UF officials, SG share sandbox

Editor's note: This is the last in a series of stories taking a closer look at the hidden structures of Student Government.

Student Government is full of it. It's full of $11 million of student money, to be exact. Officials in SG and the UF administration say they agree the power over that money isn't leaving students' hands.

The newest jewel in the crown of UF's top brass, Vice President for Student Affairs Patricia Telles-Irvin, shocked SG officials when she instituted what many SG members have called the "first administrative veto in SG history."

It's actually the second in as many years, according to Student Affairs officials, but her June veto of $200,000 of student money allocated for Gator Growl caused some student leaders to rethink their strategies.

Student Body President Joe Goldberg said the veto was not welcome

"(That was a) new thing for SG itself, something we are not used to," he said.

Senate President Diane Kassim said her surprise at the decision led her to devote significant concern to notions of student authority.

"The [veto is] as involved as you can possibly get," she said. "We don't expect it to happen again."

Telles-Irvin said despite numerous e-mails from students praising or condemning the veto, she stands behind her decision.

"People are going to have different reactions," she said. "[SG officials] have learned that in their own roles."

"I will challenge them, and they will challenge me. My role is certainly to be part of their education."

UF President Bernie Machen has veto power over allocation of money by the Student Senate. Historically, presidents have delegated the responsibility to those in Telles-Irvin's position, and circumstances were no different when she arrived last October.

Goldberg said control of the Activity & Service Fee, paid by every student as part of each credit hour, is essential for SG success.

Tuition rises for new students

Being new to UF will be slightly more expensive in the Fall due to tuition-criteria changes based on a student's status as "new" or "continuing" that now factor into determining how much he or she pays.

Students already pay different tuition rates as undergraduates and graduates as well as Florida residents versus out-of-state students, but their time — or lack thereof — spent at UF now will factor into the equation as well.

"This is a first time ever," said Stuart Hoskins, senior associate controller at UF.

He said officials at the Office of the University Registrar and the Office of the Provost largely were behind the changes.

Neither office returned calls for comment Wednesday.

Senate votes to allow secured-site online voting

By JUSTIN RICHARDS

 jrichards@alligator.org

A change in Student Body statutes to allow for "secured-site" online voting passed first reading in the Student Senate on Tuesday as many observers felt that, if not the ultimate goal, the system was a step in the right direction.

The secured-site system, as named by the Senate's online-voting committee, would make every polling location on campus open to every student. The measure also explicitly banned "unsecured-site" Internet voting, which would allow students to vote from any computer using their GatorLink accounts.

The secured-site system, passed by the Senate 60-2, will save approximately $30,000 each election.

Senate President Diane Kassim expressed concern that returning students who hear "online" voting has been implemented will expect their home computers to become polling booths.

Student Government

"My biggest fear is that it will be deceptive, that there will be unhappy students," she said.

Kassim said she plans to form a new committee, the goal of which will be to make unsecured-site voting an option in Student Government statutes under a different name. But questions about the security of the unsecured-site system were raised and repeated at Tuesday's meeting.

Sen. Ryan Nelson, on hiatus from his seat for Summer, asked senators to imagine the bouncer at Market Street Pub asking for a student's GatorLink username and password

Panhellenic rush nears

Recruitment week is drawing closer for UF women looking to join one of Panhellenic Council's 16 sororities this Fall.

Panhellenic recruitment begins with an orientation at 5 p.m. in the Reitz Union on Aug. 16, followed by a week of four rounds of "parties."

The "parties" are meet-and-greets between potential and current sorority members at the chapter houses.

Panhellenic Membership Vice President Courtney Weir said she expects 1,300-1,400 students to register for recruitment and about 1,200 to go through round one.

Weir said students are encouraged to submit applications, available at the Panhellenic Web site, and application fee of $70 as soon as possible. The fee rises to $85 after Aug. 7 and $100 if paid at orientation.

Weir said the benefit of joining a sorority is the "true sense of a home away from home for first-time students" but warns it isn't for everyone.

"It can be overwhelming for some students," she said. "I encourage any women questioning their ability to go through recruitment to sign up and go the first day and realize they can withdraw at any point in the process."

UF freshman Brooke Mahoney, 18, said she made the decision to rush this Fall partly due to her older sister's experience with Greek life.

"(She) seems to really enjoy it," Mahoney said. "It just looks like fun and a good way to get involved and meet people."

Podcasts are free radio shows that can be downloaded from the Internet onto iPods and other MP3 players.

UF Associate Vice President for Marketing and Public Relations Joe Hice said a podcast of former U.S. Sen. Bob Graham's visit to campus Friday had been downloaded hundreds of times since the podcasts were announced Tuesday.

The News and Public Affairs office at UF has been producing radio and video clips for news stations, so just a few more steps and no additional cost converted the recordings to MP3 files, Hice said.

UF is making its news available via podcasting for those who may not have the time to read a newspaper or watch TV but can take a few seconds to download audio to listen to during the day, Hice said.

Five podcasts, including topics on hurricanes, medical issues and the senator's visit, are now available at <http://news.ufl.edu>, under the Audio link.

Exclusive chemistry classes hope to lure engineers

By RESHELLE SMITH

Alligator Contributing Writer

They design computers, cars, theme parks and space shuttles, but there just aren't enough of them.

To lure more students to engineering this Fall, College of Engineering majors will have eight sections of general chemistry all to themselves, two of which will be for women only, said Richard Dickinson, chairman of the task force that recommended the change and a chemical engineering professor.

Dickinson said statistics have shown when students do poorly in general chemistry, they are less likely to stay in the College of Engineering.

The task force noticed many students switch to different majors after one or two years, before they take any engineering classes, he said.

After some investigation, the task force found a link between grades in chemistry and the probability students would stay in engineering. It also found surveys of those who left engineering indicated a negative experience in general chemistry.

Jeffrey Keaffaber, a lecturer and undergraduate coordinator for UF's Department of Chemistry, said the chemistry sequence is "make or break" and often determines whether students remain in engineering.

Every engineering major must take general chemistry, but without this change they would be mixed into sections containing students from all majors.

Dickinson said the all-female sections, which women voluntarily register for, are designed to bring more women into the engineering field.

On a national level, only 19 percent of all engineers are women, while at UF, a university where approximately 53 percent of students are female, only 22 percent of students in the College of Engineering are women, said Deborah Mayhew, an assistant director in the college.

To compare, in the College of Education 84 percent of students are female. In the College of Journalism and Communications, 74 percent of students are female. And in the College of Medicine, 52 percent of students are women.

"You finally see the real-world applications of science — that's engineering."

chemistry lecturer

Jennifer Curtis, chairwoman of the chemical engineering department and one of only two women who chair a department in the College of Engineering, said incorrect ideas about engineering plague the field.

"A lot of females have misconceptions about what engineering is, and a lot of that is probably from the media," Curtis said.

In lower-level classes, like general chemistry, students don't learn enough engineering, which can perpetuate negative stereotypes.

In the first years of college, engineering students learn the fundamentals of science and lack exposure to engineering, Dickinson said.

This change will incorporate as much engineering as possible into lower-level classes, Dickinson said. The new sections will give future engineers perspective on the relevance of chemistry to their future career.

All of the engineering discussion sections will be taught by highly qualified graduate students from the College of Engineering, he said.

They will be able to incorporate more examples of problems students might face in the industry. He said he hopes this will raise awareness of what engineers really do and dismiss negative stereotypes.

Dickinson also said the new sections will allow students to meet and become friends with other engineering students.

Keaffaber said he will teach two lectures of engineering sections, and he will make some adjustments to the curriculum to target it toward those students.

One of the topics he will discuss is how a fireworks show is put together and the chemistry behind it.

