Intern program opens doors

By April Brown
Reporter

Tuesday marked the first day of work for three new RMI interns, Twily Sheet, Loanne Bulles and Pauline Alfred.

The three Marshallese women will each rotate through the USAKA Protocol, Public Affairs and Host Nations Offices every four months.

This internship program is a joint effort between Workforce Investment Act and USAKA. USAKA provides meals, $11,000 per intern, and lodging, $20,000 per intern. WIA is providing a $10,000 stipend for each intern, $50 per week for living expenses and $150 per week for college expenses for 50 weeks. There is a total investment of over $41,000

Summer camp starts

Adventure and fun on tap

By Loren Lindborg
Reporter

Kwaj kids are going off on an adventure this summer as Camp Adventures Youth Services opens the Summer Fun program this week.

The day program began Tuesday and has its headquarters in the Kwajalein Junior/Senior High School’s Multi-Purpose room. The children, however, accompanied by an assigned counselor, enjoy different activities at different locations around the island.

“It’s really cool seeing the kids become interested in new things...seeing them grow and learn,” said Amanda Keiffer, Camp Adventure counselor.

Camp Adventure is made up of college-age students from the University of Northern Iowa and several of its partner universities. Together the kids go around the world providing summer entertainment for the families of military personnel in all four branches.

Camp director Heather Schantz is coordinating events with Community

Selected air transport touches down

By Jim Bennett

Commuters are seeing a new ride to work on Roi-Namur this week as Aviation is working a new aircraft into the schedule of runs.

The deHavilland, Dash-6, Twin Otter will replace the Metroliner, which began service in March with the contract take-over by AirScan and Kwajalein Range Services.

Never intended as a permanent aircraft, the Metroliner received criticism from commuters because it lacked air conditioning on the ground and its cramped cabin, at four-feet, nine-inches tall, made getting in and out of seats an uncomfortable proposition.

The Twin Otter, by comparison, offers air conditioning and greater head- and cabin-room. In addition, Twin Otters have high wings mounted above the fuselage, and the particular Twin Otter on Kwajalein, and the one to follow, were both outfitted with 2-foot tall windows, originally designed for tourism

Everyone has heard the rumors of what it’s like growing up in a military family. Often I’ve had people ask me if my dad made me drop and give him push-ups when I misbehaved as a child. Did I have to call him “Sir” in conversation?

I would love to tell you the truth, but that’s classified information, and you need special clearance.

Growing up as the daughter of a soldier in the U.S. Army, you get a very different perspective, in my opinion, on the world as a whole. Until we moved off of a base, I truly thought the world revolved around the PX and the Commissary. And I have to admit, I thought everyone’s dads wore those cute green uniforms. I mean, why wouldn’t they want to?

When I went off to college, I found myself trying to describe my life as an Army brat, what it was like moving every couple of years and what my dad actually did.

Telling people that my dad worked in the Pentagon was one of the worst mistakes I ever made because they would ask questions about what he did. I honestly couldn’t answer them, mainly because I didn’t really know. I think trying to understand what my dad did in the Pentagon is a lot like asking someone who works in Building 1010 what they do. Oh, they tell you this and that, but, when you walk away from the conversation, you don’t really know any more than when you started it.

Moving out to Kwajalein was an experience unlike any other. When I came here, I wasn’t sad about leaving the mall behind, partially because I knew I’d get to one as soon as I went back to college.

In all actuality I was ecstatic, because my dad was leaving the Pentagon. He was back to working regular hours, a regular job, in my mind anyways. But that’s only if you consider a regular job being stationed on a tropical island, riding your bicycle to work and getting a tan just by walking from your house to the gym.

When I asked my younger sister, Autumn, 19, about having a father like ours she said, “Not to sound cliché; he may be the commander of this here island but to me he’s still Pops. Holla’ back!”

When you have a dad that really has to wear several different hats all in one job, you find yourself adjusting normal day to day activities in ways you never thought you would.

For example, this past Father’s Day was no different. We did the usual — letting him sleep in, watch his games on TV with a bag of popcorn and a glass of sweet tea. But this year we also found ourselves preparing a special Father’s Day around an Army Ball, a farewell for Mohamed “The Great One” Abouzahra and a visit from Ambassador Senko and his wife.

All in a day’s work I’d say.

