

SG to sell Sun deal Committee to market paper

By DAVID COHEN

Student Government is helping the Sun shine its rays across campus.

Student Body President Joe Goldberg announced plans Tuesday for a promotional committee to help push forward the $46,000 Gainesville Sun Readership Program recently purchased by the Student Senate.

The program involves the daily distribution of 2,500 special "student edition" papers on campus that SG will purchase incrementally at 10 cents a copy from tuition-funded reserves.

"This (the marketing committee) is to ensure that students take advantage and understand all the benefits associated with this new program," Goldberg wrote in a memorandum. "This includes, but is not limited to, assisting the management at the Gainesville Sun on effective marketing strategies and programs, distribution and promoting awareness of the program."

The committee of students is headed by Sun bill sponsor Sen. Mike Belle. Belle was not available for comment.

Goldberg said the committee will start meeting soon but plans to end its work before the Sun student edition makes its way to campus next month.

He called the infant committee a "think tank to get ideas together."

"This is only to help them get off the ground," he said. "Then it's going to be up to the Gainesville Sun to implement those strategies."

Goldberg said the committee would not have a stake in the Sun's editorial decisions.

"The committee should in no way, shape or form help the editorial department," he said. "If it is, the committee will no longer be around."

But William McKeen, chairman of UF's journalism department, said some of the goings-on have left him skeptical.

"The whole thing that has come up is kind of unusual," he said. "I think they do some really weird things under the name of marketing. My concern is that there is going to be an editorial relationship between SG and the Gainesville Sun."

Student Government

Master lecturer Mike Foley, who teaches reporting classes in the College of Journalism and Communications, said he met with the managing editor of the Sun last week and fears faded.

"We were assured that there's going to be no journalistic problems," he said. "You can't blame Student Government for trying to market this addition because they are paying 46,000 bucks for it. As long as this committee doesn't get involved in content, newsworthiness, story selection or any other journalistic decision-making, I don't see a problem."

Foley said he is confident that the Sun will make the right choices.

"I'm giving them the benefit of the doubt," he said. "I have no reason to

In the line of fire

A firefighter puts on his gear before battling a blaze Tuesday at Ridgeway Roof Truss Co. on South Main Street. Approximately 20 firefighters and six rescue units responded to the fire, which began in one of the company's storage facilities and forced about 60 employees to evacuate the building. The cause of the fire is still under investigation.

Award-winning UF professor and author dead at 63

■ HIS BOOK "THE COTTON CLUB" INSPIRED THE 1984 MOVIE.

By ASHLEY JONES
 Alligator Contributing Writer

James "Jim" Haskins, a UF literature professor and alumnus, passed away Wednesday from a long-term illness at the age of 63.

Haskins was a noted author and key player in the early development of the African-American Studies program at UF.

"He was one of the first African-American professors to diversify this institution," said

Irma McClaurin, a professor in the department of anthropology.

"He was compassionate about making African American history celebrated and acknowledged."

Haskins was the author of more than 100 books including "I Am Rosa Parks," written with Rosa Parks, and "The Cotton Club," which was the inspiration for the 1984 motion picture of the same title.

Terry Mills, a professor of sociology and the associate dean for Minority Affairs, said that more people need to recognize Haskins' contribution to literature.

"I'm very saddened by this loss," Mills said.

"He was a very distinguished professor, scholar, playwright and author."

Haskins won numerous awards for his writing, including the Coretta Scott King Award, the Alabama Library Association Award, the Washington Post Children's Book Guild Award and the Carter G. Woodson Award for young adult nonfiction, which he won twice.

Haskins

"He was one of the most prolific writers of the 20th century," McClaurin said. "He brought to the classroom the same commitment he had toward his writing. He was dedicated in and out of the classroom."

Emily Dyson, a former student of Haskins, said "his contribution to literature is underrated."

Dyson said the subjects he wrote about years before are still going on and are still relevant today.

"He was brilliant, creative and dedicated," McClaurin said. "We will miss him dearly."

Gator Growl discount tickets to go on sale next week

Tickets for the 80th annual Gator Growl, the largest student-run pep rally in the world, will be available for purchase starting July 13.

Up to 15,000 tickets will be available only to students at a discounted rate of $5 at the University Box Office located inside the Constans Theatre (across from the Reitz Union).

Performers for the event were unknown at press time, but Growl officials announced in a release that a decision will be made by the end of July.

Non-student, general-admission tickets are $18 and will be available through Ticketmaster.

■ Student Sen. Sundee Rawal paid about $70 to see "Riverdance" in February, but with new Student Government-subsidized student tickets, he will be center-stage at "Cats" for $10 next Spring. See story, pg. 4.

Law school to offer new master's degree track

Students of UF's Levin College of Law this Fall will have the opportunity to study for a new degree in international tax law.

The program is applicable to students who want to go into international accounting, international law firms or finance ministries of foreign countries, said professor Michael Friel, director of the college's Graduate Tax Program.

"It's really sort of a natural fit with our existing master's degree in taxation," he said.

The large number of international students enrolled in UF's tax program led to talks about the new one-year track, Friel said.

The new program will accept about 10 students this year, which will soon grow to 25, he said.

Reporter jailed for not revealing anonymous source

■ SHE FACES MONTHS IN PRISON FOR HONORING CONFIDENTIALITY.

By CHUCK BAER
Alligator Contributing Writer

A federal judge jailed New York Times reporter Judith Miller on Wednesday for refusing to divulge her source to a grand jury investigating the Bush administration's leak of an undercover CIA operative's name.

The prosecutor, U.S. Attorney Patrick Fitzgerald, responded in court to Miller's refusal to name her source by saying "we can't have 50,000 journalists" each making their own decisions about whether to reveal sources.

"We cannot tolerate that," he said. "We are trying to get to the bottom of whether a crime was committed and by whom."

The case has aroused passions in the media community, with The Newspaper Guild leading a two-minute moment of silence in newsrooms Wednesday as well as protests around the nation.

"I think it's a sad day for journalism, a sad day for freedom and a sad day for democracy," said Bill O'Meara, the guild's New York chapter secretary of the treasury.

The case is seen as a key test of First Amendment press freedom, and many media groups have lined up behind the reporters. Thirty-one states and the District of Columbia have shield laws protecting reporters from having to identify their confidential sources.

However, in this time of the Patriot Act and increasing tolerance of governmental intrusion, some see upholding the First Amendment more as hiding behind it.

"Copyrighted Material
Syndicated Content
Available from Commercial News Providers"

"It seems the only people who care are other journalists," said Jon Roosenraad, assistant dean of UF's College of Journalism and Communications. "It's very hard to get average citizens fired up about freedom of the press issues."

Earlier in the day, co-defendant Time magazine reporter Matthew Cooper said he would cooperate with the investigation into the leak of the identity of CIA operative Valerie Plame because his source gave him permission.

As for Miller, unless she decides to talk, she will be held until the grand jury ends its work in October. The judge speculated that Miller's confinement might cause her source to give her a more specific waiver of confidentiality, as did Cooper's.

The case continues the debate on the proper use of anonymous sources, highlighted recently by the retraction of a Newsweek magazine story on alleged abuses at the Guantanamo Bay detention facility and the revelation of the Deep Throat source from the Watergate scandal.

