R: about these old _____ 'cause she'll probably remember some of those...

P: Okay.

R: ...much better than I.

P: Okay. These are mostly hunting questions. Oh, with fish, now did you ever get fish from the Gulf when you were growing up?

R: Uh huh.

P: Did you trade?

R: Yeah. It was a very common practice in the fall for people to, sometimes they would go in groups. They would put covers on their wagons and go down to the Gulf and they would carry potatoes and meal or lard or meat and carry it down there, swap it to the fisherman for fish.

P: In the town of Suwannee.

R: Well, from where we lived they went to Horseshoe mostly?

P: Uh huh.

R: You been to Horseshoe?

P: Uh huh.

R: Well, that's where they went then, most of the time. And then they'd big the fish back, lug it, back to going when the yellow roe were in and we'd get those and then they'd salt those and make a brine like and preserve those. We had to take them out at night and soak them overnight in water and get the salt out of them and then we'd eat them, but you didn't _____ salt _____

P: Uh huh. And would you get like smoked mullet? Would you trade for fish also, not just roe, but for fish?

R: Yeah, you'd get the fish and the mullet, I mean the roe would be in the mullet, see.

P: Oh, okay.

R: You would dress them and get the roe out.

P: What other things do you remember trading for in the beach area or the Gulf area? Other kinds of fish.

R: Mullet's about the only thing that I remembered that we ever got.

P: Did you go over there ever with your father?

R: One time was all that I ever went. We planned to go another time, but it came up a
