SCHOFIELD BARRACKS

— Adrenaline rushes and emotions flare during combat because decisions on the battlefield can have life or death consequences. This is the reason 2nd Infantry Brigade Combat Team, 25th Infantry Division, hits training so hard.

Soldiers from 1st Battalion, 27th Inf. Regiment, 2nd IBCT, 25th ID, participated in the first company-level cold hit site combined arms live-fire exercise, here, Dec. 4-8.

“Being able to train in a controlled and safe environment allows our Soldiers to polish their skills,” said 1st Lt. Ryan Debooy, a plans officer with 1st Bn., 27th Inf. Regt., 2nd IBCT. “However, it loses a sense of reality. The enemy won’t let our Soldiers come to their front door and practice how to defeat them. This is why a cold hit site exercise is so important.”

A cold-hit site refers to a training area the Soldiers have not trained on before. The Soldiers can use intelligence and images of the terrain to prepare ahead of time, but do not step onto the area until it is go-time.

“When units train on the same location for battle drill rehearsals as they do for live-fire events, they are able to perfect their tactics for that site,” said Command Sgt. Maj. Victor Benavides, the senior enlisted adviser for 1st Bn., 27th Inf. Regt. “This doesn’t work in a deployed environment. Cold-hit site exercises force Soldiers to be adaptable and make critical decisions on the move.”

Soldiers from the 1st Bn., 27th Inf. Regt., 2nd IBCT, 25th ID, train at a site that is new to them on Schofield Barracks. Training in a new environment enhances real-world fighting experience and critical thinking skills.

One of the goals of this training exercise was to allow leaders to exercise initiative and critical thinking skills during the live-fire portion of the training.

“Units have gotten away from doing cold hit exercises because commanders think it is too hard, but this is exactly what we would do in a deployed environment,” said Lt. Col. Valent Bernat, the commander of 1st Bn., 27th Inf. Regt. “We prepare our best by making our training as close to realistic as possible, but there will always be the sense of the unknown on the battlefield.”

A CALFEX is designed to utilize all the enablers for infantry units, such as artillery and air support to establish superior firepower on the battlefield.

“We train with the infantry because if we were to deploy we would be working alongside them,” said Spc. Ryan Reliford, a gunner in 2nd Bn., 11th Field Artillery Regt., 2nd IBCT. “Being able integrate our system and firepower with their mission allows us to be better prepared for a real fight.”

Infantry units have fire direction center teams to ensure that the rounds which fire from artillery cannons are placed properly and do not endanger the Soldiers.

“Using artillery to help shape the battlefield will help us prevent loss of life from enemy fire,” said Capt. Lacie Hutchins, a fire direction center officer with 1st Bn., 27th Inf. Regt. “This will also allow us to eliminate the enemy while minimizing the risk to our Soldiers.”

2nd IBCT plans to continue to execute training scenarios like this, and under the most realistic conditions, to ensure that they are always ready for whatever the nation calls upon them to do.

‘Cacti’ improve core skills during training at MOUT site

SCHOFIELD BARRACKS — With professional precision, Soldiers tactically stormed and seized an urban environment in broad daylight. They cleared a concrete building of the enemy and held the objective.

Infantrymen assigned to the 2nd Battalion, 35th Infantry Regiment, “Cacti,” 3rd Brigade Combat Team, 25th Inf. Division, performed squad live-fire exercises (LFX) at the Military Operations on Urban Terrain (MOUT) site, here, Dec. 5-6.

Six squads conducted Battle Drill 6, which is known as entering a building and clearing a room, to improve their core infantry skills.

“One of our company’s weaknesses is building clearance during a stressful situation and coordination with friendlies in the area,” said 1st Lt. Kristopher Keller, assigned to Company A, 2-35th Inf. Regt. “This training offers the ability to overcome some of our weakness and evaluate what we need to work on.”

The leadership wanted to ensure the infantry squads faced the most representative aspects possible for the training.

“We are able to use a lot of what the MOUT site has to offer,” Keller said, “to include the audio system to create a stressful and realistic environment and the realistic nature of the buildings. We also resourced targets that will show feedback, smoke, casualties, Short-Range Training Ammunition rounds, and use of company markings.”

