STAFF REPORT

A Williston woman, arrested Sept. 12 on multiple charges, was found dead in her cell in the early morning hours of Sept. 15.

Megan R. Downing was housed in the medical department of the Levy County Detention Center and was under constant video monitoring, according to a press release issued by the Levy County Sheriff's Office.

The staff did not notice any unusual occurrences during the night, the release stated and found Downing, 37, dead at 4:15 a.m.

Downing was arrested by the Williston Police Department and charged with DUI, child neglect without great bodily harm, possession of a controlled substance without a prescription and possession and/or use of drug equipment.

An investigation by the 8th Circuit Medical Examiner in conjunction with the Levy County Sheriff's Office Criminal Investigations Division is ongoing. At press time a cause of death had not been determined.

Williston budget, millage hearing is Tuesday

The Williston City Council will give its residents one more opportunity to address the proposed millage/tax increase for 2018-2019 at a public hearing at 6:50 p.m. Tuesday, Sept. 25.

The council is proposing an approximate 10 percent increase in its millage rate, from 5.8627 mills to 6.25 mills.

The proposed increase marks the first millage rate increase in several years for the city.

Likewise, the next fiscal year budget is about 7.1 percent higher than the current year.

A budget summary and the notice of the tax increase may be found on page 3 of this addition.

Those seeking more detailed information may view a copy of the entire budget on the city's website: www.willistonfl.org.

CAN'T GET TO DC?

Visit the Smithsonian at Cedar Key

BY SUZETTE COOK

STAFF WRITER

Ken Young says it makes perfect sense that the Smithsonian traveling exhibit titled "Crossroads: Change in Rural America" is making its debut in Cedar Key.

"This town stands as an example of a town that can survive through adversity and everything else and still continue to exist and persist," Young, the project co-director, says.

Through a grant obtained by the Cedar Key Chamber of Commerce, the exhibit that opened on Sept. 8 will continue to occupy the top floor of the Cedar Key Library through Oct. 20. It is part of a series of exhibits from the Smithsonian program Museum on Main Street (MoMS) which grants access to the Smithsonian to small-town America through museum exhibitions, research, educational resources, and programming. The MoMS website reports that these travelling exhibits have visited 1,400 communities across America since 1994.

Topics that are explored on 82-inch tall 3D wall panels include: Main Street Revitalization, Managing Change, Sustaining Community, Accelerating Change, Owning and Using Land, Resilient Americans and more.

It took a group of community volunteers and Young to install the showcase. "It arrived in boxes with instructions that said make sure your elevators are at least 82 inches high," Young said. "Some boxes weighed upward of 500 pounds."

Young will serve as docent for the exhibit and guide students and guests through the showcase if they request the extra guidance.

"Most of it is self-explanatory," Young said. "I will talk about how Cedar Key relates to these topics."

Young is excited to see the interaction between visitors and the features of the exhibit that invite participation. From videos, to mystery sounds, to writing activities, each topic has a way for guests to get involved. "The Smithsonian is so good at hands-on stuff because they know kids like to touch things," Young said. "We're even inviting kids to write postcards," he added.

Donations rack up for schools foundation

Beast Feast is Oct. 20 at Etheridge Farm

The Levy Schools Foundation recently received two large checks from corporate sponsors that will help it continue its commitment to boost the educational experience for everyone from teachers to students and their families.

Duke Energy donated $10,000 to the foundation and Capital City Bank contributed $7,500. Monies from the foundation provide classroom grants, program enrichment and college scholarships.

Each year the foundation also hosts its Beast Feast as one of its major fundraisers.

This year the 9th Annual Beast Feast will be held at 6 p.m. Saturday, Oct. 20 at the Etheridge Produce Farm in Williston.

The annual fundraiser event features a variety of great food from clam chowder to "yard bird on a stick" prepared and served by cooks from local businesses and civic groups in a casual, picnic setting. The evening includes door prizes and drawings, as well as a cake auction featuring delicious homemade cakes.

Proceeds from the event support Levy County Schools programs promoting student learning and effective teaching, as well as scholarships for Levy County seniors.

Tickets are $20 for adults, and $10 for students (ages 8-17), and can be purchased at: all Levy County Drummond Community Bank, Capital City Bank, and Suncoast Credit

Over The Rainbow

This summer's frequent rain storms are often followed by a thing of beauty. Harry Richardson said he captured this rainbow standing in his yard on CR 335 at the Marion/Levy county line.