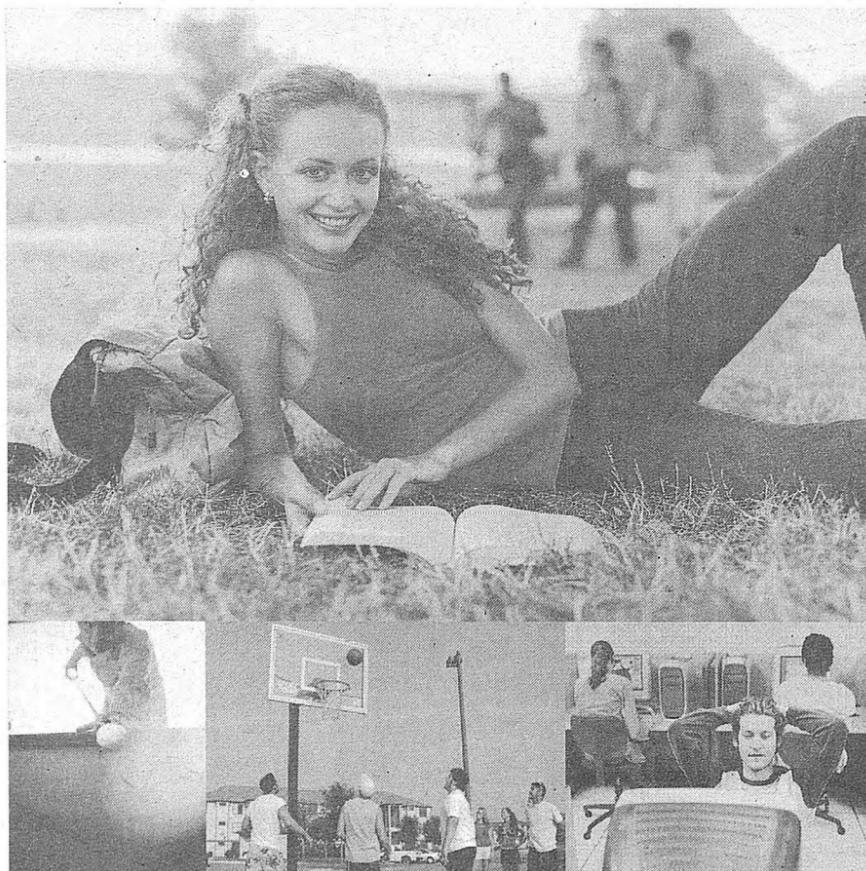

"You finally see the real world applications of science — that's engineering," Keaffaber said.

Dickinson said if the program is effective in raising grades and keeping engineers, it will continue and could spread to other classes such as physics and calculus.

UF grads to teach in Japan

By MELISSA FILIPKOWSKI
Alligator Contributing Writer

Cara Lakin doesn't speak any Japanese. She has never been to Asia and doesn't know anyone on the entire continent. But in three days Japan will be home to her and six other UF graduates.

Seven UF graduates will depart for Japan on July 30 as participants in the Japan Exchange and Teaching program, or JET. Sponsored by the government of Japan, the participants will spend at least one year working beside Japanese English-language teachers at junior and senior high schools in rural areas of Japan. The UF participants are Lakin, Devin Casadey, Seth Eason, Julie Rodriguez, Steven Shulmister, Jonathan Smith and James Wadsworth.

"Participants will go to different schools in rural areas of Japan that have had limited access to American language and culture," Japanese Consulate spokeswoman Darci Kissinger said.

Lakin, who graduated in May from the UF Elementary Education Pro-Teach program, will be teaching English to middle school and kindergarten students in Osaka Prefecture, Japan.

The JET program is offered in approximately 40 countries with more than 30,000 participants since its start in 1987. This year, there are more than 1,300 Americans in the program, 36 from Florida.

The JET program aims to enhance foreign language skills in Japan and promote international exchange at the local level through fostering ties between the Japanese and young adults from other countries.

Lakin's interest in the program began after she had a professor who had traveled to Japan.

"I was totally inspired to go," she said. "In the back of my mind, I knew it was something I would want to do."

Rodriguez was a Japanese Language and Literature major and Shulmister was a Decision

Information and Sciences major with a minor in Japanese.

The participants were required to pass an application screening process and an interview to qualify for the program.

Each participant will receive a salary equivalent to approximately $30,000 a year depending on the exchange rate and an apartment to live in near his or her assigned school.

Lakin knows very little about her apartment and school but says she isn't too worried about it.

"I was totally inspired to go. In the back of my mind, I knew it was something I would want to do."

Cara Lakin
UF alumna

"I have received a few photos of the apartment," she said, "but I'm open for anything."

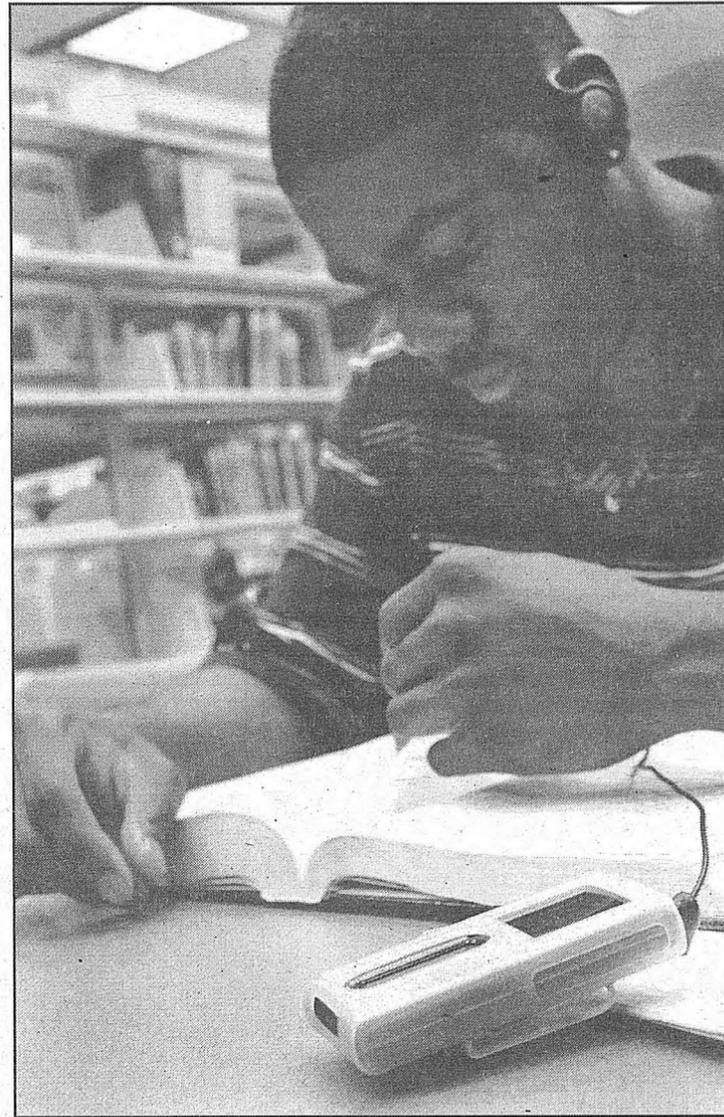

Lakin also received a letter of welcome and a packet from the Osaka School Board.

Overall, Lakin said she hopes to gain a general knowledge of Japanese culture and the landscape of the country during her time there.

"I am hoping to be fully immersed in the Japanese culture while also learning more about myself," she said. "Everything is going to be new and exciting."

To qualify for the JET program in the United States, applicants must hold a bachelor's degree, be a U.S. citizen, have excellent English skills, be under 40, not lived in Japan for three or more years of the last eight years and have a general interest in Japanese culture.

Applications for next year's program will be available in September and are due in the beginning of December. For more information, please call the Consulate General of Japan in Miami at (305) 530-9090.

Grease Team campaigns for proper grease disposal

■ THE PROGRAM CAME ABOUT AFTER SEVERAL SEWAGE SPILLS IN GAINESVILLE.

By CRYSTAL HENRY
Alligator Writer
chenry@alligator.org

Just as the squeaky wheel gets the grease, greasy pipes got the attention of Gainesville Regional Utilities.

GRU intern and Alligator contributing writer Melissa Filipkowski said she and fellow intern, Student Senate President Diane Kassim, are in charge of a campaign to educate the public about proper grease disposal after three recent back-to-back sewage spills caused by grease clogs contaminated local creeks.

"We call ourselves the Grease Team," Filipkowski said.

Last weekend, she and Kassim set up a table outside of Winn-Dixie on Southwest 16th Avenue, offering information about proper disposal of household grease and gave out free grease disposal kits.

The Grease Trapper kits include information about preventing grease clogs, a plastic container known as the Grease Trapper, grease disposal bags and a postcard to order more bags or an additional Grease Trapper.

Kassim

to be given out.

