

UF students trying new drug

By JUSTIN RICHARDS

The pills were new, cheap and illegal. He had to try them.

Little did he know he'd want to make his first hit the last one he ever took.

"I was born into a new world, and it was slightly scary," he wrote in his online journal Tuesday. "I am attempting to give up drugs for a while. I need to take time to appreciate the world that I am living in constantly, without effects of outside substances."

The student, who asked to remain anonymous, is one of a number at UF who have tried psychoactive drugs of the "2C" family, which includes 2C-B and 2C-I.

The chemicals have become popular in last few years, partially due to their availability on the Internet.

The drugs were first created in the 1980s as a legal alternative to Ecstasy but have since been made illegal. Those that were not banned can be prosecuted via a provision in drug laws that allows similar drugs to yield equal punishment.

Some users report a sensory experience — vibrant lights, enhanced touch — with 2C-B and a more cognitive experience with 2C-I.

However, the drug is not well-studied.

UF pharmacy professor Paul Doering illustrated the drug's mystery by drawing a big red question mark on his whiteboard.

"The side of me that's scared of the dark keeps me from doing these drugs," Doering said.

The drug has the same chemical skeleton as amphetamine, Ecstasy and the human hormone adrenaline.

Because of its stimulative quality,

Shelley Meyer is on a mission - it's 30 minutes before kickoff, and her champagne glass is empty.

Meyer is at a tailgate party. Not just any tailgate party, but the tailgate party for the families of Gator football coaches under the stadium where her husband will lead the Gator football team in the Homecoming game against Mississippi State.

Before arriving, Meyer went on her gameday run and made her wardrobe decision — one based on superstition. The Gators' loss against Alabama the previous week led Meyer to change her typical blue and orange tie-dye shorts to a khaki pair. She keeps the same outfit on when the Gators win.

"These shorts are 4-1," she said.

A win today could mean possibly a little more time with her husband during the week. A loss could mean her kids in tears due to their father's sadness.

These are all parts of being Mrs. Coach Meyer, wife of Gainesville's biggest celebrity.

The Gators won, but life in the Meyer household is hardly calm. To say her life is busy would be an understatement.

A lot is going on the next day, but Shelley Meyer said Sunday is easy compared with most days. Days when she is up with hus-

Students 'come out' PSU holds awareness event

By DIANA MAZZELLA

Gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender students came out Tuesday. So did a rugby player, a diva, a "Wicked" fan and a few slackers.

Near a white closet door that bore a simple black-and-white, computer-printed sign reading "Closet Door," passersby were asked to wear a nametag denoting they came out as a particular thing and to step through the door to celebrate National Coming Out Day.

About 40 people went through the door, Student Government's LGBTQ Student Affairs Cabinet Director Ricardo Cortez said.

He described the event as being for the LGBT community and also as a way to develop support in the straight community.

"It is becoming a safe campus, so it is OK to come out," Cortez said.

The purpose of National Coming Out Day, organized by the Human Rights Campaign Foundation, is to encourage individuals to be open about their sexuality, according to its Web site.

Freshman and Pride Student Union member Joseph Ladd came out as a slacker and was skipping class at the moment, he said.

He said he thought the event was to support the LGBT community and to let them know there are people who will not judge them.

"I think it's a creative way to lighten up a tough subject," he said.

Ladd said he was from Fort Lauderdale and thought Gainesville was the first place where he encountered people uncomfortable with LGBT issues.

As the clouds threatened a downpour but sent only a few drops, a few students stopped by and posed for pictures as they walked through the door.

Diane Kassim, former Student Senate president, came out as a diva, and Jessica A. Kornick, a business management sophomore, came out as a rugby player.

PSU member Nick Dean said the idea of the event was to include people who are not LGBT.

Pride Student Union President Allison Andrews said something similar was done by Gator Gay-Straight Alliance about three years ago.

"National Coming Out day is supposed to be a time where you talk about sexuality issues," she

UF libraries promote chatting

By ELIZABETH HILLAKER
Alligator Contributing Writer

Students can chat with UF librarians in their underwear. Online, that is.

Librarians field questions and give research advice online from various UF libraries.

It was a natural way to help students and faculty by increasing the libraries' reference capabilities, said associate university librarian Jana Ronan in an instant-messaging interview.

The program started about three weeks ago, and the libraries are just starting to promote it, she said.

The software did not cost the library system any money to install, and the librarians work instant-messaging shifts into their schedules, Ronan said. Instant messaging with volunteer librarians will be available on all of the public computers by the end of the term, she said.

Librarians are available to chat online during regular library hours Monday through Thursday 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. and Friday 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

"This is an easy way to get answers without having to tromp over here," said Valerie Davis, the outreach librarian for Agricultural Sciences Library system.

"This is an easy way to get answers without having to tromp over here."

"I think if people knew about it, it would be a nice resource," said Ladaun Jackson, a linguistics major. "Sometimes when I'm navigating the library's Web site, I find it difficult, and it would be so nice to be able to speak with a real live person and not have to walk down to the library."

Students need to download the university's Jabber Messaging program. It can be used with Windows, Mac or LINUX operating systems. Students need a GatorLink ID and password to access the service.

It is easy to install and convenient, said Laurie Brennan, the computer-support specialist for Marston Science Library. If students follow the instructions on the libraries' Web site at www.uflib.ufl.edu under the "Ask a Librarian" section, it should take about two minutes to download, she said.

Questions about which library a book is in, finding literature on in-depth research projects and general UF questions are common, she said. Librarians help point students in the right direction to find and use the appropriate resources while they are researching online, she said.

Instructions for downloading the program are available at www.uflib.ufl.edu/hss/ref/rx/imnew.pdf or at the UF Computer Help Desk in Computer Science & Engineering Building Room 214.

Senate on the move

By DAVID COHEN
Alligator Writer
dcohen@alligator.org

Student Senate could host its next meeting at a basketball court. Or a library. Or a classroom lab.

Newly elected Senate President John Boyles presented a few recommendations for the new term Tuesday night, including a proposition to change the Senate's meeting locations a few times each term. Normally, Senate meets every Tuesday in the Reitz Union Room 282.

He discussed hopping around campus to sites like the McKnight Brain Institute, Library West and a basketball practice facility.

Sen. Pedro Morales said he liked the idea. He said being geographically closer to campus organizations would be beneficial. He would also like a cooler room.