"I really don't like confidential sources," said Mike Foley, a master lecturer in the College of Journalism and Communications. "But I understand why they are used, and I understand that's the way the world works, especially in Washington."

At issue is who in the administration leaked Plame's identity. Her name was disclosed in a column by Robert Novak days after her husband, former Ambassador Joseph Wilson, impugned part of President Bush's justification for invading Iraq.

Wilson was sent to Africa by the Bush administration to investigate an intelligence claim that Saddam Hussein may have purchased yellowcake uranium from Niger in the late 1990s for use in nuclear weapons. Wilson said he could not verify the claim and criticized the administration for manipulating the intelligence to "exaggerate the Iraqi threat."

Disclosure of an undercover intelligence officer's identity can be a federal crime if prosecutors can show the leak was intentional and the person who released the information knew of the officer's secret status.

Cooper spoke to White House Deputy Chief of Staff Karl Rove after Wilson's public criticism of Bush and before Novak's column ran, according to Rove's lawyer, Robert Luskin, who denies that Rove leaked Plame's identity to anyone. Cooper's story mentioning Plame's name appeared after Novak's column. Miller did some reporting, but never wrote a story.

Natural hormone could ease, shorten time in braces

UF researchers: Wearing time could be halved

By LYNDSSEY LEWIS
Alligator Writer
llewis@alligator.org

Orthodontic patients soon may find their time in braces cut by half, as UF researchers are testing the abilities of a natural hormone to biochemically assist in realigning teeth.

While modern orthodontics relies only on force to move patients' teeth and keep them in place, the hormone relaxin — which is often used to ease labor pains by softening collagen in pelvic tissue — could potentially soften gum fibers as well, said Timothy Wheeler, chairman of orthodontics at the UF College of Dentistry.

Because of the firm grip held by gum fibers, teeth are difficult to realign and almost always return to their original locations in the mouth after patients' braces are removed.

But relaxin injections may loosen the fibers' grip on teeth and ease the process of shifting them, Wheeler said.

"We're not changing the way people grow or the necessity for appliances like headgear," Wheeler said. "What we're trying to do is ... ease the process."

Wheeler said he hoped relaxin might be commercially available within the next four to five years.

"My highest hope is that it will allow us to move teeth faster and more efficiently while improving the process of retention," he said.

STUDENT GOVERNMENT

Senate may lower Phillips student tickets to $10

Christian music event also in works

By JUSTIN RICHARDS

Alligator Writer
jrichards@alligator.org

Student Sen. Sundeep Rawal paid about $70 to see "Riverdance" in February, but with new Student Government-subsidized student tickets, he will be center-stage at "Cats" for $10 next Spring.

A bill allocating $115,000 to subsidize student tickets at the Phillips Center for the Performing Arts for the 2005-2006 season passed its first reading Tuesday in Student Senate.

Ticket prices can be as high as $70. If the bill passes, student tickets throughout the auditorium, for any show, will cost $10.

"Theoretically, we could buy out the orchestra pit," Sen. Jared Hernandez said.

Though the bill has not yet passed, $10 tickets for the 2005-2006 season have been on sale since June 3. Phillips Center Director Michael Blachly said he is confident the subsidy, to be matched by the Phillips Center, will come.

He said 828 student tickets already have been sold for the upcoming season, expressing doubt that the tickets will last through Spring.

"We're facing a problem that we all want," he told the Senate on Tuesday night. "The supply and demand issue is one that's working favorably toward your peers."

The Phillips Center has sold reduced-price student tickets since 2001, but SG has only subsidized them since Feb. 15, when it granted $75,000 to fund the tickets through June 19.

To avoid abuse of the program, a Gator 1 Card is required at purchase of and admission with the student tickets.

In other performance-related grant news, SG may help fund "Engage," a Christian rock concert on campus. It is scheduled for Sept. 8, though the artist and venue are undetermined.

Student Government Productions, SG's entertainment bureau, and Gator Christian Life are co-sponsoring the event. Because GCL is not an SG-funded organization, it has asked SG to cover its half of the $20,000 bill.

If the Senate grants the request, SG's half will cover artist fees, and SGP's half will cover production costs.

GCL is considering two popular national acts — Blindside and Skillet — to be supported by two local bands. Former GCL president Galen Wood said although contemporary Christian music is the sixth-largest genre in the nation, it is not represented at UF.

UF has 20 Christian organizations and 2,700 involved students, Wood said.

"Why do we have classical concerts when this type of music outsells classical two-to-one?" Wood said.

However, Sen. Jamie Wathen expressed concern about the absence of SGP Chairman Joey Van de Bogart at Tuesday's meeting.

"I don't feel comfortable if SGP says, 'You pay $10,000, we'll spot the other 10,' and then they don't show up to the meeting," she said.

The bill requires one more reading and a vote to pass.

Gainesville congregation endorses same-sex marriage

By ALEJANDRA CANCINO

Alligator Contributing Writer

The United Church of Gainesville has approved in spirit a resolution endorsing same-sex marriage, which it has practiced for years.

The United Church of Christ's General Synod, the church's rule-making body, officially adopted the resolution Monday. The Gainesville congregation was first asked to approve it at least as early as April.

However, the local congregation affiliated with the United Church of Christ has followed an "open and affirming" ideology toward the gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender community since 1991.

Larry Reimer, a United Church of Gainesville pastor, said the Gainesville congregation unanimously approved the resolution.

"All people are children of God," he said. "Marriage is afforded to everyone else in the United States, including convicted felons and sex offenders. The only people in America that can't get married are gay people."

Monday's resolution encourages the church's 1.3 million members nationwide to adopt "wedding policies at their churches that do not discriminate against gay and lesbian couples."

And it urges the congregations to support legislation to grant equal rights to all couples, regardless of their gender, and to work against laws banning gay marriage.

"This is a very important and exciting step for the gay community and the people of faith who made this resolution," said Tamara Cohen, director of UF's Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgender Affairs.

Cohen said because opponents of the resolution try to define "marriage" as a sanctified union between a man and a woman, it was important to use "marriage" instead of a word with a lesser meaning.

Reimer said some people left the Gainesville congregation in 1991, but since then there has been a positive response from church members, which now number about 600.

The United Church of Christ was formed in 1957, and later became the first major Christian church to ordain an openly gay minister.

Mosquito numbers controlled

By STEPHEN MAGRUDER

Alligator Writer
smagruder@alligator.org

In a city used to roller-coaster population swings, local health officials are happy to report controlled numbers of a particularly less-than-welcome resident: the mosquito.

"Typically, it's a peak time, but right now we're just not seeing it," Gainesville Mosquito Control entomologist Kellie Etherson said.

Florida's June-to-October hurricane season, which often brings months of rainy weather, helps mosquitoes breed wherever standing water collects.

However, this season has seen fewer mosquitoes, Etherson said.

Gainesville Mosquito Control, which operates inside city limits, emphasizes controlling mosquito larvae before they hatch by draining standing water in low-lying areas and using mosquito-eating fish and bacteria.

Etherson said Gainesville hasn't had to spray for mosquitoes this year because officials continuously monitor about 50 poorly draining "hot spots" throughout Gainesville where mosquitoes are likely to breed.

"In past years, the spraying has become less frequent, and that's what we strive for," Etherson said. "We look at spraying as a failure."

"Typically, it's a peak time, but right now we're just not seeing it."