Squads demonstrated Battle Drill 6 proficiency under LFX conditions in order to create a lethal squad for next year’s Joint Readiness Training Center rotation at Fort Polk, Louisiana, he said.

Sgt. Michael Prisco, squad leader assigned to Co. A, 2-35th Inf. Regt., said moving from a team leader position to a squad leader position was a new learning curve for him.

“I’m trying to get out of the bad habits I have, like being from a team leader, like going too fast,” Prisco said. “Now I’m a squad leader trying to control my team leaders – to slowing it down and moving as fast as they can engage.”

For a new team leader such as Spc. Allan Acosta, assigned to Co. A, 2-35th Inf.

Regt., this was a new leadership scenario for him during the training as well.

“The biggest thing I got out of the training is that I’m covering down to be a team leader, so it’s different,” Acosta said. “I’m taking charge of three other Soldiers rather than being told what to do. So telling other people what to do is a lot different than being told what to do.”

The introduction of the SRTA rounds during the live fire provided a unique training aspect during the scenario for the Soldiers.

“It was very different using the SRTA rounds during the mission,” Prisco said. “I was expecting for it to work similar to training paint rounds. For the live-fire scenario, they worked very well within all the rooms. However, when we were shooting at the long distances, we weren’t able to actually tell if the targeting was getting with the round or if it was actually impacting with that as well.”

“I never used them before,” Acosta said. “They’re a little different. They were kind of jamming up on me a little bit. I don’t know if it was the round itself or if my weapons weren’t 100 percent clean.”

In the end, the training was not only worthwhile for the squads, but highly enjoyable for them, too.

“It was exciting really,” Acosta said. “We love doing this kind of stuff. Clearing rooms is fun compared to doing super long running lanes. I think a lot of the guys love doing this kind of training.”

Better boots, lighter uniform coming

Story and photos by DEVON L. SUITS
Army News Service

FORT BELVOIR, Virginia — This January, some Soldiers within the 25th Infantry Division in Hawaii will receive new uniforms and a new set of boots as part of Program Executive Office Soldier's continued testing and evaluation of the improved hot-weather combat uniform and jungle combat boot.

Keeping in line with the modernization and readiness initiatives set by Secretary of the Army Dr. Mark T. Esper and Chief of Staff of the Army Gen. Mark A. Milley, the new versions of combat uniforms and boots will allow Soldiers to better operate in hot, extremely hot and hot/wet environments.

"Today's Soldier must be ready to execute the mission in any operational environment," said Col. Stephen Thomas, project manager with Soldier protection and individual equipment, during a Dec. 7 media roundtable, here. "(We're) providing a capability to Soldiers that may give them a decisive edge in that type of environment."

Production is near completion on 65,000 uniforms and approximately 750 new boots that will be sent to 25th ID Soldiers in time for the upcoming Pacific Pathways exercise in February, according to Capt. Daniel Ferenczy, assistant product manager for environmental clothing and footwear.

In March, PEO Soldier will then collect feedback from Soldiers and use that information to modify future versions of both systems, Ferenczy added.

ACU improvements

To make the new uniform more breathable and lightweight, Ferenczy said that excess layers and seams, which often lock in heat and moisture, have been removed. Furthermore, the new uniform can be dried in 60 minutes, compared to the 90 minutes dry time of the current uniform.

In addition, program officials have incorporated feedback and made changes to the uniform design from previous field tests.

Changes include these:

- mandarin collar eliminated,
- shoulder pockets open from top rather than sides,
- zipper closures replaced by buttons,
- breast and back trouser pockets removed,
- crotch gusseted for better fit and to prevent chafing or blow-outs, and
- knee articulated for better maneuverability.

Moving forward, program officials will continue to evaluate other fabric compositions and uniform design elements through 2018, Ferenczy said.

Depending on the feedback received during the upcoming field test, and the requirements set by Army headquarters, a newer version of the hot-weather uniform could be requested and tested by the 25th ID around the same time next year.