She and Kassim will be at stores like Winn-Dixie, Albertsons and Wal-Mart every Saturday from 10 a.m. until 1 p.m. and in the GRU lobby Friday afternoons from 3 to 5 p.m. handing out the kits and information about grease disposal.

Florida Department of Environmental Protection spokeswoman Jill Johnson said she believes the reason for the grease clogs is that people aren't educated about the effects of grease in the sewer system.

Johnson said she didn't think disposing of grease by pouring it down the kitchen sink was a problem when she was in college. Her mother always took care of that when she was at home, so she didn't know any better.

"Anything that educates about grease disposal is good," she said.

The department's Wastewater Compliance Assurance Supervisor Melissa Long said the department is looking into whether restaurants or residents caused the sewage spills but said that "GRU is pretty aggressive in their maintenance," and that the Grease Trappers should help.

Filipkowski said despite the three recent spills, GRU is about 25 percent below the national average of wastewater spill incidents.

Security concerns dominate Senate debate of Internet-based election system

as proof of his or her age.

"You give him your buddy's that he lent you last week to take a (chemistry) test," Nelson proposed.

Former Impact Party spokeswoman Allison Cullin said all she needs to vote in general elections is her voter registration, not photo ID.

Sen. Jason Lutin said many students know his GatorLink password, arguing the security of an unsecured system could be defeated.

GatorLink account policy prohibits sharing of account information. Violations can result in loss of access to UF computer services.

The risk of voter coercion, that voters may be watched and influenced while they vote at their computers, was also the focus of a round of discussion at the meeting.

Sen. Mike Belle compared the unsecured-site system to absentee ballots that candidates sometimes bring door-to-door, requesting votes. With absentee ballots, he said, others are free to watch over voters' shoulders.

Former Student Body presidential candidate MacKenzie Moritz suggested there was irony in the coercion fears.

"I think a lot of the students trying to make the argument about coercion are already strongly influenced by the organizations that they're in," he said, adding that he is "not anti-Greek by any means."

Online-voting committee member Sen. Susan Henriques wrote three amendments to the bill that would make room in SG statutes for the unsecured-site online voting option. All three were voted down.

Student Government

"I do not believe we listened to our constituents tonight at all," Henriques said at the close of the meeting.

Between the online-voting committee meeting Sunday and Tuesday's Senate meeting, 63 students sent form letters via the Progress Party's Web site asking their senators to support Henriques' amendment.

Online-voting committee chairman Sen. Jared Hernandez said it was very important to him that his committee be nonpartisan.

The bill was sponsored by the leaders of all three major SG parties — the Impact Party, the Access Party and the Gator Party.

However, Kassim said three committee members approached her with concerns that Hernandez was biased in his leadership.

Moritz suggested this partiality showed through in the terms "secured" and "unsecured." Both systems would use 128-bit encryption not even the U.S. government can break.

Relations between Criser Hall and Reitz Union recovering after veto

"The only group that can allocate those funds is SG," Goldberg said. "Administration can't step in in the process."

He meets with Telles-Irvin twice per month. "That's working out well for us," he said. "I think that our communication has gotten better since we've had those meetings."

Senate President Pro-Tempore John Boyles said Telles-Irvin was just new to the process when she made her decision.

"She has said that she did not really know what was going on, what was coming with this bill," he said.

Boyles added that despite initially hearing rumors some administrators think of SG as "just a bunch of kids playing government," he hasn't formed strong opinions on the UF-SG relationship yet.

"It's so soon into the terms of our new administration that it wouldn't be fair to make judgments like that at this point," he said.

As president, Goldberg is the only student member of the UF Board of Trustees and said the veto is one for the history books.

"I think that the administration realizes that we are an important aspect of the university," he said. "They have not by any means talked down to me. They appreciate what I say about students. They want to hear first hand about what is going on on-campus."

"She (Telles-Irvin) has said that she did not really know what was going on."

John Boyles

Student Senate president pro-tempore

And Telles-Irvin said she thinks SG leaders are on top of their game.

"We have very capable (student) leaders," she said. "We have a system that runs well. I think that most leaders in SG take their roles very seriously."

But Telles-Irvin said there remains much work to be done to make SG more accessible and more relevant to students.

"It's always a challenge," she said. "We're all in this together to make this a better institution. This is a partnership and I plan to work closely with them. They play a very integral part in advancing the institution forward."

Boyles said that despite not hearing of any resentment in the Reitz Union corridors, SG members stay on their toes a little more.

"Obviously, it will continue to affect all of us," he said. "It's history, so it's going to affect us. It will affect the way that we approach things in the future. It's something that we think a little more about than we did in the past."

But Boyles said he does not see senators basing their decisions on the possibility of a veto.

"We need to put it behind us and move on," he said.

Biggest tuition increases affect graduate students in professional programs

department chairs July 15 listed new students as either undergraduates starting in Fall, graduate students seeking new degrees, non-military students re-enrolling after more than two semesters and all non-degree seeking students.

Continuing students must have been admitted before Fall 2005 and enrolled in either Spring or Summer.

Hoskins estimated UF received about $197 million in tuition from its 48,000 students for the fiscal year ending June 30, meaning the average student pays about $4,100 per year to attend classes.

The biggest increases in tuition occurred in graduate professional programs such as medical, dental and veterinary medicine, where new students will pay hundreds of dollars more than continuing students.

Out-of-state tuition for dental students will cost an estimated $43,000 dollars, which is about $9,000 more than last year.

Medical and veterinary medicine tuition will see similar increases in the thousands of dollars.

Both new and continuing Florida residents will pay $103.12 per undergraduate credit hour — a 4.7-percent increase from last year.

However, new non-residents will pay more than $574 per undergraduate credit hour, which is about $20 more than their continuing counterparts and almost $50 more than the same students paid last year.

Florida residents entering graduate school at UF will pay $259.75 or about 8 percent more than those already enrolled, who will pay $239.59 per credit hour.

New and continuing out-of-state graduate students both will pay about $890 per credit hour.

Editorial

It's go time.

We at the Department of Darts and Laurels realize we don't have much more room this Summer to praise the heroes and punish the wicked, so we're not taking the moments we have left lightly.

The world's moving forward — Greg Maddux has 3,000 strikeouts, Microsoft is testing a new version of Windows, and the 62-year-old vocal cords of Mick Jagger will shred out yet another set of tunes for a Rolling Stones album due in September.

"The band came up with the title, 'A Bigger Bang,' reflecting their fascination with the scientific theory about the origin of the universe," the group's official Web site proclaims.

Something tells us age is not the greatest of the Stones' problems.

But UF has problems of its own, and with that understatement of the semester we kick off the latest edition of...

Darts & Laurels

Whenever we extend that frail olive branch toward the students who govern us, it feels like we're just poking a six-alarm fire.

No complaints though — as we said last week, we're in the kitchen for a reason. But couldn't our student leaders wait one week before shooting our praise down with a poison arrow?

It's high time to shoot back with a do-what-students-want-for-a-change DART to the groups pushing the so-called "online voting" measure that passed first reading at Student Senate.

Repeat: a DART, a DART, a DART to all involved with the passage of the travesty we pain to call "secured-site" online voting.

Besides its misleading language, the bill as voted for by the Senate doesn't even mandate such a system for future elections — it just opens the possibility while also specifically making true Internet voting illegal.

So when we're waiting in line in the heat this September to reach our "online" voting machine, we all know whom to thank.

And now, to prove we can eat our words under the right circumstances, we'll blast off to Cape Canaveral, where a notable event finally took place Tuesday.

At long last, we can hand the you're-still-too-old-but-charm-lasts-a-long-time LAUREL to NASA for launching the space shuttle into orbit for the first time in more than two years.

We're also happy that the schedule leading to serious manned exploration has been pushed up so that the venerable shuttle can end its career in 2010, and we can get back to the moon by 2012.

For now, though, let's focus on getting Discovery's crew back safely.

Finally, as we land firmly back on the ground after SG's rug-tugging and our NASA-courtesy trip through the stratosphere, we stick a we-miss-two-dollars-how-do-you-not-notice-a-million DART to the foreheads of Gainesville City Commission staffers.

According to a story published Wednesday in the Gainesville Sun, city staff knew for a month or more that insurance broker Arthur J. Gallagher and Co. kept $1.3 million in refund money intended to go back to the city and Gainesville Regional Utilities.