The exhibit is open 1-4 p.m. daily, said Young. "We've already got field trips scheduled which, to me, is the super highlight of these things."

Young said this exhibit was more complicated than the previous Smithsonian exhibit that came to Cedar Key. "This is a way more complex setup," he said. "Over here are photographs that are the harsh reality of the world as we know it, these are slides, there are videos, I'll put some Florida books in there," Young explained as he went through each area of the exhibit. "Can't help but admire the workmanship."

Sue Colson, vice-mayor of Cedar Key, was the co-director of the project and hopes the timing of the exhibit boosts activity in town. "This is traditionally one of our slower months, and we did this to pick up our pace and schools are open so we're hoping they'll plan field trips, she said.

Colson and a team of

Docent Ken Young

local businesses and partners are creating a Cedar Key specific version of the Smithsonian exhibit as a way of localizing the trends and topics that are addressed at the national level.

"I'm mimicking the ideas and pillars of this exhibit at our city building, showing all of those things like identity, persistence, land, sea," Colson said. "Then, people in town will represent them," she added.

"With Identity, it will be all of the things that make us us. We'll have the service clubs represented, The Biological Station."

The premiere of "Cedar Key Crossroads" video will also occur at the local showcase on Oct. 4 from 7 to 9 p.m. at the Community Center, 609 6th St.

The video is made up of cultural stories through different points of view from Cedar Key citizens.

Colson hopes the local showcase will capture the essence of Cedar Key.

"If you live in the community you will come out of it so proud to be a part of this life here," Colson said. "And if you are a visitor, you'll feel proud to have visited us."

Foundation Director Annie Whitehurst accepts a check from Capital City Bank Vice-President Andy Lott.

Financial crisis, wage stagnation and Roger Miller

"Two hours of pushing broom... Buys an 8 by 12 four-bit room; I'm a man of means by no means..."

Margaret McDowell

Arbor Outlook

"King of the Road" as performed by Roger Miller

We are currently observing the 10th anniversary of the 2008 financial crisis. Meanwhile, politicians and pundits spend more time arguing about who deserves credit for the economy than they do actually trying to sustainably improve it or prepare for the next downturn. Regardless of who deserves credit, there's no doubt the economy is in better condition than it has been in a long time. But in recent years I've increasingly come to think that we're living in a two-tiered recovery.

On the one hand, those with significant investment assets, access to capital and financial expertise made the last decade a productive one. A sustained period of historically low interest rates helped revive an economy on life support and handsomely rewarded those who were lured back into capital markets. Those skilled in buying and selling businesses, public and private, have been able to borrow more cheaply than at any time in history to finance their ventures. But there were many more citizens without the means to benefit from the improving economy.

A statistic gleaned from the Federal Reserve speaks to this side of the two-tiered recovery story, one which most of the folks I deal with are intuitively familiar: the percentage of the average family's income generated by wages has dropped nine percent in the last 15 years, falling from 70 to 61 percent. What's replaced those wages? Investment income.

But the problem with investment income is that you have to actually own investments to earn it. The folks who don't own stocks or bonds or other types of financial assets therefore haven't experienced the same recovery as those who do. The old adage "It takes money to make money" is becoming more accurate over time.

So while one part of the economy has done well in recent years, under the surface we see the economic position of the middle-class stagnating.

The average middle-class American family's net worth is $40,000 less than what it was at the economic peak before the Great Recession, according to the Fed. And real wage growth has been falling since 2015. Declining real wage growth means that people's purchasing power is still growing, but at a slower and slower pace. Over the last year, a 2.7 percent wage growth was outpaced by a 2.9 percent cost of living increase, so folks' wages are now buying them less gas and groceries than they did a year ago. That's a big deal. Real wage growth is one of the best indicators for determining if the average family sees their situation as improving or declining.

Things I think about and remember

This is World Alzheimer's Awareness Month, but the thing to remember is that it's not just Alzheimer's and it isn't just a month. There are hundreds of kinds of dementia and the people who go through this live it daily.

Marcia Burr

Guest Columnist

One in three seniors will die of some form of dementia and every three seconds, someone somewhere in the world is diagnosed with a long, slow, unstoppable death sentence. Dementia is not just aging and forgetting. It is brain death.

