PCB officials cancel 3 events

Events have a total economic impact of $17 million

By Ed Offley
Special to The News Herald

PANAMA CITY BEACH — Two weeks after Hurricane Michael, life is slowly returning to normal in the beachfront community, but one thing is gone for good:

the 2018 fall tourism season. Mayor Mike Thomas announced Thursday morning that city officials have opted to cancel three special tourism events that in a normal year attract tens of thousands of visitors to the beach. They are the 2018 Fall Thunder Beach motorcycle rally, which was to have begun on Wednesday and run through Sunday; the Ironman Florida sports competition slated for Nov. 3; and the Emerald Coast Cruisin' antique car rally scheduled for Nov. 6-10.

"We are still not where we can have (special tourist) events yet," Thomas told City Council members during the regular meeting at city hall. "The Beach still has too much going on" with storm recovery efforts.

The city plans to resume its fall/winter event schedule with the Beach Home for the Holidays event scheduled at Aaron Bessant Park over the Thanksgiving weekend, Thomas said.

On paper, the Beach tourism economy appears to be facing a major hit because of the canceled events. In 2017, four events that have been canceled — Oktoberfest, Thunder Beach, Ironman and Emerald Coast Cruisin' — had a total economic impact of $17 million, said Richard Sanders, Tourist Development Council vice president for sports and special events.

For now, the loss of special event revenue to the local economy is being somewhat offset by the army of first

Downtown businesses reopening, hopeful hurricane damage will spur redevelopment

PANAMA CITY — Kara Rigby stood on Harrison Avenue, near the corner of East Fourth Street on Thursday, her sparkling, gold-sequined shoes a stark contrast to the gloomy, overcast sky and surrounding destruction.

Behind the lifelong Panama City resident, a man on a ladder inspected the facade of Vinny and Bay's Coffee and Eatery — one of Rigby's three downtown businesses. Across the street, dehumidifiers pumped air through tubes into the historic Martin Theatre, its art deco architecture still intact. In every direction, streets were filled with piles of debris shoveled out of damaged buildings. Where some might despair at the sight of the historic downtown that has struggled to revitalize for years, Rigby sees potential. "I think it gives everybody a clean slate to fix things back like they want," Rigby said. More than two weeks have passed since Hurricane Michael slammed into Panama City and caused widespread damage, including downtown. Like Rigby, some downtown shop owners plan to reopen soon or already have reopened. But more so than just digging out of the rubble, some business owners are cautiously optimistic that the destruction could stimulate the downtown redevelopment they've sought for years. Rigby said she planned to reopen the coffee shop this weekend. "People on social media have been cheering us along," Rigby said of her and other downtown businesses. "They're saying they can't wait to come visit us again,"

PANAMA CITY — Perched high on metal scaffolding, Jimmy Holloway quickly surveys an industrial-sized debris hauler pulling into a makeshift dump site on Redwood Avenue. Broken bits of live oaks that once shaded the Cove and some palm fronds are packed into the truck. Holloway, a debris monitor, estimated the truck is 75 percent full, a number he passes along to be entered into the official paperwork while waving the driver through to dump the latest load. Holloway, who has been commuting daily from Dothan, Alabama, and the rest of the debris removal crew have been working

Poll: Most Americans see a sharply divided nation

By Juana Summers
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — With just two weeks to go until the critical midterm elections, an overwhelming majority of Americans say the United States is greatly divided, according to an Associated Press-NORC Center for Public Affairs Research poll. Few Americans believe those stark divisions will get better anytime soon.

The newly released survey found that more than 8 in 10 Americans think the country is greatly divided about important values. Just 20 percent of Americans say they think the country will become less divided over the next few years, and 39 percent think things will get worse. A strong majority of Americans, 77 percent, say they are dissatisfied with the state of politics in the country.

The poll was conducted Oct. 11-14 in the final sprint to the midterm elections, in which President Donald Trump has been rallying his supporters to turn out to vote in November. Overall, 59 percent of Americans disapprove of how Trump, a Republican, is handling his job as president, while 40 percent of Americans approve.

How Americans view Trump divides along partisan lines, according to the poll. While 83 percent of Republicans approve of how Trump is handling his job, 92 percent of Democrats and 61 percent of independents say they do not approve.

According to the poll, nearly half of Americans say they aren't hearing enough from campaigns about the issues that matter most to them. Fifty-four percent of Democrats and 44 percent of Republicans say they are hearing too little about key issues.

Overall, top issues for Americans include health care, education, economic growth, Social Security and crime, each of which was called very important by at least three-quarters of Americans.

Fifty-eight percent of Americans say they are dissatisfied with the way things are going in the country, compared with 25 percent who say they are satisfied. But Americans are slightly more likely to be satisfied with the way things are going in their state or in their local community.

Majorities of Americans also say that they are dissatisfied with the gap between the rich and the poor, race relations and environmental conditions. But there are partisan splits. Eighty-three percent of Democrats are dissatisfied with the gap between the wealthy and the poor, compared with 43 percent of Republicans. Of environmental conditions, 75 percent of Democrats and 32 percent of Republicans say they are dissatisfied. And while 77 percent of Democrats say they're dissatisfied with race relations, about 50 percent of Republicans say the same.

Democrats and Republicans also are divided on how important they consider each of those issues to be. About 8 in 10 Democrats but no more than a third of Republicans call income inequality, environmental issues or racism very important.

since dawn as the city and county escalate their collection efforts to keep up with the mounting piles of tree limbs and hurricane rubble along roadsides. The city and county have contracted with Crowder Gulf, a disaster recovery and debris management specialist that has 70 vehicles on the road and still is ramping up.

"We'd be here for years if we tried to do it ourselves," said Panama City Public Works Director Neil Fravel. "People in the Cove would never get out."

Like all recovery efforts, debris removal requires a phased approach. The first phase was local municipalities trying to clear the roads the best they could. The second phase was "the push" when contractors like Crowder Gulf arrived and literally pushed all the debris to the edges of the road to fully clear the way. And now, the third phase is the first pickup, which in the wake of Hurricane Michael is a mammoth undertaking.

In the five days after the push ended, the contractors cleared the equivalent of one year's worth of normal yard waste pickup in Panama City, about 100,000 cubic yards.

And that's only the beginning. Shane Daugherty, the city's environmental services manager, estimated the total could end up being a staggering 2.5 million to 3 million cubic yards.

The first pass, Fravel said, is going to "the worst" and the longest as crews deal with piles 10 to 12 feet high. It could take up to four weeks before the trucks make it to every house in the city.

Officials are estimating it's going to take at least three passes before the majority of residents' debris is hauled away. Residents can help smooth the process by separating the debris into four types of piles — household items, yard debris, construction items and appliances — but officials also recognize many residents don't have space for four piles.

"Get the vegetative debris out first," Fravel said. "Then make room for everything else."

The scale of the project is unprecedented for the region. Officials are estimating they will need to open three additional temporary dump sites just in the city, one on U.S. 98, one at Mulberry Avenue and one at the old airport. The Mulberry Avenue site will be for construction debris, the others for vegetation.

And it's not as simple as just dumping the loads. Each pile of debris that comes in is carefully monitored, with GPS coordinates and other information tracked by a separate company to make sure the city and county will get their FEMA reimbursements. FEMA will fully reimburse the county for five days of pickup and partially reimburse the municipalities for the rest.

In the meantime, the pile at the Redwood Avenue site has grown at a rate that frankly stuns Fravel, who has been with the city through multiple hurricanes. Soon, he said, workers will have to start feeding the trees through chippers or risk the pile taking over the work space.

What will happen to the mulched bits is still being decided, Fravel said. In the past, the mulch has been sold to energy plants to burn for power, but this time there's so much of it that Fravel isn't sure there will be a market for it all.

But that's a problem for down the line, right now the focus is on the 70 trucks on the road, making sure all the documentation is there to get the maximum FEMA reimbursements and clearing the piles from in front of people's homes.

which underscores the importance of all of us sticking together."

Rigby notes that her other downtown businesses, The Maddie Hatter, an upscale children's clothing store, and Tom Foolery and Co., a women's clothing shop, sustained heavier damage and will be closed for some time.

"We might open Tom Foolery in a temporary location," Rigby said.

Jim Hayden, owner of The Bagel Maker on West Fourth Street, said the hurricane sucked off part of his business' roof and water flowed inside. But thanks to the help of staff and his wife, the bagel shop reopened from 7 a.m. to 1 p.m. on Friday.

"We have an amazing staff that stayed informed and my wife facilitated the cleaning," Hayden said. "We've been making product and we found ways to get potable water and ice."

Hayden said that while the hurricane caused severe damage, it also had basically washed downtown and freed it for potential redevelopment.

"Hopefully with an influx of money and Employee Sue Creel helps clean up C&G Sporting Goods in downtown Panama City on Thursday. Creel said the store, locally owned and operated since 1950, had some ceiling and floor damage, but should reopen next week with a big after-hurricane sale. [RICHARD GRAULICH/PBPOST.COM] influence, we can take what was damaged and rebuild it to make it better," Hayden said. "I just hope nobody goes out of business in the meantime."

Matt Wagner, vice president of revitalization programs for Main Street America, said disasters like a hurricane can help spur development. Main Street America is a non-profit that helps revitalize downtowns across the country.

"When faced with a disaster, it coalesces a community ... what you see is a much greater sense of importance for downtowns," Wagner said. "Downtowns have historically been the heart of pride for communities."

Wagner said other downtowns have revitalized themselves after similar disasters, such as the one in Greensburg, Kansas, destroyed by a tornado in 2007.

"After a lot of thoughtful planning, the downtown is heralded as one of the most green areas in the U.S.," Wagner said.

Joe Kelley, owner of the Funky Mermaid restaurant downtown, said he hoped businesses wouldn't relocate because of the disaster.

"I hope it just wipes the slate clean and gets some finances in here," Kelley said of the hurricane. "Downtown has a lot of unique features. ... I just want to see downtown thrive again."

Kelley reopened his downtown restaurant on Monday. The business had a limited menu of pizza and chili dogs for lunch on Tuesday.

"I was lucky and didn't have much damage," he said. "I'm getting a break of circumstances. ... I've had a lot construction people coming in and people who've been tarping stuff."

At Main Street Antiques downtown Tuesday morning, owner Liane Harding ran dehumidifiers in her shop and cleaned some merchandise of mold. The hurricane blew water into her store and knocked off her building's facade and sign. With the cleaning equipment though, all the merchandise was saved, Harding said.

Harding said she hopes to reopen within the next two weeks. Even more so, she hopes downtown will improve because of the hurricane.

"It's something all of us have been talking about," Harding said of her and other downtown business owners. "That the only good thing to come out of this nightmare is to get everything bigger and better than it was."

Harding said she plans to do her part by first replacing her building's facade.

"I always hated that facade I had," Harding said with a laugh. "This is a chance for change."

responders who swarmed into the region following the hurricane. Many hotels and condominiums on the Beach remain booked solid with first responders and residents displaced by the storm. That situation could remain for several months to come, officials said. In addition, the traffic volume along Panama City Beach Parkway remains well above average with the daily flow of first responder vehicles and supplies passing through the city to the hard-hit areas of Panama City and eastern Bay County.

The financial impact on the Panama City Beach economy and municipal budget is expected to be high, but not unbearable, City Manager Mario Gisbert said. Emergency overtime for city workers during the two-week pay period spanning the storm spiked from $561,000 to $1 million, but the city has adequate reserves to cover the costs pending application to the Federal Emergency Management Agency for relief, said Debbie Ward, the city's public information officer.

Gisbert noted that some city facilities closed in the storm's aftermath soon will reopen: Frank Brown Park will open today and The Boys and Girls Club at Frank Brown Park will open Monday. However, regular fall sports events at the park will not resume until Nov. 23.

SUN COAST ROOFING

EXPERIENCED HURRICANE DAMAGE ROOFING CONTRACTOR

WE WORK DIRECTLY WITH INSURANCE COMPANIES!

★★★★★ a year ago

We cannot describe how HAPPY we were through the whole experience. We had contacted Sun Coast Roofing at the fall home show 2016. We needed a new roof on our house and shed thanks to Hurricane Matthew. And thanks to Sun Coast Roofing! Jeff Fidler first of all, explained everything to us what would take place and did not deviate in any way from the excellent presentation. The work crew of about 9 were fantastic! Completed the job in a day and a half! Seriously, we were dumbfounded!! Not only did they have their own inspectors checking the work regularly, but we could not even find a NAIL on our property afterwards!

★★★★★ 7 months ago

I hired Rick and his company, Sun coast roofing. After hurricane season last year. My house was a mess. I was not looking forward to all the calls, paperwork, appt. Didn't even know where to start. Thanks to Rick I had no worries. He took care of everything from start to finish. The workmanship was great. I had no complaints whatsoever. I would not Hesitate one bit to hire them again.

★★★★★ 8 months ago

Sun Coast Roofing installed our new roof after damage from Hurricane Irma. Eric Johnsa represented the firm with an open and friendly demeanor. Eric was professional and knowledgeable. The work was completed over two days. The crew was efficient and cleaned up the yard. I didn't see any debris or nails after they left. We are still waiting on a final inspection from the city but at this point, we are satisfied customers. The roof is beautiful!

Central American migrants traveling with a caravan to the U.S. make their way Thursday to Pijijiapan, Mexico. [RODRIGO ABD/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS]

Sickness, fear in Mexico whittle away at caravan

By Mark Stevenson
The Associated Press

MAPASTEPEC, Mexico — Little by little, sickness, fear and police harassment are whittling down the migrant caravan making its way to the U.S. border, with many of the 4,000 to 5,000 migrants who resumed their journey Thursday complaining of exhaustion.

