

Two-month road project begins Monday

PROJECT WILL SLOW ROAD TRAFFIC.

By CHANTELLE MARCELLE
Alligator Contributing Writer

Driving down Archer or Newberry roads will take about 15 to 20 minutes longer thanks to construction beginning next week, said Gina Busscher, Florida Department of Transportation spokeswoman.

A two-month resurfacing project alternating between Archer Road, east of 34th Street, and Newberry Road, west of 43rd Street, begins Monday, said Chip Skinner, FDOT spokesman.

Busscher said the department initiated the $600,000 project because depressions in the roadways were unsafe for drivers and could have opened up to form holes.

Local News

"It was such a dip that when people drove over it at certain speeds they could possibly lose control," she said. "It was quite a jolt."

The roads will be under construction Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.

There will be a break in construction on Oct. 24 for UF's

Homecoming celebration.

Access to certain businesses in those areas could be affected, but Busscher said it's even more important that people make it to their destinations on time.

The start date was originally set for Tuesday, but the contractor had equipment trouble, Skinner said.

UF dean leaves for VP position in Va.

By RACHEL ARROYO

Gene Zdziarski shared some laughs and tears with colleagues and students at his going-away party Wednesday.

Zdziarski, known to students as "Dean Gene," will leave his UF position as dean of students for the vice presidency of Roanoke College, a private liberal arts college in Salem, Va.

His last day at UF is Friday, and he will begin his career at Roanoke on Sept. 15.

UF plans to announce Zdziarski's successor Friday, said Steve Orlando, UF spokesman.

"This has probably been one of the highlights of my professional career," Zdziarski said of his seven years at UF.

He said his dean position is one of the most coveted jobs in higher education and deciding to leave was difficult.

Committee to vote on renewable energy fee proposal

By KATIE SANDERS
Alligator Staff Writer

A UF Board of Trustees committee will vote today on a new fee that would generate money for renewable energy sources on campus by charging students 50 cents per credit hour.

The renewable energy fee is expected to generate about $645,000 in revenue each year to fund projects such as solar panels, waste-to-energy programs and building upgrades at UF, said Kelly Moosbrugger, a recent UF graduate and the student representative from the UF Joint Sustainability Committee.

Moosbrugger and Adrian Erlenbach, Student Government secretary of environmental affairs, presented the case for the fee during the June meeting of the board's Educational Policy and Strategy Committee.

Moosbrugger said she was

"I think the rest of them were pretty impressed that students were actually asking for this."

"I think the rest of them were pretty impressed that students were actually asking for this," Moosbrugger said.

The committee is scheduled to vote on the item during its meeting starting at 3:45 p.m.

Gators for a Sustainable Campus launched a campaign for the fee in fall 2006. About 78 percent of about 7,470 students who voted in spring 2007 SG elections said they would support the renewable energy fee in response to a referendum question.

Last spring, about 82 percent of 800 UF students who completed a survey about the fee said they would be willing to pay the fee even if it wasn't covered by their Bright Futures scholarship, according to the proposal.

Once put into place, Erlenbach said, a committee comprised of students, faculty and representatives from facilities such as the

Profs advise against AP

■ PROFESSORS SAY AP TAKES AWAY FROM COLLEGE EDUCATION.

By RACHEL ARROYO
Alligator Writer

While Advanced Placement credits may save students money and time, professors think they may be hurting their college education.

In an editorial published Wednesday in Education Week, Paul Von Blum, a professor at the University of California, Los Angeles, said AP credits have only served to diminish the quality of a liberal arts education for a number of reasons, one of them being that students aren't retaining the information.

In a telephone interview, Von Blum said high school students are memorizing material and learning it with the goal of passing the AP exam and not for the purpose of gaining knowledge.

Joe Spillane, chairman of UF's history department, said he has seen the same patterns in his department.

"It is certainly true at UF that we have seen over the last 10 years really dramatic changes with respect to the number of students coming in with AP credits," Spillane said.

The biggest problem the department faces is having underclassmen flood upper-level history courses without having taken any 2000-level classes, he said.

The "U.S. history survey," which encompasses two classes designed to teach the basics of American history, isn't attracting nearly as many students as it used to, Spillane said.

In both United States to 1877 and United States Since 1877, the decline in enrollment has been steady over the past five years, he said. Spillane said the department is reorganizing upper-level course offerings because enrollment in the survey courses has leveled-off.

While faculty members are tailoring courses to accommodate students with AP credits, the consensus among Spillane and his colleagues is that students in these courses are less prepared for the material despite coming in with credits.

Pramod Khargonekar, dean of UF's

College of Engineering, said that point could also be applied to his college.

Khargonekar agreed that students who take their introductory science courses at UF are provided with a better foundation for the future.

He said many incoming students heed the advice of the engineering advisors because their major requires five years of extensive math and science.

While both Khargonekar and Spillane acknowledged that some AP students come well prepared, they said most UF courses are more in-depth than their AP counterparts.

The same goes for UCLA's Von Blum.

Von Blum said he always does a remedial review in his upper-level courses.

Students' lack of preparation could also be attributed to a lack of maturity when being taught the information in high school, he said.

UF Academics

The crux of Von Blum's argument centers on the idea that entering college with AP credits deprives students of their overall undergraduate experience.

The notion of "let's just get through as fast as possible" exists, Von Blum said, adding that this mode of thinking cheapens the college experience.

When asked what type of guidance he offers his students, Von Blum was blunt.

"I tell them to take their academic work seriously, and don't bother to take AP," he said.

Deanne McIntosh, a UF sophomore, came to college with three credits in American history.

Because she only came in with three, she said she didn't feel like she had missed out on her undergraduate experience.

"If anything, it just helped me but didn't hurt me in any way," McIntosh said.

Stephanie Foss, also a sophomore, came to UF with AP credits in biology, chemistry, statistics and English.

Foss said taking AP classes was somewhat of a waste. She is reviewing the same material in her English class.

"The stuff I learned in them helped, but I retook everything I learned in AP," Foss said.

Gainesville Republicans praise party's convention

■ GOV. CHARLIE CRIST CANCELED HIS SPEECH BECAUSE OF STORM.

By ANDREA ASUAJE
Alligator Writer

Although the Republican National Convention got off to a stormy start, Gainesville Republicans said the convention has been a hit.

Because of Hurricane Gustav's arrival in Louisiana and the Florida Panhandle, some speakers, including Gov. Charlie Crist, had to stay in their home states rather than head to Minnesota for the convention, which ends today.

But Republicans who watched the convention from home said they weren't disappointed.

Bryan Griffin, chairman of the UF College Republicans, said though there wasn't a huge opening ceremony on the first day, it hasn't affected the rest of the convention.

"I don't feel like it will be any less of a convention without it," Griffin said.

The convention has been attended by all three of the district's delegates: Stafford Jones, chairman of the Alachua County Republican Party; Donna Solze, state committeewoman for the Bradford County Republican Party; and Brian Graham, chairman of the Florida

Federation of Young Republicans.

Speeches by Laura Bush and Fred Thompson have helped show John McCain's true character, Griffin said.

McCain

know more about her.

Joshua Simmons, chairman of Gators for McCain, agreed.

Simmons said he was interested in seeing the response to Palin's speech Wednesday night, which he thought could establish her as a strong leader.