But commissioners didn't know about it until Monday night — they weren't brought up to speed even when the Commission deliberated on extending Gallagher's contract.

Our tax dollars at work.

Stay tuned next week as we recount the latest misadventures in governing.

Rational thinking should be nonpartisan

Just for a change of pace, I'm going to step away from what's going wrong at UF and in our society and spend some time on the basics — I don't think some of you have been paying attention in class.

Today's topic is something I've been trying to beat into your heads since my first day on the job: rational thinking.

It's no secret I don't have any use for extremists of any kind — especially not the bleeding-heart liberals and conservatives we so often see (and, unfortunately, hear) here in the land of the free.

As a former conservative, I find those fanatical liberals to be the scarier of the two: Both do their best to destroy the fabric of society by fighting for ideals shared by only a fraction of the country, but liberals also have no practical sense of what the government has the resources to accomplish.

You ask, "How can I tell if I am one of these outrageous liberals, or if I simply have a healthy respect for civil liberties?"

In order to help you on your path to self discovery — and recovery, if the results turn out that way — I present to you a foolproof method of determining your level of liberalhood: the "Ally McBeal" test.

You may remember "Ally McBeal" as a silly little TV show about a silly little law firm that always got itself into boringly silly situations.

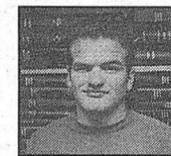

In one episode, a businesswoman and single mother sued her employers for gender-based discrimination.

This woman was one of those I'll-work-80-hours-per-week-and-have-no-life-so-I-can-be-partner-when-I'm-35 types that you admire, despise or feel pity for, depending on your personal beliefs.

After she became pregnant, as one would expect, she had to cut down on those hours quite a bit.

Her new, fulfilling life as a self-supporting single mom was just dandy until she was passed over for a promotion.

The job, of course, went to I've-been-working-80-hours-per-week-so-I-can-get-a-promotion-even-though-I-haven't-worked-here-as-long-as-that-other-lady guy.

Matt Sanchez
Pure Foppery
msanchez@alligator.org

Thus, the lawsuit. She says she was discriminated against because the only reason she stopped working 80-hour workweeks was because she had a kid.

The argument from her lawyers was that it was an affront to humanity to deny a promotion to someone for spending less time at work and more time with their kids — which only females did.

Since this was American TV, Ms. Businesswoman won the suit and everyone considered it a victory for civil liberties and a savage blow to the old-boy country-club machine.

So, here's the test: If your brain hurts from the thought that such flaming ridiculousness could even be conceived of, then you are a rational human being.

If you agree, on the other hand, that the company should be punished for giving a promotion to a guy who put in obscenely long hours instead of to the woman who cut her workload in half, then you're a U.S.-government-has-enough-money-to-fix-every-problem-that-exists-and-every-one-should-be-equal-except-white-males-who-should-be-watched-so-they-don't-take-too-many-good-jobs liberal.

But just so my rational liberal buddies don't feel left out, this scenario can be adapted to sniff out the conservatives.

Their first thought upon hearing the details of the case was "Screw the lawsuit; whoever let that chick out of the kitchen in the first place should be thrown in jail."

So remember kids: If any of your friends fail this test, they are dangerous extremists and should be made fun of as often as possible. Put that peer pressure to good use.

If you failed the test, console yourself with a bit of advice from our country's finest instructional media, G.I. Joe: Knowing is half the battle.

Airline comedy can fly, but beware corporate-shtick takeoff

PROVIDENCE, R.I.
During the descent of my recent Delta flight into Atlanta, the flight attendant came on the intercom to list the connecting flights. With a deadpan voice, he began: "I'm now going to read a very long and boring list."

He then paused for laughter that never came. This wisecrack was just one of several made by Delta Dan throughout the flight. Each one seemed forced and out-of-place.

My discomfort with these jokes puzzled me until I spoke with Patrick Smith, author of the book "Ask the Pilot: Everything You Need to Know About Air Travel."

After echoing my feelings, he emphasized what he sees as the bigger picture — that airlines are trying to be funny without first figuring out how to communicate effectively on a normal, professional level.

"Why should airlines expect people to appreciate in-flight comedy when they can't even offer a coherent explanation about things like delays or lost luggage?" he asked me in an e-mail.

"Airlines try to present difficult, complex situations in the simplest terms, and the end result is condescending baby talk: 'Sorry, we have to bump you because the plane is out of balance.'"

In other words a bit of mutual respect is needed before the employee can say, as a Pacific Southwest Airlines attendant once did, "Ladies and gentlemen, I'd like to welcome you to Honolulu. Unfortunately, we are in Fresno."

In Smith's opinion, one carrier stands out in the struggling industry as having successfully married good business management with good humor: Southwest Airlines.

Andrew Stein U-Wire

Southwest gate agents often play games with delayed passengers, and their flight attendants sometimes sing the safety instructions or affect an Elvis or Mr. Rogers accent. That's pretty funny.

On the business side, Southwest's core values of humor and "luv" (the company's stock ticker symbol) have helped the carrier remain profitable after Sept. 11, 2001, while its big spoke-and-hub U.S. brothers struggle with expensive pilot contracts and fleet upkeep.

Delta and Northwest may file for bankruptcy soon, joining US Airways and United in the hangar of shame.

Southwest Airlines is the epitome of corporate humor. The reversal is poetic; after decades of stand-up monologues insulting air travel, we now have an airline famous for mocking itself. Airplane humor has made the round trip.

As large companies focus on improving their "corporate culture," Southwest-style humor is spreading through the business world.

Such staid institutions as IBM and Fidelity Investments, for example, have admitted to hiring "humor consultants" for up to $5,000 an hour. If this trend continues, hilarity might become a legitimate metric of the corporate makeover.

Frankly, this trend worries me. When a company's signature trait is democratized for widespread use, something awful ensues: It becomes generic.

I'm concerned about what will happen if humor becomes another component of crafting corporate strategy. Will this be part of an MBA degree taught by a professor of corporate self-deprecation?

And after management consultants begin recommending open mic time for the boss, what's next? Will humor follow "revenue streams" as the latest for-profit principle to invade nonprofit operational theory?

Imagine donating blood in the care of Red Cross nurses who lighten the mood by wearing vampire teeth.

Part of the surprise of a Delta employee joking is that Delta is famous for being serious and conservative. Just look at its bland moniker.

A REGAL DECISION

BY MELISSA FILIPKOWSKI

While Royal Park Stadium 16 theaters may not be the Park Place of Gainesville real estate, Regal Entertainment Group completed a move in its own game of local Monopoly.

Regal bought out Eastern Federal Corporations' entire Southeast division of 22 theaters in a $127.6 million deal — including Gainesville's Royal Park Stadium 16, located at 3702 Newberry Road.

"We are pleased that Regal has identified the value that we have created over three generations in the movie theater business," Eastern Federal Corporation CEO Carter Meiselman said in a press release.

This marks the second buyout for Regal this summer. It closed a $31 million deal for seven theaters owned by R/C Theaters of Maryland. Nationally, Regal currently owns and operates 6,264 screens in 553 theaters in 40 states, representing about 18 percent of all indoor screens in the United States.

Regal now dominates the local Gainesville market with moviegoers' only other option for new releases being privately owned Gator Cinemas, 6741 W Newberry Road.

Regal may look like it has designated its plots with multiple plastic, red hotels on Boardwalk, but its competition could be viewed as a respectable yellow property with a house or two of its own.

They might just be far enough apart for Gainesville to still have some film competition among its theaters.

