Help these students save "Sesame Street" and other programs

SPECIAL TO FLORIDA WEEKLY

Here's the mission: "Save the Street." Here's the street: "Sesame Street," the venerable, much-heralded children's show that made its public TV debut on Nov. 10, 1969, and rendered Big Bird and Miss Piggy and Kermit the Frog and Oscar the Grouch part of the national lexicon.

WXEL — PBS for the Palm Beaches and Treasure Coast — takes that mission seriously, so seriously that Debra Tornaben, the station's vice president of development, brainstormed a project to ensure that the Street remains on the area's map. The project, as outlined in a prepared statement, seeks to "engage the next generation of supporters to help preserve public television locally."

Ms. Tornaben calls her idea "A Course for a Cause," which takes the form of a twice-weekly class at Lynn University in which 12 students work with Ms. Tornaben and Professor Gary Carlin to create an online "Save the Street" campaign. The class operates under Professor Carlin's direction. Dr. David L. Jaffe, dean at Lynn University and a member of the WXEL Board of Trustees, is also assisting with the project.

During their classes, held Tuesdays and Thursdays at 4:30 p.m. at the university, the students use Piggyback, a new fundraising online platform that they chose to launch the campaign. It's to save WXEL's other PBS Kids educational programming, in addition to "Sesame Street."

Each PBS station is responsible for its own funding. WXEL is required to pay for its PBS Kids and other PBS programming. The Lynn University students set a goal of raising $25,000 by Dec. 1. They are challenging community leaders to match their efforts. The campaign had raised $4,695 as of Oct. 28.

WXEL helps prepare local children for success in school and life, reaching more than 4.5 million people from North Miami to the Sebastian Inlet.

Crossing Borders

(Part I of a two-part series)

Earlier this year, the pot boiled over with heated, anti-immigrant rhetoric nationwide. Gov. Scott added his two cents from the campaign trail, promoting the introduction of copycat legislation to rival Arizona's over-the-top anti-immigration laws. Arizona laws permit a form of racial profiling based on how people "look" or sound. Authorities require anyone stopped or suspected of being in the country unlawfully to show proof of citizenship or immigration status. The laws are enormously controversial because factory trawling with such an industrial size net is bound to catch a boatload of guileless fish.

Still, there are those not easily dissuaded by the downside of state laws that presume you are guilty until proven innocent. Alabama zealots, not to be taken for sissies and always on the cusp of reinventing the Confederacy, enacted even tougher legislation. Its law requires all residents, including U.S. citizens, to carry a valid identification card. The penalty for failing to produce on-demand the I.D. is to go directly to jail — the unfortunate consequence suffered by a prominent German business executive on the job visiting the Alabama-based Mercedes-Benz factory.

Enforcement authorities threw back their catch with considerable embarrassment and national injury done to the state's business reputation.

Florida business and community leaders took notice. Florida is similar to Arizona — if you take away the humidity, about 50 inches of rainfall, and substitute Arizona's monsoons for the hurricane season. Tourism in Florida is a $7 billion a year industry. Like Arizona, Florida depends heavily on immigrants to sustain its economy in tourism and agriculture. When Arizona went into full combat mode to ferret out its illegal immigrants, the nativist mine sweep created a good deal of collateral damage. The state suffered a significant loss of tax revenues, as well as hit of nearly a billion dollars in tourist and convention business spending.

The anti-immigrant fervor infected Florida's legislature. Business and community leaders reacted with alarm, seeing a hemorrhage of dollars and a threat to the state's anemic economy. The tactics of enforcement raised significant human and civil rights issues, too. The pushback was swift and convincing. According to the National Immigration Council, the Florida Chamber of Commerce, big agriculture, law enforcement groups, advocates in support of the state's substantial immigrant population, and even Disney spoke out against the proposed legislation. The concern remains that, come January, the battle in the state legislature will begin anew.

Florida occupies a unique place in the nation's battle over comprehensive immigration reform: It is a poster child for the demographics of race transforming the nation; and immigrants are already an important part of the state's population and the political calculus for anyone aspiring to public office. This trend line is not going to change. According to the Migration Policy Institute, the total immigrant population in Florida went from over 24 percent during the 1990s, up to over 36 percent after 2000. Of the total immigrant population in Florida in 2011, 23.3 percent were born in Cuba, 7.8 percent from Mexico, 6.2 percent from Colombia and 4.6 percent from Jamaica. Palm Beach County is 20 percent Hispanic and Jupiter nearly 12 percent Hispanic, according to Census Bureau data.

President J.F.K. said in his book on immigration that, "Somehow, the difficult adjustments are made and people get down to the tasks of earning a living, raising a family, living with their neighbors, and, in the process, building a nation." This is the challenge of crossing borders that characterizes America as a nation of immigrants. Past research by The Center for Latin American Studies found Florida immigrants often had little support to help them overcome language and cultural barriers and establish themselves as community members. Communities commonly erect a virtual picket fence of policies and attitudes that isolate immigrants and prevent their integration into the community — but not always and not everywhere. The Town of Jupiter in Palm Beach County is one of the exceptions.

The story of how this came about begins several years ago. Numerous grant awards made by the New York-based Ford Foundation played an important role. Dr. Timothy Steigeng, Professor of Political Science, Chai-Humanities/Social Sciences, Wilkes Honors College-Florida Atlantic University, said the grants supported academic research exploring a variety of themes associated with immigrant communities, including Brazilian, Guatemalan, and Mexican immigrants in South Florida and elsewhere. According to Dr. Steigeng, the first Ford-funded study included the collection of survey data in the Town of Jupiter to assess the needs of the immigrant community as well as other fact-finding. The research findings had a dramatic impact locally. ■

OPINION*The defunding debacle

richLOWRY

Special to Florida Weekly

The Republican push to defund Obamacare defied the strategic wisdom of the ages.

“Avoid what is strong,” Sun Tzu advised, “to strike what is weak.” According to Machiavelli, “Prudence consists in knowing how to recognize the nature of the different dangers and in accepting the least bad as good.”

In contravention of all these axioms, the defunders stormed the barricades at their strongest point.

They exhibited no willingness to distinguish among bad options or appreciation for what was really achievable. At best, their approach was a high-risk, low-reward strategy. As it turns out, there wasn’t even any reward.

The shutdown fight has been interesting in its particulars but dull in its overall trajectory, which was so predictable that the news stories on the endgame almost could have been filed in advance.

Even bomb-throwers hesitated to light this fuse. Sen. Rand Paul never thought the shutdown was a good strategy. When the allegedly wholly impractical libertarian doubts your tactical judgment, it should be taken as a warning.

Sen. Ted Cruz, the very able point man for the defunders, kept the strategy afloat longer than most people would have expected, but he could never explain persuasively the path from a shutdown to a signing ceremony in the White House defunding the president’s signature piece of legislation.

A key part of the theory was that, in the heat of a shutdown, red-state Democrats would buckle and join the anti-Obamacare bandwagon. Given the near-certainty that Republicans would be blamed for the shutdown, this was always fanciful.

Republicans did the best they could during the shutdown. They passed rifle-shot bills out of the House funding specific functions of government that put Democrats in a tight spot. They highlighted the idiotic excesses of the National Park Service. They hit Democrats for their unwillingness to negotiate. But all of this amounted to damage control.

In the end, although polls showed the gap relatively narrow, more people blamed Republicans than Democrats.

As the anti-government party that was forcing the issue, the Republicans were always going to have trouble escaping blame. Gallup and Wall Street Journal/NBC polls showed the party’s favorability scraping bottom.

On top of all this, the party went into the fight divided, with the House Republicans most enthusiastic about the strategy foisting it on their leadership.

They proved again that, in the right circumstances, they can control the House Republican Conference, which gives them control of... the House Republican Conference.

An initial plan promoted by House Majority Leader Eric Cantor simply to force a vote on defunding in the Senate and then move to a clean continuing resolution was blasted by defunders as empty symbolism. After a few weeks of political pain, Republicans ended up in the same place: The House voted on a defunding provision that was quickly pushed aside by the Senate, and it was forced to accept an essentially clean continuing resolution.

Now, the same defunders who argued that Obamacare would be unrepeatable beginning Oct. 1 with the opening of the exchanges are vowing to fight on against the health-care law — as they should.

It will be a long fight, requiring not just passion and principle but also a little strategic wisdom. ■

Police brutality, mental illness and ‘The Memphis Model’

amyGOODMAN

Special to Florida Weekly

Elsa Cruz filed a federal lawsuit in New York this week, months after police shot her husband dead. Last May, Cruz called 911 asking for help with her husband, Samuel. She feared he hadn’t taken his medication while she was on vacation in her native country, the Philippines. Eight months, almost to the day, before Cruz was killed, not far away in Harlem, Hawa Bah called 911 to ask for medical help for her son, Mohamed. Rather than getting medical help, Mohamed Bah was confronted by the New York City Police Department. Within hours, he, too, was shot dead by police, hit eight times, once in the head. Mohamed’s sister, Oumou Bah, is suing the city of New York and unnamed police officers. While neither lawsuit will bring back the dead, they may prevent future deaths by forcing the New Rochelle Police Department and the NYPD to adopt an increasingly mainstream police practice for dealing with emotionally distressed people, called “The Memphis Model.”

In an exclusive interview Tuesday on the “Democracy Now!” news hour, I had the chance to interview Hawa Bah and Elsa Cruz. They were meeting each other in our studios for the first time.

Hawa Bah made annual visits to New York from the West African nation of Guinea to see her son, Mohamed. On her most recent visit, she was struck by Mohamed’s deteriorating condition. He had lost weight and had a cut above his eye. He was acting erratically. She suspected he was depressed, and wanted him to go to the hospital. Unable to convince him to go, she sought advice from friends, who suggested she call 911. She told me, “When I saw the police car, I see him, I say, ‘Hey, I don’t call police. I call an ambulance.’ He say, ‘No, ma’am, don’t worry. In New York here, when you call an ambulance, we will come first. We will look at the person and call an ambulance.’ He said, ‘Don’t worry, he will be OK.’”

The NYPD never told Mohamed Bah that they were there at his mother’s request. Hawa Bah told me, “He didn’t tell Mohamed, ‘Your mom say go to the hospital.’ He just say, ‘Mohamed, open the door. I came for you.’” She begged the police to let her talk to her son. Her attorney Randolph McLaughlin explained what happened next: “They broke the door down, tasered, beanbagged and shot him eight times. The last bullet went into his head and had stippling around the entry wound, which says that that shot, which probably took his life, was at close range.”

On May 26, Samuel Cruz, like Mohamed Bah, was acting erratically. Elsa called 911. She recounted to me what she told the operator: “There’s something wrong with my husband. He needs help. Can you please send us somebody to help me to assisting him to go to the hospital?” She said, “Your husband is harming anybody?” And I said, “No, ma’am, no. He’s a very nice person. He never harm anybody. Could you please send us somebody, or whatever?” And then, “OK.” The New Rochelle police arrived, dressed, as Elsa recalls, “for war.” They forced their way into the apartment and shot her husband dead.

Both the NYPD, in Bah’s case, and the New Rochelle police, in Cruz’s case, claim that the distressed individual lunged at officers with a knife. As Bah and Cruz’s other attorney, Mayo Bartlett, noted: “The thing that’s striking in these cases is the fact that the police are not called in response to a crime. There’s no rush. There’s no need to take such immediate

This is where “The Memphis Model” comes in. Maj. Sam Cochran is a retired officer with the Memphis, Tenn., police. In 1987, police responded to a man who was harming himself, and threatening others, with a knife. The police killed the man. Community outcry prompted the mayor to call for a solution. They developed the Crisis Intervention Team. Sam Cochran explained to me, “It’s a community program (with) three main partnerships: law enforcement, local mental-health services providers and also advocacy.” CITs put a trained officer or mental-health professional on the scene, to de-escalate a situation. Since its inception in Memphis, it has been adopted in more than 2,500 communities in 40 states, as well as internationally.

The Cruz and Bah families are suing, demanding that the New Rochelle Police Department and the NYPD adopt CIT policies. As attorney Randolph McLaughlin summarized: “The police say the exact same thing in Bah and in Cruz: ‘He came at us with a knife, and we killed him.’ ... What was their plan? Did they have a plan when they broke in the door? Why did they break in the door? Why didn’t they slow things down? Why did they aggravate the situation? In fact, the officers in all of these cases have not been trained in crisis intervention. They’ve been trained in the use of force — deadly force. And if that’s all the officer has at his disposal, he will use it.” ■

Dog-proof living

Sometimes it's necessary to rearrange your home to protect both your belongings and your dog

BY DR. MARTY BECKER AND
KIM CAMPBELL THORNTON

Universal Uclick

Every few years, when we get a new puppy or adopt an adult dog or have a foster dog spend some time with us, I have to dog-proof our home and learn some new tricks about interacting with particular dogs. You might think that I would have dog-proofing down by now, but each dog has been attracted to different items or has done things it didn't occur to the other dogs to try. Our current "new dog" is Kibo, a Cavalier King Charles spaniel we're fostering until he is adopted.

One of the first things Kibo taught me was to put away my shoes and to close doors. None of our other dogs have been chewers, but Kibo likes to examine things with his mouth in the fervent hope that they will be edible. He has gone into the closet to chew on my leather sandals (caught before he did any damage) and explored the walk-in shower. There he found and carried away a plastic razor, which, fortunately, he abandoned in the hallway instead of swallowing. He is also fond of a tiny, gold papier-mache box. He hasn't chewed it up or swallowed it, which he could easily do, but he likes to take it off the side table and lie with it. It's now out of reach, too.

Despite his short stature, Kibo tries hard to be a countertop surfer. We've learned not to hold or place food at any height where he could jump up and reach it. Our other dogs are also highly food-oriented, but they wouldn't dream of snatching food out of our hands. Kibo does more than dream it — he tries it. I always push the chair in if I get up from the table because I can tell that the idea of jumping onto it to get at the food is running through his mind.

If you are living with a Kibo of your own, here are some tips to keep your belongings safe, your house in one piece and your dog out of trouble.