Even Father’s Day is different for Army brats

Hourglass scores new talent

Coming up with just the right, or according to the dissident few, the wrong words in a journalistic piece can sometimes be daunting. This is decidedly the case when day after day words have to flow and fill the newspaper with pertinent and erudite information with a short staff.

The curmudgeonly editor, Jim, and I, the up and coming associate editor, are willing but sometimes it’s hard to find a synonym for “tropical.”

All I can say is, thank goodness for Loren Lindborg and April Brown, our new talented summer reporters who have words that they haven’t even begun to think of using yet. Examples of their work grace this issue.

Clash of Marshallese and U.S. cultures depicted

Former Kwajer pens acclaimed novel

By Loren Lindborg
Reporter

A first-time novel, by a former Kwaj resident, sparked discussion among a group of about 16 Kwajalein residents last Friday at the Religious Education Building.

Melal, written by Robert Barclay, was published last year and since then has received renowned critical acclaim including a nomination for the Pulitzer Prize and was voted one of the 10 Best Books of 2002, according to the Honolulu Advertiser.

Melal is a Marshallese word meaning playground for the demons, a place not habitable by people, according to the author.

Barclay uses this to paint a picture of the contemporary Pacific by starting his story in the one of the old Ebeye ghettos on Good Friday in the year 1981. From there, his story follows a day in the life of a Marshallese man named Rujen Keju and his two sons. The book interweaves mythological Marshallese elements with the story of Rujen and his family to create a compelling story of life and history in the Marshall Islands.

The discussion group, led by Dr. Eric Lindborg and his wife, Cris, gave residents a forum to discuss the impact that Americans have had on affecting the Marshallese lifestyle. Topics ranged from the difference in thinking between Marshallese and Western cultures to the symbolism from the Marshallese legends in the book.

"I noticed there was a lot of symbolism between the characters and their different generations," said discussion member Bess Buchanan.

As people discussed the book, they recalled real-life stories where the author's message of the misinterpretation between the two cultures came through. For instance, one story that was brought up epitomized the difference in thinking between the two cultures, according to Cris Lindborg.

It was around 1983 when Barclay was living on-island that a group of dolphins beached themselves on Camp Hamilton beach. Some Marshallese men, hearing of the beaching, planned to give the dolphins to an Iroij, or a Marshallese leader, since it is a custom in their culture. But before they took it, a Kwajalein resident noticing this, protested and made the distinction of saying eating dolphins was like eating babies. This caused a controversy and resulted in the eventual release of the dolphins.

Barclay mentions this metaphor in his book and uses this to illustrate the misinterpretations that are often made between Marshallese and American culture.

"It showed a very clear clash of the two different cultures," said discussion member Lora Kendrick.

According to Barclay, the most important problem in the novel is what he calls "the forced military occupation of these islands," which were terms, forced upon not only by the military, but the Marshallese government, too.

"I remember in the '70s' and the '80s' how bad things got on Ebeye, and how wonderful things were for us on Kwaj — country club living while we simply accepted or ignored the apartheid policies impacting the Marshallese people on Ebeye," Barclay said.

Overall, the discussion group came to the consensus that this was the most accurate representation of the Marshallese way of life in a TV series or novel. Most members agreed the portrayal of Ebeye in the book is pessimistic, giving it somewhat of a morbid view for the future of the Marshallese people over on Ebeye.

However, the foremost reasons that the group enjoyed the book was for its humor and its storyline. And the discussion group recommended the book to Kwaj residents because of its relevance.

Melal is available for check-out at Grace Sherwood Library and is also for sale for $15 at the Micronesian Handicraft Shop. As of right now, the Mic Shop is sold out of all copies, but a new shipment is already on order.

Author offers scholarship

By Loren Lindborg
Reporter

Melal author Robert Barclay is not only a Kwaj kid who has written an award-winning novel, but a scholarship founder as well. Barclay is using the royalties he receives from Melal to create the Capelle and Bender scholarship fund for Marshallese students who plan to attend the University of Hawaii.

The scholarship is designed for students who plan to attend UH with a specialization in creative writing. The $2,000 scholarship will be awarded for the first time this fall.

Named after two of the authors of the Marshallese-English dictionary, Alfred Capelle and Byron Bender, the scholarship is administered by the UH office of Student Equity, Excellence, and Diversity.