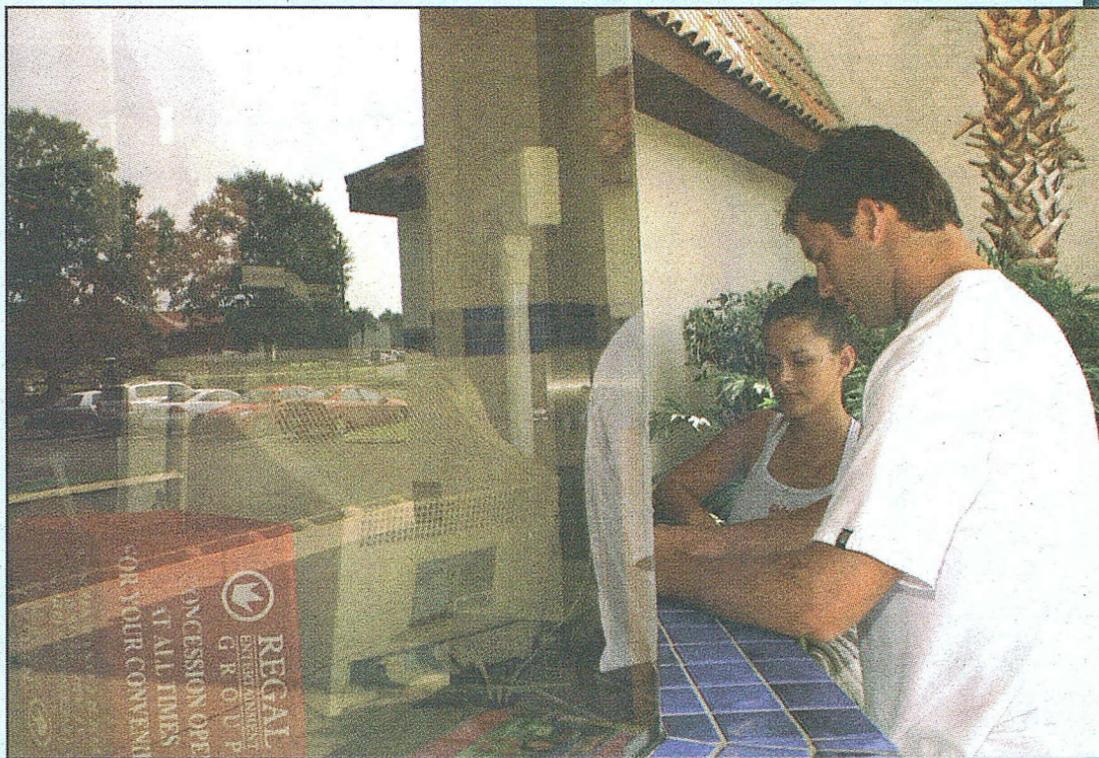

Gator Cinemas General Manager Chris Meeks said as long as the two theaters continue to show different movies, Regal's new ownership should have little competitive effect on the theater.

However, he said if the two theaters started showing the same movies, there will be three theaters possibly showing the same films, which could be bad for business.

However, there is little danger of this happening. The film studios dictate that movie theaters within three miles of each other can't play the same titles.

But good or bad for Gainesville, some students would like to see movies at more than one location if it meant they would be able to view them earlier.

"It's ridiculous that you can't go to a movie its opening night in Gainesville," said UF senior Erika Hughes. "It's always impossible to go see anything unless you buy your tickets way in advance."

While Regal Entertainment Group officially owned the Royal Park Stadium 16 as of July 22, the changes will not be in full effect until final closing conditions are settled in September.

Movie prices for students will be regulated between Regal's two local theaters; both Regal Cinemas Gainesville 14 and Royal Park Stadium 16 will charge $6.75 for students.

Gator Cinemas charges students $5.

"We cater to the wallet," Meeks said.

Representatives of Regal Cinemas and Eastern Federal did not return repeated phone calls.

Ladies now learning when to hold 'em, fold 'em

By OLEE FOWLER
and BRETT KELMAN
Avenue Writers

Whether it's being played on the frontier of the wild, wild West, the high-rollers table in Las Vegas, or the average American cigarette-filled basement, whether you're playing five card or seven card, stud, draw or hold 'em, whether you're playing for cash, chips or both, one thing about poker has held true since its creation.

It's a man's game.
Or at least it was.

Recently, the Travel Channel aired "World Poker Tour Ladies Night," which featured the top-six female poker players from around the world. Even the ladies of Wisteria Lane often meet and play a round of poker while gossiping away.

Because whether it's for fun, for money or just to socialize, girls are now cashing in on the nationwide poker trend.

Poker is drawing more female participants than ever before around the country and right here on campus.

UF freshman Krysten Rosen learned how to play poker when she moved into the dorms.

"Now everyone on my hall plays at least a few times a week," she said. "More girls are getting involved in the game."

And while some sit bored and watch their boyfriends play, other girls are learning how to play from the male influences in their lives.

That is how UF marketing major Lene Straetzel really caught on to the game.

"Usually, girls are better because guys don't think they're going to lie."

Sara Lorenzen
UF student

"I live with people who socialize through playing poker, and sometimes I felt left out because of my lack of knowledge for the game," Straetzel said. "But I learned how to play now and have met a lot of people through playing poker."

And women aren't playing poker more just on the local level but at the professional level as well.

The number of professional female players has gone up considerably in the past few years.

The top six female players on the poker circuit today have won a combined 10 World Series of Poker tournaments and millions of dollars in cash prizes, according to www.onlinepokergirl.com.

Poker product Web sites like www.poker-wholesale.com have been quick to capitalize on this growing female poker trend, manufacturing poker sets in "girl-friendly" colors like pink and purple.

The growing success of both professional and casual female poker players could be attributed to male players' bad habit of underestimating them.

"I play poker a lot at the Hard Rock in Tampa, and when I first sit down at the table, some of the guys question my ability to play or think I'll be easy to beat," said freshman Danielle Peterson. "But after a round or two, I show them I really can play and usually gain their respect pretty quickly."

Sara Lorenzen, a microbiology major, learned the game from her father and uses the discrimination against her to her advantage.

"Usually, girls are better because guys don't think they're going to lie," she said.

New rock offerings hit or miss

Thor Against the World
Thor
Smog Veil Records

Like He-Man singing Bon Jovi or GWAR for Poison fans, Thor unleashes an onslaught of pop metal from the perspective of a Nordic god. If that description doesn't hook you, quickly browse over to the next CD review. For the rest of you, I will attempt to explain the grace and beauty of Thor's latest ode to the gods, "Thor Against the World."

Thor (yes, that is his actual surname) has been providing multimedia entertainment from movies to music to rock n' roll comic geeks since the mid '70s. His latest creation shows that his B-talent status is well-deserved, for better or worse.

The music is horrendous and extremely lactose friendly, with cheesy guitar solos hammered on top of even cheesier synths. Thankfully, the lyrics are borderline Shakespearean, with heart-wrenching poetry like "Hey hey women, I wouldn't trade you for three/ Hey hey women, you mean a whole lot to me."

The real gem of the CD is the accompanying music video for "Glimmer," which can be accessed when putting the disc in a computer. The video, which has special effects and acting straight from the Roger Corman School of Production, fits the song perfectly.

"Thor Against the World" is awkward, pretentious, larger than life and unknowingly hilarious — all the components of a perfect cult CD.

The Muggs
The Muggs
Times Beach Records

In their self-titled disc, the Muggs forego the last 20 years of rock music and put out a blues-rock record straight from Detroit, circa 1975. Unlike their revivalist contemporaries Jet and Kings of Leon, they lack any sort of modern day shimmer, which will keep them from the spotlight of their counterparts. Still, their rusty sound will enthrall purists and geeky music critics alike.

Nothing about the Muggs is pretty, and it's easy to see why they proudly proclaim themselves to be the ugliest band in the world. There is nothing smooth about the constant thud of the rhythm section as they pound away relentlessly. The blistering guitar and blues-grit vocals create a grimy experience. The band members also are ugly.

The standout track is the instrumental "Underway." Though by definition lacking the sleazy vocals of lead singer Danny, the groove generated by the three-piece is undeniable, on par with "Toys in the Attic"-era Aerosmith grooves.

Despite their name, the Muggs refrain from mugging and deliver a straight-ahead rocker that serves as a reminder of how sometimes to move forward, you need to step back.

Punches
World Leaders Pretend
Warner Bros. Records

"Punches" is a completely self-contradictory album, from lush orchestration with raspy vocals to minute-long piano pieces alongside eight-minute epics, all held together by a challenging pop-music sound. Proof that rock isn't meant to be logical, "Punches" is a beautifully crafted album that should appeal to everyone listening to music today.

World Leaders Pretend bring together three distinct sounds into most of its songs that surprisingly create a cohesive experience. First is the surprising vocals of band leader Keith Ferguson, who slurs his words together when not hitting startlingly high notes. Behind him is the pounding drums of Arthur Mintz, who creates innovative rhythms in an unlikely situation. Holding everything together is dense, imaginative instrumentation with an orchestra, guitar and glockenspiel all coming together to form a Phil Spector-esque wall of sound.

