FLORIDA WEEKLY REPORT

ONE PICTURE, WELL COMPOSED AT THE right moment, with the light placed just where it should be; it arouses in us the most fundamental of human understanding. Awe. Wonder. Love. Happiness. They are all concepts too intricate and indescribable for language. But there, in that one image, we understand what's being said.

Today, all of us walk around armed with cameras. In this way, ours is the most documented society in the history of mankind. While anyone can point and click, we're glad to say professional photographers still exist in this 21st century — artists and craftsmen with the right tools, the technical understanding of lumens and f-stops, and most importantly, the ineffable artist's eye. This week, we're honoring some of the finest photographers in Florida. Since one picture is worth a thousand words, we feel no need to apologize that this week in place of the story we usually offer you to read on our cover, we've given you something else — simply some of the best photography for you to enjoy, share and maybe even pin up.

The sense of having a family ended up being a welcome if foreign notion to Ricky, who is 16. When he arrived at a group foster home for teenage boys last January, off a dirt road outside Punta Gorda, he planned to get kicked out. He was used to escaping supervision and, as a ward of the state (his parents are in jail), bounced between caretakers. But the 24-bed home and alternative school called AMIkids Crossroads ended up being more permanent than he had imagined.

"Our kind of stance is, 'we're not kicking you out,'" said Crossroads Executive Director John Davidson.

The commitment of individuals not to quit on him, no matter what — in essence, taking on the responsibilities of his parents — is what ultimately gained Ricky's trust. Their commitment continues to serve as something solid and secure, a reliable reference point from which to start a life.

"It's like your own kids," Mr. Davidson said.

That responsibility includes helping them navigate the process of getting into college, and finding an apartment, job and other necessities when they age out of the foster system at age 18.

War

rwilliams@floridaweekly.com

When the American journalist James Foley was beheaded in a YouTube exhibition earlier this month, I longed only for blood and vengeance.

At that moment, the enemy had won.

Four close friends helped me understand, however, that our most powerful weapons are ideas, not just bullets.

Let me share here what they told me. Two of them, Bill Kilpatrick and Dr. Robert L. Hilliard, are combat-wounded veterans of World War II, authors, and still-working writers. One is my mother-in-law and the other is a Florida Weekly editor.

Bill Kilpatrick: "Two things must be remembered regarding the appalling execution of James Foley: that he was in harm's way of his own volition, and to quote English historian Steven Runciman, 'Unlike Christianity, which preached a peace that it never achieved, Islam unashamedly came with a sword.'

"Although we understand the man died by an act of gruesome barbarism, is Mr. Foley's killing any more barbaric, any more gruesome than that of a kid blown to bits by a roadside bomb in Iraq or Afghanistan? I think not.

"Such things happen. It's called war. And yes, it's horrid."

Cynthia Bennett: "Another videotaped beheading of an American journalist by ISIS shocks us with its barbarity and makes us remember the execution of Daniel Pearl by Al Qaeda in 2002. We are told that even Al Qaeda has broken away from ISIS because of their extreme brutality.

"Women must cover their faces and not leave the house. In July two women, one who was pregnant, were stoned to death in Pakistan by ISIS for alleged adultery.

"ISIS has said that the death of James Foley was in retaliation for the air strikes that freed the Yazidis trapped and starving on Mt. Sinjar. Maybe that will ease the situation and slow the spread of ISIS, but the underlying problem is extreme religious fundamentalism. ISIS is currently the most radical example but the principles of power and total control are shared by most fundamentalist groups, religious or not. And control and suppression of women is the one thing ALL of them, Christian, Jewish or Muslim, have in common. How can peace be achieved when there is blind allegiance and the willingness to die? How can progress be made when women are enslaved and have no value or freedom and can be beaten or killed at will? Unless we can answer these questions, the political-military solutions will be temporary at best."

Oswaldo Padilla (who earned a master's degree from Northwestern University's Medill School of Journalism, like Mr. Foley): "Braver than most of us, James risked everything for the cause of truth.

"He was embedded voluntarily, asking uncomfortable questions of men with masks and cowards polluted by ideology and hatred. For what? For truth.

"It's that simple; that's what he died for.

"I put myself in his shoes for just a few seconds, and imagine those final moments. I envision trembling and soiling oneself and a dark loss of hope that manifests itself as a burning in the ribcage. I imagine that at that moment he recalled nothing about truth or AP style, Marshall McLuhan or Nellie Bly or anything else we learned at Medill. The only truth was fear, I imagine. Terror.

"And I want to avenge him, I want to behead those men in rooms blaring CNN and FOX and MSNBC with our small-skirted anchor women and the commercials for antidepressants and erectile dysfunction medications. I want to kick George W. Bush in the balls — just because. I want to hug Foley's parents and tell them how noble their son was, so much more than so many of us who went through Medill.

"He was a true believer. Not an American hero, but a hero for the world — a hero for the holy cause of truth."

Dr. Robert Hilliard: "I still cannot fathom the combined emotional and thought processes that permit or encourage one human animal to kill another human animal. It's not like other species of animals that (kill each other to eat).

"Are we still, despite obvious radical outside changes in the human animal through evolution — are we still in the caveman mode, inside?"

"Like you, my unwanted initial reaction (to Foley's murder) was, we got the bombs and planes, let's wipe out the bastards.

But humans want to feel superior to the other animals. So we create gods and religions to prove we are better. Which also help us believe we are better than other groups of human beings. Which gives us the right to destroy the infidels. Let's jolly well have a crusade. Oh, and incidentally grab the infidels' lands and material goods while we're at it.

"I support Obama's humanitarian aid to the people trapped on the mountain and his attempt to stop the impending genocide they face. Maybe if we had done the same in the late 1930s when we first learned about the German death camps, there would not have been a WWII. And I deplore Obama's failure to provide at least humanitarian aid similarly to another group of people trapped and besieged with quasi-genocide, in an enclave called Gaza.

"Material gain — money — is often justified by invented deities called religion, and permitted by a state of evolution of the human animal that has not moved far enough past that of the non-human animal."

As a parenthetical aside, says Dr. Hilliard: "The targeting of journalists in areas of dispute attests to the fact that the media are the most powerful tools in the world for affecting peoples' minds and emotions. And the yet-evolving human beings know that — ask Rupert Murdoch or the Koch brothers!" ■

Free Rick Perry

richLOWRY

Special to Florida Weekly

It tells you much about the laughable indictment of Texas Gov. Rick Perry that it has made him a figure of bipartisan sympathy.

Perry was indicted for the offense of vetoing an appropriations bill. Not vetoing an appropriations bill in exchange for a bribe. Not vetoing an appropriations bill as a favor to a donor. Not vetoing an appropriations bill in excess of his lawful authority. But simply vetoing an appropriations bill.

That Perry could, in theory, face more than 100 years in prison stemming from this veto is so mind-bogglingly stupid that even Democrats and mainstream journalists have been taken aback.

The whole matter has its roots in the drunken-driving arrest last year of Travis County District Attorney Rosemary Lehmborg, a Democrat. Police pulled her over for driving erratically. Video of the stop shows Lehmborg failing all manner of roadside tests. By the time she's at the jail, she's a parody of an entitled public figure. Her behavior is so outrageous that she has to be restrained like Hannibal Lecter in "The Silence of the Lambs."

Her blood alcohol level was about three times the legal limit, and she ended up pleading guilty and serving jail time. Gov. Perry thought, not unreasonably, that because her office houses the state's Public Integrity Unit, she should resign.

Lehmborg disagreed. She exercised her power to stay in her position, and Perry exercised his power to veto funding for her Public Integrity Office as long as she did. You can disagree with one or both of them, but no one was committing a crime.

It was left to a special prosecutor of the very same Travis County District Attorney's Office to concoct one, and manage to get a grand jury to fall for it. The indictment — running barely two pages long — is as substantive as a fifth-grader's book report, and about as legally sophisticated.

The two counts against Perry are that he "misused government property" and engaged in the "coercion" of a public servant. This makes it sound like he used the $7.5 million of vetoed funds to buy a vacation house, and blackmailed Lehmborg into indicting people on his whim.

He, of course, did nothing of the kind. The indictment collapses under the slightest scrutiny. As legal blogger Eugene Volokh points out of the first count, Texas laws requires that the official be in possession of the misused funds. Perry never controlled the funds he vetoed. As for the second count, Volokh points to an appeals-court decision that held that "coercion of a lawful act by a threat of lawful action is protected free expression."

It's hard to believe that anyone thinks that these charges will stand up in court. But that's not the point. The indictment is an undisguised attempt to wound Perry, to create bad headlines, to distract him. On cue, Texas Democrats absurdly called on Perry to resign. The indictment itself is, in short, a naked abuse of power. The Travis County District Attorney's Office is infamous for this kind of thing.

Forget vetoing funding for this office. If there were any justice, it would be shuttered and razed to the ground. ■

The ghost of Dred Scott haunts the streets of Ferguson

amyGOODMAN

Special to Florida Weekly

Thousands have been protesting the police killing of Michael Brown, an unarmed African-American teenager in the St. Louis suburb of Ferguson. He was due to start college just days after he was shot dead in broad daylight. Police left his bleeding corpse in the middle of the street for over four hours, behind police tape, as neighbors gathered and looked on in horror. Outraged citizens protested, and police brutally cracked down on them. Clad in paramilitary gear and using armored vehicles, they shot tear gas, rubber-coated steel bullets and flash-bang grenades, aiming automatic weapons at protesters. Scores of peaceful protesters as well as journalists have been arrested.

The protests have raged along Ferguson's West Florissant Avenue. Four miles south of the protest's ground zero, along the same street, in the quietude of Calvary Cemetery, lies Dred Scott, the man born a slave who famously fought for his freedom in the courts. The Dred Scott decision of 1857 is considered by many to be the worst one in the history of the U.S. Supreme Court. It ruled that African-Americans, whether slave or free, could not be citizens, ever.

Scott was born into slavery in Virginia around 1799 (the same year noted Virginia slaveholder President George Washington died). Scott's owner moved from Virginia, taking him to Missouri, a slave state. He was sold to John Emerson, a surgeon in the U.S. Army. In 1847, Scott sued Emerson for his freedom in a St. Louis court. Scott and his family prevailed, winning their freedom, only to have the decision overturned by the Missouri Supreme Court. The case then went to the U.S. Supreme Court.

In the court's majority opinion, Chief Justice Roger Taney, a supporter of slavery, wrote, "A free negro of the African race, whose ancestors were brought to this country and sold as slaves, is not a 'citizen' within the meaning of the Constitution of the United States." Thus, the court ruled that all African-Americans, whether slave or free, were not citizens, and never would be.

The ruling also declared the Missouri Compromise unconstitutional. The compromise made Missouri a slave state, but dictated that northern territories in the rapidly expanding United States would be free territories, with slavery outlawed. The Dred Scott decision opened up all of these new territories to slavery, and was deemed a victory for the Southern slave states. The decision sent shockwaves through the country. Abraham Lincoln invoked the decision in his famous "House Divided" speech, saying: "A house divided against itself cannot stand. I believe this government cannot endure, permanently half slave and half free." The Dred Scott decision would help lead to the election of Lincoln as president, and push the country ever closer to civil war.

Professor John A. Powell (who writes his name in lower-case letters) teaches courses on Dred Scott. He is a professor of law and African-American studies at the University of California, Berkeley, and sees a link between that awful decision and problems today. "We still have not come to full recognition of blacks and other people as full citizens, as full people," he told me. The protests in Ferguson stem in part, he says, because "the black community tends to be overpoliced and unprotected."

Ferguson is emblematic of deep racial divisions that persist in the United States today. Since the 1980s, the city has shifted from a majority white population to one that is majority black. Yet the mayor is white. The city council is overwhelmingly white, as is the school board. Perhaps most relevant to the protests, 50 officers of the 53-member police force are white as well. Pastor Michael McBride of Berkeley, Calif., has been in Ferguson, organizing the community in the aftermath of Michael Brown's killing. Standing just feet from a military-grade Humvee, he blamed the systemic police violence on "irrational fear of black men ... if you're that scared of black men, you should not police black communities."

The people of Ferguson demand justice for Michael Brown, including the arrest of Ferguson Police Officer Darren Wilson, who killed Brown. A number of groups are calling for a special prosecutor to take over the case, the removal of the National Guard and a Justice Department investigation into every shooting of an unarmed person of color.

Dred Scott lost in court, but eventually gained his freedom from another owner. Sadly, Scott died a year later in 1858 of tuberculosis. Miles from his final resting place, the echoes of his life and his struggles persist, amidst clouds of tear gas. ■

PROFILES IN PARADISE

Injecting fun into a lifetime of community service

When talk turns to “movers and shakers” on the Paradise Coast, someone who comes to mind for me is Chris Lombardo. In addition to being a partner in the law firm of Woodward, Pires & Lombardo, P.A., he leaves his mark on the community in many other ways. And there is a common theme: “I am all about fun,” he says.

As chairman of the board for the Golisano Children’s Museum of Naples, Chris is helping C’mon develop a vision for the future and create new exhibits and concepts designed to expand the visitor base for the museum.

Prior to his involvement with C’mon, he was instrumental in the formation of the Friends of the Collier County Museum and served as its chair for eight years, championing an $8 million capital drive that literally moved the old museum across the street, tripled it in size and developed the surrounding grounds. He also obtained a variety of historical artifacts for the museum, including the first home built on Tamiami Trail East, an antique swamp buggy, articles of Seminole clothing, the skeleton of a giant sloth and one of Southwest Florida’s original logging locomotives.

