

Gainesville divided on expanding city limits

RESIDENTS WILL VOTE TODAY ON WHETHER TO ANNEX THE SFCC AREA.

By DOMINICK TAO
 Alligator Writer
 dtao@alligator.org

Voters can choose today whether or not to expand Gainesville's city limits, and the battle lines have been drawn. SFCC student government members waved "vote for annexation" signs on roads near the school Monday afternoon.

Meanwhile, over the past few weeks fliers from Citizens for Better Government, with "vote against annexation" written on them in bold, have been circulating around town.

Life in the 1,400 acres of land along Interstate 75 between the Oaks Mall and SFCC will change if registered voters opt to annex their schools, roads and homes into the city.

But whether the change would be for better or worse — or whether it should happen at all — has been a divisive issue among area residents for weeks.

Whatever the outcome, it will affect the more than 5,000 people living just outside Gainesville's western limits, said Karen Snyder, Gainesville's strategic planner.

The apartment complexes Paddock Club, Santa Fe Trace and Legacy, along with neighborhoods Northridge and Chelsea Lane, are in the annexation area, city officials said.

Kay S. the Losen said she has 31 acres in the annexation area. And that area should stay just how it is now, she said — not in the city.

The Losen said she doesn't want increased property taxes, which she said would unfairly impact property owners.

"The real truth is they want to annex us for more tax dollars," the Losen said.

City officials disagree.

"The money coming out will be going back into the area. It's not like we're making money on this," Snyder said.

UF strives for efficient energy

By CHARLOTTE HASELDEN
 Alligator Contributing Writer

UF may soon face an energy crisis, forcing officials to find a way to make the university more efficient.

"Right now, our electrical use keeps going up, and the price of electricity is going up," said Dedee DeLongpre, director of UF's Office of Sustainability. "The combination of those two things is devastating from a financial standpoint."

UF spends an average of $2.1 million a month for electricity alone, according to the Physical Plant Division Web site.

UF's Energy and Climate Change Task Force is working with the Office of Sustainability to help UF reduce its energy use.

Kibert

Charles Kibert, the chairman of the group, aims to help UF quadruple its energy efficiency. Institutions that achieve this are referred to as "Factor Four."

"I think we're going to have to become Factor Four because rising energy prices will shut us down if we don't," said Kibert, a UF professor and director of the Powell Center for Construction and Environment.

"We will learn how to become efficient, but we should learn how to do it now and not be forced into it later on."

Small changes have already occurred on campus, such as replacing older, inefficient light bulbs with compact, fluorescent light bulbs that use less energy. Operating schedules have also changed. Buildings are now only operating when needed, rather than all day, every day.

However, the university needs to take larger measures to reduce energy use in order to avoid unnecessarily high energy bills in the future, DeLongpre said.

"There are real financial incentives for us to figure out how to get people to be more efficient on campus," DeLongpre said. "It's going to break the bank if we don't."

The university gets a certain amount of money per square foot from the state to maintain and operate its buildings.

If the price of the electrical bill exceeds the university's predictions, then the money has to be cut from somewhere

Matthew Kaye cuts designs into clay while making pottery at the Arts and Crafts Center in the Reitz Union on Monday afternoon. Though Kaye is not a UF student, he uses the center almost every day to work on his hobby, which he adopted this year. "Hobbies aren't supposed to be full time," he said.

UF's four early enrollees, including offensive lineman Carl Johnson and quarterback Tim Tebow, picked up an advantage by coming to Gainesville a semester early. See story, pg. 19.

UF hopes to open ethanol plant to fuel its vehicles

■ IF BUILT, THE PLANT WOULD BE THE LARGEST OF ITS KIND IN THE NATION.

By JUSTIN RICHARDS
Alligator Staff Writer
jrichards@alligator.org

UF aspires to turn trunks, stalks and stems into clean, renewable fuel for Florida.

The Institute of Food and Agricultural Sciences is lobbying the Legislature for $20 million to build an ethanol plant, which would convert plant matter into viable fuel.

The facility would fuel all or part of UF's fleet of vehicles. Most modern vehicles can process an ethanol solution of up to 85 percent.

The proposed plant would be the largest of its kind in the nation. Larger ethanol plants supply the Midwest with "gasohol," a 10 percent blend of ethanol, but they can only convert sugars to ethanol, particularly the starches in corn. The UF facility, however, would use cellulose, which exists in all plants.

When workers prune trees away from power lines or clear land for urban use, they produce the raw material for ethanol production. Woody matter is especially useful.

The plant waste is ground into chips and dumped into a vat of diluted acid that leeches out some of the plants' sugar. A second vat inundates the plants with fungal enzymes that digest more sugars, along with micro-organisms that ferment glucose into the alcohol ethanol.

The leftover plant matter is burned, and the resulting steam can power the next cycle. Only 5 percent of the energy the process requires comes from nonrenewable fossil fuels, said Lonnie Ingram, a UF microbiology professor with several patents on ethanol production.

The plant could produce 1 million to 2 million gallons a year, enough to fuel UF vehicles, but it would not suffice as a large-scale commercial facility, Ingram said.

UF Projects

Instead, it would allow researchers to refine and simplify the technology for use statewide, thus returning the Legislature's $20 million investment.

"The payoff for the state is to build a new industry and provide employment — to take advantage of the natural resources that we have available," Ingram said. "We could be the No. 1 ethanol-producing state in the country."

He said ethanol is clean, renewable and, if produced in mass quantities, it may become cheaper than petroleum.

According to the UF Institute of Food and Agricultural Sciences, Florida produces more wood waste from forests and cities than any other state.

That waste, paired with paper mill residue, could yield 12.4 billion gallons of ethanol each year. Floridians burn 8.6 billion gallons of gasoline yearly.

Last month, UF President Bernie Machen announced the university would construct a biodiesel plant on campus that would convert the grease generated in campus dining halls into cleaner-burning fuel.