"It gets really hot in there, especially in the back," he said.

Boyles said he wants to have entertaining events at the weekly meetings, including a speech by UF men's basketball coach Billy Donovan and raffling off memorabilia to those present.

"The hope is that Senate will be reaching out to the students in a different way," he said.

Another recommendation of Boyles' was to form a committee to find out how many students attend UF satellite campuses and how much money they contribute to UF's main campus budget.

UF's nine satellite campuses have not received tuition-funded Activity & Service Fee benefits, except for a few instances. These students pay the same fees as main-campus UF students.

Law panelists offer Party Patrol, gameday advice

■ STUDENTS QUESTION UNIVERSITY, POLICE OFFICIALS.

By CASSIDY MILLS
Alligator Contributing Writer

Lately, Gainesville residents have been urinating outdoors more than usual.

That and other legal concerns were presented at the UF-sponsored Laws Over Lunch on Monday.

Hosted by Campus Diplomats, the event offered students an opportunity to speak with a panel of experts over free pizza on the Reitz Union Colonnade.

The lunch gave students insight into their rights when dealing with police, such as what to do when an officer enters a party.

Underage drinking and alcohol laws were popular subjects with both students and panelists, who represented Student Judicial Affairs, Student Legal Services, the Office of the Ombudsman and University Police.

When asked about alcohol policies at football games, Jyrece McClendon, a panelist and graduate assistant in Student Judicial Affairs, said students lose their season tickets if they are found with alcohol in Ben Hill Griffin Stadium.

UPD Capt. Jeff Holcomb warned students that they could also be denied admission to Gators games if they show up drunk.

But when concerned students pressed Holcomb on the subject, he said, "If you don't smell alcohol on 20,000 of the 90,000 fans present, I'm impressed."

When students asked about Party Patrol, Daintry Cleary, director of Student Legal Services, said to keep guests inside the apartment or house and out of the parking lot and surrounding areas.

If a police officer knocks at the door during a party, Cleary said the best policy is to step outside and close the door to speak with him or her.

As long as the police officer is not invited inside the home, he or she has no right to enter, she said.

Holcomb said students should be aware of offenses like public urination, which seem trivial but are punishable by arrest.

Cleary said DUIs are offenses that create some of the biggest problems for students, including lost jobs and internship opportunities as well as substantial legal fees.

"If you get a DUI, it will be on your record for the rest of your life," Cleary said. "It cannot be expunged."

NORML pushes reform

By LYNDESEY BECHTEL
Alligator Contributing Writer

With a serious face, Kris Krane clenched his notes Monday night and said, "The reality is that everybody smokes pot."

A crowd of 150 people stared back awkwardly, not knowing how to react.

"Well, not everybody — but every age, every race, every class and every walk of life smokes pot," said Krane, associate director of the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws. "If people weren't so afraid to talk about it, we could get a lot more done."

Hosted by NORML UF, Krane spoke about local political efforts to reform marijuana laws in the Computer Science & Engineering Building, citing the efforts of FSU's chapter of NORML for an initiative de-prioritizing marijuana enforcement.

With the help of UF, UCF and FAU NORML chapters, de-prioritization can be placed on the Florida ballot, he said.

"If you're a guy with long hair, pull it back, wear a suit and talk to your state legislator," he said. "If the NORML chapters from all over Florida take two trips per semester to go to Tallahassee, we can get some serious stuff done."

The cities of Detroit and Columbia, Mo., have already passed similar marijuana de-prioritization laws due to efforts from local NORML chapters.

"The reality is that everybody smokes pot."

Kris Krane

associate director, National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws

Krane said 82 million Americans have smoked marijuana at least once.

He explained that NORML's goal is to legalize the safe and responsible use of marijuana by adults. He graduated from American University and started working with NORML in Washington, D.C., to influence political opinion about medicinal marijuana and decriminalization.

Jaylen McGrew, vice president of NORML UF, helped book Krane and other speakers scheduled for the Fall.

"Our main goal on campus is to educate," McGrew said. "[Krane] understood that we're not here to get high. We have an agenda."

Maui Teriyaki closed briefly for health concerns

■ RESTAURANT REOPENED SOON AFTER A SECOND INSPECTION.

By JESSICA RIFFEL
Alligator Writer
jriffel@alligator.org

A health inspector shut down Maui Teriyaki on Monday after he found bugs in the restaurant, a Florida Department of Business and Professional Regulation official said.

"The inspector observed at least two dozen live roaches," said Geoff Luebkmann, the director for the department's Division of Hotels and Restaurants.

The Gator Plaza restaurant passed a second inspection Tuesday afternoon and was reopened.

"It's routine to have bug problems in restaurants," Maui Teriyaki owner Steve Marzke said. "It comes with the business. It's just not something you talk about. This is Florida — there are bugs."

Marzke has received warnings from inspectors in the past, as have many other restaurants in Gainesville, but this time the inspector shut down the restaurant.

"This was an extreme reaction of one particular inspector," Marzke said. "I'm a little baffled, but it just depends on which inspector you get. They're all doing their job. This one just took it to the extreme."

Marzke thought the inspector was tough but ultimately fair.

"If we have a problem, we want to get it taken care of," Marzke said. "We are doing everything we can. Their goal is to protect the public, and we like that. We don't want anybody to get sick at our restaurants."

Around Gainesville

The health inspection came after the Florida Department of Business and Professional Regulation received an anonymous tip.

Marzke said the tip could have come from a fired employee, a developer for University Corners or even a customer with a grudge.

"You just never know who it was," he said.

Marzke added that relations between him and University Corners developers, against whom he threatened a lawsuit last month, have improved recently.

After being shut down Monday, Marzke's wife, Lolda, cleaned the restaurant all night, and they had pest control come in Monday night and Tuesday morning.

"It's been solved," Marzke said. "We took care of it within 24 hours, and I can guarantee there aren't any damn bugs in here now. Not one or they wouldn't have let us open."

Marzke has Florida Pest Control debug Maui Teriyaki once every two weeks.

"It better stay [bug free], or we'll change pest-control companies," he said.

Justice deficit SG Elections Commission rejects valid complaints

We're truly sick of constantly exposing all the illegal and immoral activities of Student Government. The lies and incompetence are unbelievably blatant; yet even when something is proven to be wrong, no one is ever held accountable.

It's a disgrace to this university and makes students apathetic to their government and the overseeing administration.

