Time to remember –
Mother (cat) knows best

SPECIAL TO FLORIDA WEEKLY

Kitten Season 2014 has begun in Palm Beach County, and here is what you can do to help save lives.

This is the time of year when newborn kittens start to flood animal shelters and rescue groups across the nation. And it won't slow down until the fall.

Truth be told, scooping up newborn kittens you've discovered outside and taking them to a shelter is one of the last things you should do. Orphaned kittens less than four weeks old have little chance of survival if they are separated from their mothers and brought to a shelter. In fact, cats and kittens are the most at-risk animals for euthanasia nationwide.

Thankfully, most discoveries of newborn kittens do not call for human assistance, and in fact, no intervention is generally the best thing you can do, until they are eating on their own.

It's not unusual to discover a nest of kittens or a single kitten seemingly abandoned by the mother.

You want to help, right? But before jumping to the rescue, please remember the old phrase, "Mom knows best."

It is critical to keep the mother and kittens together to give the babies the best chance for survival. In the first weeks of their lives, kittens need their mother's care and antibodies from her milk. And as they grow, the mother will begin to give her kittens the training that only a mother can give.

Quietly observe from a safe distance to determine if the mother is present. Though the mother stays continually with her litter for the first day or two after giving birth, she will need to Quantum House, providing a home away from home for those with ill children at hospitals, hopes to triple in size and help more families.

BY JAN NORRIS

The Quantum House in West Palm Beach celebrates its 13th year this month. By its next birthday, the 10-suite house that serves as lodging for families of children being treated at Palm Beach Children's Hospital at St. Mary's and others could be tripling its size. "We've developed plans and have started fundraising to add another wing and build 20 more rooms," said Roberta Journey, Quantum House's executive director. "We're the little engine that could. We started out small, but have been so fortunate. We serve so many on our budget." It's grown to $500,000 a year.

COMMENTARY

It is a grand old flag

Memorial Day weekend marks for many families and communities the unofficial beginning of summer. With schools taking an extended breather, vacations on the horizon, and a more relaxed pace in the offing, a prolonged, three-day launch seems appropriate.

The earlier incarnation of the holiday was "Decoration Day" — a centuries-old tradition of placing flowers on the graves of fallen warriors. No one knows how it started, but the motivation travels well that inspires the thought among cultures all over the world. Historical sources say the practice began in this country before the Civil War. After that terrible and bloody conflict ended, this expression of commemoration grew. Graveyards of the fallen numbered in the thousands all across the North and South, serving as stark testimony to the biblical proportions of lives lost. Grief was a blanket of ash across the country. Grieving wives, daughters and mothers sought evidence in their flower gardens that beauty still lived. A bouquet, placed even on the tomb of the unknown, was a commemoration that held power and meaning.

Though all commemorations have unique traditions — the words spoken, the symbols featured, the place and time of gathering — flowers on the final resting place of the beloved and honored are a timeless, human gesture.

There are several versions of the origins of our modern Memorial Day but they are all commonly rooted in the era of the Civil War. The first soldier's grave decorated may have been in Virginia, but women in Georgia, Pennsylvania and Ohio did the same.

Doubtless, others grieving carried out this ritual unnoticed. According to Wikipedia, the most known observance of Memorial Day occurred in Charleston, S.C., the cradle of the Confederacy.

During the Civil War, Confederates imprisoned Union soldiers in scandalous conditions in Charleston, at the Charleston Race Course. At least 257 Union prisoners died and then were buried in unmarked graves. Such horrors were commonplace during the Civil War and this tragedy might have remained in obscurity but for the remarkable commemoration that took place immediately following the war's end.

Accounts of the event say it was organized, and attended by nearly 10,000 people, mostly freedmen, who also were instrumental in putting together the event and rescuing the site from neglect. The historical reports say thousands brought flowers to leave on the gravesites, including black and white ministers, Union troops, and thousands of schoolchildren attending the nation's first freedmen schools.

History recollects the event as the North's "First Decoration Day." Americans continue to commemorate the universal suffering and loss of life during the Civil War as a national tragedy. For this, we can thank the charities that led the way in the pursuit of reconciliation between North and South and their work on behalf of fostering redemption and healing.

Today, many families celebrate Memorial Day with dual purposes in mind. We honor the more than 1 million men and women who gave their lives in service to this country; and it is an occasion for families to reunite and visit the graves of their loved ones and touch the physical places vested with the memories of those departed. Parades and barbecues are a central part of the tradition.

We prominently display our nation's flag, raising it to the top of the flagstaff, and then slowly lowering it to the half-staff position, where it remains until midday. At midday, we raise the flag to the full-staff position until sunset. We commemorate with music and patriotic speeches the valor of the women and men serving in our armed forces, our veterans, and those who served and sacrificed their lives for freedom. The celebrations remind Americans the fight for liberty and justice requires resolve and eternal vigilance.

Our federal government is an object of much political disdain today. There is a bit of irony attendant to celebrating on Memorial Day the pride we share in our unity as one nation. We wave our flag, mourn the sacrifices made to sustain our democracy, and celebrate our solidarity in the pursuit of life, liberty and happiness.

We do this as if it's possible to divorce our Constitutional freedoms and the Bill of Rights from the responsibilities and privileges of our federal citizenship.

We should remember federal citizenship is what uniquely defines us as Americans; and that is worth celebrating. ■

OPINIONThe Benghazi deniers

richLOWRY

Special to Florida Weekly

At last we have a Benghazi scandal that Democrats are willing to acknowledge — House Speaker John Boehner's decision to form a select committee to investigate the administration's handling of the 2012 terror attack in Libya.

This has been the occasion for outrage that Democrats haven't been able to summon for any aspect of Benghazi to this point, including the lax security at the compound. The Democrats and their allies are in denial. Yes, a mistake was made here or there, but otherwise, nothing to see here.

The deniers evidently believe:

An administration should be able to make erroneous statements about a terror attack that killed a U.S. ambassador in the weeks before a presidential election and expect everyone to accept its good intentions afterward.

An administration should be able to withhold a bombshell White House email from congressional investigators and expect everyone to greet its long-delayed release with a yawn.

An administration should be able to send out its press secretary to abase himself with absurd denials of the obvious and expect everyone to consider its credibility solidly intact.

No opposition party would ever accept these propositions, and of course Republicans (and a few intrepid reporters and organizations) haven't. We presumably would never have learned of the email from White House national-security official Ben Rhodes to then-ambassador to the United Nations Susan Rice prior to her notorious Sunday show appearances if Benghazi "obsessives" at Judicial Watch hadn't zealously pursued records through a lawsuit.

It has long been the contention of Rice's defenders that she was merely tripped up by bad intelligence. It is true that the Central Intelligence Agency wrongly maintained initially that the Benghazi attack grew out of a protest. Yet, there wasn't any doubt from the outset that it was a terrorist attack.

In his April testimony before the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, former deputy director of the CIA Michael Morell emphasized, "The critically important point is that the analysts considered this a terrorist attack from the very beginning. They were not slow coming to this judg-

But Rice took her cue from Rhodes, who didn't mention terrorism. It was all about the video, and "people who harm Americans" and "challenges," including "difficult challenges."

Clearly, the White House considered the Rhodes email damaging, or it would have released it long ago. It then would have spared Jay Carney the exertions involved in maintaining that the email isn't rightly considered a Benghazi email, even though it was part of Rice's preparation to go on shows where she would be asked repeatedly about ... Benghazi.

Not every scandal is Watergate, and it's foolish for Republicans to invoke it here. The party also shouldn't be fundraising over the deaths of four Americans. But the unearthing of the Rhodes email discredits the argument that everything to do with Benghazi is "old news."

If there is nothing left to learn, then the White House and Democrats can cooperate with the select committee without fear and watch it hang itself. Instead, every indication is that they will stall, mock and disrupt. Because there's nothing to see here. ■

amyGOODMAN

Special to Florida Weekly

Michael Powell is the son of Gen. Colin Powell. The elder Powell knows a thing or two about war. He famously presented the case for invading Iraq to the United Nations, on Feb. 5, 2003, based on faulty evidence of weapons of mass destruction. He calls that speech a painful "blot" on his record. So it is especially surprising when his son threatens "World War III" on the Obama administration.

Michael Powell is the president of the NCTA, the National Cable and Telecommunications Association, which is the cable industry's largest lobbying group. He is also the former chairperson of the FCC, the Federal Communications Commission. His target: net neutrality. The battleground is in Washington, D.C., inside the FCC's nondescript headquarters. The largest Internet service providers — companies like Comcast, Time Warner Cable, AT&T and Verizon — are joining forces to kill net neutrality. Millions of citizens, along with thousands of organizations, companies, artists and investors, are trying to save it.

What is net neutrality? It's the fundamental notion that anyone on the Web can reach anyone else, that users can just as easily access a small website launched in a garage as they can access major Internet portals like Google or Yahoo. Net neutrality is the Internet's protection against discrimination. So why would these giant Internet Service Providers want to eliminate such a good thing? Greed. The largest ISPs make massive profits already. But if they are allowed to create a multitiered Internet, with some content providers paying extra to have their websites or Web applications load faster, then they can squeeze out extra profit. Remember, the users are already paying for Internet access. Now companies like Comcast want to charge people at the other end of the Internet connection, raking in billions of dollars from both the Internet user and the Internet content provider.

If net neutrality is eliminated, then large, established content providers with ample cash will buy access to a privileged "fast lane" on the Internet. Smaller websites and new applications will not have the same access, and will be stuck in the "slow lane." The era of lean start-ups driving innovation will come screeching to a halt. Don't look for any more high-tech companies founded in dorm rooms. Those sites will take longer to load than those offered by the big companies.

The FCC is a classic "captured" regulatory agency, featuring a revolving door with the very industries it is supposed to regulate. The current FCC chairperson, appointed by President Barack Obama, is Tom Wheeler, who was formerly the head of the NCTA and later ran the wireless industry's lobbying organization. Tom Wheeler and Michael Powell have basically switched places with one another. Sadly, they both do the same job, representing the interests of big business.

It was under Michael Powell that the broadband business was labeled an "information service" by the FCC, limiting the extent that the industry could be regulated. It is what he called in his recent keynote speech at the NCTA annual meeting, a "light regulatory touch." Powell's soaring rhetoric there fails the laugh test, though. Broadband service in the United States, on average, is far slower than many other countries', and far more costly.

Activists want the FCC to reclassify broadband as a public utility, like telephone service. Imagine if the phone company were allowed to downgrade the quality of your phone call, because you didn't pay for the premium service. Or imagine if the water coming out of your tap was less clean than water at a neighbor's house, because they pay for the premium water. These utilities are regulated. People get the same service, without discrimination.

Last January, a federal court threw out the FCC's "Open Internet" rules, saying that the FCC has the authority to regulate the Internet, but that its rules didn't make sense. By properly classifying Internet service as a utility, the FCC can legally and sensibly regulate it.

Close to 2 million people have weighed in already in favor of net neutrality, calling for the reclassification of Internet service. It is that act that Michael Powell said would provoke "World War III." Michael Powell may threaten a policy war, but he should be careful what he wishes for. As chair of the FCC back in 2003, he led an effort to allow more media consolidation, which provoked a massive public backlash. Eventually, the lax rules he proposed were defeated. Congress learned a lesson with the protests against Internet regulatory laws called SOPA and PIPA. The outcry was global and unrelenting.