Mark McShera, editorial chairman of the UF College Democrats, said the focuses of the Republican convention have differed from those of the Democratic National Convention.

"I haven't heard anything at all about the economy from the Republicans," McShera said.

Griffin said the Republicans' convention has been about character this year.

"The Republican convention has been a little more about the person," he said. "There's a person behind the politician."

Library game teaches students about online resources

By TATIANA GONZALEZ
Alligator Contributing Writer

Learning how to use the library course reserves at UF is now an adventure to save thousands from the deadly Gator Virus.

"Bioactive" is a new interactive game about bioterrorism where players must use key UF library resources to save themselves and the university.

Sara Gonzalez, a UF physical sciences librarian and project leader of the game, said it's a fun way to learn about the libraries' resources.

"Bioactive" took more than 10 months to create and the collaborative efforts of six UF librarians without funding or formal training.

Valrie Davis, a UF agricultural sciences librarian and co-project leader, said the entire project was volunteer-based.

She said they also had an active community of programmers they could go to if they needed help.

"Bioactive" has gone through two different versions. The first version was based on text commands.

Davis said they changed the interface after receiving feedback from library staff and students who said they had a hard time navigating the game.

The current version is a simpler point-and-click game that uses a Web browser and doesn't require the user to download anything, Gonzalez said.

Davis and Gonzalez said "Bioactive" has received a lot of

"We think it's a fun way for students to learn about the library resources."

Sara Gonzalez
UF librarian

positive response so far, but they're still looking for students to test the game.

They said they hope to give "Bioactive" to instructors to assign to their classes that use course reserves.

They also began working on a generic version for other libraries to use after presenting it at the American Library Association Conference in June.

"We want to make it available to other libraries that don't have the man power and the money to create a similar program," Gonzalez said.

Students can play "Bioactive" by visiting the game's Web site at <http://www.uflib.ufl.edu/games/bioactive/>.

Going Green

Small fee packs environmental punch

Hopefully, UF will take a big green leap in the right direction today.

We think they will.

UF's Board of Trustees is finally voting on the environment-friendly proposal that would cost students a mere 50 cents per credit hour, which translates to about $645,000 of revenue each year.

Even better, the proposal leaves the fate of the money in the hands of those who really know the buildings on campus. UF's Physical Plant and Housing departments are going to request upgrades, and then students and faculty get to choose which requests to fund.

Nobody knows better than the student body which dorms have the stankiest hallways and bathrooms, and no group is more familiar with the dank, unfriendly nether regions of Norman and Rolfs Halls than the faculty.

We don't think these two esteemed groups can fail in their renovation recommendations.

The Editorial Board hopes the Trustees pass this tiny fee that has such big potential. President Machen wants a top 10 ranking, and we feel this pro-planet-Earth move couldn't hurt.

If nothing else, we'll accrue some trendy solar panels so we can be smug about how environmentally conscious our school is while our friends up on I-10 trudge around in run-down, foul-smelling, solar-panel-less Tallahassee.

C'mon, Board of Trustees, do it for the freshmen crammed in moldy triples and the bookworms who reek of third-story Marston bookshelves because that air is staler than the Five Star we ordered on the way home from Grog last Friday.

Actually, just do it because it's a good idea that won't break our banks.

Road Trip!

As if the bus ride home didn't take long enough already, upcoming road construction on Newberry and Archer is forcing the Editorial Board to break out the Google Maps and study Gainesville's back roads harder than we study for class.

Starting Monday, Gainesville residents are in for delays as the city resurfaces about five blocks on Newberry Road west of 43rd Street and a small section of Archer Road east of 34th Street, according to the Florida Department of Transportation.

The Editorial Board can't help but wonder why this construction wasn't planned for the summer, when half Gainesville skips town and traffic is at a minimum.

We may not be city planners, but it does seem strange that repaving less than six blocks of roadway will take two months to complete.

At least the construction is happening Monday through Friday and will end at 3:30 in the afternoon. We don't want to imagine Gainesville's infamous rush hour traffic and game-day gridlock being even worse than usual.

Still, how will we get to where we need to be when it really counts — like when we remember the midterm for that 10:40 class we haven't been to all semester is in 10 minutes?

The bus has never saved us in those situations, and now our cars won't either.

With travel time delayed about 15 to 20 minutes by construction, according to a Florida Department of Transportation spokeswoman, we're buying an extra alarm clock now.

We're all for filling potholes. But when making the roads smoother makes travel conditions rougher for two months, we have to wonder if we'd rather just deal with a few bumps in the road.

Alligator launches undergrad resumes

Dear journalism majors, I don't know if anyone has told you, but the news industry is in a state of emergency.

From June to December 2007, about 2,000 newspaper jobs were cut across the U.S. And as of Wednesday, more than 8,000 jobs have been cut in 2008.

Are you wondering how the hell you're going to find a job once you graduate? Well, join the club.

No, literally, join the Alligator staff.

The Alligator's open house will be held Friday afternoon from 1 to 5 p.m.

We're hiring for just about every position, including writers, copy editors, bloggers and online production.

You know from your classes in the College of Journalism and Communications that you need to have a portfolio and build up your resume as much as you can before graduation. Well, the Alligator is the perfect place to do that.

We have more than our share of work to go around, so if you're ready to put in some elbow grease, we'll gladly put you to work.

But you won't just get the work you want. You will get the guidance, attention and feedback that is lacking in classes of 300 and internship programs at newspapers that are busy worrying how to print a newspaper on a reduced staff.

I know from climbing the ranks at the Alligator that I've been whipped into shape by being thrown into the reporting process from the beginning with a full support network behind me.

When I first started working here in July 2006, I was a reporting student who had only written a couple of stories for the paper with no other newspaper experience. I was a horrible writer, but I was reliable and desperate for clips.

I remember my first stories on the Student Government beat, and I remember having them torn apart by a tenacious university editor every night in the newsroom.

However, it was the same editor who encouraged me and mentored me when my stories were completely rearranged and cut in half.

This trademark of tenacious editing and mentoring is what makes the learning curve at the Alligator so steep. Let me tell you from experience, it won't be long before you know the 10-plus rules for using a comma or how to shoot video.

The Alligator will also prepare you for whatever field you decide to go into, which is evident in our alumni network.

Some of our alumni include Rep. Charles Bennet, the longest-serving U.S. representative from Florida; Carl Hiaasen, author and award-winning columnist for The Miami Herald; Ian Johnson, Berlin bureau chief for The Wall Street Journal and Pulitzer Prize-winning correspondent; and Tom Kennedy, managing editor for multimedia at WashingtonPost.Newsweek Interactive and former director of photography for National Geographic.

And to give you an idea of how far you can get after a few semesters, current and recently graduated staffers have worked at The St. Petersburg Times, The Miami Herald, CNN.com, Roll Call Newspaper in Washington, D.C., and even MLB.com.

So don't be a stranger. Come meet us, check us out and fill out an application.

It might be in your best interest.

Alligator not immune to trash talking

Isn't it hilarious that on the same day that the Alligator prints the rants of a representative for College Democrats and a representative from Gators for McCain, it runs an editorial decrying the bipartisan trash talking of political hacks?

Scott Erker
8LS

McCain's tax policy inferior to Obama's

A letter to the editor in Wednesday's paper described Republican presidential hopeful Sen. John McCain's economic plan as sound.