Part of this problem is accountability, and that all begins with the SG Elections Commission.

Violation after violation occurs, and the commissioners toss it aside because of technicalities that they read into the codes.

Yes, we've read the codes, and these commissioners are completely out of line.

For instance, the election codes clearly state that lists of polling places must be posted and sent to campus newspapers no later than the Wednesday before an election.

We didn't get anything until at least Thursday afternoon.

But when Alligator University Editor Bridget Carey filed a complaint about the statute, it was rejected for "lack of standing" — suspiciously just three minutes after the deadline to submit complaints.

Only students can file complaints, and because Carey's filing featured evidence provided by the Alligator, the commission claimed she was an agent of the newspaper.

The same thing happened with another open-and-shut complaint when The Gator Party was found not guilty of posting campaign banners on poles in the Plaza of the Americas sponsored with student money.

But the commissioners didn't decide. Instead, they "discovered" a technicality on the complaint forms and rejected it.

Dismissed and never heard again because the Impact Party got a number wrong? When an election comes down to crossing the "t" and dotting the "i," we have to wonder how fair it is.

This is not a commission out for justice; this is a commission suspiciously dedicated to the god of technicalities.

Herein lies the main obstruction with the pursuit of SG justice: The commission has no accountability for its actions.

It begins with how the board is chosen. Two are nominated by the Student Body president, two by the Senate president and two by the chief justice of the SG Supreme Court.

This year, the chief justice is Tobi Butensky. During her reign, the court rejected a petition to put online voting on the Spring ballot. Butensky claimed the document was "ambiguous" in whether it asked for an initiative or a referendum.

The petition mentioned the word "initiative" four times and never even referred to a referendum.

And Student Body President Joe Goldberg has committed a slew of acts we think violate SG statutes and Florida law. It's too bad none of them have been brought up in court.

Such people should not be choosing who upholds the election statutes.

But our favorite part of the SG election codes is the assertion that any law proposed by the Elections Commission must be approved by the Student Senate to ensure a "separation of power."

We're glad the Senate's almost complete control over SG is protected by the election codes in the name of checks and balances.

And while this is ostensibly because the student body should have a say, the commission only has to post any proposed laws in the SG offices.

We don't think this is written for the ease of constituents.

Have these guys ever heard of the Internet?

In essence, these officials are all cogs in the same machine; they all come to the table with the same partisan goals.

It's time for an intervention.

Founding Fathers' beliefs legally dated

Shakespeare was wrong. We need more lawyers.

I'll clarify, because that was clearly a blatant attempt at grabbing your attention with a ridiculously controversial statement.

The current legal environment is churning out situations of such complexity as to make clear the need for more knowledgeable legal talent. Cases are arising that present unique challenges and create a new atmosphere that calls for an entirely different approach to jurisprudence.

The Tennessee Supreme Court ruled Thursday 4-1 that Cindy Culpepper, who had given birth to triplets conceived with another woman's eggs, has legal rights as a mother. Charles Galiwango, the father of the triplets and Culpepper's boyfriend, had asked two lower courts to grant him exclusive custody of the children, as Culpepper had no genetic relationship with the children.

Galiwango and his attorney have not yet decided whether to appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court, according to an article in The Tennessean.

Frank F. Drowota, the now-retired chief justice of the Tennessee Supreme Court who wrote the majority opinion in the case, tried to explain the new world this case has revealed.

"Recent developments in reproductive technology have caused a tectonic shift in the realities which underlie our legal conceptions of parenthood," Drowota wrote in the opinion. "This technological fragmentation of the procreative process ... has engendered a bewildering variety of possibilities which are not easily reconciled with our traditional definitions of 'mother,' 'father' and 'parent.'"

What he said.

This brave new world will require lawyers and judges of astonishing intelligence and creativity. And that observation leads us, inevitably, to hard questions about Harriet Miers, President Bush's most recent nominee for the Supreme Court. These are necessary questions, and I have no doubt they'll be asked frequently of Miers.

The views expressed here are not necessarily those of the Alligator.

Andrew Bare
The Bare Truth
letters@alligator.org

But Miers isn't the greatest issue here.

If this brave new world requires new personnel, it also will require new thoughts and philosophies. It will require new approaches because these are new problems.

Hence, the greater issue raised by the Tennessee case is the fundamental weakness of what President Bush calls "strict constructionism," or what many in the legal community call a belief in "original intent." Never has it been more clear that a legal philosophy centered on an almost religious devotion to the thoughts and beliefs of our Founding Fathers is inadequate to modern challenges.

The Constitution of the United States was completed in 1787. We now live in a world that our 18th-century heroes could never have imagined. We live in a world of telephones and television, of the Internet and almost instantaneous communication. We live in a world where blacks and women vote and where our armed forces are spread around the world.

And we live in a world where mothers can give birth to children to whom they have made no genetic contribution.

This is not the time to rely exclusively on the legal wisdom of men who died before the invention of the telegraph. Look to the past, yes, by all means. Learn from it, of course.

But ultimately, each new generation must forge its own legal identity, an identity adapted to and cognizant of the complexity of its own peculiar time.

The world of American jurisprudence must be shaped by the independent thoughts of men and women like Harriet Miers — not by minds chained to the ideals of the 18th century.

Society throws away lives

What is life nowadays but a mere card in the deck that our society so inappropriately dubs power? We deal the war card when we see fit, perhaps throw out some "environmental" legislation — which really doesn't help the environment at all — and of course, throw the life card in the discard pile whenever it hinders our game.

Alas, time does not permit me to go on about those things, but I must say that the recent column by Josh Gellers regarding abortion was disgusting, to say the very least.

I am not a liberal or a conservative because such terms are arbitrary, but I do know right from wrong.

To say that 46 million dead in our country is not a big deal is the grossest disregard for life that I have had the misfortune to be exposed to.

Age is not a factor. A fetus, an infant, a teenager, a middle-aged adult, an elderly person and, yes, even a comatose person, are all living things! This is not a religious point of view; science itself proves that life exists at all of these levels.

That is to say, life does, indeed, begin at conception.

The callous distortion of pro-life views by the recent article, saying that life begins "when you look a person of the opposite sex squarely in the eyes with romantic intentions" is absurd. Satire or not, it is ridiculous.