■ Use a crate. When you cannot supervise your dog, even if it's just for a few minutes, put him in the crate to prevent any misbehavior. Kibo hangs out in his crate on his own and he's happy to go into it when asked because he knows he will get a treat.

■ Tether your dog. That means he is leashed at your side at all times. This is a great way to learn the signals a new dog or puppy gives when he needs to go potty. It keeps him under your watchful eye so he can't get into mischief and helps build a bond between you.

■ Get down at dog's-eye level to see what might attract the dog's attention. Electrical cords, small trash containers and dangling dish towels all can pose threats. Bundle cords and encase them in tough plastic covers, put trash containers out of reach, and keep dish towels in drawers if your dog is attracted to them. Chair and table legs often look good to chew. Coat them with Bitter Apple spray to deter taste-testing (try it first in an inconspicuous area to make sure it doesn't damage the finish). Make sure no sharp edges or choking hazards are within a dog's reach.

■ Most important, never underestimate the intelligence and inventiveness of dogs. They can learn to open doors, climb up on counters and desks using other pieces of furniture as launch pads, and crawl under or wiggle into places you've never imagined they would go. Be smart and put away or block access to valuable, fragile or dangerous items and secure cabinets with childproof locks. ■

Jewish Federation of PB County names senior vice president for planned giving and endowments

SPECIAL TO FLORIDA WEEKLY

Reinforcing its commitment to plan for the future needs of the Jewish community, the Jewish Federation of Palm Beach County has named Andrew Fradkin as the senior vice president for planned giving and endowments. The essence of Mr. Fradkin's role will be to help people fulfill their dreams and visions of a vital and vibrant Jewish Palm Beach community. With extensive experience in the legal and not-for-profit sectors, Mr. Fradkin will bring strategic planning insight and counsel to the role so that benefactors reap the maximum return on their investments.

"The Jewish Federation of Palm Beach County wants to ensure that resources are available to help our community expand and grow, both today and tomorrow," Federation president Sandy Baklor said in a prepared statement. "Andrew will help us accomplish that goal by making legacy giving a central aspect of our efforts."

Prior to joining the staff of the Federation, Mr. Fradkin served as chief policy officer and director of funds and foundations at the Jewish Community Federation of San Francisco. An attorney licensed in California and New Jersey, he served as general counsel to two public and several private Silicon Valley-Israeli companies. Prior to moving to California, he was a partner in a New Jersey law firm, where he specialized in federal tax matters with an emphasis on estate and gift planning, business counseling and the resolution of civil and criminal tax disputes. Earlier in his career, he was a trial attorney with the Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service in Chicago.

"For 50 years this Federation has been nurturing its role of caring and community involvement, and has significantly impacted the lives of hundreds of thousands of people," CEO David Phillips said in a prepared statement. "As we continue on a path of success, growth and expansion, we must harness the power and potential of our Jewish legacy giving program. We need to work very hard today to amass the funds that will pay dividends for our community in the future."

Mr. Fradkin received his BA and JD from Vanderbilt University and his LLM in taxation from NYU. For several years, he has been an adjunct professor of law at Santa Clara University Law School, teaching federal income tax. His community service endeavors include international president of Alpha Epsilon Pi Fraternity (1999-2001); executive committee and board member of the JCC of MetroWest NJ; and board member, co-president and treasurer of the Ronald C. Wornick Jewish Day School. Fradkin and his wife, Stacy, have two daughters, Rebecca and Joey.

Annual Take Flight Awards Gala Nov. 2 at Wycliffe Golf & Country Club

SPECIAL TO FLORIDA WEEKLY

Faith*Hope*Love*Charity Inc. hosts the 7th Annual Take Flight Awards Gala on Saturday, Nov. 2, at Wycliffe Golf & Country Club in Wellington.

The event is a tribute to those who answer the call of service. This year, the Marines of Lima Company and thousands more who have given their lives for their country will be honored.

In a prepared statement, the charity said that every day the United States loses a serviceman or woman, often times with low to no media coverage.

While many are focusing on our government's medical, intelligence, and financial issues; it is important that those who sacrifice daily are never forgotten or properly acknowledged.

With that in mind, this year's Take Flight Awards will salute those who have assisted our veterans, active duty members, and their families through Stand Down House.

The black-tie dinner, dance and silent auction will provide attendees an opportunity to experience the traveling national memorial and get a sneak peak at a new community designed to support those who have served.

At 11 a.m. Nov. 2, hours before that evening's benefit gala, a 75-plus motorcycle escort will lead the tractor/trailer carrying the Lima Company Memorial into the Wycliffe Clubhouse. Organizers say it will be a sight to be seen.

The V.I.P. reception begins at 7:15 p.m. and the award ceremony at 8 p.m. with dinner and dancing.

The installation featured is "The Eyes of Freedom," The Lima Company Memorial, created by artist Anita Miller, consisting of portraits of the 23 fallen Marines from Lima 3/25. The Lima Company outfit sustained more casualties than any other deployed military group.

Wycliffe Charities support FHLC Inc., and to date Wycliffe Golf & Country Club residents have donated more than 2,000 pieces of "previously loved clothing" to the veterans and families involved with the Faith*Hope*Love*Charity organization.

Stand Down House, owned and operated by Faith*Hope*Love*Charity Inc. assists homeless male veterans who are struggling, who have lost their homes and their ability to lead productive lives due to mental and physical illness, addictions, and/or other issues.

The program helps them regain their independence and lives through transitional living, a multi-tiered program, and collaboration with government agencies, veteran service organizations, and the community.

For tickets, see standown.org.

Wycliffe Golf & Country Club is a private residential golf community offering an active lifestyle in a beautiful resort style residential community to its members. ■

ABOVE: The Maltz Jupiter Theatre's Green Room, named for Roe Green, will be a gathering spot for club level guests. The theater also anticipates using the room as a rental space for special events and for cabaret performances.

MALTZ

of its lobby, add seats and offer a peek inside the regional theater, South Florida's largest.

The Green Room, named for philanthropist Roe Green, who kicked in $1.5 million toward $2.5 million in renovations that include 62 premium seats in the existing second-floor space to create a private upstairs club level. The second floor renovation includes a private entrance, glass elevator, expanded lobby. It truly is a transformation that visitors will see as soon as they step inside the door.

If they look up, they will see the glassed-in second-story space that is The Green Room. In the past, banners for the current season of shows here hung there. Look to the right, and there now is a large, contemporary box office space that is open to the lobby, much like a hotel concierge desk.

Producing Artistic Director Andrew Kato said he had been sneaking multiple peeks each day he was in town. But most of the main benefactors of the project have not seen it yet because they have been away for the summer.

Roe Green was to arrive in Florida the day before the Oct. 31 ribbon cutting at the theater, timed to coincide with opening night for "Dial M for Murder."

"I definitely will try to get over before the 31st, but don't know if that will be possible. The whole thing might be a surprise!!!!" she wrote in an email. "I hear that it is just beautiful!"

The same might be said for Lynn and George Bovenizer, who named the club-level seating chamber.

"We left the middle of May and are coming back (Oct. 26). We have not seen any of the work in progress," Mrs. Bovenizer said by phone from Pennington, N.J. "We'll be there next Thursday night."

They were not alone.

"Needless to say, we haven't been able to visit the new renovation, but from what pictures we've seen, it appears to be a super addition to the theater's facility," Ellen and William Stamler wrote in an email from Kentucky. "We're looking forward to seeing the real thing."

The Stamlers, who are providing furniture for the club level, wrote that they have been patrons of the Maltz since it first opened, and have enjoyed such shows as "Same Time Next Year," "Man of La Mancha" and "La Cage aux Folles."

"We enjoyed the Burt Reynolds Dinner Theatre," they wrote. "We were disappointed when it folded, and had hoped that Maltz would be a worthy successor. We weren't disappointed."

The work on the Maltz comes a year after the theater's namesakes, Milton and Tamar Maltz, committed $7 million to boost the theater's endowment to $10 million.

It is an impressive level of support for the theater, which celebrated its 10th anniversary season last year.

"We believe in having culture in our area, but also we really admire that they're doing programs for children," Mrs. Bovenizer said, adding she was especially looking forward to seeing such musicals as "Annie" and "The King and I" this season.

And it doesn't hurt that even with extra seats that boost Maltz's capacity to 617, the space still is intimate.

"Because it's small and intimate, there's not a bad seat in the house," Mrs. Bovenizer said. "It's small enough. We don't go to New York anymore because I'm just not into crowds."

Patrons who use the club level can bypass the lobby area and go directly upstairs to The Green Room, which connects to the open space above the mezzanine level, where those 62 premium seats will be installed. That space once was home to Burt Reynolds' private box in the building's 1970s-'80s heyday as the actor's dinner theater.

The farthest seat from the stage still is about 75 feet from the stage. In recent times, the theater's staff has used the space as a vantage point for shooting promotional photos of the productions onstage.

Preserving that intimacy was crucial to the team of architects who designed the project.

But they wanted to take that to the next level.

"The idea of creating these VIP seating areas was that they had to be part of the room yet distinct enough that they feel different," said Mike Nelson, a partner in Designel, the architectural firm that has designed about 70 performing arts spaces, including the Kravis Center and Palm Beach Dramaworks.

Back in Burt Reynolds' day, the boxes in what is now the club level were glassed off.

"I think the former arrangement with boxes or zones of area with sliding glass doors is very unusual for a proper theater," Mr. Nelson said.

A decade or so ago, the auditorium itself was reconfigured, and that upstairs space had been used for storage.

But the design by Mr. Nelson and his Designel partner, Gino DeSantis, raised the roof of the space and moved all of the theater's administrative and marketing offices upstairs.

"We were able to elevate the roof in that area to give it a quite grand space. Even with an event on the ground level, people are not going to recognize the theater," he said.

The Green Room is a light-filled space. A grand piano is to hold court in one corner.

The space can be used for private events and for cabaret performances — actress/singer Avery Sommers is to give a concert there this spring.

The eastern wall of windows offers views of the golf course and buildings beyond — no ocean view, the staff laughs.

Upstairs and downstairs, that glass façade has another important role — allowing people driving along State Road A1A to see patrons having a good time at the theater and perhaps be inspired to check it out themselves.

"I think one of the fundamentals that needed to be corrected in such a significant change was to allow it to have exposure to AIA and allow more daylight in and to improve the flow of patrons during intermission," Mr. Nelson said.

Patrons will not be the only beneficiaries of the changes.

"I think the way the offices are grouped and will work together, everyone is going to be happy. There was a lot of space that just sat defunct for how many years," Mr. Nelson said.

The lines to the restrooms have been long, going back to the building's Burt Reynolds days, and the architects addressed that.

The new, much larger restrooms have been pushed to the back of the building, and there are now hallways into each space so lines no longer wind out into the lobby. There also is a stand-alone family restroom.

"I think the people's movement through the lobby is going to be such a relief," Mr. Nelson predicted.

The designers gutted the original restroom and office space, then bumped the façade of the building out 18 feet, roughly doubling the size of the lobby and the bar, which now fronts that bank of windows.

"In a functioning theater, lobby space becomes very much a gathering space, not only for a performance but for rentals," he said.

In the old space, lines into the restrooms frequently blocked access to the bar, so revenues there should increase.

"There is money to be made in concessions," Mr. Nelson said.

That money will be key to the theater's growth going forward.

After all, the design team, plus Mr. Kato, Finance Director Marie Dreher and General Manager David Harris, worked together to get the theater the most bang for its buck.

"I think it's a very a lot of really dramatic change for a very conservative budget," Mr. Nelson said.

And fundraising seems to come as easily for the Maltz as the dramas and musicals it presents.

"The Maltz is fortunate to have a great success in fundraising, but it's just a product of just how great they are," he said. ■

Resource Depot launches programs with Nov. 2 relocation

SPECIAL TO FLORIDA WEEKLY

Do-It-Yourself-ers and wanna-be DIY-ers are invited to a "REopen House" hosted by Resource Depot to launch its expanded DIY workshop and shopping programs.

Founded in 1999, Resource Depot is a Palm Beach County nonprofit whose mission is to benefit local educators and their students through the practice of creative reuse. The organization collects donated materials – anything clean, safe and reusable with a classroom in mind – and makes resources available to teachers for use in their classrooms and programs. As of this November, those resources will also be made available to local families and artists.

The debut REopen House takes place on Saturday, Nov. 2, at Resource Center's new Florida Avenue location, one block west of U.S. 1 off Belvedere Road.

The event will run from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. It features gifts for visitors who join or give a membership that day and a scheduled 10:30 appearance by Ronald McDonald.

Resource Depot will offer shopping memberships that allow teachers, workers of nonprofit community organizations and families access to free art and education supplies; onsite DIY workshops; and an Eco Chic Boutique with fun fashions (created from reused or otherwise eco-friendly materials) by local artists and volunteers. The organization encourages donating "safe, clean reusables" from home or business.

"Resource Depot has, and will always be, an important resource for teachers, but their new programs are so exciting because they reach out directly to families in our community who have children and are looking for ways to give them new and meaningful experiences without spending a lot of money," Ashley Morse, editor and publisher of the Palm Beach Gardens-Jupiter and Wellington-Royal Palm Beach editions of Macaroni Kid, said in a prepared statement. Macaroni Kid is a weekly local newsletter of kid-friendly events and activities.

"Parents are such important educators in a child's life. Getting involved with Resource Depot not only provides a chance to be artistic and creative, but also to contribute to something in the community and help our environment," Ms. Morse said in her prepared statement.

Resource Depot offers a schedule of DIY workshops for those interested in learning innovative ways to "turn waste into wonder," as well as hands-on creative programs for schools around the county.