The group, many with children and even pushing toddlers in strollers, departed Mapastepec at dawn with more than 1,000 miles still to go before they reach the U.S. border.

They have advanced just 95 miles as the crow flies since thousands burst across Mexico's southernmost border six days earlier.

With the migrants still weeks, if not months, from reaching the U.S. border, the U.S. administration was planning to send 800 or more troops to the southern border at the direction of President Donald Trump, who has been stoking fears about illegal immigration ahead of the Nov.

6 midterm elections.

Defense Secretary Jim Mattis was expected to sign an order as early as Thursday authorizing the additional troops to support the Border Patrol, according to a U.S. official, who was not authorized to speak publicly about the details because the details had not yet been finalized and spoke on condition of anonymity.

On Thursday, the long column of migrants stretched for more than a mile as they left the town square in Mapastepec in far southern Mexico, where many spent the night.

The municipality of some 45,000 people, along with churches and volunteers, offered some medicine and donated water, clothing baby formula and baby bottles.

As they reached the highway, families with young children packed sidewalks asking for donations and rides to the next stop, Pijijiapan, about 25 miles further ahead. Melkin Claros, 34, was traveling with his 7-year old son and a teenage nephew and remained steadfast in his goal. "Everyone's objective is to arrive (in the United States)," he said, adding that he planned to request asylum because gangs made it impossible to live in Honduras.

"It's true you risk your life a lot here, but we risk more in our country."

Still, Mexican officials say nearly 1,700 have dropped out of the caravan to apply for asylum in Mexico, and a few hundred have accepted government offers to bus them back to their home countries.

Carlos Roberto Hernandez, of Yoro province in Honduras, dropped out after developing a rumbling cough during the scorching daytime heat and evening rains.

"We got hit by rain, and ever since then I've had a cold," Hernandez said. Asked Wednesday if he would make another attempt to reach the U.S., he said emphatically: "No. I'm going to make my life in Honduras."

Trump focusing on drug prices, high among voters' concerns

By Ricardo Alonso-Zaldivar
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Less than two weeks before the midterm elections, President Donald Trump is focusing on the cost of prescription drugs.

And Trump is linking the prices Americans complain about to one of his long-standing grievances: foreign countries the president says are taking advantage of U.S. research breakthroughs.

Health care is high among voters' election-year concerns. Trump has promised sweeping action to attack drug prices, both as president and when he was running for the White House.

He was scheduled to give a speech on drug prices Thursday at the Health and Human Services department.

In advance of that speech, HHS released a report that found U.S. prices for the top drugs administered in doctor's offices are nearly twice as high as in foreign countries. The list includes many cancer drugs. Medicare pays directly for them under its "Part B" coverage for outpatient care.

On Twitter, HHS Secretary Alex Azar said "the current international pricing system has put America in last place."

In most other economically advanced countries, governments take a direct role in setting drug prices. That's something the United States traditionally has avoided, and Republicans in particular are loath to do.

Azar said Medicare spent about $8 billion more for drugs in the study than if the prices paid by the program were scaled to international prices. Any push to dramatically lower prices here would meet resistance not only from drug-makers but from doctors, two of the most powerful lobbies.

Trump has harshly criticized the pharmaceutical industry, once asserting that the companies were "getting away with murder," a comment that sent pharmaceutical stocks tumbling. But it's largely been business as usual for drug-makers even as Trump has predicted "massive" voluntary price cuts.

A recent Associated Press analysis of prices for brand-name drugs found far more increases than cuts in the first seven months of this year. The analysis found 96 price hikes for every price cut.

At many hospitals worldwide, you don't pay, you can't leave

EDITOR'S NOTE: First in a two-part series on hospitals that detain patients if they cannot pay their bills.

By Maria Cheng
The Associated Press

NAIROBI, Kenya — Doctors at Nairobi's Kenyatta National Hospital have told Robert Wanyonyi there's nothing more they can do for him. Yet more than a year after he first arrived, shot and paralyzed in a robbery, the ex-shopkeeper remains trapped in the hospital.

Because Wanyonyi cannot pay his bill of nearly 4 million Kenyan shillings ($39,570), administrators are refusing to let him leave his fourth-floor bed.

At Kenyatta National Hospital and at an astonishing number of hospitals around the world, if you don't pay up, you don't go home.

The hospitals often illegally detain patients long after they should be medically discharged, using armed guards, locked doors and even chains to hold those who have not settled their accounts. Even death does not guarantee release: Kenyan hospitals and morgues are holding hundreds of bodies until families can pay their loved ones' bills, government officials say.

An Associated Press investigation has found evidence of hospital imprisonments in more than 30 countries worldwide, according to hospital records, patient lists and interviews with dozens of doctors, nurses, health academics, patients and administrators. The detentions were found in countries including the Philippines, India, China, Thailand, Lithuania, Bulgaria, Bolivia and Iran. Of more than 20 hospitals visited by the AP in Congo, only one did not detain patients.

"What's striking about this issue is that the more we look for this, the more we find it," said Dr. Ashish Jha, director of the Harvard Global Health Institute. "It's probably hundreds of thousands, if not millions of people, that this affects worldwide."

During several August visits to Kenyatta National Hospital — a major medical institution designated a Center of Excellence by the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention — the AP witnessed armed guards in military fatigues standing watch over patients. Detainees slept on bedsheets on the floor in cordoned-off rooms. Guards prevented one worried father from seeing his detained toddler.

Kenya's ministry of health and Kenyatta canceled several scheduled interviews with the AP and declined to respond to repeated requests for comment.

Health experts decry hospital imprisonment as a human rights violation. Yet the United Nations, U.S. and international health agencies, donors and charities have all remained silent while pumping billions of dollars into these countries to support their splintered health systems or to fight outbreaks of diseases including AIDS and malaria.

"People know patients are being held prisoner, but they probably think they have bigger battles in public health to fight, so they just have to let this go," said Sophie Harman, a global health expert at Queen Mary University of London.

Hospitals often acknowledge detaining patients isn't profitable, but many say it can sometimes result in a partial payment and serves as a deterrent.

Festus Njuguna, an oncologist at the Moi Teaching and Referral Hospital in Eldoret, about 300 kilometres northwest of Nairobi, said the institution regularly detains children with cancer who have finished their treatment, but whose parents cannot pay.

"It's not a very good feeling for the doctors and nurses who have treated these patients, to see them kept like this," Njuguna said.

Still, many officials openly defend the practice.

"We can't just let people leave if they don't pay," said Leedy Nyembo-Mugalu, administrator of Congo's Katuba Reference Hospital. He said holding patients wasn't an issue of human rights, but simply a way to conduct business: "No one ever comes back to pay their bill a month or two later."

Global health agencies and companies that operate where patients are held hostage often have very little to say about it.

The CDC provides about $1.5 million every year to Kenyatta National Hospital and Pumwani Maternity Hospital, helping to cover treatment costs for patients with HIV and tuberculosis, among other programs. The CDC declined to comment on whether it was aware that patients were regularly detained at the two hospitals or if it condones the practice.

Folks in rural parts of Panhandle ask: Where's the help?

By Tamara Lush
The Associated Press

PANAMA CITY — More than two weeks after the powerful eyewall of Hurricane Michael passed over Bay County, Mark Ward wonders when the power will work again. And the sewer. And the water.

"We've been living out of coolers. We've been grilling out." He points to a red cooler and two grills in front of his mobile home. He has to shout to be heard over the buzz of a generator.

Although electric, water and sewer service were restored to Panama City residents on Wednesday, those like Ward who live in the rural parts of Bay County still lack basic services.

"It's a struggle. You feel frustrated because our local government seems to care more about the tourism industry than the hard-working people," says the 49-year-old. "You go off some of these dirt roads that are still unpaved, these houses are crushed. These people have no resources."

County spokeswoman Valerie Sale says she understands why people in rural areas feel left behind.

"When you live that far away from a municipal area, there's a feeling of isolation," she said. "There's no question it's a challenge to reach those folks. Under normal circumstances it takes 45 minutes to an hour to get to some of those northern parts of the county."

Bay County is known for its sugar-sand beaches. Panama City Beach, which made it through relatively unscathed from the storm, is a mecca for spring breakers each year. Mexico Beach, another stunning community on the Gulf of Mexico, was almost obliterated by the storm. Stark, stunning visuals of the destruction there have been a staple of post-hurricane news coverage.

But the rural folks in Bay County say they feel invisible. About 180,000 people live in the county, and according to the Census, 14 percent of them live in poverty.

"Where's the help?" asks Ward.

He's one of the lucky ones in the Bayou George neighborhood. He has insurance. His mobile home was mostly spared. He has a generator, and he rigged a hand pump for the well.

His next-door neighbors didn't fare as well: Michael stripped their mobile home to a wood skeleton. They clung to debris, but finally ran for safety to Ward's home during the eye of the storm with a cat and her newborn kittens.

"I've got seven people in my house right now. Three bedrooms, two baths," said Ward. "They've been with me since the storm."

For the first week, he drove across the state line into Alabama for gas to run the generator. Gas has been easier to get locally in recent days, but lines are still long, he said. Because one of the people staying with him has diabetes, her insulin must remain cold, which is why they need to run the generator so much.

Ward's property beside the road is a tangle of oak trees, twisted metal and downed power lines. Without flinching, he steps over and under the wires as if they were rope. "Just tuck up under here," he says, ducking under a thick power line.

Sale, the county spokeswoman, says the Red Cross has roving emergency response vehicles, and a fire station in nearby Bayou George is a distribution point where groups have been dropping household items, food and tarps.

Ward says the neighbors have been relying more on each other.

He checks in frequently with a group of twenty-something men and women who live across the street in a mobile home on a few acres.

"You're good on your MRE's?" he asked them on a recent day. "If you want water, you know where my pump is. There's also a bathing station there. Bring a washrag. There's bars of soap."

"Yeah, I'll probably use that, but my dad's got a running creek he said we could go use," said Ronald Lauricella, who owns the mobile home on the property.

Their yard is a mishmash of downed limbs, piled-up garbage and two tents. Two dogs and a small kitten roam the property.

Lauricella is staying in one tent and keeping food in another.

The inside of his mobile home is another explosion of chaos. The front door and his bedroom window were blown out from the hurricane's winds. Water soaked the carpets and drywall.

"There's bugs everywhere," he said. "It smells. You can smell the mold growing."

Lauricella, 19, has no property insurance. He's in between jobs, and hopes to make it to an interview at a restaurant this week if he can scrape up enough money for gas. He figures it's his only hope to recover from the storm.

"No one's really sending help our way," Lauricella said.

BRIEF CASE

US mortgage rates edge up; 30-year at 4.86 pct.

Long-term U.S. mortgage rates edged slightly higher this week amid continued anxiety in financial markets as interest rates rise.

Home borrowing rates remain at their highest levels in more than seven years, with the key 30-year rate approaching 5 percent. Mortgage buyer Freddie Mac said Thursday the rate on 30-year, fixed-rate mortgages ticked up to an average 4.86 percent this week from 4.85 percent last week. A year ago, it stood at 3.94 percent.

The average rate on 15-year, fixed-rate loans rose to 4.29 percent this week from 4.26 percent last week.

LONDON UK fines Facebook over data privacy scandal

British regulators slapped Facebook on Thursday with a fine of 500,000 pounds ($644,000) — the maximum possible — for failing to protect the privacy of its users in the Cambridge Analytica scandal.

At the same time, European Union lawmakers demanded an audit of Facebook to better understand how it handles information, reinforcing how regulators in the region are taking a tougher stance on data privacy compared with U.S. authorities.

Britain's Information Commissioner Office found that between 2007 and 2014, Facebook processed the personal information of users unfairly by giving app developers access to their information without informed consent. The failings meant the data of some 87 million people was used without their knowledge.

Buckle up — again

Wall Street volatility from the summer is back with a vengeance

By Marley Jay
 The Associated Press

NEW YORK — If you're an investor who was lulled to sleep by the stock market's calm, steady gains this summer, you're wide awake by now.

Stocks have swooned over the last three weeks as investors worried about a sea of troubles, including rising interest rates, the trade tensions between the U.S. and China and slowing economies outside the U.S. All of which could impair profit growth for U.S. companies.

As of Thursday, the S&P 500 index had plunged 7.5 percent in about three weeks, with two separate six-day losing streaks. It hadn't had a streak of losses that long since right before the November 2016 presidential election. There have been a few big gains recently, including Thursday, but with four trading days left in October the index is on track for its worst month in seven years.

Another big loss could push the index into what Wall Street calls a "correction" — a drop of 10 percent or more from the latest high.

The recent turbulence in financial markets is a contrast to what investors have grown accustomed to in a bull market that has lasted more than 10 years, the longest in history. A hallmark of the past decade has been ultra-low interest rates, which the Federal Reserve used to promote growth in the aftermath of the 2008 financial crisis.

The Fed has been gradually raising interest rates over the past two years, after not having increased them since the recession. Those higher rates have been one catalyst for recent selling.

Market favorites like technology and consumer-focused companies have borne the brunt of the sell-off. Five of the six most valuable U.S. companies recently suffered a correction: Amazon, Microsoft, Alphabet, Berkshire Hathaway and Facebook are all down sharply from their recent highs, although some of those declines began this summer.

The VIX, an index called Wall Street's "fear gauge" because it measures how much volatility traders expect, recently reached its highest level since February.

The current skid for stocks is the third big swoon for the markets this year. The first was a dramatic downturn in late January and early February, when the S&P 500 lost 10 percent in just nine days as worries about a sharp slowdown in China's economic growth rattled markets around the world. That was followed by a less severe stumble in March.

But more recently stocks had been placid. Between late June and early October, the market didn't rise or fall as much as 1 percent in a single day. That was similar to the scenario in 2017, when the market drifted higher gradually and finished up 19.4 percent.

