U.S. Sen. Mel Martinez, R-Fla., came to Gainesville and UF on Friday, listening to the city's concerns and lecturing to a crowd at the Levin College of Law.

UF officials took Martinez on a tour of the College of Engineering's Gator-Tech Smart House, a demonstration home located within the Oak Hammock Continuous Care Retirement Community that features state-love to move into one of these of-the-art appliances and design.

Martinez said he enjoyed his visit to the Smart House, adding that he "would houses one day, as long as it had ESPN."

The FSU alumnus said he hopes the Gators will defeat Georgia on Saturday in Jacksonville.

"I was here cheering my heart out for the Gators in the Tennessee game," said Martinez in an interview on the way to his Levin appointment, "which is something I don't normally do because I think everyone should be partisan to their alma mater. But anytime Florida State and Florida aren't playing each other, I'm always looking forward to a Gator victory."

Tolbert hosts Mudfest

By MARIA LAVERGHETTA

Alligator Contributing Writer

It gets everywhere: in your eyes, in your ears, on your clothes.

"You know what the worst thing is?" asked Regina Baptiste, Tolbert Area Council treasurer. "When it goes through your toes."

Playing in the mud may be messy and gross, but for many at Mudfest, it also was a lot of fun.

"The key here is to take perfectly normal games and add mud," said James Paine, one of the event's participants.

Once a year, the Tolbert Area lawn becomes Mudfest, a 60-by-30-foot mud pit created strictly for dorm residents to get completely covered in mud and play games such as mud polo and mud tug.

The finals, which took place Sunday, saw students in attendance cheering on their respective floors.

East Hall came away the event's big victor, taking home first place plaques in all four boy-and-girl events. They also won universally in mud polo and ultimate frisbee.

Tolbert Hall won for boys volleyball and Riker Hall girls won for mud tug.

As part of a tradition since 1969, the mud used in the event is imported from Georgia in a huge dump truck.

But with higher gas prices this year, the cost of Mudfest's mud pit was $4,800, up $300 from last year.

"The key here is to take perfectly normal games and add mud."

"Three-hundred dollars doesn't sound like much, but that's 30 activity cards we have to sell," said Danielle Vitale, president of Tolbert Area Council.

Tolbert participant Meghan Trivunovich said she loved playing in the pit but hated getting out of the mud.

"It's fun when you're in there, but when you're out you're like 'OK, I want this off me,'" Trivunovich said.

Less water was deliberately used to create a sticker mud paste and that

Journalism college praised despite dean-faculty tensions

By STEPHEN MAGRUDER

Alligator Writer
 smagruder@alligator.org

A degree from UF's College of Journalism and Communications will continue to mean something for graduating students in the foreseeable future, despite reports of turmoil between Dean Terry Hynes and faculty.

The six-member accreditation team reported "an abiding and possibly intractable breach between the dean and the faculty," causing a failure to comply with national standards of "governance and administration."

The report called the climate between UF Administration Hynes and faculty "desperate," citing a fundamental lack of trust for the dean among reasons for the conflict.

About 20 faculty members told the team they "had experienced retribution from the dean or feared it if they displeased her," the report stated.

"While this noncompliance seems negative, it alerts us to a situation that could be problematic if not addressed," Hynes said in response.

Hynes said she would take the information presented and use it to improve communication between herself and faculty members.

"I want to be spending more time listening to faculty," she said, adding she wanted to take the next year or two to fully understand their needs.

Despite the team's concerns, the college will be recommended for reaccreditation following a largely positive initial report on its classes,

Anthrax scare cause of Larsen Hall evacuation

White powder suspected to be anthrax was found in an engineering department mailroom Friday afternoon, forcing the evacuation of staff and students and prompting investigation by the Gainesville Hazardous Materials Unit.

Electrical and Computer Engineering Program Assistant Laurie Edvardsson opened a package containing an engineering publication the department routinely receives in the mailroom of Larsen Hall. She found a thick line of white powder down the center of the magazine and more of the powder dusted throughout the box.

She said she wasn't worried, but "irritated that there was this stuff all over the box."

Edvardsson called the publishing company, which told her the unidentified powder didn't belong.

Her supervisor Keith Rambo, department director of finance and administration, contacted the UF Office of Environmental Health & Safety, which called in the Gainesville Fire Department's Hazardous Materials Unit.

"It's the first time I've ever seen Hazmat in action up close and personal. I mean, I've seen it on TV," Edvardsson said. "It was really kind of interesting."

The unit arrived wearing gas masks and white suits made of Tyvek, or plasticized paper.

University Police guarded the mailroom, but Edvardsson said the mood was light as the hazardous materials team inspected the area.

"We had a good time," she said. "I'm sure they had a good chuckle over us."

The unit put the powder into a gas chromatograph for analysis and determined it to be the benign compound barium sulfate.

Rambo said the material was most likely a "release agent," which publishing companies spray over pages to keep them from sticking together. Usually, the release agent is applied in such a minute amount that it almost never gets shipped with the publication.

Electrical engineering sophomore Mitch Levine said he was concerned when he saw emergency vehicles outside the building and heard of an anthrax scare.

"I was definitely worried because I have class up there," he said.

But Edvardsson said she never feared for her safety.

"I mean, let's be real here," she said. "Who wants to give anthrax to the Department of Electrical and Computer Engineering?"

New rule leaves groups angry

By DAVID COHEN
Alligator Writer
dcohen@alligator.org

A new wrinkle in how Student Government-funded organizations spend their money steamed some students Sunday night.

Set by the SG Budget and Appropriations Committee and announced last week, the new rule does not allow organizations funded with student money to spend more than half of their event budgets on a speaker.

At least two of the eight groups hoping to receive money expressed dissatisfaction with the limitation at the second budget hearings for special events Sunday night.

Pride Student Union President Allison Andrews said the new rule would ruin Pride Awareness Month events next April.

"It just seems like your theory is flawed," she told the committee during the meeting. "It really is like a slap in the face. We needed more time to be thinking about it."

Committee chairwoman Jackie Pace said the rule was set in place in an effort to bring a variety of activities to the special events.

"I really think this policy is making things a lot more complicated than it should be."

Annie Ly
AASU external affairs vice president

Pride was told to reallocate $2,894 to other activities during the month, which would lower the its speaker total from three to two.

Pride Treasurer Ricky Cortez said the organization could use the money to hold its Queer Ball, which attracted 200 participants at its first trial-run April 8 at the Stephen C. O'Connell Center.

Asian American Student Union officials also weren't pleased with the committee's actions toward the group's Kaleidoscope Month events for November.

The club was told to lower its speaker allotment from its first proposal of 84 percent during last week's hearings, but when group leaders arrived at the meeting Sunday, the speaker budget stood at 81 percent, or about $8,000.

"I really think this policy is making things a lot more complicated," club External Affairs Vice President Annie Ly said. "This is an extreme policy."

Ly said the committee was being too closed-minded by not taking the organizations' needs on a case-by-case basis.

"We're in a smaller hole," she said.

Student Body Treasurer Lindsay Cosimi said she was worried about a lack of adequate research in the club's budget regarding a hip-hop concert featuring Lyrics Born.

The group planned to spend $8,000 for the band, without considering security and technical fees.

The committee told the group to go to Student Government Productions for further funding.

Students mugged

By STEPHANIE RODRIGUEZ

Walking home with his girlfriend, he saw a black shadow out of the corner of his eye.

"Give me your wallet," the attacker said as he pointed a gun at the chest of the 23-year-old UF student.

In fear for his life and his girlfriend's, he complied with the mugger's threatening demands.

The UF students, who asked to remain anonymous, were walking from Gator City to their residence on Northwest Sixth Place at about 2 a.m. Thursday when they were robbed.

"I always thought that we live in a safe area," said the male student. "This has made me re-evaluate the situation."

The students' assailant was wearing a ski mask and was crouched down beside a wall before he attacked them.

The masked robber not only took the male student's wallet but also took the female student's cellular phone as she was using it.

