson should have been content following Truex across the finish line and moving on in the playoffs. But he was once unbeatable at Charlotte, where he won eight points races on the oval, and saw the opening Sunday to grab his first win in well over a year.

Johnson tried to dive inside and pass Truex with two turns remaining and he ended up in a spin. Johnson collected Truex, who spun off course, Johnson's car came to a stop and Blaney scooted past for the surprise victory.

Johnson wound up eighth and out of the playoffs. He stood silently next to his car for several minutes as NASCAR reviewed the final sequence and updated the standings.

"I was more worried about the win than anything else," Johnson said. "We were in a transfer position and didn't get it. Just going for the win. The wins are so important and the veteran could have taken the safe route and didn't."

Truex, technically the defending race winner because he won on Charlotte's speedway last fall, faded to 14th and deliberately spun Johnson after the race.

"Last corner desperation behind us. He just overdrove it and was never going to make it and used me as brakes and turned us both around," Truex fumed. "It sucks. We could have raced side-by-side off the last corner for a win and that would have been cool. The fans would have been digging it, but instead we finished 14th and he's locked out of the playoffs. I guess that's what he gets."

ROUNDUP

TITANS 26, EAGLES 23, OT: Marcus Mariota hit Corey Davis with a 10-yard touchdown pass just before the end of overtime, and the Tennessee Titans beat the Philadelphia Eagles for their best start since 2013. The Titans trailed by 14 in the third quarter before rallying for the lead.

COWBOYS 26, LIONS 24: Brett Maher kicked a 38-yard field goal as time expired, lifting Dallas over Detroit. Maher's fourth field goal was set up by Dak Prescott's 34-yard completion to running back Ezekiel Elliott on a deep throw after Matthew Stafford had put the Lions in front with a 38-yard touchdown to Golden Tate, their second TD connection of the day.

BENGALS 37, FALCONS 36: Andy Dalton threw a 13-yard touchdown pass to A.J. Green with 7 seconds remaining, lifting Cincinnati over Atlanta. Dalton moved the Bengals 75 yards in about four minutes.

TEXANS 37, COLTS 34, OT: Ka'imi Fairbairn took advantage of his second chance on a 37-yard field goal attempt, making it as time expired in overtime to give Houston a victory over Indianapolis.

PATRIOTS 38, DOLPHINS 7: Tom Brady threw for 274 yards and three touchdowns and New England handed Miami its first loss of the season. It denied the Dolphins (3-1) their first 4-0 start since Hall of Fame coach Don Shula's last season in 1995.

BEARS 48, BUCCANEERS 10: Mitchell Trubisky threw a career-high six touchdown passes — one shy of the NFL record — and Chicago pounded Tampa Bay.

JAGUARS 31, JETS 12: Blake Bortles threw two touchdown passes, including a 67-yarder to Donte Moncrief, and Jacksonville used a dominant defensive performance to handle New York.

PACKERS 22, BILLS 0: Aaron Rodgers and Jimmy Graham connected on their first touchdown pass of the year, and Gren Bay put together its most complete defensive effort of the season in a win over the Buffalo.

SAINTS 33, GIANTS 18: Alvin Kamara ran for three second-half touchdowns to lift New Orleans.

CHARGERS 29, 49ERS 27: Philip Rivers threw for three touchdown and Melvin Gordon rushed for 104 yards for Los Angeles.

SEAHAWKS 20, CARDINALS 17: Sebastian Janikowski, who had missed twice earlier in the game, kicked a 52-yard field goal as time expired.

RAIDERS 45, BROWNS 42, OT: Matt McCrane made a 29-yard field goal in overtime to win it for Oakland.

IN BRIEF

FORT WORTH, TEXAS
Former TCU QB Boykin charged in March attack

Former Texas Christian University quarterback Trevone Boykin has been formally charged with aggravated assault for allegedly attacking his girlfriend and breaking her jaw at his home in March.

Boykin was indicted Friday in Fort Worth and is free on bond. He denies the allegations.