The connection between the chosen university and the book is that UH Press published Melal.

More information is available on the scholarship at http://www.hawaii.edu/diversity.
Kwaj version of camp is unique ...

Activities Recreation Coordinator Erika Cole to create a variety of wacky, wild weekly themes that include names like “Coral Sea Jamboree” and “Amazing All-Star Replay Zone.” They then build events around the themes, Cole said.

The Kwaj version of Camp Adventure is unique because for the first time counselors are working with kids who have English as a second language, according to Schantz. Usually camp counselors work with just military or embassy families.

“Luckily, we have four staff members that are working with us from here who are bilingual,” said Schantz. “James [Corder] has already been teaching us some of the language.”

Six Community Activities employees plus three volunteers from Kwajalein will work with the Camp Adventure counselors to create a better learning environment for the kids, according to Cole. Camp Adventure counselors provide the training while Community Activities provides facilities, supplies and additional personnel.

Camp Adventure also plans to be a place for parents as well. Every Saturday, parents are invited to see how their child is doing in each class.

Due to the KRS contract changeover, this summer marks a change in tradition. This summer, Camp Adventure is a bridge from an old tradition to a new tradition as Community Activities works with School Age Services which will take over the responsibilities of summer fun recreational activities next year.

Twin Otter offers more in simpler package ...

flights over the Grand Canyon, said Chief Pilot John Koehler.

“We’ve had people glued to the windows during flights,” Koehler said.

They’ve also had their propellers modified to make for a quieter ride.

The Twin Otter was one of Canada’s most successful commercial aircraft, with over 800 built between 1965 and 1988, according to the Australian Aviation Archive Web site.

USAKA Aviation still doesn’t have enough pilots certified on the Twin Otter for the aircraft to replace the Metroliner in all commuter flights, but is working the plane into the rotation, Koehler said.

From a pilot’s standpoint, the plane is stable and maneuverable with basic controls and mostly analog gauges, Koehler said. Though it has a less-complicated, easier-to-maintain avionics package than the previous USAKA aircraft, the plane features top-of-the-line radio equipment, GPS navigation aids, radar and anti-collision indicators.

“It’s an old aircraft, very dependable and it can get in and out of short strips,” said Richard T. Perry, who works the maintenance side of the house as compliance officer.

Because of the plane’s short take-off and landing capability and 600-mile round-trip range, it could conceivably land on any atoll in the Marshall Islands.

The average speed is around 155mph, which slows the trip to Roi-Namur by only a few minutes, Koehler said.

“It has everything we need and nothing we don’t need,” Perry said. In fact, what it doesn’t have is a great gain, he added. The plane is not pressurized, has fixed instead of retractable landing gear and simpler avionics, eliminating more than 70 percent of the maintenance issues raised on previous aircraft, such as the Metroliner and Beech 1900Ds, which operated prior to March.

Because it is not pressurized and flies slower than the Metroliner and Beech 1900Ds, however, the Dash-6 may not be the best choice for a long-range mission to Wake Island, though it is capable of such a flight, Koehler and Perry said, adding USAKA transportation officials are looking at other potential options for long-range missions.
Opportunity changes future plans ...

Bulles said she is excited about all of the new skills she is learning that will not only prepare her for a college career, but also for her entry into the workforce after college, which was still uncertain before she received the internship.

In Alfred's case, she will now be able to return to school with a whole new outlook on career opportunities. Alfred grew up on Majuro until she was 18, when she moved to Kwajalein and graduated from the Kwajalein Jr./Sr. High School in 2001. She then left to attend Hawaii Pacific University but returned due to a lack of money. With the internship and a scholarship from KRS, Alfred will return to school after her internship to pursue a career in Protocol. Alfred said she enjoys meeting different people and feels the program has opened a lot of doors.

"Without this program, we wouldn't have been able to attend quality schools, let alone schools of our choice," Alfred said.

Sheet, the third intern, also grew up on Ebeye, similar to Bulles and attended school on Kwajalein. She also feels that this is a great opportunity, opening the door for other Marshallese.

"This is a great opportunity because it's going to give the impression to other Marshallese, that if we can do it, they can too," Sheet said.

Although Sheet initially planned on pursuing a career in journalism, she has begun to think of pursuing a degree in political science. She said this experience will open up several fields of study for her that weren't previously available.