"I want people to be aware that it's dangerous to walk at night in the area," said the male student.

The Gainesville Police Department is investigating the incident.

Hare Krishna wedding ceremony attracts hundreds

■ WEDDING FEAST WELCOMED ALL TO WATCH AND PARTICIPATE IN KRISHNA TRADITION.

By TIM HUSSIN
Alligator Contributing Writer

Dousing the fire with purified butter, a priest chanted in Sanskrit as the oils fueled the celestial flame.

The fluid motion of the priest's arms implored the lord to watch over this most popular ceremony of the Hare Krishna religion — a wedding.

Friends and family, as well as devoted Krishna lunch patrons and two religion classes, helped celebrate the wedding of Andy Hunter and Meryl Strauss on Friday on the Plaza of the Americas.

A special feast in the wedding party's honor, including fried vegetables, cheesecake and a variety of other dishes, attracted 634 people to the cultural event.

After being legally married, Hunter, 24, a Hare Krishna follower, and Strauss, 20, president of Bhakti Yoga Club and UF student, participated in the ancient ceremony for the annual festival put on by the Hare Krishnas.

The bride and groom were showered with flower petals as they ascended steps leading to a stage covered with hanging garlands and white cloth. They took a seat behind an arrangement of bricks surrounded with fruit and incense — where the fire would be lit — to begin the ceremony.

"This ancient ceremony being performed here is a sacred act that is available for human beings," said Rtdhvaja Swami, director of the Hare Krishna Student Center.

The ceremony, based on 5,000 years of tradition, began with welcoming the Lord into brass pots and lighting the fire, inviting the presence of God to witness the rest of the wedding and ensure a long married life for the couple.

Vedasara Das, director of the Krishna lunch program at Georgia Tech and the priest who performed the wedding, spent 20 years of his youth at a school in western India to learn the philosophy and procedure of ceremonies in the Hare Krishna tradition.

Throughout the wedding, he sprinkled grains, black and white sesame seeds, barley and purified butter onto the fire.

"They signify auspicious grains that are accepted by the gods," Vedasara said.

Savyasaci Das, director of UF's Krishna lunch program, said the university was very cooperative during the five weeks it took to get the fire and festival approved by officials.

"It's not a barbecue or a bonfire," Savyasaci said. "It's a ceremonial fire in a contained area."

Savyasaci said the ceremony typically lasts for three days in India, but for timing purposes, they shortened it to lunch-time so it would be open to the university.

Chris Kovachev, a junior English major who attends Krishna lunch five days a week, said Hunter and Strauss' wedding in the plaza was a fitting way to celebrate their marriage.

"They spend so much time at the university that it's only fitting that they crown their relationship here," he said.

The Bhakti Yoga Club and the families of the bride and groom funded the wedding.

"That's what student clubs are for — to provide venues for students to have different cultural and ethnic experiences," Swami said. "Most of these students have never seen an ancient ceremony like this."

Mirna Amaya, a senior pre-med student, said the wedding was beautiful.

"For those of us that don't know much about the religion, I think it was a very nice cultural experience," she said.

STUDENT HEALTH

Flu vaccine available today

By RACHEL LEWINTER
Alligator Contributing Writer

Getting stung is better than catching the bug.

That's what UF Student Health Care Center staff are telling students as flu vaccinations become available campus-wide today.

High-risk individuals were offered the vaccine a week earlier. On the first day, 58 people came to be vaccinated, said Jane Cullen, associate director for nursing at the center.

"We certainly hope the word gets out to high-risk individuals," Cullen said.

The vaccine is offered in two forms to all students, faculty and staff at the Infirmary, all satellite clinics, the Reitz Union and the Health Science Center.

The center ordered 5,000 injections and 100 doses of FluMist and is on a waiting list to receive more, Cullen said. The fee begins at $5 for students and $20 for faculty and staff.

People may opt to receive the FluMist, which is a live virus administered through a nasal spray that costs $30 for students and $40 for faculty and staff.

"The FluMist is very safe and very effective," she said. "You just need to meet the specific criteria to receive it."

"Once the vaccines are gone, they're gone."

Jane Cullen
associate director for nursing,
UF Student Health Care Center

According to the center's Web site, those having allergies to eggs, chronic illnesses, HIV, AIDS or cancer should not opt for FluMist.

The shot and FluMist are equally effective, Cullen said. It takes two weeks to build up immunity once a person receives the vaccine, so students should not put off getting one.

"Once the vaccines are gone, they're gone," Cullen said.

Ideally, students to get vaccinated before Thanksgiving.

"You can go to class with a cold," she said, "but most people can't go to class with the flu."

Students have a big misconception that the two are the same thing, she said. True influenza comes on quickly, with a high fever, aches and pains and a severe chest cough, Cullen said. The common cold comes on gradually, and although a person might experience congestion, symptoms typically don't include high fever.

It is important for college students to get vaccinated because some have poor health habits that weaken their immune systems, including not getting adequate sleep, poor eating habits and partying too much, Cullen said.

Students are typically in crowded conditions, whether it's small dorm rooms, bathrooms shared with 30 others or packed classrooms.

"Someone coughs and sputters, and it fills up the classroom," Cullen said.

Last year, the flu left UF senior Alicia Karlin in bed for two weeks, causing her to fall behind in her classes.

"It felt like the flu took over my entire body," she said, "from the pounding of my head down to the aching of my toes."

Karlin said she will be first in line to get a flu shot.

For more information on influenza and where to obtain a flu vaccine, visit <http://shcc.ufl.edu/medical/flu.htm>.

UF therapy exported

By GABRIELLA A. VIGIER
Alligator Contributing Writer

Doctors and patients in Managua, Nicaragua, know why it's great to be a Florida Gator.

Every year for the past three years, UF's Department of Physical Therapy has sent a team of graduate students and faculty to the University of Nicaragua-Managua to teach new physical therapy techniques to local doctors.

Teachings range from Proprioceptive Neuromuscular Facilitation (PNF) techniques — a type of flexibility exercise — to treating shoulder impingement, the cause of shoulder pain.

The trip is approximately one week long.

"Each year we add different points to it," said Jennifer Stevens, a postdoctorate student in UF's Department of Physical Therapy.

She added that the experience is a diversifying one.

"The students learn to appreciate what they have in the U.S.," she said. "I think it benefits both Nicaragua and students."

Monica Ready, a UF alumna, said she had a remarkable experience on her trip in March 2005 because she was able to teach physical therapy while still being a student.