Soaring corporate profits, fueled by sweeping corporate tax cuts, powered the market's recovery this spring and summer. S&P 500 companies delivered second-quarter earnings growth of 25.2 percent, well ahead of forecasts. That helped send the S&P 500 to a new all-time high in September, erasing the losses from its correction in February.

But now doubts are emerging that a similar surge in earnings growth will rally markets out of their latest skid.

Companies began reporting their results for the third quarter last week. And while earnings growth for S&P 500 companies is expected to be around 22 percent, according to S&P Global Market Intelligence, some companies are painting a less-than-rosy outlook.

Several big companies, including Amazon, AT&T and Alphabet, have reported earnings or revenue this week that fell short of expectations. And some company executives are warning of rising costs related to the U.S.-China tariffs and inflation.

Investors flee tech stocks for utilities

By Marley Jay
 The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The stock market's plunge over the last three weeks has investors showing love to companies they had been ignoring.

Steady, plodding, un-sexy stocks like utilities, household goods makers and real estate investment trusts have done far better than the rest of the market during the recent stumble. And Wall Street is now shunning the stocks that have been leading the market over the last decade, like technology and consumer-focused companies.

The S&P 500 index, the main measuring stick for the U.S. market, has dropped 9.2 percent since Oct. 3 as of Wednesday. The Nasdaq composite, which has a high concentration of tech companies, has slumped 11.4 percent.

Stocks started skidding when a combination of strong economic data and comments from the Federal Reserve led to a big jump in interest rates. Investors began to worry that interest rates would go higher than they expected, and that those increased rates would slow down economic growth. That's been particularly damaging to high-flying stocks like Amazon and Netflix because investors who buy them are expecting many years of strong profits that can be eroded by climbing rates.

"Those sectors are particularly vulnerable because they're (valued) based on cash flows longer into the future," says Kate Warne, an investment strategist for Edward Jones.

Meanwhile investors are worried that growth in company profits will slow down, and the U.S.-China trade dispute continues to drag on. All of that made investors wary of investing in companies that depend on economic growth, like technology, industrial and consumer-focused firms.

Tech and retail companies have done far better than the rest of the stock market since the Great Recession of 2008-09, with favorites like Apple, Amazon and Netflix racking up huge gains year after year.

No stock rises forever, and with that much to worry about, maybe it's not a surprise that companies that depend on economic growth would suffer some bumps and bruises. But it's been quite a turnaround: companies like Amazon, Caterpillar and Nvidia are bringing up the rear in the S&P 500 while companies like Walgreens, Conagra and PPL are leading the way.

Stocks surge on solid earnings

By Marley Jay
 The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Strong results from major companies including Microsoft and Visa helped U.S. stocks bust out of another losing streak Thursday. The rally wiped out part of the market's plunge from the day before, but stocks are still down sharply over the past three weeks.

Technology companies soared as Microsoft, Visa and Xilinx rallied after their quarterly reports, while Twitter and Comcast led the way for internet and media companies. Ford's results helped consumer-focused stocks.

Some encouraging economic news helped stabilize markets. The Commerce Department said orders to U.S. factories for major manufactured goods grew in September, and the increase was larger than analysts expected.

In Europe, European Central Bank President Mario Draghi said the region's economy is still growing at a solid clip even though there are signs it has weakened somewhat recently. But Asian markets took big losses, as the U.S. market did the day earlier.

The S&P 500 index jumped 49.47 points, or 1.9 percent, to 2,705.57. The Dow Jones Industrial Average rose 401.13 points, or 1.6 percent, to 24,984.55 after rising as much as 520 points during the day. The Nasdaq surged 209.93 points, or 3 percent, to 7,318.34 after its biggest drop in seven years.

The S&P 500 had index plunged 9.2 percent since Oct. 3 as investors worried about climbing interest rates and the effects of the U.S.-China trade dispute. The Nasdaq plummeted 11.4 percent through Wednesday.

Investors are worried that rising interest rates and disputes with trading partners could hurt the economy. They will get more insight into how the U.S. is doing early Friday when the government reports on economic growth during the third quarter. Experts think the country's gross domestic product grew 3.3 percent from July to September, according to FactSet.

Florida's low-cost schools have high value

Florida's K-12 public schools are among the best in the nation. Find that surprising? Well, if so, you might be mired in the misguided way we have been taught to think about education progress, according to Stan Liebowitz, an economics professor at the University of Texas at Dallas, and Matthew Kelly, a UTD research fellow.

They have authored a new report analyzing education data, which is featured in the November issue of the libertarian magazine Reason, and their study should cause us to rethink what we think of our schools and our state's education policies.

Liebowitz and Kelly looked at the best known graders of state education systems and how they have led the public to believe "the highest-quality state educational systems tend to be in big-spending states in the Northeast or Upper Midwest."

The narrative, they write, then becomes: "These places apparently honor and respect teachers, while Southern states inexplicably abhor them. But the cheapskates in cheap states get their just desserts: Sophisticated northern jurisdictions grow ever smarter, while stingy conservative backwaters sink into ever-lower depths of ignorance. The solution is obvious: Pay up or your kids will suffer."

Well, to Liebowitz and Kelly, the "obvious" is really not all that obvious.

Children in the low-cost Sun Belt are not suffering academically because of low spending.

Liebowitz and Kelly fault the grading methodology: lumping test scores in with metrics that "distract from true student performance," such as education spending, graduation rates and pre-K enrollment, which have little to do with what actually occurs in the classroom.

So, Liebowitz and Kelly zeroed in on true measures of student progress: results of standardized tests for math, reading and science taken by fourth- and eighth-graders under the National Assessment of Education Progress, commonly known as "The Nation's Report Card."

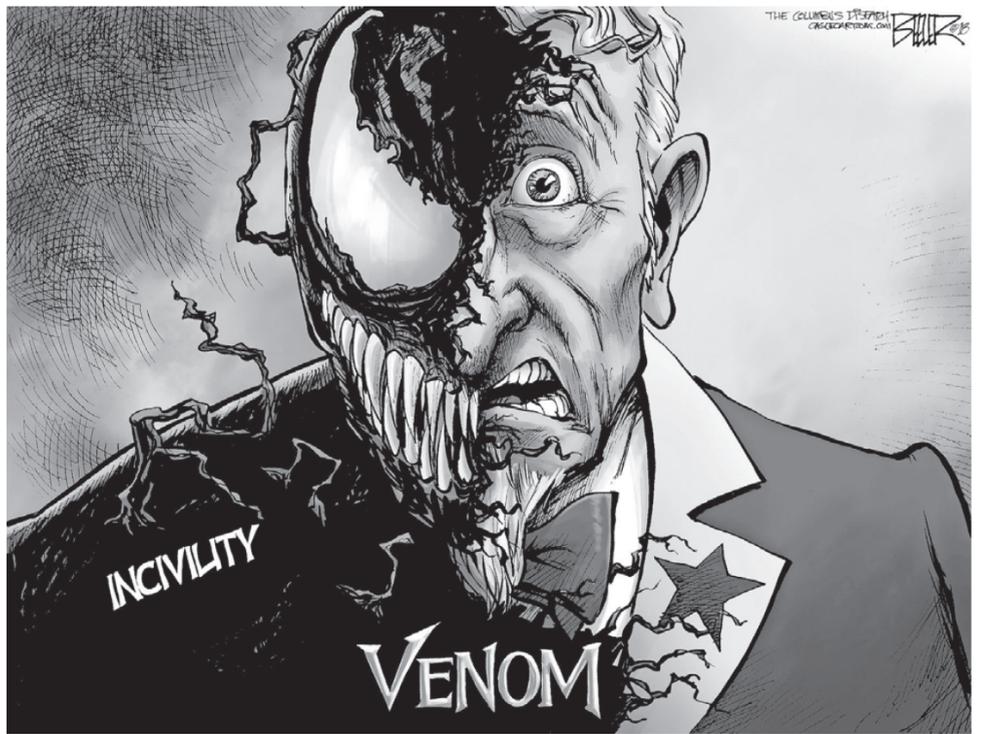

Furthermore, unlike the graders, they sifted the test data demographically so they could compare, for example, how black students in Florida scored on the NAEP relative to black students in Minnesota. The demographic component is critical because the ranking lobby favors predominantly white states that spend big, yet don't face the challenge of educating a large pool of students with varying ethnic and socioeconomic backgrounds, as found in Florida, Texas, Arizona and California.

Liebowitz and Kelly suggest predominantly white states skew traditional rankings because white students tend to do better on standardized tests. Thus, as they wrote in their actual study, "conventional state rankings" simply become "little more than a proxy for a jurisdiction's demography."

Ultimately, Liebowitz and Kelly compared test results with state education spending, as adjusted for each state's cost of living. Generally, when combining test results, spending and demographics, Sun Belt states routinely outperform their northern counterparts. "They're getting the most bang for their education buck," the researchers note.

ANOTHER VIEW

Price gouging during a natural disaster

Walter Williams

Thirteen states — Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Indiana, Louisiana, Mississippi, New York, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia and West Virginia — have enacted laws to combat what is seen as price gouging in the wake of natural disasters. Price gouging is legally defined as charging 10 to 25 percent more for something than you charged for it during the month before an emergency. Sellers convicted of price gouging face prison terms and fines.

Price gouging in the wake of natural disasters is often seen as evil exploitation by sellers to rip off desperate customers. Let's hold off on that conclusion until after you give thought to some very important questions. First let's see what we can agree upon.

When a natural disaster occurs or is anticipated, supply conditions change. There is going to be less of what people want and need. Under such conditions, what actions are consistent with the public good? My answer is that people should voluntarily use less of everything and waste nothing. That would include economizing on water, gasoline, food and anything else necessary for survival.

Take the case of a hurricane like Florence. Let's assume evacuation 200 miles or so inland would guarantee safety for North Carolinians. One family's car has three-quarters of a tank of gas, more than enough to drive to safety. Another family's car has less than a quarter-tank of gas, which is not enough to drive away from danger. We can multiply this scenario by tens of thousands of families in their predicament.

Here's my question: Who should forgo purchasing gas in the storm-threatened area? My answer would be all those people who have enough gas to drive to safety. By not purchasing gas, they'd make more gas available for those who really need the gas in order to drive to safety. We also might ask how considerate and caring it would be to their fellow North Carolinians who desperately need gas for people who have enough to evacuate to purchase gas just to top off their tanks.

If people won't consider the needs of their fellow man voluntarily, the North Carolina attorney general could station government officials at each gasoline station to determine who should be permitted to purchase gas.

Another method would be for the governor, mayors and church and community leaders to admonish North Carolinians to purchase gasoline only if they really need it. That way, plenty of gas would be available for those with nearly empty tanks.

What I think would make gas available to those who really need it are rising prices. Suppose the pre-hurricane price of gas was $2.60 a gallon. As the hurricane approaches, dealers could let the price rise to $4 a gallon. That would give families who have enough gas to evacuate incentive to voluntarily forgo purchasing gasoline. Their voluntary decision would make more gas available for people who desperately need it. By the way, gas available at $4 a gallon seems more preferable than gas stations shut down because they have sold out of gas at $2.60 a gallon.

You might reluctantly agree that allowing prices to rise during a natural disaster helps allocate resources, but that's not the intention of sellers who raise prices. Higher prices create incentives for suppliers of all kinds of goods to pitch in to help to restore people's lives.

Do you have an irrational fear of Halloween?

Danny Tyree

My son Gideon will not be trick-or-treating this year.

It's not because of any fear of ghosties and ghoulies, mind you. We decided last year his advancing age meant 2017 would be the last hurrah for the door-to-door begging.

Oh, he still loves the holiday and will be reprising his fortune-teller routine at a Halloween In The Park event, but I don't want him to be one of those teens (and post-teens) who just can't outgrow hogging the treats meant for tykes.

Here's a rule of thumb: if you're old enough to have heard Johnny Cash sing at Folsom Prison, you and your buddies are probably too old to look cute going from house to house collecting fun-size Snickers bars in a black-and-white-striped jailbird costume.

Anyway, I mentioned fear earlier because while researching goblins and such, I ran across the term "samhainophobia" — the irrational fear of Halloween.

Samhainophobia, of course, is named for Halloween's precursor Samhain, the sacred festival that marked the end of the Celtic calendar year. Can you imagine a Celtic New Year's Eve? ("Should old acquaintance be forgot and never brought to mind/ Should old acquaintance be forgot — hey, that Druid bared his behind!") Samhainophobia is closely linked to phasmophobia (fear of ghosts), wiccaphobia (fear of witchcraft), nyctophobia (fear of darkness) and ball-dropophobia (fear of Ryan Seacrest crashing your Celtic New Year's Eve celebration).

At least Halloween gives us one night to watch little ghosts running around in nice clean sheets instead of politicians airing dirty laundry.

Sorry, I used to suffer from claustrophobia myself, so I'll try to empathize with samhainophobes and the inexplicable levels of discomfort they endure at this time of year. I guess I had a sheltered childhood. The neighborhoods I trick-or-treated in were so lame that the creepy old hermits cleverly tried stuffing the candy bars and taffy apples with Norelco electric shavers. At least the X-ray technicians got to snooze on the job. I realize today's weird weather patterns can lead to anxiety at this season. You know, like when the merest hint of an early snow threatens vital supply lines. ("There's a run on toilet paper! We can't t.p. any of the houses down the block. Maybe we can vandalize the neighbors' homes with milk and bread.")

I don't see classic monsters being able to cause a lot of trouble nowadays. If Dracula took his son out for a simple drink of blood, social justice warriors would swoop down on them and harass them into submission. ("You're associated with October — the same month that contains Columbus Day. How can you look at yourselves in the mirror? No, that's not your pal Wolfman coming to the rescue. That's part of our organization howling at the moon because of Dwight Eisenhower winning the 1952 election.")