Although each song has merit, the most easily accessible track is the album's namesake, "Punches." The song is dynamic, swaying back and forth from the disc's signature orchestration to a simple vocal with keys.

Creating a unique sound from unlikely components, "Punches" is a pop masterpiece that warrants and gives joy to the repeated listens that are needed to fully grasp its craftwork.

Girls will love 'Dogs'

As a very cute chick flick, "Must Love Dogs" does exactly what it's intended to do — blend light comedy with a flare of romanticism.

John Cusack and Diane Lane star in the movie, opening tomorrow, as two divorcees stuck in a melancholy state after their divorces became final and their ex-significant others move on.

Lane plays a conservative preschool teacher while Cusack retains the same role that made him famous — a slightly neurotic hopeless romantic with deep-rooted artistic philosophies.

Melissa Filipkowski
The Reel Life
theavenue@alligator.org

And while I realize that he plays the same slightly neurotic roles in most of his movies, I never seem to get sick of it.

I always find him endearing and funny, and he is no different in "Must-Love Dogs."

The movie sets up with Lane as she returns to the dating scene via Internet-dating Web sites. We follow her on a string of dates, and while it is kind of sad and pathetic to watch, it comes off as mildly funny.

Lane eventually finds herself in a bind as she falls for two guys — Cusack and the father of one of her preschool students, played by "My Best Friend's Wedding" star Dermot Mulroney.

I was a little confused about why the movie is named "Must Love Dogs," as the movie doesn't really focus on dogs too much. So if by some chance you were intending to see the movie due to cute scenes with pooches, you'll be disappointed.

The movie mainly focuses on moving on after divorce and the hardships of the dating world — not dogs.

The chemistry between Lane and Mulroney was great, but with Cusack, the scenes seemed too rehearsed and I didn't buy into the relationship.

This movie is reserved for those who really enjoy Cusack or a girls' movie night.

It will leave you turning to the person next to you and sighing contentedly.

Or in my case, hugging my bucket of popcorn a little tighter and watching the couple in front of me make out.

Rockin' against the world

Thor lead guitarist Steve Stack, lead singer Jon Miki Thor and bassist John Ramirez perform at Common Grounds Monday as part of the "Thor Against the World" tour.

'Lion in Winter' presents dramas universal in history

The English have done it again. The proper royales of olde dish up a platter that's oozing with juiciness and scandal in the play "The Lion in Winter."

This sudsy, slippery story is about the drama of King Henry II's court. Namely, the despise, infidelity, greed, fear, pity, betrayal, love and plotting that makes up the power struggle between his three sons, Richard (the Lionheart), Geoffrey and John.

Up for grabs in this life-sized game of chess are a throne, a princess and some valuable real estate. It's Christmastime; the family is all together, hanging holly around the castle, and they are at each other's throats — literally.

It is the ultimate case for democracy. The arbitrary ways decisions were made, whether out of spite, whim or favoritism, would make Washington rip out his hair and gnash his wooden teeth.

The dialogue is witty and keeps the audience from noticing they are enjoying a form of history.

It seems bad parenting is the main problem hinted at in the drama, but jealousy, greed, selfishness, love and power create intricate layers to the point that the characters don't even know their true hearts.

Director Ted Lewis and assistant Daniel

Lewis guided their cast through the maze of human emotions to great effect.

King Henry II, played by Randall Moring, had a stately bellow and also an endearing tiredness in the whole mess. His crippling monologue just before intermission was genuine anguish. Queen Eleanor, Susan Moring, was incredibly dynamic. She was icy, yet emotional and convincing in every lie.

The greedy trinity of Richard, Geoffrey and John were adequate in their roles. And John, Bennett Lloyd, was perfect for the spoiled-brat baby of the family with his whiny voice.

And finally, the only victim of the play, besides those pawns used in the kings' wars and the perhaps long-suffering peasants we always hear about, is Princess Alais, played by Loren Omer. Omer plays the agony of being used by love well and helps to keep Alais innocent-seeming even when she does get angry.

The play really brings life in the 12th century to the 21st century. We are still battling our desires, emotions, families and carrying grudges today.

This intense, twisting drama behind James Goldman's play shows at the Gainesville Community Playhouse, July 15 through 31.

Hate it or love it, 'Prince' leaves readers hanging

I stood in the midnight queue with the other die-hard Harry Potter blokes to get my copy of "Half-Blood Prince." I didn't immediately read it because I wanted to re-read the first five Harry Potter books. I also didn't immediately read it because my prat of a boyfriend (who I completely adore) decided to "borrow" my book and read it himself before I had a chance to open it, after rowing with me about how silly he thought the whole Harry Potter craze is.

After finally getting it back, I stayed up all night reading it, and frankly, I'm knackered.

Right.

"Half-Blood Prince" is not as well written or as poignant as books three and five. Rowling's imagination introduces us to fewer aspects of the magical world than she normally does.

So to keep myself from spoiling the book, I'll list what I disliked and loved about Rowling's sixth installment.

I disliked the fact that characters like Ginny, Neville and Luna, who Rowling spent time developing in "The Order of the Phoenix," did not play a larger role in this novel. Hagrid and Lupin also didn't show up nearly as often as I had hoped.

I disliked Harry Potter's new romantic relationship. It seems to stem from nothing. The character Harry ends up with in book six showed potential for becoming an interesting and essential part of his life in book five. But in book six, she receives little attention from the author.

Most of all, I dislike the fact that I have to wait 18 to 24 months before I know what happens next.

That is because there were so many aspects of this novel I loved.

To begin with, Harry Potter is no longer an angst, pissy teenager. He also is not the boy hero he was in the first four books. Harry has grown into a vulnerable, yet mature adult almost ready for his final showdown with Voldemort.

Rowling also does a great job of showing how Voldemort's return has darkened the magical world through her descriptions of the student's traditional school-supply shopping trip in Diagon Alley.

Then there is the relationship between Ron and Hermione. Their confused feelings for each other offer comic relief and a dose of reality to the reader. Their constant loyalty to Harry is sweet, but Rowling keeps it realistic by allowing both Ron and Hermione to doubt Harry's theories about who a possible murderer in the school might be.

I also enjoyed finding more about Tom Riddle's past. Rowling's description of Tom Riddle's metamorphosis into the dark wizard, Lord Voldemort, is creepy. The reader learns enough about Voldemort to find him disturbing yet almost deserving of sympathy.

And then there is the ending. The Half-Blood Prince reveals himself. A major character dies. All perceptions you had about certain characters change in a matter of pages. You are left with a cliffhanger and a sneaky suspicion that what you just witnessed might not be what it appears. Cheerio.

Whether for conversation or foreplay, sex talk should be silenced

Most relationships walk on two legs — conversation and sex. The moment either one stumbles, warning flags go up.

If you're able to maintain good sex and good conversation separately, combining the two creates a whole new array of issues to consider.

The first complication of sex talk stems from the nearly infinite variations of conversation types during sex. Some people talk about their desires and others talk in character. Some make jokes and some just chitchat.

I separate all sex talk into two main categories: that which is designed to enhance the sex, or "dirty talk," and that which has nothing to do with the experience at all, "intercourse discourse."

The first category gets swept under the blanket-term "dirty talk." However, with both the multiple variations — fantasy talk, baby talk, demeaning talk, etc. — and their very separate followings, lumping it all together under one name proves dangerous.

While I'm pretty comfortable talking about my fantasies with a partner, you'd be hard pressed to get me talking like a toddler. Yet both get pegged as 'dirty talk.'

A different experience-enhancing dialogue in need of distinction from "dirty talk," I refer to as shoptalk.

Shoptalk consists of the in-act discussions, requests, commands and compromises of the sexual logistics. While sometimes awkward, in my opinion, shoptalk remains the only worthy conversation during sex.

Shoptalk comprises, to me at least, the necessary communication to achieve the mutual goal — namely orgasm. All other types of talking tend to make me laugh out loud, which is another sound not well received during sex.

On the topic of talk that topples the mood, I label the other category of sex talk as "intercourse discourse."

Intercourse discourse is surprisingly common, especially when it comes to making light jokes.

The intention seems obvious. Making one endearing to another through laughter effectively gets sex partners. However, when the nudity starts the jokes should stop.

But it's not only light banter. Intercourse discourse types have an incomparable manner to prattle while they probe.

