Graduate students project threatened

■ UF MADE A POLICY BANNING SPONSORED TRAVEL TO HAITI.

By CJ PRUNER
 Alligator Staff Writer

When Jon Bougher and Roman Safiullin went back to Haiti earlier this month, they shot about 12 more hours of footage for their master's thesis documentary, which follows Planting Peace, a philanthropic organization.

Unfortunately for the two UF graduate students, not one minute of the footage will be allowed in the final cut, rendering their thesis project incomplete.

In February, the university established a policy banning UF-sponsored travel to Haiti, so all the material gathered after the earthquake cannot be used in the students' final project.

According to UF spokesman Steve Orlando, the university's travel policy is meant to ensure student safety. The university is not certain students who travel there would have access to food, water and shelter, Orlando said.

"If you're watching CNN and watching Anderson Cooper in Haiti, the network is providing for his needs," Orlando said. "Two students going down there might not be getting the same access to those resources."

The thesis presentation is scheduled for April 15, and Bougher and Safiullin are concerned about whether they will be allowed to graduate because they feel their project is unfinished.

"It's very unfortunate that a university that has very high standards wants us to submit something very incomplete," Safiullin said. "That's not journalistic."

Bougher, who was recently named the Outstanding Master's Student in the College of Journalism and Communications, said he and Safiullin are more concerned with their work than with taking a shot at the university administration.

"As journalists, our goal is to get the best story possible," he said. "We're not trying to give the university a black eye; we're just trying to make the best film that we can."

In an e-mail to the College of Journalism and Communications faculty, Churchill Roberts, co-director of the Documentary Institute, said the students had two choices — they could either submit a thesis that didn't have any post-earthquake footage or abandon the thesis track and fulfill their degree requirements by taking comprehensive exams.

According to Roberts, both options "raise serious questions about academic integrity."

Linda Hon, the executive associate dean of the College of Journalism and Communications, and Debbie Treise, the college's associate dean for graduate studies, met with Roberts to discuss alternative ways the students could complete their thesis work.

Hon, through her assistant, declined an interview and said she "doesn't feel that she can respond since this is a university policy."

Roberts, who called the situation "a terrible embarrassment" for the university, said Bougher and Safiullin are more than capable of filming in Haiti. While the welfare of students is paramount, the university is setting a dangerous precedent by not allowing student journalists to travel to disaster areas, he said.

"That's what attracts journalists," he said. "If this is the university's knee-jerk reaction every time there's a natural disaster, they might as well close the door to the College of Journalism and Communications."

For now, Roberts said he is focused on making sure Bougher and Safiullin graduate and produce the best product they can.

"I would give anything to find a solution that would be acceptable for the university and for [the Documentary Institute]," he said.

Fall tuition increase likely

By JOEY FLECHAS
 Alligator Writer

By this fall, UF's tuition will likely increase by 15 percent in order to bring it closer to the national average, according to UF President Bernie Machen.

The hike could accompany a switch to block differential tuition, which benefits students who take 15 or more credit hours per semester and would create a more steady revenue stream for the university.

Under block differential tuition, the state could increase tuition by 8 percent, and, according to Machen, UF would then increase tuition by 7 percent, which brings the total increase to 15 percent.

The 8 percent increase affects the tuition cost per credit hour while the 7 percent increase is based on a 15 credit hour course load, which means students get a better value by taking 15 credit hours or more.

A bill related to the change in tuition policy for Florida public universities is currently being debated in the state legislature.

Before the change is made at UF, the bill must be approved by the Legislature and signed by the governor. UF would need to notify parents if administrators wanted to implement the change in the fall.

According to Machen, block tuition encourages students to graduate faster.

Currently, 58 percent of students graduate in four years, he said. As the cost of education becomes more of a burden for students, Machen said he hopes they will want to play a bigger role in the university's budgeting process.

"The student voice is important," he said.

Different budget proposals are being considered in both houses of the Florida State Legislature, and more budget cuts could be on the horizon.

Machen emphasized that there are some areas of the budget he would prefer not to cut.

"It is our preference not to make any more personnel or program cuts," he said.

At this month's Board of Trustees meeting, he expressed his concerns about cutting employee health and retirement benefits.

Man cites boredom after arrest on streaking charge

KINGSPORT, Tenn. — A man who has been charged with making a naked dash through a Tennessee supermarket told police he was "bored and didn't have anything else to do."

The Kingsport Times-News reports that a man entered an IGA store Friday night, wearing nothing but a face mask, and ran around the aisles.

A police report says officers found the suspect in the bathroom of a nearby Hard-ee's restaurant.