No, the real dangers of Halloween 2018 include situations more like unscrupulous doctors chasing skeletons down the street and yelling, "Here! Take this opioid prescription! It's good for what ails you!"

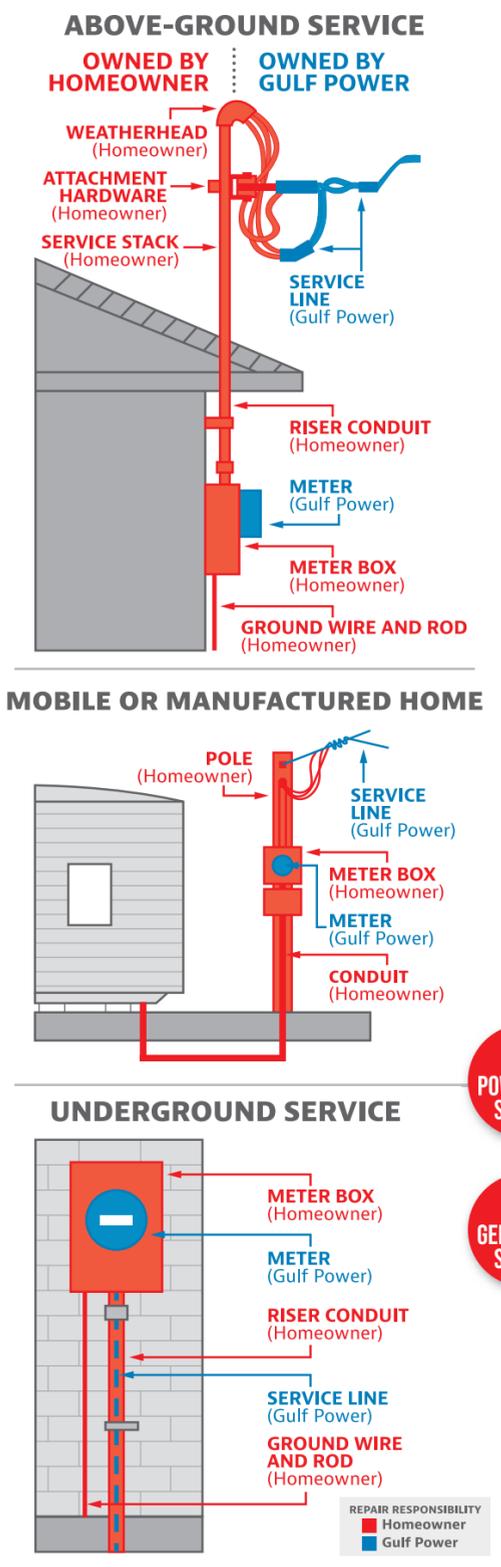

Perhaps the greatest Halloween-related fear afflicts trivia buffs who know that the first jack-o'-lanterns were actually made from turnips — and that the next generation of jack-o'-lanterns might very well be made from KALE! Be afraid. Be very afraid.

"I hear the trends a-comin' / They're rollin' 'round the bend / And I ain't had no real food / Since I don't know when ..."

DAMAGE TO YOUR HOME'S SERVICE CONNECTION

Steps to restore power if your home's service connection is damaged.

- 1 Know what you need to repair
 - Homeowner's own and are responsible for electrical equipment attached to the house (service stack, attachment hardware, riser and meter box) and the pole with an attached meter box for mobile or manufactured homes.
 - Gulf Power is responsible for the wire or service line to the house and the electric meter.
 - If the homeowner's equipment is damaged, repairs will be needed before Gulf Power can connect service.
- 2 Seek a licensed electrician
 - Do not hire an unlicensed electrician. It could create safety hazards and possibly delay your power from being connected.
- 3 Do not attempt to fix the damage yourself
 - It could create safety hazards and possibly delay your power from being connected.
- 4 Make sure repairs pass required county inspections
 - *Check with your county for inspection requirements related to Hurricane Michael.
- 5 Notify Gulf Power at 1-800-225-5797 when you are able to receive power.
 - Ensure all of the steps above are complete and you are safely able to receive power.

⚠️ POWERLINE SAFETY
Downed power lines pose a threat as power is restored
 Treat any downed wire as if it is energized because you can't tell by looking at it if it is live or not. Avoid anything a downed line is touching.

⚠️ GENERATOR SAFETY
Never plug a generator into home wiring or outlets
 This extremely dangerous practice can cause a fire in your home and can electrocute you or a lineworker. Plug appliances directly into the generator.

Never use a generator in enclosed or partially-enclosed spaces
 Carbon monoxide from generators can't be seen or smelled and can cause death. Operate your generator outside and keep it dry.

PANAMA CITY — For the past couple of weeks, Wanda Brannon and her daughter, Sirena Foster, have traveled across Panama City in a Mercury Voyager.

Brannon, 66, weighs 350 pounds and can't walk.

Because she lost her wheelchair during Hurricane Michael, she's been mostly confined to the passenger-side seat of the van, driven around Panama City by Foster to wherever they can pick up food and supplies.

"I just want to be able to really lie down somewhere," Brannon said.

On Thursday, Brannon and

Foster drove to Daffin Park in Millville, not far from where Brannon's College Avenue home of the past 20 years was destroyed. Brannon gets teary eyed when she talks about how she felt the house shake Oct. 10 as she was praying in her bathroom for God to save her.

Millville's iconic Gene's Oyster Bar to reopen

PANAMA CITY — Inside Gene's Oyster Bar, the bottles of ketchup still stand upright on a wooden shelf ready and waiting for all the utilities to be turned back on and the first customers to arrive after Hurricane Michael.

"We fared very well," said owner Ann Bruner, who was at the shop to meet with a pest control specialist on Wednesday. "We're going to be opening as soon as we can after we get power, and we are going to have Cedar Key oysters."

While most of Millville looks like a "a war zone" as Bruner put it, the iconic oyster bar near the corner of Sherman Avenue and East Third Street made it through the storm with minimal damage. There was a tarp over the kitchen's roof where a few tin shingles lifted up, but other than that the storm seemed to happen around the building.

Across the street, so many trees have fallen that when the brush is cleared away the oyster bar's patrons might have a view of Watson Bayou from the benches outside. Just three doors the other way, the storm savaged the

Donations pouring in for Bay School District students

WEST BAY — At a time when many Bay District Schools students might be feeling completely alone after their homes and possessions were destroyed by Hurricane Michael, hundreds of donations and thousands of dollars in contributions show the entire country is behind them.

The school district is in the middle of two mega charity drives to address the urgent needs of their 28,000 students and 3,500 teachers. The most pressing need, according to Sharon Michalik, director of communications, is school supplies — pencils, crayons, backpacks, notebooks, etc. — which will be distributed to students directly at each school.

"Basically, whatever each student had in their backpack at the start of August needs to be replaced," Michalik said.

"Parents do not need to worry about trying to go out and forage for crayons and paper and notebooks," she added.

Supplies are being collected at West Bay Elementary

Despite being in the poorer part of Bay County, many people still count Millville as home, a community that was briefly a city in the early 20th century before becoming part of Panama City proper. At one point a booming area, Millville has stagnated during the past couple of decades, home to mostly working-class residents.

As people make their way to and from Daffin for food, supplies or a hot shower, smoke can be seen wafting out of the WestRock paper mill, a symbol for both its namesake and how the industry shaped the area in the early days.

Natasha Whitley, of Springfield, raises her hand and praises volunteers after leaving with hot meals for her family at Daffin Park on Thursday.
 [RICHARD GRAULICH/PBPOST.COM]

County like Lynn Haven have received media and governmental attention, smaller communities and towns like Millville and nearby Springfield have remained largely ignored. At least, its residents feel that way.

"I don't hear anyone talking about us," Paul Weeks said.

It has been mostly volunteer-run projects that have catered to these communities. On this day, a group of volunteers drove out from Santa Rosa Beach to offer food and supplies. The effort is the byproduct of Hannah Martin, a broker associate at The Premier Property Group, and Jessica Proffitt Bracken, president of Proffitt PR.

Martin was in New Orleans when Hurricane Michael hit. Martin, who has been involved with philanthropic efforts in the past, said she was devastated as she saw news reports of how the area had been ravaged by Michael.

"It was truly the most devastating thing I have ever seen in my life," Martin said.

Within a couple of days, Martin and Proffitt were raising funds and support to go out to different communities to help people. Largely through social media, the duo was able to quickly raise thousands of dollars and amassed dozens of volunteers eager to help. The Sonder Project, the charitable arm of 360 Blue Properties, offered its support within a week or so, feeding thousands in the process.

"We see this as neighbors helping neighbors," Sonder Project CEP Chad Zibelman said.

One such neighbor who was out and about Thursday was Carrie Campbell as she handed out hamburgers and hot dogs to people coming into the tent. While some took enough for lunch, others took three or four boxes of food at a time, knowing they would need it for later.

"I felt like just donating supplies was not enough anymore," the Santa Rosa Beach resident said. "I had to be here."

Near the two tents Martin and Proffitt's volunteers are working, the Red Cross is set up nearby. FEMA also has recently set up a comfort station, equipped with restrooms and showers. Bags of ice also are on hand, a commodity treated like a luxury these days in the area.

Genease Martin-dale said she hopes this kind of support stays in the area, a place where many cannot travel far from because of a lack of transportation.

"I just filed my claim with FEMA," Martin-dale said, adding she was unsure on when she would hear back from the agency.

As Foster gets her supplies to her mother, she wonders aloud what will be next for them.

"We've never seen anything like this before," Foster said.

warehouse for the family business Dan's Aluminum, which remains open but co-owner Connie Denham said the damage "is as bad as it looks." And at nearby Boyette and Casey, the storm convinced the store owners it was time to sell.

It's a situation that hurts Bruner's soul, she said, as she drives down streets she's known her whole life.

"I know where I'm at," she said, but at the same time "I don't realize I'm on the same road."

Outside it's all different, but it's still all the same when you step inside Gene's, which has been open since 1967. The ketchup is still on the shelf. The old-fashioned Coca-Cola machine is still there. The menu is still on the wall. And the chairs are still tucked into the counter, waiting for customers with an appreciation for Cedar Key oysters.

It's a little piece of normal, and Bruner can't wait to give back to the community.

"I thank all my customers," Bruner said. "And we will have oysters."

The opening date has not been set yet, but will be posted on the Gene's Oyster Bar Facebook page soon, Bruner said.

School and Deer Point Elementary School, a district warehouse and even Michalik's house, though the district would prefer larger donations and 18-wheelers be sent to the warehouse.

With Michalik estimating that more than half of their student population lost everything in the storm, the district also is collecting clothing to outfit students for school, with the goal of providing four shirts, two bottoms, a package of socks, a package of underwear, new shoes and a jacket or sweatshirt for every student.

The clothing will be distributed at six sites next week, with parents going to the site, filling out a form detailing what they need, and returning the next day with their ID to pick up their items. The sites will be staffed by bus drivers and Michalik said they hope to fill most orders in the two weeks before school starts, but the sites will run through the first week of school for those families who cannot get to the sites in time.

When school returns, district officials will be "extremely flexible" with the dress codes to take into account that many students had their clothes destroyed and many families do not have the money — or the ability because of the high number of closed businesses — to purchase more.

The district also has started a GoFundMe account, managed by the Bay Education Foundation, that Michalik said will give the district the flexibility to purchase any supplies they need. The campaign has raised almost $16,000 of the $25,000 goal, with donations coming in from across the country.

"We are extremely overwhelmed and heart-warmed by the generosity," Michalik said.

Donations can be mailed or brought to West Bay Elementary, 14813 School Drive, Panama City Beach, FL 32413; or Deer Point Elementary, 4800 County 2321, Panama City, FL 32404, from 9 a.m. to noon Monday through Thursday. UF/IFAS helps hard-hit North Florida centers

GateHouse Media
Florida staff report

GAINESVILLE — Scientists at the University of Florida Institute of Food and Agricultural Sciences North Florida Research and Education Center — particularly its Marianna facility — may take a while to fully recover their research after it was damaged by Hurricane Michael, according to administrators.

In Marianna, five irrigation systems were turned over and damaged, according to Glen Aiken, director of the UF/IFAS North Florida REC. The center's perimeter fence took hits from falling trees and limbs, as well. Buildings at Marianna sustained damage to roofs, siding and doors, a press release from UF/IFAS said.

The Florida Foundation Seed Producers — adjacent to the main Marianna operation — suffered extensive damage to its peanut facility. After the storm, they moved out hundreds of tons of seed peanuts to preserve their quality.

At the Beef Unit and overall animal operation at Marianna, miles of electric fencing fell victim to numerous trees blown down on them, which makes it tough to keep the cows in their pastures, said

Jerry Fankhauser, assistant director of the Florida Agricultural Experiment Station. The bull test station is also challenged the bulls can't be put back into their designated paddocks.

These losses likely will impact current and future field research, in addition to planned research efforts in early 2019, Fankhauser and Aiken said.

Aiken said he hopes to meet with center faculty Thursday or Friday to get a full report on the damage to each of their research projects.

"Growing seasons are messed up for everybody," he said.

NFREC's Quincy facility also sustained damage to greenhouses and a shed in addition to tree limbs on the ground.

Aiken credits his faculty and staff for coming through a rough situation with their heads held high, the release said. After NFREC staff got past their personal hardships, employees did their part to return the center to a sense of normalcy.

Five employees from the farm crew at the UF/IFAS West Florida REC in Jay helped clear trees from fence lines and replaced fences that were destroyed. Two farm crew members from the Range Cattle Research and Education Center in Ona, Florida, helped replace fences.