While these claims were full of McCain's qualitative merits, the only quantifiable data provided was that the plan was "signed-off" by 300 economists. Interesting.

The consent of 300 economists is no basis for a "sound" plan that will benefit Americans, especially students.

To comprehend Republican economic failures, one only needs to look at the Republican-sponsored Florida Homestead Exemption Amendment.

UF students are seeing their hometown elementary schools firing teachers and sharply increasing class sizes, all while raising taxation inequality among homeowners.

McCain's Democratic opponent, Sen. Barack Obama, will implement a smarter tax plan that will benefit the middle class through investment in schools and tax cuts for you and me, not CEOs and billionaires.

Ethanol event to offer fuel

This weekend, UF students will have more to celebrate than just another game day.

The Ethanol Promotion and Information Council, or EPIC, will be giving away free fuel cards and free fuel for a year as prizes for their first Ultimate Ethanol Challenge.

In an attempt to promote ethanol usage, EPIC joined the FOX Tailgate Tour, now in its fifth year, hoping to reach out to the untapped market of college students, said Jenny Powell, EPIC spokeswoman.

On Campus Every hour, the EPIC mascot, Edgar E Man, will choose two contestants to face off in the challenge to win a free fuel card. The players will be asked ethanol-related true or false questions, such as "Ethanol raises the price of food" or "Ethanol saves me money at the pump," Powell said.

Event participants could also win free fuel for a year by registering through text-messaging or by dropping their name in a registration box, according to an EPIC news release.

The first 85 people to befriend Edgar E Man on Facebook will win a prize, Powell said.

The challenge will last from 1 p.m. to 8 p.m. and will take place outside Emerson Alumni Hall.

Students looking to cram on their ethanol knowledge can prepare for the challenge by visiting www.drivingethanol.org.

UF swimmers experience Olympics

■ SHAUNE AND BRETT FRASER SWAM FOR CAYMAN ISLANDS.

By CAITLIN HOWARD
Alligator Contributing Writer

As Brett zipped up his brother's speed suit, he whispered quiet words of encouragement. Shaune was relaxed and focused, but he knew once the buzzer rang, he had a race to swim. Just as soon as it rang, it seemed the race was over, and the outcome would show what his year of training was worth.

Shaune and Brett Fraser, both members of the UF men's swim team, returned to UF in time for fall classes after competing in the Beijing 2008 Olympic Games for the Cayman Islands swimming team.

The brothers are from George Town, Grand Cayman.

They spent a month in China, where one day of competition determined their fate after a year of preparation.

"I didn't end up performing as well as I would have liked to, but I swam my best times ever, and that's all you can ask for," said Shaune Fraser, a UF junior.

Shaune Fraser swam the 200-meter freestyle, 100-meter freestyle and 200-meter butterfly, and he set new personal records in all three events.

However, he wasn't able to make it past the preliminary race.

Shaune Fraser made his debut in the Athens 2004 Olympic Games when he was 16.

This year, his younger brother made his own debut.

"It was overwhelming being there, but I just tried to relax and not think about the race."

Brett Fraser
UF sophomore

"It was overwhelming being there, but I just tried to relax and not think about the race," said Brett Fraser, a UF sophomore.

Brett Fraser didn't make it past the preliminary race either, but he had his career-best swim in the 200-meter backstroke, which was the only event he competed in.

"It's such an outstanding achievement to make the Olympics being from such a small country," Brett Fraser said.

He said they didn't even have an Olympic-sized pool to train in growing up because there wasn't much interest in the swim program on the island — until Shaune Fraser went to the Olympics.

"Being from such a small country, there is less pressure to perform well because no one expects you to do anything," Shaune Fraser said. "But watching the finals makes me want to be up there too and do something good for my country."

Besides representing their country, both brothers said they felt like they were representing UF as well.

"I felt a sense of pride at the Olympics being a Gator because there were so many other former and current Gators competing, too," Shaune Fraser said.

After finishing their events by the sixth day, the brothers had plenty of time to explore China.

Shaune Fraser said within the Olympic Village, there was every kind of food imaginable from all over the world.

The brothers also had the opportunity to attend other Olympic events, including the foot races.

"One of the best parts was watching Usain Bolt (a Jamaican sprinter) break the world record in the 100-meter finals," Brett Fraser said.

Although they didn't win any medals, they agreed that it was one of the best experiences of their lives.

They both said they have aspirations of competing in the next Olympics and improving from this year's performances.

"The next Olympics are four years away," Shaune Fraser said.

"We have to take it one season at a time."

Hopkins doctor speaks at UF about brain research

■ DOCTOR SAYS LAB WORK IS KEY TO CURE.

By RACHEL ARROYO
Alligator Writer

UF students and faculty crowded the auditorium at the McKnight Brain Institute on Wednesday to listen to a medical superstar discuss his research on brain stem cells.

In his talk to an audience of roughly 100, Dr. Alfredo Quinones-Hinojosa, an associate professor of neurosurgery at The Johns Hopkins University, delved into the role brain stem cells play in determining why tumors develop and how they can be treated.

Quinones-Hinojosa, a Mexican immigrant who became a leading U.S. brain surgeon, also appeared in the ABC News series "Hopkins."

The series gave viewers a peek into the everyday work of employees at The Johns Hopkins Hospital in Maryland.

"We love our work as brain surgeons, but brain surgery is not going to be the answer to fighting this disease," Quinones-Hinojosa told the crowd, adding that the battle will largely be fought in the lab.

At the end of the presentation, Quinones-Hinojosa credited his lab assistants and colleagues, including some UF faculty and students, for their contribution to his research.

On Campus

Dr. Dennis Steindler, executive director of the McKnight Brain Institute, is a close friend of Quinones-Hinojosa.

The pair started the "Until We Cure Brain Tumors" program, which allows leading researchers from UF and Johns Hopkins to work together.

Steindler said the partnership would continue until a cure for brain cancer is developed.

"Brain tumors are formidable foes, and there are a zillion things to work on," Steindler said.

Steindler, who was instrumental in bringing Quinones-Hinojosa to speak, said he couldn't bypass the opportunity of inviting the doctor to share his knowledge of pivotal developments in the field.

Mariela Lopez, vice president of UF's branch of the Student National Medical Association, said she was just as impressed by Quinones-Hinojosa on Wednesday as she was the first time she heard him speak.

Lopez heard Quinones-Hinojosa discuss his rise from migrant worker to surgeon when she was admitted to UF's medical school in 2006.

"I'm Hispanic, and I think it also serves as motivation," she said.

Calling his story the "embodiment of the American Dream," Quinones-Hinojosa said he is blessed to be giving back to a country that has embraced him.

When asked about his journey, he said it wasn't without obstacles, but he had help along the way.

"It's a journey filled with a lot of support from this country and its people," Quinones-Hinojosa said.

Hanna to spare Florida, heads toward Carolinas

By CARLA ASTUDILLO
Alligator Contributing Writer

Floridians can rest easy, at least for now. According to National Hurricane Center advisories Wednesday, Tropical Storm Hanna's projected path has veered east toward the Carolinas and is expected to miss Florida.

"At this point, it's doubtful we will even get rain," said Danny Hinson, a planner for Alachua County Emergency Management.

Because of the distance of the storm and its compact size, Alachua County should just experience breezy conditions on Friday, Hinson said.

