

P: What did you say the Suwannee was a few minutes ago when you were putting it down 'cause there wasn't any fish in it?

E: Oh, just a stream of water.

P: Okay. That's what I thought you said.

E: Yeah.

P: Just a stream.

E: But, the, lot of people, it's just like a, when you leave your home and go somewhere else, you're in another place -- ooh, that's a beautiful place. Just like the mountains. Now the people here want to go up in the mountains, go up in the mountains. Well, when they come back from the mountains, they come back home, the people in the mountains -- ooh! I love it down here in Florida! I like Florida. Those people up there, you see, come down here and in other words, they don't know the river like we do. We live on the river and it's just common to you.

P: Uh huh.

E: It just don't mean anything. But people that comes in, that don't know anything about it, it means a lot to them. They build houses down their way. They got houses all up and down the river. They get flooded out. High water.

R: You knew it flooded some.

P: Uh huh.

E: With the, got where the, got it drained pretty well. But the state is coming in and making regulations how they can build these homes on account of the sewage system...

P: Uh huh.

E: ...running into the river.

P: Uh huh. Do you think that's a good idea?

E: Huh?

P: Do you think that's a good idea?

E: Yeah, yeah.

R: I, I think it is.

E: It sure is. You see, they really want to get it into wild life, but a lot of them was fighting it, see.

P: Uh huh.