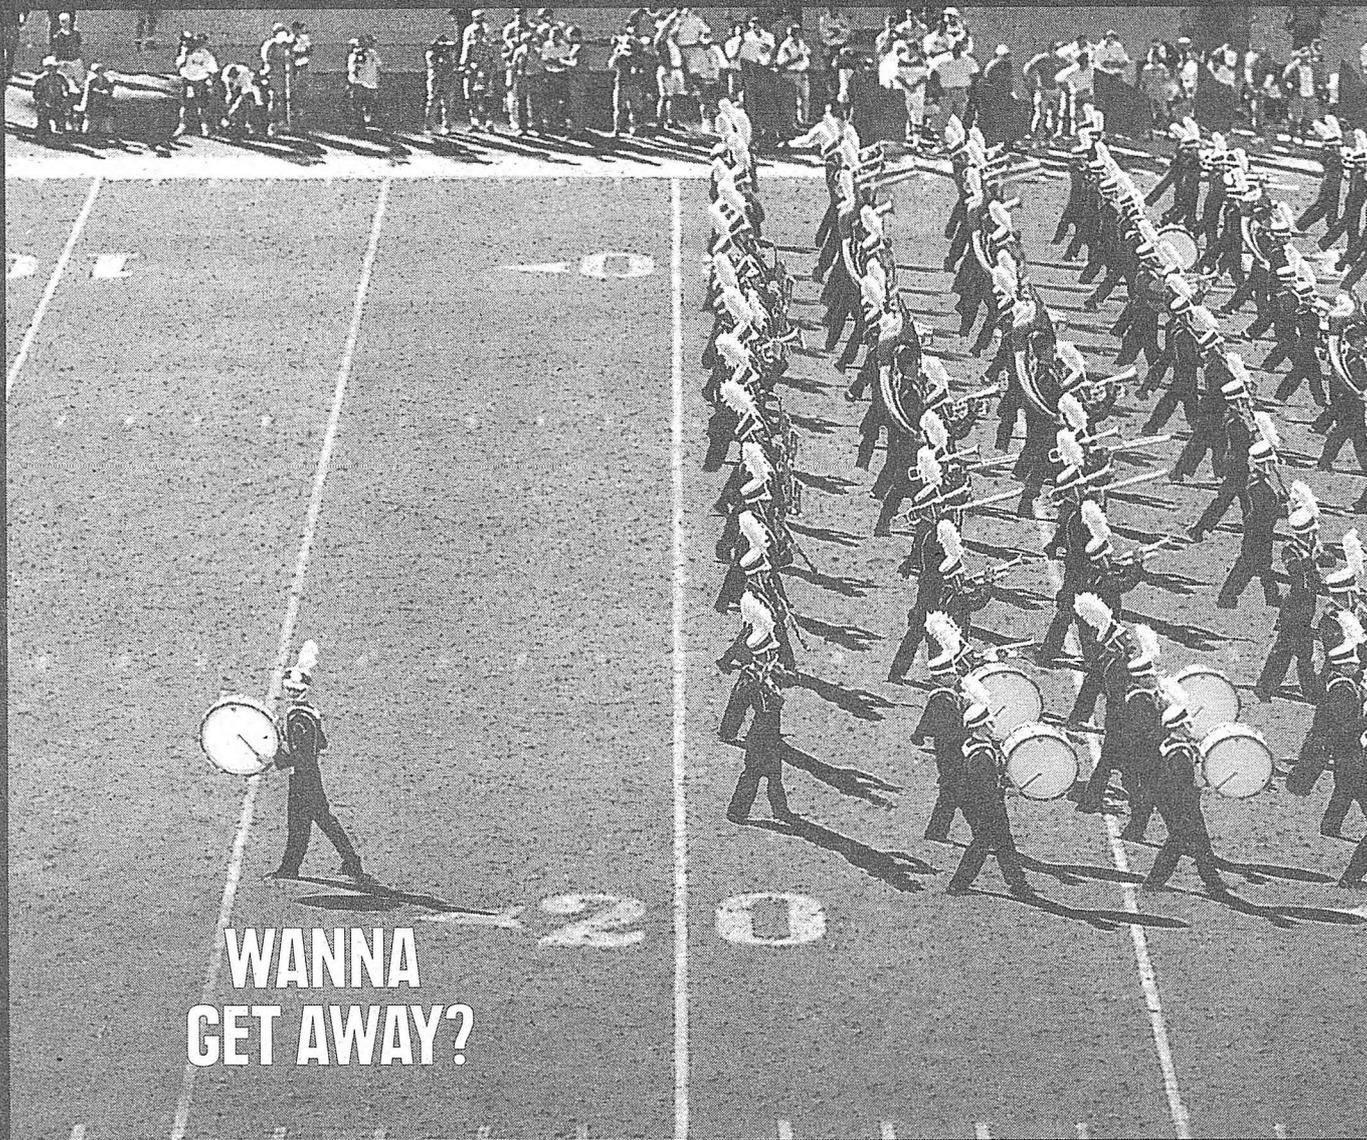

"Definitely being able to help professors teach physical therapy in class was a great experience," she said. "We weren't yet physical therapists, yet there we are teaching a class."

Funding for the project primarily comes from fundraising efforts made by the Student Physical Therapy Association at UF.

On Saturday, the students participated in an on-campus 5K run that raised more than $15,000 from local contributors and medical sponsors, said Ivo Solis, president of the association.

The next trip will be at the end of February 2006.

UF needs plan for hurricane season

The unpredictable beast of Hurricane Wilma is bearing down on Florida. Although it's supposed to hit South Florida today, Gainesville won't be exempt from tropical storm-force winds.

Officials announced late Sunday afternoon on the UF Web site that classes will be held as normal today.

We think it's too little, too late.

Students didn't know if and when administrators would announce whether UF was closed. We were forced to make personal decisions without knowing anything about our university's position.

UF should have a cohesive plan in place for such situations.

This is a Florida university made up primarily of in-state students. With their families in the path of hurricanes, students need to know the status of their classes as soon as possible.

We understand that hurricanes, especially ones like Wilma, are unpredictable and that officials can't make a decision far in advance. But there should be a contingency plan of some sort.

Students need to know where and when to look for information. They need to know whether their absences are excused if they're stuck in their hometowns. They need to know what plans of action the university is considering.

To make everything run more smoothly, officials could create a plan with the help of student representatives, who know what inconveniences a hurricane can bring.

But it appears the decision of whether to close the university is a tad off the cuff.

Last year, UF President Bernie Machen canceled classes when even a hint of rain blew our way. He had never experienced hurricane season and wasn't about to take any chances.

We applaud his cautious attitude. However, students were still in the dark about class cancellation until the last minute.

A time should be set in stone for announcing whether the university will be closed.

If, by that allotted time, officials are still unsure whether a hurricane will hit, they should play it safe and cancel classes.

And they must keep in mind that when a hurricane makes landfall in Florida, it doesn't just affect the area it hits. Most students aren't residents of Gainesville; they're residents of Miami, St. Petersburg, Tampa and other Florida cities.

When the university doesn't have a policy on absences during hurricanes, students can't make educated decisions about staying with their families.

It doesn't make sense that instructors have the power to penalize students absent on a day when their families and homes are facing 100-mph winds. Is it fair to tell students who were helping their families that they can't make up tests or homework? Or that because they took the safe route during an act of God, they've missed more classes than allowed so "that's their drop?"

Over the weekend, some returned to their homes all over the state. If the university had a standardized plan, those students would have been able to take it into consideration when deciding whether to ride out the hurricane at home.

Although under our proposed rules UF officials would have been unsure enough of Wilma's impact to cancel classes today, we respect their decision to keep the university open.

What we can't understand is why a Florida school is so unorganized in dealing with the disasters for which our state is famous.

U.S. should address Syria's behavior

It's not high noon for Syria just yet, but a showdown with the United States might not be far off.

Syria has been pushing its luck for years. It's been on the State Department's list of state sponsors of terrorism since 1979.

But now Damascus has danced with the devil one time too many. Last week, a U.N. investigation implicated Syrian intelligence officials in the car bombing murder of former Lebanese Prime Minister Rafik Hariri.

Hariri wasn't perfect, but he was a popular leader. He was an outspoken critic of Syria's 29-year-long occupation of Lebanon, which ended last year thanks to international pressure from leaders like President Bush.

Now the United States and Britain are calling for action in the U.N. Security Council. This is so serious, even the spineless countries are getting involved — French officials are discussing the possibility of taking punitive action against Syria.

Syria also considers anti-Israeli terrorist groups to be political entities and rents out office space to them in Damascus. Hezbollah, Palestinian Islamic Jihad and other groups chill out there when they're not blowing up nightclubs or firing rockets into Tel Aviv.

The United States has accused Syria of providing a safe haven for Saddam Hussein's family and friends and helping terrorists cross its eastern border with Iraq. The leak of insurgents across the Syrian frontier is one of the reasons why the border region has been a breeding ground for chaos and violence.

The Security Council will likely have a few harsh words with Syria in the next couple of weeks. If the U.N. bureaucrats are feeling particularly bold, they may slap on a few economic sanctions.

But ultimately it will be the United States' responsibility to flex some muscle and change Syria's behavior. Regime change in Damascus would be far swifter and simpler than it would be in Iran, and the constitutional process would be less complicated than it is in Iraq. Unless we elect Hillary in 2008, Syria has good reason to fear an American invasion.