My name is Marcia Burr and I will be sharing some facts and experiences about dementia with you in a monthly column. When our brand new city hall opens, we will be pulling The Life Raft out of dry dock. This is our local support group for caregivers and their loved ones with dementia.

We will start meeting on the last Saturday of the month again from 1-4 p.m. I will keep you posted when we will resume. Please join us if you feel like you are swimming these waters alone. You are not. Dementia is a world epidemic and we need to support one another.

Here are some things I think about and remember: As I look back on the years, I see a reoccurring pattern in the month of September...layers of life weaved into a tapestry of underground subconsciousness, where you know but you don't really know.

It can be a feeling of discomfort and angst. It can sometimes be annoying, inciting impatience, an antsy stirring of the soul, but it's also like going nowhere real fast. It's hard to explain.

1) September is when my mother was born. She was the practical, understated presence of grace in the face of life and its raw ugliness. She could also cut you up with her words and spit you out. And she was a colleague professor so there were lectures.

I hate getting lectures, don't you? My knee-jerk reaction is inclined to say talk to the hand or else reply, "uh-huh, yeah," and then just go do whatever it was I was going to do in the first place! Funny how that knee jerk habit actually became useful in Dementiaville...

2) September is the peak of hurricane season. I've lived in Florida for over 50 years and the storms aren't what they used to be. Now they're huge and fierce, engulfing the entire state, sometimes slow and devastating with torrents of rain and tornadoes. I think Mother Nature is angry. And this year, Florida had thunderstorms coming in off the warm(er) gulf waters every afternoon like clockwork, but now, at the peak of the season, they are lining up from out of Africa, as usual. There's an uneasy tension permeating things.

3) Dementia is like Hurricane Season but not nearly as predictable. The storms come and go from any direction at any time since time is irrelevant. But even in dementia, there are some patterns. And they always lead to the same outcome - death. Since we know these few things about dementia, it's wise to share our own personal experiences with other sojourners. It might help them. And it will definitely let them know they are not alone. This is how we muddle through. It's how we become care-vivors.

4) This is World Alzheimer's Awareness Month - again...another pattern I've noticed. And it adds to all the swirls and currents that already make September a powerful month. But the thing is, it's not just a month and it isn't just Alzheimer's. It's huge and engulfs the planet. So pitch in. Help keep the boat afloat. Let's get practical, like my mother! We can do this together. Thank you.

Hearing matters, Part Three

It's amazing how much you can learn if you keep your mouth shut and listen. Of course you have to be able to hear, but sometimes that's beside the point. A significant part of the axiom is keeping one's mouth closed, unless it falls open in awe. It's been gratifying to hear from folks who've been spurred to get hearing tests due to my previous articles about hearing loss and the impact it has on the brain. It's also been good to learn new information about hearing.

Drollene Brown

Guest Columnist

New subjects regarding hearing were passed along to me by two friends. The first, a talented musician and awesome singer, showed me her hearos. Nope. That isn't a misprint. Musicians know about them; the rest of us don't. Hearos look like tiny ear plugs, but what they do is better: filter out unwanted noise and let the music in. Several companies make them, and they're not just for musicians. Hearos are also made for people who work in high-noise environments. My musician friend is enthusiastic about her hearos. She says they tamp down some sounds so she can hear the music the way she needs to hear it while performing or practicing.

Hearos may beg the question of whether you hear all that noise in the first place, and that brings me to what my other friend told me. She has been exploring ways to be able to afford new hearing aids, because her old ones are seven years old. She knows she needs an upgrade. She discovered there are major hearing aid businesses that work with

Bob At The Movies

The Predator

I never really got into the original "Predator" from 1987.

I rented it to see future governors Arnold Schwarzenegger and Jesse Ventura together, and essentially tuned out once Ventura was eliminated after very little communication with Schwarzenegger (see "The Running Man", also from 1987, if you want to see the two interact in a meaningful way i.e., fight to the death).

But I did retain that the Predator is a space alien that hunts humans for sport and has dreadlocks for some reason. Thirty years, a couple battles with the "Alien", and a few reboots later, and we're getting "The Predator", an attempt to revive a "legendary" movie monster that I never found all that interesting.