Kellie Etherson
Gainesville entomologist

Gainesville Mosquito Control's Web site states more than 200 mosquitoes can breed from one tablespoon of water.

Adult mosquitoes have the ability to transmit diseases such as West Nile Virus and encephalitis to animals and humans. Alachua County Health Department Environmental Health Director Paul Myers said four horses and 14 chickens have tested positive for Eastern Equine Encephalitis in Alachua County this year, but no human cases have been reported.

"While the risk is low, the risk is not zero," Myers said.

Draining plant containers, bottles, gutters and anything else that can collect water is recommended to avoid breeding your own mosquitoes.

To avoid mosquito bites, Etherson advised staying indoors at dawn and dusk, as well as wearing like-colored outfits.

"Mosquitoes don't see color, but they see contrast," she said.

Mosquitoes also are attracted to chemicals in sweat, as well as certain odors such as perfume and cologne.

Mosquito repellents containing the chemical DEET also are recommended, as well as two new, more natural chemicals recently approved for use: Picaridin and oil of lemon eucalyptus.

Mosquito populations surged in Gainesville last year, following flooding from hurricanes Frances and Jeanne where officials could not reach all the standing water sites.

doubt their ethics at all. That's our biggest concern. You don't want to compromise any of the journalistic standards. So far, I've seen no evidence that anyone wants to do that."

He said the editor of the student section has not been appointed yet.

Goldberg said SG would not spend additional money to implement the committee's marketing strategy.

"We're paying for these papers," he said.

Goldberg said SG's executive branch has about $58,000 allotted this year for advertising, but the whole of SG spends hundreds of thousands of dollars annually on promotion.

Senate President Pro Tempore John Boyles said that even without a budget, the committee could use SG's Web site, UF's Wednesday Update e-mail service, the Student Activities Center and other methods to promote the Sun.

Boyles said SG has created committees in the past to increase awareness of the USA Today and The New York Times readership programs.

"I believe that the goal of the committee is to help to promote a service that SG is providing," he said.

Boyles said SG is wary of spending money advertising what student Activity & Service fees fund.

"We do our best to not use student money to get the word out about what their money is already doing," he said.

We're back.

Built better, stronger and faster than before, the Department of Darts & Laurels is eager to tackle the raging bull that is American life, circa 2005.

Funny, though, as our eyes wander to the countryside of France and glue themselves to the spinning spokes of the 189 men competing in this year's Tour de France.

How else should we spend Summer B, as our tests and papers pile up, than watching four hours of biking every day through the majestic French countryside?

Oh, there are better ways. Silly us.

We're a little wistful as we pedal into this week's edition of...

Darts & Laurels

While we rev ourselves up for the main field, we'll stay on topic and hand a the-first-crash-is-the-deepest LAUREL to Lance Armstrong, everyone's favorite lung, brain, abdomen and testicular cancer survivor, for making a class gesture Wednesday.

After the former leader of the Tour de France, David Zabriskie, crashed and dropped out of first place Tuesday, Armstrong would not don the symbolic yellow jersey of the top rider until a Tour official made him — or else.

Since Armstrong himself crashed several times while in contention, including twice during his victorious Tour run in 2003, he's no stranger to reversals of yellow-jersey fortune.

Other riders have made similar moves in the past for their fallen competitors, but we salute Armstrong for giving ever more credibility to a sport already known for its politeness.

Switching gears to a less polite frame of reference, we'll expel an of-course-we're-not-a-culture-of-fear DART to the many governmental agencies involved in Esuvee.com, a "consumer awareness and safety" Web site that has aired a number of esoteric TV and movie-theater ads.

Instead of spending the millions of dollars they're spending on the program to lobby for changes to the auto industry's practices, the groups behind Esuvee.com instead hold the SUV driver responsible in "teaching" them how to handle the dangerous equipment.

A true case of government on our side.

We've been called esoteric a few million times before, so we'll mount the highest horse in the land and stretch to hand a putting-away-childish-things LAUREL to the Student Senate for quietly ending the Gator Growl funding debate.

Hear us out: Instead of passing an even more exorbitant bill in defiance of the earlier veto of $200,000 in Growl funding, the Senate chose to stick close to the $140,000 approved by the administration.

The new plan also will reduce 15,000 student Growl tickets to $5 instead of giving the $140,000 away scot-free, which was one criticism of the earlier plan.

Disagree with the so-called "bailout" or not, Student Government officials' willingness to end the madness shows strength.

With the finish line in sight, we use the last gas in our tank to build a thank-you-for-seeing-that-two-wrongs-don't-make-a-right LAUREL for New York Times reporter Judith Miller, who could spend months behind bars for not divulging her sources to a federal prosecutor.

Talk about crash and burn into the blind steam locomotive of justice.

Miller made a decision anyone with ethical standards should support — she refused to sell her livelihood short to appease faceless officials who don't care about the implications of their actions.

In its own way, it's much like Lance Armstrong, on a hectic street in Chambord, zipping up a blue-and-white jersey in defiance of the rules for the sake of decency.

Two worlds share a common thread

It's trying times like these that allow us to see our true enemies.

Everyone — Democrat or Republican, religious or atheist, boxers or briefs — must rally together against the unstoppable political force that has crushed our hopes and dreams time and time again.

Old people.

It's one of the most perplexing but constant facts of life: Old people are good at government.

They're everywhere you look in U.S. elected office, winning races for everything from made-up-sounding local posts such as comptroller to Congress and the presidency.

The problem with this, as we're finding out more and more every day, is that old people eventually reach a threshold of technological sophistication after which they are incapable of understanding anything new.

All advances from that point on thereby are given the politically devastating "newfangled" tag, which causes years if not decades of problems in those areas.

Because these old politicians are unwilling to learn even the most basic facts about the technology they're expected to regulate, we end up with legislation that ignores the real issues and serves only to stifle progress.

For instance, only a court composed of the most technologically inept justices could have found for the recording industry in their case against Grokster.

To make it very simple, the court decided filesharing companies can be held liable if their users share illegal files.

There's a lot more to it than that, and theoretically the companies under fire are those who "actively encourage" the sharing of illegal files — which, of course, none of them do.

But the point is that this whole idea is 100 percent flawed from a technological standpoint.

Filesharing companies can't stop the sharing of illegal media files without restricting legal files at the same time.

It can't be done right now; there's no magic "this song can't be shared or you're sinning against the poor musicians" filter.

Matt Sanchez
Pure Foppery
msanchez@alligator.org

Because justices had no background in filesharing to work from — and because they obviously didn't do any research — we're left with an insanely restrictive precedent whose only saving grace is that it's too far-fetched for it to be enforced strictly.

The same thing is happening with out-of-touch officials right here in Gainesville.

Proponents of extended bar closing times — which include the majority of UF students, from what I can see — say an extra hour would stop the dangerous stampede of drunken Gainesvillians that hits the streets at exactly 2 a.m.

But the old people on the City Commission say bar closing times can't be extended until there are, among other things, better anti-getting-drunk advertisements in bars.

It doesn't matter if you're for or against extended closing times — I'm not convinced either way myself — that logic doesn't make any sense.

Commissioners won't consider extending closing times, which has been proposed as a way to curb alcohol-related accidents, until more is done to curb alcohol-related accidents.

That's like saying they wouldn't consider starting a cash-for-guns program to get guns off the street until we put up a bunch of "You Shouldn't Shoot People. Seriously." posters.

