

UF adds fee option to provide budget relief

■ FEE LETS COLLEGES CHARGE FOR EQUIPMENT.

By LIA GANOSELLIS
 Alligator Writer
 eganosellis@alligator.org

Equipment-use fees that UF piloted this semester in four colleges will be made available across the university this fall as part of a larger effort to generate funds in light of major budget cuts.

The fee allows UF colleges and departments to charge students per credit hour for "significant equipment" in a course, which could include microscopes, musical instruments and video equipment, as long as the college shows

"I'm no longer going to sit around and wait for the state."

Bernie Machen
 UF president

records proving the equipment is used.

The specific amounts of the fees depend on the equipment covered. The charges will include costs for repair, replacement and insurance for class equipment and will only apply to undergraduate students.

Each college must fill out an application form before implementing a fee. College deans will have authority to lower proposed fees, and the Office of the Provost must approve each amount.

In a meeting with Alligator reporters on Thursday, UF President Bernie Machen said funds generated through fees would likely become an important resource for UF to get back in the black following an anticipated blow to its budget.

Dems' ads hostile in Pa.

By KATIE GALLAGHER

With the approach of today's Pennsylvania presidential primary — the first Democratic primary since March 11 — campaigning by both candidates has gotten aggressive.

Referring to a highly publicized comment recently made by her opponent, an advertisement endorsed by Sen. Hillary Clinton opens, "Barack Obama said that people in small towns 'cling to guns or religion...as a way to explain their frustrations....'"

The ad features men and women looking into the camera saying things like, "It just shows how out of touch Barack Obama is," and "The good people of Pennsylvania deserve a lot better than what Barack Obama said."

Clinton

Sen. Barack Obama released an ad calling Clinton's recent ads "eleventh-hour smears paid for by lobbyist money."

The Pennsylvania primary, which experts expect Clinton to win, has carried increasingly more weight for both candidates, said Michael Heaney, a UF political science assistant professor.

Students grieve on Internet

Facebook profiles become memorials

By RACHEL ARROYO
 Alligator Writer

Andrew Enriquez, a third-year history student, had 212 friends, pumped iron whenever he could and loved listening to Tupac — according to his Facebook profile.

When 20-year-old Enriquez died in a car accident in September 2007, many of those 212 friends turned to his abruptly abandoned profile for another glimpse at his warm smile.

The dead are memorialized through prayer cards, candlelight vigils, flower gardens and scholarship funds.

But today's youth are turning to more unconventional means of remembering those who have died.

They're memorializing their loved ones through Facebook.

Eight months later, Enriquez is still being tagged in pictures and receiving wall posts from friends.

Sentiments like "missing you," "thinking of you" and "can't believe it's been eight months, homie" serve as a gentle reminder that Enriquez was, and still is, loved by many.

On the Web Wayne Griffin, associate director of the UF Counseling Center and a specialist in loss and bereavement, said that Facebook is a great tool for not only remembering the dead but for helping those who are grieving to express their emotions in a healthy way.

"In the virtual world, we try to create worlds or existences that parallel our own but last longer," Griffin said.

Contacting trustees requires going through middleman

By DEBORAH SWERDLOW

Alligator Writer
dswordlow@alligator.org

At the beginning of the fall, all it took was two clicks from UF's home page to call up your favorite UF trustee and ask him or her your burning question. But not today.

UF's Board of Trustees, the university's highest governing body, used to provide phone numbers for each trustee — except for the Student Body president — on its Web site.

But since September 2007, questions have gone through Brian Beach, the board's liaison, and Beach has forwarded them to the trustees.

Beach said he took the phone numbers off the Web site because trustees were receiving disruptive phone calls at home in the middle of the night.

But only four out of the 12 phone numbers formerly listed were home phone numbers.

He said the sudden influx of calls might have been due to the Tasing of a UF student by University Police Department officers at a campus speech.

Beach said the system was also changed because he knows when the trustees are reachable, so he can direct questions to the trustees who are available and can provide the best answers.

The site currently lists one UF phone number and address, which connects to Beach's secretary for board activities, he said.

If someone wants to e-mail materials to the board, he said he offers his e-mail address and then forwards the message to the trustees.

He said he never screens the questions.

"I don't look at something and say, 'Oh, that's not worthy of trustee contact,'" he said. "That's never going to happen."

Although Beach and the trustees stand by the new system, three of Florida's public universities provide direct contact information for their trustees and six others list a group e-mail address.

Only one other Florida college, New College of Florida, does not provide any contact information on its board's Web site.

Beach said he didn't feel that listing the trustees' e-mail addresses was necessary, and he hasn't heard any complaints.

Dianna Morgan, the board's chairwoman, said she hasn't heard any concerns either, and she said she feels the board is still adequately available.

"I certainly feel like given the communication I've received in the last few weeks that there is ample access," Morgan said.

Between the impending budget cuts and the Students for a Democratic Society's hunger strike, she said she responded to about 20 letters and e-mails last week.

Morgan's home number was one of the four listed before the change, and she said she remembers two nights in particular when she received calls every hour until about 4 a.m.

She said calls to a trustee's business could be just as disruptive because they interrupt the trustees' jobs.

"We love our work at the university, but we do recognize that we all have other responsibilities in life," she said.

Cynthia O'Connell, another trustee, works as senior vice president of a public relations firm. O'Connell said she used to receive unexpected calls at her office about UF business, which made it difficult to balance her work duties.

She said the new system is more efficient because Beach can direct questions to her when she's available.

She still receives the same number of questions a week — anywhere from two to 10 depending on the time of year, she said.

"Anybody who's needed to talk to me has had no trouble finding me," she said. "I don't feel like we're isolated."

Facebook memorials help students stay connected to friends who have died

Flowers set out for a person are eventually going to wilt and die, but Internet profiles have longevity, he said.

Enriquez's older sister, Amanda Enriquez, comments on his page at least once a week, she said.

She writes simply to say "hello," to tell him her plans for the day or to wish him a "Happy Easter."

Before making a recent visit to his gravesite, she left a message that read, "going to go visit u now..i love you andy!"

She has yet to figure out her brother's account password, so for now his profile remains exactly how he left it, and she takes solace in reading other people's messages to her little brother.

"Seeing people write on it makes me feel better," said Enriquez's sister, a student at the University of Miami. "I know my mom got a Facebook because of it."

She said her mother, Sue Enriquez, opened the account so that she could read the affectionate messages regularly left by his friends on the popular social networking site.

When a young student dies, many friends and family members are not present but still want to feel connected, even if they can't make the memorial services, Griffin said.

Online communities, like Facebook and MySpace, allow them to be involved, even from a distance.

"It provides a way for them to express themselves as if they were there; a virtual reality," Griffin said.