The North Florida REC — Suwannee Valley provided labor and equipment, as well. Electricians and other staffers from the Plant Science Research and Education Unit in Citra and the UF campus in Gainesville have helped get generator power and assisted with overall cleanup, according to the release.

"It is amazing how much progress was made in just a few days with the outside assistance we received," Aiken said. "Last Monday, the job looked almost too overwhelming for there to be an end; however, on Friday, there was enough progress made to make the faculty and staff see some distant light."

Man detained in Florida in mail-bomb case

By Michael Balsamo, Eric Tucker and Colleen Long
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Federal authorities took a man into custody Friday in Florida in connection with the mail-bomb scare that earlier widened to 12 suspicious packages, the FBI and Justice Department said.

The man was identified by law enforcement officials as Cesar Sayoc, 56, of Aventura, Florida. He was arrested at an auto parts store in the nearby city of Plantation.

Court records show Sayoc has a history of arrests.

Law enforcement officers were seen on television examining a white van, its windows covered with an assortment of stickers, in the city of Plantation in the Miami area. Authorities covered the vehicle with a blue tarp and took it away on the back of a flatbed truck.

The stickers included images of American flags and what appeared to be logos of the Republican National Committee and CNN, though the writing surrounding those images was unclear.

President Donald Trump said he expected to speak about the investigation at a youth summit on Friday.

The development came amid a coast-to-coast manhunt for the person responsible for a series of explosive devices addressed to Democrats including former President Barack Obama, former Vice President Joe Biden and Hillary Clinton.

Law enforcement officials said they had intercepted a dozen packages in states across the country. None had exploded, and it wasn't immediately clear if they were intended to cause physical harm or simply sow fear and anxiety.

Earlier Friday, authorities said suspicious packages addressed to New Jersey Sen. Cory Booker and former National Intelligence Director James Clapper — both similar to those containing pipe bombs sent to other prominent critics of President Donald Trump — had been intercepted.

Investigators believe the mailings were staggered. The U.S. Postal Service searched their facilities 48 hours ago and the most recent packages didn't turn up. Officials don't think they were sitting in the system without being spotted. They were working to determine for sure. The officials spoke to The Associated Press on condition of anonymity to discuss an ongoing investigation.

The FBI said the package to Booker was intercepted in Florida. The one discovered at a Manhattan postal facility was addressed to Clapper at CNN's address. An earlier package had been sent to former Obama CIA Director John Brennan via CNN in New York.

Attorney General Jeff Sessions said Friday the Justice Department was dedicating every available resource to the investigation "and I can tell you this: We will find the person or persons responsible. We will bring them to justice."

Vice President Pence makes campaign pitch for DeSantis

By Lloyd Dunkelberger
The News Service of Florida

JACKSONVILLE — In a clear signal that the final trajectory of his campaign will be shaped by his alliance with President Donald Trump, Republican gubernatorial candidate Ron DeSantis was joined Thursday by Vice President Mike Pence at a Jacksonville rally.

Pence, accompanied by his wife, Karen, and White House adviser Kellyanne Conway, assured the former congressman and a crowd of about 500 supporters at the Prime Osborn Convention Center that DeSantis will have Trump's full support.

"I'm here to tell you. It won't be any great surprise to you. Ron DeSantis has been one of the strongest advocates for the Trump agenda in the Congress of the United States. And President Donald Trump and I support him 100 percent," Pence said.

That support will be amplified by a Trump rally that will be held in Lee County on Wednesday, less than a week before the Nov. 6 election.

DeSantis, who lives outside Jacksonville in Ponte Vedra Beach and served three terms in Congress before stepping down last month, used Trump's support to propel himself to a victory over the better-funded Agriculture Commissioner Adam Putnam in the Aug. 28 Republican primary for governor.

And now in a general-election campaign against Democrat Andrew Gillum, DeSantis is emphasizing his support from the president in an apparent effort to energize Republican voters and draw them to the polls.

He is also doubling down on his attacks on Gillum, raising questions about the Tallahassee mayor accepting a pricey ticket to attend the Broadway musical "Hamilton" from an undercover FBI agent who Gillum believed to be a developer looking to invest in Tallahassee. The issue was at the center of the candidates' final acrimonious debate Wednesday night at Broward College.

"He didn't pay for it. He lied to the people of Florida," DeSantis told the Jacksonville crowd. "He's got all these excuses. This issue is about integrity. It's not about black or white. It's about right or wrong."

Gillum, who is trying to become the first African-American elected as Florida's governor, has suggested race is playing an issue in DeSantis' attacks. He said he got the ticket from his brother.

In a Facebook post Tuesday, Gillum said DeSantis was suggesting "somehow I haven't deserved what I've gotten — I'm unethical, participate in illegal and illicit activities, I mean you name it."

"The goal is obviously to use my candidacy as a way to reinforce, frankly, stereotypes about black men," he said.

But both DeSantis and Pence slammed Gillum on a host of other issues, including his support for dismantling the U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement agency and his plan to raise Florida's corporate income taxes by $1 billion to pay for teacher salaries.

"We will never abolish ICE," Pence said, as long as Trump is president, Gov. Rick Scott is elected to the U.S. Senate and DeSantis is governor. "We'll build a wall and we will fix this broken immigration system once and for all."

Pence and DeSantis also criticized Gillum for his support of the Dream Defenders' group, which DeSantis characterized as a "radical" organization that aims to undermine law enforcement.

Pence called Gillum "just one more voice of the resistance."

"His politics, his policies look more like Bernie Sanders' Vermont than the Sunshine State," Pence said. Pence joined DeSantis in Jacksonville after touring damage from Hurricane Michael in the Panhandle with Scott, who is running against Democratic U.S. Sen. Bill Nelson. Pence said the Trump administration is fully committed to helping the state in its rebuilding efforts, including repairing Tyndall Air Force Base near Panama City.

Pence also spoke briefly about pipe bombs that were sent this week to several prominent critics of Trump, including 2016 Democratic presidential nominee Hillary Clinton.

"We condemn these attempted acts of violence in the strongest possible terms," Pence said, adding the investigation is the FBI's "highest priority" and that "those responsible will be brought to justice."

DeSantis was also joined at the rally by his wife Casey, a Jacksonville television personality, and his running mate, state Rep. Jeanette Nunez of Miami. U.S. Rep. John Rutherford of Jacksonville and U.S. Rep. Ted Yoho of Gainesville also spoke in support of DeSantis' campaign.

Child care centers are being set up on many of the school campuses for employees only and they are hoping to hire many experienced, and qualified, CDA or child-care credentialed employees.

The district will be holding a job fair for those looking for work with the necessary credentials at the Nelson Building, 1311 Balboa Ave., from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Tuesday. They will be accepting applications and interviewing on site and intend to begin the child care programs on, or before, the week of Nov. 12. Bring ID, Social Security card (if possible) and evidence of your mandatory child care training (if possible) with you to the job fair. The more documentation you can bring, the easier it will be to make quick hires.

Experts will be at the job fair to discuss hours, locations and pay rates with interested applicants. Given the emergency nature of the situation, this is the only job fair planned at this time.

DeSantis' health plan calls for more patient choices

By Christine Sexton
The News Service of Florida

TALLAHASSEE — Less than two weeks before Election Day, Republican gubernatorial nominee Ron DeSantis has released a plan that he promises would help transform Florida's health-care system.

After weeks of criticism over his lack of a health-care plan, DeSantis posted the proposal online Wednesday shortly before his final debate with Democratic candidate Andrew Gillum. The plan calls for people to have the right to buy the health care they want; use price-transparency tools to shop for care; and get rebates from insurers when patient choices save money.

The plan said DeSantis would maintain quality care by "resisting any effort to ration health care" in Tallahassee.

"Floridians have more choices in picking out their cell phone plans than their health insurance plans. Every day in the grocery store, we make decisions about what we want to buy, weighing price, necessity, and quality, and deciding what's right for us," the proposal said. "But, when it comes to something as important as health care, we have fewer choices and less information."

DeSantis and Gillum have tangled in two debates this week about health care.

Gillum strongly supports expanding Medicaid eligibility as allowed under the federal Affordable Care Act. Gillum also has expressed support for "Medicare for all," a single-payer system championed by

Republican gubernatorial candidate Ron DeSantis talks during a CNN debate in Tampa on Sunday. [CHRIS O'MEARA/AP]

Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders that would require federal approval.

DeSantis, who resigned his Northeast Florida congressional seat last month to focus on the gubernatorial race, opposes Medicaid expansion and has lambasted Gillum over supporting "Medicare for all."

While in Congress, DeSantis was a member of the House Freedom Caucus, a group of conservatives who did not support President Donald Trump's efforts to repeal and replace the Affordable Care Act, better known as Obamacare. DeSantis and others in the group maintained at the time that the efforts didn't go far enough.

Some of the ideas cited in DeSantis' new plan already have been percolating in the GOP-controlled Florida Legislature, including a House proposal that would have mandated insurers and health-maintenance organizations share savings with consumers who shopped for care. The 2017 legislation, which ultimately did not pass, would have opened up insurers for penalties or lawsuits if they failed to comply.

The DeSantis plans also calls for expanding what is known as direct primary care, a concept that the Legislature approved this year. Direct primary care involves contractual arrangements between doctors and patients for treatment, at least partially cutting out the role of insurers. It's not clear how DeSantis would want the plans expanded.

Democrats, who have attacked DeSantis for his opposition to the Affordable Care Act, immediately blasted his new proposal. In part, they said it would allow the sale of what they consider "junk" health-care plans, or those that don't meet minimum benefit requirements of the Affordable Care Act.

Moreover, Democrats argued the DeSantis proposal would not help people with pre-existing medical conditions. A popular feature of the Affordable Care Act provides protections in purchasing insurance for people with prior health conditions.

According to the DeSantis proposal, the Republican gubernatorial candidate would "work to ensure hard-to-insure Floridians with significant health needs have access to coverage" through market reforms that will encourage people to buy policies "before they get sick."

Johanna Cervone, a Gillum spokeswoman, criticized the plan.

"After 268 days without a health-care plan, Ron DeSantis finally released a sham of a proposal that puts special interests over the health of Floridians and denies coverage to people with pre-existing conditions," Cervone said in a statement.

Florida Republican Attorney General Pam Bondi has joined 19 other GOP attorneys general in a federal lawsuit that, if successful, would overturn the pre-existing protections contained in federal law.

According to the Kaiser Family Foundation, Florida has 3.1 million non-elderly people with pre-existing conditions.

Central to the DeSantis health-care proposal is the idea that costs must be contained to expand access.

Red tide still in region

Staff report

Red tide remains in Northwest Florida and is still being found in medium and/or high concentrations in Santa Rosa County, the Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission reports.

The FWC said fish kills had been reported in Okaloosa and Walton counties, and complaints of respiratory irritation were lodged during the last week in Okaloosa.

K. brevis is the bacteria occurring in salt water that causes red tide in Florida. High concentrations are reported when the bacteria concentrations exceed 1 million cells per liter of water.

The FWC report said the three-day forecast for counties in Northwest Florida calls for the red tide to move to the southwest on the water's surface and to the east below the surface.

Democrats target long-ignored rural areas

By Brendan Farrington
The Associated Press

CENTURY — This little town on the Alabama border isn't the type of place where Florida Democrats tend to stop when looking for votes.

It has a population of 1,786, and registered Republicans outnumber Democrats more than 2 to 1. But Florida Democratic Party Chairwoman Terrie Rizzo stopped here recently as part of an effort to reach out to rural communities that tend to overwhelmingly support Republicans.

Even Century Mayor Henry Hawkins, a Democrat, seemed a bit surprised he had visitors. "I'm glad you found your way to Century," he said as Rizzo sat down with a group of fewer than 20 people. "This is a place that most people don't know nothing about."

The town is where Lawton Chiles started a 1,003-mile walk across Florida on his way to winning a U.S. Senate seat in 1970. Chiles also is the last Democrat to serve as governor of Florida. He was elected to his second and final term in 1994.

But a lot has changed since "Walkin' Lawton" made his walk. Back then, Democrats dominated Florida politics, and the Florida Panhandle supported Democratic candidates. These days, rural areas like the western Panhandle firmly back the GOP.

In the more recent past, Democrats have focused on getting votes out of their South Florida stronghold — the Miami, Fort Lauderdale and West Palm Beach areas — while being competitive along the Interstate 4 corridor that cuts through the middle of the state from Daytona Beach to Tampa.

The party said it hired 47 organizers in the western Panhandle alone, an area where they typically don't have any organizers. Party spokeswoman Caroline Rowland said the effort is paying off, with an increase as much as 6.5 percent in vote-by-mail ballots in those counties. The party also is in communication with local officials and grassroots volunteers to help make sure people can reach early voting sites in areas devastated by Hurricane Michael.

Although Barack Obama carried Florida in the 2008 and 2012 presidential contests, Democrats have had little success in midterm elections and are hoping to break their losing streak with a new focus on areas where they haven't mounted much of a fight in more than two decades.

The thinking is that even if they don't carry these rural counties, they can cut the margin of defeat enough to be more competitive statewide.

"We've lost three of the last four elections by an average of 80,000 votes. It's important to be in every county, and it will make a difference. There are Democrats here. We're offering them a reason to come out and vote," Rizzo said after the meeting.

It's a strategy embraced by Democratic nominee for governor and Tallahassee Mayor Andrew Gillum, who is in a tight race with Republican former U.S. Rep. Ron DeSantis. Gillum said Democrats can't just rely on winning big South Florida counties.

"We've got to stop treating the race for the governor as if it's the Electoral College. You don't win one county and lose another — pick up Miami-Dade and Broward and Palm Beach and lose the rest," Gillum said in an interview.

Instead, he said, the way to win the state is by "losing less in some of these red areas that we'll never wholly get. But we don't need to wholly get them; we need to decrease the margins."