But logic has no place in the land of aged politics. Because if there's anything we've learned from history, it's that if you ignore the scary new developments of today, you'll have a stress-free tomorrow.

Or at least we're hoping the old folks in charge keep thinking so until someone pulls the microchip-implanted rug out from underneath them, then we finally can step into the future.

Fight looms in Court's musical chairs

Okay, Republicans, roll those saliva-drenched tongues back into your mouths and jam those eyes back into their sockets.

This is the retirement of a distinguished Supreme Court justice, not a Tex Avery cartoon.

Hyperbole aside, Republicans must be giddy over the opportunity to replace Sandra Day O'Connor with a more conservative justice. In less than the amount of time it took President Bush to read her three-sentence retirement letter — longer than one might expect — Republicans and Democrats were already in front of the cameras attempting to shape what inevitably will be a gruesome partisan battle.

At one press conference, Democrats might as well have proclaimed their love for Sandra D. on top of Greased Lightning. Across town Bush flexed his thesaurus muscle by using "fair" three times in a single sentence as he scolded the behavior of naughty Democrats ready to oppose more judicial nominees.

Despite the O'Connor lovefest by Democrats, their call for a "mainstream" nominee in the mold of a centrist like O'Connor is exactly what America needs. Although American politics is perceived as highly partisan, the American electorate as a whole is moderate in nature.

Although she denies it, Justice O'Connor was the decisive swing vote on many 5-4 decisions. Replacing her with a hard-line conservative would be a direct attack on important rulings that upheld the right to privacy, separation of church and state, restrictions on campaign finance and war-time civil liberties.

Bush could tip the scales of justice drastically by nominating a clone of justices Antonin Scalia or Clarence Thomas, but

Aaron Blye
Blye's Eyes
ablye@alligator.org

even the slightest inclination of doing so would put Democrats in a Hulk-like rage.

If Democrats are smart, they'll prolong the appointment process. Not only would this force Bush to nominate a more moderate candidate, but it could have devastating effects on the Republican Party.

The party of fiscal conservatism already has taken a back seat to the right-wing social agenda. With millions of dollars at their disposal, right-wing interest groups continue to factionalize the GOP by demanding a justice who opposes gay marriage and abortion.

Bush recently had to defend rumored nominee and close friend Alberto Gonzalez when right-wing interest groups attacked the Attorney General for his sympathy toward abortion rights. This could get very ugly.

The president should surprise everyone by picking a moderate-conservative justice from the outset. We all know he loves to stick the good ol' presidential thumb in the eye of the Democratic Party. Otherwise, he will once again miss an opportunity to unite a bitterly divided America.

Unfortunately, this seems unlikely considering his previous track record. Not to mention, the current list of likely nominees covers an ideological spectrum of conservative to...well, conservative.

One thing is for sure: American politics are about to get more fun than a barrel of monkeys. Actually, who am I kidding? Nothing is more fun than a barrel of monkeys.

Letter to the Editor

Newspaper projects an affront to university town

Editor: I long have cherished a belief in an absolute right to freedom of the press. That belief has been shaken in the last month in this university town.

As if the Alligator were not enough to separate the students from the rest of us, the New York Times-owned Gainesville Sun was reported here to be working with the UF School of Journalism to create pages with news for area college students.

Our students apparently have other things on their minds. And if they don't they soon will, courtesy of a New York Times concept.

But that degree of separation pales by comparison with the the likely result of a reported intent of the New York Times to publish a newspaper targeted to a poor black community created by de jure/de facto segregation in East Gainesville.

When I left Orlando, three weeklies and a newsletter targeted "news" to blacks, who generally are left out of positive news in The Orlando Sentinel.

But at least they were black-owned.

Still the result was to move the community toward racial separation: "voluntarily separate" but "equal."

Such "specialization" in a university town dumbs down our common interests. All that is left for us to share are the TV wonders of Entertainment Tonight and of course all Gator sports.

Drafted Sounds

By JUNE CAPPIELLO

After the recent hiatus of the nationally popular local band Hot Water Music, Gainesville held its breath about The Draft.

They debuted Monday night as a new band with most of the same members from Hot Water Music, sans vocalist and guitarist Chuck Ragan. With the addition of Todd Rockhill, Gainesville's newest band consists of Chris Wollard, Jason Black and George Rebelo.

When The Draft took the stage at Common Grounds July 4, it was apparent immediately that the band already has a following, thanks to Hot Water Music's previous success and the support of 240 or so audience members.

"It's cool that they came out to support a band that didn't exist until a few months ago," said Neil Hughes, a 20-year-old journalism major at UF. The number of people who came to see the band for a show that wasn't advertised heavily impressed many people in the crowd. Some people even drove from Chicago to see the show, said Aaron Lay, a Common Grounds employee.

It may have surprised some people in the crowd to hear lead singer and guitarist Wollard, who has played countless shows from coast to coast and overseas, admit to being nervous after playing the first song.

But then, the night was full of surprises.

During the set, Buddy Schaub and Derron Nuhfer of Less Than Jake fame joined the band on stage to play the trombone and saxophone for one song.

"We only had one practice with those guys," Wollard said.

And perhaps the ultimate surprise came when Matt Skiba of Alkaline Trio sang onstage with The Draft, along with Tim McClrath, lead singer of Rise Against.

"It was awesome... it's still kind of sinking in," said Black, the bassist, after the show.

Rise Against's surprise set lasted only three songs, but with a mini moshpit, some spilled beer and a mischievous audience member setting off a firecracker, it was the perfect precursor to the headliner's performance. McClrath dedicated their last song, "Give It All," to the members of The Draft, whom he has shared the stage with four times in the last eight years.

Outside the venue and away from the excitement, Common Grounds provided free hamburgers and hotdogs to concert-goers before the final set, and the patio was filled with Converse and conversation, giving the show a relaxed, family barbecue atmosphere.

The crowd readily accepted The Draft, and under the Christmas lights that hung around the venue, it seemed like Christmas in July for the audience and band members alike.

One fan summed up the show: "I used to live here for five years... this was the culmination of what Gainesville's music scene has to offer," 24-year-old Erick Charles said.

"Definitely better than any other first shows for bands I've been in."

Site offers up free iPods

Gratis means free in French. Now, it means free everywhere.

Gratis Internet Inc., an online marketing firm started in 2000 by Rob Jewell and Peter Martin from Washington, D.C., created 15 Web sites devoted to giving away free stuff. Its business covers all the essentials, from condoms and handbags to video games and iPods.

FreeiPods.com, possibly the most popular of the family of free sites, caters to music-loving, starving students and anyone else on a budget.

Receiving an iPod involves these relatively simple steps.

Go to freeiPods.com and register. Then, sign up for one of the advertised free-trial offers. Get five friends to do the same thing under your referral number, and the iPod will be in the mail.

Erin Chalfant

Curtain Call
theavenue@alligator.org

The difficulty lies in getting friends to sign up, paying shipping-and-handling fees and possibly dealing with increased spam.

Patience is also an issue. Allow a week for the site to process each step.

In an effort to speed things up before going abroad, Nick Ciavarella, a junior studying acting at Florida State University, tried to forward all five referrals to himself. He was caught.

"I was totally bummed for two days," he says after learning that he could not use separate e-mail accounts with the same name.