Norway's battle against chaos

Norwegian public television (NRK), which introduced the now-legendary continuous, live log-burning show (12 hours long, with "color commentary" on the historical and cultural importance of fire), scheduled a new program for this week in its appeal to serenity (labeled "Slow TV"). On Nov. 1, NRK was to televise live, for five hours, an attempt to break the world record for producing a sweater, from shearing the sheep to spinning the wool and knitting the garment (current record: 4:51, by Australians). (In addition to the log, NRK viewers have been treated to live cams on a salmon-fishing boat and, for five days, on a cruise ship.) Said an NRK journalist, "You would think it's boring television, but we have quite good ratings for these programs." ■

The entrepreneurial spirit

■ Extract of cockroach is a delicacy among some Chinese, believed able to miraculously reduce inflammation, defy aging and cure tuberculosis, cancer and cirrhosis. Quartz reported in August that Yunnan province is a Silicon Valley-type business center, where pulverized roaches can sell for the equivalent of about $89 a pound, and five pharmaceutical companies have contracts with ranches that have formed the Sichuan Treasure Cockroach Farming Cooperative. (In August, a start-up farm in Jiangsu province was, police suspect, vandalized, allowing at least a million cockroaches being prepared for market to flee to adjacent neighborhoods.)

■ Hipster Haven: Two fearless entrepreneurs inaugurated services recently in faux-fashionable Brooklyn, N.Y. Lucy Sun, a Columbia University economics major, began seeking work as a $30-an-hour "book therapist," to help readers find the "right" book to read or give as a gift, with attention to clients' "specific situations." In Brooklyn's Greenpoint neighborhood in September, the stylish Eat restaurant began reserving certain nights' meals to be experienced in total silence. On opening night, a Wall Street Journal reporter noted one throat-clearing and a muffled sneeze, but barely any other human sound. Some diners were won over; another said it felt like "being 50 and married."

■ It's expensive to go broke in America. Detroit, which most acknowledge acted wisely in filing for bankruptcy protection in July (in the face of debts estimated to be at least $18 billion), will nonetheless be on the hook for bankruptcy legal fees that could total $60 million under current contracts (according to an October New York Times report), plus various expenses, such as the $250,000 to Christie's auction house to price and sell some assets. A fee examiner has been hired to keep the expenses in line, but he charges $600 an hour. ■

Medical marvels

■ A recent medical journal reported that a 49-year-old man in Brazil said he had recovered from a stroke except that the damage to his brain (in a "subcortical region" associated with higher-level thinking) has caused him to develop "pathological generosity" toward others. A Duke University neurologist told London's Daily Mail that stroke-induced personality changes (such as hoarding) are common, but that this particular change appears unique. Doctors reported in the journal Neurocase that even with medication, this patient's beneficence was unabated after two years.

■ Blood clots can be especially dangerous, often requiring urgent, harshly invasive open-heart surgery to remove the clot before it can be fatal, but a team from UCLA Medical School reported breathlessly in September that a "minimally invasive," cutting-edge machine worked just as well: a vacuum cleaner. When a 62-year-old man arrived at an emergency room with deep vein thrombosis, AngioVac lines were inserted in the leg and neck and sucked out the 24-inch-long clot. The patient was back home and full of energy a week later. ■

Weird animals

■ A "scatological force field" is how a Reuters reporter in September described the way ordinary house termites are able to increasingly resist extermination. They use their own feces to build their nests, and the pathogens seem to form a protective shield that attacks unfriendly bacteria trying to invade the nests.

■ "Pig Drinks 18 Pints and Has Fight With Cow" read one August headline from Port Hedland, West Australia, after rampaging wild pigs stole and drank 18 beers from a campsite. International Business Times, summarizing recent research in September, noted that moose, especially, are attracted by fermenting apples; that prairie voles are prominent social drinkers (consuming much more available alcohol when other voles are around); and that African elephants often turn violent to secure the fermenting fruit of the marula tree (although the elephant would require 1,400 pieces of fruit to generate the seven gallons of alcohol that — if consumed all at once — would match humans' legal limit for driving). ■

Perspective

Americans frequently cite the rigorous, above-board testing of prescription drugs as one of government's most important functions, and health insurance companies use such seals of approval in policy-coverage decisions. However, some consumers seem to prefer unorthodox, untested, unregulated products and, backed by lobbyists for Complementary and Alternative

Medicine, are challenging insurers for "discriminating" against these "drugs," especially in the game-changing rules of the new Affordable Care Act. A Forbes.com columnist explained in August what would happen if CAM prevails: "You could start offering dried bird poop for arthritis, call it 'avian nature therapy,' and if an insurer won't pay for it, you can sue." ■

COMMENTARY

Vessel of holiness

rwilliams@floridaweekly.com

Whistleblowers get called a lot of things, many of them unprintable here.

But the most powerful single characterization I've ever heard came from Rabbi Jeremy Barras at Temple Beth El last Saturday evening, on the west coast in Lee County.

Rabbi Barras had just concluded the weekly Shabbat by incanting the havdala with wine and candlelight — the holy day's sign-off prayer, if you will — when he turned to introduce Dr. Robert Hilliard to an audience of Jews and gentiles alike.

Hilliard had agreed to speak to a chapter of Jewish War Veterans along with a host of others, including me, after a showing of the 2002 documentary film about him, "Displaced: Miracle at St. Ottilien," by John Michalczyk. The film is based on Hilliard's 1996 memoir, "Surviving the Americans: The Continued Struggle of the Jews After Liberation" (available at Amazon.com).

An author, professor emeritus from Emerson College in Boston and decorated combat veteran who practices no formal religion, Hilliard is now 88.

"You are," the rabbi told him over the heads of the crowd, "a vessel of holiness."

That immense peal of praise might be the rabbinical equivalent of the Medal of Honor, and it was based on the fact that then 19-year-old Private First Class Robert Hilliard, wounded in and after the Battle of the Bulge, became one of the most successful whistleblowers of all time, at least if lives are the measure.

He and the late Ed Herman, a fellow Army PFC who later became an international financier before retiring to Palm Beach, saved thousands of lives in the weeks and months following the German surrender on May 8, 1945.

But ironically that history of two young men — soldiers who used their wiles and their immense determination to do good by exposing callous American misbehavior to President Harry Truman and Gen. Dwight Eisenhower — has become a near non-history.

Why?

The story does not appear in standard history books, although it occurred at a Benedictine abbey converted to a hospital for refugees only about 30 miles from the brutal German camp, Dachau, and PFCs Hilliard and Herman personally saved many of the emaciated souls who had somehow avoided execution there.

The story doesn't even appear in the massive collection of "New York Times Front Pages, 1851-2012," where editors left out their own front page, dated Sept. 30, 1945.

There, a detailed report was topped by this headline: "President Orders Eisenhower To End New Abuse of Jews... Likens Our Treatment To That of the Nazis."

Such is the fete of one of the most honorable whistleblowers ever to sound out an injustice.

Here's what happened: The Americans let many refugees sicken, starve and die between mid-May and late fall of 1945. Army commanders withheld food and clothing from camps where the starving and desperate had staggered, on foot and wandering down the German roads, after liberation.

Fearing disease, military police put the refugees behind barbed wire. In more fortunate camps, Army officers administered food at a per-person rate of about 600 calories per day, which was the standing order from Gen. Eisenhower.

In some locations, American troops even traded food, clothing and medicine for favors from women behind the wire.

That's all on the one hand, and documented.

On the other hand, PFCs Robert Hilliard and Ed Herman blew the whistle on it.

They also stole food from their own mess halls, bought out the Post Exchange store where GIs shopped for luxury items, and snuck that largesse into St. Ottilien, past military police guarding the place.

Then, in the 1945 version of an Edward Snowden action, the two young men bribed the printer on the base newspaper where Hilliard worked. They ran off 600 copies of a vivid letter he wrote accusing the Americans of their own genocide, and asking for help. Finally, they mailed those letters past Army censors to every sympathetic person and organization they knew of on the eastern seaboard of the United States.

A copy eventually reached the president, who investigated. The senior investigator even visited Hilliard's mother, and read the personal letters Hilliard had sent home to her about what he saw.

That ultimately ended one of our most disreputable hours. By late fall, Army trucks carrying some of the 1,400 packages of 40, 50 or 60 pounds, mailed from American cities and towns to St. Ottilien, were delivering the goods to the desperate.

As many as 10,000 may ultimately have been saved there — and American policy toward the displaced changed everywhere, too.

It was an immense feat for a teenager with no power, no backing, and nothing but brains, heart and guts, and he was never officially celebrated for it.

"In a true sense Ed and I were whistleblowers," Hilliard told me the day after his visit to Temple Beth El. "Some GIs called us unAmerican and traitors for criticizing our country's policies and actions."

But the two young men were lucky. "If this had occurred today," Hilliard acknowledges, "as whistleblowers we'd either be in jail, or seeking asylum in Russia."

Fortunately for all of us, he is still here to stand witness to what happened.

Without remembering — without telling and retelling what happened — we Americans, all of us, become cultural and ethical amputees. ■

League of Women Voters hosts climate change presentation

SPECIAL TO FLORIDA WEEKLY

The League of Women Voters of Palm Beach County is hosting a free multimedia presentation and discussion entitled "Climate Change: How Will It Impact What You Love?"

Co-sponsored by Palm Beach State College, the public event — to be held at State West at the college's Lake Worth campus on Thursday, Nov. 21 from 6 to 8 p.m. — will focus on the impact that climate change will have on our water and food supply, homes and property, children and grandchildren, personal health and wealth, extreme weather and the environment. The campus is at 4200 South Congress Ave. in Lake Worth.

Attendees can learn about the four counties in Southeast Florida that are banding together to plan, mitigate and adapt to the detrimental results of climate change, including public health issues, polluted water supply, extreme weather conditions and financial implications. The public also will hear from elected officials on local and state plans regarding the expected negative impacts from climate change, and what communities and individuals should be doing right now to prepare.

The League of Women Voters of Palm Beach County is a nonpartisan political organization of women and men of all ages and backgrounds, encouraging informed and active participation in government through education and advocacy. ## The Singles Scene Precision Dating

Love after a Heartbreak

Question: I am 59 and single for the first time in 29 years. I want to find love again but I'm terrified of rejection ... and insincere people. I want to throw in the towel and give up on love. Can you help me?

Answer: You must NEVER give up on love. If you are not living with the highest intentions to love and be loved ... you are dying ... you are aging ... and true happiness will evade you. This is not a hard problem if you are in the right place at the right time around nice people ... which is what we create for our clientele. I have seen the life come back into the faces of my men and women ... in my office daily and my events.

Romantic love is essential to our being. Believe and know that he or she is on his or her way to you ... and certainly I can help with the details. I hope to meet you in person very soon! "When in doubt, love more."

Sick of Online Dating

Question: I'm a 55-year-old male and am tired of doing online dating. It's a waste of my time.

Answer: That's EASY! Join a club that does all the work for you. We pre-screen all of our members making sure they are "date-worthy", truly single, and ready. Online dating is either free or cheap cheap cheap ... so you end up meeting people with all kinds of agendas. Why put yourself at risk mentally and physically and financially? Play it safe and Pay it Forward with an exclusive club, like Precision Dating, that is sure to weed out the good from the bad. In the long run you will absolutely save yourself time money -- and most importantly -- heartache! We take all the photos ourselves too ... so you know the pictures are current and accurate ... and the lady you meet is exactly the woman you selected ... not her daughter or a picture of her from high-school.

Kelly Leary is the Co-Founder of Precision Dating. She has 22 years in the dating industry and a master's degree in psychology. She has been featured on the ABC News, Talk Radio, Palm Beach Post, and Vero Beach 32963 Magazine. She pre-screens all of her clients first. Clients are photographed and background checked. No computer needed! Her club services clientele from age 28 to 78 with some exceptions! For more information, please call (561) 577-DATE in the Palm Beaches. RSVP at www.precisiondating.com.

University of Florida researcher Jennifer Stamps demonstrates the peanut butter test. Researchers have found that patients in the early stages of Alzheimer's disease have an asymmetry in their ability to detect smells, with the left nostril becoming weaker than the right.

Peanut butter, no jelly

Research shows pantry staple can help diagnose Alzheimer's

THE UNIVERSITY OF FLORIDA

A dollop of peanut butter and a ruler can be used to confirm a diagnosis of early stage Alzheimer's disease, University of Florida Health researchers have found.

Jennifer Stamps, a graduate student in the UF McKnight Brain Institute Center for Smell and Taste, and her colleagues reported the findings of a small pilot study in the Journal of the Neurological Sciences.

Ms. Stamps came up with the idea of using peanut butter to test for smell sensitivity while she was working with Kenneth Heilman, the James E. Rooks distinguished professor of neurology and health psychology in the UF College of Medicine's department of neurology. She noticed while shadowing in Dr. Heilman's clinic that patients were not tested for their sense of smell. The ability to smell is associated with the first cranial nerve and is often one of the first things to be affected in cognitive decline.

Ms. Stamps also had been working in the laboratory of Linda Bartoshuk, the William P. Bushnell presidentially endowed professor in the College of Dentistry's department of community dentistry and behavioral sciences and director of human research in the Center for Smell and Taste.

"Dr. Heilman said, 'If you can come up with something quick and inexpensive, we can do it,'" Ms. Stamps says.

She thought of peanut butter because, she adds, it is a "pure odorant" that is only detected by the olfactory nerve and is easy to access.

Patients who were coming to the clinic for testing also sat down with a clinician, 14 grams of peanut butter (about 1 tablespoon) and a metric ruler. The patient closed his or her eyes and mouth and blocked one nostril. The clinician opened the peanut butter container and held the ruler next to the open nostril while the patient breathed normally. The clinician then moved the peanut butter up the ruler one centimeter at a time during the patient's exhale until the person could detect an odor. The distance was recorded and, after a 90-second delay, the procedure repeated on the other nostril.

The clinicians running the test did not know the patients' diagnoses, which were not usually confirmed until weeks after the initial clinical testing.

The scientists found that patients in the early stages of Alzheimer's disease had a dramatic difference in detecting odor between the left and right nostril; the left nostril was impaired and did not detect the smell until the peanut butter was an average of 10 centimeters closer to the nose than the right nostril had made the detection in patients with Alzheimer's disease.