Still, Dan Smith, a University of Florida political science professor, questioned the strategy of using the party's limited resources to go after small blocks of votes when there still is a turnout problem with minorities and younger voters in large urban areas.

"If I was putting my money into it, that's where I would be focusing," Smith said. "It's not that those (rural) votes are less valuable, there's just a lot less of them."

Florida Republican Party chairman Blaise Ingoglia said he isn't worried about losing ground in rural areas.

"The Republican Party of Florida has had historic success in flipping these rural counties from Democrat to Republican in recent years, mostly because voters in these areas continue to walk away from today's Democrat party," Ingoglia said in a statement. Just because the Democrats "can fill a room with a bunch of radical activists doesn't mean they're making inroads."

Rizzo lives in Palm Beach County, about 600 miles away from Century. She never had been to the town, which is surrounded by cotton fields. The small crowd at the meeting featured local candidates and party activists, and one of the main topics was the shutdown of public schools that forced children to be bused as much as 20 miles away.

The mayor said it helps to have the party pay attention to an area he said has been largely ignored by politicians in Tallahassee.

"Now our citizens will know that people are concerned about them. We're not pushed to the curb," Hawkins said. "At least people can't say nobody came by to see them."

That's the message Century resident Tawana Jones is trying to spread through her community, especially among African-Americans.

"Unfortunately it is very difficult to get them to vote and realize the importance of voting and that they actually can make a difference," Jones, 37, said after the meeting. The politicians "were there to energize the community. They were there to say, 'Your voice does count. It does make a difference.'"

Museum of the Bible removes five artifacts after experts find they are not authentic

Marisa Lati
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The Museum of the Bible — a prominent new institution off the Mall in Washington, D.C., — announced Monday that it has removed five prized items once thought to be historical Dead Sea Scrolls after concluding that the fragments may not be authentic.

The pieces were examined by the Germany-based firm BAM, which tested them and concluded that they might not truly be parts of the ancient manuscripts found in the Qumran Caves of Israel's West Bank.

"If questions arise, then we want to answer those questions in an objective and honest way," Jeffrey Kloha, the museum's chief curatorial officer, told The Post. In an earlier statement, Kloha called the process an opportunity for the museum to show its "commitment to transparency."

The $500 million museum faced skeptics before it opened because it was chaired and funded largely by the conservative Christian family that owns Hobby Lobby, the mega-chain at the center of a divisive Supreme Court case about how far religious liberty rights go. Founders said the museum was meant to be a scholarly, inclusive look at the Bible, yet its founding board was almost entirely evangelical. It has drawn visitors of all faiths since it opened.

The museum, just south of the Mall, sent the five fragments to BAM for analysis in April 2017 after previous studies raised questions about its fragments. Kipp Davis of Trinity Western University has been doing research on the fragments which is funded by the museum. He told its officials that at least seven of the fragments probably were "modern forgeries," according to a statement by the museum.

The five fragments now believed to have "characteristics inconsistent with ancient origin" have been displayed at the Museum of the Bible since it opened in November. Labels on the exhibit since it opened have warned guests that some scholars were skeptical of the fragments' authenticity, the museum said in its statement.

Three other fragments have replaced the five that might not be real, and the museum said it plans to conduct more research about their authenticity. The museum has 16 fragments, including the five just removed.

The Dead Sea Scrolls are the oldest version of the Hebrew Bible and offer insight into what the sacred text looked like at the turn of the era, said Joel Baden, a professor of the Hebrew Bible at Yale Divinity School, and a critic of the museum. The scrolls were created between the early 1st century B.C. and 70 A.D. Most were written in Hebrew, while a few were written in Aramaic and Greek.

"What they reveal is the biblical canon wasn't fixed, that there were multiple editions of biblical books floating around simultaneously and that there was this great discrepancy among Jewish communities about which laws to follow," Baden said.

A collector purchased the inauthentic fragments beginning in 2009 and donated them to the museum over the following years, Kloha said. He declined to say how much money the collector paid for the fragments, but Baden said fragments can sell for half a million dollars to $1 million apiece.

Kloha said museum curators thought the fragments were likely to be real when they received the donations, which had not yet been studied by academics. The museum quickly gave researchers access to the fragments to compare handwriting styles and the layout of the writing, Kloha said.

GLORY SIGHTINGS

From the ashes we will rise

Jack Stanley

Heck, where will we sleep? What will we drink? Where will we use the restroom? ..."

Then I started to contemplate. I began to see it unfold of me, people coming out of their homes, and coming together. Strangers unannounced. Angel upon angel. Call after call of people wanting to help. People telling me to hold on, they are coming. A line of 10 EMS vehicles passed by, sirens screaming, headed south to help; an endless line of lineman trucks, headed south to help.

While driving back to my church today I saw no less than three people getting hugs. Three different scenes, but the same scene. Friends and neighbors encouraging each other. Comforting.

Even while thinking our case is hopeless, that all is lost, God shows God's face: In our first responders. In our "new" neighbor. In the friend and the stranger who calls to say, "I'm here for you." and God booms out the answer, "Here I am!"

As I was writing this I get a call from a trooper up in the sticks near Ebro saying he has my custodian with his truck broke down. While I'm culling my brain for whom I could send, it appeared: a "wrecker" showed up, and the driver says, "I got him, he can come with me."

This recovery won't be easy. The answers aren't simple. But God comes through, God shines in us and through us to each other. Long time relationships will be mended and new ones will be made as people reset priorities, realizing, it's just stuff.

My beautiful mossy oaks are down, but more beautiful ones are being raised right now, around us. Let God use you as a source of hope. Through this tragedy, as are uniting, recovering, healing, rebuilding, from the Ashes, we will rise.

Isaiah 61:3 ESV To grant to those who mourn in Zion — to give them a beautiful head-dress instead of ashes, the oil of gladness instead of mourning, the garment of praise instead of a faint spirit; that they may be called oaks of righteousness, the planting of the Lord, that he may be glorified.

The Rev Jack Stanley serves as pastor of the UMC of Parker.

Food for the Poor responds to Michael

Special to the Daily News

COCONUT CREEK — Food For The Poor is working with trusted partners to provide disaster relief to families suffering from Hurricane Michael in Northwest Florida.

The charity has received two tractor-trailer loads of relief items from Matthew 25: Ministries, including food, water, personal hygiene products, blankets, cleaning supplies and paper products, and one tractor-trailer load of bleach from Gleaning For The World.

The goods will be distributed by Catholic Charities of Northwest Florida at St. Dominic's Catholic Church and St. John the Evangelist Catholic Church, both in Panama City, and St. Anne's Catholic Church, in Marianna, to those most impacted by the hurricane.

"We want to respond to the immediate needs of families who are recovering from this powerful hurricane," said Robin Mahfood, president/CEO of Food For The Poor. "We are all neighbors, regardless of our locations, especially in this time of need."

Gabe Tischler, emergency management specialist for the Florida Catholic Conference, said Catholic Charities is grateful for Food For The Poor and its partners to help address the immediate needs of families who are hurting in the Panhandle.

"As with all disasters, we can't do it alone," Tischler said. "Partnerships like the one with Food For The Poor are essential for us to succeed and reach the most vulnerable populations and providing them essential supplies they simply don't have the funds to purchase. Basic lifesaving supplies will be needed for the next several weeks."

While Food For The Poor's mission primarily is to serve internationally, the charity has responded in the past to catastrophic disasters in the United States. In September, Food For The Poor and Matthew 25: Ministries teamed up with Catholic Charities of the Diocese of Raleigh, N.C., to help residents affected by Hurricane Florence. Last year, the charity and Gleaning For The World worked together to send water to Puerto Rico in the aftermath of Hurricane Maria.

"Working with Catholic Charities, Matthew 25: Ministries and Gleaning For The World to respond to Hurricane Michael will help us better fulfill our mission to serve and comfort those who are in desperate need in times of disaster," said Food For The Poor Executive Director Angel Aloma. "Although the primary focus of our work remains in developing countries where we serve where there are no safety nets, this will allow us to serve our brothers and sisters in the Florida Panhandle who are suffering."

Hurricane Michael made landfall Oct. 10 near Mexico Beach, east of Panama City, as a Category 4 storm with winds of 155 mph. The hurricane has killed at least 39 people across Florida, Georgia, North Carolina and Virginia, according to the Associated Press. Of those, 29 are in Florida.

Gators: Coaching gives team confidence

By Graham Hall
Correspondent

By now, much of Florida's 42-7 loss to Georgia in 2017 has been covered ad nauseum — although new details continue to emerge in the year since Jim McElwain's departure.

The revelation Monday that McElwain addressed the team to discuss his job security just prior to last season's loss to the Dawgs came as a shock to many, but it did fit the narrative surrounding McElwain's tenure.

In preparation for Saturday's top-10 showdown in Jacksonville, the Gators are singing a wildly different tune: this season, the coaching staff has frequently put Florida in position to be successful.

The Gators need to score just more than three points to exceed their total points scored in the entire 2017 season, and the offensive resurgence has the skill position players singing the praises of Dan Mullen and his coaching staff.

"That guy there is a genius," junior wide receiver Tyrie Cleveland said of Mullen. "He knows when to the call plays at the right time."

Prior to the much-needed bye week, the Gators racked up 576 yards of offense at Vanderbilt in a 37-27 comeback win, giving Florida its third-highest total amount of yards since the 2010 season in the process.

The Gators also recorded their fifth game this season of 200 or more rushing yards after having just eight such games in the three seasons prior to Mullen's arrival.

While the early 18-point deficit at Vanderbilt may have shaken the confidence of the Florida faithful, the team gained confidence in turning the tide and capturing a win on the backs of the offense.

Florida State looks for statement victory vs. No. 2 Clemson

The Associated Press

Florida State tailback Cam Akers thinks the Seminoles might finally have found their footing this season. They'll surely need it with No. 2 Clemson in Tallahassee.

Florida State (4-3, 2-3 Atlantic Coast Conference) has won three of its past four games after a dreadful start under first-year coach Willie Taggart that had some fans wondering if another dark, freefall was ahead for the former powerhouse program.

Akers said his team's 38-17 win over Wake Forest last week was a breakthrough for him after a two-touchdown performance — one of them on a 58-yard burst.

He said he's ready to build on that against the Tigers (7-0, 4-0).

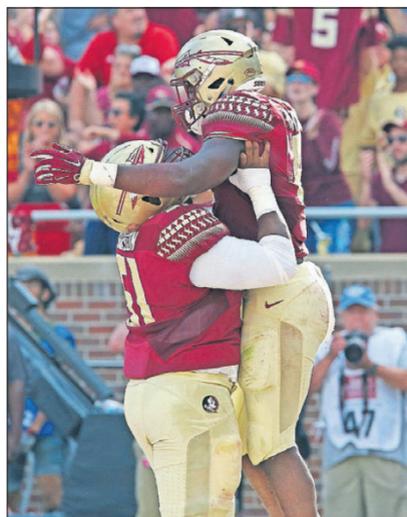

"It just makes me want more," Akers said. "A weight has been lifted off my shoulders. I don't want to stop there." Akers will have his hands full, though, to keep that going.

Clemson enters fourth in the ACC in rushing yards allowed at 107 a game. It has permitted just six rushing TDs, just one off the fewest in league.

"We've just got to turn it up a notch," Florida State quarterback Deondre Francois said. "We know they're going to come ready to play. We know they've got one of the best (defensive lines) in the country, if not the best in the country. So we've got to prepare like that."

The Tigers hope to keep doing what they've done much of the season. They come off their most dominating performance so far, a 41-7 pummeling of No. 22 North Carolina State in what was billed as a tight showdown

Watson throws 5 TDs as Texans beat Dolphins

HOUSTON — Deshaun Watson matched his career high with five touchdown passes to lead the Houston Texans to their fifth straight victory, 42-23 over the Miami Dolphins on Thursday night.

The Texans (5-3) have left their 0-3 start behind with their longest single-season winning streak since reeling off six victories in a row in 2012.

Watson threw touchdown passes of 13, 2, 73, 49 and 2 yards to give him 34 career scoring passes to move ahead of Dan Marino (32) for second-most through in NFL history after 15 games.

Miami's Brock Osweiler, who had one tough season in Houston after signing a $72 million contract in 2016, threw for 241 yards with an interception in his third straight start in place of injured starter Ryan Tannehill.

BOSTON — The San Gabriel Mountains shimmering in the distance will be a welcome sight for the Los Angeles Dodgers after two chilly, failed nights at Fenway Park.

No team has overcome a 2-0 World Series deficit in 22 years, but that is the tall task the Dodgers face after crumbling before the 37-foot-high Green Monster.

"It's going to be warmer, and hopefully our bats get hot, too," Cody Bellinger said after Wednesday night's 4-2 defeat to the Boston Red Sox.

No wonder they were California Dreamin' about Thursday's flight home.

Used to the balmy breezes at home and usually hospitable weather in the NL West, Los Angeles hadn't started a game this year in a temperature below 58. Facing a 53-degree temperature at the start of the opener, the Dodgers lost 8-4. It was just 46 in the first inning for Game 2, and the Dodgers' bats were cold again — their last 16 hitters retired in order.

"This is the first time we've played in obviously weather like this — San Francisco a little bit, but nothing like this," Dodgers manager Dave Roberts said before the game. "So it's an adjustment, and that's part of the home-field advantage and especially being in the bullpen, where you have a little heater, but still have to kind of get hot and stay hot. It's more of a challenge."

Ryan Madson was unusually open about how out of sorts the Dodgers were on late October nights in the northeast.