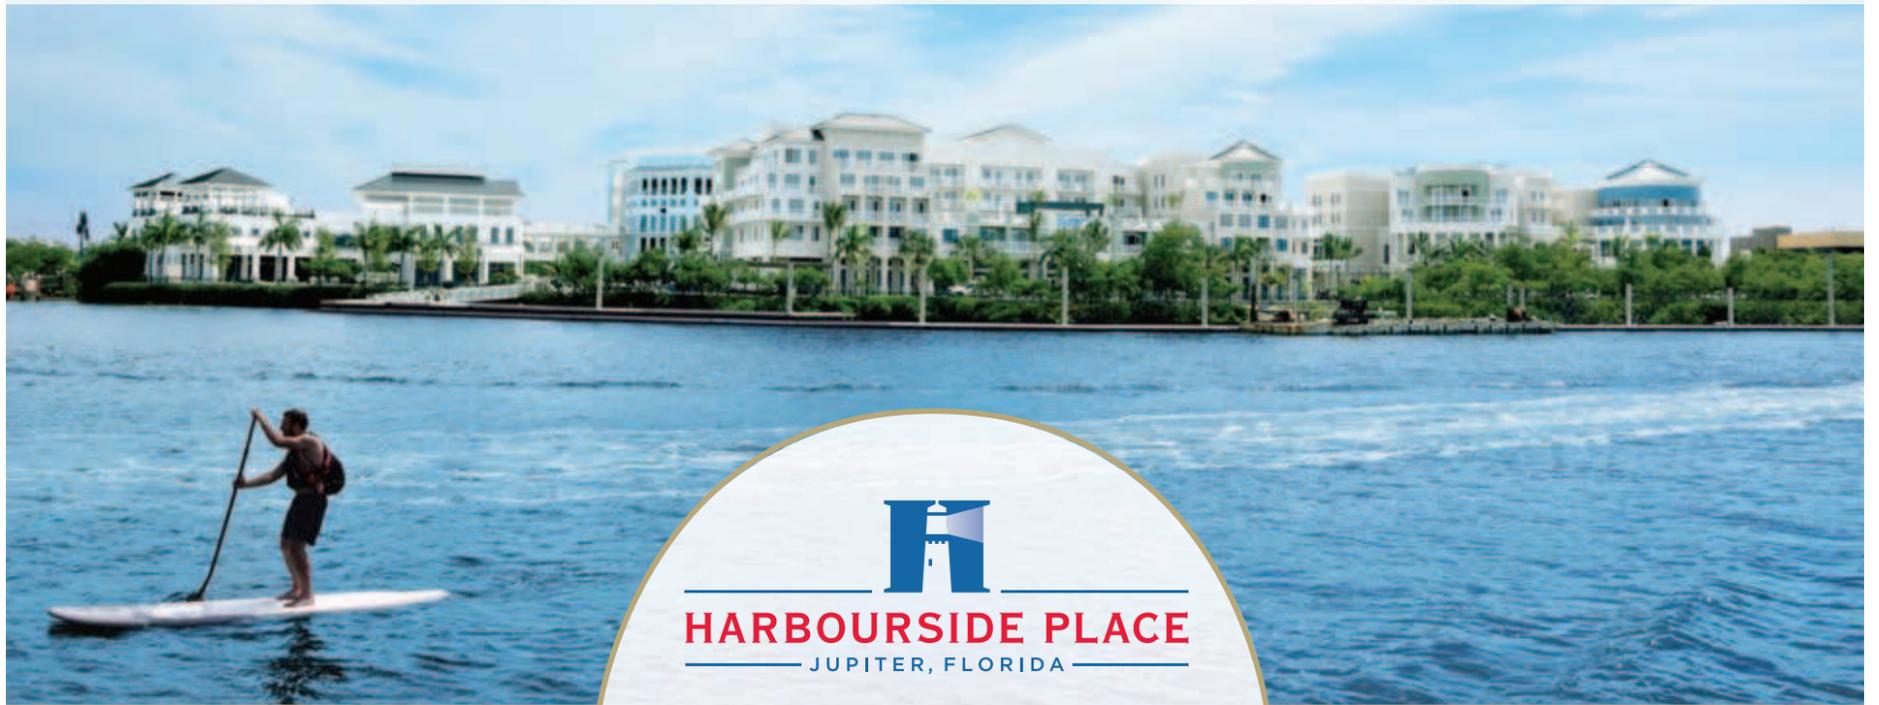

Now the focus is on the FCC. Tom Wheeler has a chance to listen to millions of concerned citizens, and to correct the errors of the past. Or he can do the bidding of Michael Powell and his army of lobbyists. If he does that, he, too, will have an enduring blot on his record. ■

Vetting Dr. Google

Five ways to evaluate information you find on the Internet

BY DR. MARTY BECKER
Universal Uclick

When you think something's wrong with your dog or cat, the first thing you do is Google the symptoms. Am I right? I bet I am. Studies show that three out of four people go to the Internet before calling their veterinarians or taking their pets to the clinic.

I understand. If you're worried about your pet, you want to have an idea right away of what might be wrong. But "Dr. Google" isn't always the best source of information for what's going on with your pet or how to treat it. I'm not just saying that because I think you should take your furry friend to the veterinarian if he's sick (although I do). The Internet is an amazing source of all kinds of knowledge, but it's also full of unreliable, out-of-date and just plain wrong advice. The fact is, some information is more equal than other information.

More important, nothing on the Internet beats an in-person exam by your veterinarian. I say that after seeing at least five instances in the past couple of years of pets dying because well-meaning owners relied on information found on the Web and brought them in for help when it was too late.

I don't want you to stop going to the Internet for information. I think it can be a valuable resource. I do want to help you learn to find and evaluate the best information. Here's what to look for.

■ Authorship. Who wrote the article?

Not everything you find online is accurate.

What are his or her credentials? Knowing the writer's background or affiliation with a particular institution allows you to judge how knowledgeable he or she is on the subject. You should also look for evidence of bias. Is the author pushing a particular viewpoint? Does the page belong to a company selling a product?

■ Source. Is the information from an academic institution or university, a government agency or a professional organization? Those are generally reliable and authoritative sites. Other good sites have articles that are written or reviewed by veterinarians.

Some of my favorites are Vetstreet.com (where I write), PetHealthNetwork.com, WebMD Healthy Pets, PetPlace.com, VeterinaryPartners.com and PetMD. A personal or commercial page may have good information, but it's important to look carefully at the writer's credentials and documentation of that information.

■ Evidence. What's the proof behind what you're reading? Does the author refer to other sources to back up the information? Who or what are the sources? If a study is mentioned, the writer should include where and when it was published. Then you can look up the summary and find out what kind of study it was.

For medical evidence, randomized controlled trials — meaning that the study participants were randomly assigned to treatment or control groups — provide the most reliable results. Does the study appear in a peer-reviewed journal — meaning that impartial scientists who weren't part of the study evaluated it before publication? You can check the journal's website to see if studies are sent out for review before publication.

■ Reliability. Is the information similar to what you've read on the subject elsewhere, or is it way out in left field? That doesn't necessarily make it wrong, but it does mean that you should cast an extra-critical eye on the ideas presented. It's always a good idea to look at several sources so you can have a well-rounded understanding of the topic.

■ Currentness. How old is the information? What we know can change quickly in this field. Beware of undated information. Look for sites that are updated regularly.

Dr. Google makes it easy to find information, but if you want to be really knowledgeable, you still have to put in the hard work of making sure it's accurate. And remember that you have a primary source just an appointment away: your veterinarian. ■

Palm Beach State College Foundation raises $101,000 at annual Golf Classic

SPECIAL TO FLORIDA WEEKLY

Thirty golf foursomes gathered on May 9 at The Country Club at Mirasol in Palm Beach Gardens for The Palm Beach State College foundation's annual Golf Classic. The tournament, the foundation's premier fundraising event, raised $101,000 to benefit the Foundation's STEAM initiative to impact the projected shortage of local, skilled professionals in STEAM (Science, Technology, Engineering, Arts and Math) fields.

The team of McDonald's North Palm Beach County, Ron Wright, Matthew Dodeson, Martin Deloach and Ricky Wade, took first place with a score of 58.

"Our Golf Classic is one event we have really come to enjoy," said Suellen Mann, executive director of the foundation, in a prepared statement. "It's not only a fun day out on a beautiful course with fantastic weather, it is also a way for our community partners to give back. Our corporate sponsors are continually committed to invest in our students' future."

Clint Glass, senior vice president of Balfour Beatty Construction, added in the prepared statement, "We look at the college as a means of providing a trained and qualified workforce... It's extremely rewarding when I walk the job site and meet some of these students that are now professionals getting very good at their craft."

The Classic took place for the second year on the club's Sunset Course, designed by golf legends Tom Fazio and Arthur Hills. A "copter drop" contest began the on-course celebration, and contests were held during tournament play, including hole-in-one competitions sponsored by Braman Motorcars. Prizes were also awarded for the longest drive, straightest drive and closest to the pin. Foursomes also competed against local youth golfer Andre Wade in a "Beat the Junior Golfer" tee-off challenge.

The Golf Classic ended with a cocktail reception, award ceremony and prizes.

The presenting sponsor was The Bobby Resciniti Healing Hearts Foundation; major sponsors included Dell Computers, Palm Beach Broadcasting, Balfour Beatty Construction, Honda Classic Golf Exchange Radio, Lotspeich Company of Florida, McDonald's North County, PepsiCo, Pirtle Construction, Suffolk Construction and Trane Commercial Systems.

Ibis Charities awards $100,000 to local charities and foundations

SPECIAL TO FLORIDA WEEKLY

Ibis Charities Inc. has awarded grants to six locally based charities. Ibis Charities also supported the Breast Cancer Research Foundation through Play for P.I.N.K. and the Prostate Cancer Foundation through Arnie's Army Battles Prostate Cancer. Donations granted this year total $100,000.

The local charities selected are:

- Grove Park School, for six new Dell computers.
- The Ibis Wildlife Foundation, supporting its efforts toward controlling the feral cat population.
- Forever Family, helping them in their quest to aid with the adoption of children with disabilities and/or multiple siblings and giving them forever families.
- 211, the mental health hotline, to partially fund a new air-conditioner for their server room.
- Friends of Abused Children, funding a tutor for two children for 21 weeks and some additional aid for the "Aging Out" program.
- The Lord's Place, a non-religious-based charity, dedicated to breaking the cycle of homelessness, for funding four apprentices who have entered into a 10-week training program to gain valuable experience in food preparation and service, which, in turn, will help them in their efforts to gain outside employment.

Patricia Engel, outgoing Ibis Charities Inc. chairperson, said in a prepared statement that the group is humbled and honored to help these local charities: "It has been an extreme learning experience that I have loved being part of. It's truly tremendous what a difference we are able to make when we just put our minds and hearts to it."

Ms. Engel also expressed gratitude to the residents and businesses that have supported the fundraising events, as well as the contributions made by the various event chairs and volunteers. The all-volunteer organization presented several fundraisers, including golf and tennis tournaments, a casino night, a card party, and two shopping boutiques, as well as ad sales in the annual Ibis Charities Resource Book, and raffle ticket sales for items donated by the boutique vendors, Ibis Golf & Country Club and Ibis Golf & Country Club staff.

"Without the generosity of our members and community, Ibis Charities Inc. would not be able to support research for breast cancer and prostate cancer, as well as several local charities here in West Palm Beach," said Ms. Engel in the prepared statement. "A very special thanks to the Ibis Charities Committee and all of the volunteers for their extraordinary efforts. Our success could not be achieved without them and their amazing contributions. Ibis is a most generous community, and I thank you."

Ibis Charities Inc. is a 501(c)(3) organization founded to support local charities. About Ibis Golf & Country Club is a secure, gated collection of 33 distinctly different neighborhoods, located on the edge of northern West Palm Beach, minutes from the heart of the city.

It is adjacent to the Grassy Waters Nature Preserve, a 12,000-acre, state-protected preserve with wildlife, birds, and tropical vegetation.

Ibis Golf & Country Club offers 54 holes of golf on three renowned Nicklaus golf courses, and the clubhouse features dining areas from casual to formal. For more information, call 625-8500. ■

"There are more than 6,000 nonprofits in this county and a lot of people chasing money. We have generous donors. I think that's because we're able to wrap hearts around our mission," she said.

"This could be anybody," she said of the families who stay here. "You never know. You can't predict what might happen."

For some, it seems like only yesterday when they were dreaming of the original house.

"It started as a service project of the Junior League of the Palm Beaches," said Ms. Journey, a member of the league who worked on the steering committee. "Every year, the league would identify a need in the community and take it on as a project. They (identified) a need for this house — a place for families who had to spend time away from home to stay."

After meetings with St. Mary's board members and other leaders of the community, the group applied to the Ronald McDonald Foundation to possibly build a Ronald McDonald House near St. Mary's. Staffers from that foundation came down to review the application. St. Mary's offered up land for the house. "It was really promising," Ms. Journey said.

"Then the Quantum Foundation heard about our project and offered the money to build it. Ronald McDonald doesn't share billing, however, so they bowed out."

They remain on good terms with the McDonald's hospitality group, however.

The house was eventually built with a one-time $1.25 million gift from Quantum Foundation, and it opened in May 2001. It's the largest one-time gift the foundation has made, she said.

Over the years, other funding has come from grants and donations. "We're an independent 501c3 nonprofit organization. We own our building and lease the land for $1 a year from St. Mary's. I love my landlord!" Ms. Journey said.

Fellow Quantum House board member and another founding member, Don Chester, said the house is unique to the area and support from all who use it or see its mission is generous.

"Palm Beach Children's Hospital at St. Mary's is the largest between Fort Lauderdale and Orlando. It serves not only those in our area but from around the state and beyond," he said.

It started as a home away from home for the hospital's acclaimed neonatal unit. "I was pleased to help out in the beginning" as a board member of the hospital, he said.

He notes that the community response for the house has been enormous, from donations to volunteers who cook for families nightly, to those who create fundraising events to benefit the house.

"I think people see that it helps so many families. People want to help them, and help the children."

The house and its staff provide not just lodging, but much needed moral support to families going through stressful events, he said. "Families who stay there get a tremendous amount of support from each other, too — that's important."

A home-like retreat

There are two kinds of families who use Quantum House, Ms. Journey said.

"One: The ones who woke up and didn't know their world would be turned upside down that day." She described these as families who arrive at the ER with a sick child and get a life-changing diagnosis, or whose child is a victim of a severe trauma.

"Two: Families who know they're coming for care — for things like scheduled neurosurgery. They have open-heart newborn surgery now at St. Mary's. These are deemed 'planned emergencies.'"