This was not the case in patients with other kinds of dementia; instead, these patients had either no differences in odor detection between nostrils or the right nostril was worse at detecting odor than

Of the 24 patients tested who had mild cognitive impairment, which sometimes signals Alzheimer's disease and sometimes turns out to be something else, about 10 patients showed a left nostril impairment and 14 patients did not. The researchers said more studies must be conducted to fully understand the implications.

The future of peanut butter

"At the moment, we can use this test to confirm diagnosis," Ms. Stamps says. "But we plan to study patients with mild cognitive impairment to see if this test might be used to predict which patients are going to get Alzheimer's disease."

Ms. Stamps and Dr. Heilman point out that this test could be used by clinics that don't have access to the personnel or equipment to run other, more elaborate tests required for a specific diagnosis, which can lead to targeted treatment.

One of the first places in the brain to degenerate in people with Alzheimer's disease is the front part of the temporal lobe that evolved from the smell system, and this portion of the brain is involved in forming new memories.

"We see people with all kinds of memory disorders," Dr. Heilman says. Many tests to confirm a diagnosis of Alzheimer's disease or other dementias can be time-consuming, costly or invasive. "This can become an important part of the evaluation process." ■

Jewish family service presents health workshops

SPECIAL TO FLORIDA WEEKLY

The Alpert Jewish Family & Children's Service presents "My Health, My Life" free workshops to assist chronically ill older adults to self-manage their chronic health conditions.

The workshops are facilitated by two peer leaders, one or both of whom have chronic illnesses themselves.

Palm Beach Gardens Medical Center sponsors 'Coffees with the Professor'

SPECIAL TO FLORIDA WEEKLY

For the 11th consecutive year, Palm Beach Gardens Medical Center is sponsoring the 2013-2014 'Coffee with the Professor' series: six sessions that span the school year.

The sessions – three in the fall, three in the spring – are hosted at the FAU campus in Jupiter and consist of 20-minute talks by a Florida Atlantic University faculty member, followed by a question-and-answer session. The sessions take place at 8 a.m. on the third Friday of each month and are held in the campus dining hall at 5333 Parkside Dr. in Jupiter.

"We are proud to sponsor these lectures for the FAU community," Larry Coomes, CEO of Palm Beach Gardens Medical Center, said in a prepared statement. "Students, alumni, staff and others will receive the opportunity to interact and educate each other on a topic of interest."

The idea for the 'Coffee' series originated in 2002 and debuted the following year. It was previously sponsored by several local community groups. "Without the generous support of the Medical Center, we would not be able to host this free event for the public," FAU noted in a prepared statement.

This year's first speaker was Dr. Ken Dawson-Scully, assistant professor of biological sciences in the Charles E. Schmidt College of Science. His topic was "From Genes to Drugs: Using Fruit Flies to Discover."

Scheduled dates for the remainder of the academic year are: Nov. 15, Jan. 17, Feb. 21 and March 21.

The event is free and open to the public. Coffee and continental breakfast will be served. Seating is limited and reservations are required. For more information, call 561-799-8105 or email kyates3@fau.edu.

Palm Beach Gardens Medical Center is a 199-bed acute care hospital serving the medical and healthcare needs of Palm Beach County and the Treasure Coast for more than 43 years. Palm Beach Gardens Medical Center was the first hospital in Palm Beach County to perform open-heart surgery, and has since remained one of the area's leading heart hospitals, having performed more than 15,000 open-heart surgeries. Palm Beach Gardens Medical Center now offers the revolutionary heart procedure, TAVR (Transcatheter Aortic Valve Replacement) for patients suffering from severe aortic stenosis. Palm Beach Gardens Medical Center offers comprehensive cardiac care, orthopedics, diagnostic imaging, general surgery, outpatient surgery and 24 hour-emergency care.

The hospital has earned many awards and designations, including being named by Healthgrades as one of "America's 100 Best Hospitals for Stroke Care™" for two years in a row (2012-2013) and has been a five-star recipient for Coronary Interventional Procedure for eleven years in a row (2003-2013). Palm Beach Gardens Medical Center also received the American Heart Association Get With The Guidelines Gold Plus Award for stroke and earned a Chest Pain Center Accreditation from the Society of Chest Pain Centers.

Barbara Sufas Noble joins Max Planck Florida Institute

SPECIAL TO FLORIDA WEEKLY

Barbara Sufas Noble has been appointed vice president for Advancement at the Max Planck Florida Institute for Neuroscience (MPFI). She will be instrumental in developing and implementing MPFI's strategic plan for future growth and will contribute to the scope of its external relations efforts. Ms. Noble also will serve as president of the Max Planck Florida Foundation, which supports the Institute's scientific research as well as its education programs through private philanthropic support from individuals, corporations and foundations across the United States. She also will oversee all of the foundation's fundraising programs.

"As the Max Planck Florida Institute continues to establish itself as a world-class research center, Barbara joins us at a pivotal time," George Elmore, chairman of the Foundation's board of trustees, said in a prepared statement. "Her extensive fundraising experience and skills, exemplary reputation and network of professional and personal relationships in South Florida are key to achieving major scientific advancements here in the future."

Ms. Noble was previously with The Scripps Research Institute, where she led the establishment of the La Jolla, Calif.-based organization's expansion into Florida. Most recently, she served as the director of external affairs for Scripps Florida and worked extensively with faculty and philanthropic leadership to achieve fundraising goals and build relationships with donors, corporate sponsors, and business and community leaders. Prior to Scripps, Ms. Noble was the president of BSN Enterprises, a consulting firm for nonprofit organizations, public services providers and governmental agencies, and served as COO and director of marketing services for the Palm Beach County Cultural Council.

Ms. Noble has been honored numerous times for her volunteerism and leadership. She has been named one of the Most Influential Business Women of South Florida by the South Florida Business Journal; received the Woman of Distinction Award for Volunteer Service to Women and Children by Soroptimist International; and was a finalist for Woman Volunteer of the Year by the Junior League of the Palm Beaches. Ms. Noble is currently the president and founding board member of Western Academy Charter School; board member and former chairman for more than six years of the Citizen Advisory Before joining Max Planck, Barbara Sufas Noble worked at Scripps Research Institute and at BSN Enterprises.

Council for the Solid Waste Authority of Palm Beach County; board member of the Forum Club of the Palm Beaches; and a long-time member of the Business Development Board of Palm Beach County.

"We are delighted to have Barbara join the Max Planck family and look forward to having her exceptional experience and leadership at the helm of our fundraising campaign and spreading the word about the important work being done at the Institute," Dr. David Fitzpatrick, scientific director and CEO of MPFI, said in a prepared statement.

The Max Planck Florida Institute for Neuroscience is the first institute outside of Europe for the Max Planck Society, Germany's best-known and most successful research organization. It has more than 80 institutes, each focused on a different scientific theme. Located adjacent to Florida Atlantic University's MacArthur campus in Jupiter, the 100,000-square-foot Institute formally opened in December 2012 and includes 57,600 square feet of research and laboratory space. There are currently 112 employees and nine distinct research groups that are investigating the many remaining mysteries of the brain. Scientists are focused on neural circuits, the complex synaptic networks of the brain that hold the key to developing effective treatments for a host of neurological and psychiatric disorders and diseases, including Alzheimer's, Parkinson's, Huntington's, autism and schizophrenia.

Difficulty Smelling

Question: Doctor, why can't I smell?

Answer: There are several reasons for a person to notice either a change in their sense of smell or a complete lack of the ability to detect odors. Metabolic conditions such as hypothyroidism, low zinc, diabetes can all play havoc with one's sense of smell. Severe head trauma in which the olfactory nerves are sheared off will produce a complete lack of smell.

When a patient complains of a bad odor in their nose when there is no reason for it, your ENT physician begins to suspect sinusitis and/or an infection in the nasal cavity. The diagnostic test for this condition is a CT scan of the sinuses and a nasal culture. The latter identifies the bacteria and what antibiotic will be effective. The scan pinpoints the location of the sinus(es) that are infected. Frequently with the correct antibiotic supplemented with steroids, the infection will clear and the altered sense of smell resolved. However, in the case where the patient has nasal obstruction from polyps and chronic infections, removal of the polyps and drainage of the sinuses is necessary. A relatively new procedure that can be done in the office under local anesthesia (and in our office light sedation if the patient wishes) is balloon sinuplasty. The beauty of this technique is a short recovery (2-4 days) and relatively painless post operative course ...and the best part, most insurance companies cover the procedure! For the first time we are able to dilate the sinus openings, promote drainage and resolve chronic sinus infections without the aggressive surgery and prolonged recovery of previous techniques. If you or a friend have difficulty with your sense of smell, call for an appointment today.

Osteoporosis and dental care

Question: How does osteoporosis effect my dental care

Answer: If you are currently an osteoporosis patient, it is critical that you maintain immaculate care of your teeth. If you are about to enter into treatment for osteoporosis, it is critical that you have a thorough evaluation of your dental health and have most surgical treatment done prior to receiving any osteoporosis IV or oral medication. As a normal process in our bodies, bone is constantly being broken down and then built up again. Osteoporosis medications interfere with the breaking down of bone, thus slowing down the bone-loss process. Bisphosphonates, a group of medications administered for treatment of osteoporosis, have caused serious bone-healing issues, especially in the jaw bones. IV forms of bisphosphonates have a much higher risk of complications with dental extractions and dental implant surgery.

It is imperative that you inform your dentist if you're on any of these medications. If you have taken or are currently taking any medicine for osteoporosis and have dental surgery planned, you may want to submit for a simple test to see if you can safely be treated. The morning fasting serum CTX test measures bone turnover. Normal values are usually well over 300 pg/ml, and 150pg/ml is the benchmark. If you have a value over 150 pg/ml, you are safe to undergo dental treatment. If, however, your score falls below this value, you are at a higher risk of having complications with dental surgery. You can opt for a six-month drug holiday, which means you suspend taking the medication for six months and retake the test. If your value improves to over 150 pg/ml — great! If not, have another drug holiday of six months and retest again.

He is an active member of The American Academy of Cosmetic Dentistry and designated Master Cosmetic Dentist by the Rosenthal Institute for Aesthetic Dentistry. He's been awarded Diplomate Certification from the International Congress of Oral Implantologists, Diplomate from the American Dental Implant Association and a Mastership from the Misch International Implant Institute. He's a member of The American Academy of Oral Implantologists. Dr. Ajmo is Board Certified in IV sedation and maintains an active membership with the American Society of Dental Anesthesiology.

Palm Beach Gardens Medical Center offers minimally invasive aortic stenosis treatment

The heart is made up of many working parts, but one important component in particular is the aortic valve. The aortic valve normally has three thin leaflets called cusps.

As people get older, calcium can gradually build up on the cusps, resulting in stenosis or abnormal narrowing of the aortic valve. The valve also may narrow if the person was born with a heart defect in which there are only two leaflets in the valve instead of three.

Symptoms associated with aortic valve stenosis are chest pain, fainting, shortness of breath, fatigue, heart palpitations or a heart murmur.

The disease is frequently diagnosed during a routine physical exam when a doctor hears an abnormal heart sound. Tests to confirm the presence of the condition include an electrocardiogram to measure the electrical impulses in the heart, chest X-ray to check the size and shape of the heart, echocardiogram to produce an image of the heart using sound waves, or cardiac catheterization to show any blockages in the heart.

Adults with severe aortic stenosis usually require a valve replacement. Palm Beach Gardens Medical Center offers a cutting-edge minimally invasive procedure to replace the aortic valve.

Transcatheter aortic valve replacement (TAVR) involves the placement of a balloon-expandable heart valve into the body with a tube-based delivery system (catheter). The valve is designed to replace a patient's diseased native aortic valve without traditional open-chest surgery and while the heart continues to beat.

This avoids the need to stop the patient's heart and connect them to a heart-lung machine which temporarily takes over the function of the heart and the patient's breathing during surgery (cardiopulmonary bypass). The procedure is done without any incision through the chest and may result in a shorter hospital stay and a quicker recovery time.

"As the first hospital in Palm Beach County and the Treasure Coast to perform open-heart surgery, it is certainly fitting that the Heart Institute at Palm Beach Gardens Medical Center would bring the TAVR procedure to our community," said Larry Coomes, hospital CEO. "We are so pleased to be able to offer inoperable and high risk patients with new hope for a full recovery."

Palm Beach Gardens Medical Center is getting ready to celebrating 30 years of open heart surgeries on Nov. 9.

For information about aortic valve stenosis and the TAVR procedure at Palm Beach Gardens Medical Center, visit www.pbgmc.com or call 625-5070 for a free physician referral. ■

Scientist wins $1 million for tests on Alzheimer's, Parkinson's

SPECIAL TO FLORIDA WEEKLY

A scientist from the Florida campus of The Scripps Research Institute (TSRI) has been awarded just over $1 million from the National Institute of General Medical Sciences of the National Institutes of Health to develop a series of tests ("assays") that could point the way to potential new ways to find therapies for a host of debilitating diseases, including Alzheimer's and Parkinson's disease, heart disease, stroke and diabetes.

Philip LoGrasso, a professor in the Department of Molecular Therapeutics and senior scientific director in the Translational Research Institute at TSRI, is the principal investigator for the new three-year study.

The link between these seemingly disparate diseases is a protein known as jun-N-terminal kinase (JNK), an important contributor to stress-induced cell death in key cell types, including neurons, heart muscle cells and beta-islets (which store and release insulin).

Philip LoGrasso is principal investigator of the three-year study.

Mr. LoGrasso's goal is to develop novel assays that will point to new drug candidates and a better understanding of how inhibiting JNK can prevent mitochondrial dysfunction (disrupting the energy source of the cell) and cell death.

"This grant will help us take kinase assay development and drug discovery in a bold new direction," Mr. LoGrasso said in a prepared statement. The new tests, the statement added, should produce inhibitors that could be much more selective and have the potential for reduced toxicity.

One of Mr. LoGrasso's discoveries related to JNK is already in development with OPKO Health Inc., a Miami-based biotechnology company, for the treatment of Parkinson's disease. ■

Malayan tiger brothers leave Palm Beach Zoo for Jacksonville

SPECIAL TO FLORIDA WEEKLY

In May of 2011, three tiny Malayan tigers — Jaya, Bunga and Penari — entered the world, the offspring of the Palm Beach Zoo's Berapi Api. On Monday, Oct. 28, the trio departed the zoo, bound for the Jacksonville Zoo and Gardens, as missionaries of a sort.