"Embarrassingly enough, I spent six, maybe seven hours on it in one day," Ciavarella says.

Others don't mind doing things the old-fashioned way.

"I'd rather not go through the hassle," UF psychology senior Dana Lauesen says.

Lauesen's parents will buy her an iPod for her birthday this month, but the possibility of something free looms large for many others.

Gratis shipped between 400 to 600 iPods a week at the end of April, contributing to a total of $8 million worth of stuff reportedly given away by Gratis.

FreeCondoms.com was the first of the free sites.

After its success, Gratis moved on to bigger, more expensive products such as iPods, flat-screen TVs and digital cameras.

Electronics have proven to be a profitable upgrade.

More than 16,000 iPods have been given away since freeiPods.com was launched in June 2004. Gratis reported making $15 million in 2004, a huge leap from its profit of $5 million the previous year.

Allende's 'Zorro' creates colorful take on classic

Zorro
Isabel Allende
HarperCollins

As soon as I bought Isabel Allende's latest work of fiction, I began humming the theme song of the old '50s TV show "Zorro."

Through the first chapters, I tried imagining the scenes as they would look on a black-and-white television set, but Allende's colorful writing made this simplistic and sanitized perspective impossible.

Allende's "Zorro" takes place in early 19th-century California, Spain and Louisiana. The book describes the birth and early life of Diego de la Vega, son of a wealthy Spanish soldier and a Native American warrior woman.

Obviously, Allende thoroughly researched the period. She interweaves her characters' lives with the lives of historical figures including Joseph Bonaparte (Napoleon's brother) and Jean Lafitte (a gentleman pirate of New Orleans), and her characters are present at many historical events (the restoration of Fernando VII to the Spanish throne).

Each of these events contributes to the development of Diego de la Vega's alter ego, Zorro.

Allende tells us how Zorro got his name, how he learned acrobatic tricks and why he wears a mask (it hides his large, protruding ears). She tells the story through the eyes of a female narrator who is able to describe the hero as equally flawed, as he is both brave and kind.

In fact, Allende does such a good job portraying Diego as immature, dramatic and vain that I failed to fall in love with him.

Instead, I sighed over his best friend and sidekick, Bernardo, who after witnessing his mother's rape and murder chooses not to ever speak again.

I guess I have a thing for the quiet, brooding type.

I think the idea of a woman telling the story of Zorro is great, but I personally found this female narrator irritating.

Despite being a character close to Zorro, she remained distant from the story.

Each rare occasion she interjected her opinions felt like a forced attempt to be funny.

The dialogue and actions of Zorro are predictable, and I must warn readers expecting exciting scenes of swashbuckling sword-play that they'll be disappointed.

These scenes are scattered and short.

I would have loved this book if it weren't for the narrator.

Don't get me wrong, "Zorro" is a fun novel. I just think it had the potential to be so much more.

Hardcore band networks, scores own Southeast tour

Boyhood friends and brothers are banging out hardcore beats on their Southeast tour this summer.

Starting Over, an Ocala band, consists of Joe Barnes, 21, and his brother Randy Barnes, 17, and high school friends Erik Nilsen, 18, and Chad Tauber, 18. Lead singer Greg Shields, 20, has been with the band for about three months.

Their music will be embraced by fans of bands From First to Last and Senses Fail.

Starting Over will be playing shows throughout Florida and will also be hitting Alabama, Georgia and Tennessee.

"We are doing a Southeast tour for eight days at the end of July. We are all pretty excited," Joe Barnes says.

Barnes says he credits getting the shows for the tour by his perseverance in networking through the Internet.

"I get on Myspace and send e-mails out to bands saying pretty much, 'If you scratch our backs, we'll scratch yours,'" Joe says. "You get ignored sometimes, but you just keep asking."

Days on the road look to be full of fun for Starting Over.

"We are the proud owners of a 1997 Chrysler Town & Country. It gets us where we need to be and hasn't given us any problems," Barnes says.

He says their time on the road is generally boring, but they plan to break it up by promoting the band.

"Typically, we find whatever malls we can in the area of the show we have scheduled for that particular day and promote the heck out of the band," Barnes says. "I credit this method as being the reason for all the Myspace friends we have, as well as the countless amount of online streaming plays we receive daily."

Don't knock these guys just because they are from Ocala. The city has more of a music scene than you think.

Some years it is really big, and some years it is really low, Barnes says. There is a lot of hardcore music.

Go see the Ocala rockers Starting Over at Tim and Terry's on Friday at 7 p.m.

New football video games will tackle predecessors

Every summer, as building anticipation haunts the minds of football fans across the country, some of us get our own team's opening kickoffs a little early.

We get NCAA. We get Madden.

These video-game replicas may be no replacement for watching a real pigskin, but the games are two of the most popular released on any system every year. This year's games promise the biggest improvements yet because Electronic Arts knows what it is talking about. When you remake a game 15 times, you get pretty good at it.

"Madden 06" won't hit stores until Aug. 8, but the "NCAA Football 06" release date of July 11, and its slew of impressive new features, are right around the corner.

This year, "NCAA Football 06" promises to include two or three impact players who, after a series of successes, can perform "game-breaking" actions other players cannot.

Originally, I worried this addition would be a repetition of last year's intimidation system, which was too easily abused and resulted in scared defensive backs and automatic points.

Gamers potentially could depend entirely on their game breakers, their three impact players, and earning a "game-breaking" moment — or an instant touchdown — in every series.

But EA has foreseen this unrealistic plan. "Game-breaking" moments will become an occasional reward rather than a constant strategy.

First off, they will be more like timely stiff arms or a key pass deflection than a miracle Hail Mary or an impossible interception. And second, you'll be lucky to get two a game.

The new "Road to the Heisman" feature will let gamers generate their own high schooler, recruit him and work their own impact player four years in pursuit of the coveted trophy.

UF's impact players are deservingly Chris Leak, Chad Jackson and Earl Everett.

Second only to the addition of

Brett Kelman
Don't Hate the Playa
theavenue@alligator.org

impact players to "NCAA Football 06" is the inclusion of the "Hit Stick," which is old news from last year's Madden, and its new counterpart, the "Truck Stick."

Now, as linebackers flick the joystick and feel the bones crunch beneath their thumbs, so too can beefy running backs as they lower their shoulders and pursue the shortest distance to the end zone — a straight line.

I think this is a much-needed addition, since a charging bruiser won't have to let percentages decide if he breaks the next tackle. Still, like that risky hit stick, using the truck stick constantly should have serious drawbacks.

With impact players, "Road to the Heisman" and the truck stick all joining the game, this year's installment of NCAA football is something to get excited about.

Maybe this is the year that this fan's favorite finally will outdo its older, professional and consistently better brother. Still, with adaptive AI, new franchise options and the ridiculously intricate "Superstar Mode," what "Madden 06" promises is equally intriguing.

Honestly, I'm buying both.

Spielberg overdoes apocalyptic terror with 'Worlds'

If aliens attacked the human race, took us hostage, killed us and then sprayed our blood all over the remains of the destruction, it would be apparent to almost anyone that it would suck.

Director Steven Spielberg wanted to make this clear to moviegoers in his latest film, "War of the Worlds," and he definitely did — over and over and over again.