Chris has also been a member of the North Naples Fire Control and Rescue District Commission for 16 years and has developed a wide variety of programs and systems for the department. He created the Boy Scout programs at North Naples Fire Control and Rescue District and served as a Scoutmaster for 12 years, coaching 25 young men to Eagle Scout in the process. He has served as adult staff at two national Boy Scout Jamborees, and in 2010 he organized a four-day campout at Big Cypress for 4,500 scouts as part of the 100th anniversary of the Boy Scouts.

Chris served as city attorney for Everglades City for 20 years, and for 15 of those years he was on the committee for the Everglades City Seafood Festival, serving as emcee for the event all of those years. At the request of the mayor of Everglades City and the president of the United States, he served as chair of the 50th anniversary celebration of Everglades National Park in 1997, an event coordinated with the White House, U.S. Secret Service, the National Park Service and the Florida Governor’s Office.

He was also the force behind the Cheese & Crackers Festival, held for two years in recognition of Everglades City being named Outstanding Rural Community of the Year. The festival made the Guinness Book of World Records for the largest grilled-cheese sandwich ever made.

Chris also urged the city fathers of Everglades City to have a Fourth of July festival and parade on any day but July 4, which would give the city an advantage in purchasing fireworks. Chris, of course, has served as emcee of the festivities many times.

Chris’s father was in the civil service assigned to the Air Force, which necessitated many moves throughout the United States for the family. Chris attended Winter Park High School where he ran track, was a member of the marching band and captain of the debate team. He received his undergraduate degree from UCF and graduated from the College of Law at Florida State University.

While in high school in the 1970s, he worked as a commercial artist and also displayed his offbeat porcelain sculptures at various art shows. He also worked at Sea World and spent my summers working for the Boy Scouts as a high adventure ranger (for five years) with a program now known as Florida Sea Base. Chris is an Eagle Scout and Vigil Honor member of the Order of the Arrow (Scouting’s National Honor Society).

At UCF, he started the university’s chapter of the Phi Delta Theta and served as its first president. He remains involved in what has become one of the school’s largest fraternities. He also ran a commercial screen-printing company called the Wearhouse during college, with clients that included Coca Cola, Hobie Cat, Disney and Red Lobster.

Chris and his wife have been married for 29 years and have two children. Their son is an Eagle Scout and a third-year law student at FSU; their daughter is a senior at FSU who works in the communications department at the law school. ■

Study will evaluate viability of commercial air service

SPECIAL TO FLORIDA WEEKLY

The Naples Airport Authority is taking a fresh look at pursuing scheduled airline flights at Naples Municipal Airport. The board has authorized Executive Director Ted Soliday to begin negotiations with Sixel Consulting Group on a scope of services and fees for a commercial air service study. "One of the airport authority's top goals and objectives for several years has been to continue to work aggressively to regain commercial air carrier service," says Jim Rideoutte, who serves as the NAA board of commissioners' commercial air service liaison. "Working with a consultant will help us decide if commercial service should remain a priority. We are approaching this with open minds, and nothing is off the table."

Mr. Soliday says Sixel Consulting can provide the board with objective information about costs associated with attracting commercial service and the level of community support for that effort. "Knowing what the community wants and how much it could cost will guide our long-term planning," he adds.

The NAA has involved community members in the process and expects opportunities for public input.

Mr. Rideoutte heads the Commercial Air Service Development Study Committee, which includes Jack Wert, executive director of Naples, Marco Island, Everglades Convention & Visitors Bureau; John Cox, president and CEO of the Greater Naples Chamber of Commerce; Bruce Register, Collier County Business and Economic Development director; and Sandi Riedemann, executive director of the Marco Island Area Chamber of Commerce.

The Sixel Consulting Group is a national air service development and airport marketing firm founded in 1996 and based in Eugene, Ore. Its staff includes former airline and airport executives, airline analysts, data experts and former aviation journalists with combined 120-plus years of air service marketing expertise.

Naples Municipal Airport offered scheduled commercial air service beginning in the 1950s. Since 1979, when the airport accommodated a record high of more than 230,000 passengers, service has fluctuated. Naples lost passengers when Southwest Florida International Airport opened in 1983, but rebounded within a few years. In 1995, the airport accommodated 175,500 total passengers. Commercial service ended in 2007 when Delta Connection and several smaller carriers left the market.

Although it has operated as a general aviation airport since then, Naples Municipal Airport complies with the same FAA standards and safety guidelines as airports with commercial airline service.

During the 2012-13 fiscal year, the airport accommodated 91,605 takeoffs and landings. ■

It's Facebook's world now

■ Up-and-coming Sicilian mobster Domenico Palazzotto, 28, was outed in August by Italy's L'Espresso magazine as the owner of an ineffectively pseudonymous Facebook page showing off his muscled, bare-chested body and perhaps recruiting members. One fan asked, "Do I need to send a (resume)?" "Yes, brother," came the reply. "We need to consider your criminal record. We do not take people with clean records."

Mr. Palazzotto operates out of Palermo and listed among his "likes" the singer Kenny Loggins.

■ Young, body-obsessed Egyptian jihadist/gym member Islam Yaken, according to his postings on Facebook-type social media, is a law school graduate fluent in English, French and Arabic, allowing him to describe the particular viciousness that he and his brothers and will wreak upon infidels.

Can't possibly be true

■ A jury's murder conviction, and the 15-to-life sentence it carried, against Daniel Floyd in Brooklyn, N.Y., for a 2008 killing went for naught in July when the Brooklyn Supreme Court ordered a retrial (with witnesses forced to testify all over again). The sole reason the court cited was a decision by the trial judge on the first day — to seat the potential jury pool and not Floyd's mother, who, because she was temporarily left standing that first day, argued successfully that her son's right to a "public" trial had been violated.

to charge their cellphone — and the woman apparently cheerfully invited them in, later offering them use of her backyard shed to grab some sleep. She did not learn until a short time later, when a law enforcement manhunt widened into her neighborhood, that they were wanted for murdering a U.S. Border Patrol agent. Officers arrested the pair inside the shed.

■ Two age-30ish men knocked on the door of a Sebastian, Texas, woman at 12:30 a.m. on Aug. 3, asking for water and if they could please come inside

■ A team of researchers from the University of Texas at Arlington announced recently that they had developed a prototype of a wind turbine that might deliver electricity in tiny bursts to devices like smartphones — since it is about half the size of a grain of rice. (Tiny solar backpacks already exist.)

The new normal

■ The ubiquitous "sexting" phenomenon continues to flourish. A Washington state agency suspended the license of anesthesiologist Arthur Zilberstein in June after finding that he had exchanged sexually explicit text messages — during surgeries.

■ A 37-year-old man survived, but with multiple bullet wounds, in New York City in August after a 1 a.m. dispute during the making of a rap music

■ Roger Harris, 63, and Bryan Bandes, 42, brawled in August on the 7th tee at the Springdale Golf Course near Uniontown, Pa., while arguing the rule for playing a ball in a rain puddle. Mr. Harris apparently 3-wooded Mr. Bandes in the head; Mr. Bandes landed punches causing a swollen jaw, a fat lip and a scratched eye. ■ of the most difficult to place and troubled kids in the system referred from the Department of Children and Families. In that way, Crossroads is unique among most of the nonprofit AMIkids 57 Florida facilities. The others — including a boys and girls day-program on Fort Myers Beach and a residential campus near Everglades City — mostly take kids who do have families to return to, but are on probation or otherwise referred by the Department of Juvenile Justice or the public school system.

On average, Crossroads kids have been to 14 different foster caretakers before ending up here, its director said. A few have been to more than 50. Most can't remember exactly how many. The first six months a kid is here are usually the roughest.

"Every one of my windows has been broken out," Mr. Davidson admits.

Once here, kids begin the standard AMIkids curriculum, what the nonprofit calls its Personal Growth Model. That includes education (usually to earn a GED high school equivalency degree), mental health care and "behavior modification" based on a point system that rewards kids for things like keeping their rooms spotless.

"There was actually structure — it was something that was introduced to me," Ricky said. "I actually got held accountable for my actions, which was another shocker."

On the beach, in the swamp

AMIkids has been around since 1969 when the organization was started in Boca Raton. Its branches (it operates in eight other states as well) share a similar goal: to break the cycle of teenagers dropping out of school and going to jail. All of them rely on state funding, donations and fundraisers, volunteers and mentors. AMI originally stood for Associated Marine Institutes. The organization first helped troubled kids by putting them to work doing marine research.

AMIkids Southwest Florida, a branch located on the mainland side of Fort Myers Beach, is a day program that serves 39 boys and girls with a capacity of 55 kids.

Another branch, AMIkids Big Cypress, is a residential campus located in Big Cypress National Preserve. Kids from around the state, usually referred by DJJ, stay six months to a year.

The all-boys, 35-bed facility is a bit rustic.

"We're out in the middle of the swamp," said director of case management Christie Alvey.

Allison Long

MALLORY MCGOVERN / SPECIAL TO FLORIDA WEEKLY

John Davidson

All the branches have the AMIkids Personal Growth Model in common, and a family-style, community ethos that is a pointed alternative to a DJJ "kid prison" with razor wire and cells. There was a roughly 20 percent recidivism rate across all AMIkids facilities in 2011, meaning four in five kids who completed the program stayed out of the judicial system for at least a year after they left. Although not a direct comparison, the rate of recidivism was about twice as high — about 40 percent — for kids released across all DJJ residential programs in fiscal year 2011-12.

On campus, animals and mentors

With a budget of $1.4 million per year, Crossroads is a 25-acre facility that includes a semi-circle of utilitarian, maroon-colored buildings amid slash pines — dormitories, a lunch hall, game room, and classrooms included — with a big stone firepit in the middle. There are pot-bellied pigs here (sadly, one of the pigs, Chris P. Bacon, has died), dogs and a horse named Doc. In the cafeteria kitchen on a Wednesday morning, two of the kids were helping food service manager Barbara D. Cash prepare a lunch of turkey and dressing, macaroni and cheese, yellow rice, fruit and cake.

A stone firepit sits at the center of AMIkids Crossroads campus.

Among the staff are two mental health counselors, two public school teachers, and a psychiatrist who visits once a month. Director of Operations Charles Gomilla often takes kids to activities ranging from volunteering at a retirement home to a trip to the Edison Mall in Fort Myers. He is allotted $500 per month to plan off-campus activities for fun, and to keep the kids more connected to the community.

In one grassy lot on the campus are cars donated from local dealerships, one of which Ricky, who will soon be getting his learner's permit, may be driving.

"I really want to go to medical school," he said of his future plans, something that might have seemed inconceivable a few years ago.

Another one of the kids, Keith, who is 17, said he'd like to be a novelist in the creative-fantasy genre.

"The thing I like about (Crossroads) the most is they take in kids who have nowhere else to go — I'm one of those kids," he said.

One of his teachers, Don Macchioni, or Mr. Mac, said, "It's a very extreme, dire situation when they come to us; not all of them, of course, but most of them."

Besides behavioral or learning disabilities, most of the kids are also two or three years behind in school because they've bounced around so much in the foster system, said Cynthia Kusha. As coordinator of student affairs, she is in effect the registrar and principal for the 23 boys who are now on campus.

She sat at a desk reviewing one of the boy's files to prepare for the start of the school year. With the students often being so far behind, she normally encourages them to get their GED and then apply for college. There are also vocational opportunities, such as construction and basic automotive maintenance.

But the lack of positive relationships — of mentor figures — is the most pressing and common underlying problem that kids at Crossroads face, said Allison Long, a mental health counselor here.

While all the staff may act as mentors to a certain extent, a bond with someone in the community is invaluable. A police officer, for instance, helped one kid get an apartment after he left Crossroads, as well as keep track of his budget.

Although Ricky has visited his parents in jail, he'd rather not pursue a relationship with them — at least for now, while he's just gaining his footing at Crossroads.

"Sometimes it's not good to open up something that's been closed for so long," he said. ■

Tickets for $80 per person and $150 per couple can be purchased by calling Ms. Zieminski at 821-9560 or emailing zzieminski@yahoo.com.

Three levels of sponsorships are available: Gold ($850) includes four admission tickets, six raffle tickets, two table signs and $250 play money; Silver ($450) includes two admission tickets, three raffle tickets, one table sign and $100 pay money; and Bronze ($125) includes one admission ticket and one table sign.

The committee is also accepting donations for raffles and auction items.

Founded in 1999 by a group of local business leaders and NHS football team alumni, the Naples Touchdown Club is a non-profit 501c3 corporation dedicated to raising funds to support local youth athletics by funding transportation, pre-game meals, equipment, football camps and medical expenses not covered by insurance.

Money is raised through community-based fundraisers and sponsorships as well as the $1,000 annual membership that includes two NHS football season tickets and weekly film reviews with the coaching staff. For a membership application, call Carolyn Moscato at 784-1084. ■

Local families have a field day with HCN in celebration of National Health Center Week

SPECIAL TO FLORIDA WEEKLY

Healthcare Network of Southwest Florida celebrated National Health Center Week with Family Field Day at the Golden Gate Community Center. Kids of all ages enjoyed gunny sack races, hula-hoops and jump ropes; older attendees gathered a wealth of information from various booths and received free health screenings provided by HCN and other local agencies.

One of 1,128 federally qualified health centers in the country, HCN was founded in 1977 to serve Immokalee's migrant farmworkers and rural poor. It has grown to a $35 million network with 330 employees and more than 40 providers serving 14 locations throughout Collier County. Last year, HCN served 39,000 individuals, including 27,000 children, making it the largest single provider of local pediatric care, caring for nearly half the children in Collier County.