The mission is part of the Palm Beach Zoo's effort to ensure endangered species propagation. With an estimate of 500 or fewer Malayan tigers left in the wild, the two zoos' shared Species Survival Plan (SSP) is considered to be of utmost importance to the endangered tigers. Both the Palm Beach Zoo and the Jacksonville Zoo and Gardens are accredited by the Association of Zoos and Aquariums (AZA).

"Although these tiger 'boys' will surely be missed, we know that it's time for them to start the next chapter in their lives," Nancy Nill, associate curator for the Palm Beach Zoo, said in a prepared statement. "It is time for them to leave the nest, and eventually be paired with females to start their own families."

Nill was a first-hand witness at the tigers' births and remained in close contact with them during many "firsts," including the first time they opened their eyes, the first time they attempted to walk, the first time they were weighed and the first time they went outside.

"Being able to watch them grow has been rewarding," Nill said in the prepared statement. "It's been a great opportunity for us to learn more about Malayan tigers in general. Not everyone has the chance to experience what we did here at the Palm Beach Zoo."

The tiger brothers will be paired with females and start their own families.

The young tigers had been crowd favorites ever since their mother, known simply as Berapi, gave birth to them at the zoo. Berapi will remain on exhibit in the current Palm Beach Zoo habitat, "Tiger Falls."

Her sons will join a state-of-the-art, 2.5-acre attraction at Jacksonville Zoo and Gardens called "Land of the Tiger," set to open in March 2014. "Land of the Tiger" will be a one-of-a-kind habitat where the tigers will be able to roam safely throughout the exhibit on a fortified trail system.

"Jacksonville Zoo and Gardens staff and guests are really looking forward to meeting the boys in person," Dan Maloney, deputy director of conservation and education at Jacksonville Zoo and Gardens, said in a statement. "Palm Beach Zoo's brother tigers will be pioneers, as they have the unique distinction of being the first cats to call Jacksonville Zoo's landmark 'Land of the Tiger' habitat home." ■

Cyber Scam

Beware of social media offers that are too good to be true

SPECIAL TO FLORIDA WEEKLY

Usually, when an offer is “too-good-to-be-true” it most likely isn’t true at all. This is a lesson that many social media users have learned the hard way.

Last week, a dozen fake accounts for student lending giant Sallie Mae emerged all over the social media website Instagram. The fraudulent accounts claimed that, due to the government shutdown, Sallie Mae was offering a student loan forgiveness program that would erase the debt of the first 150,000 graduates who applied, according to the South Florida Better Business Bureau.

Those who took these sites up on their fake offers were asked to provide private information, such as Social Security numbers and birth dates. This sensitive information can be used by the creators of these fake accounts to commit identity theft and other forms of online fraud. After the fake accounts were discovered, the real Sallie Mae updated its official Facebook page to remind users that the company will never ask for your personal information through social media sites.

While many businesses offered special deals during the shutdown, wiping away the debt of 150,000 students would fall under the category of “too-good-to-be-true.” These types of social media scams are on the rise. Many reputable companies utilize social media sites such as Twitter or Instagram for marketing and customer service operations. Some companies even notify followers of special deals or promotions. As a result of this trend, there has been an emergence of fake accounts that scammers use to try to trick customers with phony offers.

In general, be wary of offers that seem “too-good-to-be-true.” There is a very high chance that they are false offers created by scammers. Also, remember that any “official” account that asks for your password, Social Security number, address or other private information via social media should be immediately red flagged as a possible scam.

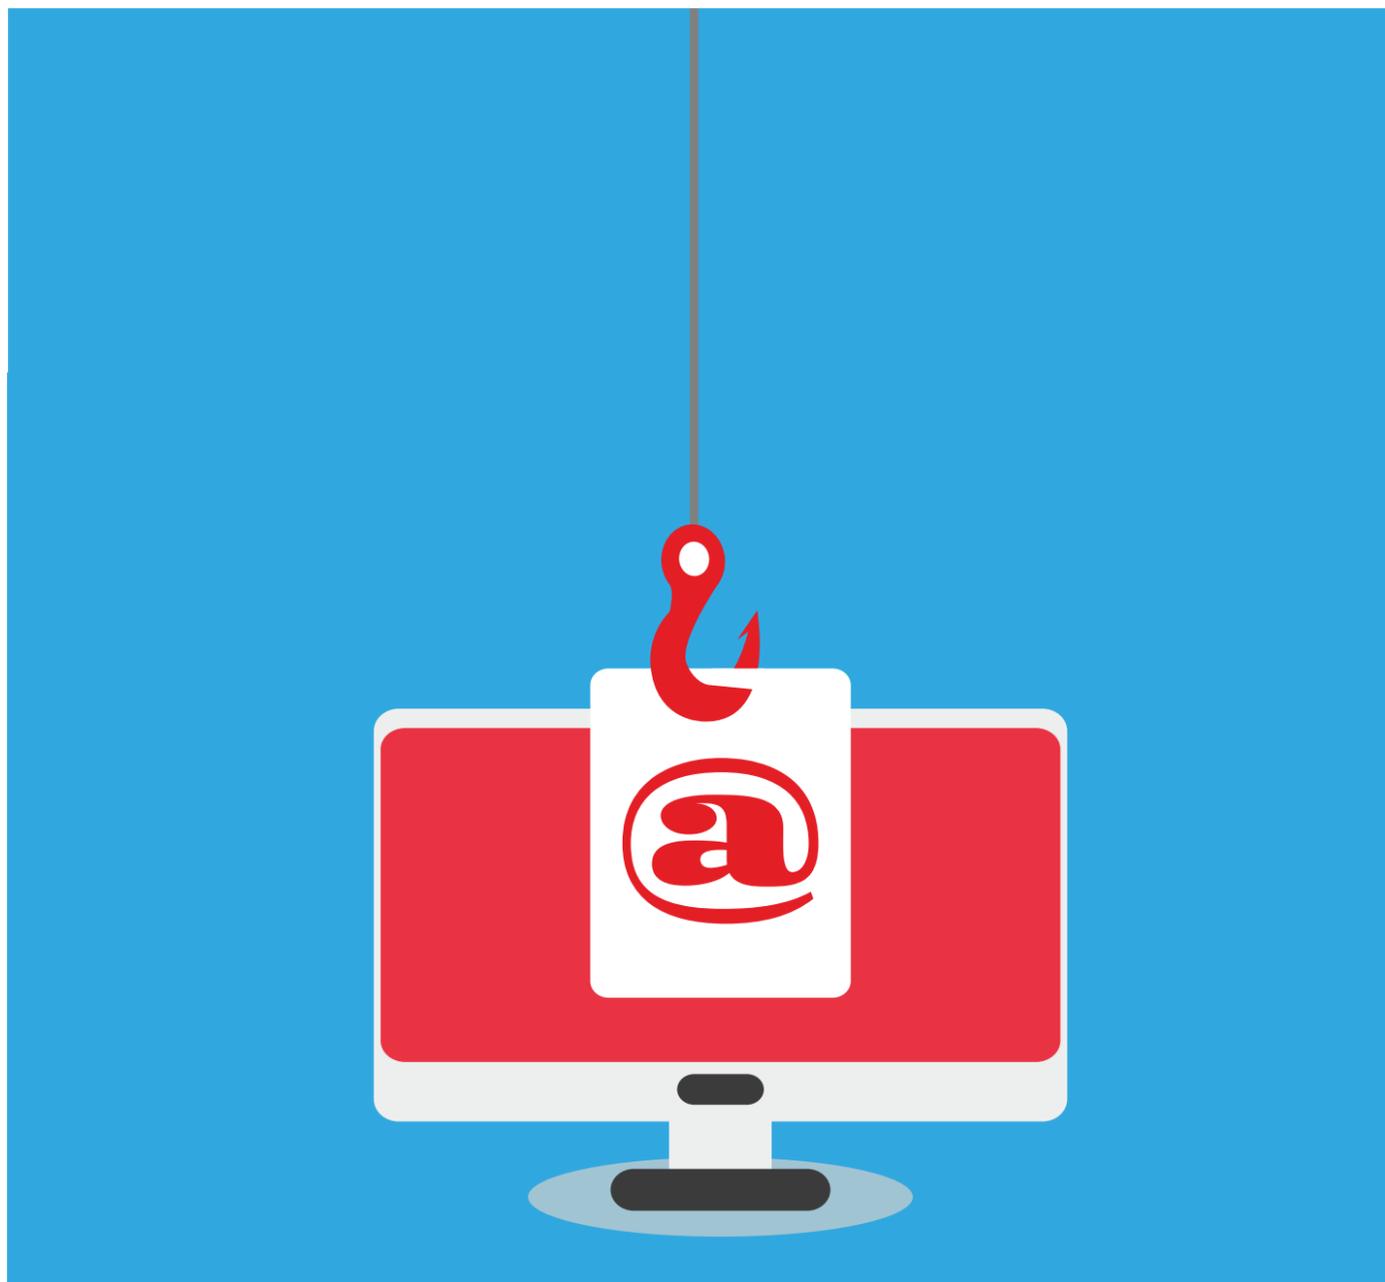

BBB and the National Cyber Security Alliance recommend the following ways to avoid being a social spam victim:

- Never reveal personal or financial information over email or on a social media site.
- Avoid following unfamiliar or unknown links or pop-up ads.
- Before sending sensitive information over the Internet, check the security of the website. Also pay attention to a website’s URL to ensure it is the legitimate site you are looking for.
- Make sure to keep up with the latest operating systems, software, web browsers, anti-virus protection and apps for the best defense against viruses, malware, and other online threats.
- Report any possible spam to the appropriate people within the organization, including network administrators. They can be alert for any suspicious or unusual activity.

- If you believe your financial accounts may be compromised, contact your financial institution immediately and close the account(s). Monitor all accounts for suspicious activity. ■

MONEY &amp; INVESTING

Wall Street expressions and buzz words

If you want to “make a ton of money” in investing, it’s best you learn the meaning of various expressions and buzzwords unique to the investment industry.

At the core of investment slang are the words bull and bear, describing investors who are positively inclined toward the equity market and are likely to be invested or “long” equities and investors who are negative about the equity market prospects and are likely to be “short” equities. If reference is being made to a market other than equities, the market is specified, such as bond bull or bond bear. As most investors are replete with opinions and emotions, they will generally fall into one camp or the other.

Building on the bull/bear words, other expressions have been created. Perma bulls are always (permanently) bullish equities. Even when the markets are in a tailspin, perma bulls will spin the story to be a mild correction. Many older or seasoned investors lament the equity market and talk like perma bears, but oddly their portfolios are full to the gills and look like perma bull portfolios. For many bears, the thought of paying capital gains taxes is so painful that they never sell their holdings; they buy and hold.

Bulls and bears can get into a lot of trouble, not just when they are permanently in an investment posture but when they get greedy either “long” or “short.” Hence the expression, “Bulls make money; bears make money... but pigs get slaughtered.” It refers to those investors who are never satisfied with positive results and take unwarranted risks or, on the heels of a great return, waiting for even more return. Any rules for taking gains are overridden by greed.

As investor bulls and bears often overreact emotionally, there is an index designed to capture their feelings of fear or complacency: the VOL Index or Volatility Index. If VOL is high, chances are good that bearish feelings reign. If VOL is low, there is complacency or strong bullish bias of investors.

What strategies do bulls and bears use? The value investors are known for “bottom fishing” or buying after a stock has fallen, but before it has made a “dead cat bounce.” Some investors like an industry and don’t worry about the specific stock selection; they are making “field bets.” Those who are delusional might chase returns, in that they are taking disproportionate risks just to get a little more return. As bears and bulls have a positive or negative market opinion, they are likely not to be “random walkers” who believe that equity returns cannot be figured.

Investment firms will make more money in a bull market than a bear, unless as Goldman did in the crisis, they were selling their inventory of bad collateralized mortgage bonds and even creating a “short” position. These investment firms are also called “shops,” heralding to the days when their forefather firms were small shops on Wall Street. It’s somewhat ridiculous that the word “shop” even today applies to hedge fund managers, as they are largely found in high end multi-storied buildings in upscale Greenwich, Conn. — far from the humble days of being a storefront. These hedge fund shops so cover the area from Manhattan to Westport Conn., that the strip of geography is called Hedgeistan.

As some of the hedge funds have collapsed, buzz words were created out of their demise. Amaranth means taking large bets and collapsing, as Amaranth was an energy hedge fund Amaranth created in 2006.

And that is not the only type of collapse, as ETFs can “blow up”; a large number of investors suddenly redeem their ETF shares and the ETF must close.

Both bulls and bears look at what the Federal Reserve Bank is doing as investors have learned “Don’t fight the Fed” and more often than not, “the Fed has your back.” A positive market allows investors to sail with the wind; to be negative on the equity market when prices are rising would be akin to sailing into the wind. It’s pretty hard to sail into the wind and pretty hard to make money shorting stocks if the bull is stampeding ahead.

Bears and bulls always get squeamish with quadruple witching hours — no, not Halloween, but the last hour of trading on a Friday when stock index futures, single stock futures, stock index options and stock options all expire. This happens on the third Friday in March, June, September and December.

Now that is not the full “long” of it, since expressions abound. Why are there such expressions? These are often short form terms that paint a picture that synthesizes a thousand words describing behavior, a story of success or failure, an unusual investment scenario, etc.

New investors should not hesitate to ask seasoned investors when they speak a dialect of the English language that mystifies. ■

HOUSE HAUNTING

Five perfect properties for intrepid buyers

SPECIAL TO FLORIDA WEEKLY

It's the season of ghosts, goblins and witches — a time when we celebrate the things that go bump in the night. With that in mind, Top Ten Real Estate Deals presents five properties that come with stories that are on par with the scariest of Hollywood's horror homes.