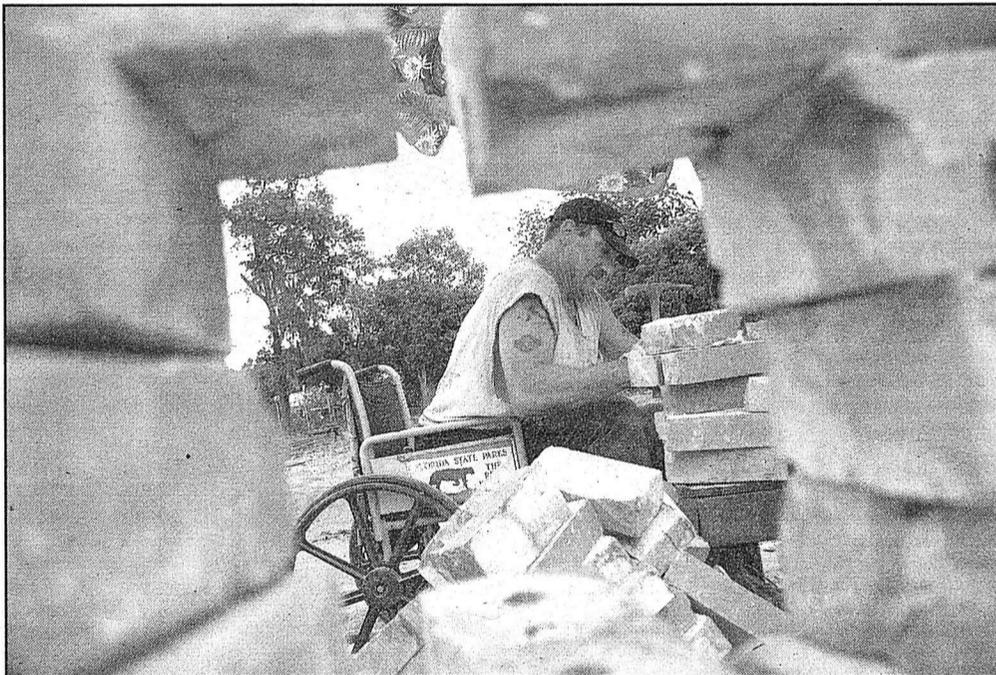

If the Legislature approves both projects, UF could use biodiesel to fuel the university's diesel-powered vehicles and ethanol to power the rest.

◆ HAPPENSTANCE ◆

The man called 'Chair' recalls how his life's path changed

Chiseling the mortar off bricks left from the demolition of Gator Plaza for 10 cents a brick, Kevin Trudeau, 41, recalls the 1989 accident that stripped him of his passion for motorcycles, giving him the name by which most people know him: Chair.

"Somebody hit me with my brand-new truck," Chair recalls. "But it was God's day. It stopped me from ODing; it stopped me from getting shot; it stopped me from a lot of things that should've happened. It gave me another day to talk to you, 'cause the path I was heading down — I stubbed my toe and went the other way." Chair turned his life of addiction around by making enough money from cleaning bricks, handing out coupon booklets on campus and cleaning windows to pay for his low-cost apartment. Even though some people think he is homeless, he never begs for money and is able to make enough to live on from odd jobs.

Before he could finish chiseling bricks that day, thunderclouds gathered overhead, posing a threat to the metal in his body from surgery after the accident.

"There's a bolt of lightning coming down. I'll come back after the storm," he said.

Golfer to train despite disease

By CESAR GARCIA

Alligator Contributing Writer

The golf course grass is still wet with the morning dew. Andrew Porumbescu is the first one on the course.

It's been seven minutes, and this is the longest time it has taken him to tee off.

Though multiple sclerosis may take the club out of his hands, it doesn't change his game plan.

Porumbescu is living with and fighting against MS. It's a debilitating disease that has not only made it difficult for him to carry on with his everyday life, but has made it almost impossible for the accomplished golfer to grip a golf club and complete a swing.

"I started playing golf three years ago, and it has been so addicting," Porumbescu, an SFCC student, said. "Once I began playing, it filled up all of my free time."

A promising golf player, Porumbescu competed in four golf tournaments in north Florida and placed first or second in all of them.

His doctor discovered the possibility of MS two months ago, when an MRI taken after a car accident revealed lesions in his brain.

"I will have to relearn how to play the game with my impairment and the fatigue, but it will come back quickly. This is just another disease that I have to overcome."

Andrew Porumbescu
SFCC student

"I didn't know anything about MS. I only knew about diabetes because I have had that all my life," Porumbescu said. "I researched MS on the Internet, and I knew I had it because of my symptoms."

Despite the fact that the frequent muscle spasms have temporarily kept him from participating in golf tournaments, Porumbescu isn't giving up his love of the sport or letting the disease bring his spirit down.

"I will have to relearn how to play the game with my impairment and the fatigue, but it will come back quickly," he said. "This is just another disease that I have to overcome."

Dr. Lesley White from UF's Department of Applied Physiology and Kinesiology has conducted research that explored the role of exercise training in improving mobility in people with MS. The research showed that physical training has "many positive outcomes" for those with the disease, he said.

Porumbescu has begun working with his golf instructor to work around his impairment, and his doctor has approved a low-intensity strength-training program to maintain his muscles.

Porumbescu is one of 25,000 patients who will be diagnosed with MS this year. "My life has made a complete 180, but I will continue to live life to the fullest and play golf for as long as I can," Porumbescu said. "My life is out there on the green."

20th hijacker?

Moussaoui trial leaves too many questions

During the trial of Zacarias Moussaoui, the admitted al-Qaeda member prosecuted for his prior knowledge of the Sept. 11 attacks, there have certainly been a few things that we didn't expect to see.

Like a dozen family members of Sept. 11 victims testifying on his behalf.