Matt Melone

letters@alligator.org

The United States would have a lot to gain from seeing Syria's President Bashar al-Assad and his regime of murderous old men bite the dust. But the entire Middle East region would benefit much more.

A free Syria would help stabilize emerging democracies in Iraq and Lebanon. Tyrants in Saudi Arabia and Egypt would be forced to relinquish more control. And the Syrian people would be free of the brutal regime that once massacred a town of between 10,000 and 30,000 people.

America will be tempted to turn its back on the Middle East once a definitive troop withdrawal begins in Iraq. But doing so will only pave the way for sneaky dictators like al-Assad to become tomorrow's Saddam Husseins.

If we rely solely on the international community to get Syria in line, the United States may have to foot the bill when diplomacy fails.

America needs to keep its eyes on Syria and start talking tough while we still have the luxury of keeping war off the table.

Democracy needs polls

If you're an American citizen, chances are you don't approve of the job President Bush is doing.

But does it matter?

According to Matt Sanchez's column in Friday's Alligator, it doesn't. He alleges that popularity and random polling have no useful role whatsoever in the American political arena. Essentially, your opinion doesn't count.

And that's true — if you're living in an authoritarian regime. And while laws like the Patriot Act might make it seem as though America is shunning civil rights, the United States is still a democracy. In a democratic government,

Alison Nadle Speaking Out the opinions of its citizens should matter.

The definition of democracy stipulates that its representatives, like President Bush, ought to be responsive to the changing needs and wants of the people. Public-opinion polls are the best way to measure this.

About 58 percent of Americans disapprove of Bush's performance, according to a CNN/USA Today/Gallup poll. Sanchez attributes this to the "simple fact that Mother Nature has been throwing hissy fits the past few months." But while nature's wrath may play a small role, it doesn't invalidate the claim that President Bush didn't perform well. In this instance, Americans disapprove of the federal apathy and the lack of preparedness. It's not fair to completely disregard the meaning of the polls and how citizens evaluate our president.

The president is, after all, our employee. Employees for various businesses are evaluated all the time. The government is a business too; the highest office in the nation should not be exempt from evaluation for reasons like prestige.

So while Sanchez argues that our confidence in our president's job doesn't matter because "he's going to do it anyway," I will point out the very preservation of his job relies heavily on the polls that Sanchez's editorial so thoughtlessly dismissed.

I'm not saying the president should base his policies solely on opinion polls — it's true that public opinion can be unstable. However, it should be taken into account when policy is formed. To disregard all opinion polls is to ignore a large part of policy formation. And to trivialize all of them as mere popularity contests is even worse.

In order to preserve democratic ideals, we need polling to show the government how to alter its policies. Otherwise, the government becomes unresponsive and undemocratic.

Runners throw clothes, caution to the wind in Dash

By BRETT KELMAN

Alligator Contributing Writer

A stampede of scantily clad students scurried from campus at midnight Saturday.

In a pair of black boxer-briefs, UF graphic design major Beau Bergeron sprinted the first steps of The Great Underwear Dash II and signaled more than 500 students to follow from the Hub, through parts of campus, down University Avenue and back again.

As the runners tore through the city bar scene, shouts echoed among the sea of skivvies bellowing enjoyment, embarrassment, exhaustion and just how great it is to be a Florida Gator.

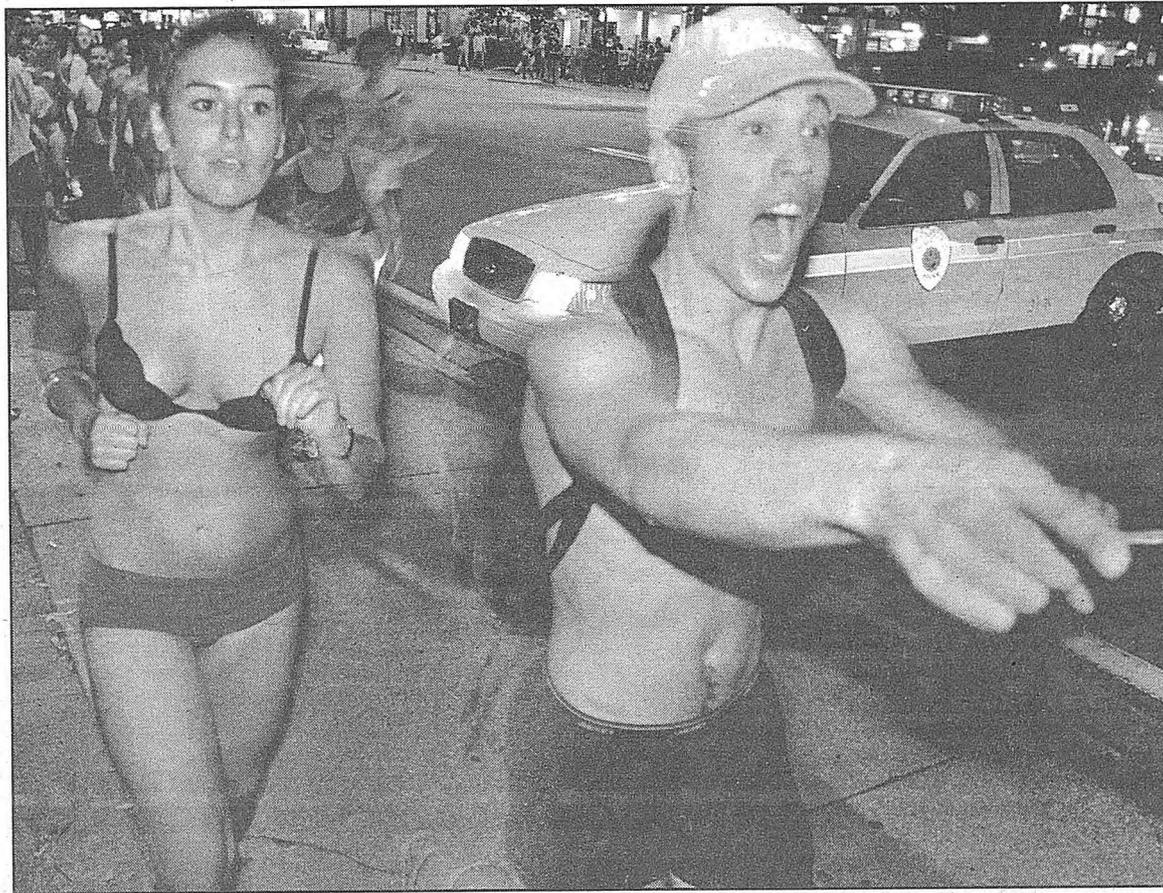

"It was bigger than I ever could have imagined," Bergeron said afterward.

The run, which was advertised mostly by word of mouth, easily reached its goal of 500 runners, according to Bergeron. He said Sunday that the rave reviews posted on facebook.com left him thrilled.

"So many people had such a great night," he said.

University Police was present at the dash but did not interfere.

On the runners' return trip, some on-campus traffic was blocked, but drivers were mostly content to honk, high-five, join in or stare. The half-naked horde returned to the Hub less than 15 minutes after they had left, now sporting wider smiles and breathing deeply.

Danny Ghitis / Alligator

Hundreds of UF students ran in their underwear down a busy University Avenue on Friday night during the second annual Undie 500.

For some, the race was not over. Some runners had abandoned their clothes at the Hub under bushes and in Alligator distribution bins.

A handful of students, who insisted on being identified only as the Knicker Knockers, had snagged about 20 runners' clothing during the dash. A homemade sign was left in their place.

"Want to see your precious knickers again? Been to Gator Nights recently?" it read.

Moments later the confused runners gathered outside the Reitz

Union, where they found a second clue that pointed them to the infirmary. "For the hell of it!" someone in the crowd shouted as they sprinted a short side-trip down the lanes of Gator Nights' blacklight bowling arena, and then the hunt began.

Clues led the group from the infirmary to the chemistry labs, on a dash across the Plaza of the Americas, to the rear of Criser Hall, and to a sculpture at the architecture building, with each stop leading them closer to their missing clothes.