The movie, based on H.G. Wells' 1898 novel about alien invasion, is an intense and thrilling sci-fi spectacle that fails to go any deeper than the novel, despite Spielberg's desperate attempt.

Tom Cruise stars as divorced deadbeat dad Ray Ferrier, who seems to have no skills as a parent and no connection other than sharing the same blood with his children.

When their mother and stepfather drop them off to spend the weekend with their dad, all hell breaks loose — literally.

Aliens inserted into the ground by freak lightning storms man massive tripod destruction machines planted on Earth before the human race existed.

Of course, they immediately start to disintegrate humans one by one.

Sounds crazy I know, but it's pretty cool.

While I personally didn't ooh and aah during the annihilation sequences as much as I cringed and gripped onto the person next to me — one of my manly guy friends, thank goodness — audiences will leave the theater impressed at the elements of sound, action and special effects.

Much like a bodybuilder with a less than huge southern region, "War of the Worlds" overcompensates with its special effects for its lousy dialogue, plot and even acting.

Spielberg seemed to dramatize everything in the movie, pushing emotional boundaries to the point where the actors are overacting.

It's ironic actually, if you think about how the movie and all the Tom Cruise madness was overpublicized.

The plot of the movie also drags on and is choppy at places.

Most of the movie is Cruise and his two kids running away from the huge alien tripod killing machines, and after 15 minutes you'll get the point — aliens bad, humans good, characters must run away.

While at first the movie is extremely intense and terrifying, how much death and destruction can you see before you get used to it?

Perhaps if Spielberg had created more meaningful emotional ties to characters, I might have felt a little sorrier for them.

The worst aspect of the movie was Spielberg incorporating some political propaganda.

Dakota Fanning, who plays Cruise's wide-eyed and constantly screaming daughter, fearfully asks her father if it is terrorists attacking them, and family members desperately look at walls and walls of missing ad fliers that are obviously a reference to Sept. 11, 2001.

Overall, the movie is only good but mainly for its special effects and action sequences.

Again, like bodybuilders: It's something good to look at, but only expect to be intrigued for about 15 minutes.

Men strike back, critique women's fashion no-nos

An te up, ladies; it's time to admit that maybe we don't give guys enough credit.

This week I truly was stunned to find that masked by a façade of beer guzzling, female ogling and sports watching, men actually may be deep thinkers.

I understand that statement is rather shocking; I'm still befuddled myself.

You see, the goal was to seek out the pet peeves of female fashion from the male perspective. It may seem a futile effort at first, for when it comes to style, we ladies tend to hold the cards. However, it's only fair to deal the guys in, too.

It was a good week. I bet the gym and the bars were the two havens of male bonding where I would have the highest success rate. And yes, I won that round.

Upon asking the million-dollar question, of course there were the replies, "I like it when they wear nothing," and "It's not what girls are wearing, it's trying to get them out of it," and "those ugly ruffled mini skirts." You know, the ones you learn to expect.

But, then there were the trump cards, the answers I didn't anticipate. Men were actually philosophizing and discussing the intangible qualities of style.

Ladies, in fashion as in life the stakes are high — you must be weary of the consequences of your actions and always look out for No. 1. Brace yourselves; in taking this matter to the guys I found they were not full of No. 2.

Here are their top five replies:

5. Overdressing — Mies Van der Rohe said it best: "Less is more." There is no need to parade around all day dressed like you're ready to take on the night scene. However, if you just haven't been to bed from the evening before, go on rock star, you're all in.

4. Too much uniformity — How can you be eye-catching if you get lost in the shuffle? So unless you plan to take over the world with your army of clones, ladies please relieve your ruffled mini skirts of their negligible duties.

3. Dressing inappropriately for the season — Like a house of cards, this action is very prone to fault. You should know better than to wear those damn Uggs in the summer if you are going to whine about how hot you are, or wear tank tops in the winter if you're going to complain that you're cold.

2. Caring too much about what others think, especially women — I think they hit the nail on the head here.

I admit that in the past I, too, have been guilty of this but since learned the error of my ways. It's so liberating not to care what people think.

However, the opinions of others can mean the difference between looking fabulous and looking foolish.

So use common sense, play your cards right and find value in the minds of those you trust.

Finally, the royal flush of answers:

1. Lacking discretion in clothing choices and not dressing for your body type — Oh, where do I begin?

Ladies, you and I know we come in all shapes and sizes. Just because we may be able to fit into a size 6 pair of jeans, that doesn't mean we should wear them in public. Maybe a size 8 would be better?

When it comes to showing skin, it is imperative to proceed with caution and think outside the box. Why bare a stomach paunch when you have a great pair of legs? What we don't realize is that we actually detract from ourselves when we reveal too much, just like a bad poker face.

Emphasizing our assets and playing down our imperfections enables us to put ourselves out there with confidence. We tell the world how we want to be seen instead of being the passive victims of overexposure, thus allowing the world to judge us.

Let's call a spade a spade: The best-looking woman is the one who feels comfortable in her skin, lets her personality shine through, is independent and celebrates her uniqueness. Not necessarily the one with the best clothes or the most rocking body.

Ladies, I hope you fared well in this hand. If not, it was time to deal a new round anyway.

Though we may be more fashion-forward than our male counterparts, it took a guy to make me realize it may be for all the wrong reasons. However, in poker if you break even, you're still a winner.

of all that
mail?

100 million trees must be cut down every year to help provide the paper for magazines, catalogs and junk mail resulting in 40 million tons of paper clogging the landfills each year.

Junk mail is one of the most difficult papers to recycle. It is deeply inked and colored. The process takes a large amount of water and chemicals. The slurry formed after this process is nothing more than industrial waste.

UF defensive line coach looks to improve pass rush

By ERIC ESTEBAN
Alligator Staff Writer
eesteban@alligator.org

When Urban Meyer accepted the job as head coach at UF, he began to assemble his defensive staff with one thought in mind.

Instill toughness, tenacity and discipline to an underachieving defensive line that allowed 8 out of 12 opponents to rush for more than 100 yards in 2004 while compiling just 23 sacks.

Enter Greg Mattison.

As the Gators' new defensive line coach and co-defensive coordinator, Mattison's attitude on the field screams of Big Ten Conference coaching experience. Before arriving at UF, Mattison coached at Michigan for four years and Notre Dame for seven.

This spring, he worked relentlessly at implanting his philosophy in Gainesville.

In 2005, the key to the Gators' defensive front will revolve around putting more pressure on the quarterback. During the spring Mattison circled that as the biggest area that needed to be worked on before UF's season opener against Wyoming on Sept. 3.

"We have a lot of work to do on pass rush and that is one phase we will work extremely hard on this summer," Mattison said. "If someone were to have asked, 'What do you feel you haven't done good enough coaching this spring?' [I would have said] I feel like we didn't improve enough in the pass rush."

UF returns all four starters up front, but both the defensive line and the defense as a whole will be anchored by the talented junior duo of defensive tackles Marcus Thomas and Ray McDonald.

When playing to his full potential, McDonald is arguably one of the quickest interior linemen in the nation, but his inconsistent play led him to be singled out by Meyer during the spring.

"McDonald's a guy where everybody says he has great potential, but he doesn't go real hard all the time," Meyer said. "That's all I've heard about Ray and Marcus, but we are going to change that or they won't play."

However, as spring drew to a close, both Mattison and Meyer began to rave about McDonald's work ethic - a possible sign of things to come.