Last Wednesday and Thursday, relatives of the victims testified for the defense, which is seeking to spare Moussaoui from the death penalty and opting instead for life in prison.

One of the relatives said that her family does not want to "get caught in a whirlpool of sadness and anger."

The courtroom was stunned.

"The Bible attempts to explain that we are all sinners, all broken people, but all children of God and loved by God," said Robin Theurkauf, wife of victim Tom Theurkauf.

We were shocked, too. Moussaoui seemed tailor-made for the execution chamber.

But then we got to thinking. Wouldn't killing him just solidify his dream to be a martyr? Wouldn't it be better for him to die an ignoble death after years and years of boredom and suffering, only to be buried in a pine box somewhere, entirely without ceremony or fanfare of any kind?

We thought so. It just seemed more fitting.

But then we got to thinking again. And we realized that a lot of questions about Moussaoui's involvement still remain.

After all, it's been difficult to prove that he had anything at all to do with the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks. The best evidence against Moussaoui has come from Moussaoui himself.

Like the stunning courtroom admission that he, along with attempted shoe-bomber Richard Reid, planned to fly a Boeing 747 into the White House on Sept. 11.

The claim came from a man who for three years denied he had anything to do with the terrorist attacks.

And it came from a man who, despite his legal defense's best efforts, apparently wants to be killed. In February, Moussaoui reportedly offered to testify for the prosecution against himself. Throughout the trial, he's repeatedly sabotaged his defense.

But can we really trust someone who wants to die?

If Moussaoui sounds a little insane, it's because he probably is.

Psychiatrist Michael First said in court that Moussaoui steadfastly believes that President Bush will free him from prison. First also stated that Moussaoui was a schizophrenic. This backed up earlier testimony that, while he was an al-Qaeda operative, his leaders considered him to be crazy.

Sure, Moussaoui wouldn't have had any problems helping out with the terrorist attacks if anybody had asked him, and maybe that's bad enough. "But," says Slate columnist Dahlia Lithwick, "he did nothing to help it because, as everyone but Moussaoui now agrees, he was flaky, wifty and weird."

And even though some might like to see him die, says Lithwick, "It's not a capital crime to be flaky, wifty or weird."

So, should we really execute a deranged man who has gone out of his way to implicate himself and who wants to be killed by the U.S. government?

We don't think so.

If you think he's guilty, then it's too light a sentence.

But if you think he's crazy, then it's just irresponsible.

Hippies need to get serious about Earth

When you think of Earth Day — it was last Saturday, in case you missed it — what comes to mind?

For me, it's a bunch of hippies, dressed in hemp from the feet up, dancing around a maypole. Or maybe they're communing with Gaea, the Earth Spirit. Or chaining themselves to a tree, on the latest crusade to save the Great Spotted Something-Or-Other.

Earth Day. The name alone is so collegiate, so earnest, so awesomely vegan, it's impossible to take seriously: "Earth Day, man. It's, like, a celebration. Of, like, the Earth and stuff. Hey, do you have any weed?"

It gives environmentalism a bad name. And that's the problem.

Our generation faces an unprecedented ecological crisis. I'll say that again: our generation. This isn't about "the rainforest," or blessed Mother Earth, or Amazonian tree frogs. It's about you and me. Our quality of life and, ultimately, our survival as a species.

Unfortunately, too many environmentalists walk around in a fog of patchouli and incense, screaming "Meat is murder!" and doing nothing to stop climate change. Shame on them.

Who knows. Maybe spray-painting a woman's fur coat or rehabilitating transgendered bald eagles is a deeply moving experience for PETA and its ilk.

But it does nothing to keep New Orleans and Bangladesh above sea level. It does nothing to ensure that our air and water are clean, or that our kids won't catch cancer from a day at the beach.

For that, we need legislation — at the federal level, on a massive scale and with a quickness. Unfortunately, existing laws are totally inadequate. Take the Corporate Average Fuel Economy standards, or CAFE, for example.

Jake Ramsey
Thus Spake Jake
letters@alligator.org

Since 1975, Congress has mandated that auto manufacturers achieve an average level of fuel efficiency for all the cars they sell in America. (For most models, it's 27.5 miles to the gallon. Light trucks and sport utility vehicles have a lower threshold.) But some automakers, like BMW, simply break the rules and pay the Environmental Protection Agency a small fine. It's their choice.

Congress should act now to close this loophole and others like it. While they're at it, why not raise the CAFE threshold to 40 or 50 mpg? That would drastically reduce emissions — and, as a bonus, our dependence on foreign oil.

Of course, the oil companies would scream bloody murder. I don't blame them. They've been enabling our addiction to petroleum for years, and turning a handsome profit doing it. And I do mean handsome.

Lee Raymond, the former chief executive officer of Exxon Mobil Corp., just retired with a $400 million severance package — about $144,000 for every day he worked. You don't have to be Karl Marx to find that excessive.

Besides, there's a bigger interest group out there than Exxon Mobil, Texaco Inc. and Chevron Corp. put together. It's called Homo sapiens, and it includes anyone who breathes air and drinks water. Even Republicans.

So please, environmentalists, focus on the big picture for once. Cut off your dreadlocks, get down from that tree and vote. Organize. Bathe. And forget about the whales — we need to save ourselves.

Conservatives just aren't as intelligent

This letter is to Matt Melone concerning his "Liberal pettiness leads to bitter misery" column Monday.

Matt should probably do a little more research on the psychological side of those surveys. Many studies have shown that more religious people and people of lower IQs are happier than those who are less religious and have higher IQs. Maybe it is this correlation between religion, intelligence and happiness that you're picking up on in your column, rather than any partisan-related issues.

Liberals are just unhappy with status quo

In response to Matt Melone's bitter retort against liberals, all I can say is thank God for unhappy liberals. It's easy to be happy with the status quo.

