

F: Sometimes you use an _____

P: Then you put it in the pot and put it over the fire, the campfire?

F: Fixing these, cooking these biscuits you always leave the lid in the hot coals and then got you pot, pot hot and put them in there and put the lid on them and put the hot coals on top of the lid and brown them on top as well as on the bottom.

P: Uh huh. Hey, that's neat. That sounds good.

F: Yeah.

P: And then what did you eat with them? Did you put syrup on them, cane syrup or....

F: Well, you eat biscuits with any other food you had. It'd come time, we'd have honey and some time we'd have syrup and so on. You'd eat biscuits with any other food you had all the time.

P: Did you ever see panthers when you little?

F: See what?

P: Panthers?

F: No.

P: _____ cats?

F: No, no, no.

?: Did you ever make catfish stew?

F: I, I would eat a lot of it at different times, but the other fellow usually made that. I didn't ever make no catfish stew, but Mr. Alf Dorsett just passed away here a few weeks ago, he ninety-two years old, he used to make it occasionally when we'd go out on fish or something or another. He was real good.

?: My granddaddy used to make it. He said every Friday they'd go fishing. They'd work during the week and Friday they'd go fishing, on Saturday they'd go to town, one Sunday they'd go to church. And every Friday, they'd set up a fishcamp and go fishing and, you know, they'd cut off the heads; they'd make catfish stew.

P: So you use the heads for the stew.

F: Yeah, yeah.

?: You use heads and tomatoes and green pepper and whatever you had and made a stew out of it.

F: Yeah.