Boyd Holbrook stars as Quinn McKenna, an Army Ranger who attempts a daring rescue mission in Mexico that goes awry when a Predator ship coincidentally arrives and kills everybody but him. McKenna knocks out the Predator on board, steals some of its equipment, and mails it to his autistic son Rory (Jacob Trembley). The prone Predator is captured by government agents led by extraterrestrial enthusiast Traeger (Sterling K. Brown), who takes it to a facility to be studied by renowned scientist Casey Bracket (Olivia Munn, in one of those roles where it's hard to buy the eye candy actress as a nerd).

Traeger also brings in McKenna to find out what he knows, and then has him committed to a mental hospital because he knows too much. It would probably be easier to just kill McKenna, but then the movie wouldn't have an excuse to put the soldier on a bus with other loonies.

Yes, McKenna is interred on an asylum-bound bus with an array of colorful characters. There's suicidal leader Nebraska (Trevante Rhodes), British sniper Lynch (Alfie Allen), vulgar wisecracker Coyle (Keegan-Michael Key), Tourette's sufferer Baxley (Thomas Jane), and Jesus disciple Nettles (Augusto Aguilar).

Once the group determines that McKenna is not, in fact, the craziest one of all for his claims of tangling with a space alien, they break out together and try to save the world from the Predator, who naturally has also escaped. As if the stakes weren't high enough, the Predator wants its armor back, which means that its primary target is Rory.

There's a stretch around the middle of the film where it looks like the unsolicited update is actually pulling things off.

Changing gods in America

Here is a quote from a professed secularist, he says, "Do we, as Americans, worship God? The answer: Most of us do, but many of us don't. And those who don't are growing in number. . ."

He says, "Back in the 1960s, when I was born, fewer than 5 percent of Americans claimed to have no religion. Today, it is up to around 25 percent — with approximately 35 percent of younger Americans in their 20s claiming no religion. Not all of these non-religious people are atheist or agnostic, to be sure. But a huge chunk of them are. According to sociologist Darren Sherkat, approximately 19 percent of Americans are non-theists — that is, non-believers in God. According to psychologist Will Gervais, approximately 26 percent of Americans don't believe in God. Other estimates are significantly lower: Gallup data suggests that 11 percent of Americans don't believe in God.

But whether the percentage of Americans who don't believe in God is 11 percent or 26 percent or somewhere in between — that's still a huge number of Americans."¹

At one time in this great country, worshipping God was part of its fabric. It had been woven in by those early Christians that had come from afar desiring religious freedom. At one time in this great country, telling someone that you were a believer, a follower of Jesus was something to be celebrated. Church services were broadcast on nearly all of the major television channels on

Keith Stewart

Sunday mornings, but more importantly, the majority of people worshipped God in their houses of worship on Sunday mornings. In fact, the majority of colleges in America finds its beginnings in Christianity.

As Roger Geiger points out in his book The History of Higher Education, "Religious denominations established most early colleges in order to train ministers. They were modeled after Oxford and Cambridge universities in England, as well as Scottish universities. Harvard College was founded by the Massachusetts Bay colonial legislature in 1636, and named after an early benefactor. Most of the funding came from the colony, but the colleges began to collect endowments early on. Harvard first focused on training young men for the ministry, and won general support from the Puritan government, some of whose leaders had attended either Oxford or Cambridge."²

But now, it's more culturally accepted for not worshipping God and Christianity is looked upon with disdain.

The problem is that when we fail to worship God, we fail to ascribe to Him the proper worth that belongs to Him. To worship God is to magnify His worthiness of praise, or better yet, to approach, to address God as He is worthy.

It was King David who said that above all of the things he desired it was to worship God. He said, "One thing I have desired of the LORD, That will I seek: That I may dwell in the house of the LORD All the days of my life, To behold the beauty of the LORD, And to inquire in His temple" (Psalms 27:4 NKJV). David says that of all the things he could have, of all the things he desires most it is to worship God because in this one thing all other things are found.

Here's the deal: A nation is made up of people. The downward spiral of a nation begins when the people of that nation reject the God of creation; the people will then make up their own ideas of what is and who is their god; then they will fall into every sin known to man. Finally they will grow to hate God and encourage others to do likewise. They will come to despise everything and anything pointing to God, including followers of God!

Christianity does not and should not try to legislate people into being Christians. But while Christians know they cannot force anyone into believing in God, they should not be ashamed to proclaim the gospel as was Paul.

Where is our brokenness and compassion and prayers for our nation that is forsaking God? Where is the hope for the next generation? I'm afraid if there is no repentance from those within the church, there will be no spiritual awakening for those outside the church.