It's easy to be happy when your narrow view of the world includes only your happiness, regardless if only white men are allowed to vote, own property or receive a college education. No, it takes an unhappy, petty person to march on the street where there are police and water cannons and attack dogs waiting, just for the simple right to vote, use a bathroom or sit at the front of a bus. It takes a downright mad person to march against an unjust war that's killing thousands of our innocent people and our brave men and women in uniform, or to stand up against weapons of mass destruction and say how insane the doctrine of mutually assured destruction really is.

Yes, it's easy to be happy in this world when you only care about yourself.

I may be an unhappy liberal, but I have hope for the future, where my happiness will be long-lasting.

Bans on gay marriage are discriminatory

Joshua Cunio's letter attempts to reframe the gay marriage debate via redundant spin: Someone who is intolerant of intolerance is, well, intolerant. "Hawking" gay marriage is an attempt by homosexuals to have the right to create families as we see fit. To me, this seems to be one of the most basic human rights.

The opposition to gay marriage is based on the myth that heterosexual relationships are more worthy, legitimate and valid than homosexual relationships are. According to this prejudice, gay and lesbian couples have, in effect, not earned the various legal protections afforded by marriage. What Cunio tries to spin as "resolute disagreement" from those who so bravely want to "defend traditional marriage" is actually an incarnation of this empty heterosexualist dogma that values one orientation over another. Cunio's statement implies that it is OK to discriminate against a sexual minority as long as "most UF students" aren't affected.

Abbas deserves international support

Mike Day's column "U.S. should support Mahmoud Abbas" is spot on.

Day is absolutely right. Mahmoud Abbas needs the support of the U.S.

Mahmoud Abbas is the most moderate secular and accommodating leader in the Middle East.

Unfortunately he was undermined by Ariel Sharon, the former Israeli prime minister, through the unilateral steps and other measures. His position became very weak, and Hamas gained support at his expense.

I agree the U.S. and Israel must support Abbas by negotiating with him and giving him some tangible results to show his people. If Hamas is to survive, it must renounce violence and accept Israel. If Hamas refuses to change, it is doomed to failure.

Women simply shouldn't get pregnant

Stephanie Seguin and Liz Albelo want women everywhere to rally together to protest anti-abortion legislation. That seems like a lot of work when the answer to the problem is so much simpler than that.

Don't get pregnant.

In a country where one in every four people will contract an STD in his or her lifetime, it amazes me how concerned people are with their "right" to have an abortion.

You'd think that the population would be more concerned about its rights to remain STD-free or to say no. Who'd have thought that taking steps to remain STD-free, such as abstaining from sex or using condoms, will also prevent you from becoming pregnant! (And don't hand me any pro-choice arguments mentioning rape or incest, as these cases account for only 1 percent of all abortions.)

Further, to suggest that legislation permitting a pharmacist to refuse to dispense the morning-after pill is some sort of disservice to the public is completely asinine. When people leave moral qualms behind and just shut up and do their job, we find ourselves in situations like the Holocaust. Actors have a right to choose how much skin to show on-screen, doctors have a right to choose what operations they will and will not perform, and pharmacists should have the right to determine what pills they will and will not dispense.

It's called the right to choose.

And even if your pharmacist did invoke this right and refused to fill your birth control prescription, guess what's lurking right around the pharmacist's corner? Condoms! Not cheap enough for you? You can even get them for free!

I'm dumbfounded at how people can't seem to find their local Planned Parenthood clinic until after the unwanted pregnancy has been achieved.

So what's the simplest solution to the abortion problem? Wrap it up, or learn to keep your legs closed.

Think of it as consolidating those three great dates into one long and forever-legendary night...it's the same idea. Call us today at 888-PAYWAY5 or visit www.CollegePayWayConsolidation.com to start the process. You'll be glad you did.

Consolidate your loans today.

We can save you up to 1.25% more on your interest rate than if you were to consolidate with the Federal government.

You may be eligible for loan consolidation even if you're still in school. Call for details.

*Based on an outstanding student loan balance of $75,000 consolidated during repayment/grace period; includes CSN benefit of 1.5%. The following Federal loans can be consolidated: Stafford, PLUS, Direct, Supplemental Loan for Students, Perkins, HP/SL, NSL, LDS, FISL. The interest rate is the weighted average interest rate of the loans that will be consolidated (rounded up to the nearest 1/8 of 1.00%) and is capped at 8.25%. A weighted average is determined by assigning a "weight" based on the proportion of debt you owe at each interest rate. Once you have submitted your application, it generally takes four to eight weeks to process your new Consolidation Loan. No application fees or prepayment penalties—the Federal regulations that govern this loan program prohibit any cost to the borrower. # Annexation divides students and residents

ANNEXATION, from page 1

She also said if the area is annexed, residents would save about 25 percent on their water bills and 10 percent on their electric bills because the surcharge for out-of-city residents would be removed. She said this would help offset increases in property taxes, which would increase by about $134.

If annexed, the city would also add a bus route between the Oaks Mall and the college, Snyder said.

And improved transportation for students in the area is a top concern, said SFCC External Affairs Director Ben Marcus.