Prosecutors say the attack was captured on security system video at Boykin's home in Mansfield.

The Seattle Seahawks released the 24-year-old Boykin from the team's practice squad shortly after reports of the attack surfaced.

It's not Boykins' first run-in with the law. He was arrested in Dallas last year on misdemeanor charges of public intoxication and marijuana possession, though the case was later dismissed. In 2016, he pleaded no contest to resisting arrest stemming from an incident shortly before the 2015 Alamo Bowl in San Antonio.

SOCHI, RUSSIA
Hamilton wins Russian GP with teammate's help

Lewis Hamilton won the Russian Grand Prix and closed in on his fifth Formula One title, but he's not happy.

Victory was handed to Hamilton by his Mercedes teammate Valtteri Bottas, who pulled over to let him through on orders from the team.

"It's never, ever in my whole life been the way that I wanted to win a race," said Hamilton, who said Mercedes overrode his objections to the switch. Passing Bottas "did not feel good."

Hamilton cruised to victory after the switch and now leads Ferrari's Sebastian Vettel by 50 points in the standings as both chase their fifth title.

LAS VEGAS
Knights continue healing process for Las Vegas

With the city reeling from the deadliest mass shooting in modern U.S. history, Golden Knights defenseman Deryk Engelland delivered an emotional 58-second speech last October that continues to echo through Las Vegas today.

Engelland's address came days after the Oct. 1 massacre during a pregame ceremony honoring victims and first responders. It ended with the reassurances: "We'll do everything we can to help you and our city heal."

As the one-year anniversary of the massacre that left 58 dead approaches, Vegas' beloved NHL team remains very much a part of the healing process, true to Engelland's words.

"Anything like that happens, you definitely want to keep helping the process of the healing," Engelland said following a recent preseason game as the Knights prepared for their second season. "I think last year was a good stepping stone and I think we can still do more this year."

US women take third straight World Cup title

By Doug Feinberg
The Associated Press

SAN CRISTOBAL DE LA LAGUNA, Spain — The United States continued its run of dominance on the biggest stages for women's basketball.

Brittney Griner scored 15 points to help the U.S. beat Australia 73-56 and win the FIBA Women's Basketball World Cup on Sunday night.

It was the third consecutive World Cup title for the U.S., something the country had never accomplished in its illustrious history. The victory gave the U.S. 10 World Cup gold medals and was the 22nd win in a row overall for the Americans dating back to the bronze medal game in 2006. That was the same year that Australia won its only World Cup title. The Americans lost to Russia in the semifinals and haven't lost since in the World Cup or Olympics.

Diana Taurasi, who scored 13 points, helped the U.S. get off to a strong start with a 10-0 lead. Australia could only get within three the rest of the way. It was the first time in the tournament that the U.S. didn't trail in a game. As the final seconds wound down, Taurasi hugged all her teammates and coaches on the bench.

The victory gave Sue Bird a fourth World Cup gold medal and fifth medal overall in the tournament. Both are the most for any player. It also made Dawn Staley the first person ever to win a World Cup title as a player, assistant and head coach.

ACES ON BRIDGE: BOBBY WOLFF

"The devil watches all opportunities."

— William Congreve

Follow the play in today's deal carefully — there will be a question at the end of the report. South first forced to game, then took control and used Blackwood to drive to six spades. When dummy came down, South saw that he had two possible losers; but the best plan to avoid a club loser would be to establish dummy's long hearts.

So South won the club lead, led a heart to the king and ace, won the diamond return and drew one round of trumps with the ace.

Declarer now cashed dummy's remaining top heart and ruffed a third heart with a high trump. When hearts split 4-2, declarer led his small trump to dummy's 10, putting the lead in dummy to allow him to ruff hearts for a second time.

The second ruff established dummy's last heart; only now could South could afford to draw West's last trump. South now led a diamond to dummy's ace and cashed dummy's last heart, pitching his remaining club loser.