Where's Sherlock Holmes when you need him?

I, like so many people, love a good mystery. I remember that one Christmas Eve when I was going to solve the mystery of Santa Claus. I heard about this mysterious person, but I had never seen him and this Christmas, I said to myself, I am going to see who this Santa Claus really is.

Then at the strike of 10 o'clock, we were sent to our bedrooms to await the coming of Santa Claus and the Christmas gifts. I decided to stay up and just see how Mr. Santa Claus worked his mystery on Christmas Eve.

Hiding in the shadows, I could see my mother and father around the Christmas tree drinking some Christmas punch, talking, and laughing.

Then I heard my mother say, "Don't you think it's about time?"

They soon disappeared and I got excited because I figured the next person coming into the living room would be Santa Claus himself.

Then I saw something I never anticipated my whole life. My mother and father came into the living room carrying Christmas gifts and carefully placed them under the Christmas tree. They made several trips and it was not long before the Christmas tree was loaded with all kinds of Christmas gifts.

I just solved the biggest mystery in my life up to that point. My parents were Santa Claus. It was hard for me to swallow that information. It was not the mystery I wanted to solve.

Now I had another mystery on my hands. Do I tell my brother and sister that I had solved the biggest mystery we had in our home?

To reveal the mystery to them would give me great satisfaction.

On the other hand, to reveal the mystery to them would greatly disappoint them.

It was then that I had solved the biggest mystery in life. That being, every mystery you solve presents a bigger mystery you cannot solve. That seems to be the way of life.

I am glad I learned that when I was young because it has been beneficial to me down through the years. I have learned to live with mysteries with no desire to uncover those mysteries.

When I say, "no desire," I do not mean that literally. Yes, there have been many mysteries I have wanted to solve. But my biggest discipline is to let a mystery be a mystery.

This is so helpful to me, especially since I became a husband.

Every husband knows that his wife, as wonderful as she is, is a basket full of mysteries.

When I first got married, I thought my job was to solve every one of those mysteries. I learned very quickly that solving a marital mystery, particularly on the feminine side, is rather a dangerous venture with no good marks behind it.

Some things are better left in the mystery basket of life.

Paul understood this when he wrote, "And without controversy great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory" (1 Timothy 3:16).

Some mysteries are too sacred to try to solve, rather we should rejoice in the mysteries associated with our Father which art in heaven.

My trail cameras are not showing me anything that I want to hunt right now, so I'm waiting on getting into the woods.

My goal every year is not to get tired, burnt out, or behind, before the best days of deer hunting get here.

For me, those days begin about Nov. 1 and run through about the middle of January.

It seems that everything fits me better during those times. But, like everyone else, I'm anxious to get outside.

The early mornings are comfortable and there are new opportunities waiting to be taken advantage of. One of those opportunities is finding ginseng. So, last Saturday, three friends and I spent a few hours in the mountains of

I can remember how years ago an old logger taught me the nuances of

Gas prices fall 2 cents

Gasoline prices in Florida have fallen 2.0 cents per gallon in the past week, averaging $2.73/g yesterday, according to GasBuddy's daily survey of 8,237 stations in Florida. This compares with the national average that has increased 0.5 cents per gallon versus last week to $2.84/g, according to GasBuddy.

Including the change locally during the past week, prices yesterday were 3.8 cents per gallon higher than a year ago and are 4.8 cents per gallon lower than a month ago. The national average has increased 0.5 cents per gallon during the last month and stands 23.8 cents per gallon higher than a year ago.

"With several areas of tropical weather moving away from the U.S. comes some breathing room for energy markets, with oil prices under pressure as the risk premium subsides, setting the stage for some relief at the gas pump as we progress through the week," said Patrick DeHaan, head of petroleum analysis for GasBuddy. "Despite the tremendous blow and flooding of the Carolinas, Florence's impact on oil delivery and refinery operations was next to nothing. Florence may make an impact on local pipelines in Florence's path with power loss and flooding possible issues, but problems will be worked around as life pauses in these areas and where we see considerable demand destruction taking place as floods keep motorists from moving. In addition, this week marks the first full week of cheaper winter gasoline across most of the country as EPA regulations see their seasonal ease. This, coupled with lower demand in the weeks ahead, will push retail gasoline prices lower."

The jokes are funny, the actors have good chemistry, the action is exciting and creative. It's nothing terribly intelligent or memorable, but it's enjoyable enough on a lowbrow level.

