

up aliens. We used the Orange Bowl as a concentration camp down there. We did gather, I have clippings there that can verify this, that it's not out of my head, I have proof of it. We did collect an awful lot and we had to break down a few doors here and there because the element of surprise was the thing that we wanted to try to keep foremost. And not just go up and knock on the door. We went in the we found quite a few things although it's doubtful that they would have been able to create much in the way of sabotage. As those who came ashore from submarines later, which I can tell you about as to when it happen and what really took place. The FBI was having a war traffic school about then and they invited the members of the Patrol in that area, which I was one, and the various other police departments to attend it. And it was really.

CW: What's a war traffic school?

AF: Well, it has to do with your responsibilities in the case of movement of troops on the highways. It has to do with security of the coastline, the enforcement of vehicles that were being used on the roads, that they had blackout headlights. Which meant that better than 50% of the headlight was painted on the top half so that they couldn't be seen from above. A light can be seen on the road, but as to the vehicle itself it wouldn't illuminate so much. It has to do with the governing of lighthouses even, showing that their candlepower would be decreased. Because this is something that I will be telling you about later how it would make it perfect for a submarine to land offshore to