But, in some cases, even the virtual reality is short-lived.

Facebook policy expects profiles of the dead to be turned into memorials, but is vague about how long profiles will be kept active.

"When we are notified that a user has died, we will generally, but are not obligated to, keep the user's account active under a special memorialized status for a period of time determined by us to allow other users to post and view comments," according to Facebook's Terms of Use.

Even so, Facebook administrators really have no way of knowing that a user has died unless someone notifies them, so these profiles may be overlooked for an indefinite amount of time. This is good for Nicole Martingano, a junior studying criminology, who uses these virtual memorials to stay connected.

When UF student Eric Gold died, Martingano lost both a therapist and a friend.

"One day you're working with that person, and the next day you see them on the front page of the Alligator," she said.

Gold died at Shands at UF in January 2008 after a long struggle with lymphoma cancer.

"One day you're working with that person, and the next day you see them on the front page of the Alligator."

Nicole Martingano
UF criminology junior

Though Gold, a second-year law student, had been in and out of hospitals his entire life, he never let his health problems get in the way, Martingano said.

The two met after Martingano was hit by a drunken driver in 2006. After coming out of a coma, she was left with severe brain damage and facial paralysis.

Gold was Martingano's speech therapist and spent countless hours teaching her how to speak and swallow again.

"He was somebody who saw people through," she said.

While nothing will bring Gold back, Martingano can recall fond memories with a click of the mouse.

He's still eating at The Swamp Restaurant with friends, posing in cap and gown at graduation and hugging his girlfriend.

Still images keep him alive in the minds of all those leaving comments on his page, including Martingano, who left one recently thanking Gold for the role he played in helping her recover from her accident.

"It was just me thinking about Eric," she said.

Griffin's dealings with those in mourning have taught him that many people find it physically hard to express their feelings following a tragedy. Facebook allows those who bottle their emotions to express them in a relatively private yet public manner, Griffin said. Two-way dialogue once took place strictly in person.

"Growing up, that kind of connection occurred in small towns at viewings," he said.

Now two-way dialogue can occur over the computer in the form of written communication, where healing can occur between friends and family members who are oceans apart. Sentiments that may have been hard for some to share in person can be expressed over the computer without a spoken word, Griffin said.

While personal profiles tend to contain messages addressed to the one who has passed away, group profiles provide a chance for family and friends to share their feelings by rallying behind the person being remembered.

Healing can be facilitated through sharing anecdotes and observations about loved ones, Griffin said.

Catherine Barclift, a graduate of Florida State University and a new law student at UF, was killed in November 2007 after she was hit by a car while jogging. That day, students created a group called "Im Praying for Catherine Barclift," and though she passed away the next day, the group still has 862 members.

Two other groups, "Petition for an Honorary J.D. (Juris Doctor) for Catherine Barclift" and "I'm running for Catherine," were also created in her honor.

Jillian Levy, a senior law student, was Barclift's ambassador at law school orientation and was immediately struck by her enthusiasm.

"My favorite thing about Catherine was how naturally magnetic she was," Levy said. "People were just drawn to her because she was so friendly, energetic and genuinely kind. Everyone loved being around her because she was just so happy all of the time."

When Barclift died, she was training for a marathon with some friends from law school.

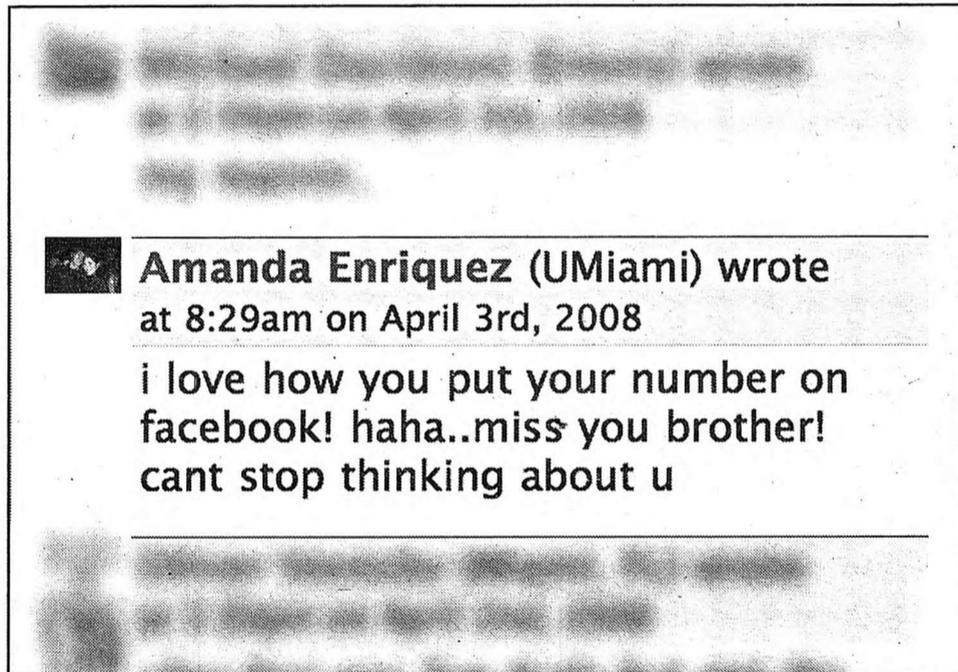

"I'm Running for Catherine" was a group created for those who planned on running in the race to honor her, Levy said. To Levy and many others, Facebook provided a way for family and friends to remember Barclift together.

"I think the most important thing about it was that it was a place to grieve with other people who knew her and understood the silly little stories and memories that we missed the most," Levy said.

In her most recent message on the "I'm Running for Catherine" page, Levy thanked those who participated in the run for Barclift, saying that Barclift would have loved the involvement.

While friends and family will grow old, Enriquez, Gold and Barclift will be forever young in the minds of those who remember them through their Facebook profiles.

"For me, sometimes I'll find myself just thinking about Catherine and will pull up her profile," Levy said. "Even if we're not all talking about it everyday, you can see on the groups or her profile that we still think about her a lot."

IFAS professor receives UF's highest faculty honor

By KATIE SANDERS

Alligator Writer
ksanders@alligator.org

At age 16, Lynn Bailey represented her home state of South Carolina in a nationwide 4-H competition for her research on nutrition and healthy dieting.

About 50 years later, Bailey, now a UF food science and human nutrition professor, is still reeling in awards for her studies on nutrition, vitamins and diets.

Bailey was named this year's UF Teacher Scholar of the Year, UF's highest award for faculty. To Bailey, the award is a lifetime achievement and a lesson in humility because she knows the caliber of those she was chosen over, she said.

Bailey said her 4-H experiences are what motivated her to become a college professor and make nutrition, specifically a vitamin called folate, which can prevent birth defects, the focus of her life's work.