Anthony M. Piferrer
Speaking Out

What is most striking about the article is the fact that so many Americans have apparently adopted the view that in our technological and societal might, we have thus bestowed upon ourselves the power to dominate not just the unborn, but the elderly and those who cannot fend for themselves either. Remember Terri Schiavo?

These are not just the signs of an age where eugenics will eventually take hold, but of a society so ignorant of living things that it borders on an Orwellian system.

If the living thing cannot fend for itself or do any good for the society, many believe the more powerful have the right to terminate its life for the greater productivity of the masses.

Whatever happened to our "right to life and liberty" as stated in the Declaration of Independence? The weak are being subjected to the power of the strong and, in many cases, are being stripped of their right to live, period. Terri Schiavo and the 46 million "tiny organisms" can vouch for that.

To deny life, under any circumstances, is sheer manipulation, maliciously and falsely puissant and wrong.

Wake up America, for it seems Death is knocking on many a door.

Letters to the Editor

Abortion deprives person of experience

In Tuesday's guest column, Josh Gellers poses the question, "Is bringing a child into a life of poverty not a crime in itself?"

No one can deny that life is fraught with sadness and suffering. To be human is to be constantly faced with hardships. Every child aborted is preserved from these things.

But from what else are they preserved? They will never know what it is to fall in love, to make a new friend, or to hold and nurture children of their own. They will never know what it is to find meaning in their suffering. They will never know what it is to be alive.

Like Mr. Gellers, I too see a crime here. I see a crime in depriving another person of the things we all take for granted.

Andrew Sheeran

Religion only reinforces existing values

In her Tuesday letter, Tara Fox argues that "ideas of goodness, compassion and understanding... have been put into the very core of our being by an 'intelligent designer.'"

If we follow Tara's argument, the only reason we have these ideals is because they were put there by an "intelligent designer." That means our designer could have just as easily made wrongdoing, indifference and lying part of our core values. If you argue an "intelligent designer" would never make such things part of our values because they result in hurt, then you acknowledge that there are moral values that exist outside of religion.

Hence, the only connection between religion and morality is that religion serves to reinforce a set of values that existed prior to a supposed "intelligent designer."

Eddie Geller
4LS

Man knows what's right from reason

Tara Fox wrote Tuesday that reason has led her to believe that moral values have been placed into her by an "intelligent designer."

How is she to know what was "put in" to the "core" of her being is, in fact, moral? She is denying the only way man is able to acquire knowledge — reason — and claiming the absence of free will in the deterministic nature of her input morals.

Like many, she simply accepts what she "feels" to be morally "good" as right and attributes this "feeling" to a supernatural being before ever rationally analyzing why.

Such analysis would lead Tara to retract her statement about "selfishness" and realize that man working for his own rational self-interest, never sacrificing himself to others nor sacrificing others to himself, is the objectively moral way to live.

Effects of 2C still unclear; may have harmful long-term effects on body

DRUG, from page 1

Doering said an overdose of a 2C drug could cause a stroke or cardiac arrhythmia.

The recommended dose is between 10 and 25 milligrams.

Doering said 2C drugs stimulate the release of neurotransmitters like serotonin, dopamine and ephedrine, which normally maintain mental balance in the brain.

He said tolerance of the drug increases as levels of those chemicals are depleted by 2C use. As with cocaine, higher doses are then required to achieve the same chemical rush.

Doering compared repeated release of those neurotransmitters to wringing water from a sponge. After excessive use, the sponge could go dry.

Even worse, research on Ecstasy suggests a possibility that the "serotonin factory catches fire and burns out," he said.

When the sponge is wrung, though, these chemicals cause euphoria and hyperactivity in those who take the drug.

—But users report experiences beyond mood lifts or energy bursts.

A UF chemistry sophomore, who asked to remain anonymous, took 20 milligrams of 2C-B last Thursday and Friday nights.

She said as the drug was taking effect, she felt so paranoid she put on sunglasses and refused to take them off.

Later, she and four other friends who were "tripping" played with a fiber optic light display, moving the lights in sync with music from a record player.

"Lights were like a major concern," she said. "Lights and music were changing our moods a lot."

She and her friends stood in the middle of a roundabout in north Gainesville and watched the lights on cars circle by.

As she was "coming down," she floated in the deep end of a swimming pool.

"It just felt really nice to be suspended," she said. "It just seemed really free."

She also reported nausea and headaches that stayed with her during the experience.

"I felt I could localize stresses in my life to a certain cloud that was in my head," she said.

This manifestation of her mental troubles may reflect the therapeutic qualities championed by the drugs' inventor, Alexander Shulgin.

Shulgin has advocated exploratory use of drugs, a policy embraced by many avid users who try new chemicals as they surface.

Doering said Shulgin, who also synthesized ecstasy and many other psychoactive drugs, "probably has taken more drugs experimentally than any other human being in the history of mankind."

"He is a brilliant chemist who sort of went over to the dark side," Doering said.

said.

She noted that usually, people don't discuss sexuality of any kind.

Andrews said she thought coming out is important because it gives role models to other LGBT people.

She gave the example of Gainesville City Commissioner Craig Lowe, the city's first openly gay commissioner. She said he is a role model, particularly to college students who want to enter politics.

She said the campus feels safe to students but that in the workforce, people can be fired because of their sexual orientation.

Cortez and Dean said they built the doorframe using wood from the Pride Student Union Homecoming float, adding that they spent about $8 on hinges and nails to put it together.

Free tech seminar helps students fight identity fraud

■ PERSONAL-INFORMATION THEFT THE FASTEST-GROWING U.S. CRIME.

By RACHEL LEWINTER
Alligator Contributing Writer

It sent Donald Trump Dumpster diving in a recent commercial, but the average student can find out how to prevent having to do the same today at UF's Information Technology Security Awareness Day.

Beginning at 8:30 a.m. in the Reitz Union Auditorium and Room 287, the all-day event is hosted by the UF Information Technology Security Team and free to the public.

Trump's reaction to losing his credit card is not surprising, considering identity theft is the fastest-growing crime in America. Identity thieves stole the information of 27.3 million Americans in the last five years, according to the Federal Trade Commission Web site.

Words like skimming, spoofing, shoulder surfing and phishing may sound like a foreign language, but they are all schemes to obtain personal information to steal money.

Hackers create programs to steal personal information from wireless Internet users, use fake e-mails from companies asking for personal information and disguise links that are viruses — just a few of the ways by which they commit fraud.

