Taste of the Nature Coast rescheduled for Oct. 16

Tri-County Community Resources is hosting its second "Taste of the Nature Coast" gourmet-tasting event on Tuesday, October 16, 6 p.m., at the Haven Community Building, to benefit the Tri-County Community Resource Center (TCCRC).

The event was rescheduled from Oct. 9 due to Hurricane Michael.

The evening will feature chefs from Dixie, Gilchrist and Levy Counties providing tastes of their best dishes while competing for patrons' votes. Some of the featured chefs and restaurants include: Barbeque Bill's, Bell's Catering, BubbaQue's, Cherry's Seafood, Chef Ashley Pendarvis from It's a Shear Thing Salon, Chef Jesse Williams from Cross City Rehab, Duncan's on the Gulf and The Filling Fork. Guests can also take part in raffles for prizes and enjoy live music from local artists Sarah & Korey.

"The Tri-County Community Resource Center provides needed services to residents in the tri-county area," said Norinda Yancey, Vice-Chair of the Tri-County Community Resources Board of Directors. "Center staff and volunteers work hard to connect our patrons with resources that they need to get them back on their feet and thriving. This benefit ensures not only that our overhead costs are covered, but that we can bring new ideas and

UF Scientists share research project activities, results with NCBS visitors

Approachable University of Florida experts stood behind their efforts with detailed graphics, and hands-on samples of equipment and specimens related to Nature Coast environmental studies in areas including sea grass ecology, hard clam aquaculture, oyster clusters and reef restoration during a display at the Nature Coast Biological Station in Cedar Key.

In honor of the NCBS efforts since opening a year ago, the event on Sept. 22 was a way for researchers to interact with the public and explain their projects and upcoming research studies that continue to provide data and information to carry out the research station's mission of "enhancing the conservation and sustainability of natural resources throughout the Nature Coast through collaborative research, enhanced public engagement, field-based courses, and hands-on training workshops."NCBS Director Dr. Michael Allen is a professor of Fisheries and Aquatic Science in the School of Forest Resources and Conservation at UF."Our biggest priority for this biological station is to look at how changes in land use in the Suwannee Basin are going to influence fresh water flow and ultimately how that is going to influence the estuarine environment and fisheries resources and wildlife."

Allen's research focuses on population dynamics and ecology of fishes. He has evaluated habitat requirements for fish populations, and identified fisheries management strategies for recreational fisheries in lakes, reservoirs, and marine environments.

"This part of the coastline is not at threat for more development right on the coast because most of the land that is not developed is protected already," Allen said about the Cedar Key area. "But there're changes going on inland," he added. "Big changes in groundwater pumping, big changes in agricultural practices, big changes in land use, so those are going to have implications. Our medium term goal is to address that and really understand how fresh water flow is going to change."

Allen said one current NCBS project involves working with local fishing

CKS seeks support for multi-purpose court

Cedar Key School, its Parent-Teacher Organization (PTO) and the community is currently planning on how to best refurbish the school's pair of tennis courses so they will be used regularly. The goal is to create a multi-purpose center that will allow students and residents to enjoy a variety of different games and activities, such as: basketball, tennis, pickleball, volleyball, badminton, shuffleboard, hopscotch, foursquare, soccer and field hockey.

The project is expected to create more choices for outdoor activities and in turn create a better student-community relationship, leading to longer, healthier lives.

If you'd like to support the project, there are several tiers of donation club levels: Caulkers Club – $20 (help fill in the the cracks); Galloneers Club – $50 (worth a gallon of resurfacing paint); Project Cedar Key Club – $100 (an exclusive club that plans a project each year); and Over the Top Club (over $100).

Checks are made payable to Cedar Key School Parent Teacher Organization. Please drop off your donation at the school with Coach John Miller's name on it, or if you see community member Bill Heckler City Commissioner Sue Colson, or Coach Miller, hand them your donation. The mailing address is: Cedar Key School 951 Whiddon Ave. Cedar Key, FL 32625 Attn: Coach Miller.

For more information on the Project Cedar Key, contact Commissioner Colson at 352-477-0136.

Students recognize custodial staff

National Custodial Worker Day was recognized by the eighth-grade Civics students in Ms. Kim Bishop's class on Oct. 2. To show their appreciation of the work down each day by Ms. Shari Sharp, Ms. Kathy Polk, and Ms. Kim Murphy, the students cleaned the poles in the courtyard, picked up trash, and created a thank you poster to hang in the middle school building.

FFA experiments with goat milk

By Rachel Wetherington

Cedar Key School FFA members are getting back into the goat business this year, including raising goats for the fair and learning to use goat milk.

On Oct. 2, the high school agriculture students conducted an experiment comparing the goat milk with heavy whipping cream to determined how the butter fat content of milk affects butter making. After making both kinds of butter, the class conducted a taste test to determine which was the preferred finished product.

The goat milk came from the Carriage House goat farm in Chiefland. FFA members visited the farm last week to look for goats to enter into the Suwannee River Fair in the spring.

Pirates Cove

At the Crossroads of Should or Must

As with many Cedar Key arrival stories of recent decades, Brian and Lisa Barrett came to live here quite by serendipity. Getting here wasn't quite as simple.