Bailey has been teaching for 30 years at UF. She also collaborates with the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, Peking University Health Science Center and a research group at UF's Institute of Food and Agricultural Sciences to study nutrition in Northern China.

Consumption of folate is low in that area because of limited foods rich in folic acid, such as fruits and vegetables. Deficiency leads to increased numbers of children born with spina bifida, a disease that causes paralysis and brain damage.

Bailey said her favorite part of her job is incorporating her real-life research in China to support her classroom lessons at UF, she said.

"I'm a better teacher because of my research," she said.

Bailey was joined by her husband, Gary Rodrick, also a professor in the department, and her 86-year-old mother from South Carolina at a Thursday awards ceremony at Emerson Alumni Hall.

In addition to receiving a gold medallion framed in a glass case and a plaque describing her honor, Bailey also received $5,000 that she hasn't decided how to spend.

"I haven't gotten beyond just enjoying the moment," she said. "IFAS is very proud of this award."

Jimmy Cheek, senior vice president of IFAS, said in a telephone interview that he has known Bailey for more than 30 years.

"It couldn't have happened to a more competent faculty member and a nicer person," Cheek said.

Green Goals

UF has come a long way
but still has work to do

In the spirit of Earth Day, we think it's necessary to applaud UF's ongoing campus sustainability efforts and the progress that has been made to reduce the university's large environmental impact.

Since 2001, UF has adopted Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design (LEED) criteria for design and construction for all major new construction and renovation projects on campus.

Last year, the UF's Physical Plant Division pledged a commitment to green cleaning practices throughout the 900-plus buildings maintained by the department. That included "greener" training programs for custodial supervisors and staff and reducing the amount of harmful compounds used in cleaning.

The Office of Sustainability has also worked with dining services to develop a plan for implementing sustainability into the food we eat on campus, including regional sourcing of food, green catering, energy conservation and transportation impacts. Gator Dining is also in the process of switching over all of its disposable service items to biodegradable and recycled options.

While all these big changes are a great way for one of the largest campuses in the nation to foster a green image, it's important to us that the little things are not overlooked.

Though the larger initiatives are more visible and certainly benefit the sustainability goal, we all know that the little things add up, too.

For example, while the UF Sustainable Purchasing Directive suggests that offices purchase recycled paper and durable and reusable goods, they are as of now not required to do so. Environmentally preferable products are to be purchased whenever practical. With the hundreds of printers across campus and thousands of pages printed each day, we think it's important that a higher priority is placed on reducing the amount of wasted paper and other office supplies. Purchasing recycled products should be the norm.

That being said, we also think it would be an environmentally sound practice if professors began to encourage their students to hand in papers and projects printed on both sides of the page. This would essentially cut the amount of paper students use in half and is a relatively easy and small change that could have a potentially large impact if implemented across campus. To take it a step further, professors could take the same approach when printing tests and syllabuses and reduce the amount of waste even more.

Another point of wastefulness is campus maintenance. Any student would be hard-pressed to find a day on campus when someone is not utilizing a leaf blower to keep the UF grounds aesthetically pleasing. This is a concentrated waste of energy and resources. Random trees and bricked landscape areas also seem to appear overnight. We certainly enjoy having a pretty place to walk to class that is filled with lush trees and plants, but we don't understand why so much energy is expended on maintaining the green vegetation and lawns. The vast expanse of St. Augustine grass is not sustainable — it requires regular watering in the heat, doesn't produce seed and must be treated with herbicides and pesticides. It would make more sense to seed grass or maybe just make peace with the stubborn dandelions.

Little changes, such as presenting an information booklet to incoming freshmen about living green on campus, increasing the number of recycling bins, not running the escalators at Library West all night and keeping every building on campus at a steady 75 degrees could go a long way to keep with the university's green efforts and encourage student participation all year round.

After students accepted the small equipment-use fee, the administration quickly took the next logical cost-cutting step:

Compassion needed to overcome past

Nature takes wood in one of two ways: either fire burns it or water rots it away. If that wood forms the walls of a building, the way it happens can make all the difference in the world.

So it is with the Cotton Club here in Gainesville. Don't feel bad if you've never heard of it — neither had I until recently. The Cotton Club was the name of an old one-room hall in the 1950s that now sits falling apart on Southeast Seventh Avenue.

Originally built at Camp Blanding in Starke as a military post warehouse, it was sold, taken apart and moved board-for-board to Gainesville after the war in 1946.

Five years later, the room that once housed mail was filled with jazz music. The Cotton Club joined what came to be called the Chitlin' Circuit, a group of venues black musicians could play at as racist segregation raged. It hosted greats like James Brown, B.B. King and Brook Benton. It was very successful, but the city refused to renew its license — too many impressionable white UF students were going there.

By 1953, the music had stopped.

Well, 55 years later, a movement was created to restore the Cotton Club to the way it looked in its heyday. But if you think the entire black community in the neighborhood around it is a fan of the idea, think again.

A friend of mine who volunteers with the Powell Center for Sustainability had a conversation with an African American local during his site survey. With great respect, he let my friend know that he and most of the black community he knew would prefer to see the building burned down.

To avoid misinterpretation, he was not speaking literally. He just meant that he didn't want to preserve a painful reminder from a time when poor black citizens' deaths did not even warrant acknowledgement in The Gainesville Sun's obituaries.

I disagree with him, but can I blame him? Of course

This is where painful history really does toy with us. There is no universal way to grieve. One girl needs to destroy every memento from a relationship after a devastating break up. Another girl can listen to 'their song' on the mix CD the ex-boyfriend made for her without it causing any pain at all. I have yet to detect any common rhyme or reason in coping with sorrow, and from what I can tell, neither have psychologists.

I should point out that the random pedestrian my friend spoke to was ultimately speaking for himself — he may have been misrepresenting the sentiment of the majority of the neighborhood. Even if that were the case though, I still can't deem his feelings illegitimate. The problem is still there.

So what should be done with the Cotton Club? Honestly, I don't think there is a "should" there. The question is what will we do?

Pain, like wood, always goes away with some combination of fire and water: anger and tears. There is no moral dimension there.

If the hall where James Brown clutched his heart and then motioned as if dealing it out like poker cards is made into a museum, for some it will be an ugly reminder of a dark past made permanent. If the building is demolished, many will feel an important reminder of a rich history will be lost, and they will be upset.

Whatever the scenario, each side needs to extend compassion to the other. This is the case where sympathy must eclipse misunderstanding. As Mr. Brown bellowed melodically, "Please, please, please!"

Column on pope was ignorant

I was disappointed, but not surprised, by Vincent Massaro's column Monday about the pope's U.S. visit. It confirmed what many people know but do not want to admit: Anti-Catholic speech is one of the remaining acceptable forms of discrimination in America today.