Anyone with a computer is at risk, said Kathy Bergsma, information security manager for UF.

"Attacks are quite frequent," Bergsma said,

"so unless you know what you're doing, you can become a victim very easily."

"People trust e-mail and probably should not."

Kathy Bergsma
information security manager for UF

Not helping the situation are laws that have not caught up with the technology, she said.

New and harmful viruses are created daily, said Barry Haimo, a former UF student and computer and information science major. One of the most important things to remember is never to click on links in e-mails, he said, but go directly to that company's Web site.

Spammers, also called phishers, send out thousands of fake e-mails using common banks or services like PayPal and eBay to lure people to fake sites that look like that of the organization, Bergsma said.

"E-mails are easily forged," she said. "People trust e-mail and probably should not."

Bergsma suggested that computer users make sure a Web site is secure before entering personal information, create strong passwords, update their machines and use anti-virus protection, which is free to all UF students and faculty at www.software.ufl.edu.

For additional security tips, visit <http://infosec.ufl.edu>. For more information on the Information Technology Security Awareness Day, visit www.itsa.ufl.edu.

Football coach's wife shuns box seat for Section 9

band Urban at 6 a.m. and out the door by 7:15, spending most days as what she calls a "single parent" with their three kids: Nicki, 15, Gigi, 12, and 6-year-old Nate.

"From the last week of July until the first week of February, I'm a single parent," Meyer said. "I can't really ask him to help."

But after 19 years of Urban working in football, his wife and kids have accepted the lifestyle and wouldn't wish another career upon him if they could.

"He could have any other job where he works as much, but it wouldn't be as much fun," she said.

She begins the day like other moms, driving the carpool she shares with another mom in their northwest Gainesville neighborhood.

A few days a week she works with committees and charities in Gainesville, attending meetings and participating in fundraisers.

Nights at the Meyer home tend to be more hectic. Every Meyer kid plays a sport, and they are all very competitive, Meyer said.

"I think we force it on them," she said.

Nicki and Gigi play volleyball, and Nate plays baseball.

Meyer said her husband tries his best to be at his kids' games, even though he doesn't get home most nights until 11:30.

"If he absolutely can, he'll leave work to see 30 minutes of a game," she said.

While Urban is known for his discipline and strict nature with his players, Shelley says she handles the discipline of their kids.

"I am (strict) because I'm the one that's here," she said.

The family spends nearly every dinner without their dad.

"That (family dinner) is a concept that went away, I don't know how many years ago," she said.

Thursdays they go with the other coaches' families to watch Gator football practice. Then, they join the entire team — coaches, players and families — to eat.

"That's our family dinner," Meyer said.

Shelly and Urban have been married for 16 years. Both attended the University of Cincinnati. The two met at the Sigma Chi house, during his fraternity's Derby Days philanthropy event.

Meyer asked her out, and she turned him down.

"I had a boyfriend back home," she said.

They ran into each other three weeks later in May of '84, and Meyer asked her out again. This time, she said yes.

As her love of Urban grew, so did her newfound relationship with football.

"Before I met Urban I didn't pay attention (to football) at all," she said.

She now attends every home and away football game her husband coaches. She shows up nearly three hours before every home game to start tailgating.

Meyer refuses to sit in the box seats offered to her and much prefers sitting with Gator fans in section 9.

She flies with the team to away games and lets her daughters attend one away game each season.

Gigi attended the Alabama game when the Gators lost, and it was devastating, Meyer said.

She said her husband's mood after a loss is especially hard on their kids.

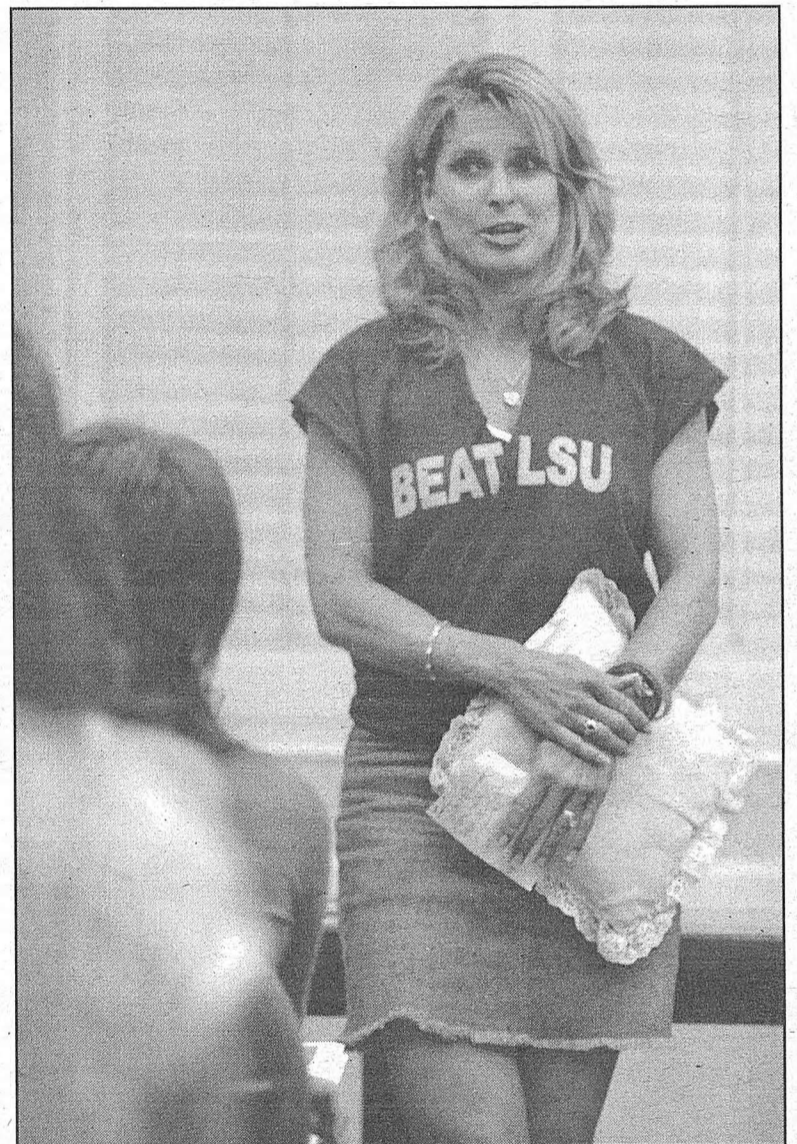

"I don't even know how to describe it. Urban is so sad," Meyer said. "He tosses and turns all night. You see it (his mood) lift a little each day. It takes until Wednesday to get him talking right again."