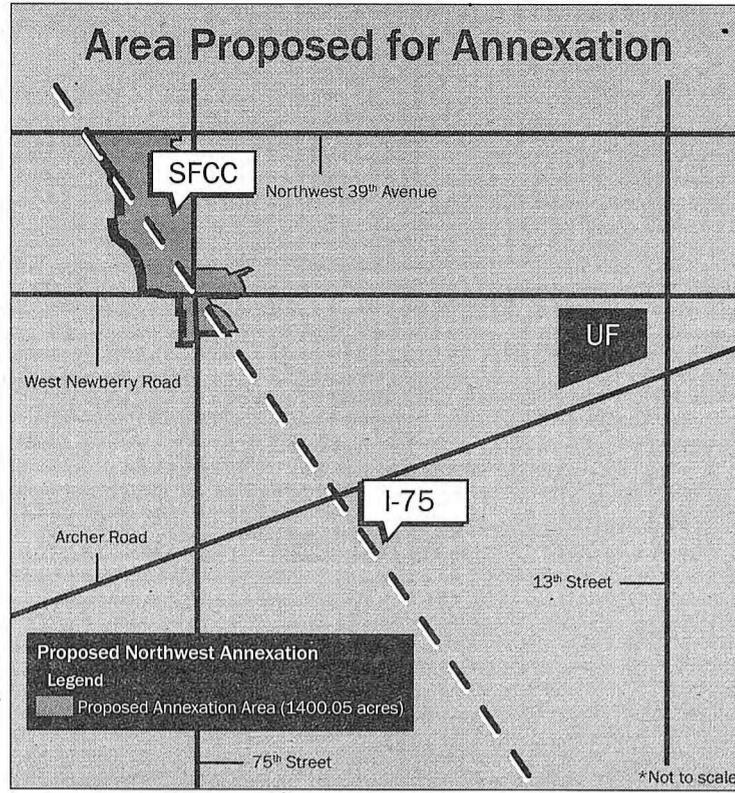

"I used to work at the mall. The big reason I quit — the biggest reason — was lack of transportation," Marcus said.

Citizens for Better Government criticized the city for using permanent residents' tax dollars to pay for services for students.

Snyder recognized that student interests chafed against those of permanent residents.

"Students are residents, too. They need to have a voice. They need to get out and vote to prove they are part of the community, whether it is for or against," Snyder said.

Those in the annexation area can vote today between 7 a.m. and 7 p.m. at the United Pentecostal Church at 8105 NW 23rd Ave.

else, like the maintenance staff or building repairs.

"I would hate for people to lose their jobs just because we couldn't remember to turn off the lights at the end of the day," DeLongpre said.

The task force is focusing on mapping out where the university's energy is used, where it comes from and how it's consumed.

On Campus In order for the energy conservation program to work, people at UF need to understand how their participation could make the program successful, DeLongpre said.

Kibert anticipates more active resistance to the program because "people don't like change," he says.

But if awareness of energy issues increases and efforts to reduce energy use meet little resistance, UF has the chance to create a model of efficiency for other schools.

"It's really exciting to be involved, even at this very early level," DeLongpre said, "because it's an opportunity for UF to be a leader amongst college and university campuses."

European summer a popular choice for UF students

■ PLANE TICKETS TO EUROPE CAN COST $1,000.

By MAYA CARPENTER

Alligator Contributing Writer

For some new graduates, the prospect of starting a career is daunting.

Instead, some who are looking to avoid the daily grind of a desk job run away from it all — on a vacation.

Dominique Bowen, 22, will be backpacking for 3 weeks across Europe.

"There is so much pressure being in school," the graduating finance major said.

Bowen said she has given up her previous summers to school so she could graduate on time, and now she is ready to release that pressure.

Mandy Morrissey, branch manager at STA Travel, said Europe has been a popular destination for students. It's a rather expensive time to travel because of the airline fuel charges, Morrissey said.

But funds were not an issue for Bowen, whose father paid for it as her graduation gift, she said.

For students traveling before June, the rates are between $700 and $1,000. After August, the rates tend to go up to about $1,200.

Even though rates are increasing, it doesn't stop students from traveling, especially political science major Luis Suarez-Isaza.

From May until June, Suarez-Isaza will be in the Netherlands doing some research in international relations. Later in the summer, he will be in Prague, the Czech Republic capital.

Most of his expenses are covered through scholarships that he receives through study-abroad programs, including $3,000 for this summer, he said.

International relations have always been something Suarez-Isaza wanted to learn about, and traveling is something that comes along with learning, he said.

"It's an essential part of my life," he said.

PUBLIC HEALTH

Physical therapy increases in popularity, availability

By ERIN CHENDERLIN

Alligator Contributing Writer

After injuring his foot more than two years ago playing basketball and then again jumping hurdles, Mike Flowers, a 19-year-old member of the UF track team, turned to physical therapy.

Rehabilitation of injuries through physical therapy has increased in popularity in the past 15 years, and it seems it will continue to, said Susan Tillman, a physical therapist at the UF Orthopaedic Institute.

"I think it's being prescribed earlier on," she said of the therapy. "We get a chance to make an earlier intervention to prevent things from getting really bad before they see us."

When Flowers first hurt himself, he said, "I just felt my foot click into a totally different position, and it wouldn't go back to normal."

He tried physical therapy after doctors and UF trainers were unable to diagnose the injury.

Flowers went to sessions for nearly three weeks to strengthen the muscles around the injury. Then, the therapist gave him exercises to continue at home, such as writing the alphabet with his toes.

"I think it got a lot better," he said of his foot. "My strength improved, and my stability improved. It was more my stability than anything."

Students using the university's gyms, fields and running paths risk injuring themselves, and according to the university's Web site, more than 90 percent of students use the recreation centers on campus.

David Bowles, recreational sports director, said the facilities are used more than 1 million times each year.

Physical therapy sometimes replaces pain-killing injection treatments. Dr. Jay Clugston, a team physician at UF, said the injections do not cure the problem but simply mask the pain, allowing the athlete to keep playing.

"You might even say we're going more away from any medicine," Clugston said. "With rehab, it's safer. You get better results." Tillman agreed.

"[Physical therapy] makes you stronger and helps to prevent the injury from reoccurring."

Erika Reznick
UF junior

"Physical therapy is able to correct the underlying cause of the symptoms, as opposed to simply treating the symptoms," she said. "Physical therapy is able to address the root of the symptoms."

UF junior Erica Reznick said she believes physical therapy got to the root of her injury.

