

- K: Yes, sir, I sure am.
- P: Well, it used to be right across the street from the railroad station where the railroad, where the tracks ran right down the street right next to the park. And it's a block...a block east of University Avenue and the park. I don't know where the park is now...where the courthouse square is there is a park.
- K: Yes, I know where you mean. So you didn't live on campus then, you lived....
- P: I didn't live on the campus. I lived out in the...had the board and lodging at the hotel and the last three months work was too heavy for me to carry the work, and then I boarded with another student.
- K: Do you remember if there were more than two buildings at the time, sir? I think there was Buckman Hall and there was Language Hall? But I'm not sure if there were more.
- P: There were two buildings...let's see. I think the Engineering Building may have been built then, but they had one little building was the Law Department and the Law Library. And there was Buckman Hall and...there were two halls.
- K: Language Hall? Would that have been the other one? Now it's called Anderson Hall.
- P: Yes. I'm not quite sure. I think the Engineering Building... they had a small Engineering building, but I'm not sure. I can't remember.
- K: That's alright. Then during those four years you were studying law as an undergraduate, the law school wasn't considered....
- P: Well, I only went there only two years.
- K: Okay.
- P: I studied a few subjects that I thought would help me in law. I took logic, psychology, and English. And I took _____ mathematics because I liked it, and then I took my law. And I took all those simultaneously, but I had the classes when there wasn't law classes, I attended the others. But I concentrated on my law mostly.