After one loss, Meyer said Nicki was crying because she knew how sad her dad would be.

The family takes the public criticism and humiliation the hardest, and Meyer said she still hasn't learned to brush it off.

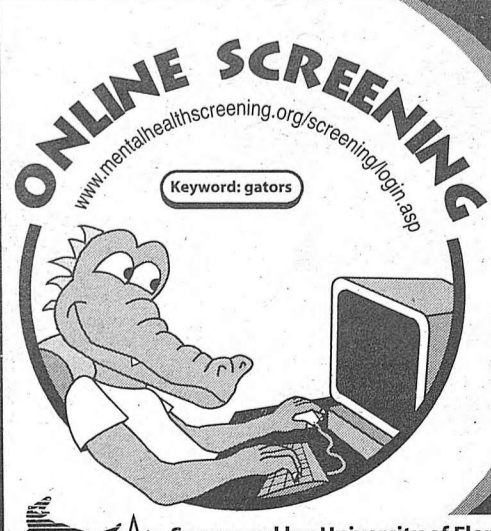

"I hope to gosh there is not going to be a time where I'm going to have to hear that stuff in the Swamp," Meyer said. "You can't take it personally. We're human beings. We're not robots."

"When you lose a game and stuff comes down on you is when you sometimes wish your husband was in another profession."

New club CARES

■ PHILANTHROPIC GROUP HAS SPORTS THEME.

By JENNA MARINA
Alligator Contributing Writer

When UF junior Chris Sosa decided to start a philanthropic student organization at UF, he wanted it to be unique.

"All of the organizations are so cut and dry," he said. "We decided 'Let's make things interesting. Let's throw in sports.'"

College Students for Cancer Awareness and Raising Emotions Through Sports is a UF student organization in which members volunteer throughout the Gainesville community, raising money for cancer research, particularly for pediatrics.

As one of its volunteer projects, CARES is working with the Shands' Pediatric Specialty Clinic to organize several events for cancer-afflicted children, such as a field day at Norman Field and bowling at the Reitz Union later this semester.

The idea is to use sports as a symbol for challenge, determination, unity and hope.

"The reason we have these events is just to take their minds off of their sicknesses," Sosa said. "We're trying to make a difference in their lives."

The group also wants to take the children to Gators sporting events.

In addition to their volunteer work, CARES members plan to raise $7,000 for groups like the Climb for Cancer Foundation, which funds cancer-treatment research and gives children with cancer an opportunity to attend summer camp for two weeks.

A CARES member, third-year engineering student Matt Feldman who is also a cancer survivor, is planning to climb a mountain next summer in an effort to raise money for the Climb for Cancer Foundation.

Feldman was diagnosed with testicular cancer Oct. 11, 2002. He underwent four cycles of chemotherapy in Tampa from December 2002 to February 2003.

If CARES can raise the required funds for the trip, Feldman will attempt to climb Mount Kilimanjaro in Tanzania, Africa, which has a peak of 19,340 feet. He plans to scale every inch of it.

"The whole idea of climbing the mountain is a symbol of perseverance," Feldman said. "I would rather climb to the top just because that's how I am."

GREEK LIFE

Frat, Facebook unite

By DANIELLE TORRENT
Alligator Contributing Writer

Today, students can help fight domestic violence through their computers.

From 12:01 a.m. until midnight tonight, making Peaceful Paths a friend on theFacebook.com will benefit the local domestic-abuse shelter.

Sponsors have pledged to donate money for every friend the account acquires during the day.

UF's Phi Sigma Kappa Fraternity is hosting the fundraiser, called Face the Hate.

The fraternity's president, Ryan Nelson, came up with the idea this summer.

"Someone made the joke of, 'You'd have to pay me to be on the Facebook,'" Nelson said.

Because students are so familiar with Facebook, Nelson said he thought it was a great way to reach out to students to raise money.

"It really speaks to the current population of college students," he said.

One of the problems with philanthropy on campus is not raising money but making it clear where the money is going, he said.

Phi Sigma Kappa usually raises money for the Special Olympics, but this time the organization is local.

"I've been amazed at the outpouring of the community."

Ryan Nelson
Phi Sigma Kappa president

Phi Sigma Kappa will table on Turlington Plaza today.

Donation forms can be picked up there from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. or downloaded from the fraternity's Web site, <http://phisigflorida.com>.

A majority of Phi Sigma Kappa members have already donated money toward the event, Nelson said.

"I've been amazed at the outpouring of the community," he said.

Nelson began work on the idea for today's event in July.

He has been promoting it through the media, sorority houses, student organizations and UF listservs.

"It's always difficult to get a college student to a baseball game or fundraiser or a line dance," he said. "And it's so much easier for them to show they care and benefit a charity in the comfort of their own home."

UF FOOTBALL

Gators seeing Green

By FARZAD SAFI
Alligator Staff Writer
fsafi@alligator.org

With the memory of Alabama's Tyrone Prothro burning the Gators' secondary still fresh in his mind, UF coach Urban Meyer realizes the secondary is in for another stiff challenge against Louisiana State senior receiver Skyler Green.

"LSU's receivers are big, fast and extremely physical."

Jarvis Herring
UF safety

Stopping Green and the rest of LSU's talented receiving corps might be UF's only hope for a crucial victory.

"The key to this game will be containing [Skyler Green]," Meyer said. "He's a game-changer and looks a lot like Tyrone Prothro. We simply have got to get him on the ground."

Standing just 5-foot-10 and weighing 185 pounds, Green may not be the biggest receiver, but that doesn't mean he's not extremely dangerous with the ball in his hands.

The Tigers' most experienced receiver will not only challenge the Gators' secondary, but also UF's front seven and special teams unit.

In an already accomplished career, Green has scored nine receiving touchdowns, three more scores on punt returns and a rushing touchdown.

"He's really a dynamic player," Meyer said. "When you watch film of the great playmakers, there are three guys around him, but he still gets through."

"I think him and Prothro of Alabama are two as good as I have seen."