Jungle combat boot 2.0

In addition to the new uniform, 25th ID Soldiers will have a chance to try out five versions of footwear that represent a "Version 2" of the jungle boot. These five variants are based on "Version 1" of the boot Soldiers have already field-tested earlier this year.

After that field testing of Version 1, Soldiers determined that they wanted a combat boot that was lighter and more flexible, and which also had less stack-height off the ground. Ferenczy said the five types of Version 2 jungle boots meet all those Soldier demands, while also remaining puncture-proof and quick-drying.

The Version 2 boots also provide increased traction in the mud.

Furthermore, he said, all the Version 2 boots are better designed to not hold in any moisture, and incorporate larger-sized drainage vents on both sides. Come January, the Version 2 boots - 150 from each of five manufacturers - will be distributed to 25th ID Soldiers to be field-tested until March. The goal is for this current evaluation of Version 2 boots, and subsequent feedback, to be combined into a final offering.

Program Executive Office Soldier officials discussed improvements to the hot weather uniform (above) and jungle combat boot (below) programs during a media roundtable event on Fort Belvoir, Virginia, Dec. 7. The 25th ID is slated to field test the new uniform and boot starting in January.

Army to direct commission cyber officers

DAVID VERGUN
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Soon, the first-ever U.S. Army Cyber Direct Commissioning Program (CDCP) board will meet to select up to five candidates for the first year of a five-year pilot program, said Lt. Gen. Paul M. Nakasone.

Nakasone, commander of U.S. Army Cyber Command, discussed the CDCP during a Dec. 6 media roundtable at the Pentagon. He said over 50 applications have already been received.

By early February, civilian candidates will attend a six-week direct commissioning course at Fort Sill, Oklahoma, followed by a 12-week Cyber Officer Basic Leadership Course at Fort Gordon, Georgia. After graduation, they will be commissioned first lieutenants.

The reason the Army decided to go the direct commissioning route is that changes in cyberspace are occurring rapidly, so a ready-trained and talented technical expert who wants to serve his or her nation is what the Army thinks is needed at this time, Nakasone said.

All of the candidates must

have a face-to-face interview at Fort Gordon, he said. This will enable interviewers to gauge whether or not a candidate is suited for the Army and for the cyber mission.

The interviewers will be looking for someone who is a team player, since both cyber offense and defense is organized around 41 teams, Nakasone said.

Other traits include drive, dedication and commitment, he added. Other requirements are U.S. citizenship, a four-year degree, the ability to meet physical fitness standards, and the ability to obtain a top-secret security clearance, he said.

On the technical side, experience can include cybersecurity, software or hardware engineering and product management. The full listing of 14 skills, along with other requirements, he said, can be found on www.goarmy.com.

Maj. Gen. Patricia A. Frost, director of cyber within the Army's G-3/5/7, said that to be accepted into the program, "it's OK to be innovative, but not successful, as in having a patent. That's why the person-to-person interview is such an important part of the process."

She added that the Army wants someone with potential, drive, energy, creativity and new ideas on how the Army can gain the upper hand in the cyberspace domain.

The reason the Army isn't growing these cyber operators from the current force is that it would take several years to attain the technical skills these candidates have, she said.

Once the new lieutenants enter the cyber force, they will be helped along by designated mentors, she added.

"The biggest incentive for these candidates is that every day you're going to go toe-to-toe with the best hackers in the world, and you're defending our nation," Nakasone said. "If you want that opportunity, come and join us in the Army."

AtHoc alerts Army Hawaii community of threats

KAREN A. IWAMOTO
Staff Writer

SCHOFIELD BARRACKS — Safety and preparedness are central to mission readiness, and Army Hawaii is reminding the community of a simple way to increase both.

The AtHoc Mass Warning Emergency Notification System alerts users to hazards and emergencies on and surrounding U.S. Army Garrison-Hawaii installations. These may include warnings about hurricanes and tsunamis, electrical outages, road closures and bomb threats, among other things.