Employees say he entered the fast food outlet wearing nothing but an orange hooded sweatshirt and asked if anyone could lend him clothes.

An employee gave him a pair of athletic shorts.

Kingsport police arrested 22-year-old Daniel R. Lee of Church Hill and have charged him with indecent exposure.

Krishnas share culture

■ IT TOOK PLACE FROM 10 A.M. TO 2 P.M.

By DEANNA CRAFT
Alligator Contributing Writer

The Hare Krishnas set up more than their normal lunch buffet Monday.

The third annual Festival of India, which took place from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., featured four different tents with educational displays where students could ask questions about Krishna beliefs or learn about vegetarianism, reincarnation and the Illustrated Bhagavad Gita sacred text.

About 100 students stopped by the tents throughout the day.

The event was sponsored by the Krishna House, an outreach center where students can live or learn about the beliefs of the Hare Krishnas.

Billy Frasier, a mechanical engineering junior, was on his way to Library

West when he stopped to look at the Illustrated Bhagavad Gita tent.

"It's all very strange to me," he said. "The idea of reincarnation and karma and Hare Krishna. I couldn't even think about going vegetarian."

The event did not just feature educational displays.

Krishna-kripa Dasa, an expert on the Hare Krishna's sacred text sang about the Bhagavad Gita throughout the morning.

Krishna-kripa Dasa and Carl Woodham, chaplain of Krishna House, also walked around the lawn answering questions from students, including questions about the sacred text.

Erika Trnka, a linguistics junior, said she liked the exhibit because it was informational and the Hare Krishnas were not pushy.

"It allows me to learn about Krishna without feeling like I'm being preached to," Trnka said.

Counselors see increase in eating disorders in spring

By NATASHA BETTY
Alligator Contributing Writer

After packing on the pounds during colder months and concealing the weight under heavy winter clothing, students begin to lose weight fast before summer.

"Leading up to the end of spring, we get more students who want to control their body image," said Liz Lagasse, a nutritionist at UF's Student Health Care Center who counsels students about nutrition and healthy dieting.

She said there has been a spike in appointments at the center before summer.

While most people have some distress about their appearance in shorts and bathing suits, it's especially troubling for those who suffer from eating disorders, she said.

"It's easy to imagine how the pressure to look good can trigger someone to go to the extreme to fit in and look the part," she said.

When Lagasse gets students who are overly worried about their body image and seem to have the potential to develop an eating disorder, she counsels them, offers to be a model of healthy self-esteem and teaches them to talk about themselves with respect and appreciation.

"It's easy to imagine how the pressure to look good can trigger someone to go to the extreme to fit in and look the part."

Liz Lagasse
nutritionist at UF's Student Health Care Center

Marissa Noelte, a health science major and Student Recreation and Fitness Center employee, said she has overheard girls saying they are getting in shape for summer.

"If I wasn't secure in my body image, I would probably fall into that trap of being super thin because of what I see in magazines and on TV," Noelte said.

Eating disorders include anorexia, bulimia and binge eating disorder.

"It's not an easy issue," Lagasse said. "It cannot be cured by one word or a quote."

Incoming freshman gender gap follows national trend

Jocelyne Sanchez / Alligator Staff

■ UF'S FALL ENROLLMENT WILL BE 54 PERCENT FEMALE, 46 PERCENT MALE.

By JULIA MCCLURE
Alligator Contributing Writer

Nicholas Slater was sitting in his health class of about 50 students when he noticed something bizarre about his class.

"I'm a guy," the UF psychology and sociology sophomore said. "I look around, and there's only four other guys in here."

But he said he didn't mind being surrounded by more women in the classroom.

"It's kind of nice," he said, with a laugh. "To be honest, I wouldn't want to go to a university with a lot of guys."

Slater picked up on a national trend that is growing at UF. National college enrollment is now 57 percent female and 43 percent male.

According to UF spokesman Steve Orlando, six out of 10 new UF students will be women in fall 2010, which is the largest gender gap favoring female students that UF has ever had. UF's fall 2009 enrollment was 54 percent female and 46 percent male, according to the UF Office of Institutional Planning and Research.

UF is aware of the gap but not doing anything to balance the numbers, Orlando said. But he said the school isn't discriminating against male applicants.

"Boys wouldn't be admitted because they're boys," he said. "Girls are being admitted because they are doing the things to be admitted and boys aren't."

New Alachua County health program director takes office

He was hired about two weeks ago

By CAITLIN E. O'CONNOR
Alligator Contributing Writer

The Alachua County health program Choices (Community Health Offering Innovative Care and Educational Services), which provides health care services to the county's working uninsured, got a new director Monday afternoon.