"Last night in the bullpen, we had a couple of heaters

GAME OF THE WEEK NO. 22 N.C. STATE (5-1, 2-1) AT SYRACUSE (5-2, 2-2)

When: 7 p.m. EDT Saturday Where: Carrier Dome, Syracuse, N.Y. TV: ESPN2

THE ORANGE MENACE

WOLFPACK MUST FACE CONFERENCE'S HIGHEST-SCORING OFFENSE IN SYRACUSE

KEYS FOR N.C. STATE

Forget Clemson: N.C. State has at times in its recent past allowed a single loss to be a distraction weeks after-ward. The Wolfpack needs to forget last week's 41-7 dismantling by Clemson and be focused on putting its best foot forward against a dangerous Syracuse team.

Contain quarterbacks: Syracuse has the highest scoring offense in the ACC (42.6), and senior quarterback Eric Dungey has been the clear catalyst of that unit. But the mobile Dungey was replaced late in last week's overtime win against North Carolina by Tommy DeVito, who threw for three scores.

Whoever takes the snaps needs to be kept in check by the Wolfpack. Dungey is most dangerous when he's on the move, so keeping him in the pocket is critical for the Wolfpack defense.

KEYS FOR SYRACUSE

Pressure Finley: Clemson's defensive front hurried N.C. State quarterback Ryan Finley into three turnovers last week. Applying similar pressure will help Syracuse keep Finley off balance and force quicker throws that set up interception chances for a secondary that has 10 picks this season.

Stop the Wolfpack on third down: Even though

Clemson limited N.C. State to just 2-of-12 on third-down conversions last week, the Wolfpack still leads the ACC in that category (54.3%). Keeping that statistic on the low side will limit the time-consuming, efficient drives that has been State's strength most of the season.

PREDICTION

This one is a toss-up. Either team is capable of emerging victorious. But N.C. State may have a slight edge defensively that should help the Wolfpack get back on the winning track maintain its share of second place in the ACC Atlantic Division.

BEST OF THE REST This weekend's other top conference games (all times EDT)

NO. 2 CLEMSON (7-0, 4-0) AT FLORIDA STATE (4-3, 2-3)

When: Noon Saturday Where: Doak Campbell Stadium, Tallahassee, Fla. TV: ABC

Notes: Clemson has won three in a row in the series, but Florida State leads 20-11 overall. ... At least one of these teams has been nationally ranked in 25 of the past 31 matchups. ... Florida State has the ACC's top-rated run defense, allowing 100.4 yards per outing.

NORTH CAROLINA (1-5, 1-3) AT VIRGINIA (5-2, 3-1)

When: 12:20 p.m. Saturday Where: Scott Stadium, Charlottesville, Va. TV: Raycom

Notes: North Carolina won seven in a row in the series until Virginia's road victory last year. ... This game is dubbed "The South's Oldest Rivalry." ... North Carolina leads the series 63-55-4. ... The Tar Heels have won four straight road games vs. Virginia.

DUKE (5-2, 1-2) AT PITTSBURGH (3-4, 2-1)

When: 3:30 p.m. Saturday Where: Heinz Field, Pittsburgh TV: RSN

Notes: Pittsburgh leads the series 13-9, including a 24-17 road victory last year. ... Panthers have won seven of the last eight meetings ... Until last year, winning team scored at least 31 points in five straight matchups. ... Pittsburgh RB Darrin Hall rushed for 254 yards last year at Duke.

POWER RANKINGS Breaking down the ACC

- 1. Clemson (7-0): Tigers had no problem with the N.C. State showdown, now it's the normal divisional biggie vs. Seminoles. Last week: 1
- 2. Virginia Tech (4-2): Hokies enter the week still perfect in league play after the weekend off. Last week: 3
- 3. N.C. State (5-1): Wolfpack wasn't up to the challenge at Clemson, but plenty of key games remain. Last week: 2
- 4. Miami (5-2): Hurricanes could end up in good shape, but visit to Boston College might cause trouble. Last week: 5
- 5. Virginia (5-2): Cavaliers make big jump and show again they could be for real after solid road victory at Duke. Last week: 8
- 6. Boston College (5-2): Maybe that wasn't such a bad September loss at Purdue after all for the Eagles, who were off last weekend. Last week: 7
- 7. Florida State (4-3): Another chance for Seminoles to show they haven't fallen out of the picture when they meet Clemson. Last week: 6
- 8. Pittsburgh (3-4): Panthers have just one league loss, so they're not out of the Coastal Division picture by any means. Last week: 9
- 9. Duke (5-2): Blue Devils can't stop Virginia hex, now go to Pittsburgh and Miami in back-to-back weeks. Last week: 4
- 10. Georgia Tech (3-4): Yellow Jackets seek victory in Blacksburg, Va., for third straight visit, but Hokies likely to be ready. Last week: 10
- 11. Syracuse (5-2): Orange should feel fortunate to pull out that double-OT victory vs. Tar Heels. Last week: 11
- 12. Wake Forest (3-4): Wake Forest goes to Louisville, where last its visit spawned the WakeyLeaks scandal. Last week: 12
- 13. North Carolina (1-5): Two gut-wrenching losses in a row put Tar Heels on verge of being doomed to a losing season. Last week: 13
- 14. Louisville (2-5): Cardinals might have one of best chances to reverse slide when Wake Forest visits. Last week: 14

GAME OF THE WEEK NO. 7 GEORGIA (6-1, 4-1) VS. NO. 9 FLORIDA (6-1, 4-1)

When: 3:30 p.m. EDT Saturday Where: TIAA Bank Field, Jacksonville, Fla. TV: CBS

IT'S PARTY TIME, AGAIN

FOR FIRST TIME IN YEARS, GEORGIA VS. FLORIDA HAS NATIONAL RELEVANCE

Georgia running back Elijah Holyfield (13) dives into the end zone for a touchdown as Vanderbilt safety LaDarius Wiley (5) defends Oct. 6 in Athens, Ga. [JOHN BAZEMORE/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS]

KEYS FOR GEORGIA

Grind it out: The Bulldogs rank third in the SEC in rushing offense at better than 225 yards per game. Georgia needs to make this a physical battle to slow Florida's pass rush and make things easier for Jake Fromm in the passing game.

Value possession: Georgia has coughed up seven total turnovers while gaining nine. The Gators have 18 takeaways in 2018 and can turn the game if they make interceptions or fumble recoveries. The Bulldogs can't afford to get careless with the ball.

KEYS FOR FLORIDA

Don't get fancy: Feleipe Franks has been efficient in running Dan Mullen's offense, but the Gators don't have the playmakers to get yardage in big chunks. Florida needs to be patient on offense and take what the Georgia defense gives.

Win the kicking game: Florida is more explosive on punt returns and has an edge in punting an field goal kicking. Making this a game of field position would favor the Gators, and a breakaway return somewhere along the way could weigh heavily.

PREDICTION

Georgia 20, Florida 17: The Bulldogs are more vulnerable defensively and less dangerous on offense than last year's national runner-up team was, but have the more solid roster across the board. Expect a slugfest in this rivalry game, with Florida coming up just short.

BEST OF THE REST This weekend's other top conference games (all times EDT)

NO. 12 KENTUCKY (6-1, 4-1) AT MISSOURI (4-3, 0-3)

When: 4 p.m. Saturday Where: Columbia, Mo. TV: SEC Network

Notes: Kentucky remained right in the mix of the SEC East after slipping by Vanderbilt last week, but another challenge lies ahead if it wants to remain in contention. A win at Missouri is almost a necessity as Georgia lies ahead next week in what could be a game for the East.

NO. 16 TEXAS A&M (5-2, 3-1) AT MISSISSIPPI STATE (4-3, 1-3)

When: 7 p.m. Saturday Where: Starkville, Miss. TV: ESPN

Notes: Mississippi State's 1-3 mark in the conference can be a bit deceiving, as outside a 28-3 loss at Kentucky the Bulldogs have given themselves a shot to win in its other two losses against Top 10 teams in LSU and Florida. They get another shot at a big win, like they had against Auburn three weeks ago, when the Aggies come calling.

TENNESSEE (3-4, 1-3) AT SOUTH CAROLINA (3-3, 2-3)

When: 7:30 p.m. Saturday Where: Columbia, S.C. TV: SEC Network

Notes: The Battle for a Bowl Bid Bowl. While breaking down the remaining schedules of each team, a win in this game will give one team a leg up when it comes to reaching the magical six-win number and a bowl bid. The loser, however, will need an upset—or two—the rest off the way to reach a bowl.

POWER RANKINGS Breaking down the SEC

1. Alabama (8-0): It's an open week for Alabama to heal its bumps and bruises and let the offense catch its breath.

Last week: 1

2. LSU (7-1): The Tigers move up two notches because the Birmingham Illuminati have deemed it shall be so.

Last week: 4

3. Florida (6-1): Not supposed to call it the Outdoor Cocktail Party any more, but this is the biggest Liquid Refreshment game in years.

Last week: 3

4. Georgia (6-1): The Bulldogs didn't play last week but dropped two spots because there isn't any buzz about them for some reason.

Last week: 2

5. Texas A&M (5-2): The Aggies could take a big step toward a prominent bowl with a win over MSU.

Last week: 6

6. Kentucky (6-1): The Wildcats still have a shot at their first SEC East title and a trip to Atlanta that could be a dream or a nightmare.

Last week: 7

7. Mississippi State (4-3): If Dan Mullen agrees to return Mississippi State's 2017 offense to Starkville, MSU will pay all shipping costs.

Last week: 5

8. Auburn (5-3): If the truck carrying the 2017 Mullen offense from Gainesville to Starkville travels on I-85, Gus should hijack it.

Last week: 8

9. Missouri (4-3): No one noticed, but Missouri's win over Memphis was better than SEC fans might think.

Last week: 11

10. South Carolina (3-3): Sometimes movies come to the cinema for a week, run a month on cable and are forgotten, which is South Carolina vs. Tennessee in a nutshell

Last week: 9

11. Ole Miss (5-3): It looks like Ole Miss has run out of gas and hopes it can coast downhill to the Egg Bowl.

Last week: 10

12. Tennessee (3-4): As bad as the Third Saturday in October was, don't be surprised if the Vols bounce back this week.

Last week: 13

13. Vanderbilt (3-5): The Commodores have stayed out of the Power Rankings basement so far, but the door is wide open this week.

Last week: 12

14. Arkansas (2-6): By small steps, the Razorbacks are getting better, as the shutout of Tulsa showed.

Last week: 14

PLAYERS TO WATCH

Tua Tagovailoa, QB, Alabama: Threw for 306 yards and had TD passes to four receivers in little over a half, leading the top-ranked Crimson Tide to a 58-21 victory over Tennessee.

Drew Lock, QB, Missouri: Threw for 350 yards and four TDs on 23-for-29 passing to help the Tigers defeat Memphis 65-33.

Benny Snell Jr., RB, Kentucky: Rushed for 169 yards, including the go-ahead 7-yard run with 8:04 remaining, helping the Wildcats beat Vanderbilt 14-7.

Reed opens with 64 to take lead at HSBC Champions

The Associated Press

SHANGHAI — Patrick Reed had a Ryder Cup he'd like to forget and spent three weeks at home in Texas preparing to finish the year strong.

He was at his best Thursday in the HSBC Champions.

Even in blustery conditions, Reed putted for birdie on every hole at Sheshan International and closed out his bogey-free round with a 25-foot birdie putt for an 8-under 64, giving him a two-shot lead over Tony Finau and Xander Schauffele.

"It felt really good, because if you can go out and shoot rounds like that in these kind of conditions, you know you're going to have confidence when the wind dies down and there are perfect conditions out there," Reed said.

Schauffele also managed a bogey-free round in wind strong enough to be a two-club difference at times. He saved par on the final hole at No. 9 from the right rough with an approach that narrowly cleared the water into a patch of fairway short of the green, a pitch-and-run to 10 feet and another solid putt.

Matt Fitzpatrick had five straight birdies to overcome a rough start and post a 67.

Brooks Koepka, in his debut at No. 1 in the world, didn't deliver much excitement. He had 16 pars, one bogey and one birdie for a 72. He was stunned when his second shot in the par-5 18th spun off the front of the green and into the water, forcing him to scramble for par at the turn instead of an easy birdie or better.

"I felt like I played good enough to shoot 4- or 5-under par," Koepka said. "It was those momentum-building shots."

Reed was last seen winning a meaningless singles match at Le Golf National after Europe was well on its way to victory. The last he was heard from was a telephone interview with The New York Times an hour after Europe won, blaming Jordan Spieth for them not playing together in the Ryder Cup and U.S. captain Jim Furyk for leaving Reed on the bench twice during the week.

Mullen's arrival pay immediate dividends haven't shied away from discussing his nearly immediate impact, while also throwing some slight shade at the previous regime in the process. "He's an offensive guru, man, that's what I call him. He's a great guy calling plays. I mean, he always has us ready. Last year there was a couple times, like, defenses were calling out our plays," junior running back Lamical Perine said. "So they can't really do that now because we have them so off balance, and it's something that we added to our game with Dan Mullen coming in."

The redshirt junior in UF's backfield, Jordan Scarlett, concurred that the production has instilled confidence in a team that had more than a fair share of doubters heading into the season. And if that confidence helped spark the Gators to 290 rushing yards against Vanderbilt — the program's most since racking up a whopping 414 rushing yards against Georgia in 2014 — then Florida is striving to do anything it can to say confident. "I think we're starting, as a whole team now, just the whole offense, just believing in what we can do. "The offensive line is sticking together, working together and we're working together with them in sync," Scarlett said.

ROME Juventus president 'very calm' over Ronaldo case

Juventus president Andrea Agnelli is standing by Cristiano Ronaldo as the soccer superstar faces an accusation of rape in the United States.

Agnelli, the son of former Fiat CEO Umberto Agnelli and a member of the Italian car maker's board, spoke Thursday at a club shareholders meeting in Turin.