By providing these families with a "patient-centered home," HCN providers are able to follow their patients, ensure necessary treatment and provide preventative education that actually reduces long-term health care costs.

For more information about HCN services, call 658-3000 or visit healthcareswfl.org. ■

Facilities management is a big job on a complex campus

allenWEISS

allen.weiss@nchmd.org

I recently enjoyed a tour of our North Naples hospital with building engineer Mario Miro as my guide. He gave me inside look at this complex campus that is so well cared for by our facilities management team that includes Bill Sturgill, Pete Padillo, Ed Moulton (our resident locksmith who is retiring soon) and Craig Terrillion.

You might be as surprised as I was to learn that the North Naples campus can be powered by three locomotive engines that are at the ready in the event of an FPL power failure. Two fuel tanks — 15,000 gallons and 22,000 gallons — feed the generators to ensure that we can stay at full power for several days. With its automatic transfers, circuit breakers and meters, the switchgear station looks like a power plant and is connected to a huge computer screen for constant monitoring.

I also learned that the hospital's air-conditioning system, which is critical year-round but especially in these hot summer months, consists of chiller towers, one of which usually sits in reserve, and four pumps to move the chilled water to 30 air handlers throughout the 325,000-square-foot building. The master air-conditioning computer board can override the temperature in any room or area in the facility, although individual controls are usually the primary deter-miners of a room's temperature.

We also have three boilers for the hospital and two more for the Birth Place, two hot water heaters, medical air and vacuum and medical gases for the operating room. And our fire suppression system has the capacity to put out hundreds of gallons of water in minutes.

My tour guide Mr. Miro explained that his department's facilities and procedures are based on redundancy, creating an environment of safety, comfort and quality for patient, family, and colleague satisfaction. Since we care for everyone from critically ill patients to babies in neonatal ICU, we can't afford for our system ever to "go down," and we have ample back-ups for the back-ups.

I watched him greet a Brookdale rehabilitation patient whose extra-long and very sophisticated electric bed wasn't working. After a series of diagnostic checks and some appropriate entertainment for the patient (who welcomed the break in routine), Mr. Miro had made the bed as good as new. Then he proceeded to change the view on another patient's television set — not tricky technically at all, but very helpful for an elderly patient recovering from a stroke. Mr. Miro's expertise might be mechanical, but his empathy and compassion and "feel" are entirely human.

Having the technical ability to care for the range of mechanical parts within a huge complex system in a way that makes the difficult look easy is the sign of an expert. And that, clearly, describes Mr. Miro. ■

Support group for caregivers who feel the weight of the world

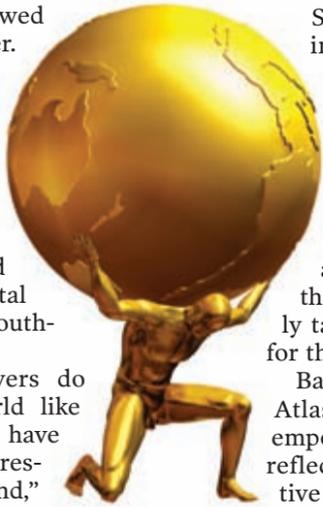

SPECIAL TO FLORIDA WEEKLY

“The story of Atlas is a story of shoulders that had a lot to hold. Atlas was a titan as huge as a tower. You might feel to be endowed with the same magic power. Nevertheless, even Atlas needed some relief and a break from stress. And let’s face it, so do you.”

This is the motto of a new support group called Atlas for caregivers and caretakers offered by the Naples-based Mental Health Association of Southwest Florida.

“Although our caregivers do not hold the entire world like Atlas was forced to, they have to cope with a lot of pressure. We want to give a hand,” says Eva Smidova, a marriage and family counselor who will lead the group starting in September, bringing together caregivers and caretakers to share their skills and experiences, learn how to relax and incorporate simple self-care techniques into daily routines.

“Atlas welcomes everyone whose shoulders are used to support others, to carry, to help, to hold up, to be at hand, to guard and give,” Ms. Smidova says.

“Life is neither black nor white,” she adds. “It can happen out of the blue that one day you are the one who is held, and the other day you turn into the holder. You can become Atlas at any age.”

She offers examples including a 10-year-old whose grandfather/caregiver broke his leg, temporarily forcing the boy into the role of caregiver; a 45-year-old woman who is “sandwiched” between caring for her teenagers and her aging parents; and the retirees who unexpectedly take on the duties of caring for their young grandchildren.

Based on family values, the Atlas support group will be empowering, resourceful, self-reflective, confidential, sensitive and respectful to attendees’ culture, religion, gender and race. Sessions aspire to be playful, creative, comfortable and challenging. Attendance is free.

The group begins Monday, Sept. 8, and will meet from 4:30-6 p.m. every Monday in the offices of the Mental Health Association of Southwest Florida, 2335 Tamiami Trail N. For registration or more information, call 261-5405 or email info@mhaswfl.org. ■

Fellowship program in gerontology partners Moorings Park, John Hopkins

Moorings Park continuing care retirement community in Naples has joined forces with Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore to create an innovative fellowship track in the field of geriatric medicine. The two-year fellowship will include one clinical year in geriatric medicine at Johns Hopkins and one year of leadership training in senior practice management and medical direction at the Moorings Park campus on Goodlette-Frank Road.

“An important objective of this fellowship program is to prepare leaders in geriatric medicine in Florida, so applicants who plan to have a career in Florida are strongly preferred,” says Dan Lavender, Moorings Park president and CEO. “We fully expect this fellowship program will ultimately have a positive impact on the quality of care retirees receive throughout the state.”

Moorings Park offers a continuum of care that includes medical care provided by fellowship-trained geriatricians overseen by Chief Medical Officer Dr. Michael Gloth, who is a fellow in the American College of Physicians and the American Geriatrics Society.

“As children, our medical needs were overseen by a pediatrician. As we grew into adulthood, we relied on family practitioners or internists,” Dr. Gloth says. Retirees have medical needs that are different, he adds. “Risk factors change as people age. Working with physicians who have the understanding of what those physiological changes mean is an advantage for individuals who are aging.”

The Moorings Park network of medical professionals includes geriatric-specialty nurses, an osteoporosis specialist, cancer specialists, ophthalmologists and specialists in cardiology, podiatry, dermatology, neuropsychiatry and other disciplines.

“We wouldn’t have the program we have if somebody years ago didn’t say, ‘We are really going to be challenged by health care down the road, and we want to be ready for whatever is coming,’” Dr. Gloth says. “That vision and leadership has continued, and the fellowship program participants will have an opportunity to experience that firsthand.”

For more information about the Johns Hopkins University/Moorings Park fellowship track, call Laura Gibson at (410) 550-3268 or email at lcgibson@jhmi.edu. ■

PET TALES

Back to school

Got a pet with the blues? It might be related to your child's return to school.

BY KIM CAMPBELL THORNTON
Universal Uclick

If you're a parent who got a new puppy or dog for the family this summer, your kids and the dog have probably spent their days playing fetch, running through the sprinklers and sharing snacks when they've finally worn each other out. But now that school is starting, your pup must learn to adjust to a new schedule.

Pets, including some cats, can get down in the mouth when their playmates disappear for the day — or even weeks or months at a time in the case of college students, kids at camp, or sons or daughters off to basic training. That's especially true if the pet has a close bond with the absent person. You may also see a case of the down-dog blues if your work schedule changes or you are traveling more often for work.

Dogs and cats like a predictable environment. Part of a pet's emotional attachment to us is based on the expectation of doing something together on a regular basis, says John C. Wright, Ph.D., a certified applied animal behaviorist and professor of psychology at Mercer University in Macon, Ga.

When that routine changes, the result can be emotional and behavioral depression. Your dog may mope around or wait at the door for his pal's return, and your cat may express her displeasure by yowling incessantly or sleeping more than usual. Some pets swing the opposite way and become more active than normal.

For dogs, the best medicine is plenty of exercise. Step in as the dog's walking buddy, hire a dog walker to take him for a run and practice obedience lessons or tricks with him daily. Get some puzzle toys to help him stay occupied during the day.

"The more you can increase things that are both familiar but stimulating to the dog, and the more physical exercise, the more endorphin release you can provide, and that's all good," says animal behaviorist Mary Lee Nitschke, Ph.D., professor of psychology at Linfield College in Portland, Ore.

Your pet can also take comfort from the scent of his pal. Give him a T-shirt or other inexpensive piece of clothing that's been worn by your child or a spouse who's traveling. The familiar smell will help him to chill out.

Cats can benefit from similar efforts. As much as possible, try to keep their routine the same. Maybe your child can make time to feed the cat or give her a couple of minutes of play with a favorite toy before leaving for school.

Most important, your pets, especially dogs, should be comfortable spending time alone. If you have a student who will be off to college in the next year or two, now is the time to start preparing your pets for his absence.

■ Get the animal used to walks or playtimes from other family members.

■ For a new or young dog, practice leaving him alone for brief periods, using a crate to confine him if he's not housetrained. Gradually extend the length of time before you return. He'll get the message that you always come back.

■ Keep departures and greetings matter-of-fact so that your absence doesn't seem like a big deal.

■ Have the pet perform a command, such as sit (cats can do this, too), and give a treat before you leave. They might even start to look forward to your departure!

The good news is that with time, your dog or cat will adjust to the new schedule and look forward to the new after-school playtime. ■

THE DIVA DIARIES

As if the heat weren't enough of a fashion challenge ...

I've said it before, dear readers, and I'll say it again: It's hard to look pretty when temperatures are in the mid-90s, but add a stiff, heavy, leg brace made of steel, foam and plastic that fastens at your groin and spans the entire length of your gam down to your ankle, and the real wardrobe crisis begins.

At least it's black, and therefore slimming (not — sigh).

In early August, I shared a missive in this space detailing a sparkling evening on the dance floor that ended with a horrible pop inside my knee, a tumble to the ground and the subsequent inability to walk. Fast-forward to an MRI that showed my little spin on the light fantastic had caused the complete tear of my anterior cruciate ligament, otherwise known as my ACL.

With all of the ALS (otherwise known as Lou Gehrig's disease) ice bucket challenges online these days, I keep getting the two acronyms mixed up. And of course, it didn't help that the few days after surgery, when my ruined ACL was replaced by the ligament of a kindly organ donor, I was on fabulously powerful pain medication that caused my cognitive skills to go all sloppy — at one point, I'm told, I actually referred to it as my "AARP" ligament.

In all actuality, I don't fret too much about how to make my awkward, bionic-looking brace appear stylish, because I'm not allowed to drive for several weeks (my brace is locked in the straight position for now), so it's not like I'm hobbling around at festive events or glittery gatherings trying to impress anyone with my fashion prowess. Other than sweet friends coming over with yummy meals (a perk to being housebound), I don't have much of a social life other than my thrice-weekly physical therapy appointments. As a result, PT has become a big deal for me. It's actually very exciting, because not only do I get to see other humans, it gives me a reason to put something on other than a sad, droopy muumuu. Seriously, I do my make-up and fix my hair for PT like I was attending the Heart Ball or something. I keep wondering if it would be weird to show up at PT in a taffeta gown. Then again, the tulle would probably get in the way of my calf-flexing exercises.

Not only that, formal wear would be a little out of place in a big room full of a variety of broken folks like me working on getting better. On the scene are plenty of torn rotator cuffs, broken ankles, healing spines and lots of knees like mine that don't want to bend. I spot

Me: "I was dancing to Iggy Azalea in a hotel lobby bar with a bunch of 22-year-olds."

Everybody there has a story. One woman I met tore her ACL when she was snow skiing, and an electrician told me he had to get a knee replacement because of years of wear and tear, crawling around under houses and climbing poles and such. I'm new to the circle, so most of them seem to know each other better, but I'm pretty good in crowds. Though I'm not exactly flitting like a butterfly, I'm happy to hobble over and say hello. I've thought it might be nice if after 4 p.m., the staff would serve cocktails, but I'm guessing that might be counterproductive, especially to our balancing exercises.

I'm looking forward to getting rides to a few festive events in the next couple of weeks, however; and as far as looking stylish, I have an idea about bedazzling my brace. A little glitter and some glue, and I could make some dramatic entrances.

Whether it's the therapy room or the ballroom, it always helps to have some flair. ■

— Ciao for now, my lovelies! Stay tuned for another divalicious diary entry next week ...

my fair share of strapping young high school boys in football jerseys.

Me: "So, what are you in for, kid?"

Quarterback: "I was running down centerfield about to make a touchdown when I got tackled by five guys. How about you, ma'am?"

Obesity is a huge and rapidly growing federal government expense

jeannetteSHOWALTER, CFA
showalter@wwfscsystems.com

Obesity is an epidemic. The statistics are startling: 35 percent of the adult population and 40 percent of adults age 65-74 are obese. So widespread is this epidemic that obesity is considered normative and the costs are thought to be someone else's responsibility. There is the assumption that prescriptions and medical treatments related to medical problems that spring from obesity will be borne by insurance companies.

(Unless otherwise stated, the column's source is "The Budgetary Impact of Obesity the United States," Matrix Global Advisors, May 2014.)

In reality, obesity is a cost borne not just by the obese person, but also by the local community (especially the hospitals), the federal government (Medicare and Medicaid) and fellow insureds.

According to "The Budgetary Impact of Obesity the United States," May report by Matrix Global Advisors, obesity is estimated to have an overall cost (direct and indirect costs combined) of $275 billion per annum, with $209 billion being the direct costs (largely spent on diabetes-2, hypertension and heart disease) and $66 billion being the indirect cost (absenteeism, disability, productivity loss and higher insurance rates for all).