Of course, the folks at Top Ten ensure that intrepid buyers will be perfectly safe at home in any of them. For more information, visit www.toptenrealestatedeals.com.

Situated on the lovely Lake Weir in Ocklawaha, Fla., the nine-acre property has more than enough room for the whole gang.

■ Colorado Ghost Town

There was nothing supernatural about Uptop, Colo., but the place was an actual ghost town when two sisters from Boston bought the empty hamlet in 2000. After the sisters spent lots of time and money restoring the town to its former glory, the ghosts have left and the sisters are selling.

The 250-acre package comes complete with a train depot, dance hall, saloon, chapel, meeting hall and the log cabin where the sisters lived while they restored the Old West site. It's offered for $2 million.

■ Historic Buckeye Haunted Inn

At more than 200 years old, The Buxton Inn is Ohio's oldest continually running bed and breakfast. It's also considered one of Ohio's most beautiful haunted spots.

The property has 10 buildings, five of which comprise the main inn, and five more that have additional rooms. After a stroll through the courtyard, guests fall asleep to the sounds of disembodied footsteps walking the halls and doors opening and closing by themselves. For $3.9 million, you can be the next innkeeper.

■ Sultan Massacre House

New Orleans is the backdrop for the macabre tale surrounding the 10,000-square-foot Gardette-LaPrete Mansion, also known as the Sultan Massacre House. The nine-bedroom, eight-bath home in the French Quarter was constructed in 1836 for a dentist who then sold it to a plantation owner. After the family fortune was destroyed by the Civil War, the house was rented out to a sultan's brother. As the story goes, the brother had many lavish and loud parties. After one particularly raucous night, blood was discovered running down the front steps and everyone inside was discovered dead.

The mansion, now divided up into six apartments, is on the market for $2.5 million.

■ Ma Barker's Place

The infamous house where Kate "Ma" Barker and her son Fred made their last stand against a barrage of FBI gunfire can be yours for $889,000. The place comes with the original, circa 1935 furniture in place, and rumor has it that Ma's ghost won't budge either (of course, the bullet holes have been patched and the blood cleaned up).

■ Diamond in the Rough

The Carleton Island Villa in New York was built in 1895 for the president of Remington Arms and Typewriter Co. Today, uninhabited for more than 60 years, it resembles something from Stephen King's imagination. The interior has been gutted (by ghosts?), but the stone outer structure sits solidly on an island of 6.9 acres.

For a mere $495,000, the buyer willing to make this piece of history into a grand restoration project can turn it from a nightmare into a dream home. ■

Famous political rivalry became a pop culture phenomenon

BY TERRY AND KIM KOVEL

Special to Florida Weekly

Political fights among politicians are not new. Today, the rivalries are ridiculed in political cartoons and on TV sitcoms. In the past, political differences were shown in Staffordshire figures, slogans and drawings. The rivalry in Britain in the last half of the 19th century between the prime ministers Benjamin Disraeli (1804-1881) and William Gladstone (1810-1898) was notable. Both men were skilled politicians, but they hated each other. The two men came from very different backgrounds. Gladstone was a rich and deeply religious upper-middle-class man educated at Eton and Oxford. Disraeli never attended a university and was a wild youth who lived extravagantly. He wrote novels, accumulated debts and then married a rich widow. Gladstone, a liberal (Whig), and Disraeli, a conservative, disagreed on both social and international policies. They called each other names, opposed each other in numerous campaigns and were able to defeat each other at times. The repeal of the Corn Laws, which lowered tariffs, the purchase of stock in the Suez Canal, the favor of Queen Victoria, and other major problems were part of their battles. Political cartoons of the time often showed the two men fighting. There were even toys that pictured the men wrestling. Several versions of the toy have been sold through the years. In 2013, Jackson's Auctions sold a pair of 8½-inch-high Gladstone

The two paper mache and wood figures wrestling with the help of some strings are 19th-century politicians who couldn't agree on anything. The toy and original box sold for $180 at Jackson's Auctions in Cedar Falls, Iowa. Most people today would not recognize the pair, Disraeli and Gladstone, as famous British politicians during the reign of Queen Victoria.

and Disraeli figures in their original box for $180.

Q: My maple armchair is marked "A Genuine Cushman Colonial Creation made in Bennington, Vt." The words are printed in several typestyles inside an oval. How old is it?

A: H.T. Cushman (1844-1922) was an inventor who created things like the pencil eraser, ink eradicator and some early types of roller skates. He started a mail-order company and soon was making and selling things, including furniture. By 1899 he had incorporated his company and was making Mission furniture. Later he made smoking stands and maple breakfast-room sets. Your chair probably is from one of his breakfast-room sets. By the 1950s, the company was making birch furniture in the Colonial style. The company was later sold and finally closed in 1980.

Q: I have a red, white and blue metal sign that reads "Hudson, Service Station, Essex." There's a blue triangle on the sign that says "Hudson Super Six" and a red hexagon that reads "Essex Motor Cars." The sign is 13 inches high and 27½ inches wide. What is it worth?

A: Hudson Motor Car Co. was founded in 1909. Its Super Six engine was introduced in 1916. The Essex was a less expensive Hudson car introduced in 1919 and made until 1932. Hudson merged with Nash in 1954 and became American Motors Corp. Automobile-related advertising of all kinds is collected. Signs can sell for hundreds or even thousands of dollars, depending on age, rarity and condition. Your sign, from the 1920s, could sell for $500 or more.

Q: I have a McCoy cookie jar that belonged to my grandmother. It's shaped like an apple and is yellow with red highlights. The lid has a stem and leaf on the top. I'd like to know how old it is and what it might be worth.

A: McCoy pottery was made in Rosville, Ohio. The company made cookie jars from about 1940 until the pottery closed in 1990. Its apple cookie jar was made from about 1950 to 1964. It was also made in turquoise, a rare color that sells for more. The value of your apple cookie jar is about $100.

Q: I have a picture postcard showing the original photograph of President Franklin Roosevelt signing the Social Security Act on Aug. 14, 1935. It's signed by James Roosevelt, FDR's oldest son. Does it have any value?

A: Thousands of copies of this photograph were sent out by the National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare in a mass mailing in 1985, the 50th anniversary of the signing of the Social Security Act into law. The committee was founded by James Roosevelt in 1982. The committee still is in existence and works to prevent cuts to Social Security and Medicare. The mailing was part of a fundraising effort by the committee. The same photograph also was included in a 1990 mailing. So, your picture postcard is a common one and not of much interest to collectors. ■

2013 county property tax payments accepted early

SPECIAL TO FLORIDA WEEKLY

Anne M. Gannon, Constitutional Tax Collector, announced that her office is accepting 2013 property tax payments early.

The official 2013 Property Tax Season starts November 1. Ms. Gannon's office mails 686,556 property tax bills, representing total tax revenue of $3.025 billion which is up $60 million over last year. The ad valorem tax, calculated by the Property Appraiser, represents $2.7 billion in property values. The non-ad valorem tax makes up the balance of $320 million.

The five cities in Palm Beach County that pay the most in property taxes are West Palm Beach ($69.7 million), Boca Raton ($59.1 million), Delray Beach ($47.3 million), Palm Beach Gardens ($47 million) and Town of Palm Beach ($41 million).

Payments received after close of business Monday, March 31, 2014 are delinquent. Penalties and fees apply to delinquent taxes. About 80 percent of all payments are received in November.

Property owners can ePay taxes at pbctax.com. ■

Keys to the Cities charity event unveils whimsically transformed uprights, baby grands for public to play

BY AMY WOODS
Special to Florida Weekly

Eighteen donated pianos, 17 enthusiastic artists and one determined business owner have played their respective parts in bringing a first-of-its-kind project to Palm Beach County — Keys to the Cities.

The musically inspired charity event that has taken almost a year to orchestrate will debut Nov. 1 during a kickoff party at West Palm Beach's Lake Pavilion, where the reimagined wood instruments — including the benches — will wow the audience with their whimsy.

"The artwork of the pianos that is coming in is absolutely amazing," said Kathi Kretzer, Dial M. The very notion and motion of dialing anything seems set in another time.

But then "Dial M for Murder" is a play that is very much a product of its time, circa 1954, the year of Alfred Hitchcock's iconic film version of the Frederick Knott play.

The premise is this: a husband plots to kill his unfaithful wife for money. But what happens if that plan goes awry?

And the challenge is this: how do you transport your audience to England some 60 years ago?

Ask J. Barry Lewis, who is directing the Maltz Jupiter Theatre's season-opening production of the show, which runs through Nov. 10.

"You know when you go back, and you do any period play, they keep hearing me saying directorially, 'It's the details,'" he said. "And it is a challenge because you must not only look at the physical, external details — that is, the costume design, the set design, that it is authentic. As we were talking about this morning, it also is the authenticity

SANDY DAYS, SALTY NIGHTS

An old friendship with a surprising future

I recently received a message on Facebook — that great provider of updates and enabler of stalking — from my best guy-friend in middle school, Mark. We knew each other during the turbulent years of early adolescence, when the transition from childhood to young adulthood is in full awkward bloom. Mark had been my best friend for three years, my note-sharer, my late-night phone caller, my sidekick at haunted houses and school dances.

Except for one very sloppy kiss on the bus ramp in sixth grade, we managed to maintain a platonic friendship.

But at the end of eighth grade, our relationship evaporated. Mark went to a performing arts high school and I attended a super cerebral school, and life went on like so much water under the bridge.

Then, this summer — his message on Facebook.

Mark saw I had passed through New York and he suggested we meet for coffee the next time I came to the city.

For a second I was delighted. Then I started to worry. What would we talk about, this old friend and I? Could we reinhabit our former closeness? What sparks might still be there?

I considered combing through his Facebook page, searching for relevant information. Was he married? Did he have children? What did he do for a living? I knew nothing about the last 20 years of his life. But I decided to let things unfold naturally, to see what he would reveal in person. I will say this though: His Facebook profile picture was absolutely gorgeous.

So when I found myself in New York at the beginning of the month, I dropped him a note. Was he still interested in that coffee? He was, as it turns out, and he suggested we meet in a hip neighborhood place.

I recognized him as soon as I walked through the door. He was taller than his 13-year-old self and his chest and shoulders were broader. He seemed more confident, more at ease in his skin than he had been two decades ago.

Yet though he possessed a man's good looks and had grown into a fine, strong body, there was still something of Mark's middle school self there that I recognized. Which must have been why it was so easy for me to talk to him, why I found myself slipping into the comfortable rhythms of our long-ago friendship. He made me laugh in a way that I recognized, and I relaxed at the familiar ease and substance of him. Here was my long-gone friend suddenly feeling like my BFF. And he was so handsome —breathtaking, really — that I couldn't help but think back to that sixth grade smooch.

I was actually turning it over in my mind when Mark mentioned that he had been single for some time.

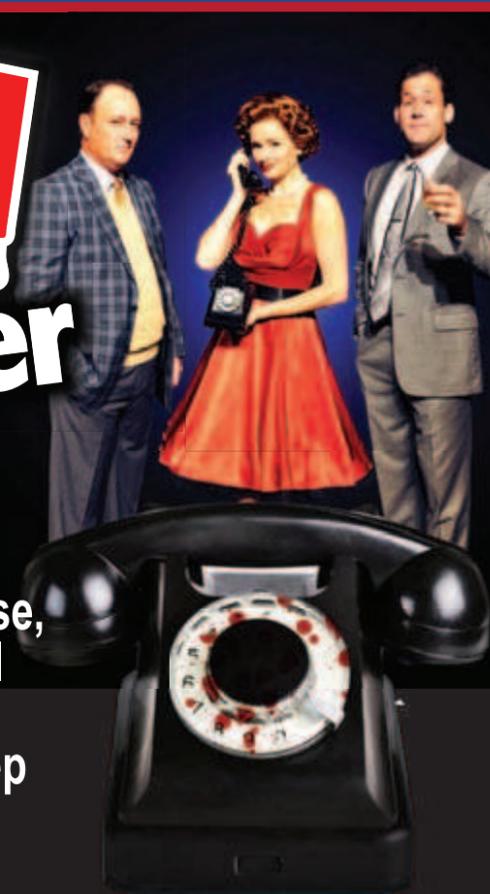

"Since my last boyfriend," he said. Boyfriend?

I must have looked startled, because Mark smiled wide. Through my disappointment, I smiled back.

Maybe it's true that the past is uninhabitable. But this new friendship? Well, that's something to explore. ■

Amanda Turner's "Curiouser & Curiouser," shown in detail, has an "Alice in Wonderland" theme.

PIANOS

owner of Kretzer Piano in Jupiter and founder of the Kretzer Piano Music Foundation. "I never dreamed when I started thinking about this project they would be this elaborate."

Ms. Kretzer said most of the artists have spent 100 hours or more transforming their canvases of wood — for a $300 stipend.

"What's that, 30 cents an hour?" she laughed.

With assistance from Lighthouse Art-Center Executive Director Katie Deits, Ms. Kretzer selected the artists from a group of 35 who responded to a call for entries. Each had to describe the reason for wanting to contribute his or her talents, the meaning behind the proposed artwork and pictures of the overall concept.

"There weren't any really bad ones in the group," Ms. Kretzer said.

The piano-painting participants who were picked are Julie Beaumont, Caron Bowman, Liz Brice, Karen Chandler, Joseph Dzwil, Silvana Frontera, Carla Golembe, Emmanuel Gonzales, Courtney Hess, Sharon Koskoff, Eric Kucera, Eduardo Mendieta, Frank Navarrete, Holly Rutchey, Alicia Stamm, Amanda Turner and Nadia Utto. Their finished products are as diverse as they are extraordinary.

A piano owned by the family of late baseball great and South Florida resident Gary Carter sports a spectacular New York Mets motif painted by Mr. Navarrete and is titled "The Kid." Mr. Navarrete also painted a second piano and focused on another piece of Florida lore, the American alligator, named Charlie.

Ms. Frontera's Melodic Liberation is a color-saturated riot of music notes and other spunky shapes, while Ms. Turner's Curiouser & Curiouser features a phantasmal Alice in Wonderland theme.