After injuring her left knee playing club soccer when she was 13, Reznick had three surgeries and countless physical therapy sessions to fix her knee, which would dislocate "even when I took an awkward step," she said. Reznick credits physical therapy for her ability to play sports.

"Physical therapy helps in the healing process," she said. "It makes you stronger and helps to prevent the injury from reoccurring. Painkillers kind of just cover up the injury."

Along with a growth in popularity, Tillman said physical therapy now focuses more on teaching patients how to continue their rehabilitation at home.

Teaching patients what to do on their own allows them to reduce the number of visits they have to make to the office, which saves them money, she said.

And as physical therapy increases in popularity, patients' access to treatment is also increasing. Tillman said in the next 10 to 20 years, patients will be able to see a physical therapist directly after an injury instead of having to get a referral from a primary care physician first.

Colombian Connection

Passion for golf unites Villegas brothers

By JENNA MARINA
Alligator Writer

Who knew a brother could also be a grandfather?

Unless your family is into that sort of thing.

Camilo Villegas was the first golfer in UF history to be named Southeastern Conference Player of the Year twice (2002 and 2004) and is now making a name for himself as a rookie on the PGA Tour.

Manuel Villegas is a redshirt sophomore on the No. 3 UF men's golf team who followed his older brother from Colombia to UF in 2003.

The duo only spent one year together at UF before Camilo turned pro.

During that time, Manuel insisted on calling Camilo by another name: "grandpa."

"During the course of that year, because of all of the guidance and because of the perfectionistic tendencies of Camilo, Manny started to call him grandpa," UF men's golf coach Buddy Alexander said. "As in, 'Grandpa's telling me how to run my life,' how to do this, how to do that.

"I think that was a friendly little jab, as brothers might do, because they're very different."

Indeed. Although they share a surname and passion for the same sport, they are basically UF's version of "The Odd Couple."

"They're not even close to similar," senior golfer Matt Every said. "Anybody who tells you that is lying. Camilo is very disciplined. He probably writes everything down when he wakes up — what he needs to do during the day.

"Manny is the complete opposite. He kind of just goes with the flow, forgets everything, but it's funny. And he's hilarious too, but he doesn't try and be hilarious. He's just a fun person to be around."

The Villegas brothers are originally from Medellin, Colombia, where their sport has little popularity.

"There's four million people where I live in Medellin, and there are only four golf courses," Manuel said. "When we were born, [my dad] decided to take my brother with him [to a golf course] because he played on the weekends ... and then my brother grabbed a club and just started hitting around and messing around. He liked it, and the same thing [happened] with me."

Both graduated from The Columbus School, which did not have a golf team, but that didn't stop them from competing.

"I guess we were lucky to be members of the club and be able to practice once a week and maybe on the weekends," Manuel said. "So, we didn't play as much as young kids do here, but when we did go play, we took it very seriously and were competitive."

Nevertheless, when it came time to decide about his future, Camilo determined he needed a change.

"I just wanted to play golf and get a degree," he said. "In Colombia, it would have been one or the other."

But just like their personalities, Colombia and Florida were different.

"I want to turn pro, but [if I didn't] I'd probably have to go back home and work, which would suck. I would definitely not like that,

so we'll have to stick with turning pro."

"It's Manuel Villegas really hard," Manuel said. "It's a different culture, different people. The style of life changed completely."

While the transition may have been trying, they seemed to acclimate seamlessly.

"Both of them work very hard on their game," Alexander said. "Both of them were outstanding in the classroom, and both of them do the right things most all the time."

Because of their dedicated work ethic, Camilo was named the 2004 SEC Scholar-Athlete of the Year.

Manuel was named to the SEC Spring Sports Academic Honor Roll in 2005.

But the studious duo found ways to have some fun.

Every recalled one night of hijinks at the UF golf course in particular.

"One night, they drained the lake out here on the course and it was me, Jessie [Mudd], Manuel and Camilo," he said. "There was like a million golf balls down there. We took the scooters down there and got all of them out of the lake."

Manuel interrupted: "I still have some at my house."

Every continued: "Yeah, he still has them. But it was pretty cool because the cops came, and they were like flashing lights on us down there, and we're ducking behind the trees. We had a lot of fun. Just little things like that."

Nowadays, Camilo's life as a professional golfer doesn't allow him much free time to spend with his family, but the brothers still remain close.

"I don't see him that much because he's traveling all the time," Manuel said. "The little time that we get to spend together, he usually tells me stories, or he teaches me a little bit about golf and we hang out."

But their lack of quality time together just might be a temporary issue.

"Hopefully one day, I can play right next to my brother in the PGA," Manuel said. "I want to turn pro, but [if I didn't] I'd probably have to go back home and work, which would suck. I would definitely not like that, so we'll have to stick with turning pro."