The title would have readers believe that Mr. Massaro has reasonable concern over the exorbitant reception of Pope Benedict XVI in our country.

However, if you read his column, you would have been treated to an incoherent and ignorant diatribe against not only the pope but the Roman Catholic Church and all Catholics of good faith. Not only was his indictment of the pope based mainly on the actions of others (CNN commentators, spectators, etc.), but Massaro also tastelessly reduced the Catholic liturgy to a "shindig" or a "boring" sporting event.

If there is any redeeming value to be found in Monday's column, it is at the end, when he suggests that the Church should do more to help the poor. However, this attempt at compassion can hardly be taken seriously amidst such a shameless display of unwarranted disdain, disrespect, and, quite frankly, bigotry.

Mark LaBelle

Other issues surround pope visit

Despite all of the different views that could have been discussed regarding the pope's visit, Mr. Massaro chose to babble aimlessly instead. There were so many issues deserving attention, and yet all Mr. Massaro could seem to focus on was the pope's bling.

I couldn't care less about the pope as a religious or political figure. However, the space Mr. Massaro is afforded could have been put to valuable use for the discussion of a myriad of philosophical issues surrounding the pope's visit.

For example: What association, if any, is appropriate for a sitting president to have with a religious leader? Should the pope's own beliefs implore him to hock his bling to feed a few hungry mouths? What is the pope's responsibility to molestation victims of American priests?

Surely any of these questions would have been a more effective use of column inches than the inane ramblings that I can only assume were a half-hearted attempt at humor. I've come to expect more from such a distinguished paper.

Unrealistic cultural expectations of beauty unfair to women

You've seen them at the Plaza of the Americas: Student Government-sponsored billboards, in an effort to boost self-esteem, encouraging women to love their bodies, claiming that "diets don't work" and assuring everyone that confident women who don't worry about looking like supermodels are sexier than those who do.

Self-esteem and confidence are wonderful to have, but they don't tell the whole story. The truth is, regardless of how we feel about ourselves, women are judged for our appearances, and we face material and social consequences if we don't conform to the culturally accepted standard of beauty.

A 2004 study by the Bureau of Labor Statistics confirmed this: Overweight and obese white women get paid less than their thinner counterparts, while white men don't face the same discrimination. No amount of self-confidence in the world will make up for getting paid less for doing the same work.

For women, maintaining our appearance to fit into a standard of beauty is like another job. It requires time spent on hair care, putting on makeup and shopping for and picking out the right clothes — and sometimes, these beauty rituals can be downright painful (bikini waxes, anyone?).

Beauty standards are often based on classist and racist ideas; in other times, heavier women were preferred because it indicated that one had access to adequate food.

Now, thin and tan are the standards because they indicate access to money and time for expensive health foods and gym memberships. If you're thin,

Campus NOW Speaking Out

however, it doesn't end there. Women still face pressure to have a full bust and "curves." Regardless of what kind of bodies we have, women still face pressure to conform to an impossible standard few can achieve without surgery or airbrushing. The pursuit of beauty is endless for women; cosmetics is a multi-million dollar industry, and these corporations know that playing to an audience of women who face discrimination based on their looks will help them move products.

Sexism in our society helps these industries grow into what they are today.

The problem with self-esteem campaigns is that they treat women's insecurities about their looks as individual problems, when in reality it's a collective problem oppressing women as a whole.

An individual woman can choose not to wear makeup or worry about her weight and have all the self-confidence in the world, but self-confidence won't stop her from facing discrimination in the workplace or from her family.

There's nothing wrong with working out and eating healthily or enjoying shopping and wearing makeup.

What is wrong is the expectation that women do these things, and that we face material and social consequences if we don't conform.

To explore these issues further, join UF Campus NOW tonight at 8 p.m. at the Civic Media Center for a screening of the film Killing Us Softly 3 and a discussion of beauty standards afterward.

Two Worlds Together

Local boy learning to cope with autism in world around him

Even though he sees things differently, Tyler Johnson, 9, is not lost in his own world. Diagnosed with high-functioning autism, Tyler loves to socialize with others and excels in his areas of interest. A main component of autism is obsessions or preoccupations with particular objects. Tyler is fascinated with shopping carts and spends a lot of time at the supermarket selecting the "perfect cart."

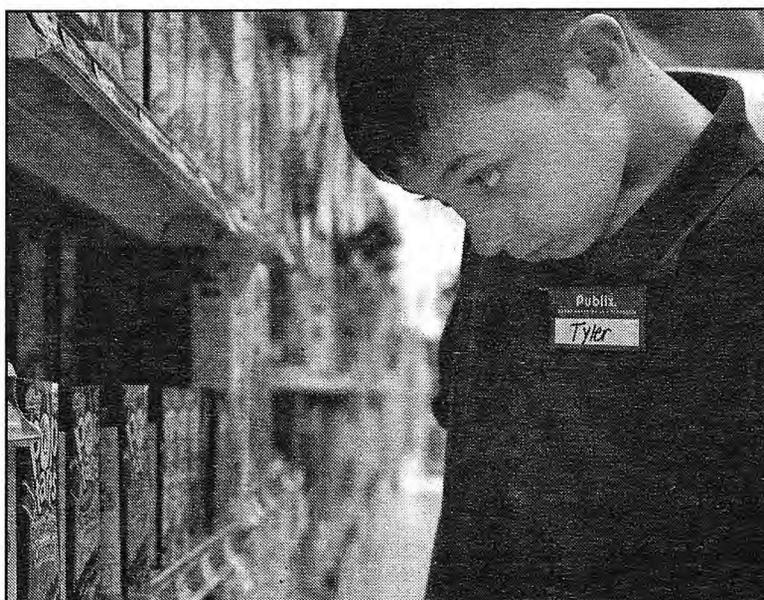

He is very smart and remembers details that many others forget. He loves cars and enjoys drawing. He has no problem understanding math and science, but because of his autism, language processing skills are weaker and social interactions are a challenge.

Tyler gets along well with his family and makes friends pretty easily. He is home-schooled by his mother at their home in Southwest Gainesville and attends several types of therapy.