Typically, the conversation remains superficial with plans for the week or recounting the day. When the conversation becomes an intimate confession of inner thoughts — those not sex related of course — I find myself even more lost.

Mostly, when it comes to coital conversation, I wish we all could just shut up.

UF coach Urban Meyer speaks at the Southeastern Conference media days in Hoover, Ala., Wednesday.

Meyer debuts at Media Days

By ANDREW ABRAMSON

Alligator Staff Writer
aabramson@alligator.org

HOOVER, Ala. — Before making his official Southeastern Conference debut on Wednesday, Urban Meyer was asked about his first stop in Gainesville.

It occurred more than 20 years ago, when Meyer was a reserve defensive back at Cincinnati. The Bearcats, serving as UF's homecoming feast in 1984, fell to the Gators 48-17.

Meyer never imagined that two decades later, he would enter the SEC Football Media Days as one of the highest-profile first-year coaches in conference history.

"There was some really pretty girls up in the stands. I was 19 years old," said Meyer of his 1984 visit to the Swamp.

"That kind of tells you where my mind was. [UF had] very good players and it was hot. That's all I remember."

After months of anticipation from the national media, Meyer was the first SEC coach to take the podium at Media Days.

Since arriving at UF, Meyer has been praised for his bluntness and honesty, but on Wednesday there were no surprise statements or shocking answers.

Instead, Meyer seemed humbled by his SEC debut.

"My respect for the SEC goes much further back than 2005," Meyer said. "If you would ask me the last 19 years what I believe the best conference in college football was, I would have said the SEC."

Meyer said that from top to bottom he believes no conference compares to the SEC.

"My respect for the SEC goes much further back than 2005. If you would ask me the last 19 years what I believe the best conference in college football was, I would have said the SEC."

Urban Meyer

But while UF may have some of the top athletes in the conference, Meyer knows that it takes more than pure talent to win in the SEC.

"Athletes like we have in Florida can run away with the game," he said.

"Can we finish the deal and do we have the toughness to hang in there when things are not going well? Those are the two [biggest] questions."

Change In Approach

On the all-SEC preseason coaches' team, no team had more recipients than UF.

But the first-year coach wants a change in mentality. Last season, under former coach Ron Zook, the Gators fell apart in the fourth quarter of several games, losing their composure under pressure.

To Meyer, it's all about toughness.

"My evaluation after mat drills and spring practice was [we are not a tough team]," Meyer said. "That was the theme of the summer, and I'm hoping that the team [shows toughness at] two-a-days."

Safety Jarvis Herring, who served as UF's player representative along with Mike Degory, admitted that the team didn't have that tough mental edge under Zook.

"Guys are actually scared of making mistakes now," Herring said. "[Last year] we got kind of lax and we just started trying to do our own things. We were just being immature."

Herring said that in 2004, there was a feeling that if the Gators failed, they always had next year.

Under Meyer, that attitude is equal to heresy.

"The team is not just waiting

Press questions Meyer's system, finds offense belongs to Leak

Somewhere, right now, there's a dad on a family vacation who would sympathize with Urban Meyer.

"Are we there yet? Are we there yet? Are we there yet?"

Since day one, many members of the media have incessantly bombarded the first-year UF coach with a question, possessing an almost equally obvious answer.

"Will your system work?"

"Can Chris Leak run your system?"

"Can your system work at Florida?"

"How will your system fare in the SEC?"

System, system, system, system...shut up.

Yeah, you're sports writers. Sure, you've played a lot of NCAA 2006.

But prove your football IQ with your PlayStation and quit questioning the competency of a coach who has done nothing but win.

Before you go throwing the "S" word around like that, tell me: What is Meyer's system?

My best answer: one that racks up a ton of points out of the shotgun.

Well, I guess I was also wrong.

Not with my answer but my question.

As Meyer explained at the SEC Football Media Days on Wednesday, it's not his system. It's not even a system at all.

His formula is simple: take your best players and get them the ball frequently.

Figure out a way for them to excel at what they do best and score often.

As he explained Wednesday, it's not his offense, it's Chris Leak's.

Bryan App
App-etite for Receptions
bapp@alligator.org

As he has reiterated time and again, it wasn't Utah's system, it was Alex Smith's.

Without these key players, to whom the offense is tailored, Meyer's system doesn't click that easily.

"As a matter of fact, I took [Smith] out a couple of times," Meyer said. "I wanted to put him right back in."

"The system is in place. It's a player system. What we try to do is see if you can make plays. You are a talented guy. I have got to get you the ball. That's what I do well."

Maybe we should believe him on this one. I mean, Smith, the No. 1 pick in the NFL Draft, just signed a contract with the 49ers worth only $8.2 million per year.

Sure, Meyer will face defenses in the Southeastern Conference quicker and stronger than any Mountain West team would ever dream of recruiting.

Of course, he'll close the gap by trading in his Utah Yugos for Florida Ferraris on the other side of the ball.

But Meyer's system goes beyond mere athleticism.

"Balancing mental and physical abilities is his thing," senior center Mike Degory said. "He's not just concerned about a player's performance, he's also concerned about the player."

"Building a relationship, that's his thing."

So will innovation and unity work in the SEC? Well, we'll find out.

Fulmer back in '05

By IAN FISHER
Alligator Staff Writer
ifisher@alligator.org

HOOVER, Ala. — Steve Spurrier was not the only coach making a return to the Southeastern Conference Media Days on Wednesday.

Back after taking a year off was Tennessee coach Phillip Fulmer, who didn't make the trip last season because his attorneys advised against attending what he called a "legal circus." Last year, Fulmer was fined $10,000 by Commissioner Mike Slive for not attending. He had to answer questions over a speakerphone.

Fulmer was advised not to attend last year because of lawsuits against him regarding his talking to the NCAA about possible violations at Alabama.

"I really regret that I wasn't able to be here last year and hate all the circumstances that kept me from being here last year," Fulmer said. "I haven't seen the commissioner yet, but if you see him, make sure he knows that I was here, because it can be expensive if you don't show up."

Fulmer said there were threats to his family on his cell phone, but after his opening speech, he refused to comment on the whole situation regarding the lawsuits.

However, Fulmer never had any second thoughts about attending this year.

"I am glad to be here," he said. "This kicks off our season. It has for a lot of years and the volatility of our profession and the high expectations that are out there for coaches these days, you know, we don't get to exchange like this very often with this many people and tell folks about our programs. I like that. As much as you think I don't, I like it."

Fulmer maintained that he did the right thing throughout the lawsuits and defended himself for trying to keep the game clean.

"They usually have their own selfish reasons for [cheating] and we have seen it as gamblers do it, bad agents or their runners do it to our kids, and bad boosters do it," he said. "I truly believe that we all have an obligation and responsibility to keep our game clean of these people to the best of our abilities."

Fulmer said he got a great reception from the people in Alabama despite all the recent off-field drama.

"I'd like to get back to where we have a completely great, clean, tough, hard-fought rivalry, and have none of this other stench in it," he said. "Whether we can get to that, I don't know, but I have no hard feelings against anybody that's a true Alabama fan."

to play another season. We're waiting to hopefully do some great things," Herring said.

"It's a lot more exciting. You have a new life, it's like you have a new breath. We have a chance to win."

Spurrier Connection

Meyer couldn't escape questions about former UF coach and icon Steve Spurrier, especially since Spurrier took the same podium just three hours later as the head coach of South Carolina.

When asked about the pressure of living up to Spurrier's success, Meyer reiterated comments made last year when he said he became a UF fan in the '90s because of Spurrier. However, he didn't seem very eager to tell the tale again.

"That is past history," Meyer said. "That's old news."

Spurrier, a crowd-pleaser

during his 40 minutes at the microphone, was asked about his interaction with the UF coach since Meyer took the job, and whether Meyer has the temperament that can handle major expectations at Florida.

"[Meyer] has had an excellent track record. He's done well," Spurrier said.

"There's no reason to think he's not going to do well there. But then again, my job is not to promote all the coaches around the league."

president don't come and tell him what to do, unless he's cheating or losing too much," Spurrier said.

"I know we're not going to cheat, and I hope we're not going to lose too much, so hopefully I won't see the A.D. or president talking football with me."

"Hopefully" being the key word.

The coach once hated for his cockiness seemed to remain cautiously humble about his Gamecocks.