Previous forecasts predicted that Alachua County would experience some tropical storm gusts, which would have caused shelter openings and school closings, Hinson said.

Storms can be difficult to predict, said

Corene J. Matyas, a UF assistant professor of geography who specializes in hurricanes.

"It's really complicated to predict weather patterns because they happen on a large scale," Matyas said. "How they move and their intensity depend on how other weather systems affect them."

State News

At press time Wednesday, the state of emergency declaration issued by Gov. Charlie Crist on Tuesday was still in effect.

"The governor was being proactive," Hinson said. "These declarations are important so they can ready the funds to begin preparing for the storm."

Hinson said Wednesday he expected the governor's executive order to be rescinded within 24 hours. The governor's office could not be reached for comment.

Florida is now out of Tropical Storm Hanna's way, but two storms, Hurricane Ike and Tropical Storm Josephine, have formed in the Atlantic and are heading east. National Weather Service maps don't yet show whether they could hit Florida.

Although Florida is safe for now, Hinson said it's still wise to prepare an emergency plan and disaster supply kits, including water, nonperishable food and first-aid kits.

"Everyone should still maintain their readiness," he said. "Things can change."

UF ADMINISTRATION

IFAS VP up for chancellor position

By BRETT DALY
Alligator Writer

UF might lose one more staff member this year, but this time, budget cuts are not to blame.

Jimmy Cheek, senior vice president for the Institute of Food and Agricultural Sciences, or IFAS, is one of five candidates being considered for the position of chancellor at the University of Tennessee-Knoxville.

Cheek, who has been at UF for 33 years, previously held the positions of assistant dean and dean of the College of Agricultural and Life Sciences.

Cheek said he has accomplished a lot during his tenure at IFAS, but the opportunity to become chancellor at Tennessee was something he needed to explore.

"I'm at the point in my career that if I wanted to do something different, I need to do it now," he said.

A 21-member chancellor-search committee at Tennessee, along with a professional search firm, considered 37 candidates for the position, said Harry McSween, chairman of the committee.

Twelve were then selected for preliminary interviews, and five finalists were chosen from those, he said.

"We are looking for someone who will inspire us to be the best we can be," McSween said.

Leadership experience is also a big factor in making the decision, he said.

"(Cheek) has a great deal of experience that would be very appropriate for this position," McSween said.

"He has a sterling record at UF."

Cheek will travel to Knoxville for two days of interviews, meetings and forums with the university's president, chancellor and vice chancellors, faculty and students on Sept. 24 and 25.

McSween said the decision resides with the UT president and will hopefully be made within six weeks after the end of the final interviews.

Kirby Barrick, dean of the College of Agricultural and Life

Sciences, said the Tennessee chancellor position would be a wonderful opportunity for Cheek, whom he has known for 25 years, but he doesn't want to lose an esteemed colleague.

Barrick said while Cheek was dean, the quality of students improved, and a program of matching assistantships in the graduate program was established.

"I inherited a college that was in a good position," Barrick said.

If offered the position, Cheek said he would want to ensure he had the support of Tennessee faculty, staff and students, as well as share the same visions as the university, before accepting.

"I'd be leaving behind a fantastic university," Cheek said.

When staff from the Dean of Students Office presented Zdziarski with the quilt, tears came to his eyes.

The tears, however, were quickly replaced by laughter when Patricia Telles-Irvin, vice president for student affairs, told stories of Zdziarski's love for hurricane season.

For Zdziarski, Telles-Irvin said hurricane season usually meant camping out in a bunker with beef jerky.

She recalled how on his first day of work — Sept. 11, 2001 — Zdziarski parked his car next to a random curb on campus and immediately headed to his office.

Surprisingly, he didn't get a parking ticket from the University Police Department, she added.

When Zdziarski took the stage for the last time, he said he hadn't realized how his life had been touched until it was time to leave.

"This is the greatest part of the job: working with the students and interacting with them," he said.

However, the trustees' approval does not mean the fee will go into effect any time soon.

All fees must be approved by the Board of Governors, the State University would monitor the fee if passed.

Also discussed during the committee meetings today will be regulations to the Student Conduct Code, though a vote will not be taken.

Oh Sanders reborn from "Death"

Local band talks about changing sound

LANE NIESET ◆ AVENUE WRITER

At 2 a.m. on a main street in Athens, Ga., a parade is forming. This is not your average late-night parade; but a kazoo parade led by the singer of legendary indie-pop band The Music Tapes. Members of local band Oh Sanders followed a crowd of 300 fellow indie-music fans, passing spectators and fraternity houses while repeating the same six notes on the kazoo.

"Athens is a larger Gainesville," said Stella Leung, singer and guitarist for Oh Sanders. "It had a reputation as a town with great pop bands in its past, but now pop bands are dying."

The members of Oh Sanders said they hope to perpetuate pop and expose Gainesville, a town known more for punk and indie bands, to this type of music.

The band will be releasing its new CD, "The Death of Nature," at The Atlantic on Saturday.

The band's show starts at 9 p.m. and is $6 for those over the age of 21 and $8 for those under 21. The show will feature three other local bands: Savages, Quadrophones and Starmaker, who is from Ormond Beach.

Jon Waller, the head of Starmaker, is also releasing his new CD at the first and possibly only show he will play. His set will feature members of Oh Sanders playing back-up instruments.

DJ Cameron, who is the DJ at "Indie Night" on Thursdays at The Atlantic, will be spinning between sets at the show.

One of the unique aspects of the CD-release show is that Oh Sanders will play the entire album from start to finish.

"We are proud of the album and want to give the people who come out a preview," Leung said.

Oh Sanders have been working

"We created the album ourselves and didn't have to deal with anyone telling us what to do."

Duncan McRoberts

on "The Death of Nature," which is their first full-length album following the release of their "Manic Phase" EP, since May 2007.

"We have built a reputation as a tween-influenced pop band, but this album has a darker sound and is more mature and filled out," Leung said. "People who haven't heard us in a while might be surprised by how different our sound is."

The title of the CD is also the title of the closing track of the album and is derived from a spoken quote on that track.

The theme throughout all of the songs is not quite man vs. nature, but more artificial vs. nature, Leung said. This can be seen with song titles such as "The Concrete That Surrounds Us" and "Electrical Fire".

"This theme reflects us as a band," Leung said. "Lately we have been influenced by synthesizers but still have open guitar and organic sounds creating this juxtaposition."

Duncan McRoberts, who plays bass and keyboards, recorded and produced the CD in the living room of his house in Gainesville. He said he enjoyed learning how to write and produce a record and settling into a sound that fits the band.

"We created the album ourselves and didn't have to deal with anyone telling us what to do," McRoberts said. "We just kept creating music and stopped when we wanted."

The band didn't experiment much with the music for the last album. With "The Death of Nature," they took music and instrumental tracks apart and rearranged things, allowing themselves to take a step back and look at the songs as a whole.

"Everyone in the band is developing as a musician, learning their strengths and weaknesses," McRoberts said. "Our favorite moments were when we were working on a song and someone would have a small epiphany, and a part of the song would suddenly make sense."