"It's been such a blessing to us. I don't have to worry about a thing. Having dinner provided is such a relief, and everyone is so nice and friendly. My older son loves it — the activities here, the playground. It's comfortable as well as comforting."

The families don't just show up — they must be referred by a physician or hospital, generally it is St. Mary's staff. "We don't care which hospital or doctor refers them, though," she said. "We accept anyone who needs us."

Often, the families come with a granny or aunt to help care for younger siblings. "It's a mixed bag. Sometimes the mom and dad switch off — one works while the other stays here to be at the hospital."

The guests are asked to pay $35 per night per suite. In cases where a family can't pay, they're subsidized 50 percent.

Everyone is vetted — background checks are run "so other families are assured they're safe," she said.

Like a real home, there is no maid service. Guests are expected to keep their rooms clean and do common-room chores as well, such as the dishes or vacuuming. A laundry room is provided to keep up their linens.

Communal dinners are provided free, cooked by volunteer teams who come in for the day.

"Occupancy rate is between 90 and 100 percent all the time. We only have 10 rooms. We try to keep one room open at all times for an emergency situation. But it's not always possible — we turn away hundreds a year."

Quantum House has an agreement with nearby suite hotels for a discounted rate to handle overflow, and St. Mary's provides a shuttle service to the hospital for those staying at the hotels.

"Our families come from all over — most are from this area who come for the specialized children's care at St.

But you never know with infants this small — something could come up."

She and the baby were able to go home the day before Mother's Day. Until then, she and older son Nicolas had stayed at house to be near the baby while her husband was on the road with the team.

"I love it. Just having the security close to the hospital is wonderful. Every day, the security people came and got me and took me over to the hospital — I couldn't drive the first two weeks."

"It's been such a blessing to us. I don't have to worry about a thing. Having dinner provided is such a relief, and everyone is so nice and friendly. My older son loves it — the activities here, the playground. He's too little to understand why we're here and when he has a little tantrum, the play areas help him."

"It's comfortable as well as comforting," she said. "It's roomier than some hotels. We have to clean our room and do dishes and things like that, but it's nothing compared to what they offer. I'm glad to empty the dishwasher or sweep the floor."

Ms. Journey said guests are told to treat the house as their home. Snacks, juices and drinks are available in the full kitchen — open to the guests for use.

A large dining room overlooks a patio where there's an outdoor grill, also available. The large pantry features supplies such as garbage bags, bottled water, paper products and detergent.

The living room is a quiet space for families to visit, read or relax outside of their rooms.

It really is a large home, she said. "The lids to our Tupperware don't match, either!"

Volunteers the backbone

There are staffers on the property until 10 p.m. on weekdays and around the clock on weekends. St. Mary's security team watches the house constantly.

"We have five paid staff members, me included. I work for them, not the other way around," Ms. Journey said. "I love what I do. It's a joy to get up and go to work every day."

But without volunteers, the house wouldn't run.

"We can't do it without our volunteers. We have more than 4,000 who help in some way or contribute. Not just with money but with their time, as well."

"We're asked all the time, 'What can I do to help?' We ask them 'What's your gift?'"

"We have people who come in and give massages to the parents or a spa night — doing nails and hair. We have tutors coming in to help with homework, and artists who teach arts and crafts to the kids. And our cooks and bakers, of course."

"We are thankful for every one of them."

The Rockettes came at Christmas time while they were in the area. They provided treats and entertained. Local entertainers such as magicians and musicians have stopped in to entertain.

Taking care of the kids, siblings of those in the hospital, and making them feel at home is part of Quantum House's mission. A large play and activity room is stocked with toys, books, art supplies, movies and stuffed animals for cuddling.

Occasionally, pets are brought in for pet therapy. "It's really remarkable," she said. "Pets aren't allowed here, so many of the families miss their family pets. They really love having cats and dogs to cuddle."

An office for those who need to work remotely has computers, faxes and copiers available. Older kids can do their homework or play video games.

Outdoors, a garden is set up for relaxing in the shade and a butterfly garden was planted by Master Gardener volunteers. The playground equipment is on Mary's, but we have guests from Poland, Russia, Germany, Dubai — all over, really. It's the only Level 3 NIC-U facility and trauma unit in a five-county area."

NIC-U refers to the newborn intensive care unit. It's where Kendra Hunter stayed with a newborn son.

Mrs. Hunter is originally from Atlanta, but was living in Port St. Lucie while her husband worked as a trainer with the Mets baseball team. She wasn't due with her second son until June 3, but gave birth March 20 at 29 weeks. He weighed only 2 pounds, 10 ounces. Within the week, doctors moved the newborn to the Children's Hospital NIC-U.

"He's doing well, considering. Digesting breast milk now," she said last month. "The main issue is his weight.

Volunteering at Quantum rewarding, fun

BY JAN NORRIS

janorris@floridaweekly.com

Families who stay in the house sometimes leave home with little – not expecting a lengthy stay. Quantum House provides most everything they need for day-to-day living.

“We depend on volunteers for everything,” said Roberta Journey, director. “We are so grateful for the people who throw an extra box of paper towels or detergent in their carts to drop off here.”

Other needs include cleaning items, paper goods and trash bags for bath and kitchen, snack foods, juices, water and coffee, travel-size toiletries, food storage containers and linens.

Gift certificates for Publix, Costco, Target, Home Depot, Lowe’s, Office Depot or Sam’s Club are welcome.

Volunteer sewing groups have donated quilts and pillowcases for the kids – many youngsters in treatment have siblings who stay at the house.

Others come in and share talents – teaching arts and crafts or music, tutoring homework, baking or just to entertain.

shopping is also appreciated.

Groups who volunteer as Chef for a Day, making a lunch, dinner or weekend brunch for the families, are special, Ms. Journey said.

“Everyone who’s done it talks about how rewarding and fun it is,” she said. “Most of our groups are repeat volunteers.”

Advance sign-up is needed to get a head count for the meal, menu suggestions. “We like spaghetti, but not every night,” Ms. Journey said.

The cooks are expected to shop for and bring as a donation all the meal ingredients and drinks, and contribute storage containers for leftovers. Common condiments are available at the house, along with a full kitchen and an outdoor grill.

“We encourage the volunteers to stay and eat with the families — they enjoy having guests and appreciate the conversation over a meal.”

Fundraising events during the year also require volunteers. They are the Taste of Compassion — a dine-around event; the Shamrock Classic golf tournament; Culinary Creations — the chefs of the American Culinary Federation present a round-robin dinner; and the Holiday Hope Drive with WPBF — a three-day event.

More information and a volunteer sign-up form are available on the website, quantumhouse.org, or call 494-0515. ■ a grassy area nearby.

“It’s all designed to make guests comfortable,” Ms. Journey said. “This is a quiet space for them to get away from the stress of the hospital and relax – have a few distractions. They have enough to worry about so we want this to be a retreat from the medical aspect of things here. Families are going through such terrible times, this is a spot for them to get away – a great opportunity to be in a ‘normal’ situation if only for a few hours.”

For that reason, they don’t offer any medical care. “They go to St. Mary’s if they need medical treatment – we don’t do that here. We don’t duplicate any services,” she said. “We are not grief counselors, either. We can call in a chaplain if they ask or provide referrals, but we leave that to St. Mary’s. We are strictly lodging. We have been very true to our mission.”

Chefs for a day

Nightly dinners and weekend brunches at the house are provided free through the Chef for a Day volunteers. “We think of it as a fun way to get the community engaged in Quantum House,” she said.

Volunteers sign up in advance to provide a meal for all the families at the house at that time, prepared on site and ready around the time most come back from the hospital for a dinner break.

“It’s a welcome relief to them to have dinner waiting. They can take time out to decompress and eat and relax even for just a little while,” she said. “It’s the fun part of day.”

The volunteers often decorate the dining room with a theme and make it a special night for the kids, especially. Firefighters, police groups, restaurant chefs, office team builders, cooking clubs – and just friends who get together for fun – come in to volunteer for meals, she said.

One special guest chef stands out, however: Chef Emeril Lagasse came to cook in February 2013 and filmed while he was there, surprising everyone.

“He was absolutely lovely,” Ms. Journey said. The celebrity chef was filming in Palm Beach County for his series “Emeril’s Florida,” and came with The Breakers’ chefs who cook here every month. He decided to cook up a Portuguese meal for the families.” There were 32 meals that night, and he wanted to prepare a comfort meal from his own household. The chef’s mother is Portuguese.

Youngsters can play outdoors.

“It just so happened we had family staying here who were from Portugal with a little girl. This was their home food. They were so amazed and happy – you couldn’t have made this up!”

Another special group she talks about is the Benjamin School boy’s golf team. “They came to volunteer and were teaching golf. They decided to hold a fundraiser and did a marathon – and raised $13,000. These were kids whose dads could have just written a check. Instead they raised their own money.

“It was enough to install a putting green out back.” A pro golfer from PGA comes every month to teach golf there.

“We are blessed with great volunteers,” she said.

Time to grow

“We are bursting at the seams today,” Ms. Journey said. Plans were put in place a few years ago after talking with St. Mary’s board of directors. A new wing with 20 more guest suites, a second, bigger kitchen, a laundry room and expanded dining room are among the new rooms planned.

The house is made comfortable for families.

An independent consultant was hired to go over the plans and come up with the budget for the project — $5 million.

“We’re in the quiet phase of the campaign now.” But 30 percent of the money is already in, even before a big push, and they are expecting to raise the remainder by the end of the year when they hope to break ground.

“St. Mary’s is doubling our rent – to $2 a year,” she said, laughing. The hospital is donating the land north of where the house sits now for the addition.

Furnishings are expected to be donated, as they are now. “All the furniture is donated by The Breakers — from when they remodeled. We redid the furnishings on our 10th anniversary, again with The Breakers’ help.

“If we could have a world of Paul Leones, it would be a wonderful world.” Mr. Leone is from The Breakers and is a supporter of Quantum House from the start.

The front will be relocated to the east side of the building with a large atrium/living area as the reception room.

But the house will remain a home — no institutional styling evident.

“The architects have been given the directive that it’s not just a building. They are creating a quiet space for these families. Something critical has happened in their lives for them to need us, so the building must be reflective of that.

“We want to maintain the culture of the house. Not so fancy, but something beautiful and peaceful for these people. We want it to be home.” ■ leave them for short periods of time in order to find food for herself. If the kittens are clean and sleeping in a heap, mom is most likely out scouting for something to eat. Note that it is instinctual, and rather common, for a mother to move her kittens to a new "safer" location, especially in the first few weeks of their lives. Establishing a new nest is part of the cat's instinctual behavior to safeguard her young by not remaining in one place too long.

Above all, do not interfere with the kittens or the space they are occupying. It is essential that you do not handle them, or try to create a shelter, or try to keep them warm, or try to feed them, as long as the mother is around. These interventions may stress the mother and cause her to abandon her family.

However, you can help the mother by providing food and water. Be sure to place dishes far enough away from the nest that you do not disturb mom and her kittens, or draw predators such as raccoons to the nest area. And of course, keep dogs and children far away.

Kittens with friendly mother

If you determine that the mother is friendly, it's best to take her and the kittens indoors until the kittens are old enough to be spayed or neutered (so that they can't have babies of their own) and then adopted into new homes. The mother should then be spayed (to prevent future kittens) and either placed in an adoptive home or returned to her territory depending on they can be safely separated from the mother. You can then begin the socialization process in your home or find a neighbor, friend or colleague who would like to adopt them. The mother can then be trapped, spayed, vaccinated against disease, and returned to her outdoor home.

Kittens without a mother

If kittens are very young (less than three weeks) and the mother has not returned after four hours away, you may conclude she has abandoned her kittens. Tiny kittens easily become cold and dehydrated so this would be an appropriate time for you to intervene.

In less than an hour, two critical phases of your breast cancer treatment will be completed using our latest technology, IOERT.

JFK Medical Center is the first in Palm Beach County and the Treasure Coast to offer this new state-of-the-art technology to treat Breast Cancer called Intraoperative Electron Radiation Therapy (IOERT).

IOERT involves the administration of a single dose of radiation during surgery. After the surgeon removes the cancer, IOERT more precisely targets the remaining tissue at highest risk for recurrence. Because IOERT is done at the time of surgery, it treats the tissue when it is most sensitive to radiation, before scarring occurs. Instead of waiting a few weeks to start radiation therapy, it takes place immediately. A patient will wake up from surgery and have received the full amount of radiation therapy that is typically administered over six weeks. Most eligible patients won't need to undergo any additional radiation therapy. Our team of physicians customizes the treatment plan for every patient.

Memorial Day ceremony set at National Cemetery

SPECIAL TO FLORIDA WEEKLY

The 7th Annual Memorial Day Ceremony will be held May 26 at the South Florida National Cemetery, 6501 State Road 7, south of Lantana Road in unincorporated Palm Beach County. The ceremony lasts for one hour and will be a tribute to the men and women of the armed services who lost their lives while in service to their country.