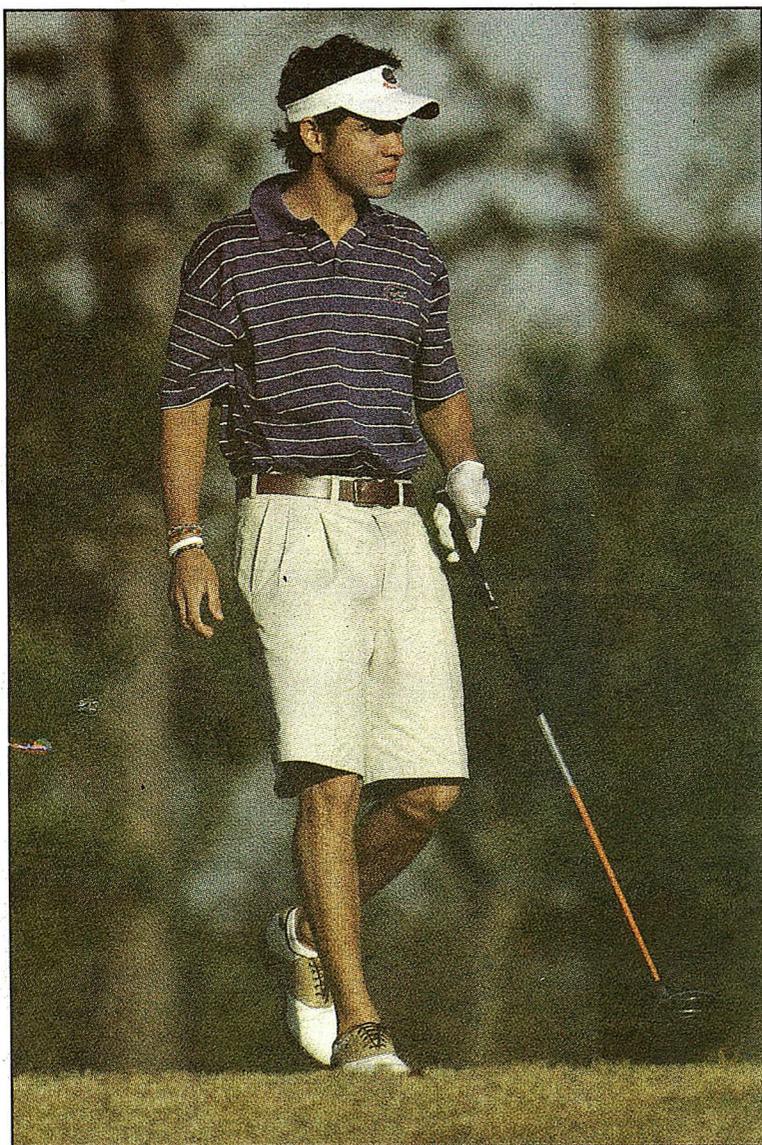

Camilo supports his brother's goal as long as it is what Manuel truly desires.

"I just want him to be happy," he said. "Sometimes you just do stuff, and you're not happy but you're successful, but happiness is what's important."

If he does decide to compete in the PGA someday, Manuel is already expecting people to make the inevitable comparisons to Camilo.

"It's funny because sometimes I get introduced to people as 'my brother's brother,' not as me," he said. "It's happened to me since I was so young. I just have to deal with it."

"I know it's going to be like that, and I'm expecting people to compare us, especially when we play the same sport."

Early enrollees gain head start on competition

Northwest Airlines flight 1584 with service from Detroit to Jacksonville stunk of Gators fans drunk off the previous night's national basketball championship. So imagine the scene when one man, flaunting a Hawaiian UF shirt, responded to a basketball question with the following:

"Oh, I can't wait for Tebow. Tebow's going to go nuts. See, I live in St. Augustine, and we live and die for Tebow. Do you think he has a shot at starting come fall?"

You are now free to move about the insanity. Welcome to Gator Nation, a sports nationality unlike any other — it embraces hype. And if quarterback Tim Tebow can help drive this hype to gargantuan proportions by enrolling in school early, then so be it.

Tebow was one of four players in UF's 2006 recruiting class to opt for a spring enrollment rather than a summer arrival. Joining the St. Augustine Nease High graduate was running back Chevon Walker (Fort Myers Riverdale High) and out-of-state offensive linemen Maurice Hurt from Milledgeville (Ga.) High and Carl Johnson from Durham (N.C.) Southern.

This is not a revolutionary event. Not anymore, anyway. The foursome form part of a growing trend across the country, as more and more high school seniors value college acclimation more than high school graduation.

According to a USA Today survey performed in conjunction with the Bowl Championship Series, early enrollees have increased by 53 percent since last season. Compare 52 eager freshmen in 2006 to 34 in 2005.

"I don't know if I could have my son just miss his senior year like that because that's supposed to be the best time. But the advantage obviously is that you get a head start."

Urban Meyer
UF football coach

As for UF? The Gators don't even boast the highest number in the Southeastern Conference. That distinction goes to Georgia. The Bulldogs reeled in six freshmen this spring, including heralded Dallas Highland Park High quarterback Matthew Stafford.

"It's amazing, and I have mixed emotions about it," UF coach Urban Meyer said. "I don't know if I could have my son just miss his senior year like that because that's supposed to be the best time. But the advantage obviously is that you get a head start."

While enrolling early molds a hectic academic head start with one premature semester of playbook madness, it is the latter that makes the trend so popular. There really is no better way to edge the competition than logging thousands of reps before the other freshmen.

"[My high school teammates] are going to have it a lot harder because since I enrolled early, I had a chance to go through the winter workouts and two-a-days," Johnson said. "I have a whole extra half of a season under my belt, while they're getting thrown in the fire."

Then again, freshmen aren't ex-

Devotion to UF athletics provides education not found in any textbook

Between the afternoon practices, late nights at the office and post-work car bombs, who really has time for classes? What exactly is this journalism major going to learn in his final semester anyway?

Sure, the old GPA — and undoubtedly the old IQ — has dipped a little, but that's the price of dedication paid by your alligatorSports writer/columnist/editor.

Box scores replaced course packets. Media guides took the place of textbooks. Postgame press conferences supplanted lectures.

I'm not even sure if I could articulate a paragraph's worth of knowledge from my scholarly endeavors this semester, which doesn't bode well for finals. But as I bid adieu in my alligatorSports finale, I don't want you all to think I squandered the last four months. I did learn a few things like ...

... that right now, Tim Tebow is a better quarterback than Chris Leak. The game didn't matter. Starters didn't play. Leak basically had scrubs for receivers and running backs. Tebow had offensive coordinator Dan Mullen on his sideline. Blah ... blah ... blah. The bottom line is that Tebow's Orange squad won 24-6 against Leak's Blue, which scored the fewest points in the Orange and Blue game's recorded history. More importantly, Tebow looked more comfortable running the offense than Leak, who was protected by the entire first-string offensive line — except Jim Tartt, who was out with a shoulder injury.

