The central nervous system possesses the necessary machinery to regenerate its nerve fibers after injury, however, a variety of inhibitory factors prevent it from doing so, one being the glial scar.