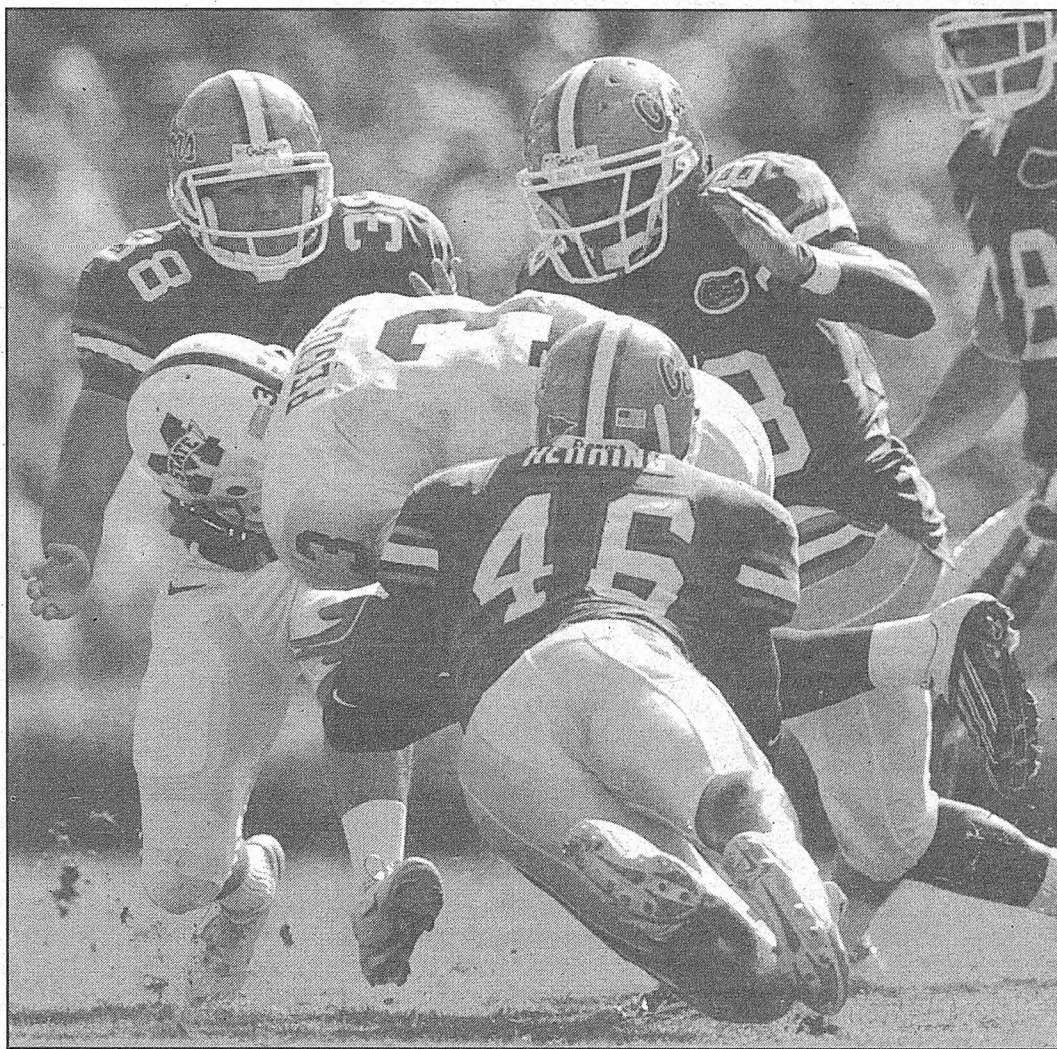

If Prothro's performance is any indication, Green could have a big day. Prothro shredded the Gators for five catches, 134 yards and two touchdowns in Tuscaloosa.

Even typically outspoken safety Jarvis Herring had compliments for Green.

"Their offense is explosive this year because Green is finally healthy," Herring said. "He's a slasher who can do anything with the ball."

Due to the scheme, UF's blitzing style requires that cornerbacks Dee Webb and Vernell Brown cover receivers one-on-one in most packages.

In five wins this season, the Gators have allowed just 142 passing yards per game. But in their one loss, they gave up 286 yards in the air.

Tim Casey / Alligator Staff

UF's Jarvis Herring and the rest of the Gators' secondary couldn't stop Alabama's passing game two weeks ago. LSU's receiving corps might be even more dangerous.

Please Urban, no Moore; Manson can save UF's struggling backfield

After days and days of toiling, testing and tinkering in the alligatorSports football laboratory, I've made a breakthrough in the search for UF's running game.

The $1 billion answer: Give Markus Manson the football over and over and over again.

One only need examine the Gators' second possession against Mississippi State in order to recognize the absurdity of UF's running back depth chart.

On first down, starting back Kestahn Moore takes an option pitch for 1 yard. Moore follows up with a 2-yard run on second down.

A Chris Leak-to-Chad Jackson connection saves the Gators' first scoring drive. Manson then takes a handoff for 11 yards.

Three plays later, Moore rumbles and fumbles ahead for a gain of 6.

Beginning to notice a pattern here?

Apparently, it's Moore for less in the UF rushing game.

Perhaps the guy has some incriminating documents concerning Meyer?

Fraudulent tax records, nude photographs, kinky videotapes, recorded telephone conversations with mafia crime bosses?

At least those would be rational explanations as to why he remains so hell-bent on Moore.

Could it be that Mr. Egalitarian has learned how to play favorites?

Besides his successful track record, it was Meyer's insistence that every position was up for grabs that enabled him to wean the Gators off pushover — I mean — players' coach Ron Zook with such ease.

Benchwarmers and All-Americans then coexisted on the same plane of competition.

Like some benevolent dictator, Meyer blurred the lines between pigskin proletariat and bourgeoisie.

A player's participation on Saturday hinged on his practice performances during the week.

And no position illustrated Meyer's policy more than running back.

After much ado about junior Skyler Thornton and Manson, Meyer tapped Moore

Bryan App
App-etite for Receptions
bapp@alligator.org

—a freshman experiencing his first collegiate game — to take over for the pseudo-suspended DeShawn Wynn in the season-opener against Wyoming.

Since then, Wynn has amassed the most carries, but Moore, a Meyer recruit, has questionably remained in the mix ahead of Manson, a back that teammates raved about as he redshirted last season.

Meyer's reasoning: Manson fumbles too much in practice.