“It allows people to receive emergency information to protect themselves and their families,” said Francis Smith, emergency management officer for USAG-HI’s Directorate of Plans, Training, Mobilization and Security. “This is critical information that is put out within minutes of an incident.”

Enrollment is currently below Army Hawaii leaders’ goal of 90 percent, which they want to meet within the next few months.

By helping Soldiers, family members and civilian employees avoid potentially dangerous situations, the alerts could save lives, Smith said. This, in turn, supports the Army’s mission by keeping the force safe and ready to fight.

Although there are many ways for the community to receive emergency information – television and radio broadcasts, NOAA weather radios, outdoor sirens and other text-message-like alert systems, AtHoc is specific to the Army community. And unlike other programs, AtHoc also has the ability to help commanders plan for and improve their preparedness and response capabilities.

How to enroll

Signing up for AtHoc takes only a few minutes, Smith said, and Army Hawaii

Soldiers, civilian employees and contractors who have Common Access Cards (CACs) may do so by logging on to their work computers and clicking on the purple AtHoc icon.

From there, they may follow a series of steps to have notifications sent to their home landlines and cellphones, in addition to popup alerts on their computers.

Under the current AtHoc system, they may also opt to sign up one non-CAC-holding family member for the alerts. Smith said an option to add more family members is in the works.

When users change locations, they should remember to update their information in the AtHoc system.

The AtHoc system is also available as an app for iOS and Android smartphones. When downloading the app, make sure you are selecting the correct installation – USAG-Hawaii. Users must have an active email set up in the USAG-HI AtHoc Mass Warning and Notification system before downloading and installing the app.

Added security

In addition to the AtHoc notifications, USAG-HI also has “Giant Voice” loudspeakers that broadcast warnings at its installations. Besides voice broadcasts, these loudspeakers also broadcast emergency siren alerts, including emergency siren alert tests by the State of Hawaii on the first of each month.

There are “Giant Voice” loudspeakers on Schofield Barracks, on Wheeler Army Airfield, on Fort Shafer and at the Pohakuloa Training Area on the Big Island. However, the broadcasts do not reach all areas of the installations.

AtHoc provides an additional way to ensure the community receives the alerts it needs to remain safe and ready.

Questions

If you have any questions about enrolling in the AtHoc system, contact your unit’s AtHoc end user manager.

FORT SHAFTER — U.S. Army-Pacific Soldiers, family and friends came together at historic Palm Circle, here, to pay homage to five Soldiers during a Celebration of Service ceremony, Dec. 6.

Maj. Gen. Bryan Suntheimer, USARPAC deputy commanding general National Guard, was the host of the ceremony, and thanked the Soldiers for their combined 110 years of dedication to the nation.

"I consider it one of my highest honors to thank and celebrate the service of (these) five exceptional leaders," said Suntheimer. "Thank you for joining me in the celebration of these great Americans. They have done what few do - sacrificing their time and love to an organization that seeks to make our world better. May God bless each of you in the next chapter of your lives."

Suntheimer highlighted the careers of the five Soldiers over the course of the ceremony, noting their distinguished accomplishments, deployments, awards and their future ambitions.

USARPAC's Celebration of Service ceremony recognizes Soldiers for exemplary service to USARPAC and the nation as they get ready to transition into new careers. During the ceremony, Soldiers received awards and were presented with the U.S. Flag in honor of their service to the nation.

OHDACA-funded kindergartens open in Vietnam

LIEN THUY, Vietnam — Representatives from the U.S. Army-Pacific, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers and the U.S. Embassy in Vietnam were met by throngs of dancing children during a ribbon-cutting ceremony at a new U.S.-funded kindergarten, here, Dec. 7.

Lien Thuy is a commune located in the North Central Coast region of Vietnam and one of the poorest provinces in the country. The new 10-room kindergarten can support the education of 320 children and doubles as a storm shelter, as the region is prone to torrential rains and flooding.

Brig. Gen. Douglas Anderson, deputy commander, Army Reserve, USARPAC and commander of the 9th Mission Support Command, spoke at the ribbon-cutting ceremony.