In addition to the internship and financial assistance for their college educations, all three interns will live together in a trailer for the next year.

Bulles likes the set-up, because it will help to live with friends while going through this new experience. Sheet said she likes the idea because it requires them to live away from their parents, which helps them prepare for stepping out on their own.

"This is a great chance for us to gain independence by living on our own," Alfred said. "It’s a lot like living in a dorm on a college campus."

All three expressed their excitement over the internships and the plethora of opportunities now available to them. Alfred summed it up saying, "I believe I speak for all of us when I say we are really grateful to be chosen."

One killed as conflict continues in Iraq

By Gerry J. Gilmore
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON – One 804th Medical Brigade soldier was killed and two injured today during a rocket-propelled grenade assault on a military ambulance that occurred north of Camp Dogwood in the town of al Iskandariyah, U.S. Central Command reported today.

The ambulance was transporting a patient injured in an unrelated incident to the 28th Combat Army Support Hospital. The soldiers’ identities are being withheld pending notification of next of kin.

In other action, a Civil Military Operations Center in Samarra was hit by an 82 mm mortar round June 18, killing one Iraqi and wounding 12 other Iraqis, according to a CENTCOM news release.

U.S. 4th Infantry Division soldiers in the area had heard three explosions and contacted local Iraqi police. The Samarra police investigated the scene and discovered those Iraqis killed and injured in the attack, according to the release.

The perpetrators of the assault escaped, and no U.S. troops were injured in the attack. The incident is under investigation.

Sunday is solstice

From Staff Reports

Plan to watch the sunset a little later Sunday because it’s the summer solstice, or the longest day of the year.

On June 22, the sun will rise on Kwajalein at 6:32 a.m. and set at 7:10 p.m. for a total of 12 hours and 38 minutes of daylight, said Kris White, Aeromet Staff forecaster in an e-mail.

The shortest day, or winter solstice, occurs on December 22 with 11 hours and 37 minutes of daylight, he said.

"So, you see that there is not much variation in the amount of sunlight received here in the tropics," White said.

“Because of this and other factors, average monthly temperatures don’t change that much.”

RC rally rolls towards annual fundraiser event ...

“It took more than a month to build,” said Mike Ellison, Community Activities superintendent on Roi-Namur. “We tried to make it as realistic as possible. We had a really good time, quite a few people contributed.”

“The track was awesome,” added Matt Hatfield, who owns a nitro-truck. “I wasn’t expecting a professional-style track.”

Besides building the track, Velez, while on a trip to Hawaii, bought T-shirts, trophies and other prizes. Over the months, he also bought a new RC nitro-truck.

“It started out getting a little vehicle for fun and I got involved with top-of-the-line,” Velez said.

Besides the track, the field featured some special events including the fireball where the vehicle must push a metal ball out from within a crater-like pit.

“You really have to control your car to do it,” Velez said.

In the bowling event, the vehicle races down a straightaway into a group of pins. Each “bowler” gets two shots before scores are tallied.

The King of the Hill resembles a monster-truck-like event, in which vehicles must traverse two of four hills, knocking over the flag atop the hill, before attempting to conquer the center, highest hill.

Finally the sumo event pits cars and trucks against each other in a sumo-style match, attempting to push each other from the marked circle.

A barbecue with burgers and hot dogs followed the events.

“We wanted to make it competitive and fun,” Velez said. “Already people are asking when we’re going to do it again. There should be another one,” he said.

Ellison agreed another event would occur as Roi planners hoped to match the success of the RC rally with fund raising for the Enniburr Children’s Christmas Fund, the account that provides annually Christmas presents and a party for children on Third Island, near Roi.

“It’s going to be an event we can start to run annually,” Ellison said. “The community comes together. That’s what we like up here is the camaraderie. It’s like family.”

Hatfield said he expected interest in the hobby to grow after the event, and hopes to build a track on Kwaj, as well.

In the meantime, organizers have left the off-road track in place on Roi, and it is open to the public, should anyone wish to use it.

“If someone [from Kwaj] wants to fly up for the weekend, or whatever,” Velez said.

Also, Roi residents are looking at installing a permanent track somewhere on the island for the island residents and Kwaj visitors as a growing group of people seems to have taken to the hobby since Velez first had his idea for a rally.

Said Ellison, “It’s kind of become addictive to people.”