Leading a South Carolina team devastated by off-field incidents and facing potentially severe penalties after revealing 10 NCAA rules violations, Spurrier isn't ready to entertain talk of heated rivalries — be it with Vols or Gators.

"We need to beat somebody first before those guys are going to worry about South Carolina," Spurrier said. "Some people are going to make us their rivals when we haven't beaten them much at all.

"Hopefully we can get respect, but we have to earn it."

At least the Gamecocks have a little history and superstition on their side.

Spurrier

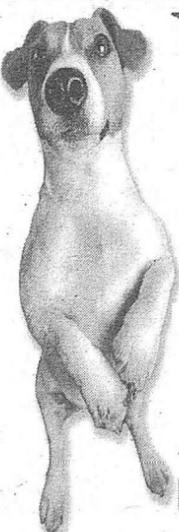

According to Chinese horoscope, 2005 is the year of the rooster and so was 1969.

And aside from a 2001 Outback Bowl victory, the South Carolina faithful have had nothing to cheer about since.

"In 1969 South Carolina won the ACC championship.

We went 6-0 in ACC that year, and it was year of the rooster," Spurrier said.

"[This] is the year of the rooster so don't bet too much against the Gamecocks, even though we're big underdogs. We've got the rooster on our side. That's about the only thing we have going for us."

SEC officials present guidelines for instant replay

By ANDREW ABRAMSON
Alligator Staff Writer
aabramson@alligator.org

HOOVER, Ala. — If instant replay existed a year ago, and UF had defeated Tennessee in the second game of the season, who knows where former coach Ron Zook would be today.

A controversy with the game clock, along with a personal foul called on Dallas Baker that appeared to be equally the fault of his Tennessee counterpart, had critics screaming for instant replay. UF fans especially said instant replay could have saved the season.

Not so fast.

Southeastern Conference coordinator of officials Bobby Gaston officially laid out the guidelines for the newly implemented instant replay system Wednesday at SEC Football Media Days, but he made it clear that under the new rules, nothing would have been reversed in Knoxville.

"The instant replay deal has tried to keep the replay people out of actually officiating the game. They're only there to correct the mistake that they made," Gaston said. "If we had to watch the clock every play and determine whether they started it properly or improperly, that's a real tedious thing, I can assure you."

As for the personal fouls, Gaston said that in the South Carolina-Clemson brawl last year, they couldn't determine all the participants until the Wednesday after the game. Basically, Gaston said it would be too difficult to review fights in many situations.

"I didn't think we should stop a game until Wednesday," Gaston joked.

But replay has finally arrived in the SEC and much of college football, though it's different than the system used in the NFL.

Gaston

Each SEC football stadium will have a secured replay booth equipped with a DVSPORT Digital Replay system. A replay official, communicator and technician will sit in the booth.

"We decided to do this rather than having a phone at the sidelines like most people do because I was told by the NFL people that when you put a phone right there on the stands itself, that you have got people hanging over the stands [as a distraction], as well as coaches hollering at you," Gaston said.

He also said that with this technology, the replays will be quick. Most decisions could be made between the whistle and the beginning of the next play, meaning the already drawn out college football games shouldn't run much longer.

Coaches will have no say as to whether plays are reviewed or not. However, the Instant Replay Official will review every potentially review-able play. So fans and even coaches will not necessarily know if a play is being reviewed unless it is overturned.

Gaston said that while coaches cannot ask for a replay, there are other motives for coaches to have their voices heard.

"They can encourage us by taking a time out and turning and staring at the replay booth, and that might prompt us a little bit into action to take it a little bit farther," Gaston said.

While there could possibly be a few kinks in the beginning of the season, Gaston and the rest of the SEC expect a smooth transition.

"We're walking on uncharted waters," Gaston said. "So, subsequently, we don't know totally what to expect, although we did practice this equipment at the Kentucky spring game and we found, amazingly, that we will be able to review far more players and plays than we thought we could."

Horne remains unsigned, may return for senior year

Tim Casey / Alligator Staff

UF pitcher Alan Horne has until the first day of fall classes to decide whether or not to sign a professional contract.

By TIM CASEY
Alligator Writer
tcasey@alligator.org

Alan Horne is getting multiple lessons in marketing this summer.

Not only is the junior pitcher studying marketing in the classroom, but he's also learning from first-hand experience.

Horne was chosen in the 11th round of the 2005 MLB Amateur Draft by the New York Yankees with the 349th selection, but has not yet signed with the team. Previously, it had been assumed that the ace pitcher wouldn't return to UF for a senior season.

"We were talking to them pretty heavily, but we haven't heard back from them in over a week and a half," Horne said Wednesday.

"They pretty much signed everyone around me, guys that were drafted behind me and in front of me," Horne said. "It will probably be something that comes down to the wire."

He knows something about contract negotiations from personal experience.

Horne was drafted in the first round by the Cleveland Indians in 2001 out of high school, and was a 30th-round choice of the Anaheim Angels in the 2004 MLB Draft.

"About three weeks ago, I had lunch with the local scout [for the Yankees]," Horne said. "That's the only face-to-face meeting we've had. I've talked to their scouting director on the phone."

Horne had a 4.05 ERA in 113.1 innings, compiling a team-best 10-2 record.

He made his last appearance of the season

June 23 in the College World Series, but left the game after a fourth inning leg injury in UF's 6-3 win against Arizona State.

"I just pulled my hamstring," Horne said. "Time is what it takes to heal. I needed some rest after a long year."

"Regardless of whether I'm back in the fall or I sign, I won't throw again until the fall."

Alan Horne
UF pitcher

Horne has spent his time since the CWS rehabilitating his leg and resting.

"Regardless of whether I'm back in the fall or I sign, I won't throw again until the fall," Horne said.

Should Horne turn down a contract with the Yankees, the 2006 Gators would have a formidable lineup that could improve on the best season in school history. UF lost to Texas in the championship round of the CWS.

"I've talked with Coach [Pat] McMahon, he wants what's best for me," Horne said. "Obviously, he wants to have me back. He knows I'm ready for professional baseball."

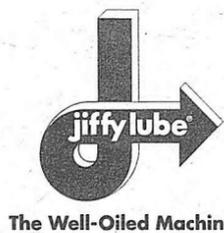

The major league trading deadline is Sunday. To make a push towards the post-season and unseat the defending World Series champion Boston Red Sox, the Yankees are looking for help.

"They've traded off a lot of their talent so they're trying to build up their system," Horne said.

Spurrier's return to SEC becomes main attraction

"Copyrighted Material

By BRYAN APP
Alligator Staff Writer
bapp@alligator.org

Hoover, Ala. — A sign in the lobby welcomed attendees to this year's Southeastern Conference Football Media Days.

And if the Wynfrey Hotel had a marquee, it would undoubtedly read: "Steve Spurrier Back, Tonight Only."

A national coach of the year followed by the coach of this season's projected SEC champion opened the media festivities.

But there was little doubt who was the headliner.

"It's good to be back," said Spurrier, greeting the crowd hanging on his every word. "I've missed you guys. It's a lot more fun hanging around the SEC than the other league I was in for a couple years."

Escaping from his two-season disaster with the Washington Redskins, Spurrier made his SEC debut Wednesday, picking up where he left off when he dumped UF in January 2002 as the conference's focal figure.

His rivals still can't stand him, but his opponents continue to respect him.

UF coach Urban Meyer made clear the respect he held for the Spurrier's SEC-dominating Gators teams.

"We didn't beat him enough at Florida. When I heard he was first coming back I said, 'Ah, crap,' or something like that."

But the man who once said, "You can't spell Citrus without UT," poking fun at the Volunteers' string of second place SEC finishes during his tenure, has seemed to have toned down his inflammatory rhetoric.

A miserable 12-20 two-season record in the big leagues can tend to do that.

"Sometimes, a head coach may only be as good as his players," Spurrier said. "I was lucky to have some great teams at Florida, no doubt about it."

"But you learn to appreciate that all coaches work their tails off to give players the best chance to win games."

The golf and sunshine in D.C. just doesn't compare to that of the Palmetto State, but, as Spurrier indicated, a lack of institutional control also played a large factor in his collegiate rebirth.

"Every NFL organization does things a little different, but [with] every college team that I know of, the head coach is not influenced, and the [athletics director] and