The worst of the epidemic's problem is that obesity rates are rising nationally. The rate more than doubled from the 1980's 15 percent adult rate to 2102's 35 percent adult rate. The cost of medical care related to obesity is estimated to be rising at $48 to $66 billion per year. Based on an average estimate of $57 billion increase per year (Harvard School of Public Health, Obesity Prevention Source, "Economic Costs"), the 2012 cost of obesity of $275 billion would explode to $731 billion by 2020.

If Medicare and Medicaid are problematic now (with obesity accounting for 8.5 percent of overall Medicare costs of $585 billion), how will we ever fund these programs if the tilted scale continues to grow at such a rate? A new analysis in Health Economics Review estimated that Medicare would achieve gross savings of $7,446-$10,126 per person over 10 years from obese beneficiaries losing 10 percent of their body weight.

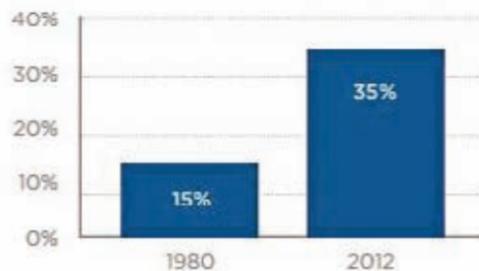

But those projections might turn out to be understatements of the problem's size and rate of growth. Harvard School of Public Health Researchers John Cawley and Chad Meyerhoefer have postulated that an obese individual's per capita per than earlier estimates.

These numbers should be alarming and incentivize all of us to get involved with reversing this epidemic. It is not meant to be judgmental, to assign blame or offend a person's feelings, as even this columnist found herself tilting the scale at a prior time in her life. It was not medicines or a doctor that changed my portly perspective on life. It was largely friends inviting me to join them on long walks, asking me to play tennis, giving me a few sessions with a personal trainer, inviting me for dinner — salad only. They were holding me accountable to a better way of living. They envisioned more of a wonderful for myself if I was more fit.

It might be some will need immediate medical intervention and it might well be that a caring friend or family member can jumpstart better health through simple eating and exercising behaviors and routines. But clearly, an epidemic can't be ignored and all must contribute to a solution. ■ annum medical costs are $2,741 per year greater than the non-obese person. Their research showed that obesity accounts for 21 percent of medical spending — $190 billion in 2005 — more

Boost Your Teen's Money Savvy

The best way to help your teens avoid making common financial blunders in adulthood (living beyond their means, racking up credit card debt, etc.) is to start them on the road to savvy money management early. Here are some things you might do:

- Encourage your teens to get a job. While supplying welcome disposable income, jobs also teach kids about the value of time and hard work. A purchase that looked perfectly reasonable when parents were paying for it can seem less necessary when they realize they have to work five hours to earn it.
- Teach your kids budgeting skills. If they get allowances or earn money, help them prioritize their spending and decide how to spend their cash, weighing expenses such as fast-food snacks with friends against saving for a fancy phone. Have your teens contribute toward major expenses such as their car insurance.
- Get your teens bargain-hunting by looking up items in Google's Shopping nook or another cost-comparison site, such as Nextag.com or Pricegrabber.com.

Teach your children to think critically about the advertisements aimed at them.

- Open IRAs for your teens when they have earned income (which is required for contributions), and encourage them to contribute a portion of future earnings. Learn much more about IRAs at fool.com/retirement/index.aspx.
 - Avoid getting them a credit card at least until they've demonstrated a high level of responsibility. Using plastic can distance them from the reality of money and its limits, while handling actual bills keeps things real.
 - Model good money management yourself. If you're mired in credit card debt, your teen will notice. Let them see you being a smart shopper and paying bills on time.
- Your kids can learn more in our book "The Motley Fool Investment Guide for Teens" by David and Tom Gardner with Selena Maranjian (Touchstone, $16). Peter Lynch's "Learn to Earn" (Simon & Schuster, $16) is also valuable. ■

My Dumbest Investment

Waiting Periods

My dumbest investment moves have led me to prefer making my buy and sell orders while the markets are closed. That way, I have time to cancel the orders if I have second thoughts. I learned this after experiencing several instances of "WTF did I just buy?"

— R.L., Norwood, Ohio

The Fool Responds: It's smart to put significant thought into investment decisions instead of acting on impulse. Your system is a good one, but you might want to make sure you're placing "limit" orders with it. A limit order lets you specify a maximum price at which you're willing to buy or a minimum price for a sale, giving you more control over the trade.

If you place a "market" order instead, it will execute at the best available price when the market opens for business. That's often fine, but sometimes a stock's price will change dramatically overnight, due to some news or rumor. Then you'll end up having bought a stock at a surprisingly high price, or having sold for much less than you expected. So when the market is closed, limit orders are smart. ■

Last week's trivia answer

I was founded in 1946 as a maker of telecommunications and measuring equipment. Today, based in Tokyo, I'm an electronics and entertainment giant, offering a wide range of products such as LCD televisions, cameras, Blu-ray Disc players, portable audio devices, image-sensing semiconductors, batteries, data-recording systems, game systems, broadcast equipment and medical equipment. In 1979 I launched a portable stereo cassette player that was a huge hit (unlike my Betamax VCR). I bought CBS Records in 1988 and Columbia Pictures Entertainment in 1989. I employ about 155,000 people and rake in more than $75 billion annually. Who am I? (Answer: Sony) ■

Down-Payment Strategy

Q How should I invest money that I'm saving for a down payment on a home, so that it grows the fastest?

— S.F., Madison, Indiana

A It depends on your time frame. If your home purchase is many years away, you might invest most or all of your money in stocks — perhaps in a simple broad-market index fund (such as an S&P 500 or "total market" one) that will deliver roughly the market's average return. Alternatively, you might invest in carefully chosen individual stocks.

If you plan to buy that home within a few years, though, the stock market should be off-limits. That's because while the market tends to rise over the long run, it's unpredictable over the short term. Park money you'll need within five years (or even 10, if you want to be conservative) in stocks, and you'll risk ending up living in a van down by the river. Short-term money should be kept in a safer place, such as CDs or money market funds, to protect your principal. Learn more at fool.com/savings and bankrate.com.

Q What are these "diluted" shares I've seen in earnings reports?

— J.C., Walnut Creek, California

A A company's bottom-line profit, or "net income," is divided by its total share count to arrive at its earnings per share (EPS). The EPS is often reported in two ways — "basic" and "diluted." Basic EPS uses the number of shares that currently exist, while diluted EPS is more conservative, including shares that could exist, for example, if people with stock options exercised them. Other securities that could be converted into common stock are also accounted for. It's best to focus on diluted, not basic, shares. ■

The Motley Fool Take

Moving Beyond Copiers

In our increasingly digitized world, Xerox (NYSE: XRX) has struggled to become more than just a copier company. Its turnaround is in progress and is promising, as the company has diversified into other, more profitable, businesses such as digital document storage and information technology.

Xerox offers services for health care networks, pharmaceutical companies and hospitals. It has won contracts to process Medicaid documents for New York, California and other states, and has been an Obamacare service provider, too. Xerox also manages databases, networks, data backup, digital infrastructure, cloud storage and centralized print services for other organizations.

Xerox has been generating more than $2 billion in annual free cash flow, and its revenue growth and profit margins have improved considerably since 2010, although they are yet to fully stabilize. Xerox's secret weapon that could win over Wall Street and pump up the company's profits is its service segment. Specifically, Xerox is moving away from printing and copying and is expecting to boost its services revenue to two-thirds of total revenue by 2017.

Xerox is not completely out of the woods yet, but seems to be on a recovery path. Its shares seem attractively priced relative to industry peers. For patient believers, Xerox stock recently offered a 2 percent dividend yield. ■ — embroidery has given many cultures and countless generations a stylish signature.

As far as that's concerned, nothing has changed. That's why small-business owners and entrepreneurs who practice embroidery from Naples to Fort Myers to Port Charlotte are thriving, not to mention businesses that offer specially contributions to some embroidery shops — rhinestones, for example.

Jay Wade, a 1970 graduate of North Fort Myers High School and once one of the fastest 120-yard high-hurdlers in the Sunshine State, for example, buys low-lead rhinestones from Korea.

Then he customizes designs often embroidered already by other shops — enlivening uniforms, shirts and just about anything else used by many school cheer-leading programs, teams or individuals throughout the region.

In his business, called Custom Rhinestones and Graphics of SWFL, a typical design will require between about 1,200 and 1,500 pieces of glass. But some require as many as 4,000 to 5,000, he notes — which is why he calls himself with some justification, “The King of Bling.”

“My wife says this is just a fad that's going to go away pretty soon, and she wants to know why I do it,” the longtime and now “retired” owner of Wade's Heating and Cooling admits.

“I tell her it's just a hobby. A full-time hobby.”

Jay is busier these days than the embroidery in a Chinese peacock — like everybody else in the business.

Class in session

“This is the Friday before school, and we're slammed,” exclaims Nannette Palumbo, who opened her Lee County-based business, MDS Discount Embroidery, with her late husband, John Palumbo, about 20 years ago, and now heads up a shop with nine women, people she considers family as well as employees and colleagues.

At the Golden Needle and the Charlotte Sewing Studio in Port Charlotte, they're so slammed they can't even talk.

The slam? Schools with embroidered logos — the charters, the privates, even some public schools with uniform codes, all began their fall sessions recently. Since MDS is a wholesaler, Mrs. Palumbo is working for others who serve as middlemen in the process.

“Luckily,” she says, “I have clients who do all these schools — and we do the new logo for Florida SouthWestern State College as well as the new departments there, and for Florida Gulf Coast University, too.”

At EmbroidMe of Naples, a franchise shop, retail is the name of the game, but some of the work is the same.

Lyn and Nick Jaksich, originally from Chicago (him) and Minnesota (her), bought the business six years ago, reinvented it post recession, and have now taken off like the proverbial Phoenix.

“Our normal customer profile,” says Mr. Jaksich, “is business-to-business or business-to-organization. Businesses in Collier and Lee (counties) might be looking for something in the form of a dressier kind of polo shirt they can wear, for example. And all year around we do everything from the dressier look all the way down to (uniform) looks for field workers.”

Anywhere there's a name or a logo, these shops do it in any color or style the client desires.

What's changed in the business, of course, is the technology and the equipment. Stern-faced old women with arthritic knuckles no longer sit around embroidering designs with the back stitch, the satin stitch, the split stitch or the French knot into individual sections of material, one at a time.

“We do a lot of garment printing, using a water-based ink process,” says Mr. Jaksich. “It's like a big ink-jet printer you'd have sitting next to a computer. It has specialized ink software that gives you any design you want, and you can take full advantage of all 16 million colors available.”

“The ink soaks into the cotton fibers, and once it's heat-cured, its bond with the fibers becomes permanent.”

The modern embroidery shops, where high-tech equipment and skills become essential, also do screen printing, cut their own vinyl, and — at EmbroidMe Naples — they do custom rhinestone, along with fashion T-shirts cut specifically for a female body.

They can even do work in leather or other hard-to-embroider materials.

Hard starts

EmbroidMe, although stamped clearly in the style of Lyn and Nick Jaksich and the Neapolitan market in which they thrive, is one of 300 such shops in the U.S. and abroad, all established by United Franchise Group based in West Palm Beach. The company also has other franchise businesses, including Signarama.

Franchise owners do an intense two-week course with the company to start, then rely on a mentor business that stays in regular touch, along with visits to that business and from company representatives to fine-tune the operation.

MDS Discount Embroidery, on the other hand, is completely independent. The Palumbos started in a garage after he saw an embroidery machine at a garage sale and got interested.

That was just about the time logos on shirts were leaving the custom of badges or other IDs behind, as a fashion.

Both businesses have faced such real-world challenges as devastating hurricanes, recessions and mortality.

It's been a tough 10 years for Mrs. Palumbo, a decade that kicked off in August 2004 when Hurricane Charley stopped by for a visit and destroyed the business. “The roof came off, and all our machines were ruined,” she recalls. “We had $400,000 worth of damage.”

Trained and educated as a pharmacist, and a graduate of Rutgers University (she grew up in New Jersey), she expected challenges in her new, by that time 10-year-old career, as an embroiderer. But not that kind.

gested how important cold-calling sales experts were.

“We're always looking for people who can create an awareness of what we do — to tell them the truth about what we do, to make it factual and not exaggerate — but also to romanticize our products, to help the customer visualize them.”

They've done well at it, clearly, since the Naples store is now counted among the company's best, as a “Hall of Fame” store: “For us, it's like winning an Oscar,” Mr. Jaksich explains.

Meanwhile, the Palumbos weathered the recession, too, by hustling — he had to go to work for Lowe's, and then for an east coast distributor, to pay all the bills — but they emerged from the hard times only to confront Mr. Palumbo's illness. Ultimately, it ended his life, but not before he'd helped reestablish a solid post-recession direction with the company.

When her husband died, recalls Mrs. Palumbo, she had to wrestle with the notion of taking the insurance money and doing something else, or carrying on.

If it hadn't been for the women in her shop, seven of whom have been with her for the full 20-year ride, she might have moved on.

“I had to think of them and their families too,” she says. Especially Beatrice Tavares, her supervisor of production, and Linda Carcare, supervisor of receiving and finishing.

“We're like sisters,” Mrs. Palumbo says. “We work like such a well-oiled machine. It's not like we don't bicker — we occasionally have disagreements. But we've been together so long, that we do whatever is the right thing. We listen, we yell, and then we figure it out.”