The song "Conspiracy to Commit Arson", which is also on "The Death of Nature," was actually recorded in different stages. Leung created a guitar riff and then drummer Chris Petit created the drum section. McRoberts then handed the

Honky-tonk Dawgs on "Malt Lick'er"

HENRY TASKIER ◆ AVENUE WRITER

It was an ordinary day when Three Legged Dawg band member Billy Ray took a walk in his yard. His dog had taken a dump in the grass. To his amazement, a butterfly was perched on the excrement as if to symbolize the triumph of freedom and beauty over — well, crap.

That was Ray's inspiration for one of the possible titles of Three Legged Dawg's upcoming album: "Dogshit Butterfly." The independent local band already has an album out and will be performing Thursday night at Lightnin' Salvage from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m., at Satchel's Pizza, which is located at 1800 NE 23rd Ave.

Three Legged Dawg's music can best be described as "crunky-tonk." To understand such an elusive term, one must first understand the meaning of "honky-tonk," said the band members, Billy Ray and Krissy Mae.

"Honky-tonk is music about drinkin', bein' in bars, your wife leavin' ya and your truck poppin' out of park and runnin' over your dog," said Billy Ray, who plays, writes and sings for Three Legged Dawg. "Crunky-tonk is honky-tonk with a rougher edge."

"Honky-tonk is music about drinkin', bein' in bars, your wife leavin' ya and your truck poppin' out of park and runnin' over your dog."

Billy Ray
lead singer

The rougher edge refers to the influence of metal and punk in their music.

"One time, we inspired a small but messy mosh pit," Krissy Mae said.

"Gainesville is like an energy vortex," she said. "Sit here long enough and some strange talent will beseech you. For me, it was pounding drums."

While Mae plays the drums in Three Legged Dawg, Ray plays the guitar, harmonica, and gitjo, which is a 6-stringed banjo-guitar. He also created the art for the cover of their self-produced album, "Malt Lick'er."

The band's songs are filled with classical country themes, which he described as "lovin' and losin' and drinkin' in between."

"We probably have the saddest theme song of any band," Krissy Mae said, referring to the song "3LD Theme," which begins with the lyrics, "I'm a three-legged dog."

At Lightnin' Salvage, Three Legged Dawg will play some of its favorites, covers of old rock songs and some new original songs, including "Eastside Manifesto," a song about the east Gainesville.

half-finished song to Josh Tucker, lead guitarist and back-up vocalist, and told him to "create something brilliant." Tucker came back with just that — something brilliant.

In addition to the band's growth as musicians, Leung spent her summer as a press intern at a pop label in Athens called Happy Happy Birthday to Me Records, where she learned about the recording industry and how it works.

"The label has a realistic approach to running a record label by taking baby steps to help pull yourself up and build a fan base making money while working in the independent industry," she said.

During the summer, Oh Sanders also performed at Athens PopFest, a festival sponsored by the record label that brings bands together to promote pop music.

Leung described the Athens PopFest as a "summer camp for indie kids."

"It opened our eyes to see how small-scale indie-pop bands can make it by themselves," she said. "I feel that we are one of the handful of bands in Gainesville that still play rock music but have more of an indie-pop feel, which makes it fun and different from the rest of the scene."

Rising above the influence of the soapy Gillette Man

DEVIN CULCLASURE ♦ AVENUE CONTRIBUTING WRITER

Two weeks ago, I was watching TV with some buddies when I discovered something disturbing — an uncommon occurrence on TV, for sure.

Anyhow, I had stumbled upon a new G4 program called "Hurl!" As you can probably deduce, the reality show puts participants through nauseating activities until they're on the Giant Swing, spewing their last meal across half of the county fair's crowd.

I've seen enough of my own alcohol-induced hurling during my time at UF — sorry, Bernie — so I wasn't about to watch an entire program dedicated to the subject. Besides, it only took a glimpse of "Hurl!" to bolster my belief that American culture is headed in the right direction.

I flipped the channel again and found an advertisement for a mortgage company. As it turns out, "Hurl!" would not be the most depressing TV experience of my day.

The mortgage ad consisted of a news broadcast about the hard economic times and the increasing amount of home foreclosures. With this company's help, the sultry reporter promised, anybody can get out of financial trouble.

At first, I was simply amused by the poor production value — without comic intent, the newsroom set resembled that of "Anchorman" — and the astounding gall required by shady lenders to take further advantage of a problem that was largely the fault of shady lending.

Besides, who would possibly be stupid enough to fall for such an idiotic commercial? But then

I paused: Wouldn't businesses generally try to avoid forking out a stupid amount of money for a 30-second TV spot without good cause?

There must be some reason why advertisers treat the American public like a bunch of sex-crazed fifth-graders (the kind that have been held back twice already).

Based on the commercials I've seen, advertisers believe two things: Most Americans are too stupid to have information delivered to them by any means other than a sledgehammer to the face, and most Americans would think about sex 400 times by the time they finished reading this sentence. There must be some reason why advertisers treat the American public like a bunch of sex-crazed fifth-graders (the kind that have been held back twice already).

For instance, take the Gillette body wash ad that followed the informative breaking news segment. In it, a showering man's body is slowly covered in an awesome bluish-silver liquid after using Gillette body wash.

After actually suggesting their product will turn you into one of the X-Men, Gillette's ad goes on to show Mr. Confidence burst into a meeting room at work — he practically kicks the door down in a fit of manly self-awareness — and then eye-love the hell out of his hot female co-worker. The spot ends with their eyes locked, but one can extrapolate that Mr. Confidence then sealed a company-saving deal, kicked his boss in the balls and took his newfound lady home for some afternoon delight.

If only it were that easy. I use Gillette shaving cream, and the only female attention I ever get is "you missed a spot shaving" or "you cut yourself shaving." But I know somewhere out there, some poor fool is rushing to Wal-Mart's personal hygiene aisle in a sad attempt to become a radioactive, womanizing mutant.

I guess in the end, advertising only bothers me because it wouldn't be in its current state if it didn't work. Advertising bothers me because too often, it is an accurate reflection of our society.

But what can you do? I for one am going to grab my Apple iPod, put on my Asics running shoes, drink some Gatorade Tiger Red Drive and go for a relaxing run to lower my blood pressure. At least I can take solace in the fact that I am above the influence of advertising.

album review

The Verve's "Forth" album should've stopped at third

ROBERT HILSON ◆ AVENUE WRITER

Retaining a once-great band is like donating plasma. Both are painful to watch and carried out under the pretext of some righteous calling — a selfless gift to the faceless masses — also known as, "They need it more than I do." Richard Ashcroft, lead singer and reuniting of The Verve, is presumably familiar with donating plasma and knows better. These kinds of things one does for the money.

So the narrative goes like this: the band, that brought you "Bitter Sweet Symphony," a would-be cash cow had its hook not been stolen — pardon, "sampled" — from a Rolling Stones hit, returns to a throng of adoring Brits ten years on, selling out arenas in 20 minutes and in general capitalizing on the (post-lawsuit) Mick Jagger/Keith Richards-accredited composition that in equal parts contributed to the fame and demise of the band. These people have not heard "Forth."

The fourth proper release by the Manchester quartet qualifies as the obligatory will-tour, must-have-album collection. Self-parody might be a bit harsh, but "Forth" captures four guys, and Ashcroft in particular, feeling their way toward a sound they would have made ten years ago. This isn't music for the here and now. Even worse, it isn't music that leads you to believe you've missed anything in the interim.