"Since 2009, the U.S. government, through the Overseas Humanitarian, Disaster and Civic Aid (OHDACA) program, has partnered with the Vietnamese government and communities to construct schools, clinics, centers and bridges in many towns in Vietnam. And the Lien Thuy kindergarten is the 20th school we've built in Vietnam under our partnership program," he said.

According to the Defense Security Cooperation Agency's website, OHDACA-funded activities are intended to directly address humanitarian needs, augment Combatant Commander (CCDR) capabilities to respond to humanitarian crises, help generate long-term positive perceptions and goodwill for the Department of Defense, and promote cooperation with foreign military and civilian counterparts.

Concurrently, OHDACA-funded activities provide direct benefits to the Hanoi government by improving the basic living conditions of the civilian populace in a country susceptible to extremism, enhancing the legitimacy of the Hanoi government by improving or building its capacity to provide essential services (such as health care or education) to its populace, and promoting stability in the Hanoi government or region.

This was the second OHDACA-funded kindergarten opened in the last three days. The other was opened in the Quang Vinh Commune, Hue Province, Dec. 5. Each project cost approximately $500,000 and was built in under a year.

The projects were requested by Vietnam, developed by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, sponsored and funded by U.S. Pacific Command and coordinated with the U.S. Embassy in Vietnam.

"This close cooperation between Vietnam and the U.S. reflects the spirit of our partnership between the two countries," said Anderson.

Common holiday travel scams revealed

SCHOFIELD BARRACKS — Now is the perfect time to refresh your memory about operational security. Here are 10 tips you should follow this holiday season.

- 1- Be wary of "shoulder surfers" and cell-phone cameras when using credit/debit cards. Shield your PIN numbers from view when entering them at the ATM or checkout counter.
- 2- When paying for items, be mindful not to display large amounts of cash to onlookers. If you're carrying a large amount of cash, keep a portion of the money separate from your wallet in case you get pickpocketed or lose your wallet.
- 3- If you bought so many items that you need to drop some off at the car before continuing to shop, make sure you place the items in the trunk and out of sight. It is also a good idea to move your vehicle to another parking spot, away from any onlookers who may have observed you unload your bags.
- 4- Boxes from expensive gifts such as computers, televisions or game consoles left curbside for trash collection provide potential burglars with good indicators as to what high value items are located in the household. Break down the boxes, throw them in a bag and put them out just before trash collection time.
- 5- Keep holiday gifts and purchases out of sight, especially when they can be seen from outside of your house. It is preferable to keep presents stored in a closet or other area that is out of sight to others.
- 6- Consider the gift of a paper shredder in the home this holiday season - shredding documents containing your personal, private or financial information prior to disposing of them is a great way to protect yourself from identify theft.
- 7- Be cautious of Internet-connected toys and devices around the home. Toys equipped with microphones may record and collect conversations within earshot of the device. The collection of a child's personal information while initiating accounts (name, date of birth, pictures, address) combined with a toy's ability to connect to the Internet or other devices creates opportunities for child identity fraud.
- 8- If you are out shopping or at a holiday party, be careful about using location-based social media sites and applications. Although these tools may help you let family and friends know where you are, they could also be informing strangers and criminals of your location or the fact that your home may be empty.
- 9- Avoid posting information about your holiday travel plans. Posting travel plans or vacation photos may inadvertently make your home a target for criminals. Wait until you return home to share stories and photos from your holiday travels.
- 10- Avoid "talking shop" at holiday parties and social gatherings. Be wary of attempts to elicit information about training, equipment or other work-related topics from individuals who do not have a need to know.

MILITARY ONESOURCE News Release

The holiday travel season is here. You're probably thinking of what gifts to get or what travel plans to make. With all of this on your mind, you may be less focused and let your guard down.

Scammers know this and often increase their efforts to target people at this time of year.

Generally, if you receive an unsolicited email, telephone call or mail for a discounted holiday travel package or airfare that sounds too good to be true, it's probably a scam.