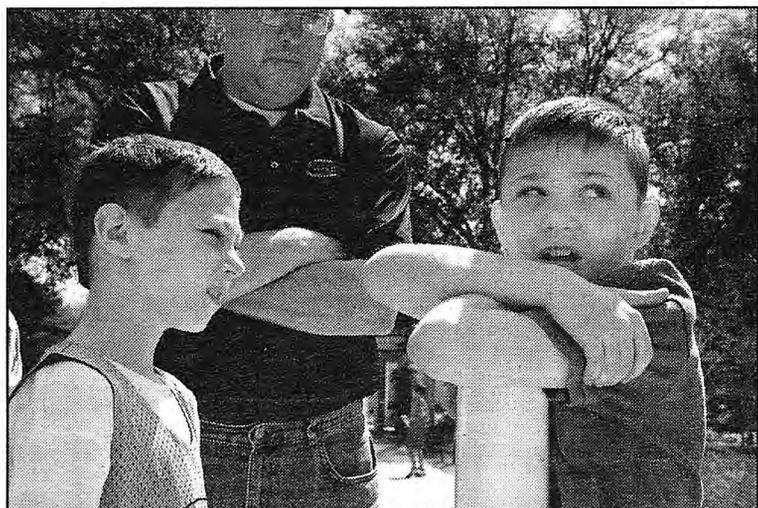

Although every day is a struggle, Tyler's mother says he's making improvements interacting with the world around him.

BY MARIANNE LIJEWSKI

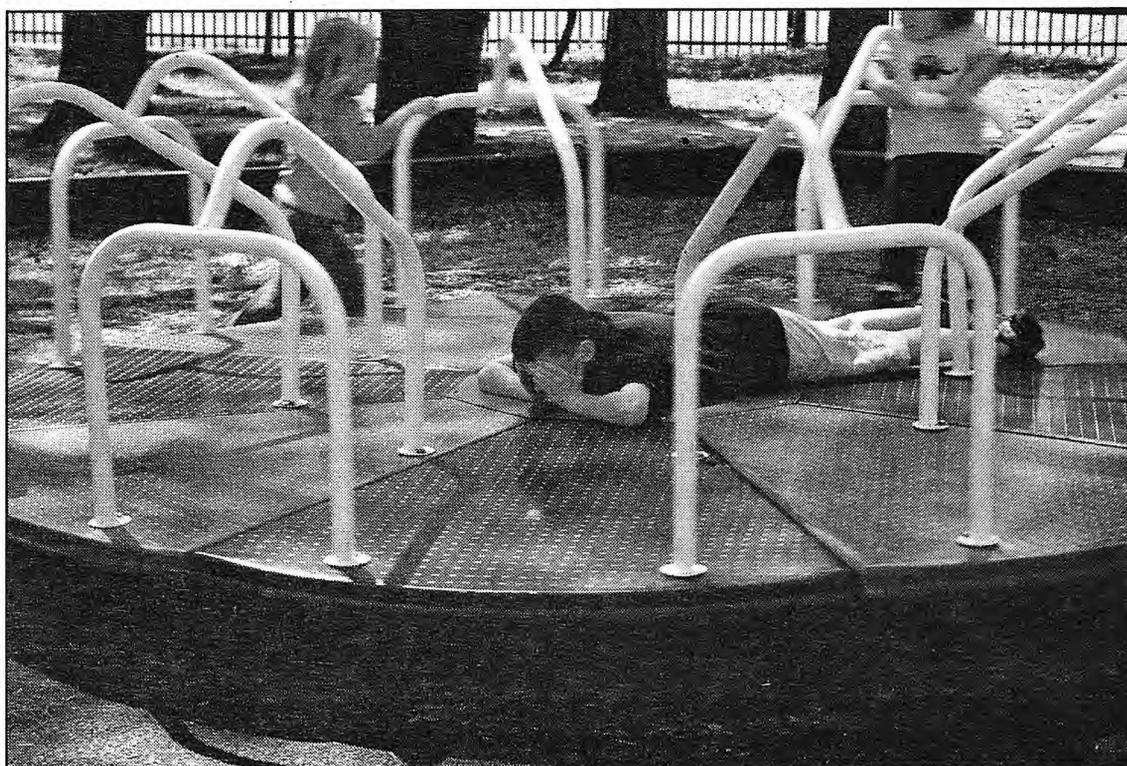

TOP: While his grandmother and twin brother, Corey, play basketball behind him, Tyler draws on the driveway. Even though Tyler is a social child, there are times he prefers to do his own activities.

LEFT: While shopping at Publix, Tyler searches for the perfect Pop-Tarts, which is one of his favorite breakfast foods. He got the nametag from his sister, Linzy, who is an employee there.

TOP: Fascinated by shopping carts, Tyler peeks through one at Publix to decide if it is a keeper.

ABOVE: Tyler's brother, Corey (left), asks Tyler why he didn't attend Corey's basketball game. The loud noises from the gym, especially the whistles, irritate Tyler and keep him from going inside.

Even though Tyler likes socializing with other children, he is troubled by the speed of the playground carousel at Littlewood Elementary School. When he is able to control the speed of the carousel, he feels at ease.

CITY COMMISSION

City moves forward with one-stop center

City commissioners voted 5-2 at a special meeting Monday night to change the land-use designation for the location of a proposed one-stop homeless center at 3335 N Main Terrace.

At the same meeting, they voted to wait four to six months before beginning to lease the building that would serve as the center's facility.

The proposed site has met controversy as residents of nearby communities have opposed the location.

"It just doesn't do us justice as a community to continue this failure to act," Mayor Pegeen Hanrahan said at the meeting.

The site, which was selected in March 2007, will offer services including meals, counseling, showers and laundry facilities. Commissioners Rick Bryant and Ed Braddy opposed the motion.

"I can't think of any location that doesn't work as much as this one," Bryant said.

"It just doesn't do us justice as a community to continue this failure to act."

Pegeen Hanrahan

Commissioners have looked into alternative sites for the center. They said Monday that one of the options, located on Northwest 53rd Avenue, was no longer available.

Proposed campus memorial would honor local vets

MEMORIAL WOULD HONOR POST-WORLD WAR II VETERANS.

By JOEL MORA

Alligator Contributing Writer

As the United States enters the sixth year of the war in Iraq, a UF organization wants to install a memorial for local veterans who have served the country in the past 63 years.

The Collegiate Veterans Society wants to place a memorial in the Reitz Union Amphitheater recognizing all UF and Gainesville veterans but will focus on post-World War II veterans, said Daniel Wojcik, the organization's president.

Wojcik said modern veterans aren't recognized on campus as the only two veterans memorials on campus — Ben Hill Griffin Stadium and Century Tower — are dedicated to those who served in World War I and World War II.

"Our goal is not to make any political statement," he said. "We just want to recognize the sacrifice and work that University of Florida Gators have made overseas."

The organization still needs to present the memorial plans to various university committees to have it approved.

Eddie Daniels, the Reitz Union's executive director, said a lot of questions about the project still need to be answered.

"A lot of things need to be worked out," Daniels said. "How do you identify persons that will be recognized? There are a number of logistical questions that need to be answered."

Because this project is unique, there is no certain path to its approval, he said.

A campus master-plan committee has to look at the plans, and a number of other officials must review the project, including the vice president of student affairs, before it is approved, he said.