The public is encouraged to attend. For the past seven years, a group of local veterans and community activists, The Palm Beach County Veterans Committee, has sponsored a Memorial Day Ceremony to remember and honor the nation's veterans who lost their lives in service to their country.

The program begins promptly at 10 a.m. with bugler Armando Cedeno, who will play Reveille, and master of ceremonies David Knapp of Chapter 25 of the Vietnam Veterans of America.

The program to follow includes an opening procession by Palm Beach County Fire Rescue Pipe and Drum Band, multiple Color Guards collaborating in the presentation of the colors, Pledge of Allegiance led by Battle of the Bulge Army Veteran George Fisher, a special memorial in honor of POWs and MIAs led by former POW Bill Arcuri, Agent Orange Balloon Release (over 200 biodegradable balloons will be released), Gary Hodges singing the national anthem and "God Bless America," musical selection provided by Wellington High School Band, a Stearman Biplane flyover, keynote speaker Staff Sergeant Brian Mast, wreath presentation by Operation Enduring Freedom and Operation Iraqi Freedom veterans, and Echo Taps by Tomas Becerra, Roberto Morgan and Armando Cedeno of the 1st Panamanian Drum & Bugle Corps of Miami.

Keynote Speaker Staff Sergeant Brian Mast retired in June 2012 from the U.S. Army's elite Joint Special Operations Command JSOC as an Explosive Ordinance Disposal (EOD) Operator, or Bomb Tech, following the amputation of both legs while serving in Afghanistan.

He honorably served his country for 12 years, has been named an honorary member of the 75 Ranger Regiment for his many life-saving actions while assigned to them, and has been awarded, among many other medals, the Bronze Star Medal for Valor, the Army Commendation Medal for Valor, the Purple Heart Medal and the Defense Meritorious Service Medal.

Also participating will be U.S. Rep. Ted Deutch, U.S. Rep. Lois Frankel, State Rep. Mark Pafford, County Commissioner Hal Valeche, Juno Beach Vice

Mayor Ellen Andel, Seminole Ridge High School JROTC, Color Guards from Palm Beach County Fire Rescue, 11th District American Legion, North Palm Beach Civil Air Patrol, Lantana Civil Air Patrol, Boca/Delray Division U.S. Naval Sea Cadet Corps, Young Marines of the Palm Beaches, Palm Beach County Fire Rescue Honor Guard and Reserve Battalion, Children of the American Revolution, Patriot Guard Riders, Singer Gary Hodges, Boy Scouts of America and Girl Scouts of America.

Local Veteran's organizations that will be on site with information for veterans include Paws 4 Liberty, Palm Beach Vet Center, West Palm Beach Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center and Community Based Outpatient Clinic, Southeast Florida Honor Flight, Star Spangled Heroes Project of the West Palm Beach Library Foundation and H.E.L.O. — Heroes Entering Life's Opportunities.

Shuttle transportation donated by the West Palm Beach Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center will be available from 8:15 a.m. at two off-site locations: the Target Superstore, 5900 State Road 7, Lake Worth, and Winfield Solutions, 8245 U.S. 441, Boynton Beach. There will be no public parking inside the cemetery grounds. Upon arriving at the cemetery, there will be a limited amount of single roses, donated by Passion Flowers and The Blossom Shoppe, for attendees to place on the graves of veterans.

As this is an outdoor event, attendees are reminded to bring chairs and to wear sun protection.

Attendees will be given the opportunity to donate to help fund Palm Beach County Veterans Committee events, Memorial Day Ceremony and Veterans Day Parade, as they arrive at the Target shuttle location.

The Palm Beach County Veterans Committee relies entirely on private donations. Those who would like to make a donation can visit pbcveteranscommittee.org or contact Friends of Veterans Inc. Treasurer Aaron Augustus at 844-2004. ■

The chromosome X dilemma

rwilliams@floridaweekly.com

Women.

And I say that as a man.

The fact is, women really aren't from Venus, and men really aren't from Mars, as John Gray suggested in his best-selling 1992 book, "Men are from Mars, women are from Venus."

He was wrong, especially about women who come from the United States of America, not some other planet.

In order to understand who we are now and where we came from, let's just start with George Carlin, the late comedian.

"Men are from earth, women are from earth. Deal with it," he said.

Right. If there are differences in perception and behavior based on our sex — based on our chromosomal architecture combined with the cultural imperatives programmed into each sex by preachers, teachers, parents and advertisers — they appear to be outweighed by the similarities in our common humanity.

"Hath not a Jew hands, organs, dimensions, senses, affections, passions?" asks Shakespeare in "The Merchant of Venice," a play that is now 414 years old.

"Fed with the same food, hurt with the same weapons, subject to the same diseases, healed by the same means, warmed and cooled by the same winter and summer...? If you prick us, do we not bleed? If you tickle us, do we not laugh? If you poison us, do we not die? And if you wrong us, shall we not revenge?"

He might have used "Jew" as a synonym for "Woman," especially since women, like Jews, have been blamed for all kinds of maladies they didn't cause.

The fact is, humans (even human Americans), can be rational, intuitive, whimsical, mystical, empirical or superstitious. They can be courageous or cowardly, generous or greedy, narcissistic or considerate, callous or compassionate, cruel or kind. They can be good parents or bad, good bosses or bad.

That includes both men and women, not to mention dogs, who seem to think they're human, too, especially at supper time. And it's the basis of the notion that humans should be treated equally under the law.

Such a notion boils down to the most glorious American paradox: Each of us deserves and requires equal opportunities and equal rights under the law, even though every single one of us is distinctively different. We have different talents, differing needs and widely diverging ambitions.

As it turns out, equal rights are much like the Sangre De Cristo mountains near my family's old ranch — they look so close you could lean over and kiss them. But they remain well out of reach, way down on the Colorado-New Mexico border about 80 miles away.

I was reminded of all this the other day while reading about Jill Abramson, the suddenly former executive editor at The New York Times.

One minute she was working in the big newsroom there, where men and women sit in little cubicles or at exposed desks and look worried or ambitious or satisfied, and the next minute Arthur Sulzberger Jr., the paper's publisher, had fired her.

I can imagine Mr. Sulzberger pacing up and down in his big office not far off of Times Square on Eighth Avenue, and muttering to himself: "Women: You can't live with 'em, and you can't live without 'em." Just like the sexist males of old.

Meanwhile there's Ms. Abramson in her own big office, dumping the photographs on her desk into a cardboard box shortly before being escorted out of the building sans speech, sans farewells tears, sans even "You miserable male bastards!"

And in that troubled moment I imagine her recalling Mae West: "When a man gives his opinion, he's a man. When a woman gives her opinion, she's a bitch."

What really happened, and was this just another case of mistreatment?

Was it the same thing that happens every single day among the rich or the middle class or the poor, to the educated and the less educated, in the city or in the country, on the left or on the right, to Democrats or to Republicans alike?

News reports differ, but it seems to come down to this: Either she was paid less than her male predecessor and seen as too pushy when she asked why, and too bossy anyway (in other words, she was seen as a "bitch"); or, she was a bad manager who alienated her peers and her reporters by behaving with exceptional rudeness to them, and displaying an alienating authoritarianism in the newsroom. And coincidentally she was paid as much or more than the guy who preceded her, the fairly beloved Bill Keller.

You probably care about the answer almost as much as I do.

This is a wealthy, immensely successful woman who was celebrated up the long ladder of her brilliant career from its beginnings as a reporter for The Wall Street Journal to its momentary and not necessarily final curtain at The New York Times.

She'll be fine. She always was fine. Everybody around her will be fine.

What I do care about, however, is that women in general — my American women, my friends and fellow citizens, my wife and my sister and my cousins and nieces — are still undeniably less than equal in the workplace culture of the 21st century, in the United States.

There is no excuse for it, no good reason for it, nothing that suggests we should or even need to continue with this tradition — except greed.

You can find these statistics many places, but I took them from www.catalyst.org, which analyzes the experiences of women who work.

In median annual earnings for full-time workers in 2012, women earned 76.5 percent of men.

In median weekly earnings for full-time workers in 2013, women earned 82.1 percent as much as men.

So, here's $10 for you, pal, because you're an American man. And here's $8 for you, ma'am, because you're an American woman — but hey, you come from Venus.

That's what we're still saying, and doing, regardless of what happened to Jill Abramson.

Doesn't that beat all? ■

Too much money

■ Larry Ellison, the CEO of Oracle Corp. (and the world's fifth-richest person, according to Forbes magazine) is a big basketball fan and was reported in April to have an interest in purchasing the Los Angeles Clippers NBA team. An Ellison associate told The Wall Street

Journal, for example, that Ellison has basketball courts on at least two of his yachts and shoots hoops for relaxation on the open water. To retrieve his errant shots that go overboard, Mr. Ellison hires a ballboy in a powerboat to trail the yachts.

Latest religious messages

■ Speaking on a popular Christian Internet podcast in March (reported by Houston's KHOU-TV), Pastor John Benefiel of Oklahoma City's Church on the Rock described how, in a 2007 blessing, he might have prayed "too hard." He was attempting to help drought-stricken Texas and Oklahoma by using a specific prayer message (the "Baal divorce decree"), but that inadvertently resulted, he said, in "every lake" in Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas and Missouri rising above flood stage, causing thousands of people to lose their homes and 22 to lose their lives.

■ In his March 23 sermon (according to the Huffington Post), Phoenix, Ariz., pastor Steven Anderson of the Faithful World Baptist Church explained in detail why women in the congregation must refrain from speaking during services. Citing 1 Timothy 2:11 and 1 Corinthians 14, Anderson said the woman should learn only "in silence." "Now obviously, before the service begins," he conceded, "there's chatting and talking going on that's perfectly legitimate. (And when) we all sing praises to God, of course the ladies should also lift up their voices. But when it's learning time, it's silence time (for females)." (Also, he said, since the comment "Amen" means "That's true," it would be inappropriate for females to utter it.)

■ At one Hindu temple in India's Kerala state, the religious gift of choice — both for offerings to the deity Lord Muruga and for distribution from the deity to devotees — is the chocolate candy bar, which visitors bring in cartons, according to a March report by the Press Trust of India. (Muruga is the son of the lord Shiva and was originally worshiped as a child, leading to speculation that he would respond to chocolates.)

■ After convicted murderer Loren Larson Jr. filed a federal lawsuit in Anchorage, Alaska, claiming that his prison wristband ID "defil(ed)" him religiously because it was a "mark of the devil," a Goose Creek Correctional Center official lectured him on the Book of Revelation. Actually, wrote the official, we would be commanding the "mark of the beast" only if we ordered the ID either "in the right hand" or "in the forehead," and neither is required by current wristband policy. (Hence, the double-murderer, serving 198 years, still qualifies to avoid hell.)

■ An unnamed British inmate published a letter in a prison newspaper in April alleging continuous religious discrimination against him by guards and officials. The man claims he is a practicing Jedi (and of course cannot reveal his name because he fears retaliation "from the dark side") and complains that Jedi-ism, though officially recognized as a religion in the UK (the seventh-most popular, according to the census, with more than 175,000 adherents) is nonetheless unacknowledged by the National Offender Management Service.

Inhumane society

Denmark's Copenhagen Zoo aroused worldwide ire in February when it slaughtered and publicly dismembered a healthy young giraffe ("Marius") in order to feed a hungry lion. Then, in March, the Zoo killed four healthy lions to make room for a new male. By contrast, reported Vice.com in April, Denmark has no law against humans having sex with animals (unless it amounts to torture). Animal rights campaigners have recently expressed alarm that Denmark will become a destination for "animal sex tourism" attracting horny "zoophiles" from around the world.

Questionable judgments

■ Manhattan's New York Sushi Ko is only the most recent sophisticated restaurant to feature creative dishes made with Hormel Spam, and foodies and hipsters in fashionable neighborhoods have flocked to the foods. Spam is a well-known delicacy in Hawaii, and the New York facilities offer the island's musubi (fried Spam, rice, seaweed) and other Spam fried rice bowls with seared ahi and flourishes of fresh pineapple, according to an April report on Gothamist.com. Sushi Ko's chef playfully acknowledges that his contents are fresh — "fresh from the can" and sourced locally — "from the nearest bodega."

■ O Canada! Skylar Murphy, 18, happened to show up at Alberta's Edmonton International Airport in September 2013 with a black-powder-loaded pipe bomb in his carry-on, ready to board an international flight. Agents confiscated the bomb but allowed Mr. Murphy to continue on his trip, and in fact police were not notified, nor were possible "terrorism" ties examined, until four days later. (Canada's version of the Transportation Security Administration is not allowed to apprehend or detain passengers.) In December, the harsh hammer of justice finally slammed down on Mr. Murphy. He was fined $100 and sentenced to a year of probation.