Unsolicited correspondence

If you are offered a travel deal by email, it's very likely a scam as many of the bulk email travel deals or free vacations are. If you receive the deal by phone, ask the telemarketer for the company's name, address and local telephone number. If they refuse to provide this information, it's likely not a legitimate offer. If they do provide this information, check the track record of the company and call them back if they are a reputable company and you're interested in the deal.

"Fine print"

Another form of misrepresentation scammers use is in the "fine print." In some travel scams, one part of your vacation package, like the airfare, can be free or very cheap, but you're then required to stay at a specific hotel that turns out to be very expensive.

Make sure that "fine print" exists and that it is clear. Any reputable travel company should have a phone number, physical address and terms and conditions on their website, usually on the contact page. These terms and conditions should provide you with information like refund or cancellation policies.

Scammers are less likely to post these policies, or they'll provide them in a suspicious manner, like only through a faxed request or only if you provide information. Any time you're required to provide your personal information to receive information on a deal, there's a good chance that it's a scam.

Pressure

Any time someone says they need your commitment to buy immediately or that the offer won't be available much longer, this should send up a red flag.

Contests

Public contests have rules and regulations, usually requiring that you enter to win. If you never entered a contest, you didn't win. If you didn't enter and you receive a call saying that you won, it's probably a scam. But if you're not sure whether you entered the contest, ask the agent for more details on the contest. A reputable contest will provide more information.

Another version of this scam is to tell you that you won the vacation package, but that the caller needs your credit card number to verify and settle the arrangements. You should never have to pay for a prize.

Who to trust

So what can you do to make sure you're not the victim of a travel scam? Well first, for service members, a good and safe option is Family and Morale, Welfare and Recreation and its Leisure Travel Office. Either can tell you about different vacation options as well as military discounts; call 655-9971 or 438-1985.

If you've been scammed

And, if you think you've been ripped off by one of these travel scams, you should file a complaint with the Federal Trade Commission at www.ftccomplaintassistant.gov.

You can also turn to Military OneSource for help. This no-cost 24-hour service is available to all active duty, National Guard and Reserve members (regardless of activation status) and their families.

SCHOFIELD BARRACKS — Operational security must be practiced at all times, especially when you're travelling. Review these tips before you head off to vacation.

- 1- Refrain from using military duffel bags or bags with government patches or logos.
- 2- Don't use rank or title to reserve airline tickets or hotel rooms.
- 3- Keep a low profile with regard to both attire and demeanor.
- 4- Be cautious about giving out information regarding family travel plans to those who don't have a "need to know."
- 5- Turn off geo-locate services on your Internet-connected devices and avoid "checking in" at restaurants and hotels.
- 6- Hold off on posting photos and updates from your trip to social media until after your trip is complete.
- 7- Leave your home with a "lived in" look. Consider using timers for lights and television. Have a neighbor park a vehicle in your driveway and move it on a regular basis so the house appears occupied.
- 8- Put delivery holds on newspapers and mail. As a backup, have a trusted neighbor check for any unanticipated holiday deliveries.
- 9- Don't hide a key. Experienced criminals know how to spot the fake rocks, magnetic key holders, and even fake dog poop used to hide the keys to your home.
- 10- Avoid leaving the garbage can by the road during your absence. Leave the garbage can in its normal location during your trip, or have a trusted neighbor put out the trash and return the can after collection.

Hope, cheer and ... Steal! Steal! Steal!

During this season of giving, people everywhere are transformed. Generosity and compassion well up in us all. However, in the midst of all this merriment, otherwise charitable people can become so caught up in materialistic desires that they have thoughts of theft, revenge – and even murder.

What, pray tell, could arouse criminal tendencies during the holidays? The answer is simple: group gift exchanges.

Known as “Yankee Swaps,” “White Elephant Exchanges” or “Dirty Santas,” this apparently innocent holiday game rouses merciless thievery and selfish materialism in even the most virtuous of participants.

Case in point, my last military wives’ Bunco group held an ornament exchange every December. The members carefully shopped beforehand, picking out items that were unique, handmade or artistic to contribute to the pool of gifts.