"Love is Noise" was a logical choice for a "big comeback single" because it's upbeat, which is a rarity in this set. And it would be easy to hum along to without the awkward choice of a jungle-animal squawking in the background. Love might indeed be noise, but it's hard to tell when you record in a zoo.

The Verve
"Forth"
$8.99

"Noise Epic," on the other hand, utilizes a spoken-word verse to bludgeon an otherwise acceptable garage groove. Plodding along for eight minutes, the album's centerpiece wrestles with a grand ambition that its waves of feedback and primal screaming never quite harness

Most of the other nine tracks tend to run together, trapped in a psychedelic fog. Ashcroft takes a cue from Chris Martin here, and that's probably the point. When you're The Verve in the new millennium, sounding like Coldplay is a good thing.

If there's a lesson to be salvaged from this ear-bleed of an album, it's this: lifting a Stones song is a good idea, but borrowing life maxims — call them Mick-nuggets? — from the Glimmer Twins is not. Like the one from "Street Fighting Man": "But what can a poor boy do / Except to sing for a rock 'n roll band?" It's faulty logic. Just because you still can doesn't mean you still should.

FASHION on the avenue

Make a statement in The Swamp

ASHLEY ROSS ◆ AVENUE WRITER

Don't lie. You know all summer long, the second an orange or blue article of clothing caught your eye, you were nearly required to buy it. Football season is back, ladies and gentlemen, and it's time to whip out your game day attire. Urban Meyer's whiteout didn't quite succeed — for more reasons than multiple see-through sundresses after the first quarter downpour — and at the Florida vs Hawaii game, orange and blue still reigned as the dominant colors in the Swamp. Sadly, I witnessed far too many fashion faux pas. So, to clear up some game day fashion confusion, here are some do's and don'ts.

Let's get this one out of the way first: the infamous "jorts." Everybody secretly owns a pair, hidden somewhere in the depths of his or her closet, perhaps in the seventh-grade Hollister drawer. This isn't Tallahassee, though, and we Gators should know better than to sport those tattered and overly fringed bottoms. Make an effort to stray from wearing the distressed hems, especially when the pockets are longer than the actual shorts themselves — no one wants to see your butt cheeks, even the old alumni who drunkenly and not-so-subtly check you out. Also, it'd be best not to wear the "roll-up" — rolling up a pair of jean shorts doesn't make them any classier.

Jean shorts can be acceptable in some cases, though. Go for the ones with cuffs, which are classy and standard.

Cutting a T-shirt can work in mysterious ways. You either end up with a masterpiece that looks store-bought or a slutty catastrophe that leaves your bra straps all over the place. To refrain from making any disastrous cutting mistakes, stick to basic patterns you're familiar with. Don't go snipping away and tying back together without knowing what your result will be. It's also best not to show your stomach, no matter how hard you worked out for that bargin' hot body this summer. Avoid the midriff.

And though it's a simple fact that during football season, orange and blue basically vomit all over the city of Gainesville, try not to overdo it. A big no-no: Don't wear orange on orange or blue on blue. This usually fails miserably and temporarily blinds onlookers.

Black on black on game day usually fails too. We all know and love the color black, but I'd suggest not wearing black to a game unless it's a Gators T-shirt or you're in mourning for a previous game loss.

What works best for ladies is the fan-favorite sundress. Sundresses come in all different shades of orange, blue, white or a combination of all three and always have a great spot to tie a colored ribbon. They're comfortable, airy and do a great job of hiding the sweat that's dripping down your back. For gentlemen, the sundress won't work quite as well, but you can find ways to be just as comfy. Basic shorts and a T-shirt or polo work the best. Chances are you're going to end up shirtless by the start of the second quarter anyway. I know some guys find it hard to resist that game day frat-tastic outfit and simply have to sport a shirt and tie, but I promise you will be miserable in 98-degree weather. On Saturday, I spotted a guy wearing just a tie and no shirt. You don't want to be that guy. That guy is weird.

Another game day fashion blunder: footwear. It can be quite the annoyance. We all want to wear those cute orange and blue shoes, which sadly result in numerous blisters and a miserable walk home — win or lose. Keep it safe with Rainbows or any basic sandal. And if you absolutely must do it, whip out the Crocs. As much as I hate to approve, they will keep your feet comfortable as you stand for the entire game. A cool way to sport your Gator pride is with Jack Rogers Navajo sandals, which come in a great orange and blue shade that will certainly match with any Saturday outfit.

So Gators, as far as game day fashion goes, keep it classy, cute and comfortable. Sport your orange and blue in tasteful ways, and you'll be representing The Gator Nation with not just pride, but style too. You've got all you need and more to make a statement in the Swamp.

Walk by works of art for Friday night fun downtown

SEAN MCCAUGHAN ◆ AVENUE WRITER

Who knew Gainesville had an art scene? Certainly not most students.

The scene is small, and the art can sometimes be awfully folksy but is worth seeing. Beyond the students and faculty of the fine arts college or Gainesville's own crop of neo-hippy local artists, who even knows what sort of art the city has to offer? Who knows there are art galleries downtown, or what the WARPhaus is? More people really should take advantage of these little-known venues.

The WARPhaus is a UF fine arts college student art space hidden in a warehouse located at 818 NW First Ave.

For a newer development in the Gainesville art scene, try spending an evening downtown at the Art Walk on the last Friday of every month.

I attended the most recent one, and I must say it was a fabulous success. The Art Walk begins at about 7 p.m., and galleries throw open their doors, set out some wine along with the occasional hors d'oeuvre platter and basically show off. Students, Gainesville locals and really anyone else will come out to mill around,

“Who, beyond the students and faculty of the fine arts college or Gainesville's own crop of neo-hippy local artists, even knows what sort of art the city has to offer?”

walking from gallery to gallery to eat, drink and look at art. Bands set up in the streets, and artists perform live alongside their work. The experience is a new and different one for a town where beer pong parties and keggers can become monotonous.

The art, of course, is of varying skill, but there is some great stuff to be seen. Recently the Satellite building, on Third Street, had some interesting graffiti work, and Store 101 on Main Street hosted a performance artist as well as a painter working outside.

When you go, a good place to start is the Hippodrome State Theatre on Southeast Second Place. It's in the center of the action, and you can pick up a map showing what's happening where. The event usually closes about 10 p.m.

If you're in the mood for some immediate art, on Friday at around 7 p.m. three on-campus galleries are having opening receptions. The University Gallery will be showing faculty work from the school of art. Expect good art from people hired to teach it and decent finger food. It's in the fine arts courtyard along Southwest 13th Street.

In the Focus Gallery next door is the work of Richard Heipp's summer class in Paris. In the Grinter Gallery, artists are showing ceramic teapots from the collection of Anna Calluori Holcombe. You'll find it on the east side of the University Auditorium.

These exhibits should tide you over until the next Art Walk on Sept. 26.

Patchan faces off with father's alma mater

By PHIL KEGLER
Alligator Staff Writer
pkegler@alligator.org

Four months ago, Matt Patchan didn't know if he would ever play football again.

The freshman took a bullet in his left shoulder on May 9 after being caught as a bystander in a shooting in a park near Tampa, his hometown.

Now, the defensive tackle looks poised to make a big impact for UF when it hosts Miami on Saturday.