Wojcik said the memorial plans include five pillars, two flagpoles and a floating fountain in the pond.

The flags and pillars would be installed in front of the rail that surrounds the pond, and a floating fountain would shoot out a plume of water and have orange-and-blue lights.

Billy Brame, president of Brame Architects, has decided to do the project proposal for the memorial for free.

For Brame, the memorial will not only be dedicated to his service in the Navy from 1969 to 1975 but also to the service of his stepson, Jeffrey M. Wershow, who was killed in Baghdad in July 2003.

"I think the memorial fountain will help people understand the sacrifices veterans make, and it will be a physical manifestation of that," Brame said.

The organization estimated the cost of the memorial will be between $60,000 and $80,000, but that isn't definite because it is not sure if it will receive more donations, he said.

Once the project proposal is completed, the organization will go before the UF Student Senate and request funds to help pay for the project.

"We want to increase the beauty and usability of that area on campus and hope to leave it nicer than we found it," he said.

Unclear how much new fee would raise

"It's something we're going to see more of," Machen said. "I'm no longer going to sit around and wait for the state."

Machen

Machen said he predicts UF will have to cut about $50 million from its budget next year. The exact amount will be released at the end of the state Legislature's spring session.

UF has already begun to enact similar student charges not covered by tuition.

UF implemented a transcript fee this semester, charging $6 per transcript for current students and $12 for students who are no longer registered at UF. Machen said that fee should generate up to $1 million every year.

Because the specific amounts of equipment fees depend on each college's proposals, it is not yet known how much money they will bring in.

Recent poll predicts Clinton win in Pennsylvania

A poll conducted Monday by Quinnipiac University found Clinton leading Obama 51 percent to 44 percent with a three-point margin of error.

For Obama, Heaney said, a loss to Clinton could undermine the lead he has established so far.

For Clinton, a win is necessary to maintain a reasonable hope of winning the Democratic nomination.

In the face of necessity, both of the candidates have turned to more negative campaigning, Heaney said.

While the ads seldom convince voters to favor candidates, he said, they can be successful in convincing them to second guess an on-the-fence decision.

The negative ads can also be attributed to the candidates' similar political stances, said Daniel Smith, a UF political science associate professor. These have led them to create ads that attack each other based on personal rather than policy issues.

Candidates have also taken advantage of each other's recent blunders, Smith said.

For example, while Clinton took advantage of Obama's comment about citizens of small towns, Obama capitalized on Clinton's unfounded statement that snipers attacked her when she was in Bosnia in the 1990s.

"It's not personal attacks. It's records on what they have said."

Zachary Moller
UF College Democrats president

"Both have made the most out of those gaffes," Smith said. "It's easy pickings."

While in some sense, he said, Republicans should be pleased to watch the Democratic candidates criticize each other, Democrats might ultimately be doing each other a favor.

By the time a Democratic candidate is selected, presumptive Republican nominee Sen. John McCain will seem like he is bringing up old issues if he attacks his opponent for shortcomings that have already been exposed.

Zachary Moller, president of UF's College Democrats, said he didn't find the ads offensive enough to turn him off to either candidate.

"It's not personal attacks. It's records on what they have said," Moller said. "This is a campaign. Stuff like this is going to happen in the fall."

But he did say he'd prefer it if the Democratic candidates would attack McCain instead of each other.

"I think that would be more productive, but I'm not running their campaigns," he said.

Though some have said the attack ads could drive Democratic supporters to vote for McCain, Smith said he didn't think it would happen.

"Even if they're not happy about it, they're less happy about the last eight years under George Bush," he said.

ADVERTISING SALES REP

Greed is good. We're a Gainesville-area newspaper looking for an advertising sales rep who loves to make money. This person needs to be able to impress a client and speak eloquently. We need an ad representative who can not only walk into a business and show off the paper and its Website but also write detailed, professional letters to clients. We need somebody who can attend Chamber of Commerce meetings and have no problems starting conversations with complete strangers. Your reward for having this sort of talent will be a great paycheck. We pay a base salary plus a very generous percentage of whatever you sell. You will not be disappointed. We don't care if you're just graduating from college or have decades of experience. We're looking for somebody who can dazzle us and our clients. Please write us a great cover letter and tell us why we should consider you. If we like what we see, we'll contact you and answer your questions. Send your cover letter, resume and any other supporting material to: Ad Rep Position P O Box 14257, Gainesville, FL 32604 4-23-58-14

And finally, Nick Zaccardi, you have been the glue that has held the sports department together. Nobody works harder than Nick, and nobody has worked more unselfishly to help make the sports section something to be proud of. There is no doubt in my mind that he is the best college sportswriter in the country. Please make sure you check out his farewell column in Wednesday's paper.

But most importantly, I would like to thank the readers. There isn't much glory in this job. You'd be surprised how many times I have watched someone read my column in the paper with my picture right next to it and not even realize it was me.

But what was most important to me was that a story I wrote may have answered someone's questions, made someone chuckle, or best of all, made someone think.

I hope that at some point during the last few years I have been able to make your afternoon bus ride or Man's Food lecture just a little bit more enjoyable.

2008 BEIJING SUMMER GAMES

Lochte hopes Gainesville training yields Olympic glory

By NICK ZACCARDI
Alligator Staff Writer
nzaccardi@alligator.org

Bad luck first struck Ryan Lochte on June 30, 1985.

That was the day Michael Phelps was born.

Lochte was a month shy of his first birthday in New York when Phelps was delivered in Baltimore, Md.

It's not known how long it took Phelps to crawl or walk, but he quickly caught Lochte, passed him and left him in his wake on the international swimming scene.

At any other time in the history of the sport, Lochte would be looked at as the biggest fish.

But not now, not when Phelps is busy breaking records that Lochte would have held, wearing medals Lochte could have owned and appearing on magazine covers Lochte should have graced.

Tough luck.

Hoping to change his fortune, Lochte has returned to UF to train with the Gators swimming team and its coach, Gregg Troy, for the Beijing Olympics.

In Lochte's typically laid-back, mellowed-out manner, he described what it's like to be at school, but not in school.

"If I want to take a nap, I can take a nap," said Lochte, who is an internship away from graduating with a degree in sports management.

Phelps is more of the competitive sort. When Ian Crocker handed Phelps his only loss at the 2003 World Championships, Phelps reportedly pinned a photo of Crocker in his room as motivation and beat Crocker a year later in the Olympics.

"They're the No. 1 and No. 2 best swimmers in the world in a multitude of events."

Steve Lochte

Ryan Lochte's father

Phelps is ranked among the top three swimmers in the world in six of the 13 individual Olympic events.

He won a record eight medals at the 2004 Athens Olympics.