Perhaps that's embroidery in the fullest sense — the embroidery of a colorful, well-lived life. ■

Everglades City fish camp for the outdoorsman (or woman) who has everything

BY ARTIS HENDERSON
Florida Weekly Correspondent

If you've ever crossed the Tamiami Trail on the way to Miami, then you've driven past Everglades City. But chances are you didn't even notice. The turnoff to this isolated outpost 36 miles from Naples passes quickly; it's easy to cruise by without registering that an entire village sits off the main road. Many of the town's residents, I might guess, prefer it that way.

Perched on the edge of the Big Cypress Preserve and fronting the Barron River, Everglades City began as a trading post in the last quarter of the 19th century. George Storter, who made his money in sugar cane, bought up most of the land that would eventually become the town in the late 1800s. His home, later called the Rod and Gun Club, served as a lodge for the hunting, fishing and yachting parties that escaped to Florida during the cold winter months.

In 1922, advertising mogul Barron Collier, who owned more than 1 million acres in what was then southern Lee County, agreed to fund construction of the 76-mile section of the Tamiami Trail that ran from Naples to Miami. In exchange, the state of Florida carved out a chunk of Lee County for Mr. Collier's land holding. He decided to base his new county in Everglades City and set about creating the town by laying streets, building docks, and constructing homes.

CAMP

Mr. Collier died in 1939, and in 1960, Hurricane Donna wiped out much of Everglades City. The administrative headquarters of Collier County moved to Naples, and Everglades City became the small hamlet it is today.

Over the years, the town continued to serve as a hunting and fishing camp, first for outdoorsman of the old Florida variety and now of the new Florida kind (i.e., the ones with cash). The house at 312 Storter Ave. is definitely for the latter.

With an asking price of $800,000, this particular fish camp doesn't come cheap. But the home has been handled with such care and good taste that for the person unfazed by the price tag, it will make an exceptional retreat.

In 900 square feet, there are two bedrooms and two bathrooms, plus a great room that serves as a den, a TV room and a dining area. The screened-in porch has views of the Barron River.

The house sits on a double lot and has room for three boatlifts (one is already in place). The current owners bought the property in 2001 and spent the next year working on restorations. They added the second bathroom with a 7-foot extension and also built on the 30-foot porch. They kept some period details, including the original wood bead board throughout the house.

The current owners first began visiting the area in the 1970s. Like many who end up in Everglades City, the husband is a passionate fisherman. In 1995, the couple bought an apartment in the community to use when they retired. When the Storter Avenue house came on the market, they decided to buy a home.

In 2006, after the renovations were complete and at the height of the real estate bubble, they received an offer for $1.1 million. They declined. Now, with age and health issues, they've decided to sell. They also own property in western North Carolina, and they plan to spend more time there once the Storter Avenue house is sold.

So, just who buys a fishing bungalow for $800,000? Listing agent Jim Prange of Premier Sotheby's International Realty, says it's the kind of person who is used to owning the best of everything — a man who spends six figures on a two-seat sports car or $500,000 on a deepwater boat.

Mr. Prange predicts the next owner of 312 Storter Ave. will be a wealthy outdoorsman, someone from the east coast or Naples area, who will primarily use the home as a weekend retreat. If he — or she — likes the outdoors with a heavy dose of class, then this is the right place. ■

Gulfshore Playhouse performs fresh scripts from rising playwrights

BY NANCY STETSON

EMBRACE THE UNKNOWN.

You never know what you might discover.

That's especially true in the theater, where seeing something new can bring unexpected delight or maybe even a personal epiphany.

For the second year in a row, Gulfshore Playhouse is presenting its New Works Festival, offering readings of new, never-seen-before plays.

Last year's inaugural festival was a kind of experiment, a testing of the waters to see how the public might respond.

It was a little risky, considering how Southwest Florida audiences love to flock to the familiar: Neil Simon plays, farces, happy-go-lucky musicals.

But then, Kristen Coury, founder and artistic producing Philanthropy and the arts are near and dear to the heart of Myra Janco Daniels.

"I believe giving is receiving," says Mrs. Daniels, the founder and longtime CEO of the Philharmonic Center for the Arts (now Artis—Naples) and the Naples Museum of Art. "I have never given where I haven't gotten back many times over."

resident's decision to place part of her private art collection on the market, with the proceeds benefitting a nonprofit Collier County children's program and two new facilities at Ave Maria University.

The Sept. 26 auction of modern and contemporary art conducted by Leslie Hindman Auctioneers will include five pieces from Mrs. Daniels' collection, their collective presale value conservatively estimated at $149,000. The auction will be held at the Chicago headquarters of the auction house, which also has locations in Naples and Palm Beach.

Mrs. Daniels has placed before the auctioneer's gavel:

■ A Hans Hoffman painting in a period frame valued at $70,000-$90,000.

■ An untitled work by Arman, consisting of red oil-paint tubes encased in plexiglass ($30,000-$50,000).

■ An untitled oil by Wolf Kahn ($25,000-$35,000).

■ A bronze sculpture by George Rickey ($20,000-$30,000).

SANDY DAYS, SALTY NIGHTS

A run-in with the French police and a much-needed life lesson

I was in a car crash one recent Sunday. It happened the way these things do: unexpectedly. One second my friend Eithne was driving down the narrow side streets of Carcassonne and the next there was an explosive bang, shattered glass, and Eithne sitting next to me saying, "This is going to cost a fortune."

We were all right, but her rental car was wrecked. Eithne and I stood on the sidewalk in stunned silence while above us old women opened shutters and poked their heads out to look. Some called down to make sure we were all right. A man from one of the apartments brought us glasses of cold water, and before long two policeman arrived.

I sat on a stoop, still in shock, while Eithne handled the police report.

I should take a moment here to say that she is especially lovely, fair-haired and light-eyed, witty and entertaining. She grew up the daughter of a minister, and I suspect that all her years spent being good — or, more accurately, rebelling against being good — contributed to her air of naughty charm. Not surprisingly, men find her irresistible.

Once all the necessary paperwork had been completed, the nice man who brought us water came to collect his cups, and the old women retreated from the windows to the shaded interiors of their apartments. The policemen asked if we would like a lift to the car rental agency, and Eithne smiled her most gracious smile and said we would be delighted. An indecent amount of flirtation followed.

"You know, we're not required to wear seat belts," one of the two officers said as we clicked our own into place.

"These pistols," he gave a modest shrug. "They get in the way."

"Do they?" Eithne said, batting her wide eyes.

The officers fell over themselves to talk to her during the drive. How long have you been in France? What do you think of our country? Your French is so good.

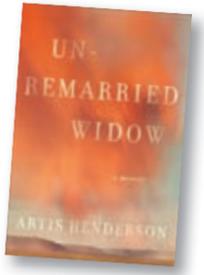

Before long, the four of us were chatting about wine and the officers were handing out recommendations for good local vintners. There was something improper about all of it, but I was too shaken up to care.

At the car rental company, one of the policemen spoke to an agent and got everything straightened out for us. Both officers told us warm goodbyes, wishing us well on our stay, and just barely stopping short of kissing us on both cheeks.

While Eithne went inside to finish up the car arrangements, I sat on the sidewalk in the sun. A Dutch woman waiting near me was wearing a T-shirt printed in bold letters: "Enjoy life. Laugh. Love."

I'm not usually one for signs, but after the morning we'd had I thought, why not? Life is so short. We should all be drinking good wine, visiting far-flung places and flirting outrageously with French policemen. ■ director at Gulfshore Playhouse, hasn't built her theater by playing it safe. In past seasons, she's presented edgy works including "Venus In Fur" and David Mamet's "Race."

"We didn't know what to expect," she says of the first New Works Festival, which consisted of readings of three play readings

"We thought we might get 20 people a night, so we were ecstatic (with the turnout)." More than 100 people came to the opening night and Saturday night readings; the Saturday matinee drew about 90. "For us, that was great."

After all, she adds, "It was unknown plays, unknown playwrights."

One of last year's works, "The Butcher," will be presented as a full-blown play this season, with costumes and sets.

The company received 107 entries for consideration this year. Artistic associate Cody Nickell read them all, then passed "20 or so" along to Ms. Coury. Those were narrowed down to 10 semi-finalists, from which the final four were chosen.

"These four plays have very diverse themes, very different styles," Ms. Coury says, noting that the playwrights differ in age, race, gender and geographic location. "It just happened that way. Our only criteria is: Is it good?"

"Rust on Bone" by Bianca Sams opens the festival with a reading at 8 p.m. Thursday, Sept. 4. Ms. Sams is an African-American playwright who lives in San Francisco. (Her website states: "If Whoopi Goldberg, Tennessee Williams and Sam Shepard could artistically have a love child together ... that would be me.")

The play takes on posttraumatic stress disorder and the plight of military men and women in the fallout of being sent off to war.

"A psychoanalyst has been treating a woman who's an ex-military, and has to deal with her angry husband. And the stories she's getting from the angry husband and the patient (differ). It's seeing life through the prism of different perspectives," Ms. Coury says. "It's an extremely timely play."

Jennifer Lane, who has been mentored by playwright Sarah Ruhl, wrote "Harlowe," offered at 8 p.m. Friday, Sept. 5.

"It's quite linear, but (like her mentor's plays) there's a surreal quality," Ms. Coury says about "Harlowe."

A woman named Harlowe has been wounded by a personal tragedy, but the wounds aren't always on the surface, they aren't always physical wounds. "And so we find her in a place where she's unable to feel," she says. "She's lost her sense of touch ... as it unrolls, we understand what has happened to her to cause this to occur."

"It's drama and it's humor and it's sadness and it's poetry and it's intensity," she adds. "It's quite an interesting play."

"Doublewide," written by Stephen Spotsford of Washington, D.C., is "sort of the wreckage of the American Dream," she says.

"This couple had high hopes for their life together. It turns out the county wants to buy the land their trailer sits on. The wife wants to work to get money, the husband suffers an accident, so he can't work anymore, and the daughter runs away. So we're really looking at the American Dream turned upside down." The play will be presented at 8 p.m. Saturday, Sept. 6.

The last reading of the festival, "Shepherd's Bush," is a period piece based on novelist EM Forster's life. It's written by Scott Sickles, the New York-based artistic director of the Workshop Theater Company and a staff writer for the daytime drama "One Life to Live."

VANDY MAJOR / FLORIDA WEEKLY

Cody Nickell and Kristen Coury chose four plays out of 107 submitted to Gulfshore Playhouse's contest.

"This is a very interesting play," Ms. Coury says. "It takes place in another age, in another country, in an era where everything was unacceptable."

"Shepherd's Bush" is about how Mr. Forster navigated being a homosexual over the course of decades. The story focuses on his lover, who was married to a woman. "It's heartbreaking," Ms. Coury says. "(His lover) wants to have a happy life, and he loves his wife, and she loves him, and she doesn't know that he's gay. "It's really layered... beautiful and poetic."

"Shepherd's Bush" closes the New Works Festival at 3 p.m. Sunday, Sept. 7.

How the New Works Festival works

Ms. Coury will direct two of the readings ("Doublewide" and "Shepherd's Bush") and Lou Tyrrell, founder of the now-shuttered Florida Stage in West Palm Beach and artistic director of Arts Garage in Delray Beach, will direct the other two.

Each playwright will receive 12 hours of rehearsal time and three hours for setting up the staging and the performance.

Directors, playwrights and actors will do a talkback with the audience after each reading.

Feedback is invaluable to the playwrights, some of who might be hearing their play read out loud by professional actors for the first time.

"It's all about serving the playwright, to help them," says Ms. Coury. "It's such a great boon to the playwright. It's such a great opportunity for them to hear it, to work on it, develop it in front of any audience."

"(The festival is) so much more about really contributing to the American theater than anything else."

"We love what we do. We want to foster the growth of American theater." ■

"It's all about serving the playwright, to help them ... It's such a great boon to the playwright, it's such a great opportunity for them to hear it, to work on it, develop it in front of any audience."

On the program

Here's a closer look at each of the festival plays, with descriptions provided by Gulfshore Playhouse.

>> "Rust on Bone" by Bianca Sams

Reading at 8 p.m. Thursday, Sept. 4

What would you do to stop a massacre? The angry husband of one of her patients confronts Devra, a psychoanalyst working with returning Iraq and Afghanistan soldiers. This confrontation will test Devra's limits, both personally and professionally. This mysterious and compelling drama is an incisive look at the fallout of war, the cycle of violence and the far-reaching consequences of the decisions people make.

>> "Harlowe" by Jennifer Lane

Reading at 8 p.m. Friday, Sept. 5

Looking at her life from the confines of her bathtub, Harlowe struggles to heal and find her place in the world following a personal tragedy that has caused her to lose her sense of touch. This poetic and deeply personal family drama juxtaposes compassionate humor with deep sadness. Full of metaphysical intensity, this play invites us to feel with every fiber of our being.

>> "Doublewide" by Stephen Spotswood

Reading at 8 p.m. Saturday, Sept. 6

Enter Big Jim's doublewide trailer. It's not much, but it's home. As outside forces close in and try to push Big Jim and his family off their land, he must decide how far he is willing to go. How hard would you fight to save your home? This heartfelt drama delves into themes of family, what really matters in life and that most tenuous and beautiful of things, the American Dream.