■ Britain's most-tattooed man (the former Mathew Whelan, 34, now "King of Ink Land Body Art The Extreme Ink-It"), whose body is 90-percent ink-covered, finally acknowledged in March that he needed to undergo laser removal to clear up his skin. However, "Body Art," as he is known, then explained that he was spending the equivalent of about $10,000 on removal just so he could start over with new tattoos. ■

7 Deadly mistakes that will cost you thousands when you sell your home

A new report has just been released which reveals 7 costly mistakes that most homeowners make when selling their home, and a 9 Step System that can help you sell your home fast and for the most amount of money.

This industry report shows clearly how the traditional ways of selling homes have become increasingly less and less effective in today's market. The fact of the matter is that nearly three quarters of homesellers don't get what they want for their homes and become disillusioned and - worse - financially disadvantaged when they put their homes on the market.

As this report uncovers, most home-sellers make 7 deadly mistakes that cost them literally thousands of dollars. The good news is that each and every one of these mistakes is entirely preventable. In answer to this issue, industry insiders have prepared a free special report entitled "The 9 Step System to Get Your Home Sold Fast and For Top Dollar".

HEALTHY LIVING

It's difficult, but as an adult, you can learn to deal with your abusive parents

lindaLIPSHUTZ
 lipshutz@floridaweekly.com

beleaguered, adult children maintain a sense of self-respect and integrity, as they navigate relationships that cause tremendous pain and confusion? Understanding what happens in these relationships, and the emotional impact of the interactions, is an important first step.

Gwen had sworn she would never go to another family function if her mother Diana was present. Whenever the two women were together, the conversations would become heated: invariably deteriorating to ugly confrontations.

Gwen had known from an early age that her mother was self-centered and extremely judgmental. Gwen's emotional scars were deep. Over the course of many years, she had learned how to become self-protective and keep her distance.

But now it was Diana's 70th birthday, and the family was making a big party to celebrate. She decided she had no choice but to go. However, she promised herself that she would not allow herself to become agitated.

Unfortunately, Gwen's resolve was short-lived. It didn't take long for Gwen to find herself shaking in frustration. Diana had spent the whole evening, either talking about herself, or publicly embarrassing family members. When Diana shrilly chastised Gwen about her weight gain in front of the others, it was all Gwen could do to keep from lashing out at her mother. Gwen excused herself from the dinner table, and left the room crying, in hurt and exasperation. "Things with my mother will never change," she thought to herself.

Sadly, certain people approach family get-togethers with a complicated mixture of ambivalence and negative emotions: heartache, envy, and aching disappointment, largely because they wished they'd enjoyed a warm, uncomplicated relationship with their parents. One that they intuitively knew might have had a dramatically powerful impact on their lives had things been more positive.

Now, those with tremendous insight or graduates of therapy may evolve to a place of acceptance, or even compassion, recognizing that difficult mothers (or fathers, or grandparents) have oftentimes been burdened by their own legacy of trauma or abuse. Adult children may genuinely wish to let go of their anger. However, they are often unable to. They can't help but feel terribly cheated.

We often forget that some people with significant personality disorders, who are ill equipped to give of themselves emotionally to others, may become parents. Unfortunately, these troubled people may love their children deeply, but are often in so much pain, they do not have the capacity to process their own frustrations or to contain their own anxieties or volatility.

They may be oblivious to the hurts and heartache they are causing; and may inappropriately expect their offspring to fill insatiable needs, or to come through for them in ways that can be burdensome (or at times, abusive.) The adult children usually WANT to be able to relate in a loving way. However, they may become guarded and wary of stepping into landmines because many of their prior interactions have been exhausting or acrimonious.

So, how do well intended, albeit

When children have been raised in an environment of criticism, shame, and/or mixed messages, they may have internalized insidious, self-defeating, or demoralizing belief systems. They may have struggled to come up with strategies to enable them to endure the unpredictable discomfort. At great cost, they may have exerted huge efforts to reach for their inner resilience and to ultimately find a place of self-worth.

As adults, they often fear that returning to toxic interactions with their parents will compromise their hard-earned growth, so they are often tempted to stay away. However, they might then feel guilty and cruel to turn their backs when a parent reaches out.

If they have been continually ridiculed or criticized, putting some distance in the relationship might have been their best survival mechanism. Sometimes, maintaining a boundary that feels safe and secure is critical. It may take some effort to determine how often to speak, and what's safe to confide. This can be the result of trial and error. If a previously shared confidence had been violated, or thrown back in one's face, caution would have been learned at a dear cost. Defining clear boundaries that are adhered to will ultimately help regulate the amount of closeness or distance that will be the right fit.

As adults, we can master a totally different way of responding to our families. Knowing that we have some say in whether we remain in damaging relationships can be EMPOWERING. We can then set limits on how we are spoken to, or how much time we will spend with a person who disrespects us, if at all.

Gaining the insight that it may be the OTHER person who is acting irrationally (NOT US) may help us to stay grounded when a situation starts to escalate out of control. And, of course, reaching out to people who treat us with dignity — and keeping them near and dear — is the most gratifying of all.

We must remind ourselves not to have unrealistic expectations that our parents will come through for us exactly the way WE believe they should. We must re-calibrate our hopes and standards to avoid setting ourselves up for ongoing disappointments.

Accepting the limits of our parents' abilities is an important, mature step, which may enable us to appreciate the simple things that they ARE able to offer.

With a realistic outlook and a clear sense of the boundaries we need to keep in place to protect our well being, we may be able to create new relationships with even the most difficult people in our lives.

Early language treatment important following a stroke

davideCARBONE

CEO, St. Mary's Medical Center

Many people have problems speaking and understanding speech following a stroke. This difficulty with communication is called aphasia. It usually comes on suddenly as a result of a stroke or head injury, but brain tumors and infections of the brain can gradually cause language problems as well.

According to the National Aphasia Association, approximately 80,000 individuals develop aphasia each year as a result of strokes.

There are three main categories of aphasia:

- Nonfluent aphasia may occur when the damage is near the left front of the brain. With nonfluent aphasia, a person has problems getting words out and generally speaks in very short sentences. The person also may leave words out, so sentences become short and choppy like "want food" or "walk store." With this type of aphasia the person listening usually understands the meaning. A person with nonfluent aphasia may understand what is being said to them, but they know they are having problems speaking and may get frustrated.

- Fluent aphasia results from damage to the middle part of the language center of the brain. A person with fluent aphasia uses long, complex sentences that don't make sense. They also may use words that don't make sense or are incorrectly used. The person generally doesn't understand what's being said and may not be aware of their problems speaking.

- Global aphasia is caused by extensive damage to the brain's language center. A person with global aphasia has severe problems speaking and understanding language.

As a Comprehensive Stroke Center, the highest level available, St. Mary's Medical Center provides more aggressive stroke management than ordinary stroke centers and offers a full continuum of services to stroke patients, including acute rehabilitation. The hospital's Rehabilitation Institute features comprehensive lifestyle rehabilitation, including physical, occupational, speech and recreational therapies. After patients are discharged, they receive continuity of care through St. Mary's comprehensive inpatient rehabilitation unit and outpatient therapy programs.

Treatment of aphasia

Recovery from aphasia depends on the severity of the damage to the brain and how quickly treatment is begun. The recovery process is slow and few people completely regain their language skills. Early treatment is important.

Treatment for aphasia involves working with a speech-language pathologist who will help the person relearn language skills. The speech-language pathologist begins with simple tasks such as naming objects and gradually building to more complex language skills. In some cases, the person may need to learn ways to make up for the loss of his or her language skills by using gestures or drawings.

Family and friends

If you know someone who has aphasia, here are some ways you can help:

- Use simple sentences and speak slowly.
- Don't finish sentences, correct errors or speak for the person.
- Only talk about one thing at a time.
- Reduce distractions by turning off the television, radio or moving to a quiet place.
- Write down key words or a short sentence to help explain something.
- Use a book of words, pictures or photos to help with conversations.
- Use drawings or gestures to help get your meaning across.
- Include the person in conversations when possible.
- Make sure you have the person's attention before talking.

Why can't I easily breathe through my nose?

Breathing through your nose can be compromised after breaking your nose, having a previous nose job or because of abnormal growth of cartilage and bone in the nose. People with this issue are prevented from warming, filtering and humidifying the air before it reaches the lungs. If breathing is blocked, it can result in decreased quality of life marked by poor sleep, dry mouth, nasal stuffiness and the inability to get enough air while exercising. One way to measure the severity of the breathing blockage is to use a quality of life survey specifically designed for this issue.

When evaluating people with blocked nasal passageways, I use a very thorough examination to identify all the issues, and if needed, surgical options are discussed. Sometimes, advanced surgery, similar to rhinoplasty, is needed to give the best chance at significantly improved breathing. I have mastered techniques from my training at Stanford University that require removing the majority of the nasal septum and replacing it with cartilage from a patient's rib or straight parts of the septum. This gives me an advantage over other plastic surgeons or ear, nose and throat surgeons in South Florida.

I have been following results with a classification system I developed using the survey mentioned previously. Preliminary results have shown either complete or near complete resolution of patient's breathing blockage with the use of my techniques. To see if a nasal obstruction surgery is right for you, please call my office to schedule an appointment.

Implants and the need for sinus-lift surgery

Question: I need dental implants, but my dentist said I need sinus-lift surgery first. Is this always needed?

Answer: Molar teeth are often lost due to decay, infection or failed root canals. Once one or more molars are lost, patients find it difficult to chew their food properly. When upper back teeth are lost, bone is lost too. Simultaneously, the maxillary sinuses often dip down leaving inadequate bone for dental implant placement. With the modern technology used today, 3-D digital CT scans reveal if you actually need sinus lift surgery. The scan will accurately show the implant dentist how much bone is present while precisely revealing the proximity of the maxillary sinuses. Sinus lift surgery consists of elevating the floor of the sinus and adding bone-graft material through a small opening made where the tooth used to be or from the side via a small access under the gum. Sinus lift surgery dramatically increases bone volume to support dental implants and is one the most successful forms of bone grafting. Dental implants can replace one or multiple missing back teeth, allowing patients to chew their food properly as if they had their natural teeth.

Wounded Warriors of South Florida nonprofit benefits from The Gardens Mall gifting campaign

BY KERRY SHORR

Special to Florida Weekly

It's early on a Thursday morning and the temperature is rising fast in Lake Park's bustling industrial corridor.

You wouldn't know it by looking at Robert Chelberg, who appears cool and relaxed in a crisp, white, button-down shirt and pressed khakis.

Like a proud father, the 32-year, retired Army lieutenant general and former high-ranking NATO officer is leading a tour of his current post, the Wounded Warriors of South Florida headquarters.

On the walls, large cardboard checks from FTI Consulting's Great Charity Challenge, Warren Henry Auto, Bokamper's Sports Bar & Grill, and others, hang proudly. The money is a small salute to the millions of military folk who have honorably served.

There's a small office for administrative tasks and a cozy sitting area welcomes guests. The remaining space is packed with goodies - furniture, electronics, kitchen appliances, and household staples - that will get many disabled vets started, or just keep them going.

"We received a call that there was a Marine who was being transferred here from California," says Mr. Chelberg, a Wounded Warriors of South Florida board member who also volunteers to help manage the charity. "He and his wife couldn't afford the cost of moving their things, so we made arrangements for them to get these things." He motions to some gently used furniture and a TV sitting nearby. "They only had an air mattress to sleep on, so we bought them a king-sized bed, and we're giving them Walmart cards to buy bedding and towels."

Headquartered in Palm Beach County, Wounded Warriors of South Florida is a small charity with a big goal: to provide wounded vets who have fought or served in Afghanistan and Iraq with temporary financial services, and emergency assistance - from food and gift cards to auto repair and home improvements.

"We do whatever it takes to get help to these brave men and women," says Howard Golin, a retired Marine Corps vet and the charity's volunteer treasurer. "Whether it's paying their rent, so the landlord won't carry out an eviction notice, or covering the utilities to keep their lights on."

Since 9/11, thousands of retired military personnel and disabled veterans have applied for VA health care services and disability benefits; and many are still waiting for assistance. Those with limiting physical disabilities and PTSDs (post-traumatic stress disorders) often struggle the hardest to find work, wondering how they will afford to care for their families. By working closely with the VA's medical centers, hospitals, and health facilities around the state, Wounded Warriors of South Florida is able to provide immediate results, leaving vets with a true sense of security.

There are many success stories, Mr. Chelberg says, including a recent one about an enlisted man who had been living on a beach in South Florida with his wife and four children for almost a year. With the help of some key people, the family received housing, and Wounded Warriors of South Florida gave them furniture, food, and gas cards. Before starting school, the children received cards for supplies and clothes. "The veteran is now working and moving forward," Mr. Chelberg beams.

But as every charity knows, along with "good deed-doing" comes that itty-bitty f-word: funding. Mr. Chelberg, who once worked to raise $4 million for a new, state-of-the-art animal shelter and medical clinic in Aiken, S.C., is confident they are up to the challenge.

Complementing its own grassroots efforts, Wounded Warriors of South Florida partners with several philanthropy-minded organizations, including IBIS Friends of Veterans, Fort Lauderdale Small Boat Club, and the Military Association of Officers - Palm Beach & Martin County Chapter that have sponsored fundraising events on the charity's behalf.