But there are plenty of playmakers who, for some mysterious reason, just don't perform well in practice.

The Gators had a guy like that once. Perhaps Meyer has heard of him, or at least seen his jersey plastered on the interior of the Swamp.

His name is Danny Wuerffel.

Steve Spurrier often would dog the Heisman winner after practices. But no matter how bad he tanked Monday through Friday, Wuerffel was money when it mattered.

And if Meyer wants to talk about butterfingers, his boy put the ball on the turf twice in the first half against the Bulldogs.

After averaging 10.3 yards per carry during the first half, Manson appeared to be exactly the kind of explosive, hard-hitting back Meyer called for after UF's embarrassment in Tuscaloosa.

He can hit holes faster than any other UF tailback — a must, considering the Gators' struggling offensive line.

One can't help but imagine the difference Manson would've made in the Alabama game if only he'd carried the ball more than once. Perhaps it would've forced the Tide to put more than three in the box.

Meyer cannot afford to waiver on the running back situation any longer, not with impending season-breakers against LSU and Georgia.

It's not exactly rocket science or anything.

UF's Amber McCray learned a lot from her sister Nicole, a former UF star and current UGA coach. Tonight they will be opponents.

Georgia brings familiar faces

■ FORMER GATORS STARS WILL RETURN TO O-DOME.

By BRYAN JONES
Alligator Writer

Tonight will be a homecoming of sorts for former UF volleyball stars Steffi Legall and Nicole McCray, and the Gators will attempt to make their return as unpleasant as possible.

Legall, Georgia's head coach, and McCray, a Bulldog assistant coach, both played for the Gators under coach Mary Wise's tenure at UF — a tenure that includes 14 straight Southeastern Conference titles and perennial powerhouse status.

When the Gators (16-1, 6-0 SEC) square off against Georgia (7-8, 2-3 SEC) tonight, it will mark the first time Legall and McCray will visit the O'Connell Center in their current coaching positions.

While Legall and McCray are certainly familiar with UF's system, the talent on the court is what really matters, Wise said.

McCray will not only be facing her former coach in the match, but also her younger sister, Amber McCray, who is UF's starting opposite hitter.

Amber McCray said she is proud of Nicole and considers the match as another opportunity to see her sister.

"We've talked about their scouting, and she always tells me how weird it is when she has to do video about me and some of the things against me," McCray said. "But she doesn't tell me too much details about what they are going to do. We keep it professional."

"We are going to respect our opponent a lot more than we did when we played Georgia before."

Kisya Killingsworth
UF volleyball player

While the Gators defeated Georgia 3-0 (30-26, 30-28, 30-22) in Athens earlier this season, it was perhaps the most difficult SEC match UF has played this season. The Gators spent much of the match fighting from behind, narrowly winning the first two games before overpowering Georgia in the third game. If not for a breakout performance from sophomore middle blocker Kari Klinkenborg, the match could have gotten a little too interesting for UF's taste.

While Klinkenborg's 13 kills and five blocks helped to counter Georgia's star middle blocker Alexandra Oquendo, the Gators will likely look to sophomore Kisya Killingsworth to try to neutralize Oquendo this time around.

Killingsworth's 27 kills and 10 blocks over the course of her last two matches earned her SEC Player of the Week honors.

"We are going to respect our opponent a lot more than we did when we played Georgia before," Killingsworth said. "So coming into the second match we are going to look at it saying 'OK, well they did this, this and that. We need to stop them from doing this, this and that.'"

The last time UF faced Georgia in Gainesville, the Bulldogs nearly knocked the Gators out of the SEC Tournament, as UF barely defeated Georgia in a five-game thriller.

This season, however, UF is undefeated at home and has yet to lose a game at the O'Connell Center.

While Georgia does not appear to be intimidated by UF, the Gators have won 38 straight matches against the Bulldogs. Wise said Georgia is only going to improve as the year progresses, and she expects them to challenge for an NCAA Tournament bid.

"When we played them, Julia Petruschke, their senior outside hitter, we had a hard time defending her. And the last time they played in the O'Connell Center, she and Alexandra Oquendo were nothing short of outstanding," Wise said.

"I'd have to think [the Bulldogs] like coming to the O-Dome."

Meyer preps secondary for tough competition from Tigers' receiving corps

If UF's only goal was stopping Green, Meyer would not be as concerned, but any one of LSU's receivers could prove deadly on Saturday.

Junior Dwayne Bowe plays the Z position for the Tigers. His 6-foot-3, 217-pound stature makes him a tough matchup.

"LSU's receivers are big, fast and extremely physical," Herring said. "We'll be battling all night, that's for sure."

Bowe's three touchdowns currently lead the Tigers.

In addition, LSU boasts the two top-rated receivers from the 2004 high school class in sophomores Early Doucet (6-foot, 206 pounds) and Xavier Carter (6-foot-3, 198 pounds).

Carter will probably be the fastest player UF faces all year, clocking in at 4.35 in the 40-yard dash.

The former Palm Bay standout, who once considered attending UF, was high school teammates with current Gators' defensive end Joe Cohen and safety Reggie Nelson.

LSU quarterback JaMarcus Russell still has another option in skilled junior Craig Davis, whom Russell has been looking to in the slot.

"This is the most talented group of receivers I've ever been around," LSU wide receivers coach Todd Monken said. "These guys have constantly been hearing about how good they are."

Football Practice Report

MCDONALD IN PADS: UF star defensive Ray McDonald — who has been out of action since the Tennessee game with a partially-torn ACL in his knee — returned to practice on Tuesday.

McDonald, donning shoulder pads, participated in individual but not team drills.

UF coach Urban Meyer said McDonald will likely return for the Georgia game, which would give him two weeks to rest. The Gators face LSU this weekend and have a bye next week.

"The thing you worry about with any team situation is anybody falling on him, then you're setback," Meyer said. "We're just watching him closely, we're trying to get him in game shape."

Chris Leak, nursing a shoulder injury, also returned to practice. Meyer said the junior quarterback seemed fine.

NOT SO BLOODY TUESDAY: Meyer's trademark "Bloody Tuesdays" — always the toughest practice of the week — wasn't so gory this time around.

With injuries continuing to pile up, Meyer had the players wear shorts and take it a bit easier this week before facing LSU.

"We better be at [top] speed on Saturday," Meyer said. "We had a long practice but we just took the pants off today."