This game will be plenty exciting for Patchan, who spurned the Hurricanes in favor of the Gators during his senior year in a major recruiting coup by UF. Patchan left high school last year as the No. 11 overall prospect, according to Rivals.com.

Many expected Patchan to be a lock to become a Hurricane because his father, Matt Patchan III, played for Miami in 1984-87 under Jimmy Johnson and alongside Vinny Testaverde. Patchan now wears No. 71 for the Gators — the same number his father wore when he played for the Hurricanes.

"That was a knock-down, drag-out, full-swing recruitment," UF coach Urban Meyer said on recruiting Patchan.

The recruiting process also churned out some verbal jabs.

Patchan made a visit to the Orange Bowl to watch Miami host Virginia in November 2007. After seeing the Hurricanes get blown out 48-0, Patchan railed on the Miami players.

"There's too many guys that it doesn't bother them that they lost the game," Patchan said at the time to CaneSport.com, an affiliate of Rivals.com. "There's too many guys now at 'The U' that [say], 'It's OK we lost. Well, what am I going to do tonight?' Like it doesn't mean anything. They need to get rid of those types of guys. Half those guys in Miami uniforms shouldn't be there — they physically don't cut it."

UF officials did not make Patchan available for comment this week.

Meyer said Monday he would try

UF FOOTBALL

Full lineup to show Saturday

By KARL HYPOLITE
Alligator Staff Writer
khyppolite@alligator.org

It looks like UF will have its full complement of players for Saturday's matchup against Miami.

Coach Urban Meyer confirmed Wednesday that wide receiver Percy Harvin, linebacker Brandon Spikes and offensive lineman Jim Tartt would be available.

Harvin has been recovering from April heel surgery, Spikes suffered a foot injury during practice last week and Tartt has been battling a shoulder injury.

"They'll play," Meyer said. "Percy was limping around a little bit and Brandon looked fine to me."

Before Wednesday, Meyer had said he was not 100 percent sure if Harvin or Spikes would play.

Meyer said he was unsure whether Harvin and Spikes would start Saturday or how many snaps they would receive.

UNEXPECTED HEROES: With all of the offensive fireworks on display in the Gators' opener against Hawaii, it would seem logical that Meyer would name Jeff Demps or Chris Rainey the offensive player of the game.

Instead, the entire offensive line graded out as champions. Guard Mike Pouncey led the way with a 94 percent, according to Meyer, who named him the offensive player of the game.

"I was shocked at first," Pouncey said.

"But everyone was telling me hard work pays off."

"I'm expecting a win."

Carl Moore
UF junior receiver

NEW TERRITORY: Junior college transfer Carl Moore is set to experience his first rivalry game as a member of the Gators.

The California native is keeping his expectations relatively simple, though.

"I'm expecting a win," he said.

"I come into every game the same, hoping to do what I have to do to help the team get the win."

According to Moore, UF has yet to show its full hand offensively, something the Hurricanes should be concerned about.

"We just played and got a couple of big breaks, so we couldn't really open up the offense," Moore said.

O-line deserves attention

When Jeff Demps sneaks through Miami's defensive line, avert your eyes.

Look the other way when Chris Rainey jukes and shakes his way for a 20-plus-yard gain. Even when Percy Harvin makes his season debut this weekend, don't get giddy when he touches the ball.

And please, try to refrain from making ga-ga eyes at Timmy Tebow. Fellas, I'm talking to you, too.

Instead, check out the big boys gyrating down front. It shouldn't be that hard, either. We're talking about 300-plus pounds of man here.

Don't discount the speed the Gators have. It's something every coach would love to have, and the options it provides offensively are numerous. But not even Demps, Rainey or Harvin could make those 10- and 20-yard sprints if the big guys didn't open creases for them.

Brian Steele
Steele-ing Bases
bsteele@alligator.org

UF's offensive line provides more than just a crease. It's more like lumberjacks clearing land for a five-star hotel.

With the type of spread offense the Gators run, if there's not blocking at the line or down the field, there are no big plays. No more hearing the phrase "Mercy, Percy" or watching defensive backs scratch their heads as UF's athletes run past them.

Even receiver Carl Moore knows how important the blocking scheme is to the Gators' success.

"(The) offensive line dominated really good," Moore said. "Everybody was dominating blocking. That's

Gators' feet find way to net

UF finished with six goals Sunday

By CHRISTOPHER YAZBEC

Alligator Writer
cyazbec@alligator.org

Unlike Friday's 1-0 loss to Central Florida, the UF soccer team's Saturday-morning meeting was filled with goals, the biggest of which was trying to figure out a way to capitalize on scoring opportunities.

Fraine

"One of our main goals was not only to shoot the ball, but to finish it," senior forward Megan Kerns said.

"On Friday, we had a whole bunch of shots, but we weren't able to finish them."

That's for sure.

The Gators outshot the Knights 17-6.

"Definitely in the first 20, 25 minutes of the second half we had enough chances to win two or three games," UF coach Becky Burleigh said after the loss.

"But the bottom line is you gotta put 'em in the back of the net."

UF faced similar difficulties last season, outshooting its opponents by double figures in each of its two conference losses.

The Gators outshot the Knights 24-5 in last year's NCAA second round but needed to hold on in penalty kicks to win 0-0, 4-3.

"It's really frustrating, especially as a goalkeeper, because obviously we can't score," sophomore Katie Fraine said. "But at the same time, I feel like it's really hopeful to watch us have opportunity after opportunity."

After losing the home opener, it appeared the No. 23 Gators got the message when they delivered a 6-1 rout of Nebraska on Sunday.

The six goals came on 14 shots.

"We created just as many good opportunities on Friday as we did (Sunday)," Burleigh said.

"(Sunday), what the difference was we just finished them. There were some really great goals, and I think we just need to build on this."

Burleigh said it's important to get the first goal because that can create a snowball effect, which is what happened Sunday.

Not being able to convert, however, gives the opponent hope to stay in the game — which is what happened against the Knights.

Kerns, who scored two goals against the Cornhuskers, wasn't sure what the difference between the two matches was, but she did know one thing.

"One of our main goals was not only to shoot the ball but to finish it."

Megan Kerns
Senior UF forward

"The shots were just falling for us (Sunday)," she said.

Freshman midfielder Tahnai Annis, who added the second goal of her college career, noticed more aggressive play in the box.

"We came out with a vengeance not being able to score Friday, and just wanted to prove basically to ourselves and everyone else that it wasn't just a fluke that we can create chances," Annis said. "We can also finish them."

UF FOOTBALL

More than 20 recruits will attend UF-Miami showdown

By MIKE DIFERDINANDO

Alligator Staff Writer
mdiferdinando@alligator.org

When the Gators and Hurricanes meet in The Swamp on Saturday, more than just a game will be on the line.

With more than 20 nationally ranked prospects planning to be in attendance, the two in-state powers will be playing for the future of their programs.

Throughout his tenure at UF, coach Urban Meyer has picked out the two biggest home games of the season to host recruits on their official visits. This is one of those weekends.

Every run, pass and tackle will be a glimpse into the future for some of the state's brightest high school football stars.

Trent Richardson, one of the state's best running backs, will make the drive down from Pensacola on Saturday.

Richardson has verbally committed to Alabama but is still making visits to other schools.

UF and LSU have both been in the race for the Escambia High senior's services.