In January, Wounded Warriors of South Florida received one of the proudest honors of its young life.

Commemorating its 25th anniversary, The Gardens Mall picked the nonprofit to be part of a statewide, charity-gifting campaign. Like winning the lottery, the organization received instant attention, media exposure and was presented a $5,000 check.

"Their cause is incredibly noble," says

Michele Jacobs, corporate director of marketing and operations for The Forbes Company. "We feel privileged to be partnering with Wounded Warriors of South Florida. Their tireless efforts bring dignity to the lives of so many veterans and their loved ones." The Gardens Mall also supports the nonprofit with fundraising and networking opportunities, and its sister property, Waterside Shops, plans to host an event for them this fall.

At headquarters, Mr. Chelberg walks along the check-covered wall, praising each one he passes. They're all special, he says. "We can't begin to thank everyone for what they've done. They have brought our wounded warriors into the light."

Wounded Warriors of South Florida will host its third annual Military Ball on Nov. 15 at PGA National Resort & Spa.

Employee cynicism can kill your company’s culture

Try these strategies to build trust instead

SPECIAL TO FLORIDA WEEKLY

Hipness, snark and cynicism are hallmarks of modern culture. But what about your company’s culture? Forbes publisher Rich Karlgaard says employee cynicism is a red flag signaling a serious dearth of trust — and explains what you can do to fix it.

In an age of cynicism and irony,

Northwestern Mutual is a throwback to a more innocent time. The company is the antithesis of “cool.” It has the kind of culture in which people embrace plain suits and sincere handshakes, take pride in wearing achievement ribbons and kick off conferences with patriotic music. It’s the very portrait of wholesomeness and earnestness — the Boy Scout of the insurance and financial services industry. There’s no place for hipster lingo, inside jokes about customers or snarky tweets.

Oh, and Northwestern Mutual has been in business for more than 157 years and is worth $25 billion in sales. It might not be hip to be square, but Forbes publisher Rich Karlgaard says it’s very good for business.

“Mocking irony, snark and cynicism are very much in vogue, but they are also toxic to your company’s culture,” says Mr. Karlgaard, author of the new book “The Soft Edge: Where Great Companies Find Lasting Success.” “Once cynicism gets a foothold in your culture, it spreads — just like an ill-advised tweet or blog post. MONEY & INVESTING

How dirty money is laundered

Dirty money is not old and worn paper currency. It is money that was earned through criminal activities.

Dirty money has little value if it remains dirty, as the criminal having dirty money cannot use it for legitimate purposes. Dirty money can remain in countries that embrace or turn a blind eye to criminal behavior, but, generally speaking, the criminal with dirty money wants to do legitimate things and live in a country where there is rule of law and where money from crime is not allowed into its economic system. These criminals need their money laundered in order to accomplish legitimate transactions (e.g., purchase of home, cars, jets, investing, holding bank accounts, etc.)

"As long as a criminal can funnel their dirty money into a legitimate financial account or asset, then they have resources and incentive to continue with their crime. Shutting down money laundering is a big step towards shutting down the crime." (May 28, 2013 "Online Currency Exchange Accused of Laundering $6 Billion" by Santora, Rashbaum and Perloth.)

For instance, a foreign drug dealer with $10 million of dirty money might want to appear to live a legitimate, high-end life in the U.S. But hypothetically, to buy a Manhattan condo and to travel by personal jet and open bank and securities accounts requires use of money earned or received from legitimate sources. Therefore, this criminal has to find a way to take offshore drug money (often held as U.S. dollars) and bring it into the U.S. while not arousing suspicions that it was criminally earned. Another example: A terrorist might want to fund a transnational plot but needs money to be moved transnationally to fund the plot. If the money is not coming from clean sources, or legitimate sources, then the plot is discovered.

Dirty money is also created by the white-collar community through tax evasion; false accounting; securities fraud etc.

Decades ago, it was much easier to turn dirty money into clean money as the banks in the U.S. were less suspicious of cash deposits and cash movements. Nowadays, even bank transactions of $10,000 are reported by all banks to U.S. authorities for their scrutiny. The Financial Crimes Enforcement Network logs more than 15 million transactions per year.

Transnational movements were also less scrutinized until even these transactions are now also reported. (Some foreign movements are related to tax evasion and capital flight from a country with controls on how much money leaves its borders.)

Yesteryears' typical laundering has taken on new form — using the cyber world and the art world. Both have offered large degrees of anonymity, but that is all changing. There have been several noteworthy criminal prosecutions demonstrating that authorities are on to the new scams.

In May 2013, the U.S. government charged several employees at Liberty Reserve, a global online money exchange business based in Costa Rica, with a multitude of charges. The employees' billion-dollar operation involved "millions of customers around the world, including about 200,000 in the United States..." Liberty became a "central hub for criminals trafficking in everything from stolen identities to child pornography," according to The New York Times.

Art transactions are thought to be the most desirable tool used to launder money. Art is a world in which high-end buyers and sellers do not disclose their identities. According to the same New York Times May 12, 2013 column, "It is hard to imagine a business more custom-made for money laundering, with million-dollar sales conducted in secrecy and with virtually no oversight." The buyer and seller are both recorded as 'private collection.'... In any other business, no one would be able to get away with this."

The typical laundering has three stages. First, dirty money is introduced into the financial system, called "placement." It is typically in this stage that launderers are caught. The second stage is called "layering" or structuring." The placed asset is then divided, aggregated and moved to multiple locations and companies or persons in multiple stages. The objective is to make the tracing of this dirty money or asset hard to track. The third stage is "integration." It involves bringing the money or asset into a legitimate transaction or legitimate form. Once the money is clean or legitimate, it can be used for any purpose.

Laundering arrests have always been a hot news item. The public is intrigued by the sleuthing, the size of the crime, and by satisfaction that those who rob, steal, defraud, cheat, etc. get caught. But stay away from dirty money: U.S. federal money laundering is a crime punishable with 20 years jail time and $500,000 in fines and it hurts the monetary and economic system of the country. ■

proactively fight it."

Most of us can agree that cynicism is ugly. It trivializes the gravity of bad behavior and normalizes superior attitudes toward customers and, often, coworkers. But Mr. Karlgaard insists that widespread cynicism is also a red flag that something is seriously awry in your company. And that "something" centers on trust.

"Cynicism is the defense mechanism of people who feel unsafe and powerless," he explains. "It's an expression of the uncertainty that comes from working in an environment where ethics are lax, employees don't feel valued and information is withheld. When it thrives in an organization, it signals a lack of employee trust — a problem that's gotten significantly worse over the last generation."

Building trust is not just a nice thing to do. It's a strategic thing to do.

"Trust underlies effective working relationships," says Mr. Karlgaard. "It improves group effectiveness and performance. It underpins organizational credibility and resilience. All of these factors contribute to creating a sustainable competitive advantage, because trust attracts talent, strengthens partnerships, and retains customers."

The good news is you can tap into the strategic power of trust by consciously shifting your company's culture. Here's how:

■ Know that trust has two dimensions: external and internal. First, there's the external trust between an organization and its customers: Will a company stand behind its products? If something goes wrong, will the company do the right thing? The second dimension is the internal trust between employees, managers and top-level management. Do leaders keep their promises? Can employees speak up without censure? Do people have each other's back (or stab them in it)? Generally, what's true externally is also true internally.

"When employees can trust leaders and each other, customers can trust employees," says Mr. Karlgaard. "And vice versa, of course. Cynicism cannot be eradicated if trust doesn't extend in all directions."

■ Get clear on what a culture of trust and earnestness looks like. No doubt your employees have (probably very strong) opinions on trust within your company and where they'd like to see improvements. Hold a company-wide summit where everyone can share those opinions and include an anonymous component like a suggestion box or survey. Get everyone's input, from the C-suite to the custodian. Your goal should be to pin down exactly how a culture of trust translates to leader and employee behaviors.

■ Then, get the "rules" in writing. Put the results of your trust summit in writing and ask all employees to sign this document. It should spell out actions like, "I will not badmouth customers," or, "If I have something to say to an employee, I'll say it to his face." Some companies have even gone so far as to prohibit blind cc'ing in order to promote a culture of trust.

"Creating an official 'standards of behavior' document helps crystallize the attitude you're hoping to cultivate," says Mr. Karlgaard. "Just saying 'let's all be trustworthy now' means nothing. Creating the document shows that your organization is willing to go beyond mere lip service. Plus, people are just more likely to abide by an agreement if they've signed their name to it."

■ Let only "Boy Scouts" lead. (And Girl Scouts too, of course!) People will emulate leader behavior, whether it's good or bad. It's just human nature. Leaders who roll their eyes when a certain customer calls are giving permission for employees to be similarly disrespectful.

■ Show employees that you care. When people don't believe their leaders care about them, not just as workers but as human beings, of course trust can't thrive. And while it's true that fake or contrived caring only increases cynicism, genuine caring dissolves it. This means leaders must be "people persons" who stand up for their employees' best interests and don't mind showing (appropriate) affection.

■ Aspire to predictability. It sounds a little dull, doesn't it? Most of us want to be known as creative, outside-the-box thinkers. We don't want to be bound by routine or limited by "the way everyone else does it." Embrace innovation to your heart's content in areas like product development and marketing campaigns. Just don't be unpredictable in your behavior, priorities and values.

■ Make it safe to speak up. When your employees make an honest mistake, can they admit it without being scolded and belittled? What about input and ideas? Can they share those things and expect to be taken seriously? Hopefully, the answers to both questions is "yes." Everyone should feel confident that they can participate in meetings and projects, say what's on their mind, be respected for their opinions and ideas and admit mistakes.

■ Celebrate grit and gumption. If you want employees to be worker bees — performing the tasks you designate, on a timeline you set — compensate them with paychecks only. But if you want your employees to be partners, you've got to reinforce them when they act like partners. In other words, take notice when they display passion and motivation (grit) and initiative and guts (gumption).

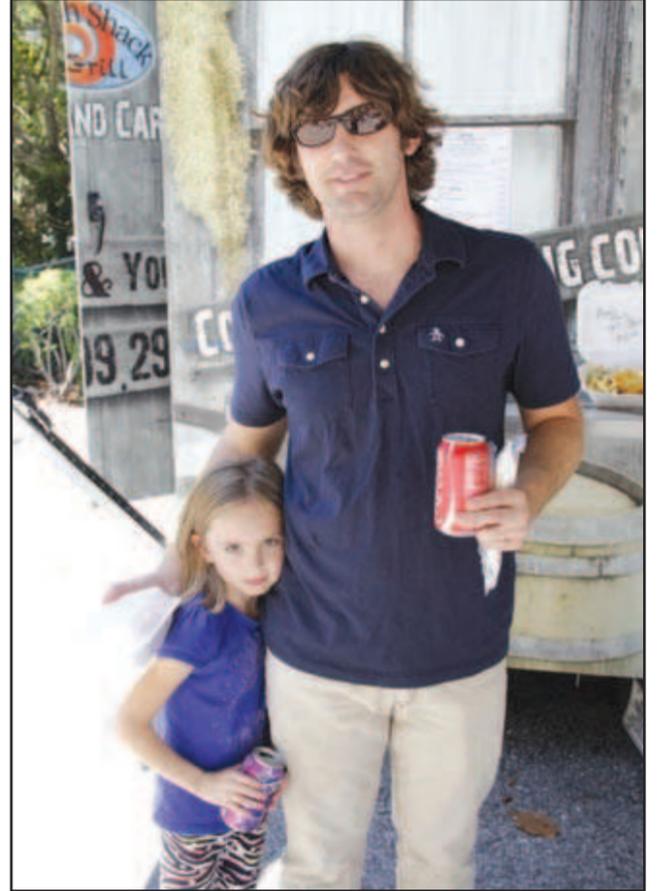

■ Constantly drive home the "meaning" of the work people do. One of the best methods to increase trust is to identify your greater purpose, your "true north," as Mr. Karlgaard calls it. Why do you exist? What meaningful value do you offer to employees, customers or society? A great purpose should be aspirational, not merely financial. It should create a common cause and promote a collective effort. It should answer all the tough questions of why: Why commit? Why persist? And, most important, why trust? ■

KOVEL: ANTIQUES

Judge collectibles by their appeal, not their price tags

BY TERRY KOVEL AND KIM KOVEL

One-of-a-kind collectibles are interesting and often not expensive. In the 1980s, a Navaho Indian decided to make a stuffed toy from a Pendleton wool blanket. Today, a vintage Pendleton wool blanket in good condition can sell for hundreds of dollars. But 30 years ago, a worn Pendleton blanket had a lower value, so it was cut up and turned into a toy. The result was a plush toucan bird that looks like the Toucan Sam logo for Froot Loops cereal. The finished bird measures 16 by 11 inches. Allard Auctions of St. Ignatius, Mont., sold it for $115 at a March 2014 auction held in Mesa, Ariz. There were 11 bids.