Bob Bailey, who has a master's degree in health administration from the University of Cincinnati, said he has worked in health care for more than 35 years.

Bailey has lived in Gainesville for three years working for AvMed Health Plans.

Before that, he worked for various health management organizations in the Philadelphia area for 12 years.

Bailey, who began his first day in office Monday, was hired about two weeks ago to replace the previous director, Lorraine Austin.

Bob Bailey
Choices director

Austin left four months ago for a different position.

Bailey said he wants to extend the benefits offered by Choices to more eligible citizens in innovative ways, such as mobile health screenings.

"We want to get similar benefits to people in other parts of the county who may not have the quality of care as those in Gainesville proper," he said.

Bailey's appointment comes on the heels of Congress' historic passage of the Health Care and Education Affordability Reconciliation Act, which will reportedly extend health care coverage to 32 million Americans.

According to a press release, Bailey's starting salary is $66,146.

Mayor recalls climate summit at coffee house

By ALEX ORLANDO
Alligator Contributing Writer

Mayor Peegen Hanrahan was one of 80 mayors the White House invited to attend the Copenhagen Climate Conference in December, and she almost missed her chance to attend the international summit.

Hanrahan recounted that her December trip to Denmark to attend the conference meant to act as an international successor to the Kyoto Protocol Monday evening to about 30 people at Volta Coffee, Tea & Chocolate.

As Hanrahan recalls, she almost forgot to collect her conference passes before her trip across the globe.

The international conference was held in Copenhagen from Dec. 6 to Dec. 18 with Hanrahan attending the conference from Dec. 14 to Dec. 17.

Her trip was funded by Local Governments for Sustainability, a membership association of more than 600 U.S. local governments committed to protection and sustainability.

The talk at Volta, which was sponsored by Alachua County Young Democrats, also included a Q-and-A session where members of the audience questioned the mayor about Gainesville's sustainable future.

Derek Helmick, a UF senior and member of Alachua County Young Democrats, asked Hanrahan what she thought the most effective use of her time was as mayor.

Hanrahan cited reducing Gainesville's reliance on coal.

"To up renewable energy to 26 percent is a pretty cool thing," Helmick said, referring to Hanrahan's plan for a biomass power plant for the city.

Danielle Emenhiser, 23, a UF alumna and president of Alachua County Young Democrats, said she felt it was important to have

"Gainesville has become world renowned for environmental efforts," she said. "I think it's an incredible opportunity."

Jon Reiskind, 69, chairman of the Alachua County Democratic Party, also attended the talk.

He said although the event was sponsored by a Democratic organization, its message was for all citizens of Gainesville.

"We're not talking about a Democratic issue," he said. "We're talking about an international issue."

Hillel holds first of two Passover Seder meals

By MEREDITH RUTLAND
Alligator Contributing Writer

Hillel held its first of two Passover Seders on Monday night. About 300 people attended.

Passover, which lasts for eight days, is the celebration of the Jewish people's deliverance from slavery in Egypt and has been celebrated for thousands of years.

"It really is the creation of the Jewish people," said Keith Dvorchik, executive director of UF Hillel.

Hillel's second Seder is tonight at 8:30 p.m.

The Passover Seder is always done in the same order, no matter where it is celebrated. This creates a sense of unity among the Jewish people, Dvorchik said.

But Hillel did do something unique.

Rather than just reading the Passover story, Hillel student leaders acted it out, which made the Passover story more fun for Jewish students, according to Dvorchik.

He said Passover is a time for family to get together, and it can be a difficult time for students who are away from home.

But it can also be a new and positive experience.

Brianna Peters, a UF freshman, said she misses not being at her grandmother's house with the rest of her family, but she is glad to celebrate the holiday with her friend, who sat across from her at the set table.

"It's going to be a new experience for me," she said.

Some students gathered with both their families and their peers, including Matt Bloom, a biology major, who came to Hillel with his brother, mother and grandmother.

"I enjoy my religion, and I'm glad that Hillel has so many Jewish students to celebrate the holiday with," Bloom said.

Hillel's second Seder meal will be held at 8:30 tonight.

About 200 celebrate diversity at 'IRHA-bian' dance

■ THE DANCE KICKED OFF A WEEK OF EVENTS.

By ANDREA RUMBAUGH
Alligator Contributing Writer

The Inter-Residence Hall Association turned up the heat at its Hotter Than Hot Diversity Dance Showcase Monday night.

About 200 people filled the Reitz Union Rion Ballroom at 8 p.m. to watch performances reflecting the diversity of UF's students through dances originating from places including West Africa, Brazil and Ireland, said Stephani Babcock, director of the dance showcase.