Richardson has stated he would like to play in the Southeastern Conference, but Miami has made a strong push for the five-star prospect.

Other in-state prospects planning to be in attendance include Sanford wide receiver Andre Debose and Tampa tight end Orson Charles.

One prospect who is disappointed he won't be there for the game is Jheranie Boyd.

The 6-foot-2 wide receiver planned to make the drive from Ashbrook, N.C., for the game, but will be unable to make it due to a change in plans.

He said he hopes to make it to another game this season.

Boyd, who has long been considered to be leaning toward Clemson, is now strongly considering the Gators after watching the Tigers get dismantled by Alabama over the weekend.

"I still like Clemson, but Florida is definitely in the mix," he said. "It's those two above everybody else."

Boyd was in town in July for UF's Friday Night Lights camp.

"It's not intimidating for any of us."

Marcus Forston

Miami freshman defensive tackle

He came away just as impressed with the campus as he did with the football program.

"There sure are a lot of pretty girls down there," he said.

But even if the Gators are able to beat up Miami on Saturday, don't expect it to keep the Hurricanes out of the mix for many of the top players in Florida.

Despite a 5-7 record last season, Miami was able to bring in the nation's No. 3-ranked recruiting class, according to Scout.com — a class that included eight players from South Florida powerhouse Miami Northwestern, a recruiting feat that outdid UF's haul of seven Lakeland High products in 2007.

Many of those former Miami Northwestern players, including freshman quarterback Jacory Harris, who threw for 190 yards and a touchdown in Miami's opener against Charleston Southern, will be on the field Saturday.

Harris is expected to split time with Hurricanes starter Robert Marve.

Former Northwestern stars Sean Spence and Marcus Forston should start at linebacker and defensive tackle.

The 6-foot-2, 302-pound Forston expects to impress in his first trip to The Swamp.

"It's not intimidating for any of us," Forston told The Miami Herald. "All of us came from winning high schools. We played on TV. We played in big games. We love to step up to the plate, and we love competing."

Rodriguez's home run upheld in Yankees' win over Rays

Controversial instant replay system used for first time

The Yankees' victory over the Rays on Wednesday night was a significant win for the team, as they secured a home run by Rodriguez that was upheld by the controversial instant replay system. The game was a close contest, with both teams trading blows throughout the night. The Yankees' defense held strong in the final innings, leading to a decisive victory.

The use of the instant replay system was a first for this game, as it allowed the Yankees to challenge the Rays' call on Rodriguez's home run. The replay confirmed that Rodriguez had indeed hit the ball over the fence, resulting in a home run. This decision was a key factor in the Yankees' win.

The Yankees' win over the Rays was a significant victory for the team, as they secured a home run by Rodriguez that was upheld by the controversial instant replay system. The game was a close contest, with both teams trading blows throughout the night. The Yankees' defense held strong in the final innings, leading to a decisive victory.

Freshman played limited snaps against Hawaii to keep Patchan's patented energy in check this week to keep him focused.

"I'm trying to keep him sheltered all week," Meyer said. "He's out of his mind to begin with."

The freshman enrolled early at UF, coming to Gainesville in January and taking the practice field by storm. Coaches originally had him pegged as an offensive lineman but quickly had him switch sides. Patchan flourished there as well and ended spring ball as a starter at defensive tackle.

The shooting ended any chance of Patchan being an opening-day starter.

McCarney

The 6-foot-6, 270-pounder was limited in preseason camp by a pectoral muscle strain. He only began practicing full contact on Aug. 25 and played in a limited number of snaps against Hawaii.

The shooting did give Patchan a different perspective on things.

"I feel grateful for a lot of things, and I know God was watching me and giving me a second chance, so I'm going to make the best of it and work as hard as I can," he said in August.

His position coach, Dan McCarney, can't stop raving about him.

"If we could bring four Matt Patchans into the program every year, if I'm guaranteed four Patchans, then I'll promise you we will be making a run at the national championship on the defensive line," McCarney said. "His motor never stops, and when you say go play relentless for the Gators, he understands that about as good as anybody we have."

what we got to do to win."

When Rainey scored on a 33-yard scamper Saturday, wideout Riley Cooper cleared out the last Hawaii defender in what Meyer called a "seven-second block clinic."

Without starting guard Jim Tartt, who is still recovering from his third shoulder surgery, the offensive line was impressive Saturday. Last season, it wasn't as noticeable because the Gators' best running backs were a wide receiver and quarterback.

Now with Rainey, Demps and a healthy Emmanuel Moody in the backfield, this offensive line will start getting the recognition it deserves.

Mike Pouncey was named the offensive player of the game Saturday.

While the system Meyer uses to "grade out" players appears arbitrary, Pouncey being named the top offensive player when the Gators scored 56 points tells you something.

"I really think they deserved it," Pouncey said of the running backs. "With Rainey and Demps in the backfield, all you've got to do is hold your block for two seconds. When they gave it to me, I guess they felt sorry for me."

Actually, it's the opponent's defensive line you should feel sorry for. Phil Trautwein, Jason Watkins, Maurkice and Mike Pouncey have gelled as one deep, cohesive unit, and that's not good news for anybody already clueless on how to stop UF's offensive juggernaut.

"Everybody says we've got the strongest unit on the team right now," Maurkice said.

Well, there's that Tebow guy who has the quarterback situation down pretty well. Other than that, though, it's hard to argue the offensive line isn't the key to the Gators' success. Offensive line coach Steve Addazio has said he has several players who can play multiple positions on the line, and it's no coincidence three of UF's 11 team captains play there (Trautwein, Watkins and Tartt). They're large leaders — literally and figuratively.

So the next time you see any of these jolly giants on campus, give them a nice pat on the back. Just don't buy them dinner. Your bank account can't handle that.

Kronos Quartet Awakening

With special guests the P.K. Yonge Middle School Performing Arts Chorus

Wednesday, September 10, 7:30 p.m.
Phillips Center for the Performing Arts

For many, the images of 9/11 play over and over in a brutal movie montage. The award-winning Kronos Quartet's latest project, Awakening, "offers a new soundtrack to this internal movie," according to quartet member David Harrington. The P.K. Yonge Middle School Performing Arts Chorus, conducted by Melanie Harris, will participate in the program, adding their talents to Finnish composer Aulis Sallinen's Winter Was Hard.

Laurie Anderson Homeland

Tuesday, September 16, 7:30 p.m.
Phillips Center for the Performing Arts

Sponsored by alligator

Laurie Anderson's latest work, Homeland, is a poetic and political portrait of contemporary America. Anderson weaves together a series of stories and songs in Homeland that takes the audience through many different worlds, from Greek tragedy to American business models, while addressing the current climate of fear and our obsession with information and security. This is Anderson's most musically sophisticated production to date and a tour-de-force of spoken word, music and technology.

U.S. Tour Premiere

Shakespeare & Company in Hamlet

Tuesday, September 23, 7:30 p.m.

Sponsored by DHARMA ENDOWMENT FOUNDATION

Shakespeare's masterpiece is a fitting vehicle for the renowned Shakespeare & Company's first national tour. Featuring a real-life mother and son duo in the roles of Queen Gertrude and Hamlet, this classic tale of love, betrayal, madness and corruption of the vilest sort comes to vivid life in an imaginative production that makes Shakespeare both accessible and enjoyable.