Q: I have a glass quart jar that's embossed "1776" above the Liberty Bell and "1976" below it. The other side of the jar is embossed "Mason's." Is it worth anything?

A: Canning jars like yours were made by Anchor Hocking of Lancaster, Ohio, to celebrate the 1976 Bicentennial of the United States. The jars often are found today and sell for $5 to $10.

Q: My husband was a cartoonist and sometimes corresponded with Charles Schulz, famous for his "Peanuts" comic strip. When my husband had heart surgery, Schulz sent him two of his original Peanuts strips. Each one is about 30 inches long and 6 inches high and is signed "Schulz." My husband has since died and the strips now belong to me and our children. One strip features Charlie Brown and Snoopy, and the other Lucy and Schroeder. Please tell me what the strips are worth.

A: If the strips are indeed original works by Charles Schulz, they're valuable. Some have sold at auction for $15,000. The first thing you want to do is make sure you are storing them safely by using archival papers and boxes. Keep them away from direct light. Insure them. If the strips are not marked with a date, try to find out when they first ran. If you want to sell, contact a reputable auction house that deals in comic art.

Q: I am thinking about selling a set of Sascha Brastoff dishes. The dishes are pink and gold and include service for eight. I think the dishes date from 1949. What is the set worth?

A: Sascha Brastoff (1918-1993), born Samuel Brostofsky, was raised in Cleveland but moved to New York City when he was 17. After serving in the armed forces during World War II, he settled in Los Angeles and worked as a costume designer for 20th Century Fox before starting his own small ceramic business in 1947. His company, Sascha Brastoff Products, opened in 1952. Brastoff's earliest china and earthenware dinner services date from 1954, so your set is not as old as you think. His best-known pink-and-gold pattern is "Surf Ballet." Check the mark on the bottom of your dishes; it can help determine when they were made. Brastoff's earliest mark was his first name, hand-painted. When a new Brastoff factory opened in 1953, a stamped mark was used that includes a rooster and Brastoff's full name. After 1963, the year Brastoff retired, the circled-R registration number was added to the mark. An early complete set of Sascha Brastoff dishes could sell for several hundred dollars.

Q: My grandmother gave us a silver bowl that she got as a gift in the 1950s or '60s. It's 8 1/2 inches in diameter. The bottom is marked with the lion, anchor and old English letter "G" mark used by Gorham. The sides of the bowl are engraved with three initials and the years 1854 and 1904. We're thinking of selling it or recycling it for scrap value. Can you tell us what it's worth?

Did the auction bidder want this toy because it was made by an American Indian, or made from a collectible blanket, or just because it was a colorful toy? Whatever the reason, it sold for $115 at an Allard auction held last month in Mesa, Ariz.

A: The dates and monogrammed initials on your bowl indicate it probably was made to mark some event, perhaps a 50th anniversary. Silver is always worth at least its meltdown value. If a piece of silver also has sentimental value, families often keep it regardless of the meltdown value. Take the bowl to a jeweler or dealer in gold and silver to find out its minimum value. The price of silver fluctuates, and the value will depend upon the current price of silver, the weight of the bowl, and whether it's solid silver or silver plate. You should get at least meltdown price from an antiques dealer or auction.

Tip: Put a piece of plastic jewelry under hot water. When the plastic gets warm, smell it. Bakelite smells like formaldehyde, celluloid smells like camphor (mothballs), and Galalith, a 1920s plastic, smells like burnt milk. Lucite does not smell. ■

Norton resumes its Masterpiece of the Month series

SPECIAL TO FLORIDA WEEKLY

Taking a cue from Britain's National Gallery during World War II, the Norton Museum is once again offering its Masterpiece of the Month series during the summer.

The British, of course, had stashed all their priceless works out of the reach of German bombers, but museum director Kenneth Clark would bring one work a month out of hiding to be on display at the museum, and which painting would be on display became much discussed among war-weary Londoners.

Hopefully, Palm Beach County residents will not have to worry about dodging enemy aircraft as they visit these masterpieces, which were selected by Norton curators from private collections; most of the works have been rarely exhibited publicly.

These pieces have rarely been exhibited publicly. A series of curator-led gallery talks accompanies the monthly installations to explore the significance and context of each work.

"The Norton is extremely fortunate to have friends who are serious collectors and support the arts in South Florida," Cheryl Brutvan, the Norton's director of curatorial affairs and curator of contemporary art said in a statement. "This series would not be possible without their willingness to loan these masterpieces for public display."

SANDY DAYS, SALTY NIGHTS

Practical magic for lonely hearts

I am an unapologetic believer in magical thinking, the oft-maligned concept that we can affect life's outcome using our own mental abilities. Look, humans are incredible and sometimes downright mystical beings. We have powers that are both profound and unsettling — just look at cases of self-healing or psychosomatic responses to stress. Not to mention the insights we sometimes have into what's coming.

So why not create romance in our lives just through the power of our positive thinking? I'll tell you why: Sometimes magic is not enough.

For the longest time, I had my own esoteric love routine. I lit candles. I said incantations. I even owned a voodoo doll. But my Prince Charming? We never crossed paths. What I needed, I decided, was patience. If I just had enough faith, if my heart stayed pure and my intentions strong, then surely the gris-gris would work. Right?

This is how I came to spend my Friday and Saturday nights at home, alone. In my defense, it wasn't wasted time. I liked to engage in a rigorous self-study of books such as "Mars and Venus on a Date" and "Smitten: The Way of the Brilliant Flirt." That way, if I actually met a man, I would be ready for him.

One Sunday morning, I was having a leisurely breakfast and reading the Modern Love column in The New York Times. The piece was about how a woman tried to use magic to bring an old love back into her life. I smiled to myself.

At least I wasn't alone. But about three-quarters of the way through the story, she talked about how the relationship floundered and then ended on a painful and humiliating note. So much for manifestation.

Thankfully, the piece didn't stop there.

The relationship left the author emotionally bruised but grounded in the real world, she said, and when she decided to find love again, she signed up for Match.com in addition to all her magic tricks.

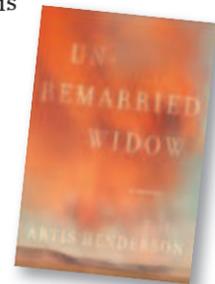

"I was taking the practical route, too," she wrote.

I laughed in my kitchen as I suddenly realized what I had been doing wrong, the important step missing from my magical routine. I didn't need more candles or love spells. What I needed was a bit of practical magic. After all, the simple truth is I don't go to bars, I haven't been to a nightclub since girls were wearing tube tops, and my job as an independent writer means I don't even have the possibility of a scandalous workplace romance. In all my focused magic-making, I forgot the most obvious part: If we want to find someone to love, we first have to put ourselves in a position where we might actually meet such a person.

That afternoon, after I'd washed the dishes from breakfast and put away my solitary tea mug, I performed the least magical of rites: I signed up for online dating. The experience has brought into my life what no spell ever did: options. And even if they don't pan out, at least they've gotten me out of the house. And that, I tell you, is no small miracle. ■

CONTRACT BRIDGE

How would you play it?

BY STEVE BECKER

Assume you're declarer at four spades and West leads the ace and another diamond, which you ruff. You lead the ten of spades, which wins, and then the jack, taken by West with the ace. West shifts to a heart, won by East with the ace, and East returns the king of diamonds.

It doesn't matter whether you ruff high or low — in either case West sooner or later scores his nine of trumps, and down you go. That's the story if you played the hand this way, but naturally there's more to it than that. The question is whether you can figure out how to make the contract — and it can be made — now that you know how the East-West cards are divided.

As with most problems of this type, the solution is easy once you've seen it. If you'd like to work it out for yourself, stop reading right here; if not, here's the way it's done:

Obviously, you have to try to do something to keep West from getting a second trump trick. To that end, after ruffing the diamond jack at trick two, you should lead a club and trump it in dummy!

Now play the third round of diamonds and, when East produces the king, discard a heart (instead of ruffing). This hands East-West their second trick, but the only other one they can get is the ace of trumps. East is out of diamonds, and there is nothing else he can return to injure you.

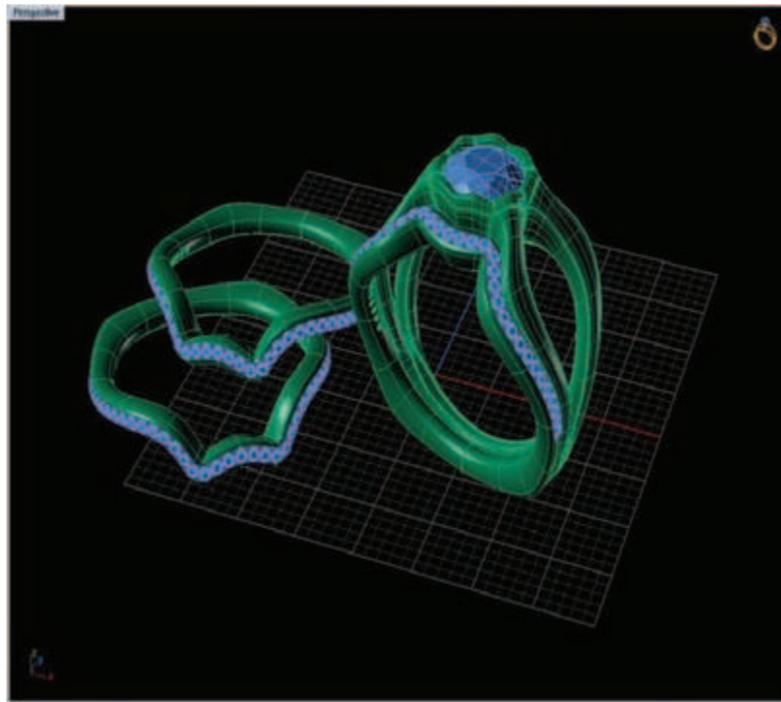

The effect of this "loser on loser" play is that it removes a potential threatening card (the king of diamonds) from East's hand at the same time as you dispose of a heart — which was a loser in any case.

It is not important that you wind up losing two diamond tricks instead of a heart and a diamond. What is important is that you lose only one trump trick instead of two. ■

Contract — four spades.
Opening lead — ace of diamonds.

HOROSCOPES

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Moving in a new career direction might be seen by some as risky. But if you have both the confidence to see it through and the facts to back you up, it could prove rewarding.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) Holding back on a decision might be difficult, considering how long you've waited for this opportunity. But until you're able to resolve all doubts, it could be the wiser course to take.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) You still need to move carefully where financial matters are concerned. Better for the Lion to move slowly than pounce on a "promising" prospect that doesn't keep its promises.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) A rejection of an idea you believe in can be upsetting. But don't let it discourage you. Get yourself back on track and use what you've learned from the experience to try again.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) The early part of the week could find you looking to balance your priorities between your family obligations and your career responsibilities. Pressures begin to ease by week's end.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) An associate's problem could cause unavoidable delays in moving ahead with your joint venture. If so, use the time to look into another project you had previously set aside.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) Although a financial problem could be very close to being resolved in your favor, it's still a good idea to avoid unnecessary spending for at least a little while longer.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Support for some unwelcome workplace decisions begins to show up, and continues to build, so that by week's end, the gregarious Goat is as popular as ever.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) Congratulations. Deciding to attend a social function you might have earlier tried to avoid could turn out to be one of the best decisions you've made in a long time.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Getting into a new situation could prove to be a more difficult experience than you expected. Don't hesitate to ask for advice in coping with some of the more irksome challenges.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) There's nothing an Aries Lamb likes less than having to tackle a humdrum task. But finding a creative way to do it can make all the difference. A more exciting time awaits you this weekend.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) Finishing up a job on time leaves you free to enjoy your weekend without any Taurean guilt pangs. A romantic attitude from an unlikely source could take you by surprise.

BORN THIS WEEK: Your strong sense of duty makes you a valued and trusted member of your community. Have you considered a career in law enforcement? ■

Norton Museum of Art curators will host conversations on the Masterpieces of the Month.

NORTON

month with the display of the Diane Arbus work, "Child with a hand grenade in Central Park, N.Y.C." from 1962. The work is on view through May 31. By the time Arbus took her own life in 1971 at the age of 48, she capitalized on her ability to recognize the ordinary in the odd, and the odd in the ordinary.

Masterpiece of the Month continues with the following artists and works, and Curators' Conversations will be held at 6:30 and 7:15 p.m. on the opening day of each masterpiece:

Contemporary Art masterpiece on view June 5-29: "Tintin Reading, 1993," by Roy Lichtenstein (American, 1923-1997). Lichtenstein's paintings are synonymous with American Pop Art. By 1962, he had developed his now familiar style and imagery based on comic strips and the commercial printing process of Ben Day dots. His use of images taken from popular culture later included several series in which he examined iconic modern artworks that he created in his signature style. Throughout his career he questioned the depiction of reality and the hierarchy of art. "Tintin Reading" is a synthesis of several of the artist interests and is filled with elements of his classic, radical style.