"When there are problems I tend to look people in the eyes, ask them the questions directly and then judge them myself," Agnelli said. "I'm very calm, having spoken to him directly as soon as the case emerged, on his position. And his behavior in the days and weeks that followed only confirm my initial feeling."

Kathryn Mayorga filed a civil lawsuit last month in Nevada claiming Ronaldo raped her in his Las Vegas hotel room in 2009. Police also reopened an investigation into the allegation at her request.

Ronaldo defended himself against the accusation at a news conference ahead of a Champions League match this week. His attorney, Peter S. Christiansen, issued a statement on Oct. 10 denying wrongdoing by his client.

SINGAPORE Pliskova advances to WTA Finals semifinals

Karolina Pliskova won the first set to eliminate Petra Kvitova, and then won the second set to advance to the semifinals at the WTA Finals.

Pliskova, who advanced from her group for the second straight year, beat Kvitova 6-3, 6-4 on Thursday to improve her record to 2-1 at the season-ending tournament.

It was Pliskova's first victory over Kvitova in their fourth meeting.

In the other group match, Elina Svitolina stayed unbeaten and advanced to the semifinals by beating defending champion Caroline Wozniacki 5-7, 7-5, 6-3.

PARIS 2019 Tour celebrates century of yellow jerseys

Next year's Tour de France will celebrate the 100th anniversary of the showcase race's iconic yellow jersey.

With France emerging from the carnage of World War I, the Tour offered its beacon of hope to the war-ravaged nation. In 1919, the race leader's yellow jersey — which has become cycling's most iconic symbol — was introduced.

"It came straight out of the trenches, born from the rubble of a wounded France," Tour race director Christian Prudhomme said Thursday, unveiling the route for the July 6-28 race. "A light was needed, a color which can be seen better than any other, in the dust, in the night. A beacon was needed to guide France toward resurgence."

Aggressive approach on fourth down helps fuel scoring surge in college football

By Ralph D. Russo
The Associated Press

Major college football teams are on a record scoring pace this season and a more aggressive approach on fourth down is helping to fuel the surge.

Through eight weeks of the season, FBS teams are averaging 30.23 points per game, up almost a point and a half from last season and just ahead of the record 30.0 set in 2016.

While last year's dip in scoring to a six-year low seemed related to teams moving away from up-tempo offense, the cause for this season's uptick appears to be — at least in part — tied to fourth-down decisions. Often guided by analytics, teams are going for it on fourth down more frequently and turning more scoring opportunities into touchdowns.

"You know we're big into analytics and have some different analysts look into that every week," LSU coach Ed Orgeron said. "We study it during the week. We practice it. There's some recommendations that they give. Sometimes it's very aggressive. Sometimes it's too aggressive."

Orgeron and LSU went on fourth-and-short four times in a victory against Georgia earlier this month; for the season, the Tigers have attempted nine fourth-down conversions in eight games, just one less than in 13 games last season.

Duke coach David Cutcliffe said more teams are catching on to an approach he has used for years.

"There are a lot of companies out there, analytic companies, that have aggressively pursued clients," Cutcliffe said. "I think a lot of people are listening to them, looking at the math, figuring it out. So I think it is a matter of the cat's out of the bag."

Scoring slipped to 28.8 last season, the lowest since 2011, stopping a string of six consecutive seasons where the average increased. Offenses were just as effective last year, but not playing as fast. Plays per game, like scoring, reached a six-year low (69.9) and possessions per game dropped to 24.39, continuing a downward trend since 2015.

Plays per game have risen to 70.8 on average in 2018, but possessions have stayed steady, according to Championship Analytics Inc., a company that provides dozens of Division I schools a weekly statistical analysis of their upcoming game.

CAI uses points per possession to measure offensive efficiency. According to CAI, points per possession are up nearly 5 percent from last season, 2.34 compared to 2.23 in 2017. Oklahoma leads the country in points per possession at 4.16. While scoring has increased significantly, yards per play is up less than 1 percent, 5.76 last season to 5.79 this year.

"Teams have found other ways to improve their scoring rates without a drastic change in their ability to move the ball on a per play basis," said Rob Ash, a former Montana State head coach and spokesman for CAI.

One of the ways is playing more offense on fourth down. According to CAI, FBS teams went for it on fourth down 19.3 percent of the time in 2017 and converted 51.8 percent of those attempts.

This season, teams have gone for it 21 percent of the time on fourth down and have converted 54.6 percent.

Army is college football's current king of fourth down.

The Black Knights have gone for it 48 percent of the time and converted 88 percent (22 for 25). Only Air Force (17 for 27) and Florida Atlantic (26 for 13) have attempted more fourth-down conversions than Army.

In the red zone, an opponent's 20-yard line and in, the numbers are even better across the country.

According to research done by Bill Connolly, a writer for SB Nation whose S&P+ metric uses play-by-play data to rank FBS teams, there have been 355 fourth-down conversion attempts in the red zone this season. Teams are converting at a rate 61.4 percent. Last season, teams converted 57.6 percent of their fourth-down conversion attempts in the red zone. The number of attempts is also on pace to surpass last season's total of 519.

FBS teams overall are scoring touchdowns in the red zone at a greater rate this season (63.6 percent) than last (61.9), according to CAI.

Coaches say a more aggressive approach to fourth downs on the opponent's side of the field changes the way offenses operate on the preceding downs, too.

"Usually on third down and 7 in the plus territory, back 10 years ago, seven years ago, five years ago, teams are thinking, 'We got to get all seven,'" Pittsburgh coach Pat Narduzzi said. "I'm always going to tell our offensive coordinator, 'You have four downs here on third-and-7.'"

And more downs of offense have led to more points.

Factor in the future

Guilty verdicts set precedent in fighting shady college recruiting

By John Marshall
The Associated Press

A federal jury found three men guilty of fraud charges for channeling secret payment to the families of top-tier recruits to influence their choices of schools, apparel companies and agents.

Wednesday's verdicts place the blame firmly on the men for exposing the universities to NCAA sanctions, essentially portraying the schools as victims.

The NCAA may view the verdict differently.

In fact, the organization that oversees college athletics may now have a deeper reach when it goes after rogue programs.

The decision essentially turns amateurism into federal law, possibly giving future NCAA bylaws more bite and ability to dole out punishment.

"I think anybody who breaks the rules in any aspect of our society, you'd like to see them held accountable," Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski said. "If the jury found them guilty of breaking rules, then they should be held accountable. But yeah, that's why we have a jury system and that's good. It's always good when, if someone does something wrong, they're found out, and they're held accountable for it."

Former Adidas executive James Gatto, business manager Christian Dawkins and amateur league director Merl Code were convicted of conspiracy to commit wire fraud for funneling money and recruits to Louisville and Kansas.

All three will be sentenced on March 5, but the corruption case doesn't end there. Former NBA star and Auburn assistant Chuck Person will stand trial in February.

Former assistant coaches Emmanuel Richardson of Arizona, Tony Bland of Southern Cal and Lamont Evans of Oklahoma State go to trial in April.

All are accused of funneling apparel company money to recruits and their families.

They could be facing a difficult defense with Wednesday's verdict now that a precedent of fraud has been set. So could the schools.

The first trial revealed text messages and recorded conversations between coaches and the fixers, though nothing to definitively connect them to paying recruits.

The prosecution argued the schools, which receive federal funds, were not aware of the secret payments, including $100,000 promised to top recruit Brian Bowen Jr.

ACES ON BRIDGE: BOBBY WOLFF

"Nature reaches its culmination in humans, but human consciousness has not its essence in itself or nature."
— Carl Linnaeus

At the 1998 Cap Gemini World Pairs Invitational, Tony Forrester and Zia Mahmood's once-huge lead was down to single digits as the final board hit the table.

The Italian pair in second place had also reached three no-trump here, but Tor Helness, West at that table, led the heart jack, in response to his partner's opening bid. Declarer won with the king and guessed the clubs poorly. Back came the heart nine, ducked all around, then a diamond to the king. That disrupted declarer's communications; he now had no way to generate a ninth trick.

At the critical table, though, on the auction shown, Forrester reached three no-trump after the opponents' nebulous club and negative response. West, Krzysztof Martens, led the diamond 10 to the king, East unblocking the queen. Forrester cashed the club ace and played another club to the jack. He continued in diamonds, throwing a heart from dummy and leaving Marek Szymanowski, East, on play. He made the natural-looking lead of the spade queen (this was necessary to switch to a heart), and Forrester put up the king.

He then took the diamond ace, discarding another heart, and cashed his clubs. Szymanowski had to keep three hearts, thus only two spades. Forrester was able to lead a spade, win the heart return with the ace and play another spade. The heart king and his long spade represented his eighth and ninth tricks.

Had the swing on this board gone the other way, it would have reversed the final positions.

ANSWER: There is no reason to be overly complicated here. You have invitational values, and a call of two no-trump shows these values with hearts and clubs, allowing partner to pick a final contract. This hand is just too good for a one-no-trump rebid and is certainly not worth a force to game.

DEAR ABBY

Friend's goth fashion would stand out at formal wedding

Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: A month and a half ago, my boyfriend of five years proposed. We are happy and excited. Most of the wedding party are my friends from college, who are like a family to me. They have also grown very close to my fiancée.

One friend, "Eden," defines herself as a "goth." She wears dark lipstick, dark makeup and usually wears all black — lace, fishnets, etc. Her casual wear isn't all that out of place.

However, when she dresses up, the goth comes out in full force — parasol, thigh-high boots, over-the-top stuff (at least to me).

She's invited to our wedding, and I'm concerned that she may go overboard with her wardrobe for the event. I do not wish to stifle her style or sense of self, but the guests will be mostly family and it's a formal event. Is there a polite way to mention this to her and ask her to tone it down a bit? I don't want to hurt her feelings or appear to be stuck up, however I am sure she will be in many of the photos. — POLITE FRIEND IN PENNSYLVANIA

DEAR FRIEND: If there will be a wedding party and you have a maid of honor, the responsibility of explaining the "dress code" to Eden should fall to her — for the reasons you mentioned. Whether Eden takes offense is anybody's guess, but at least the message won't come directly from you. If she chooses to ignore the dress code and "come as she is," focus on your happiness and do not let it ruin your day. As for the pictures, put her in the back.

HOROSCOPES BY HOLIDAY MATHIS

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — It's better not to get too deep into why people behave as they do. It could have something to do with you, but likely not. You won't regret staying within your own boundaries and letting others do the same.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — You know someone really likes you when that person tries to be an all-around improved and heightened version around you. And when it's you doing this, it's a fair indication that you're the one smitten.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21) — Stop putting it off! (And don't pretend like you don't know what this horoscope is about.) Not to live the life you want to live is an abuse of the present.

CANCER (June 22-July 22) — Whether or not you feel that you've been adequately loved, you are able to offer this to others. The big question is if you can give it to yourself. Not everyone capable of self-nurturing. Hopefully you are. It will be essential to growth.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Communication gets tricky. If no one cares to try harder, conversation might devolve into people droning on about what they know instead of people connecting with one another. You can steer it into better outcomes.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Though other value systems may differ from yours, that doesn't make them wrong. Stars illuminate your humanitarian instincts. And people are attracted to your instinct for tolerance and inclusion.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) — You came here to learn. So did they, although they might not be as in touch with their original intent. Embrace imperfection and open yourself to the lesson.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21) — Inconvenient happenings can be fortuitous and seemingly lucky happenings can turn out to be a major pain. So don't be quick to judge. What happens will be pretty funny regardless of the ultimate outcome.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — You sometimes question what people want from you, and this is only smart. You don't have to be a cynic to be on guard against the darker inclinations of human nature.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Blood is thicker than gossip. When it comes to your family, you're fiercely protective regardless of whether they are in the right or not. And, if necessary, they would be similarly protective of you.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Pretending to be confident isn't the same as being confident. But the people who act like they have it all together don't fool you. You'd much rather see the confidence that comes from admitting the struggle.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Thoughts have power, so take control before they take control of you. And don't be surprised if your feelings are all over the place today. Ecstasy, jealousy, agony and boredom could all happen in the span of an hour.

WELCOME TO THE COUNTS REAL ESTATE TEAM

How Long Have You Worked For Counts Real Estate Group, Inc?

I have worked for Counts a little over a month now and still loving it!

What Made You Decide to Choose Counts Real Estate Group, Inc and What Has Been Your Experience Thus Far?

I made the decision to move to Counts so that I could get superior mentoring and training and learn from the biggest local real estate company on the beach. My favorite thing about working for Counts is that my broker, Jason Smoker, guides me through question I bring to him and my fellow agents offer to help in any way. Jill Woody is a marketing wizard and has been extremely helpful in designing materials for my business. I really enjoy all the comradery within the Counts organization.

“Let’s Rebuild Together!”

We’re Open For Business!

The Bill Cramer GM team of employees has worked diligently to reopen all departments in the aftermath of Hurricane Michael.

We appreciate your patience as we continue working towards reaching pre-storm capacity. Some services are limited at this time.

- Wi-Fi Capable
- Automatic Crash Response
- Emergency Services
- Crisis Assist
- Roadside Assistance
- Stolen Vehicle Assistance
- Turn-by-Turn Navigation

New Vehicles

We have over 400 new vehicles, all priced at huge discounts, PLUS you still receive up to $1000 in ADDITIONAL Hurricane Relief Assistance from the factory on most 2018/19 models.

Preowned Vehicles

We have our largest inventory of this entire year as a result of last month’s huge sales success. Our inventory includes many unharmed units, as well as some minorly damaged vehicles at special discounts.

Jobs Available

We have several immediate openings for service techs and body shop techs, as well as sales positions. Top pay, great benefits package, including 401K plan and health plan.

Equal opportunity employer, Drug-free workplace.