Just imagine how bad the senior would've looked if his freshman apprentice was allowed to shed that non-contact red jersey.

... that the UF baseball team will not return to the national championship series. Shocking, I know.

... that Billy Donovan is to UF basketball as Steve Spurrier is to UF football.

... that UF is a women's tennis school.

Forget the football-basketball debate. After not surrendering a single team point during the SEC Tournament, the Gators now have won five consecutive (15 overall) league titles in women's tennis to add to a 2003 national championship. With Alexis Gordon back after a yearlong break to give birth to her daughter (the best comeback story of the semester), the Gators are poised for another championship run.

... that Cornelius Ingram will be the Gators' breakout player in the fall. In the words of a fellow sports writer: "If I was C.I., I wouldn't own a shirt." The guy is a beast, and it's good to see that Meyer finally found a place for this freak of an athlete. Think Mike Williams. At 6-foot-4, 235 pounds, the tight end/receiver will present mismatch problems for defensive backs, while his speed will burn any linebacker, and God help any defensive end. He should have an NFL career in his future.

... that Ryan Lochte is the top athlete at UF. Earlier this month, the senior added three world records to his resume of consecutive NCAA Swimmer of the Year honors, seven NCAA and SEC titles, 24 All-America honors and five school records.

... that the Steve Irwin-Albert the Alligator ESPN commercial was cute the first 265,652 times I saw it.

... that the Orange and Blue game should receive the death penalty. With at least 10 starters watching from the sideline, this year's spring finale was about as captivatactly treated like fragile packages. “I hear the usual [trash talk]; ‘I’m going to bust you open,’ and, ‘You aren’t ready for this level,’” Johnson said. “They are telling you the truth, though.”

Of course, celebrity status also comes with the territory. And of the four, Tebow would be the expert on the topic. So does the clean-cut prodigy ever have to bust out his Sharpie for autographs during class?

“I guess, every now and then,” said Tebow through a sly grin.

On the turf, all four enrollees are scrounging for playing time.

Walker hopes his sprained ankle will heal in time for him to make a push in the backfield.

Hurt and Johnson — who are rooming together — each hope to start on an offensive line depleted by a departing senior class. Johnson started with a head start on paper, as he was commonly ranked a top-10 lineman by recruiting services. But it seems like Hurt’s penchant for maturity has helped nudge him ahead.

“It was a big decision, no doubt, but I always knew that Maurice could handle it on the football side,” said Maurice Hicks, Hurt’s coach at Baldwin. “Some kids need that summer to mature, but I knew Maurice could jump right in. It’s a situation that can cause problems, but not for him.”

Yet Hurt was not about to forfeit all of his high school privileges when he arrived on campus. So after a scrimmage three Saturdays ago, he bolted back home to make prom that evening. The traffic made him late. Most of his friends had no idea he was coming.

“I’m kind of supposed to be still in high school,” Hurt said. “I wasn’t about to miss my prom.”

So what about those early enrollees who can’t make prom?

“Do I feel bad? It wasn’t my decision,” Meyer said.

Memories lost are one thing. Gallons of perspired sweat are another. But academics usually pose a whole different problem — a hidden suffering away from daunting public eyes.

The winding road of a high school senior’s year is akin to garbage time in basketball — you know the game is well in hand, so why not take it easy till the buzzer? But early enrollees must transition from that limited workload to a demanding college curriculum. Still, players say they have help.

APP from page 19

ing as witnessing Gandhi and Ricky Williams square off in a knife fight. Interestingly, the highlight of the scrimmage came when kickers Chris Hetland and Eric Nappy faced off in the Circle of Life, a gladiatorial drill that pits teammates against one another in a wrestling match of sorts. Kick returns weren’t allowed. Even though Leak and Tebow wore red jerseys, coaches called quarterback draw plays almost as often as fourth-down conversion attempts from their own 40-yard line. The monsoon at halftime didn’t help either.

Of course, coaches and fans don’t want to see their playmakers injured, but what’s the point of the scrimmage if it resembles a game only in that there are a bunch of guys running around on the field?

... and lastly, that no matter how many sleep-deprived mornings I’ve awoken to, no matter how many e-mails including the term “dumb ass” in the subject line I’ve received, I’ll always miss neglecting the education I didn’t pay for.

“Of course, this is college, so this is much harder, but we have tutors, of course,” said offensive lineman Ronnie Wilson, who enrolled early in 2005. “They help us with everything — it’s hard to fail a class because you have so much help. They take care of you.”

You don’t always get a happy ending on and off the field. Remember former Gators quarterback Josh Portis?

Portis first committed to Utah — Meyer’s former team — in 2004, but followed Meyer to Gainesville. Yet the early enrollee expected playing time to accompany his dedication. When it didn’t, his mother, Patricia, publicly voiced her dissent. After no starts, six games played and a total of 11 attempted passes last season, Portis transferred to Maryland before last year’s Outback Bowl. But that could happen anywhere, regardless of when a prospect enrolls, which does little to answer the question: Do you or don’t you skip your eighth high school semester?

“It’s at the point where if you can square yourself away academically to do it, the pros outweigh the cons,” said Jamie Newberg, a Scout.com national recruiting analyst.

And if you’re a motivated student athlete?

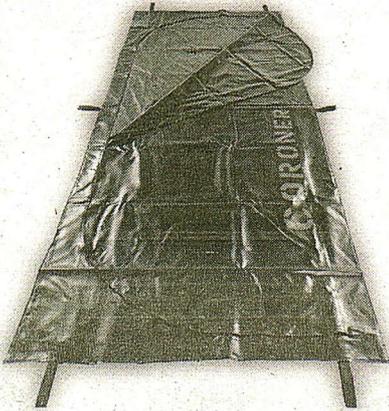

“I would advise enrolling early,” Wilson said.