>> "Shepherd's Bush" by Scott Sickles

Reading at 3 p.m. Sunday, Sept. 7

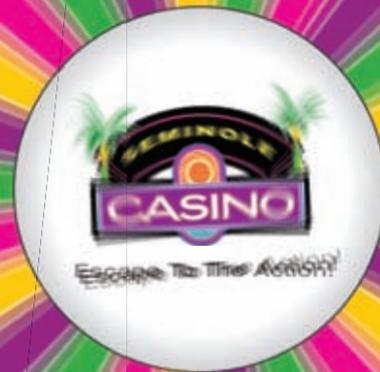

Enter another age, in a country where being different was unacceptable, and at a time when appearances were all that mattered. Based on the private life of acclaimed novelist EM Forster, this elegant play takes us on a decades-long journey of love and loss through a life that cannot be defined by fame alone.

WRITING CHALLENGE

The Florida Weekly Writing Challenge continues, where we ask readers to submit stories based on our photo prompts. This week, we're printing a story inspired by the photo of the tent and popcorn stand seen here.

Using the photo as a starting point for the creative process, we'd like you to come up with a narrative work of fiction of 1,500 words or less. There is no minimum length. No poems, please. Previous entrants are welcome to submit again. Two winners will receive a ticket each to the Sanibel Island Writer's Conference Nov. 6-9.

Florida Weekly will accept your original stories in Word format or pasted into the body of an email until midnight, Sunday, Sept. 7. There will be more photo prompts in the months to come. Email your entries to writing@floridaweekly.com and we will print some of the best submissions on these very pages. No "snail mail" copies will be accepted. Be sure to include your name, address and contact information with your submission. The earlier we receive your submission, the better your shot at being printed.

For more information on the Sanibel Island Writers Conference, visit fgcu.edu/siwc. ■

Tents

By Sandy Price
Punta Gorda

"Tents, by design, are temporary," he told me with a tinge of sadness. Then added with emphasis, "But special," as if to dispel the gloom of his statement.

"Why special, G.G.?" I asked. G.G. was what I called him because great-grandfather was too big a mouthful when I first began talking. By now it was a familiarity we both enjoyed.

"Tents are special because they are always pitched for a purpose. It might be a small tent for a small purpose: a pup tent for a weekend camping trip. Or a big tent for a big purpose. Maybe a three ring circus. But up they go and down they come, and whatever is going on in them is always something special. Or at least unusual, which is just another form of special."

We were standing at the edge of a field where the previous week all that had been visible was the rough-cut stubble of the year's crop of hard red winter wheat. Now an uneven pathway wound its way between rickety carnival rides and makeshift stalls with scalloped awnings selling cotton candy and corn dogs. At the path's end, in the distance, was the entrance to the main tent. Its contents were an indistinguishable black in sharp contrast to the brilliance of late autumn sunshine.

"See that carriage?" he asked, pointing to a garish vehicle with wheels of wooden spokes painted bright yellow. Wheels the like of which I'd only ever seen in western movies so old they were filmed in black and white.

"When I was your age..." he said, but I lost the thread of his musing. It was unimaginable to me that a frail, stooped old man could ever have been a sturdy, straight, 11-year-old boy.

"When I was your age," he repeated. I paid him the respect of my attention. "The posters arrived first. Huge, brightly colored pictures announcing the coming of the circus. Oh, how excited we were! For weeks we looked at those posters. We stared so hard, it's a wonder we didn't stare the color clean off the paper."

He looked around as if he expected the posters to be there still. Or perhaps he was seeing them in his mind's eye: remnants of cherished memories from a childhood long past.

"The circus arrived by rail: flatbed cars of wild animals. Lions. Tigers. They paced the length of their barred cages, tails twitching. And other specially built cars with bedrooms and bathrooms and kitchens even. The train brought us a veritable town. A portable town, and its grandest building would be the Big Top, a tent so large it could hold a thousand. Or more." He eyed the tent before us as if calculating its capacity.

"We used to sneak away from whatever we should be doing to watch the raising of the Big Top. Some two dozen men swarmed over the shapeless canvas. Fat stakes were driven deep into the earth by brawny men with heavy mallets. Then the center pole, thicker and taller than any telephone pole, was raised. How it went from horizontal to vertical was a mystery; the canvas sides hid the process."

"I've never been to a circus," I said. "I used to go every year. They don't make the circuit like they used to before movies and television. All we get now are carnivals and county fairs. Smaller tents for smaller purposes."

He sounded sad, so I reminded him, "But still special, right?"

"Right," he agreed without much enthusiasm. "I was at a loss. We had begun this day brightly, eagerly, anxious for the treat of an outing together. How had it gone off course?"

"Let's go sit down for a while," I suggested. G.G., after all, was very old. He was probably tired, I reasoned.

"Good idea." He wandered toward a weather-beaten wooden picnic table built all of a piece, its seats bolted to the struts that supported its top.

Before he sat down, he fished in his pocket for money. Handing me a few bills, he said, "Go get us a couple of lemonades. The wheels of that carriage are yellow for a reason. And I think I see a mound of fruit on the shelf. Their lemonade will be made from scratch, not reconstituted from a can. Or worse yet, made of powder containing artificial flavors, whatever the hell those are."

If G.G. was swearing, the day had gone further off course than I realized.

The lemonade was fresh, sweet and tart at the same time. It revived him a bit. "Sit up here." He patted the top of the table. I complied, my legs dangling over the end. He swiveled on the seat to face me. For the first time, I was looking up into his eyes. They were sky blue, a shocking contrast to his overall greyness: hair, skin even clothes.

"Tents," he repeated, "are temporary by design. Like life. It's what you put into them, tents and lives, that makes them special. My tent is already full; yours is just beginning to fill. I'm sorry I won't be around to see what you decide to put into yours. Remember to make whatever you choose special."

"In the meantime," he added. "Let's go see what's inside there."

He pointed toward the distant entrance of the main tent, a black rectangle in sharp contrast to the brilliance of the late autumn sunshine. What that tent contained, like my future, was a mystery.

G.G. died before I turned 12. For the graveside service, I insisted we rent the largest tent the mortuary could provide. More than a hundred mourners sat in its shade. ■

HOROSCOPES

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22)

Take some time out from your many tasks and see if someone might be trying to reach out to you. You could be surprised to learn who it is and why you might want to reciprocate.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22)

You still might want to do more investigating before taking on a new commitment. Later would not be the time to try to fill in any crucial gaps in what you need to know about it.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21)

A new opportunity should be carefully studied. It might offer some of the things you've been looking for. Or it could contain new possibilities you never considered. Check it out.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21)

You might have to work harder this week to get people to listen to what you have to say. But if you stay with it, you could start to get your message out to many by the week's end.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19)

Although family matters again take up a big chunk of the Goat's time, the week also offers a chance to explore a new career move you'd been contemplating for a while.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18)

Applying your practicality (what does it offer me?) and your creativity (how can I improve on it?) could provide sound reasons for seriously considering that new offer.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20)

The single set will find that keeping their romantic aspirations on high gives Cupid a better target to aim at. Paired Pisces will find that this week helps reinforce their relationships.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) Changing your mind doesn't come easily for Lambs, who place a high value on commitment. But new facts could emerge that might persuade you to rethink your situation.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) This is a good time to put that fine Bovine's eye for beauty to work in redecorating your home or workplace. And don't forget to indulge yourself in some personal time as well.

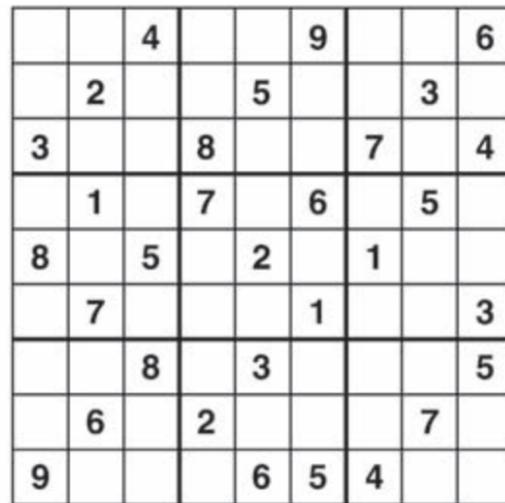

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Your sense of loyalty to someone who asks for your help is commendable. But make sure there are no information gaps that should be filled in before you move too far too quickly.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) Don't let difficult people raise the Crab's ire levels this week. Avoid them if you can. If not, resist telling them off, even if you think they deserve it. Things improve by week's end.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) Your suspicions about a colleague might be on the mark. But you also could be misreading the signals you believe you're getting. Do some discreet checking before jumping to conclusions.

BORN THIS WEEK: You believe in encouraging others to demand the best from themselves. You would be a fine sports coach, as well as an enlightened teacher. ■

Is it worth $10? Yes

"Chef" is back in theaters because the folks at Open Road Films first released it in the midst of summer movie season against "Godzilla," which meant it got squashed by the competition. Now, at a slower time of year for films, I hope it'll find more of the audience it deserves.

"Chef" stars Scarlett Johansson, Robert Downey Jr., Sofia Vergara and Jon Favreau. But the one thing you'll come out of the movie talking about — and craving — is food. All kinds of food. Breakfasts, desserts, sandwiches, steaks, beignets, everything seems to radiate deliciousness, making us yearn for Smell-O-Vision and a menu so we can sample rather than stare at the savory culinary creations.

menu for the locals at each stop. Los Angeles, Miami, New Orleans and Austin (where the film debuted at the SXSW Film Festival) are on prime display, each highlighted to maximize its respective appeal. For example, the Miami scenes feature posh hotels, Little Havana and Ocean Drive on South Beach.

"Chef" has heart and laughs, both in appropriate moderation. We like Carl and root for him even though we know he's his own worst enemy, and the story progresses with integrity rather than contrived convenience. Smart musical choices are used with each location, and some timely jokes and situations provide comic relief during dramatic stretches. This is well made and acted all around.

For Mr. Favreau, the film is a true accomplishment. He balances writer/producer/director/actor responsibilities with aplomb and asserts himself as a filmmaker at ease working in a variety of genres. Consider: As the director of "Elf," "Iron Man" and now this, he's had considerable success in three distinctly different genres, which is a rare feat in niche-driven Hollywood. His next project is a remake of "The Jungle Book"; it will be interesting to see if any cinematic DNA carries over from "Chef" in terms of writing and characterizations.

No matter how you slice it, "Chef" is a good movie that deserves to be seen. And then there's the food. Oh, my goodness, the food. Advice: If you're on a diet, eat beforehand so your hunger pains afterward aren't severe and you can be satisfied with something healthy. If you're planning to eat afterward, make a reservation somewhere you know the food is rich, succulent and delicious, because you're going to ravenously devour every bite in front of you. ■

★★★1/2

(Helen Mirren, Om Puri, Manish Dayal) The fussy proprietor of a Michelin-starred French restaurant (Ms. Mirren) doesn't take kindly to her new neighbors/competition, a spunky Indian family whose restaurant is right across the street. Like the food on screen, the movie looks fine and is perfectly edible, but it's nothing special. Rated PG.

Magic In The Moonlight ★★★1/2

(Colin Firth, Emma Stone, Marcia Gay Harden) A world-renowned magician (Mr. Firth) travels to the south of France to reveal an American psychic (Ms. Stone) as a fraud, but his perspective changes as they spend time together. Ms. Stone's character is underplayed and the story is predictable, but Mr. Firth's snarky charm keeps you laughing. Rated PG-13.

Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles

Guardians Of The Galaxy

(Chris Pratt, Zoe Saldana, Dave Bautista) Unlikely heroes Star-Lord (Mr. Pratt), Gamora (Ms. Saldana), Drax (Mr. Bautista), Groot (voice of Vin Diesel) and Rocket Raccoon (voice of Bradley Cooper) try to stop the villainous Ronan (Lee Pace) from possessing a powerful orb. It's action-packed, hilarious and an out-of-this-world good time. It also fits nicely within the Avengers-driven Marvel Cinematic Universe. Rated PG-13.

Into the Storm★★★

(Richard Armitage, Sarah Wayne Callies, Matt Walsh) Locals try to survive as a series of tornadoes strike a small midwestern town. Some action scenes are great and others miss the mark. With forgettable characters and rote dialog, this isn't one to run off to. Rated PG-13.

Boyhood ★★★1/2

(Ellar Coltrane, Patricia Arquette, Ethan Hawke) This landmark film from director Richard Linklater ("Before Midnight") follows a boy, Mason (Mr. Coltrane), as he ages from 6 to 18 years old. Ms. Arquette and Mr. Hawke play Mason's divorced parents. Shot in 39 days over the course of 12 years, it's the most natural and realistic depiction of the pains of adolescence in recent memory. Rated R.

Sex Tape ★★

(Cameron Diaz, Jason Segel, Rob Corddry) To spruce things up, married with children Annie (Ms. Diaz) and Jay (Mr. Segel) make a sex tape on a tablet. Crisis comes, however, when the session synchs with other devices. We don't buy these two as a couple, it's not funny, the story's weak and worst of all, it's just not sexy. Rated R.

And So It Goes ★★1/2

(Michael Douglas, Diane Keaton, Sterling Jerins) Grumpy old Oren (Mr. Douglas) needs the help of his kind neighbor (Ms. Keaton) to care for his granddaughter (Ms. Jerins). Although it's full of clichés and heavy messages, Mr. Douglas' acerbic one-liners and the chemistry between him and Ms. Keaton make it moderately enjoyable. Rated PG-13.

The Purge: Anarchy ★★★

(Frank Grillo, Carmen Ejogo, Zach Gilford) A well-equipped enforcer (Mr. Grillo) helps innocents caught outside during the purge, the one night a year in which all crime is legal. This is a notable improvement on "The Purge" (2013), largely because it smartly shows the far-reaching effects of purging. Rated R.