South had his 12 tricks; could he or the defense have done differently — or better? First, West had a blind lead, but a diamond would have worked out better in disrupting the entries to dummy. Second, and key to the defense, was that West needed to give count in hearts at trick two, letting East duck his ace. That has the effect of preventing the establishment of the hearts. If you don't believe me, try it for yourself!

ANSWER: Which heart should you lead? It looks like declarer has four spades and no real extra shape in the minors, so if anyone is short in hearts, it will be dummy. If dummy is short in hearts, leading the king then working out whether to shift to clubs or continue hearts seems like a good idea.

DEAR ABBY

Mom sees lonely life ahead for easily wounded daughter

Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: My daughter, "Roxanne," married right out of high school. Eleven years later she finally woke up and realized the man of her dreams was a deadbeat. She has now been divorced as long as she was married, still looking for a good man who will love her and share a future with her.

She's very sensitive, and I don't know how to tell her she needs to change her attitude about life in general, because no one wants to hear her recite all the bad things that have happened to her since childhood. She has always had a hard time letting go of small slights, from things that go on at work to as far back as school or sibling feuds.

Roxanne is a wonderful, beautiful woman, and my heart breaks to think of her spending the rest of her life alone. Her dad and I won't live forever. I'm afraid if I tell her how I feel, she'll no longer want to confide in me and talk out her problems. (I am her sounding board.) I don't mind listening so she can get it out of her system, but how do I get her to let it go and move forward? -- MOM WHO LOVES HER IN KENTUCKY

DEAR MOM: You mean well, but it may be time to cut back on being your daughter's sounding board, which seems more like a dumping ground. Tell her you love her, but that repeating her unresolved grievances is getting her nowhere. She needs to talk to a licensed professional. Urge her to discuss these painful things with a therapist who can put her on a path to putting them behind her.

Dear Abby is written by Abigail Van Buren, also known as Jeanne Phillips, and was founded by her mother, Pauline Phillips. Contact Dear Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069.

HOROSCOPES BY HOLIDAY MATHIS

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — You'll do a sort of mental training. You'll steer your thoughts in such a way that creates a peaceful state. It will be easy this time, and you'll be able to build on this positive experience later when circumstances make it harder.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — The people you cherish will know it. They sense it in the tenderness of your eyes, the thoughtfulness of your words and the warmth of your being. You and your loved ones are rewarded equally in the exchange.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21) — To get faster at a thing takes training. Put yourself through the paces. Repeat the processes until you can do them more automatically, until the friction points wear smooth. Doing a thing well will be its own reward.

CANCER (June 22-July 22) — Thoughts will seem to bump up against one another, creating confusion and division within your own mind. Instead of taking on each clash as a battle to be sorted, get into some exercise and breathing. All will calm down.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — You listen well. Do they? This matters today. Make it known that you have an expectation regarding the quality of attention you receive from others. You deserve this, and there's a classy way to do it.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — There's an effect you're going for -- a reaction you'd like to get from others. You're not even aware of it, until you realize that it's not happening. Take it as an opportunity to fulfill an elusive need.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) — Don't let it get complicated. It doesn't have to be. Kindness is the way. Kindness is the choice through which all the other choices will be made clear.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21) — The task requires your emotional involvement. It requires you to relate to others, see it their way and lean into the unknown of interactions. A computer couldn't pull it off. The labor is a celebration of your humanity.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — The cleanest, most direct and most effective way to get your goal is through sacrifice. It gets the unpleasantness out of the way upfront. It will be harder. But there's something instantly gratifying about doing hard things.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Capricorn is a sea goat who climbs mountains while remembering where he came from -- the sea. You'll be recognized in your community yet stay connected to your emotional and spiritual source.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Because you will accomplish what you believe you can, it will be very effective to spend more time visualizing your desired outcome and hyping yourself up.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — You're driven to become better at what you do. However, you're not ready to handle a lot of attention just yet. Play it low-key. Keep learning. Tonight features a moment of accidental good luck.