Finally on the third floor of Little Hall, almost an hour after the run, the runners found their knickers, the several knockers who had riabbed them, and a pile of candy.

"We figured that once you take your clothes off and throw them on the ground, all bets are off," a male Knicker Knocker said. Runners had mixed feelings about the heist.

The Knicker Knockers had originally planned to videotape their theft and the ensuing hunt for a video-arts project, but were "freaked out" when they saw how many students turned out for the dash, he said. All the Knockers ran the first underwear dash in April.

After the success of Saturday's run, a Great Underwear Dash III is guaranteed, Bergeron said, adding that he wanted to control the next run with UPD's help and that he wanted to hold off until late Spring.

"I want people to forget about it, and then I want it to come back again," he said.

Bill Davis to run for sheriff

By JESSICA RIFFEL

Alligator Writer
jriffel@alligator.org

Bill Davis kicked off his campaign for Alachua County Sheriff on Friday.

The announcement followed current Sheriff Steve Oelrich's Oct. 10 statement that he would run for the state Senate in 2006.

Davis, who lost the 2004 election for sheriff by less than 2 percent, will spend the next year campaigning for a second chance to serve as sheriff.

"I enjoyed it last time," he said. "I love talking to people. I want to know what their problems and concerns are."

In a speech given on the steps of the Hippodrome Theatre in downtown Gainesville, Davis said he wants to make his campaign about the needs of the residents of the county.

"We want to make Alachua County the safest county in America to raise a family, live and retire in peace, safety and security," Davis said to a crowd of about 30.

He also plans to keep the campaign clean.

The issues Bill Davis plans to address:

- Provide safety and welfare for all residents of Alachua County
- Implement a fiscally responsible budget-management system
- Establish efficient, effective management at the county jail to provide a safe and secure facility
- Create an atmosphere of professional cooperation with all other law enforcement agencies
- Cooperate with municipalities to ensure realistic and productive dialogue on annexation
- Implement the Joint Communications Center as was initially conceived to professionally serve all the agencies that depend on it

"I'm looking forward to a fact-based discussion with citizens, friends and opponents," Davis said.

Davis emphasized several platform issues, including increased security in neighborhoods, using tax dollars more efficiently and improving the management at the county jail.

"We have new ideas to solve old problems," Davis said.

He said many of his platform issues are from his previous campaign since only one year has passed.

Davis said he is optimistic about the campaign because he believes he can keep most of the votes he received in the close 2004 election and win some of the votes that went to Oelrich.

Supporters of Davis present at his campaign kickoff included Florida Democratic Party Chair Karen Thurman and Alachua County Tax Collector Von Fraser.

Fraser said he plans to be involved in Davis' campaign because he wants to bring a good person into office, and he admires the clean campaign Davis ran last election.

"I look at Bill [Davis] as being someone I can really support," he said. "He's told me so many things that resonate with me about helping the county."

Alachua resident Doris Bardon has worked on local campaigns for the past 22 years and said she also plans to be involved in Davis' campaign.

"He's a really good human being," she said. "He really cares about the welfare, security and safety of all the people in the county, and he has great experience."

Bardon supports Davis because she believes he will lead by example.

"He has a level of integrity that is superior to most politicians," she said. "He will set an example to most law enforcement officers of how to function humanistically and efficiently."

Fraser added, "I think he's the best thing for the county in a long time."

Davis is the first to announce the intention to run for sheriff. The election will be held Nov. 2, 2006.

Report was largely positive

professors and ability to prepare students for media careers.

The accreditation team, made up of administrators from other universities, visited the college last week.

Team members graded the college on nine standards: governance and administration, curriculum, diversity, faculty, scholarship, student services, facilities, service and learning assessment. The college excelled in course offerings and faculty.

One of the reasons Hynes said the college fared so well in the report was because faculty members have brought real-world experience and academic knowledge into their classrooms.

"To be part of a major research university, you've got to have academic depth," she said.

Another strain felt by the college is on its facilities, which are "stretched to the limit," according to the report.

Weimer Hall received a telecommunications wing in 1990 and now houses four newsrooms, four radio stations, two television stations and a library, the college's Web site states.

More than 2,600 undergraduates and 200 graduate students call the college their home, majoring in advertising, journalism, public relations and telecommunications.

"The college is running out of space," the report stated, but added that "swelling enrollment" in journalism colleges is a common problem across the nation.

"We're using every bit of space as effectively as possible," Hynes said. "We would love to be able to expand."

She said the next addition would be built on top of the college's radio stations when funds became available.

The college, initially accredited in 1950, was last visited in 1999. The latest standards set by the accreditation team took a closer look at the college's graduate programs.

"We are ahead of the game in terms of applying the new standards," Hynes said.

A committee will review the team's report in March and submit it to an accrediting council that will make the final decision in May.

Hynes said the report highlighted many positive aspects of the college and proved her students are learning what they need to know.

"Our first job is to make this a good place for students to learn," she said.

"Being an accredited program in our field says we meet expectations that professionals have."

Senator addressed scholarship funding issues

When asked about the future funding of Florida Bright Futures Scholarships and other student loans, Martinez said if there are to be cuts, he does not believe they will impact student loans and student participation programs.

"We need to make sure that we continue to allow students to train the workforce of tomorrow and that we continue to be on the cutting edge of technology, which requires a well-trained education workforce," Martinez said.

Open mind for Miers

Despite criticism of Harriet Miers' recent nomination to the Supreme Court and worry over the possible overturning of Roe v. Wade, Martinez said he wouldn't look at Miers as someone leaning toward either side in that case.

"I don't think that's how we ought to look at judicial nominations," he said.

In reference to what Chief Justice John Roberts said about Miers, Martinez said that a Supreme Court judge should be treated "as an umpire at a ball game: not hitting, not pitching, just calling balls and strikes.

That's what a judge should be and that's what I would look for."

He added that the public should listen to her answers at the hearings next month before criticizing Miers' ability to fill the position.

Drilling near Florida

In regards to Gov. Jeb Bush's consideration to drill about 125 miles offshore of Florida, Martinez said he is personally sticking to the "traditional position" of not drilling anywhere near Florida.

"[Bush and I] share the same goal to keep beaches pristine and keep the Gulf of Mexico clean and clear," Martinez said.

"I'm not ready to make a deal for 125 miles (offshore), and I want to keep drilling off the Gulf Coast entirely."

Economic issues

Upon arrival at the College of Law, Martinez was greeted by an auditorium filled with political science students and a broken air conditioner.

He immediately removed his navy blue jacket and spoke to the crowd of about 150 about issues regarding Latin America and immigration. Martinez then invited students to ask open-ended questions.

Martinez discussed economic problems caused by the many people living in the United States who send billions of dollars in aid to their families in Latin America, since U.S. money is worth almost double or triple there.

Identifying Gainesville's concerns

Following the lecture, Martinez attended a meet-and-greet at the law school.

"The story of Mel Martinez is the story of America; a young man who came from the island of Cuba to our shores here and made a life leading a legacy here in Florida, from an immigrant young man of 15 years old to being the state senator," Alachua County Sheriff Steve Oelrich said as he introduced Martinez.

"I think it's great to have a U.S. senator here for him to hear directly from the community what some of our needs and concerns are, and I think he spoke very eloquently about some of the challenges related to energy, transportation and affordable housing," said Gainesville Mayor Pegeen Hanrahan afterward.

After taking questions from invited guests, Martinez said this is not a year to look for increases in funding student aid, but realized "education is not an area where we can afford to do it on the cheap."

would not wash off as easily, Vitale said.

"It's much more fun to see someone covered from head to toe in this orange disgusting mud," she said.

Vitale said she worked more than 80 hours last week to keep the pit sanitized and safe.

On top of running the four events between the 22 floors — ultimate frisbee, volleyball, mud tug and mud polo — the Tolbert Area Council Executive Board's 11 members were responsible for watching and guarding the pit in all-night shifts.