Lochte, 23, is starting to make waves, too.

He joined Phelps in Athens and flew back to Gainesville with a substantially lighter medal haul — one gold, one silver — but still a great reward for his first Olympic experience.

Since then, he has closed in on his good friend Phelps and now has him in his sights heading into the Beijing Olympics, which begin on Aug. 8.

Lochte is the only swimmer in the world who can hang with Phelps in the individual medley events, the best tests of swimming because they include all four strokes: butterfly, backstroke, breaststroke and freestyle.

"Sure, they're rivals," said Lochte's father and longtime coach, Steve. "They're the No. 1 and No. 2 best swimmers in the world in a multitude of events. It's healthy competition. Bottom line is Ryan would love to continue to excel and become better."

It's not like Lochte has Phelps' mug shot fitted into the side of his bathroom mirror.

But the thoughts must be there, maybe even in his dreams.

I've got to swim faster than Michael.

I've got to be better than Michael.

I've got to beat Michael.

Casey Brooke Lawson / Alligator

Former UF swimmer Ryan Lochte comes up for air while he swims the breaststroke during one of his practice sessions with the UF swimming team as part of his preparation for the 2008 Olympics. Lochte returned to Gainesville to train with coach Gregg Troy and practices with the UF swimming team daily.

Columnist recalls past successes, failures along storied UF journey

I've dreaded writing this column for a while now.

No, not just because I'm incredibly lazy, but because saying goodbye is something that has always been difficult for me.

My Alligator career did not have the storybook ending I envisioned when I ventured into the paper's open house more than three years ago without clips, experience or a clue of what I was getting myself into.

In fact, it appears that my experiment with sportswriting may be coming to an end. I don't question that I have the ability to do this for a living, but I do question whether I have the passion for this job to do it for the rest of my life.

But working for the Alligator has been something I will always remember and always treasure.

I've accomplished quite a bit over the past several years.

I've filled the role of reporter, columnist, editor, assistant editor and online editor for the sports department and covered everything from sports clubs to volleyball and baseball to football and men's basketball.

I've traveled to sporting events all across the southeast and covered the BCS National Championship Game in Arizona.

I've had articles published in newspapers and Web sites across the country, and I even got the chance to be interviewed on radio stations throughout the nation.

And I've somehow managed to piss off a lot of people along the way. I'll never forget the massive amount of hate mail I've received. I've been called just about every name you can imagine, and some of them

Bryan Jones
Bryan Out Loud
bjones@alligator.org

aren't even true.

I have also been fortunate enough to cover a national championship football team from spring practice all the way through the trophy presentation, and I covered bits and pieces of a national championship basketball team. Getting a chance to document something like that is a sportswriter's dream, and I am thankful I got that opportunity.

I'll try to avoid turning this into something that resembles a lame Oscar speech, but there are some people I have to thank for helping me along the way.

A big Bryan Out Loud thanks to Andrew

Abramson for giving me a chance when nobody else would and for believing in me and doing everything in his power to help me succeed.

I'd also like to thank Louis Anastasis for giving me an opportunity to work alongside him during a hectic 2006 fall semester and showing me the ropes. You've been a good friend to me even if I don't agree with anything you say.

Jenna Marina and Brian Steele, thanks for always being people I could rely on when I needed help. I regret having had so many messes for you guys to clean up, but I'll never forget how unselfish you have been.

Watch out for Mike McCall someday. He is a rock star. 'Nuff said.

Lochte, Phelps will face off in June's long-anticipated Olympic trials

Then BEEEEEEPPPP!!!
The alarm blares at 5 in the morning.
Beating Phelps means Lochte must be up before the sun.
As he rises, Lochte is quickly reminded of what he must improve upon from his experience at the 2004 Olympics.

"Don't eat McDonald's every day for seven straight days," said Lochte, who arrived in Athens at 181 pounds and left at 194 thanks to frequent trips to the fast-food chain in the athletes' village.

So he rips open a granola bar, grabs some fruit, guzzles some orange juice and jets off to practice from 6 to 8:30 with younger swimmers who see Lochte as a role model.

"You're able to put a face on the goal, to see what good swimming is," said UF sophomore Clark Burckle, who lives with Ryan in an off-campus house. "I think he makes everybody step it up more because they all see what he's achieved and they want to do that, too, so it just makes the team better as a whole."

Lochte dries himself off, drinks a shake and lifts weights for another 90 minutes.

After a long morning's work, he drives his 2007 Chevrolet Tahoe back home, looking to see the one who loves him no matter what.

His Doberman pinscher, Carter, waits for breakfast while Lochte feeds himself eggs, pancakes or waffles before taking a nap.

Practice starts again at 1 p.m.

All this for the Olympics?

Phelps

"It's a great honor to swim for my country, but I don't really think about (Beijing)," said Lochte, who in his free time draws abstracts, like rain drops falling up from the ground into the sky. "I treat every swim meet the same as every dual meet (in college). I've been doing it for so long."

Lochte has less than four months to get into Olympic shape.

He struggled mightily in his first big meet of 2008, the Missouri Grand Prix in February, sliding to sixth in two backstroke events — including one he holds the world record in — and finishing out of the top 10 in four other races.

By contrast, Phelps won four of his seven events.

But Lochte came back strong at the short-course world championships two weeks ago.

He set four world records and won the 100- and 200-meter individual medleys without Phelps in the field.

Lochte and Phelps will go head to head again in June at the Olympic trials in the most anticipated non-Olympic or non-World Championship meet in recent history.

"It's every bit as challenging to make the U.S. team as it is to get a medal at the Olympics," Troy said. "Everyone who takes it for granted is making a mistake."

Lochte will text message Phelps from time to time, but swimming won't come up.

Instead, they banter about their favorite rappers.

Lochte favors Lil' Wayne.

"It's tight. That's about all that is said between us," Lochte said.

Like Phelps, Lochte lets his results and his endorsements do more talking for him.