Thomas, who sat out the spring with an ailing back, is back in the mix this summer and has shown glimpses in the past of having a great motor in reaching the quarterback.

Staying healthy doesn't look to be a problem. Thomas started all 12 games in 2004, tying for the team lead in sacks with 4.5.

Jeremy Mincey enters his senior year entrenched in the starting position at left defensive end.

His 51 tackles last year led everyone on the line, but as a senior, he will be looked upon for more of a leadership role on the field.

The most interesting battle in 2005 will be at the right defensive end spot where Steven Harris and Derrick Harvey will duke it out for the starting spot.

Both will see the field plenty and be in the rotation, but Harris' experience on both the inside and outside of the defensive line might give him the early nod.

"I told [Steven] ... that whoever the starting four is, he is considered a starter and that putting him at nose guard this spring has really helped us," Mattison said. "I wanted him to play a position that he really hasn't played a lot of and he acted like he played it his whole life."

Aneurysm

An aneurysm is the result of a weakening of the wall of an artery which balloons out in a bubble-like protrusion. It may rupture under the pressure of blood flow—this could cause sudden, potentially fatal loss of blood, or stroke if it occurs in the brain. Aneurysm may develop in any artery, but the abdominal aorta is the most common site. If the aneurysm progressively increases in size, it should be removed despite the risk. Treatment involves surgical removal of the aneurysm and replacement of that section of the artery with

Calls leave fans wondering if referees can do better

By JEREMY FOWLER
December 1, 2003

With every breath on his black whistle decorated with bite marks, UF intramural sports referee Gilad Goldenholtz is self-assured and confident.

The seasoned football official has covered some of the biggest Gators intramural games for the past three years, and not once has he remotely blown a game on one call, he said. Guarding the flagger - he'll accurately make that call every time.

So while the officials from the UF-Florida State game re-defined "instant replay" after their miscalls, the 21-year-old is the nameplate for grandiose and dependable officiating.

"I don't miss calls, ever," he said. "And the way those referees called that FSU game, I would have never blown it like that."

Goldenholtz's last comment seems to reverberate with every Gator fan from Gainesville to Pensacola.

Gator Nation feels shafted, run amuck, bamboozled and destroyed by the men in the white and black.

They should.

Sure, FSU officially lost one fumble Saturday against UF, but the officials from the Atlantic Coast Conference dropped the ball all game with at least three terrible calls on possible fumbles.

That's why everyone with a coherent football sense feels they could have called a better game than the one displayed Saturday night, Goldenholtz included.

Of course, nobody wants to blame the referees for losing a game. UF players know that's usually the easy way out, like ordering pizza at 3 a.m. instead of making a chicken casserole.

But head referee Jack Childress and his henchmen - ordered to call the game because they were from the visiting team's conference - possibly swung the game by 14 points because of touchdowns after fumble recoveries.

When calls can determine the entire outlook of entirely too important of a game for both parties, there's something terribly wrong. Sports officials might as well start calling Tiger Woods for illegal grounding every time he uses a pitching wedge within 75 yards, or Kobe Bryant for a personal foul every time his shot is too pretty, or a decrepit old lady for roughing the shuffler every time she heckles her opponent in shuffle board. This just doesn't make sense.

Offensive guard Shannon Snell was so outraged from the calls, he couldn't refrain from using four expletives in less than 6 minutes during a post-game interview.

"It's bulls---," said Snell, usually an affable, cuddly bear who listens to U2 and Kid Rock. "They took five fumbles away from us that should have been ours. I have a newfound respect for [Southeastern Conference] officiating right now, and I thought they gave us some tough calls. But the ACC, you'd think they'd know what they were doing."

I think it's safe to say if one - just one - of those calls swings in UF's favor Saturday, the Gators win. People can say hundreds of plays determine the outcome of a game, not just one or two or five. But the five fumbled plays by the referees Saturday overshadow most all others because many were the difference between a touchdown and an arrow to the heart, an extended lead and an 8-4 record, a Citrus Bowl and a free bowl of soup for consolation.

Instead, Coach Ron Zook had to glance at the scoreboard at half-time - FSU 17, UF 6 - pondering how different the yellow-lighted numbers could have looked before three momentum-turning miscalls in the first half.

"I don't know what the ACC officials were doing in our house," linebacker Channing Crowder said.

Still hard to swallow

By ANDREW ABRAMSON
Alligator Staff Writer
aabramson@alligator.org

You can try to find a Gators fan that has forgotten the infamous 2003 UF-FSU football game, now dubbed the Swindle in the Swamp, but you'd probably have better luck finding a Ron Zook fan in Gainesville. Since the advent of modern sports, fans have always pointed the finger at referees for seemingly ill-advised calls going against their favorite team. But after this hard-fought game, everyone felt cheated.

"[The NCAA] needs to bring in officials from another conference, maybe Pac-10 or Big Ten, because this was definitely a biased game," former UF offensive lineman Shannon Snell said. "It was bull. [The officials] took the game away from us."

But you didn't have to be a UF fan to raise your eyebrows at the officiating that always seemed to go FSU's way. Several Seminoles players admitted that the officiating was far from perfect, but from the FSU perspective it was still a solid Seminoles victory.

"That's the way games go," FSU running back Leon Washington said. "Even if, and that's a big if, the referees made a bad call, [Florida] had the game won. They scored [with 2:50 left] and were up by three."

In the end, ACC officials admitted the calls were inaccurate.

"The ACC admits mistakes were made," Foley said.

"It's not something I agree with whether it's the SEC or ACC, but that has nothing to do with this situation. I think people should be held accountable."

In this classic column, Jeremy Fowler discovers that even an intramural referee could have called this game correctly.

Tristan Maher / Alligator Staff

Florida State fans had plenty of reasons to celebrate after FSU defeated UF 38-34 in one of the most controversial games in team history. Questionable referee calls marred the final outcome.

Lee makes debut with Knicks

By ANDREW ABRAMSON
Alligator Staff Writer
aabramson@alligator.org

With one pick left in the first round of last week's NBA Draft, David Lee was angry. His cell phone was silent and it didn't look like the New York Knicks were calling him with any sort of that, "Hey, good news, we're drafting you," rhetoric.

It turns out Lee had no reception in the bar where he was watching the Draft, so he relied on the TV for the most joyous news of his life — Lee was heading to the Knicks.

So much has gone through Lee's head in the past week, but when the former UF forward officially replaced the orange and blue jersey with New York's own variation of orange and blue on Wednesday, UF men's basketball's biggest success story in recent years realized he had made it.

"It's unbelievable," Lee said. "The New York Knicks are such a great franchise and the city is so wonderful. It was a really special feeling tonight, although you can't really call it a true game by any means. We're still wearing practice jerseys, the veterans aren't here, but this is a building block."

The Knicks lost their Las Vegas summer league opener to the Portland Trail Blazers 93-89, but the score was a mere footnote.

After the Knicks suffered through a dismal 33-49 season this past year, Knicks president Isiah Thomas called for change.

The change brought three fresh faces to the Big Apple, all first round draft picks.

Just a week removed from the draft,

FOOTBALL

Defensive prospect commits

■ UF COACH URBAN MEYER CONTINUES TO RECEIVE VERBAL COMMITMENTS FOR 2006.