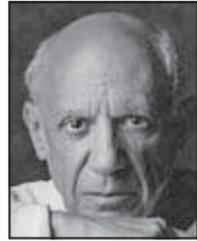

LICHTENSTEIN

American Art masterpiece on view July 3-Aug. 3: "Hometown News, 1942," by Norman Rockwell (American, 1894-1978). Rockwell is best known as an illustrator, especially for the Saturday Evening Post, where he worked between 1916 and 1963. "Hometown News of 1942" is one of 12 covers Rockwell designed for the Post during World War II that featured the fictional GI Willie Gillis, Jr. This painting is typical of these works in that it depicts Gillis not in battle, but in his relationship with those on the home front: in this case, with his mother, who has sent him a newspaper article about his father. Following Gillis' story on succeeding covers comforted the Saturday Evening Post readership as they anxiously awaited news of their own GIs far off at war.

ROCKWELL

European Art masterpiece on view Aug. 7-31: "Tête de femme (Head of a Woman)," 1952, by Pablo Picasso, (Spanish, 1881-1973). Painted in Picasso's signature Cubist style, the subject of this stylized portrait is Françoise Gilot, Picasso's lover and companion from 1946 to 1953, and mother of his children Claude and Paloma. Reminiscent in character and style to his iconic Guernica painting of 1937, Picasso captures the prominent features and pathos of his model with a minimum of outlines and brushstrokes. Arguably the most famous and prolific artist of the 20th century, Picasso's ideas and personality dominated the development of the visual arts during most of the first half of the last century, and provided the incentive for many of the revolutionary artistic changes that took place during that time and after.

PICASSO

Chinese Art on view Sept. 4-Oct. 26: Conical bowl, about 800 years old, with impressed design of phoenix and flowers made of Ding porcelaneous stoneware, Northern Song to Jin Dynasties (12th-13th Centuries). A Curator's Conversation led by Laurie Barnes, Elizabeth B. McGraw Curator of Chinese Art, also will be held at 1 p.m. Sept. 6 during the Norton's annual Moon Festival celebration. In the early 12th century, artisans at the Ding kilns in Northern China made molds to form bowls and decorative motifs. Use of such molds allowed the manufacture of large numbers of vessels identical in both shape and decoration, thereby meeting the needs of a broad market. Many of the surviving molds bear carved inscriptions that date them to the late 12th and early 13th centuries, reflecting the increasing popularity of molded-decor techniques at that time. This bowl will be on view with three related works from the Norton's collection. ■

— The Norton Museum of Art is at 1451 S. Olive Ave. in West Palm Beach. It is open 10 a.m.-5 p.m. Tuesday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday, 10 a.m.-9 p.m. Thursday and 11 a.m.-5 p.m. Sunday. (Closed on Mondays and major holidays). General admission is $12 for adults, $5 for students with a valid ID, and free for members and children ages 12 and under. Special group rates are available. West Palm Beach residents receive free admission every Saturday with proof of residency. Palm Beach County residents receive free admission the first Saturday of each month with proof of residency. MOVIES

Here are my predictions and presumptions about the next four months at the movies (release dates in parenthesis).

■ Least pressure to succeed: “Guardians of the Galaxy” (Aug. 1) — It’s an offshoot from the “Avengers”-based Marvel Studios, so if it doesn’t do well, who cares? Marvel still has Iron Man, Captain America the Hulk and Thor to fall back on.

■ Sequels I’m most looking forward to — “22 Jump Street” (June 13) takes Channing Tatum and Jonah Hill to college, “How to Train Your Dragon 2” (June 13) follows Hiccup (Jay Baruchel) and his dragon as they meet his dragon-loving mother (Cate Blanchett), “Think Like a Man Too” (June 20) takes the guys and girls to bachelor(ette) parties in Vegas, and “Frank Miller’s Sin City: A Dame to Kill For” (Aug. 22) follows four vignettes with most of the cast from the 2005 original returning.

■ Sequels I’m least looking forward to — “Transformers: Age of Extinction” (June 27) goes in a new direction from the Shia LaBeouf-led first trilogy, but the trailers don’t look all that different, “The Purge: Anarchy” (July 18) shows what happens on a broader scale during a lawless night, and “The Expendables 3” (Aug. 15) follows one of the worst sequels ever made.

■ Unnecessary remakes — I must have missed it the day the world got up and demanded another shot at “Godzilla” (opened May 16), and “Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles” (Aug. 8) looks like a blurry CGI mess that’ll depend on a fully clothed Megan Fox to keep it grounded. Good luck with that.

■ Comedies with the most potential — Seth Rogen and Zac Efron are warring “Neighbors” (opened May 9) in a movie getting positive advance buzz, Mr. MacFarlane’s “A Million Ways to Die in the West” (May 30) stars Charlize Theron and looks hilarious, and Ms. Diaz and Mr. Segel make a “Sex Tape” (July 25) that goes viral.

■ Comedies with the biggest concerns — “Blended” (May 23) stars Adam Sandler and Drew Barrymore as single parents who have a horrible first date and then inexplicably find themselves vacationing together in Africa. Quick: What was Sandler’s last hit? “Tammy” (July 2) is questionable because although Melissa McCarthy can be brilliant, she can also churn out chum along the lines of last summer’s “Identity Thief.” This time she has Susan Sarandon playing her randy grandmother on a road trip. I’m worried.

■ Action movie with the best premise — “Edge of Tomorrow” (June 6) seems to combine “Groundhog Day” with “Source Code,” with Tom Cruise as a futuristic soldier who dies in battle but keeps being reborn to repeat the same day. Emily Blunt co-stars as a fellow warrior who relates to what he’s going through.

■ Will watch with heavy heart — “A Most Wanted Man” (July 25) features Philip Seymour Hoffman in one of his final performances. Word is that he’s phenomenal as a German operative investigating Islamic terrorist threats in Hamburg.

■ Biopic that could go south really fast — First Chadwick Boseman successfully portrayed Jackie Robinson in “42,” and now he takes on James Brown in “Get On Up” (Aug. 1), directed by Tate Taylor (“The Help”). It’s not that the actor and director aren’t capable, it’s that James Brown was such a unique and iconic figure that a faithful performance could quickly turn to caricature.

■ How could this franchise still be alive? — “Step Up All In” (July 25) is the fifth film in the series, and it again features a white boy dancer named Moose.

■ Documentaries worth noting — Kevin Spacey does Shakespeare in “Now: In the Wings on a World Stage” (opened May 2), comedian Mike Myers directs “Supermensch: The Legend of Shep Gordon” (June 6), about the legendary music manager, and Joe Manganiello (“True Blood”) follows up “Magic Mike” with “La Bare” (June 27), about professional male strippers.

■ Trailer that has teenage girls (and no one else) excited — “The Fault in Our Stars” (June 6). One look at the trailer and I was rooting for everyone to die.

■ Token female-driven cash cow — “Maleficent” (May 30). At least Angelina Jolie better hope it’s a cash cow, or her star power pricks a finger on a spinning wheel (it’s a “Sleeping Beauty” (1959) reference, people!).

■ Fascinating premise that deserves a chance — “Boyhood” (July 11) director Richard Linklater convened with Ethan Hawke and child actor Ellar Coltrane for a total of 39 days over 12 years (!) to chronicle a young man’s coming of age.

■ Movies that’ll deserve an audience but will probably get lost in the mix — From John Carney, the director of the Oscar-winning “Once,” comes “Begin Again” (July 4), in which Mark Ruffalo’s defeated music exec sees promise in a British starlet named Gretta (Keira Knightley).

◀ Chris Pratt in “Guardians of the Galaxy.”

Word is New York City is featured prominently, and with a whole lotta love. Also, Woody Allen’s “Magic in the Moonlight” (July 25) stars Emma Stone as a psychic and Colin Firth as the man who tries to expose her fraud, only to fall in love with her.

■ Loved it on stage, not sure about the big screen — The Clint Eastwood-directed “Jersey Boys” (June 20) has the monumental task of telling the story of Frankie Valli and the Four Seasons as their careers hit ups and downs over decades. It’s a jukebox musical, which means the songs don’t help advance the story. Expect this one to be l-o-n-g.

■ Most desperately needing a hit — “Jupiter Ascending” (July 18) will either restart the Wachowski siblings’ (“Matrix” trilogy) career or send them packing for a long, long time. And speaking of restarts: Both Michael Douglas and Diane Keaton could use some big-screen success in “And So It Goes” (July 11), directed by a man who needs a hit as much as anyone, Rob Reiner.

■ Least anticipated movie of the summer — In “Hercules” (July 25) Dwayne Johnson wears a loincloth and slays poorly animated CGI creatures as he vows vengeance on behalf of his family. When even the trailer can’t make an action movie look exciting, it’s a sure sign that trouble abounds.

■ Most anticipated movie of the summer — Director Bryan Singer returns to the “X-Men” world with “X-Men: Days of Future Past” (May 23), which combines the new mutants from “First Class” (2011) with those of the original trilogy. And a lot of Hugh Jackman, probably shirtless. The time travel, trippy story, quality effects and overall talent involved make this an absolute must-see. ■

Max's Harvest serves up a summer menu

SPECIAL TO FLORIDA WEEKLY

Downtown Delray Beach is all about destination dining.

You have 32 East, which has attracted the likes of New Age musician Yanni, and the Office, which is known for its burgers.

Then there is Max's Harvest, the Delray restaurant that bills itself as a "farm-to-fork" establishment. The restaurant has a new menu for summer.

Restaurateur Dennis Max and chef Eric Baker presented some of the dishes during a private tasting.

New appetizers include Florida shrimp and shishito peppers, with crispy tempura, nori salsa verde and bonito flakes ($13); and Crispy "Pig Wing" which has a Vietnamese caramel, noodle salad, cashews, cilantro, mint and chilies ($12).

New small plates include grilled and chilled calamari with ramp pesto, faro, black-eyed peas, arugula, artisan tomatoes and toasted pistachios ($17); grilled Jamaican jerk octopus with crispy polenta cake and a pineapple-fennel sauce vierge ($18); local ricotta gnocchi with Okeechobee oyster mushrooms, fava beans, thyme butter and truffle tremor cheese ($16); and roasted asparagus with poached farm egg, grilled ciabatta, pickled ramp and romesco sauce ($12). Large plate additions include golden tilefish with Florida clams, smoked fingerlings, artichokes, corn, pickled shallots and ginger beer braise ($36); and Murray's Brick Chicken with "angry potatoes," green onions, braised kale, baby carrots, spicy tomato, and aioli ($28). Florida shrimp paella with Spanish saffron rice, piquillo peppers, olives, English peas, chorizo and calamari ($19/$36) is also new to the menu.

New cocktails include the Peach Tree Aviation ($14) with Bols Genevieve Gin, Combiar Peach Liquor, crème de violette and lemon. The Rose Garden ($14) contains Tanduay Silver Rum, lemon, rosewater, fresh rose petals and champagne, along with rum-soaked sugar cane. Napoleon's Green Market ($14) consists of Illegal Mezcal, Mandarine Napoleon, jalapeño-infused agave, lime and a bell pepper-cucumber puree. The cocktails were created by Kris Bahamondes.

Max's Harvest is in Pineapple Grove at 169 NE Second Ave., two blocks north of East Atlantic Avenue, downtown Delray Beach; 381-9970 or maxsharvest.com. ■

RA Sushi plans Nicky's Week fundraiser

RA Sushi will host its largest annual fundraiser, Nicky's Week, to help kids fighting cancer and other deadly diseases.

The event, held May 25-31, will benefit St. Jude Children's Research Hospital.

RA Sushi will donate 100 percent of sales from a variety of menu items and beverages to St. Jude to help support the hospital's lifesaving mission. Since its inception, Nicky's Week has raised more than $1.3 million for St. Jude Children's Research Hospital.

The menu includes: Edamame, Tootsy Maki, Shrimp Nigiri, Pork Gyoza, Chicken Yakitori, Garlic Citrus Yellowtail, plus select beverages.

Nicky's Week was developed in memory of St. Jude patient Nicholas "Nicky" Mailliard, of Scottsdale, Ariz., who died of brain cancer in 2005 at age 13. He was the nephew of one of the founders of RA Sushi.

In Palm Beach County, RA Sushi is at Downtown at the Gardens, 11701 Lake Victoria Gardens Ave., Palm Beach Gardens; 340-2112. ■

THE DISH

Highlights from local menus

The Dish: Lasagna

The Place: Mario the Baker, 1007 State Road 7, Royal Palm Beach; 798-4030 or theoriginalmariothebaker.com

The Price: $9.50

The Details: Mario the Baker is our go-to place for food when we're in Royal Palm Beach.

Hungry before or after a movie? You can always count on Mario to fill you up.

Inside, the brightly lit space is all about the food.

The no-fuss fare includes pizzas and traditional specialties like lasagna, packed with layers of pasta and ricotta baked and served with a rich meat sauce. The light-as-air garlic rolls that accompany are perfect for sopping up Mario's slightly sweet, slightly spicy sauce.