All of the pianos will be revealed at the kickoff party, set for 7 to 9 p.m. Highlights include Keys to the Cities cocktails, a steel-drum group and a marching band, and the tickling of all 1,584 ivories by local pianists dressed in black tails and ball gowns.

"Before that happens, the artist of each piano is going to dress like their piano," Ms. Kretzer said. "Some of them even bought material to make clothing to match."

Frank Navarrete sits with his two pianos before he painted them.

ABOVE AND BELOW: Frank Navarrete painted this piano, which had belonged to the late Gary Carter with a New York Mets theme. It is titled "The Kid."

LEFT: Silvana Frontera paints a pop-art design on a grand piano. RIGHT: Detail of the lid of Ms. Frontera's piano, complete with a painted keyboard around its outer edge.

From Nov. 2 through 17, the melodic masterpieces will go on display at public locations throughout the county for all to play.

"If you're 90 years old, you can sit down and belt out a tune that you haven't played in forever," Ms. Kretzer said.

Those with an inkling to play anything from "Chopsticks" to "Für Elise" can look for the pianos at Arts Garage in Delray Beach, the Cultural Council of Palm Beach County in Lake Worth, Worth Avenue's Via Amore on Palm Beach, Downtown at the Gardens in Palm Beach Gardens and assorted spots in West Palm Beach, including City Center, CityPlace, the Kravis Center, Palm Beach Dramaworks and the South Florida Science Center and Aquarium.

"The main reason they're outside for the public is so the public can experience playing," Ms. Kretzer said. "I think my biggest nightmare is going to be to try to sleep when there are rainy nights. The thought of having any of the artwork damaged is scary."

At night, the precious pianos will be covered, locked and secured. The benches either will be carried inside or chained to the piano.

"Even the benches are phenomenal pieces of art," Ms. Kretzer said.

After the last keys are played, the pianos will move to their new homes at local children's charities and community organizations.

"It'll be an absolute miracle if we break even, but if it gets the word out there about the foundation, and it does good things for the children's charities, then it accomplished what the foundation wants to accomplish, which is bringing music into the lives of children who can't afford it." ■

CONTRACT BRIDGE

Extrasensory Perception

BY STEVE BECKER

Many contracts fail because of an unlucky lie of the cards, but some of them can be salvaged by careful play. Assume you're declarer at four hearts and West leads a diamond.

You should feel confident of making the contract, since the only thing that can beat you is the highly unlikely possibility that West has all three missing trumps and that East has the ace of spades. The odds against both occurring in the same deal are about 15-to-1. However, when you win the diamond lead with the queen and play a trump to the ace, East shows out, and your 15-to-1 odds drop enormously.

In fact, it now seems certain you will go down one if West has the ace of spades. But when you consider the matter more carefully, you realize there's a good chance of making the contract even if East has the spade ace.

So you continue with the king of trumps, then cash the A-K of clubs and ruff a club. Next you overtake the king of diamonds with dummy's ace and lead the nine of clubs. When East produces the queen, you heave a huge sigh of relief as well as a spade.

This is the first trick for the defense, and you are now sure to make the contract. East has to return either a spade or a diamond. In the former case, dummy's North dealer.

Both sides vulnerable.

The outcome demonstrates how good play can sometimes overcome bad luck — provided you keep a cool head when things go wrong. ■

'Free Birds'

danHUDAK
www.hudakonhollywood.com

Is it worth $15 (3D)? Yes

It's as fair a question as any: Why do we eat turkey on Thanksgiving rather than, say, chicken or pork? Tofurkey, turducken and other alternatives aside, it does seem like turkeys get a raw deal on an annual basis.

At long last, "Free Birds" is here to give voice (literally) to turkeys that want to live. With any luck, these turkeys will get their kind off the Thanksgiving menu forever.

OK, maybe that's an exaggeration. But "Free Birds," nicely animated by Reel FX Creative Studios and distributed through Relativity Media, does present an enjoyable hypothetical scenario with good laughs and a good heart. Blue-headed turkey Reggie (Owen Wilson) is different from the mindless redheads in his flock, and he knows it. He's also lucky enough to be presidentially pardoned during Thanksgiving season, which leads him to Camp David to watch tele-novelas and eat pizza.

That is, until he's kidnapped by Jake (Woody Harrelson), a wild turkey with a crazy idea: He wants to travel back in time to the first Thanksgiving — Plymouth Colony, 1621 — and change history so turkeys aren't on the menu. After a cool time travel sequence in a machine called S.T.E.V.E. (George Takei) gets them there, they meet the leader of the local flock, Broadbeak (Keith David), his son Ranger (Jimmy Hayward, who is also the director) and his daughter Jenny (Amy Poehler). Predictably, alpha males Jake and Ranger battle for leadership roles while Reggie and Jenny fall in love. Although the premise is clever and fun, "Free Birds" isn't winning any awards for originality in terms of story arcs.

The animation is crisp and clear with vivid 3D, and the images range from present day to outer space to the distant past. There are enjoyable moments throughout, particularly when Ms. Poehler comes on with her impeccable timing and wit. Mr. Wilson does well in the lead role, Mr. Harrelson is solid as the flashier but less grounded co-lead, and kudos to Colm Meaney ("Law Abiding Citizen") for nicely snarling his way along as the villain, Captain Standish.

Watching the film, you quickly become curious how it'll end. Convention dictates that the heroes, the turkeys, achieve their goal at the end of the 91-minute running time, but for them to do that it would mean turkeys are no longer eaten at Thanksgiving, which defies a 150-year-old (see below) American tradition. How it all plays out works for the movie, if not reality.

Speaking of reality, although the PG-rated film is perfectly fine for youngsters, there might be some little ones who have trouble differentiating reality from fantasy — and if so, those children might not want to eat turkey this Thanksgiving. Thus is the risk parents take with their impressionable kids and "Free Birds": Although it's very enjoyable and good for a smile, there's a clear message that it doesn't have to be turkeys on Thanksgiving day, so adults should be prepared to address this after the film. ■

CAPSULES

Bad Grandpa ★★★½

(Johnny Knoxville, Jackson Nicoll, Spike Jonze) Saddled with his young grandson (Mr. Nicoll), 86-year-old Irving Zisman (Mr. Knoxville) decides to drive the boy across country to the boy's father. It's essentially a sketch comedy with Mr. Knoxville and Mr. Nicoll having fun with real people via hidden camera, but it's never insulting to innocent individuals and is reasonably amusing throughout. Rated R.

Escape Plan ★★★½

(Sylvester Stallone, Arnold Schwarzenegger, Jim Caviezel) Ray Breslin (Mr. Stallone) makes his living breaking out of high-security prisons, but for his latest adventure he'll need the help of a fellow inmate (Mr. Schwarzenegger) to topple a smarmy warden (Mr. Caviezel). The action isn't spectacular, but it's great fun to watch Mr. Stallone and Mr.

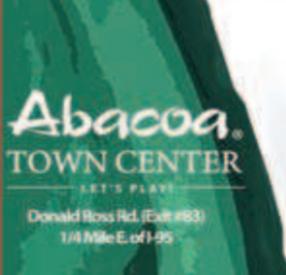

Schwarzenegger banter. If you don't see this one at the theater, it's worth the rental at home. Rated R.

The Fifth Estate ★★★

(Benedict Cumberbatch, Daniel Bruhl, David Thewlis) The first three years of the controversial website WikiLeaks are chronicled in director Bill Condon's ("Dreamgirls") latest. The performances are strong, and it raises intriguing social questions that become more relevant by the day. Rated R.

Captain Phillips ★★★½

(Tom Hanks, Barkhad Abdi, Michael Chernus) Based on a true story about Somali pirates hijacking a cargo ship helmed by Capt. Richard Phillips (Mr. Hanks). Great story, performances and execution make this a solid movie that might just be around come Oscar time. Rated PG-13. ■

HOROSCOPES

■ SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) A hectic job schedule begins to ease just in time to blow off all that work-generated steam on Halloween. A family situation runs into an unexpected complication.

■ SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) A cutting remark in the workplace needs to be handled with finesse. Remember: How you respond could determine the depth of support you gain from colleagues.

■ CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Once again, that Capricorn stubborn streak sets in and could keep you from getting much-needed advice. Fortunately, it lifts by week's end, in time to make an informed decision.

■ AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) A surprise trip early in the week could lead to other unexpected offers when you return. Word to the wise: Avoid talking too much about this until you've made some decisions.

■ PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Learning dominates the week for perspicacious Pisceans, who are always looking to widen their range of knowledge. A series of important job-linked commitments begins late in the week.

■ ARIES (March 21 to April 19) The high standards you set for yourself don't always translate into the behavior you expect of others. That relationship problem can be resolved if you're more flexible and less judgmental.

■ TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) Not enough party bids to satisfy the Bovine's fun-loving side this week? Go ahead and throw one of your own. Then prepare for some serious work coming up early next week.

■ GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) A new and intensely productive cycle is about to kick in. Be careful not to get too stressed out, though. Make time to restore your energies by relaxing with family and friends.

■ CANCER (June 21 to July 22) This could be a good time to share some of your plans with those closest to you. Their comments could give you some added insight into how you might accomplish your goals.

■ LEO (July 23 to August 22) An attack of self-doubt might be unsettling for the usually super-assured Feline. But it could be your inner voice telling you to hold off implementing your plans until you've reassessed them.

■ VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) This is a great time for you to reward yourself for all your hard work by taking a trip you haven't spent months carefully planning, to somewhere you never thought you'd be going.

■ LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Some misunderstandings resist being resolved. But your sincerity in wanting to soothe those hurt feelings wins the day. By month's end, that relationship should begin to show signs of healing.

■ BORN THIS WEEK: Your sense of humor generates good feelings and good will everywhere you go. ■

"DIAL M"

of the physicality. When you're wearing a dress that is a 1953 dress, it so dictates how you move, how you sit, how you play. It's the gentlemen, we've got the one issue for instance, is working with a pipe, which is not a today-type thing."

There is a lot that's period-driven in this show.

People did have a different way of moving and talking.

"Certainly for me as a native Brit, the text carries within it a period style in terms of its speech, and we also quite naturally are gravitating toward it," said the very British Colin McPhillamy, who plays Hubbard. "Certainly I feel as though I'm in Leicester Square circa the mid-1950s and I'm looking around saying, 'Did I really leave England? Am I really in South Florida?' I suddenly feel as though I am surrounded by black-and-white film people."

It's not just the inflections. It's the whole notion of the period.

"I was just talking to (co-star Jim Ballard) before this about how in one of the very last scenes he still refers to me as Mrs. Wendice, and we've had an affair," said Claire Brownell, the Margot of this production. "But because someone else is present, he refers to me by my last name. It's a different level of formality."

And one that was part of a different reality, even in the Hitchcock film.

"Of course, in the famous Hitchcock movie they all speak in a way in which nobody ever did speak, which is somewhere off the coast of Boston," said the very British Mr. McPhillamy.

"A Hollywood British, so everyone could understand it," Mr. Lewis said.

"For marketing purposes," Mr. McPhillamy said drily.

Part of the beauty of doing a show like "Dial M" is that it has not been produced recently in South Florida.

"You say 'Dial M for Murder' and people will say, 'Oh, I loved that.' But they can't tell you anything about it," Mr. Lewis said. "People will remember the title and the movie and the Grace Kelly, but it will be a re-engagement."

It was a similar situation with much of the Maltz cast, who either never had seen the film or had not seen it in years. For some, that was intentional.

"I stayed away from it. I didn't want to copy anything subliminally," said Gregg Weiner, who plays Lesgate.

But the beauty of the story is that there are certain universals.

"I think the fact that it's 1953, it's a certain style. The challenge for us to is really bring it to life in 2013 and make it real for us as actors and still honor the style of the piece, but really support the piece by doing it right, and making it as real as possible for ourselves and making it resonate for the audiences," said Mr. Weiner.

"I would say make it immediate for yourselves as right now," said Mr. Lewis.

"There's a lot of clues in the beginning that the audience won't figure out until the middle or the end so the challenge is to drop those clues without dropping those clues," said Todd Allen Durkin, who plays Tony. "This style, to people nowadays, is foreign. We know how to play it because we're trained. At times, it can come off comical if you push it too hard. You don't want to land it too hard because then it stands out and it's awkward."

Hence the universal.

"These are just human beings that happen to be caught up in a very, very bizarre web of events. Now, could it happen today? Certainly, certain things could happen today. But how?" said Mr. Lewis. "It's certainly from an era prior to cell phones, prior to computers, prior to all kinds of things that we have to take for granted and that we must keep very clean because it is that period. These people are just very real individuals and I think that's what the appeal comes from."

That means looking beyond the obvious.

"I think a lot of the period stuff that we do, we start off doing this acting from our core as people identifying these people as people just like us. The way we sit, the way we smoke a pipe is external. All that stuff is kind of external, so you have to connect the honest and the truth that you are building for this character and connect it to that action so that it becomes honest," Mr. Durkin said.

And more complex.

"You can just simply tell the story on the surface and it's still a rip-roaring story, but that's only a portion of the story," said Mr. Lewis. "It's a lot more interesting when you delve into the psychological framework of why a particular person will choose to do something as extreme as he chooses to do. Then it really becomes fascinating and we're not just simply doing a whodunit. That's not the question in this play. The question is why and how and what happens when that perfect murder goes awry."

Rest assured Mr. Lewis and company will answer it. ■

1950s Cuba is theme of Nov. 2 fundraiser for Lake Worth Playhouse

SPECIAL TO FLORIDA WEEKLY

“The Tropicana,” a one-night-only fundraising event, and a sequel to last January’s “The Speakeasy,” will raise money for the Lake Worth Playhouse in downtown Lake Worth at 7:30 p.m. on Saturday, Nov. 2.

Travel back in time to the 1950’s and experience the spectacular, tropical and colorful days of El Tropicana; a world renowned Caribbean cabaret and nightclub in Havana, Cuba. Enjoy a fun-filled night of drinking, gambling, light fare, dancing and cabaret-style entertainment.