Members tracked and maintained each floor's spirit points, which added to the overall team scores. In addition, they maintained the pit by adding small amounts of bleach and removing rocks for safety reasons.

"It's a lot of stress, but when people come up and they say they are going to return to the area to live next year, that makes it definitely worth it," Vitale said.

Stephen-James Hosin, a Weaver resident, said although he felt weird about the mud at first, he eventually embraced it.

"Once you get over the weird factor, it feels kind of nice," he said. "A lot of people say it's good for your skin. It's exfoliating."

Adam Defrin, a junior history major, said he thought that even though mud looks gross, there's an upside.

"Only one word can describe mud all over hot chicks: heaven," Defrin said.

Katrina delays bill payments

■ COX IS PUSHING BACK PAYMENT DEADLINES.

By KARI TARR
Alligator Contributing Writer

Hurricane Katrina made Lindsey Brady's cable bill late.

Although she put her check in the mail six days before it was due, it was not posted until three weeks later because it was sent to the New Orleans office, which is unable to receive payments.

Billing statements now alert customers their payments should be sent to a new processing center in Louisville, Ky., but any payments made before the new statement are most likely delayed.

Brady, a UF junior, is one of more than 100,000 Cox Communications subscribers in Gainesville and Ocala affected by this change.

"We may not find out until months from now," said Mike Giampietro, general manager of Cox in Central Florida.

Cox has received more phone calls than usual because of the mix-up, Giampietro said.

"People would call three or four times until we could confirm their bill was posted," he said.

Cox is relaxing payment deadlines and the fees typically associated with them in the wake of Katrina, Giampietro said.

Around Gainesville "If a customer says a bill is on the way, we give them more time," he said.

Any mail now sent to New Orleans is being rerouted by the U.S. Postal Service, which has procedures for emergency situations like a hurricane.

The post office notifies large business accounts, like Cox, and tells them to stop sending mail for a designated period of time during times of disaster, said Monica Serachi, a spokeswoman for the postal service.

The postal service is handling mail sent to inaccessible areas of New Orleans at temporary handling centers — the largest of which is in Baton Rouge.

"The mail will get processed even if the address doesn't exist anymore," Serachi said.

Customers in affected areas have been quick to put in a change-of-address and keep the post office notified as they relocate, Serachi said.

The postal service has been quick to relocate its own employees affected by Hurricane Katrina. Immediately after the storm, employees were told they could go to the nearest post office and resume working.

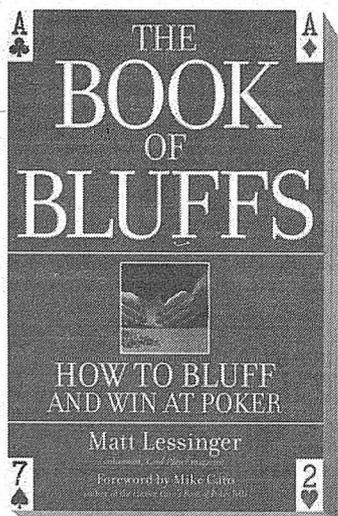

"Right off the bat, our postmaster general said, 'We will find a job for you,'" Serachi said.

Post offices as far away as Michigan were able to accept displaced employees and get them back to work, Serachi said.

UPD nabs 30 in sting

■ BUT THE DEPARTMENT’S FIRST DUI CHECKPOINT MADE ONLY ONE ARREST.

By BARBARA FLORES
Alligator Contributing Writer

When University Police officers stopped SFCC student Jose Couto at 11 p.m. Thursday, he said he had not consumed any alcohol.

But the 10 officers at UPD’s first-ever on-campus DUI Traffic Checkpoint tested him further and ultimately made Couto, 27, the only alcohol-related arrest of the night.

From 10 p.m. Thursday until 3 a.m. Friday, officers narrowed Gale Lemerand Drive to a single lane in either direction along the stretch adjacent to the Commuter Lot. Lt. Mitch Welsh said officers stopped every fifth vehicle to check driver’s licenses, proof of insurance and registration, seat-belt violations and visible signs of DUI. After midnight, they stopped every third vehicle.

“This is a public-safety issue,” Welsh said. “We are doing it to make a contact with people and check on them.”

If drivers were found in any kind of violation, they were told to pull into the lot for further assessment, he said. The operation was conducted by six UPD officers with the help of four Gainesville Police officers.

There were a total of 30 traffic violations: 16 drivers without proof of insurance, three without driver’s licenses, six with no registration, one vehicle with improperly tinted windows, three with faulty equipment and Couto’s DUI, according to reports.

UPD Chief Linda Stump said the operation was the first of about four to be conducted around campus annually.

GPD Cpl. Michael West said the operation was necessary because UF is a pedestrian-heavy campus.

“Students drink. They think, ‘If I drive on campus, I might escape and avoid the police on the highway,’” he said. “It’s important to keep the campus safe.”

Last year UPD reported a total of 222 arrests for liquor-law violations, three of them on campus and the rest on public property, according to a UPD report on crime statistics.

For more information on future checkpoints call the UPD office anytime at 392-1111 or visit www.police.ufl.edu.

Colts remain undefeated despite slow start

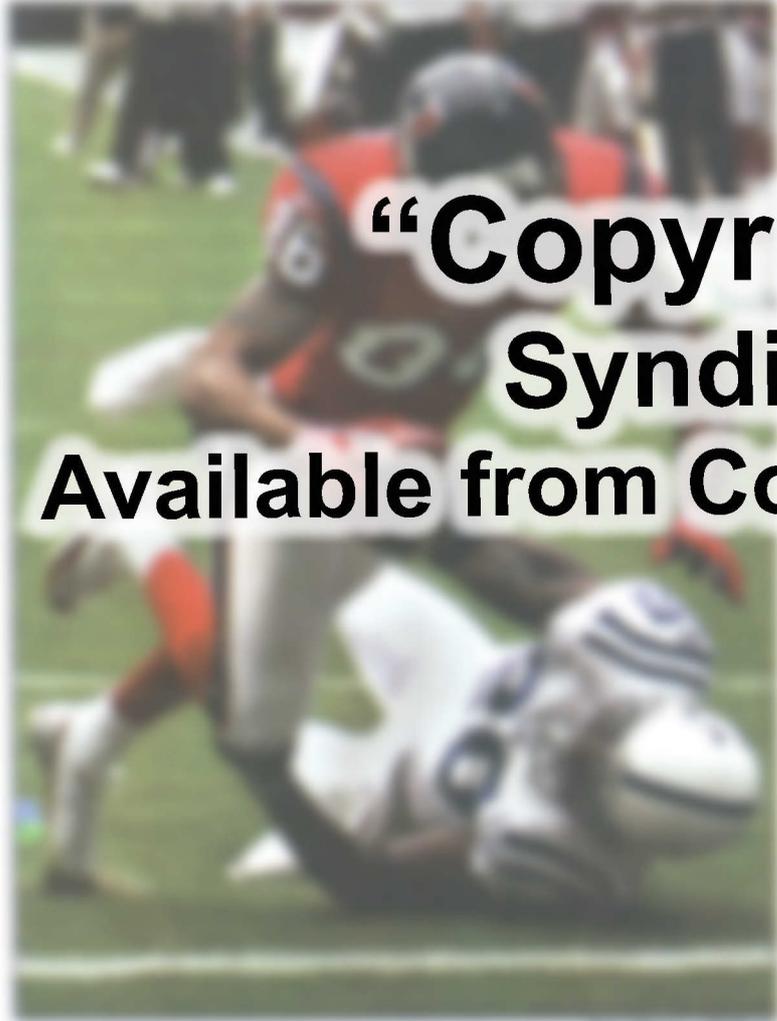

The Indianapolis Colts (1-0) defeated the Tampa Bay Buccaneers (0-1) 27-10 on Sunday at Sun Life Stadium. The Colts' offense was led by quarterback Peyton Manning, who threw for 273 yards and three touchdowns. The defense was led by linebacker Reggie Miller, who had a career-high 12 tackles. The Colts' defense was also helped by a strong performance from defensive end Dwight Freeney, who had a career-high 12 tackles. The Colts' offense was held in check in the first half, but exploded in the second half. Manning threw a touchdown pass to wide receiver Reggie Wayne in the third quarter, and another to tight end Dallas Clark in the fourth quarter. ## Shockley might miss Cocktail Party

■ MEYER IS CONSIDERING RE-TOOLING THE OFFENSE.