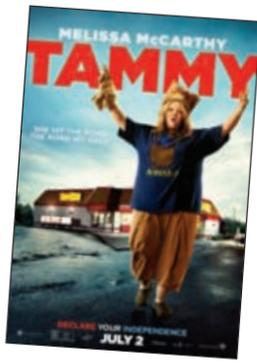

Dawn of the Planet of the Apes ★★

(Gary Oldman, Keri Russell, Andy Serkis) In this sequel to "Rise of the Planet of the Apes" (2011), apes and humans try to peacefully co-exist in futuristic San Francisco. The ape visual effects are fine, but the picture is dull and the story is lazy. Rated PG-13.

Tammy ★1/2

Earth To Echo ★★

(Teo Halm, Brian "Astro" Bradley, Reese Hartwig) Three young friends (Mr. Halm, Mr. Bradley, Mr. Hartwig) discover a lost alien the night before they're forced to move away from one another in their neighborhood. It's a lackluster "E.T." rip-off that uses the found footage gimmick to dizzying effect. Rated PG.

Transformers: Age of Extinction ★★

(Mark Wahlberg, Nicola Peltz, Stanley Tucci) Inventor Cade (Mr. Wahlberg) and his daughter Tessa (Ms. Peltz) are caught in a government war against Transformers in the fourth installment of director Michael Bay's hit franchise. At 165 minutes and with a weak story, it's so long and overwhelming it's exhausting. Rated PG-13. ■

FLORIDA WRITERS

Florida noir trilogy wraps up with a big bang

■ "The Big Hello" by Michael Lister. Pulpwood Press. 215 pages. Hardcover. $26.99.

Michael Lister is the bard of the Florida Panhandle. His crime novels, distributed through several ongoing series, set a very high standard for originality, style and impact.

LISTER

As the third and final installment in the Soldier series, "The Big Hello" features an ex-cop private eye named Jimmy "Soldier" Riley who is at once as tough as they come and as filled with romantic longing as anyone should be. In this series, both homage to and fulfillment of the hard-boiled Florida noir tradition, the story line is drenched with death.

However, the story line — easy to follow in some ways — is also something of a problem.

In his effort to save the woman of his dreams (if in fact she is alive), Jimmy gets tangled up in a chase after the super-perverse serial killer who abducted her. One thing is clear: Lauren Lewis is not in her grave!

One-armed Jimmy and his sidekick, a one-eyed African-American named Clip, are regularly arrested by members of the local constabulary (the action runs back and forth between Panama City and Tallahassee during the early 1940s), some of whom are competent, others less so, and others downright corrupt.

Even though it's a relatively short book, the number of characters who are juggled, the nonstop mayhem and the sketchy development of backstory can leave readers disoriented. I'm thinking this book is best enjoyed by those who have read the first two volumes in the series, "The Big Goodbye" and "The Big Beyond." Yet it is highly enjoyable, though a bit perplexing, in itself.

Perhaps the sense of chaos and disorientation is deliberate:

"What's our next move?" Clip asked. We were standing back over near the ambulance again, waiting on Collins.

"I have absolutely no idea."

He nodded and seemed to think about it. "And how is that different from any other time?"

I managed a smile.

He was right. That was the job. Stumbling around in the darkness, being lied to and misled by some while others attempted manipulation, intimidation, and bribery, all while not giving in, not giving up.

OK, I can groove on this.

The book has many spectacular scenes, including the gallery of macabre art by the serial killer Flaxon De Grasse, who juxtaposes body parts in his surrealistic compositions (or decompositions). In portraying wartime Northern Florida, Mr. Lister projects — without excessive, show-off detail — the feel of the cars on the pre-Eisenhower roadways, the roadside saloons, motels and other accommodations and the countless stops at payphones.

Jimmy and Clip comprise an odd couple, a black and white pair unusual in this time and place. Their respect for and loyalty to one another, and their reactions when Clip is disrespected or blocked from access because of his color, are handled by the author with just the right touch.

Another odd relationship is that between law enforcement officers and criminals. These are overlapping categories; individuals on each side of the law are able to slip across the boundary. In addition, they seem to have a need for one another, almost like lovers who define themselves and complete themselves in their relationship.

Police Chief Darryl Collins, working the case in the manner of an extreme control freak, is Jimmy's stepfather — and a man Jimmy would rather not have to confront. Still, this case puts them together and allows the author to paint just enough of Jimmy's background to help explain some aspects of his character.

case of rescuing Lauren, he claims that there is absolutely nothing he would not do. His passion, his need for her, is that all-encompassing. She is his heart's desire and his moral test.

A significant part of the novel is comprised of sparkling, banter between Jimmy and Clip, and much of that has to do with this issue of limits and principles. They are blunt-spoken philosophers whose wisdom is cloaked in imperfect English that is nonetheless powerful and clear. To hear them go at it is great fun. (Jimmy's English, however, sounds pretty good when he's quoting Shakespeare.)

"The Big Hello" is another tense, brooding thriller by the versatile and marvelously talented Michael Lister. ■

— Phil Jason, Ph.D., United States Naval Academy professor emeritus of English, is a poet, critic and freelance writer with 20 books to his credit, including several studies of war literature and a creative writing text.

Jimmy is attractively etched as a man with a moral code. In most instances, he's a fellow who has limits on what he will do in the pursuit of his goals or responsibilities. There are lines he won't cross, principles he won't forsake. However, in the

KOVEL: ANTIQUES

Copies of famous pottery blunders hard to spot

BY TERRY KOVEL AND KIM KOVEL

1950s copies.

Watch out for fake antiques, especially copies of well-known pieces. In about 1820, some potters in the Staffordshire district of England made portrait figures of famous politicians, actors and athletes to sell in local shops. Remember, this was a time when there were no color images of people except paintings and few black-and-white photos. Often the potters confused the personalities. A famous error was the figure of Benjamin Franklin made in about 1820. Some had the name "General Washington" painted on the front of the base. In the 1950s, when Staffordshire figures were again very popular, many copies of both the correct and incorrect Franklin were made. Other old fakes still are around. Some are antique jokes, like "The Vicar and Moses," which shows a judge sleeping in court. "The Tithing" is another faked figure, a group with a tax collector taking a percentage of the crop — and a new baby — as a tax from a farmer and his wife (sometimes the farmer was less cynical and brought a pig). Other named copies show well-known men of the day, including Shakespeare, the comic Joseph Grimaldi, a bust of Washington or even a pair of cricket bowlers. Be careful. It is harder to recognize the 1990s Chinese copies than it was the Q: We have a rocking chair that has been in my husband's family for about 60 years. It's Craftsman-style and has armrests. It also has the original leather seat cushion with springs. On the bottom of the seat it reads, "Northwest Chair Co., Tacoma, Wash." I'm having a hard time finding information about the company and our chair. I would like to sell it. What do you think it's worth?

A: The Northwest Chair Co. made furniture in South Tacoma from about 1900 to the 1950s. In the mid-1920s, they opened distribution warehouses in Los Angeles and Berkeley, Calif. An advertisement claimed the company made "bedroom, children's, dining room, kitchen, library and store chairs made of ash, birch, mahogany, oak and walnut." In addition to furniture, the company made airplane parts for Boeing in 1944. We've seen a similar Morris-type rocking chair priced at $100.

Q: My mother has a very old set of china. The mark on the back reads "T & R Boote and Co." and has an image of a ship called Tusculana. Do you have any information about the maker?

A: T. & R. Boote was founded by Thomas and Richard Boote in Burslem, Staffordshire, England, in This Staffordshire figure of Benjamin Franklin was mistakenly labeled "General Washington" when it was made in the 1820s. It sold for $338 at a 2014 DuMouchelles auction in Detroit.

1842. The company made pavement tiles, Parian ware and earthenware. It began making white graniteware for export to the United States in 1888. Production was limited to tiles after 1906. T. & R. Boote used a boat as part of its mark from 1890 to 1906. Tusculana is the name of a pattern that was made from 1903 to 1906.

Q: Is there any kind of a market for used shoe-topped roller skates from the 1940s? They're in very good shape, but I used them a lot because I used to dance in them several times a week.

A: Your skates are not what we'd call "collectible." That word would apply if, for example, someone famous once owned them. But it's possible you could sell them on eBay or Craigslist for $20 or even a little more.

Q: I found a very old straight razor in the original box. It was made by Johnson Brothers Hardware Co. of Cincinnati. How old is it? Are old razors collectible?

A: The Johnson brothers had a wholesale and retail hardware business in Cincinnati beginning in 1881. According to an 1886 listing, the company carried general hardware and "pocket and table cutlery." The name of the business became Johnson Bros. Hardware Co. in 1891. By then it was selling tools as well as hardware and cutlery. It still was in business in 1913, when it was listed in a directory of hardware dealers. Collectors of old razors want razors in good, unrestored condition. If you are thinking of selling the razor, don't polish it. The original box adds value. Old straight razors sell for $15 and up, depending on condition and maker.

Tip: Do not hang photographs in direct sunlight. The UV rays will damage photographs.

AUDITION CALLS

Equity and non-Equity auditions (principal/chorus) for TheatreZone's 10th anniversary season will be held by appointment Saturday and Sunday, Sept. 13-14, at the G&L Theatre on the campus of The Community School, 13275 Livingston Road in Naples. Founding Artistic Director Mark Danni says more than 100 professional actors from across the country will tryout for one or more of the season's 50 available roles. Local actors are encouraged to audition as well.

The season opens in January with "Mack & Mabel" and continues with "Sweeney Todd" (the two lead roles have already been cast, but eight Equity roles and six non-Equity roles are available), "Brooklyn - The Musical" (African American and Latino American actors needed), and Neil Simon's "They're Playing Our Song."

To secure an audition appointment or for more information, email Mr. Danni at markdanni@theatrezone-florida.com or call 449-2323. Sides are posted at theatrezone-florida.com.

Opera Naples holds general and chorus auditions Saturday, Sept. 13, by appointment only.

Through general auditions, ON seeks professional singers for future casting considerations of principal and secondary roles. Chorus auditions are for singers of all ages who will perform alongside professional singers at the Naples Philharmonic in a fully staged production of Puccini's "La Boheme" Thursday and Saturday, Nov. 20 and 22, at Artis—Naples.

Audition appointments for the chorus can be scheduled by emailing Robin Frank at rfrank@operanaples.org.

General auditions require at least three songs of varying languages, a recent headshot and a resume. Interested singers should email materials, including an audio or video file, to Ms. Frank at the above address for consideration for a live audition.

For more information, email Ms. Frank or call Opera Naples at 963-9050. ■

Naples artist Heidi Saletko, who creates lifelike animal masks out of discarded palm fronds and other garden foliage, will share her technique in two workshops coming to the Marco Island Center for the Arts.

"Paint on the Wild Side" will be offered from 1-4 p.m. Thursday, Aug. 21, and Thursday, Sept. 18. Cost of each session, all supplies included, is $55.

Participants will choose an animal — lion, zebra, turtle, cockatoo, panther, monkey and more — and Ms. Saletko will guide them through the process of creating a piece of art that is suitable for hanging indoors or outside.

Marco, Everglades City exhibits showcase pioneer's illustrations

The Marco Island Historical Museum presents Rob Storter's "Artwork of the Everglades," an illustrated guide to the history of the Everglades, Sept. 2-Oct. 31. The Marco Island Historical Society hosts an opening reception for the exhibit from 5-7 p.m. Tuesday, Sept. 2. Admission is free.

Through September, the Museum of the Everglades in Everglades City will also honor Mr. Storter with an exhibit titled "History of Fishing in the Glades through the Eyes of Rob Storter." An opening reception will be held from 1-3 p.m. Saturday, Sept. 20.

Robert Lee Storter was born Sept. 30, 1894, in Everglades City and lived an abundant 92 years of life as a guide, fisherman, poet and artist who chronicled what it was like in the "earlier" days of Collier County.

The Marco museum's "Artwork of the Everglades" exhibit transports viewers to the remote, half-wild frontier of Southwest Florida in the early part of the 20th century through Mr. Storter's drawings of the swamps, estuaries and vast array of plants and animal life of a time gone by. Depicting a life closely linked to the water, the drawings record how mechanized methods obscured the more simple approach of fishing.

Both exhibits also tell the story of family and community triumphs and its setbacks. Mr. Storter knew the Everglades before commercial fishing, real estate development, drainage projects and tourism changed the region forever. His illustrations offer a glimpse into the mixed benefits of progress and the responsibilities of stewardship.

The Marco Island Historical Museum and the Museum of the Everglades are part of the Collier County Museum system. Hours are 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Tuesday-Saturday. Admission is free. For more information, call 252-8476 or visit colliermuseum.com. ■

CELEBRITY EXTRA

Villainous Tzi Ma of '24' also appearing in 'Satisfaction'

BY CINDY ELAVSKY

Q: I am a big fan of "24," and was pleasantly surprised to see the character of Cheng return this summer. Can you tell me where else I can see the actor who played him?

— Lawrence E., Baltimore

TZI MA

A: Tzi Ma is the longtime character actor who appeared as Cheng Zhi in the season finale of "24: Live Another Day." I spoke with Tzi recently, and was delighted (and a bit relieved) to find that he was nothing like Cheng and much more like his character of the Zen Master on USA's "Satisfaction" (which has its season finale on Thursday, Sept. 18, at 10 p.m.).

Tzi (pronounced "tie") was thrilled to get the call to return to his bad-guy role on "24," but it almost made him miss out on "Satisfaction" when shooting for both series began to overlap.