Then we get into the latter part of the movie and it's just another unexceptional action movie – kind of like how I feel about the original "Predator" once it's only Arnold left.

The action at this point is just a cluster of gunfire, explosions, metal whooshing, and slurping sounds, all while it's so dark and choppy (in more ways than one) that I have to take the movie's word for it that two characters got killed because I completely missed their exits.

There's potential at the very end with a fight on the head Predator's ship (not "in" the ship, "on" the ship), but this sequence is done in by its quickness and an unconvincing CGI force field.

"The Predator" was never meant to be a creative or commercial juggernaut. Its box office strategy was to open on a nothing weekend in September, spend a week or two making a moderate amount of money, and then fade away.

It had similar middling goals in terms of respectability: get original writer Shane Black to come up with some snappy dialogue to get people to laugh and keep it off the year's Worst lists, but with no need to really invigorate the property.

We learn in this film that the Predator has come to Earth because humanity doesn't have much time left.

If you really want to see "The Predator", see it soon, because it's a forgettable movie and it doesn't have much time left.

Grade: C

"The Predator" is rated R for strong bloody violence, language throughout, and crude sexual references. Its running time is 107 minutes.

insurance companies. I wondered how that would work—buying insurance specifically to get a hearing aid for less money. She told me it's possible when you find an insurance company in partnership with a hearing aid company.

Blue Cross is one insurance company that partners with specific hearing aid companies. Not all BC policies cover hearing aids, but at least one special policy does. If you buy that policy, you get a list of the companies at which BC covers hearing aids.

Here's what happens: The insurance company essentially buys a number of hearing aids from a hearing aid company, which retains possession of the devices. Once you've bought the insurance, you must go to a partner, such as Beltone, to buy your hearing aid.

You will not be Beltone's client; you are a Blue Cross customer.

You'll get a discount on your hearing aid because it is technically owned by the insurance company. You will be fitted for a hearing aid, which will probably be a behind the ear type, which has a slender, clear tube running into the ear. Such aids are quite comfortable; I wore a pair of them for 16 years.

The only fault I found with them was in trying to comb my hair after putting them in. The comb would often knock out the hearing aid. Combing my hair beforehand was the answer, but putting the hearing aid in afterward messed up my hair. It's a surmountable problem. No one ever said, "Your hair is all messed up around your ears." I guess I solved it.

But I digress. As usual when you've made a cost-cutting decision, things are not always as they seem, and it's important to understand what it means to buy a discounted hearing aid.

You're buying a device, not service. The hearing aid will be designed specifically for your ear and your hearing needs. If your hearing loss is severe, the right hearing aid may not be available at discount, but let's say you get the perfect device for your ears.

Better read the fine print.

The hearing aid is likely to be all you get with your insurance. Follow-up visits are not covered once the hearing aid is tested and deemed right for your ear. As time goes by, regular visits with your hearing specialist are necessary to make sure your hearing aid is in good working order and to tweak it occasionally so it stays current with any change in your hearing ability. Such visits can cost as much as $400. You will pay for those visits out-of-pocket because you are not a client of the hearing aid company. If you were, your follow-ups would be free.

this plant. But, since that time, I had forgotten just about all of the techniques of finding it.

It was good to have one of our group give our Saturday gang a refresher course. It didn't take long until we all were digging up a few two and three-prong plants.

And once you find that first plant, it's like an obsession overtakes you, and you have to find just one more.

I spent the last hour carefully uncovering about three plants that were side by side.

I felt like an archeologist trying his best to brush away all the sediment around a new find. It really was exhilarating.

What I discovered through the process was how the best places to find ginseng was where there were other plants that either hid it or acted as camouflage.

Those places caused me to be more intent and focused on smaller areas to insure a hidden gem was not overlooked. But, no matter what else was there, nothing held more value than that one small, inconspicuous plant. And it was worth overlooking everything else to find it.

The value of things can get skewed. After all, there are so many parts of our lives; it's easy to raise one above the other.

Priority is usually given to those things that are the most urgent or to those needs that are most numerous.

Seldom is this the case when it comes to things of real value. It seems to me, the most valuable things in life are those things that are rare and hidden among the ordinary things of life.

Whether it is a gold nugget, a diamond, a special relationship, or a ginseng plant, these hold unique worth and it would do us all well, to spend more time searching for these things.