By LOUIS ANASTASIS

Alligator Staff Writer
lanastasis@alligator.org

Urban Meyer was hardly shy on Sunday about what the Georgia game means to the Gators.

"It's about as urgent as you get," Meyer said. "I think this is the biggest week of the year for the Florida Gators."

And with UF's season hanging in the balance, what better news could Meyer receive than hearing that Georgia quarterback D.J. Shockley may miss the showdown?

Shockley, the Southeastern Conference's top-rated passer heading into Saturday's game against Arkansas, fell awkwardly late in the second quarter and never returned.

Reports suggest that Shockley, a dynamic, speedy quarterback, sprained his MCL and is doubtful for Saturday's game.

Meyer, however, must prepare as if Shockley will play in case he miraculously returns.

"I think we're planning on him going," Meyer said. "He's as fine a quarterback as there is in the country at this point. You watch the way he's improved throwing the ball and then the way he can take off running. I haven't watched film on [Texas'] Vince Young and [Missouri's] Brad Smith, but watching [Shockley]—he's as fine a quarterback in the country."

Without Shockley, the entire complexion of the game could change. Backup junior Joe Tereshinski would face a rested defense welcoming the full return of defensive end Ray McDonald.

In four games of action, Tereshinski, a traditional drop-back passer, has completed 13 of 23 passes for 207 yards, one interception and no touchdowns.

"He's as fine a quarterback as there is in the country at this point. You watch the way he's improved throwing the ball and then the way he can take off running. I haven't watched film on [Texas'] Vince Young and [Missouri's] Brad Smith, but watching [Shockley]—he's as fine a quarterback in the country."

Urban Meyer
UF football coach

"The one thing you miss with Shockley when he's not going is there are the quarterback draws and sweeps," Meyer said.

But Georgia's quarterback position will hardly hog the spotlight heading into the game. Questions continue to abound about quarterback Chris Leak and what is being done to jumpstart the offense.

It is becoming slowly clear that the UF coaching staff will cater to Leak's strengths rather than force feed him with spread offense intangibles from here on out. Meyer suggested the Gators would implement more traditional wrinkles into the Georgia game plan to get things rolling.

"We've added some things and tried to utilize our personnel better," he said. "The good thing is that we've reached the point where we're getting healthy. We just have to get the playmakers in the position to make plays."

Meyer gave wide receiver Jemalle Cornelius, who has been hobbled by a left ankle sprain, a full vote of confidence. He also suggested that receiver Kenneth Tookes might finally play a significant role in the offense.

"He's running good routes and he will play more of a part in the offense," Meyer said.

"We are evaluating how much five-wide we're going to do. We like to have five threats but we don't have that right now."

One player who could alleviate the receiver situation is tight end Tate Casey, and it is Casey who could epitomize the offense's changes against Georgia.

Meyer plans on using more tight end sets, both to help protect Leak and to provide another capable receiver.

"That's something that I can't give you much more on," Meyer said. "The only thing is that we have just one tight end at the University of Florida and you risk something if he comes in and gets hurt."

Tereshinski who? Shockley injury gives Gators added hope

Gator Nation, meet your savior. His name is Joe Tereshinski III. He's a 6-foot-3, 221-pound good ol' boy from Athens, Ga.

Until now, his resume included a vital clipboard-holding sideline gig for Georgia while winning the revered Scott and Elizabeth Kelly Endowed Football Scholarship.

But just as feedurbanmeyertothehiprahan as.com was sold for a cool million bucks this weekend, Tereshinski's unexpected ascension to No. 1 on Georgia's depth chart gives UF even more of a realistic shot to make a big push toward Atlanta by winning Saturday's Cocktail Extravaganza.

Yes, I'm the same guy who two weeks ago said the Gators had absolutely no shot

Andrew Abramson
Drew's Control
aabramson@alligator.org

at earning a trip to the SEC championship game if they couldn't defeat LSU.

But who can predict injuries, and who knew Georgia's backup quarterback was a guy named Tereshinski?

With Georgia's D.J. Shockley likely out this weekend, and the unheralded 'Shinski taking the reins for Mark Richt, a game that seemed like a sure Bulldogs win just weeks ago suddenly looks like the perfect opportunity for Meyer, Chris Leak and the rest of the Gators to redeem a disappointing season.

Shockley's absence won't do anything to repair UF's reeling offense, but it will take a load of pressure off a confused passing game and an offensive line in disarray.

Suddenly, this is a defensive battle, a la UF's early-season 16-7 victory against Tennessee.

UF's defensive front may not be able to spell Tereshinski, but it should have no problem slamming the junior quarterback to the ground while talking trash about his mama.

In the two losses this season to Alabama and LSU, the shell-shocked Gators were humiliated before the halfway mark of the first quarter.

That's why the key to Saturday's game will be pressuring 'Shinski early to give the Gators confidence while putting fear in his eyes. If UF's offense can establish a running game and muster up something in the air, a mere 14-points could be enough for the Gators season to mean something again.

Of course, even if UF escapes Jacksonville victorious, the Gators need faith on their side while praying to the football gods that Georgia trips up again.

But at least after four years of midseason Outback and Music City Bowls chatter, the Gators are just one victory away from relevance.

Now, if Shockley resumes clipboard duty and 'Shinski still leads Georgia to victory, get the pitchforks and torches ready.

Loss of Lochte hinders Gators in Texas tournament

■ FRESHMAN ALLY STEPS UP, BUT GATORS STILL FALL.

By RACHEL ROBINS
Alligator Writer

With the Gators' star swimmer nursing an injury in Gainesville, the UF men's swimming team had little luck in Texas.

The men's team (2-2, 1-0 Southeastern Conference) lost to Texas 243-127 before falling to California 247-123.

UF senior Ryan Lochte, an Olympic gold-medalist, was unable to make the trip with a shoulder injury. This left the Gators short-handed throughout the meet.

Freshman Bradley Ally recorded the only individual win for the Gators in the 400-yard individual medley with a time of 3:54.38.

"There is a saying in swimming that if you're happy in October, you're not going to be very happy in March," UF coach Gregg Troy said. "We're not very happy right now, but it's still early in the season."

The women's team, meanwhile, had somewhat of a better showing in the Lone Star State.

The Gators (3-0, 1-0 SEC) captured second place in the Dallas

Classic tournament and defeated Southern Methodist University in a dual meet on Thursday, 125-118.

Gators.

"It was key for us to win the diving events today," Troy said. "SMU came out and put us in a hole early, but the win in the one-meter came at a crucial time to put us back in the meet. The three-meter win was just as important because it maintained what little control we were able to have toward the end."

Alicia Miller and Sarah Ellerby finished first in the one-meter dive and three-meter dive, respectively.

However, Vipa Bernhardt proved to be the Most Valuable Player of the weekend.

On Thursday, she was the only UF swimmer to win an individual swim competition. She won both the 200 IM and the 200 breaststroke against SMU and claimed first place in the 400 IM and the 100 breaststroke in the Dallas Classic.

The Gators were also without Caroline Burckle, who sat out with an illness.

"We had some excellent swims; Vipa Bernhardt was excellent for us today and so was Candace Weiman," Troy said. "Both of those individuals swam a lot. ... and really did a great job for us."

Next week, both the men and women's teams will face Southeastern Conference-rival Georgia on Thursday.

UF dominates LSU, Arkansas

■ GATORS RECEIVE EARLY SCARE FROM RAZORBACKS.