Tzi told me: "It was a bit of a logistical nightmare. Thank goodness they worked it out. 'Satisfaction' was on the brink of replacing me because I was supposed to be in Atlanta by the middle of May, and I was still in England. I flew straight from London to Atlanta. And I was still on hold for '24' in case we needed to do reshoots. Sean (Jablonski, the creator of 'Satisfaction') is so generous and supportive and trusting. They waited for me, and I am so grateful for that. Thank you, guys!"

Tzi also addressed the statement made by Freddie Prinze Jr. that Keifer Sutherland was unprofessional and difficult to work with: "Look at what Keifer's done for '24.' He's been in practically every scene, from beginning to end, for nine seasons. That should tell you something about this guy's work ethic. I don't know any actor who comes to the set more prepared than him. You can't carry a show like this being an asshole. Everyone has his moments, even me. The fact is, he doesn't compromise because he is trying to achieve excellence."

Q: I can't get enough "Outlander"! Please tell me it will be back for another season.

— Eleanor W., The Villages, Fla.

A: I am thrilled to tell you that after its record-shattering opening weekend, Starz did indeed renew the time-traveling/fantasy/historical-drama/romance series for a second season. Early reports say that the second season will be at least 13 episodes, and it will be based on Diana Gabaldon's second book in the "Outlander" series, "Dragonfly in Amber." ■

■ A piece by internationally renowned conceptual artist Roxy Paine ($3,000-$5,000).

"I'm doing this because I'm working on some wonderful projects that will help the community, and I thought (auctioning) the artwork was a good place to start," says Mrs. Daniels.

Chicago and Naples are, of course, a shared connection for Mrs. Daniels and Leslie Hindman. An Indiana native, Mrs. Daniels moved to The Windy City in the 1960s and became the first female executive vice-president of an advertising firm. She later led the creative department of another Chicago ad agency, which eventually became Draper Daniels Inc., an advertising powerhouse where she became president and COO and met the man who became her husband, the late Draper Daniels.

The firm served as the inspiration for the TV show "Mad Men," and its lead character, Don Draper, is loosely based on Mr. Daniels.

The couple retired to Collier County in 1979.

Mrs. Daniels says she and Ms. Hindman met several times in Chicago, but got to know each other in Naples.

"She's just a very charming woman who I know is my friend and I'm her friend," says Mrs. Daniels. "She knows her business in the arts. Leslie can see behind a painting. She has that feel about what it really is trying to say."

This is Mrs. Daniels' first time using Leslie Hindman Auctioneers to sell artwork from her collection.

"Working with a sophisticated collector like Mrs. Daniels is always exciting," says Kristin Vaughn, head of business development for the Naples branch of the auction house. "We reviewed her collection and made a few suggestions, but ultimately she selected the works for us to handle. She has an eye for great art by important artists. Yet, when I listened to her speak about each work, I knew she bought what she loved."

Mrs. Daniels, an energetic 89, bought her first painting, a small work by Frederick Wyeth, at age 6 and says her passion for art has never ebbed over time.

As is common with serious art collectors, she sometimes places pieces on the market to make room for new finds.

"I have never stopped buying if I fall in love with something," she says. She also collects 1920s-era fine furniture, as well as paintings and sculptures. "These (the auction items) are pieces that I've had for a long time, and I have others to replace them."

An untitled work by Arman, consisting of red oil-paint tubes encased in plexiglass

She can speak with first-hand knowledge of some of the artists and the works to be sold in the upcoming auction.

"I was interested in George Rickey because I knew Mr. and Mrs. Rickey and I sat at their farm while he did this sculpture," she says. "He was a brilliant scholar in this field. That is a tender memory."

Mrs. Daniels retired from what is now Artis—Naples in 2011 but found that the sedentary life was not for her.

"I don't believe in retirement," she says. "I believe in keeping the mind busy and in doing what you can to make your community a better place to live. It took me a year of sleeping to catch up because I worked 12 hours a day at the Phil." After that, however, she was ready to find a new focus for her energies. That led to her involvement with:

■ The Salvation Army's Fran Cohen Youth Center in East Naples, where she leads the capital campaign and is chairman of the board.

A 1-of-3 edition bronze stabile by George Rickey

■ The 1,250-seat, $10 million performing arts center planned for the campus of Ave Maria University in eastern Collier County. Mrs. Daniels is the project's chair.

■ The 3,500-square-foot Mother Teresa Project Exhibition Hall, also planned for the Ave Maria campus, which will include displays of Mother Teresa's life, letters and memorabilia. Mrs. Daniels is also this project's chairman.

She is in the process of building a home in Ave Maria so that she can be closer to the dual projects that are a passion. Working with Ave Maria University, she says, "is the most exciting thing I've done."

Online bidding will be available for the Leslie Hindman Auctioneers auction of fine and contemporary art in Chicago on Friday, Sept. 26. For more information, including a complete auction catalogue, visit lesliehindman.com. ■

Some are sweet on dessert wines even before last course

Dessert wines, sweet and richly flavored complements to the end of the meal, are enjoying popularity with wine fans, not simply for the wonderful way in which they enhance desserts but also for the interesting pairings they can provide with savory fare.

Chef Kevin Sbraga, the owner of Sbraga in Philadelphia's Rittenhouse Square, is pairing a nut mix of cashews, pecans, almonds and assorted spices with the blackberry and cassis flavors of Fonseca Bin 27 Ruby Port.

Chef Matt McCallister of FT33 in Dallas, Texas, pairs the rich flavors of Taylor Fladgate 20-year-old tawny port with his homemade pork sausage with red wine and bacon-braised lentils.

You can also pair nuts and fruits with sweet white wines. The late food writer Richard Olney, quoted in "What to Drink With What You Eat," says, "Almonds and peaches, separate or in combination, are perhaps the two most successful accompanying flavors to a Sauterne."

And many late harvest white wines pair well with soft and blue cheeses as well as foie gras, perfect for an afternoon soiree.

There are a number of dessert wines available, but they break down into three basic categories: late harvested wines made from grapes with higher sugar content; wines fortified with the addition of higher alcohol spirits to stop fermentation at an early stage (before all the sugar is converted to alcohol); and sweet sparkling wines. These types vary in the production manner but achieve the same results. Retaining more sugar in the wine produces a richly flavored and complex beverage that pairs well with a variety of foods.

Just as styles vary, so does the sweetness. Some dessert wines are lusciously sweet and richly flavored, such as French Sauternes and German late harvest wines. Some red wines, such as late harvest malbecs or zinfandels, have a decidedly drier style, while retaining complex flavors and a hint of sweetness. Sweet sparkling wines, think Asti Spumante from Italy and demi-sec or doux (sweet) sparklers, are a little lighter in body and have a refreshing, clean flavor.

When pairing wines with dessert, the wine needs to be at least as sweet as the dish, or it can be overwhelmed by the flavor and sweetness. Wines made in the same style will bear stronger similarities to each other and will pair well with the same kinds of foods. Late harvest white wines will traditionally have flavors of stone fruits like apricot and nectarine, baked apple flavors and light candied citrus and honey notes. These will pair well with cheesecake and berries, fruit pies and carrot cake. Ports and late harvest reds will have dark cherry and berry flavors mixed with chocolate, mocha and spice, making them excellent for pairing with chocolate dishes. Sweet sparklers will have lighter flavors with pear and apple with citrus notes, and are often enjoyed with fruit dishes.

flavors — guava, mango and pineapple — with hints of apple and peach. It's good to drink now through 2036.

■ Fonseca Bin 27 Ruby Port ($18): Chocolate, berries and plums mingle with slate and pepper in this fresh grape-forward wine from Portugal. Wine Spectator gave it 90 points.

■ Gruet Demi Sec NV New Mexico ($20): An intoxicating blend of chardonnay and pinot noir, made in the traditional methode champenoise by a French Champagne house family. Medium in body and well balanced with an aroma and palate of pears, peaches and apples, and a light refreshing finish.

■ Puro Uno Cigar Bar Late Harvest Malbec Argentina 2011($35 for 375ml): Delicious and unusual, made from 95-year-old vines, this wine is complex with notes of dark berries and leather. Finish is on the dry side with good tannins and lingering flavors in the mouth.

■ Sandeman Founder's Reserve Ruby Port ($18): Rich dark red in color, with aromas of red berry and plum that follow onto the palate. Elegant in style with plenty of young fruit flavors and a balanced finish with a touch of spice.

■ Taylor Fladgate 20 Year Tawny Port ($45): Wine Spectator gave this one 93 points and describes it as, "Rich, with a spicy nose ... flavors of fig, dried apricot, mango and ginger. Complex and elegant, delivering concentrated creme brulee and tropical fruit notes that linger on the vibrant and buttery finish. Drink now." ■

Wines of the week:

■ Diznók Tokaji Aszú 5 Puttonos Hungary 2007 ($40 for 500 ml): From an estate established in the 1700s, this exquisite wine is made mostly from the Furmint grape, native to Hungary. Medium gold in color, the aroma is dried apricots and pears. The palate starts with honeyed fruit, lime and spices, opening up with rich buttery fruit flavors of apricot, peach and orange. Well balanced with an elegant and clean finish.

■ Dr. Heidemanns-Bergweiler Bernkasteler Badstube Riesling Beerenauslese Mosel 2011($50 for 375 ml): Rated 90 by Wine Spectator, this wine is made in Germany but features tropical

The Local strives to be even more local

The Local, a farm-to-table, sea-to-table restaurant in Naples is celebrating a successful year in business and working to bring even more local products to the menu.

Chef/owner Jeff Mitchell, a graduate of the prestigious Culinary Institute of America, started by contributing ideas for the menus and working the front of the house while fellow CIA alumnus Rich Demarse handled most of the kitchen duties.

When Mr. Demarse and his wife decided to pursue some opportunities in Charleston, S.C., a few months ago, Mr. Mitchell went back to his roots in the kitchen.

"I hadn't been in a kitchen fulltime in 10 years," he says. "I'm really enjoying it. It's fun making people happy."

He works with area farmers who grow a wealth of interesting vegetables, many of which are organic, and with local fishermen, who call and tell him what they brought in that morning. What he can't get here — such as lettuces during the hot summer months — he purchases from farms in Lancaster, Pa., and other northerly locales.

Meanwhile, Mr. Mitchell is also working with local farmers to have them plant seeds for vegetables he wants to have on his menu in the coming winter months.

"We know what grew really well last year and what sold well, so we've figured out a formula between the restaurant and farm," he says.

The Local plans to broaden its reach in October, by selling some of pastry chef Yannexis Rodriquez's baked goods at the farmers market at the Collection at Vanderbilt (8 a.m.-1 p.m. Saturdays).

Through October, The Local offers a themed wine and small plate pairing from 4-6 p.m. every Friday, matching up dishes with the wines of a particular region. September will feature various regions of the United States, while October will explore Asian flavors.

The Local is open from 11 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily. It's at 5323 Airport Pulling Road (at Pine Ridge). Call 596-3276 or visit the Facebook site for more information on daily specials and new menu items.

Chef Charles Mereday, Chef Brian Roland and Chef Lisa Boet host culinary cruises next summer.

Tres leches cake is among the desserts created by Damien Rivera, the new pastry chef at Agave.

Agave debuts fall menu, new entertainment lineup

After a brief closure for construction and fine-tuning, Agave Bar & Grill reopened Tuesday with a refreshed fall menu and a new stage in the bar that will allow the restaurant to bring in live music.

With chef Andrew McLaughlin and new pastry chef Damien Rivera, the menu now features elements of its original Southwestern flavors along with some Latin favorites and American standards. Agave's signature guacamole remains on the menu, joined by appetizers such as queso fundido, short rib empanadas, green mole mussels and chicken and vegetable quesadillas.

Fajitas, Veracruz-style grouper, tequila-flamed filet mignon and fish tacos are among the entrees. There's also a Saratoga veggie burger, created by chef Scott Beale, a former "Iron Chef" competitor and the husband of General Manager Jamie Beale. With quinoa, rice, beans, veggies, avocado and goat cheese, the "burger" is gluten free and can be served on a gluten-free roll.

The restaurant has added a raw bar as well, serving oysters, littleneck clams, snow crab clusters, ceviche and shrimp.

Mr. Rivera's pastries might start a trend of ordering dessert first. Tres leches cake, a velvety flan and a margarita mousse are the three desserts I tried at a recent tasting. They were superb.

September entertainment includes The Initials Duo (Sept. 5 and 19), The Good Bad Kids (Sept. 6 and 27), The Whole Tones (Sept. 12), Gypsy Native (Sept. 13) and Tess O'Gilvie (Sept. 28). A grand opening celebration Oct. 4-5 will feature former "The Voice" contestant and Naples resident Casey Weston (on Oct. 5).

Agave, which recently earned the Wine Spectator Award of Excellence for the third consecutive year, is open for lunch and dinner daily. It's at 2380 Vanderbilt Beach Road, Naples. Call 598-3473 or visit the restaurant's Facebook site.

Cruise with the chefs

Three well-known area chefs will host culinary cruises next summer on Oceania's Riviera, leading interactive cooking classes, port excursions to local markets, wineries and restaurants plus in-depth culinary discovery tours at select ports. They will also spend time onboard with guests at special dinners and receptions.

Lisa Boet, of Chez Boet, will tour Provence and the French Riviera, from Rome to Monte Carlo, June 16-23. Charles Mereday, of Mereday's Fine Dining, will explore the Mediterranean and Ionian seas, from Venice to Barcelona, July 25-Aug. 5. Brian Roland, of Crave Culinaire, will travel the Adriatic, from Venice to Istanbul, Aug. 27-Sept. 7.