By BLAKE BONSAK
Alligator Writer

The UF football team continues to stock up for the future after receiving a verbal commitment from Bradenton defensive line prospect Terron Sanders.

Sanders, a 6-foot-2, 298-pound nose guard out of Southeast High, will enter his final high school season this fall after being named 2nd team All-State as a junior.

For Sanders, getting an education was a priority in making his decision.

"The academic level," said Sanders, when asked why he wants to play for UF beginning in 2006. "The University of Florida is one of the top academic programs in the nation and that's really high on my part."

Sanders also said his personal relationship with Urban Meyer and his coaching staff was an important factor.

"The other big thing was Urban Meyer and the pressure on him to win," Sanders said. "It meant a lot to me that he had the trust in me to offer a scholarship."

Sanders attended summer football camp last month and impressed the coaching staff with his strength, technique and tremendous first-step quickness.

Sanders, along with current 2006 UF commit Corey Hobbs, could fill the need for powerful, run-stuffing defensive linemen to compliment the defense's aggressive style.

After failing to sign any defensive lineman from the high school class of 2005, the need has become even more crucial. Look for the Gators to sign two to three more defensive linemen from the high school class of 2006.

With juniors Marcus Thomas, Ray McDonald, Joe Cohen, Steven Harris and senior Jeremy Mincey nearing graduation, the 2006 class could see playing time early on.

Although verbal commitments are non-binding and Sanders could sign with a different school come national signing day on Feb. 1, he said that he has no intention of continuing to look at other schools.

Not-so-happy reunion scheduled for Lee, Drejer in summer league

Heads up — two former Gators are scheduled for a Sin City showdown.

Much of Gator Nation might recall Feb. 18, 2004, as a day of treachery.

One day after not making the trip for a Southeastern Conference showdown at Georgia, Christian Drejer shocked UF fans and teammates alike, announcing his decision to leave the Gators for a professional gig in Barcelona.

"It's a strange deal," Lee, then a junior, told the Alligator. "I consider Christian probably my best friend on the team, and I never even got a call from him.

"I was walking out of the locker room [the previous Sunday]. I said 'Later, Christian, I'll see you tomorrow,' and he said, 'I'll see you tomorrow D-Lee.' He gave me a little peace sign, and I never spoke to the kid again. That's been the hardest thing for me. But you've just got to move on."

And the one-time pals have moved on — only in different directions.

Now, a guaranteed contract and a Catalonian flop later, the former friends will meet for the first time since Drejer's shady departure as opponents in the Reebok Vegas Summer League when the Knicks' and Nets' respective summer teams meet on Monday.

Lee opted to return for a senior season molding himself into a first-round pick by the New York Knicks in last week's NBA Draft.

Considered an NBA first-round lock out of Danish prep school, Drejer finally caved in to the seven-figure proposals from European clubs, abandoning the Gators for FC Barcelona, but his bluff had been called.

The 6-foot-9 point forward, whom Coach Billy Donovan once referred to as the most-talented player he had ever seen in practice, fell to the Nets with the 51st overall pick.

all three players saw ample time on the court Wednesday.

Lee finished with nine points and seven rebounds in 21 minutes, shooting 2-of-6 from the field and recording two assists.

Channing Frye, the 8th pick in the draft from Arizona, played 29 minutes, finishing with 16 points.

The other first rounder on New York's roster, 5-foot-9 guard Nate Robinson who was acquired in a trade from the Phoenix Suns, finished with 20 points and five assists.

Former Gators center Brent Wright also played for New York and showed promise, finishing with eight points and shooting 4-for-5 from the field.

If Lee hopes to continue playing 21 minutes a game when the scores count, he may have to adjust to a new game plan.

After playing center and power forward at UF, Lee played small forward on Wednesday. While no one doubts Lee's athleticism, it's a drastic change for the 6-foot-9 big man.

"They don't know what I can do at [power forward]," Lee said. "There's quite a few big guys in this summer league, but I'll be playing more [power forward] eventually."

"Everything went really well and the team is really happy with me. The biggest thing was just getting that first exhibition game under my belt."

Former Gators forward Christian Drejer also made his summer league debut on Wednesday, scoring six points on 2-of-7 shooting in 31 minutes. Drejer's Nets will face Lee's Knicks on Monday.

UF still needs more linemen

However, he would still like to take an official visit to Gainesville or go to a football game this fall.

"I'd probably like to go to the FSU-UF game," Sanders said. "I've never been to a UF game so I think it would be a great experience."

Sanders' commitment comes as a great relief while he begins to prepare for his senior season in high school.

It also marks the beginning of his time as a member of his favorite team as a child.

"I bleed orange and blue," Sanders said. "I've been a Gator all my life."

It's funny where 7.1 points, 3.3 rebounds and 3.2 assists per collegiate game will get you in the big leagues.

But 5.3 points, 3.3 rebounds and 1.5 assists per game is just plain hysterical.

Those are the numbers the Danish prodigy put up as a bench player with FC.

It's no shock Barcelona declined to extend Drejer's contract, and he now faces a long road to match his former friend's nearly $1 million per year deal.

Just don't expect Lee to waste any of his earnings at the card table with an old buddy.

"I have a lot of pride for Gainesville and [UF]," Lee said Wednesday. "Even guys like Matt Walsh and Roberson paid their dues and did things the right way."

"What [Drejer] did hurt my feelings a little bit, and it was tough seeing him there [Wednesday]."

Gators in the Majors

Stats as of Tuesday, July 5th

David Eckstein St. Louis Cardinals, SS

Games: 79 AB: 308 Avg: .289 Hits: 89 RBI: 23 Runs: 46

After transforming into a surprising star in Anaheim, Eckstein finds himself in a role few could have fathomed - as the National League's starting shortstop in the All Star game. Eckstein continues to silence critics with his solid play, and now he's finally getting the recognition.

Mark Ellis Oakland Athletics, 2B

Games: 53 AB: 174 Avg: .282 Hits: 49 RBI: 13 Runs: 19

A starting shortstop for the Gators, Ellis has become the ace second basemen for Oakland. His numbers may not be gaudy, but Ellis is known for his defensive prowess and solid on-base percentage.

Josh Fogg Pittsburgh Pirates, SP

Pitcher stats: 4-4 4.42 ERA 51 K 28 BB 95.2 IP

While Fogg's numbers aren't terrible, the former UF closer could be on the trading block. Fogg could find a resurgence in another market - his strikeout to walk ratio is respectable.

David Ross Pittsburgh Pirates, C

Games: 39 AB: 106 Avg: .226 Hits: 24 RBI: 15 Runs: 9

Of all the Gators currently in the major leagues, Ross receives the least attention. However, the former UF star is a solid No. 2 catcher and should have no trouble staying on a MLB roster.

Ryan Shealy Colorado Rockies, 1B

Games: 8 AB: 20 Avg: .300 Hits: 6 RBI: 3 Runs: 3

After sitting behind Todd Helton for years, Shealy is finally getting the chance to prove that he could star. Shealy is back in the minor leagues now, but don't expect the stint to last long.

Brad Wilkerson, Washington Nationals, CF

Games: 78 AB: 292 Avg: .264 Hits: 77 RBI: 31 Runs: 40

No former UF star is getting more attention than Wilkerson. After racking up the first hit in Nationals' history, Wilkerson has helped lead the former Montreal Expos to a first place standing in the National League East.