The Tropicana was said to give visitors a feeling of being in an unreal world of exotic splendor. Enjoy the sights and sounds of the most flamboyant nightclub of the 1950’s. Guests are encouraged to attend in costume to fully submerge themselves in the grandeur and imagination of the evening.

All profits raised will be used to further the mission of the Lake Worth Playhouse, a nonprofit community theater with a mission to provide entertainment, education, and opportunities for artistic expression. Sponsorship and underwriting opportunities are also available.

The Lake Worth Playhouse is located at 713 Lake Avenue in downtown Lake Worth. Tickets are available for $40 per person, a portion of which is tax-deductible. To purchase tickets, call the box office at 586-6410 or visit lakeworthplayhouse.org. For additional information, or to inquire about sponsorship, contact Daniel Eilola at 586-6410 or daniel@lakeworthplayhouse.org. ■

“La Cucina” the gathering place for Feast of Little Italy in Abacoa

SPECIAL TO FLORIDA WEEKLY

When Italian families gather, more than likely it is in the kitchen. On November 1 - 3, in Jupiter’s Abacoa Town Center, the Feast of Little Italy will feature the Galbani La Cucina Italiana Cooking Pavilion, where festival-goers can gather to watch well-known local and national chefs share their recipes, tips of the trade and stories that take place in their own kitchens.

Returning from last year’s cameo on the La Cucina Italiana Cooking Stage is Sally Severeid of Kool 105.5’s “Mo and Sally Morning Show”; Chef Marco Sciortino from Buffalo, N.Y., and Marco’s Restaurant and the Marco’s Deli franchise; Chef Bill Rainha of Jupiter’s Mangrove Bay; and Chef Joe Mele of the Lincoln Culinary Institute West Palm Beach.

“This year is so important for getting our brand awareness across because Sorrento has joined forces with Galbani to become the worlds’ favorite cheese,” Chef Sciortino said in a prepared statement. “I will be doing cooking demos featuring the Galbani cheese line, showing fun, easy, different and exciting recipes for everyone to learn. Can’t wait to see you there.”

Ms. Severeid expressed equal enthusiasm. “I really enjoy being part of The Feast of Little Italy,” she said in a prepared statement. “I love how food can bring people together. I just started cooking four years ago, so I was a bit intimidated when doing my very first cooking demo, but the audience was so supportive and my cooking team was the best.”

All recipes will be prepared on-stage with the use of an overhead mirror, so those attending can watch the chefs prepare recipes from scratch.

Audience interaction is possible and those in attendance may be able to sample a few of the prepared dishes.

This year’s creations will include a few favorites with an Italian twist, such as Caprese Pancetta Tacos prepared with fresh mozzarella, pancetta bacon, baby arugula and tomatoes; Fresh Mozzarella Roasted Potato Salad that uses mozzarella, red potatoes, green beans, hot soppressata (salami), parmesan cheese and fresh spices; S’more Mozzarella Panini with a sweet filling of fresh mozzarella, chocolate hazelnut spread, banana, walnuts, honey, sugar and vanilla; and Colazione Breakfast Pizza that uses shredded mozzarella, potatoes, bacon, pita, hard-boiled egg and fresh basil.

The organizers recommend arriving early as seating at the site - near Roger Dean Stadium - is limited and first-come-first, first-serve.

See a complete list of activities, dates and times at: www.feastoflittleitaly.com. Feast of Little Italy is celebrating its 11th year.

Established in 2003 to create an experience rich in Italian culture that celebrates the contributions of great Italians through food, music, art, and tradition with the community for the entire family to enjoy.

For the latest updates on feast activities visit FeastofLittleItaly.com or call the Feast office 427-0500. ■

VINO

Attention to every detail results in top-flight South African wines

jimMcCRACKEN

vino@floridaweekly.com

Want to know what the best part of being a wine columnist is? No, it isn't being able to walk into the house with a case of wine under my arm and tell my wife, "But, honey, it's research for work!" (That's a perk, yes, but she's not buying into it the way she used to anymore.)

The best part is having the opportunity to spend two-plus hours enjoying dinner one-on-one with a passionate winemaker, tasting his (or her) wines with food and discussing the always fascinating topics of how and why he does what he does.

I had the chance to do just that recently with South African winemaker Jean Engelbrecht, proprietor of Rust en Vrede Wine Estate in the Stellenbosch region.

The first South African family-owned winery to specialize in the exclusive production of red wines, Rust en Vrede only produces wines from cabernet sauvignon, shiraz and merlot grapes.

Mr. Engelbrecht's wines have made the Wine Spectator Top 100 Wines list five times, including 2012.

We sampled his highly rated Estate 2010, as well as wines from two other South African wineries, while enjoying a wide-ranging discussion.

Q. Your family has grown grapes in South Africa since the early 1700s. Why did your father decide to become a winemaker in the 1970s?

A. We used to sell all our grapes to large winemaking co-ops, but we realized we needed to focus our energies and market our products differently. Consumers are looking for handmade products, and selling wine under our winery name puts a face on our wine.

Q. What did your father teach you about making wine?

A. Never in history has there been such a large choice of good wines for informed consumers.

My father said that in order to be successful, the most important thing was to pay attention to details. And not just one or two small things, but you must pay attention to all of the details. You have to have a personal investment with your wine, and you get that by focusing on all the aspects of your business.

Q. What do you enjoy drinking when not drinking your own wine?

A. I like to compare enjoying wine to reading good books. When you read many different books, you enrich your life with the different experiences. If you drink wines, this enriches and expands your life as well.

Q. If you were not a winemaker, what would you be doing?

A. I knew I would be in the family business, but before that happened I wanted to have my own achievements. So I was an airline pilot for seven years, and I loved every moment of that. I had a sense of personal freedom — from (the family) business and also (because of ) the traveling.

Q. What differentiates your wines from other producers?

A. Our wine is supposed to be different from the next estate. That does not mean other wines are not as good, just there are always differences.

A new BMW and a new Mercedes have different new-car smells, but share the same great quality level and attention to detail. When it became my turn to run the business, I started from a solid foundation. I did not have to re-invent the wheel, just tweak and modernize every year. It starts with the terroir, and then by doing all the small things right year after year, being consistent.

Q. How would you describe your wines to someone who has not yet tried them?

A. Our cabernet sauvignon does not have a European style. I like to describe them as forceful but elegant, more like a quality Napa Valley cabernet than a Bordeaux style.

Q. Do you have any favorite pairings of your wines and food?

A. I hate the notion of certain wines with certain dishes, and I grew up enjoying wines with all dishes. If you believe that this certain wine only can go well with that particular dish, how do you grow?

Wine Picks of the Week:

■ Rust en Vrede Stellenbosch Estate Red Blend 2010 ($48): A blend of 61 percent cabernet sauvignon, 31 percent shiraz and 8 percent merlot, this wine is a bright ruby-red and has a complex berry and cassis nose with an enticing blackberry and spice palate, leading to a long, elegant finish.

■ Anthonij Rupert Optima Western Cape 2009 ($35): Cabernet sauvignon blended with cabernet franc and merlot yields a rich dark purple color with dark berry and plum aromas and flavors mixed with a hint of cocoa and a long, smooth finish.

■ Ernie Els Signature Stellenbosch 2010 ($55): This classic Bordeaux blend of five grapes produces a deep, inky-purple wine with complex nose and palate of dark berries mixed with strawberries, ending with a touch of minerality in its textured finish. ■

FLORIDA WEEKLY CUISINE

In the kitchen with...

Roberto Cavaliere, Casa Mia Trattoria and Pizzeria

BY LOREN GUTENTAG
lgutentag@floridaweekly.com

"We call it Casa Mia because we want you to feel like you are dining and relaxing in the comfort of your own home," says Roberto Cavaliere, co-owner of Casa Mia Trattoria and Pizzeria.

Mr. Cavaliere, originally from Milan, says that he grew up watching his mother and grandmother in the kitchen which sparked his passion for food.

"I have always had a passion for food and wine," he says. "When I got to the states 22 years ago, I immediately started working at different restaurants to continue learning what my mother and grandmother had started."

After leaving Milan, Mr. Cavaliere says that he moved to San Diego and immediately fell in love with the American way of life. Working as a dishwasher, a waiter, a bartender, and a cook, Mr. Cavaliere says that he was exposed to all aspects of the restaurant business and his passion grew deeper.

But while working in various Italian restaurants, Mr. Cavaliere says that he missed traditional Italian cuisine.

"I noticed that many Italian restaurants had Americanized their dishes and lacked passion," he says. "My goal is to bring that passion back and to make people feel like they're dining in Italy."

Mr. Cavaliere moved to Palm Beach Gardens where a dream of owning a restaurant became a reality. Mr. Cavaliere opened the Ocean Grill, but soon after, with a hunger for traditional Italian cuisine, he developed Casa Mia with his partner Stefano Paggetti.

Styled after a Tuscan villa, the rustic walls create a warm, homey, and inviting atmosphere where the smell of fresh imported food warms the restaurant.

Pizza, ravioli, pasta, gnocchi — Mr. Cavaliere and Mr. Paggetti serve it all as well as offer live music on Saturday nights and happy hours daily.

"Because of the recent construction, a lot of customers wonder if we are still here," he says. "Not only are we here, but we're offering new things all the time."

Despite the construction in the plaza, Mr. Cavaliere and Mr. Paggetti say that they are nothing but determined to serve quality Italian cuisine and welcome customers to their "home."

Name: Roberto Cavaliere

Age: 49

Original hometown: Milan, Italy

Restaurant: Casa Mia Trattoria and Pizzeria, 337 E. Indiantown Road, Jupiter; 972-6888 or Casamiajupiter.net.

COURTESY PHOTO

Roberto Cavaliere and Stefano Paggetti of Casa Mia in Jupiter.

Mission: "Our mission is to bring back the true passion for dining. We want our customers to dine as if they were in Italy; it's an experience where you enjoy good food, friends and family."

Cuisine: Traditional Italian fare

What's your footwear of choice in the kitchen? "I wear the special culinary shoes for crews. It's important to have non slip shoes that are comfortable."

What is your guilty culinary pleasure? "I love sweets — pretty much anything with chocolate."

What advice would you give someone who wants to be a restaurant owner? "You have to have a passion to do it. You can't just be in the business and expect to be successful. You have to work, you have to have a passion for food, a passion for wine and be a people person." ■

Crab cakes claw way to another fundraiser

SPECIAL TO FLORIDA WEEKLY

Lovers of all things crab, this event is for you.

The second annual Palm Beaches Crab Cake Cook-Off is set for Nov. 2 in downtown West Palm Beach. The event, which raises money to help children coping with life-changing mental illness and trauma, will bring together chefs from several restaurants.

"The high point of the event for me is that it's a tremendous amount of fun and the energy is great, but I love the awareness it brings to our issue, which is about the kids," said Laura Morse, vice president of development for Community Partners, organizer of the event. "Its focus is making sure that kids can get the trauma help they need and get better."

Community Partners provides childhood social-emotional therapy and support each year to more than 2,500 victims of trauma, abuse and neglect.

Guests will taste each team's crab cake and will cast votes for People's Choice Award, as well as enjoy wine and beer tasting, entertainment and the CrabFabulous Auction and Bling Bar. A panel of judges and food writers will determine winners based on taste, texture and originality of recipe.

Participants include Café Joshua, Christina's Catering, Cod & Capers, Dixie Grill and Bar, Frigates Waterfront Bar & Grill, Hog Snappers Shack & Sushi, Ruth's Chris Steakhouse North Palm Beach and the Tin Fish.

The Palm Beaches Crab Cake Cook-Off is 6:30 to 9 p.m. Nov. 2, Lake Pavilion and Terrace, City Commons and Waterfront, West Palm Beach. Tickets: $55 to $95; purchase at www.cp-cto.org.

Bavarian specialties in Tequesta:

Look for Bavarian lunch specials Nov. 8-16 at Tequesta Coffee Lounge, at Tequesta Drive and Seabrook Road.

The week begins Nov. 8 with Leberkäse mit süßem Senfund Kartoffelsalat, also known as veal loaf with potato salad and sweet mustard. It's $8.45.

The menu includes other equally hearty fare — perfect for that first inkling of fall in South Florida. Drink specials include the Hofbräu Oktoberfest Beer for $3.95.

Tequesta Coffee Lounge is at Gallery Square South (across the street from Lighthouse ArtCenter), 384 Tequesta Drive, Tequesta. 529-2462 or [yourcoffee lounge.com](http://yourcoffee lounge.com).

Clematis spot goes Irish: The space has been a home to Reef Road Rum Bar and to barbecue by Bobbi Sue. But J. Flynn's, a new Irish gastropub designed to evoke the dining experience of the famed pubs of Dublin is set to open at 223 Clematis St. in downtown West Palm Beach in early November. The 4,500-square-foot restaurant is owned by John Flynn, an Ireland native, and managed by Cleve Mash of Mash Management Group, local entrepreneur and owner of Dirty Martini and J.R.'s Buck Wild in Palm Beach Gardens and Dr. Feelgood's on Clematis Street, among others.

Mr. Flynn and Mr. Mash teamed with Frank Eucalitto, chef-owner of Palm Beach Gardens restaurant Café Chardonnay, as consulting chef. Look for J. Flynn's to be open for lunch and brunch; 838-9099, or www.jflynnspub.com. ■

THE DISH

Highlights from local menus

The Dish: General Tso's Chicken

The Place: The Singing Bamboo, 2845 N. Military Trail, West Palm Beach; 686-9100 or singingbamboo.com

The Price: $13.95

The Details: We have been visiting The Singing Bamboo for the better part of two decades and it has never disappointed.

Oh, the décor is solidly stuck in the 1980s, but the food is fresh, from mainstream interpretations of Chinese fare, to the more exotic (ask to see the special menu sometime).

We went for mainstream during a recent visit, ordering General Tso's Chicken, which is one of life's great comfort foods.

The dish is tender bits of fowl lightly breaded, fried and stirred with a slightly spicy sauce that makes you hunger for more. The hot and sour soup that accompanied truly was warm, filling and tangy, and perfect with a Tsingtao. ■