By BRYAN JONES
Alligator Writer

Mother Nature decided to wait until Monday to unleash her latest storm on Florida, so the Gators provided some thunder of their own this weekend at the O'Connell Center.

The No. 4 UF volleyball team (20-1, 10-0 Southeastern Conference) picked up a pair of victories this weekend, sweeping Arkansas (13-8, 6-3 SEC) and Louisiana State (16-5, 6-4 SEC).

It was a Jekyll and Hyde performance for Arkansas Friday night, as the Gators won 30-10 in game one, their largest margin of victory all season.

"Game one came awfully easy, and as a coach you almost fear that it was too easy," UF coach Mary Wise said.

Game two, however, turned out to be the closest game UF has played this year, as the Gators edged the Razorbacks in a 33-31 nail-biter.

"The first game, I don't think we saw the Arkansas team that we know, and they are definitely better than they played that first game," outside hitter Marcie Hampton said. "That second game we didn't play up to our level, and they played up to theirs."

The fans came alive in game two, when the crowd of 2,522 tried to will the Gators to victory. With the Gators trailing late, the fans responded, creating an atmosphere that sounded more like a UF basketball game than a typical volleyball match.

"The first game, I don't think we saw the Arkansas team that we know, and they are definitely better than they played that first game."

Arkansas was competitive in game three as well, but the Gators were able to mount a late run to close out the match 30-23.

While Arkansas' blocking helped keep the Gators offensive efficiency down, middle blocker Kari Klinkenborg gave the Gators a strong performance, recording 8 kills on a game-high .583 hitting percentage.

"What I am really pleased with is how much better [Klinkenborg] is being patient in terms of hitting what she is given," Wise said. "Early on, she was trying to create kills maybe on sets that weren't quite there. She does have a fast arm and I think she and Angie [McGinnis have found their rhythm together]."

Sunday's match against LSU was a more routine victory for UF, as the Gators defeated the road-tested Tigers 30-20, 30-21, 30-20.

Due to the effects of Hurricane Katrina, LSU did not play a match at home until last week.

"When your football team plays more [home] matches than your volleyball team, you know it's a tough year," Wise said.

While the Gators have a reputation for featuring strong attackers, it was their defense that was most influential in the two weekend victories.

Arkansas was only able to muster a .076 hitting percentage, while LSU needed a late push to finish at .021.

"It all starts with serving," Wise said. "If the opposing team can't get a perfect pass, that really helps our defense. So our defensive numbers are all based on the great serving."

Jane Collymore led the Gators with 17 kills against LSU and 29 for the weekend, while tallying 25 digs in the two matches. Her 21 points against LSU moved her into fifth place in UF history for career points scored.

"[Collymore] made it difficult on LSU both when she was in the front row and the back row," Wise said. "Jane was pretty special today."

Gators win low-scoring showdown

■ LATE-GAME GOAL BY KERNS LIFTS UF TO VICTORY.

By SPENCER DAVIS-VANNESS

Alligator Writer
sdvanness@alligator.org

Just one week after Mississippi broke a scoreless match against the UF soccer team in the waning minutes to claim victory, the Gators found themselves locked in another 0-0 battle at Arkansas as the clock wound down. But this time, freshman forward Megan Kerns turned a free kick from just outside the penalty box into the only goal the Gators would need to return to Gainesville with a win.

Sunday's match was anything but a display of offensive power, with the Gators and Razorbacks combining for only 14 shots.

The Gators' 10 shots marked one of the lowest team totals of the season.

Burleigh said she was unconcerned with the lack of firepower, and that the game presented the kind of defensive challenge she expected.

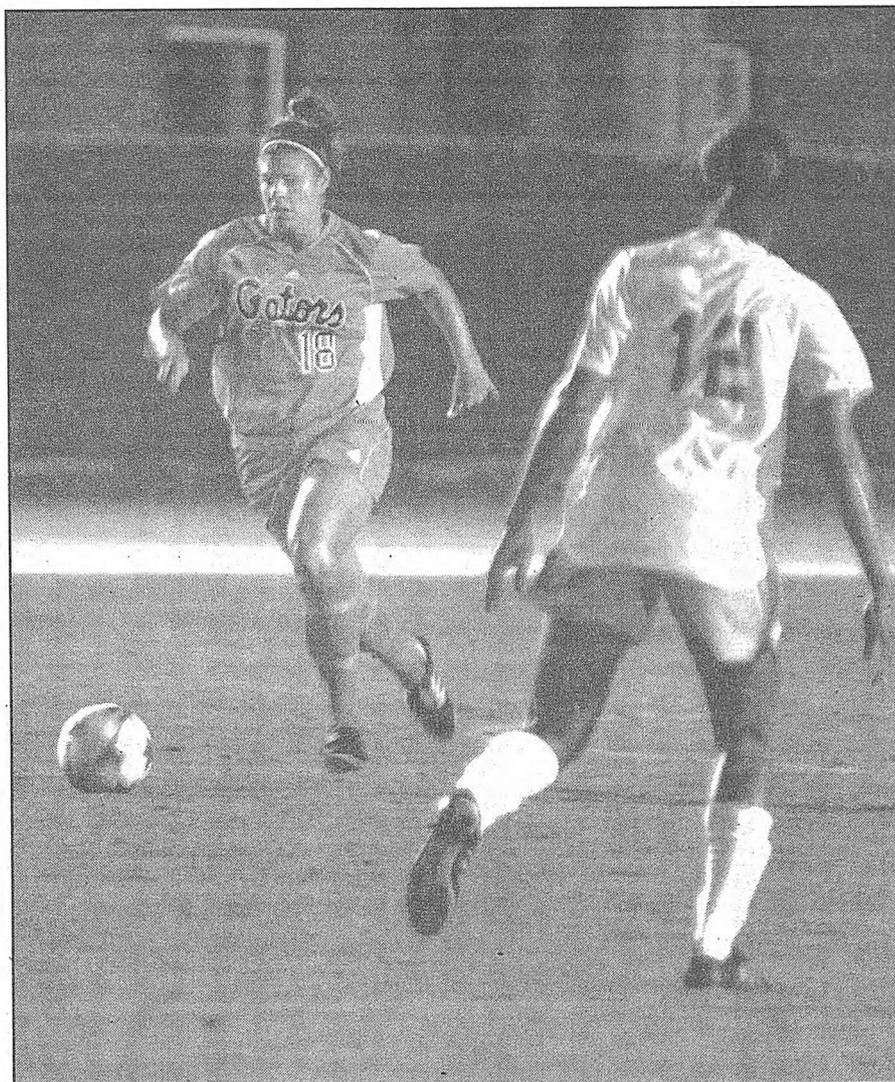

"The last two times we played [Arkansas] it's been a 2-1 type game, so it was a close game as expected," she said. "It was a nice job by our defense to get the shutout."

Sunday's match may have also presented a challenging element for the Gators that they previously had not encountered.

With temperatures in Fayetteville dipping almost into the 40s with constantly gusting winds, UF was treated to its first taste of fall and a definite departure from the warm, balmy confines of Gainesville.

"It was really windy and cold," Burleigh said. "The wind was keeping either team from getting good possession."

On Friday, UF played in its first match since being virtually eliminated from the Southeastern Conference title race. The lowered stakes didn't seem to affect the Gators as they defeated Louisiana State 2-1.

Kerns gave UF an early spark, scoring on a breakaway past the Tigers' goalkeeper and several defenders to earn a goal.

LSU responded with a goal of its own on a similar breakaway early in the second half, but a frustrating spell of close calls on countless shots in the second half for UF would truly mark the game.

Sophomore forward Keleigh Hudson, who gave the Gators their final goal in the 82nd minute, said the team knew it was only a matter of time before their fortunes changed.

"It felt great getting a goal after so many chances," she said. "We knew we could put them away and we finally did."

In a continuing trend of injuries for the Gators, sophomore defender Ashley Harris was hurt during the match, but Burleigh had few details on the extent or seriousness of the injury.

Harris did not play on Sunday against the Razorbacks.
