

- P: Yes. I think I was closest to him. Millard, being up in West Florida where he was governor, may know something and it might be well to interview him.
- K: I've written to him and I'm going to talk to him.
- P: Good.
- K: But I don't really know how closely they were associated.
- P: Mr. Sears is dead, Lex Green is dead, Wilcox is dead. Caldwell and I are the only two that remain of that crowd.
- K: Did the congressmen in any way respect one of the senators more than any other or did, was there good cooperation on behalf of Florida among all the representatives in Congress?
- P: There was good cooperation as far as I'm concerned and I think there was, between the others, they, I think that sometimes the House members think the senators try to steal part of their credit. If you get in a project and the senators announced it first, but that never happened with me. When they made an announcement they announced it with the senator in cooperation with Congressman Peterson, did so-and-so.
- K: So there was at least the normal amount of cooperation.
- P: Yes, yes it was. I got, I got perfect cooperation from both of them.
- K: Would you possibly know if Mr. Trammell had any close friends among the senators? I know we've talked that you didn't get over to the Senate much, but I was thinking that maybe Richard Russell from Georgia or....
- P: I, I don't know, as I said I didn't know when he'd leave the Senate, I don't where....
- K: Yes.
- P: But I imagine he was, let's see, I don't think Dick was there then. Dick began his service in the Senate in 1938.
- K: I think he had just come in...