One year, the class clown in me couldn’t resist when I saw glass-blown German ornaments delicately shaped into acorns and walnuts. I bought one of each, envisioning the hysterical laughter that would erupt when, as the recipient opened my package, I would blurt out a joke of questionable taste involving the word “nuts.”

We arrived at the hostess’ home at the designated hour and placed our tiny packages under her sparkling tree. Wine glasses filled, chitchat ensued and we were all enjoying the festive atmosphere.

A while later, we were filling up on hot dip and red and green M&Ms, when the hostess called us into the living room to start the ornament exchange. Light laughter trailed into the room as we plopped onto couches and chairs. We had no idea of the carnage about to befall our unsuspecting group.

After drawing numbers, the game began. The first two women picked from the wrapped gifts under the tree. One by one, they gently unraveled tissue paper from around their chosen ornaments. Eyes darted around the room and brains calculated. Just seconds before, we were more interested in the cranberry cream cheese spread, but now that merchandise was involved, we began to strategize.

Not wanting to cause any drama, I also selected a wrapped ornament from under the tree when it was my turn. This might have continued, turn after turn, until all the packages were opened and accounted for, but someone suddenly cried, “Steal!” and mouths began to water.

“Yeah, it’s no fun if we just pick the wrapped gifts, you’ve got to steal!” another added, wiping the spittle from her chin.

A chant ensued, “Steal! Steal! Steal!” as the next woman rose from her seat.

A tiny grin could be seen on her face as she lunged toward her friend’s lap, containing an already-opened wooden ornament, seizing it away. We erupted in hoots and applause, and the living room transformed into a Roman coliseum.

Seething with vengeance, the victim of the theft plotted her retribution. The scene quickly turned from one of merriment to mayhem, as my fellow military spouses became an unruly mob. The women ruthlessly snatched ornaments one by one, while our host tried to maintain order.

An innocent “Yankee Swap” can become a competitive sport when participants lose sight of the reason for the season.

“Now, remember ladies, the gift is DEAD after it’s stolen three times.”

The mere mention of “death” only seemed to ignite more savagery.

When one woman stole the wooden ornament for the third time, the group shouted, “It’s DEAD, it’s DEAD!” and I thought I heard gnashing of teeth as if she was carrying a bloody carcass back to the den.

With all the stolen ornaments dead, the last participant had no choice; she had to pick the lone gift left under the tree. It was the box of ornaments I had brought, and as she revealed them, I weakly offered my preplanned inappropriate nut joke. The woman, still wounded from battle, could only force a bogus chuckle.

As we all said goodnight, I realized that we had just waged an epic war over meaningless trinkets that could be bought for less than $10 at any local store. The shameless displays of latent aggression and irreparably hurt feelings could have all been easily avoided.

But perhaps humans who wouldn’t dream of committing theft and murder simply can’t resist the thrilling temptation of crime in the midst of delicious homebaked cookies and sparkling twinkle lights?

BATTLESHIP MISSOURI MEMORIAL
News Release

PEARL HARBOR — Santa is coming to town, and he’s making an early visit to the Battleship Missouri Memorial to take photos with all the good girls and boys.

The crew of the Mighty Mo will be decking out its pier to welcome jolly old Saint Nick, even building a special sleigh resembling the bow of the USS Missouri. Guests are invited to take photos with Santa using their own camera.

In addition, there will be ornament-decorating stations and savory seasonal treats made by Santa’s helpers. Hot refreshments will be available for purchase along with collectible stocking stuffers at the Battleship.

Those wishing to explore the majestic

Mighty Mo may purchase an admission ticket for entry onto the ship. The Battleship Missouri Memorial will be open for tours during its regularly scheduled hours on Dec. 22, from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m., and will be closed on Christmas Day.

Effective leaders know how to be effective communicators

In the Army and in the private sector, the best leaders are also effective communicators. Please note that I did not say great talkers, but communicators.

The keys to becoming an effective communicator cannot be taught solely in the classroom or in Army Regulation 25-50.

In the classroom, we learn vocabulary, tense, grammar, syntax and so on. In other words, we focus on ourselves, but not on how we are being received by those around us. Effective leaders share a few communication traits that are focused on those they serve or lead.