Lisa grew up in Miami, graduated from UF, and moved to Atlanta where she then met Brian. Lisa's mom and sister moved to Gainesville after Hurricane Andrew and they would all meet up in Cedar Key for birthdays, holidays and festivals. It was the ideal place for the couple, their daughters (Ali and Jessie), and their extended family to vacation for the past 20+ years, usually taking a spacious condo at Old Fenimore Mill.

By way of a retirement dream, Brian and Lisa started searching for a peaceful island lot as a future home site. They explored a few properties over the years, and weren't quite finding what they wanted. As it turns out, that was a good thing. Last summer they headed out of town on SR 24 toward the hustle and stress of their commuter lives in Atlanta when they were stopped short by a tiny sign in front of Pirates Cove: "For Sale By Owner". A cluster of seven quaint, charming, well maintained vacation cottages were for sale. They stopped to chat with the owner's son Justin just long enough to get the bug.

Cedarkeyitis!

Back in Atlanta they worked hard to come up with reasons not to trade in their commuter lives and to become innkeepers in Cedar Key. Ali was about to graduate and go to college, while Jessie was about to start high school. After months of discussions, research, thoughts and dreams, it was time to decide if they should stay in Atlanta or must take the leap. Upon visiting the Cedar Key School and finding the perfect place to live, the decision was clear.

Brian and Lisa closed on Pirates Cove in June of 2018, happy to keep the cottages a family owned and operated business, and are looking forward to many years of making memories, hosting visitors, attending festivals, and enjoying the peace of our island city.

Welcome home Lisa, Brian, Jessie, Ali and trusty pooch, Captain Jack.

guides on spotted sea trout to try to understand factors that influence strong and weak classes.

The collaborative effort and outreach of the NCBS with local fisherman, aquatic industry farmers, volunteers and UF students has been crucial for the success of studies and projects, he said.

"We're super excited about the Lone Cabbage Reef which is up and running," he said. "They just brought in a bunch of grad students to help."

According to UF Wetlands Ecology and Management Professor Dr. Peter Frederick, "civilization was made on oysters."

Frederick explained the Lone Cabbage Reef restoration project, a 3-mile long oyster reef chain consisting of 22 reef elements. The 8-year-long project recently finished the construction phase and costs $6.8 million, which was funded by the Deepwater Horizon oil spill settlement and a majority of the construction utilized local contractors.

"All of the contractors for this were local," Frederick said. "So that's about $3.5 million that came into the local economy."

The restoration project involves many phases and that includes post-construction monitoring scheduled through 2025.

"This summer we've basically done three things," Frederick said. "We've moved the oysters off of the reef, moved them to a safe place. A lot of people in Cedar Key helped with that. Then we started putting rock on the reef.

"We finished the last of rock on the reefs. Now that means we have a leaky dam. The leaky dam holds fresh water up against the area creating intermediate salinities. That makes it more productive in many ways. It's better for oysters, it's better for small fin fish, it's better for crabs, and the reef will be better at breaking waves."

Nature Coast Biological Station Director Dr. Michael Allen, left, discusses 3D artificial oysters with UF Student Kwanmok Kim of the Department of Wildlife Ecology and Conservation, School of Natural Resources and Environment

With funding from SeaGrant, UF PhD Student Kwanmok Kim, of the Department of Wildlife Ecology and Conservation, School of Natural Resources and Environment is exploring the answer to the question: Can artificial oyster clusters provide habitats for macroinvertebrates?

Macroinvertebrates are organisms that lack a spine and are large enough to be seen with the naked eye.

Kim is studying Interdisciplinary Ecology and is conducting his research by using 3D molds to create artificial oyster clusters. "A 3D mold is just one way to make a cluster," he said. "I also use liquid plastic to make the mold, and I put concrete cement mixtures inside to make oyster clusters."

Kim is studying the spaces between oyster clusters, which are an important refuge for prey species such as crabs. The shapes and sizes of these interstitial spaces are crucial to understanding species interaction in the ecosystem, he said.

Kim said he is using at least 10 types of artificial clusters made of cement that have different size variations and will see results of species population after three months.

Allen picked up a sample of an oyster cluster and was impressed by the realistic detail that Kim was able to create on his 3D samples. "Look at the barnacle detail," Allen said. "That looks just like a real oyster."

Art explorations at CKS

Elementary art students at Cedar Key School have been exploring shapes, sizes, colors, space and proportion in their art classes with Mrs. Tina Hackey. On Oct. 2, the classes focused on tearing paper into pieces that could be used to create images of cityscapes, homes, and several other items they could imagine.

September Students of the Month

Congratulations to the Cedar Key School Students of the Month for September. In addition to demonstrating good character and having regular attendance, these students demonstrated a characteristic we focused on in September – honesty.

CKS students receive dictionaries

Levy County's top educator, Superintendent Jeff Edison, stopped by Cedar Key School the morning of Oct. 3 with a gift for every third grader – a dictionary of their very own! Edison, along with Cedar Key school board member Chris Cowart, passed out the dictionaries and encouraged the students in Mrs. Penney Bailey's class to use them often. Third grade students have learned to read and the dictionaries are one way for them to practice reading to learn.