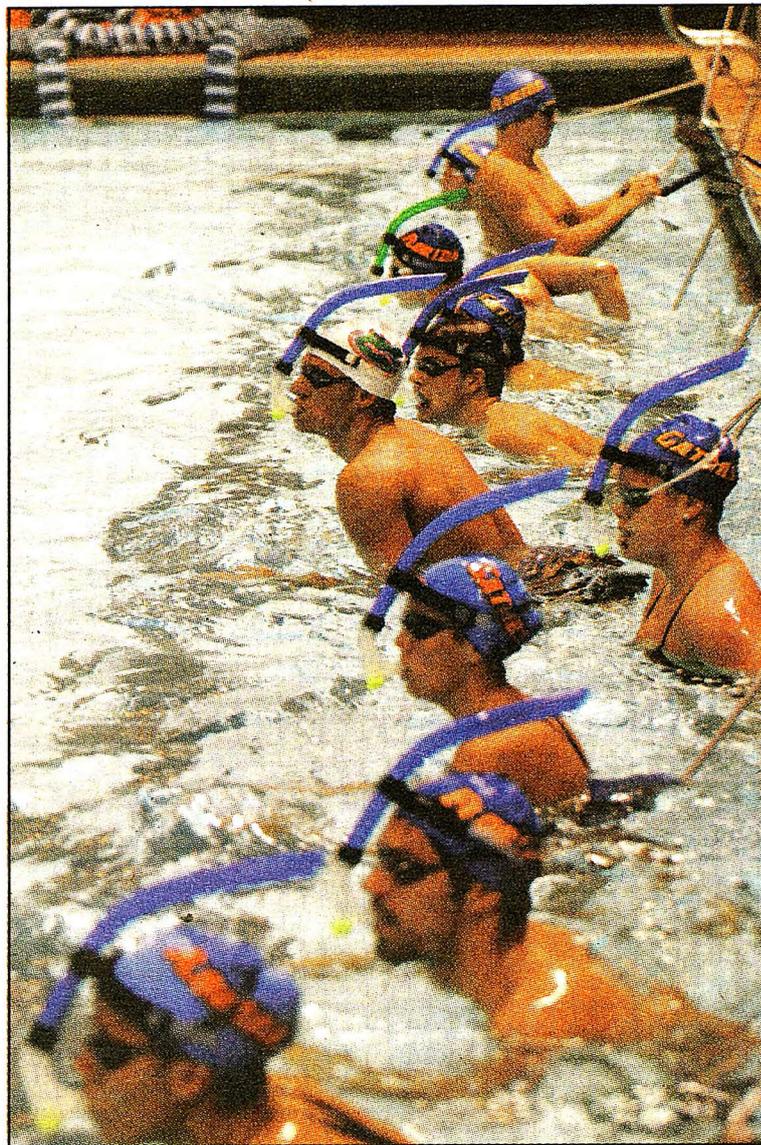

Lochte made sure he would be remembered upon winning the 200-meter individual medley at the 2007 World Championships.

After receiving his gold medal and standing for the national anthem, Lochte smiled and revealed a sparkling silver, diamond-encrusted grill, a mold that fits over teeth, after being dared by his roommate, fellow swimmer Cullen Jones.

"It got to the point where I was like, 'If I get a medal at this point, I'll wear them on the podium.' They were like, 'No you won't. No you won't,'" Lochte said. "Everyone was in shock that I did that."

That included Troy.

"I wasn't wild about the idea," he admitted, "but it was done tastefully."

Casey Brooke Lawson / Alligator

Lochte, wearing a white swimming cap, and his former UF teammates prepare to begin a morning strength drill in the O'Connell Center pool. Lochte hopes to compete in this summer's Olympics.

Speedo pays the bills for Lochte, who swims in the company's sleek LZR Racer suit.

Lochte also recently did a "Got Milk?" ad and flew to New York for a "Today" Show appearance where Matt Lauer mispronounced his last name.

All the attention is partially due to his perceived rivalry with Phelps.

But for Lochte (pronounced Lock-tee), it's much more than that.

"Even if I do beat him, I guess I still won't be satisfied with swimming," said Lochte, who already has plans for the 2012 Olympics in London. "I set my goals that way. I won't be satisfied until I stop making goals."

Gators in the Olympics

The following are the members of the UF swimming team who will represent their countries in the 2008 Summer Olympics in Beijing. Team U.S.A. doesn't hold its trials until late June.

 J.B. Walsh, senior, Philippines	 Shaune Fraser, sophomore, The Cayman Islands Brett Fraser, freshman, The Cayman Islands
 Omar Pinzon, sophomore, Colombia	 Gemma Spofforth, sophomore, Great Britain *first UF female in any sport to qualify for the Olympics.

Raptors stick with changes, expect different outcome

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
The Toronto Raptors announced Tuesday that they will stick with their roster changes for the remainder of the season, despite the fact that the team is currently in last place in the Eastern Conference.

The Raptors' decision to keep the roster intact is a surprise, given that the team has lost 17 of its last 18 games. The team's record is 11-25, and it is currently 10 games out of first place in the Eastern Conference.

Freshman struggles in SEC play

■ UF HOSTS JACKSONVILLE IN A DOUBLEHEADER TODAY.

It took a little bit longer than expected, but the preseason prediction made by UF coach Tim Walton has finally come true.

"She's going to struggle," he said of the expectations surrounding freshman pitcher Stephanie Brombacher. "She's going to get hit.

"She's going to give up some home runs."

Through the non-conference schedule, and at times in conference play, it looked as though he might be wrong about the freshman sensation.

It seemed as if she could be dominant without paying any dues.

Brombacher carried an ERA of close to 1, along with an undefeated record, into the rough Southeastern Conference slate.

As No. 3 UF (51-2, 21-1 SEC) prepares to host Jacksonville (21-37, 5-17 Atlantic Sun) in a doubleheader Tuesday, her undefeated record is still intact (16-0), but the freshman has looked more hittable than ever lately.

In eight starts and nine appearances in the SEC, Brombacher has posted a 2.10 ERA and allowed opponents to bat .239 against her while throwing just two complete games.

For almost any other program, those numbers would be enough.

But for a team about to make a championship push, it needs the No. 2 starter to stay in the circle for as long as possible.

"I've never really had any arm problems, knock on wood. I feel strong right now."

Stacey Nelson
UF junior pitcher

Junior Stacey Nelson (33-2, 0.71 ERA) has been better than advertised in her junior campaign, but there's one number that should cause coaches and fans alike some concern.

In the last two years as the ace of the staff, Nelson has pitched 545 innings.

After last weekend's series with Kentucky, Walton said he wants to rest Nelson when he can but has to go to her when he feels the game is on the line.

"I'm not going to worry unless she gives me a reason to worry," Walton said.

Recently he has used his No. 1 hurler extensively, starting her in two of the three games in a series and bringing her in to close the third.

"I've never really had any arm problems, knock on wood," Nelson said. "I feel strong right now."

If UF is going to capture an SEC title and make a first-ever College World Series appearance, Nelson is going to need Brombacher to help her shoulder the load.

"She's continued to make good strides for us and provide a good amount of inning lift," Walton said in a press conference Monday.

Saturday's performance against the Wildcats was the worst of Brombacher's young career.

Predictably, Nelson came in and saved the win when it looked like the game might get away from the Gators, the same way she has all season.

As UF turns the final corner and makes its stretch run, Brombacher will have the opportunity to return the favor.

The team will count on her to save Nelson's arm and, ultimately, the dream of becoming the first-ever SEC team to win a national championship.