A skill that separates the great communicators from the mediocre is a keen awareness of people and surroundings.

Two leaders who possess that skill are retired Gen. Stanley McChrystal and retired Adm. William McRaven. Both served in the Special Operations Command and led service members to accomplish significant feats. Both had great ideas that shifted the course of their respective organizations – McChrystal at Joint Special Operations Command and McRaven at U.S. Special Operations Command.

The shifts in culture and direction they achieved started with ideas they communicated with emotion and passion. This was turned into action when their staffs understood and took ownership of the mission.

Leaders at all levels, from the senior general officer to the young sergeant, spend a majority of their time in interpersonal communication. When this communication is executed poorly, problems arise. Effective communication is a must for mission success and developing those skills over time is a must to ensure a strong team.

The No. 1 thing great communicators have in common is that they possess a heightened sense of situational and contextual awareness.

The best communicators are also the best listeners. The best leaders are also the best followers.

The greatest communicators develop the ability to read a person or a group by sensing their moods, dynamics, attitudes, values and concerns. In addition to reading their environment, effective communicators adapt their messages to that environment without missing a beat.

Effective communication has little to do with the messenger and everything to do with meeting the needs and expectations of those with whom you are communicating.

Effective communication is paramount at all levels of command. All of us, regardless of our military occupational specialty, train long and hard to do our jobs well. In the same way, we need to be constant learners of effective communication because this will develop us into effective leaders.

Oldest survivor of Pearl Harbor attack visits Tripler

HONOLULU — The oldest survivor of the attack on Pearl Harbor, U.S. Navy veteran Ray Chavez of California, visited Tripler Army Medical Center, Dec. 8, as part of his trip to attend to the 76th Pearl Harbor commemoration ceremonies.

He was accompanied by his daughter Kathleen Chavez; Richard Rovsek, chairman of the Spirit of Liberty Foundation; and William Davis, the “American Santa.”

Upon entering the medical center, Rovsek announced Chavez’s arrival to a large gathering at Tripler’s dining facility during the annual holiday meal.

“This is Ray Chavez; he’s 105 years old and the oldest Pearl Harbor survivor,” Rovsek told those gathered.

Troops applauded Chavez and lined up to shake his hand, thank him for his service and snap a few “selfies” with him.

According to the Honolulu Star-Advertiser, on the day of the attack, Chavez was on the minesweeper Condor, which spotted the periscope of a Japanese midget submarine as it tried to enter Pearl Harbor.

“He never would talk about it, and the only reason why I knew he was there (at Pearl Harbor) was that my mother was there with him,” Kathleen Chavez said. “She told me about being here. Otherwise, he never said a word.”

Kathleen and her father began attending the Pearl Harbor remembrance ceremonies in 1991, when she thought to ask if he would be interested in going.

“When my mother passed away and the 50th anniversary came along, I thought, ‘I wonder ...’ So I said to him, ‘Would you like to go?’” Kathleen said.

“The first time we went to the ceremony, it was very emotional, and he doesn’t show his emotions. ... I know it really touched him,” she said.

Since then, Kathleen and her father have attended Pearl Harbor commemorations about every five years until the 70th anniversary, when they decided they would come every year.

Operation Christmas Miracle, a program leveraged by the Spirit of Liberty, financed Chavez’s trip this year, and also coordinated the visit to Tripler.

“We (the foundation) have visited military hospitals from coast to coast from Walter Reed ... as far as to Germany in Landstuhl to the hospitals. We always feel it is something we should do when we have Santa Claus, we should stop by and visit,” said Rovsek.

Every year in Hawaii, the Spirit of Liberty Foundation opens the Pearl Harbor commemoration ceremonies on Dec. 6.

“We are the first event and have been for several years, and we call it, “The Ringing of America’s Freedom Bell,” explained Rovsek.

Chavez is often the honoree to be the first to ring the bell, and over the years, he has been honored at many Pearl Harbor commemoration ceremonies. But at 105 years old, that is not the reason why he makes a special trip out to Hawaii each year.

Kathleen said, “He goes to honor those he served with.”