The dance showcase is part of IRHA's annual Residence Hall Week, which began Friday and ends Thursday. The week, themed IRHAbian Nights, is a chance for the individual resident halls to pool their resources and have a week-long event for all UF students.

"It's just a great way to bring together residents from different areas," Babcock said.

It takes about a year to organize the event, and although small details like arranging the music can be stressful, the final product is the most rewarding part of Babcock's year.

"It's a stress that's worth it," she said. "It's an experience that's worth it."

The audience especially appreciated the event's diversity.

Sriyani Dissanayake, a mother of a dancer in a classical Indian dance club Gator Natyam, enjoys UF's diversity.

"I like all kinds of music and dance, so I'm enjoying [the showcase]," she said. "I'm glad you are having this type of event for students to enjoy."

Siobhan Parker, a zoology junior, came to support her friends in the Brazilian Capoeira performance and was excited to see a variety of acts at the show.

"That Indian dance — I've never seen anything like it," she said.

Residence Hall Week does not just involve performances and activities. It has also raised more than $600 for the Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation, said the philanthropy director Bethany Marchwinski.

"Helping to create and promote a healthy campus community."

Sugar Daddies

RNC spending both comical and outrageous

We understand Republicans are super pissed that whole historic social welfare, insurance-for-the-poor bill passed last week, and why shouldn't they be? Who cares about the mere 32 million Americans who will now be able to afford crazy things like hospital visits and life-saving medication?

Can we get a "Wasteful spending, whoop, whoop!" in the house?

But we're not too sure about the way the Republican National Committee vented its frustration with those pesky House Democrats last month.

According to an RNC monthly financial report, our very own GOP spent nearly $2,000 on "food" at the sex-themed nightclub Voyeur West Hollywood.

As if this tiny two-grand scandal wasn't sweet enough, Voyeur West Hollywood is a nightclub that allegedly features topless dancers in bondage outfits.

We have to wonder, are these really the same lawmakers who protest certain — and we dare say more important — bills about health care and jobs for reasons of expenses, while paying strippers $2,000 to shake their leather-bound loins for a couple Benjamins hanging out of their bejeweled G-strings?

At least no one can say the GOP doesn't know how to party.

And while we're on the topic, we might as well mention that the Republican Party spent nearly a whopping $14,000 at the New York City candy store Dylan's Candy Bar.

At least we can rest peacefully knowing those sure-to-be-diabetic-soon recipients of candy-crowded gift baskets will have guaranteed health care.

He Bangs ... He

Our favorite She-Bangin' singer will most definitely not be banging any more "shes."

After years of no one speculating about the skimpy-Speedo-wearing, surrogate-sponsoring father of two, Ricky Martin has finally opened his boca about what he means by "Livin' La Vida Loca."

In an announcement almost as shocking as a weather forecast at the North Pole, Martin (finally) admitted his sensual dance moves and scarf-sporting style wasn't just due to his Latin lifestyle. He is gay.

And to be more accurate, according to his public announcement, Martin is a "fortunate homosexual."

We agree with our favorite have-you-even-made-a-CD-since-we-were-in-elementary-school singer in his fortunate qualities. We're much more excited in this announcement than when Clay Aiken made the same announcement to the unsurprised world.

A Google image search of Martin reveals photos of a soul-patch-sporting, highlighted-hair dream boy with an obvious affinity for bathing suits that accentuate his beautiful "bon bon."

So, we're supposed to be surprised by all this, Ricky? C'mon.

You make Elton John look like a toolbelt-toting Home Depot fanatic.

We knew ever since we laid eyes on you wearing that shimmering long-sleeved shirt on the cover of that self-titled album we secretly fell in love with.

And we love you even more for it. We know that it often takes more courage to tell the truth than to live a lie, and we wish you nothing but future happiness in your "vida loca."

Until then, we'll be waiting on you, Ms. Seacrest.

Suicides should inspire compassion

Six Cornell University students have committed suicide since the start of the school year. Two of the six took their lives earlier this month.

This has placed the issues of suicide and depression as topics of national conversation — a rarity, given how the mere mention of those words in everyday conversation often yields discomfort, a tense hush and a hurried change of subject. This is a terrible reality, given that few topics could benefit more from open, honest discussion than those two.

Consider that some of the cruelest and most vicious forms of depression don't make you feel too weak to get out of it, they make you believe a way out of it doesn't even exist. Depression doesn't make you think that the supposed "selfishness" of suicide is justifiable, it gets you thinking that you're such a burden to the people you care about that removing said burden is the most selfless thing you can do.

By no means am I trying to romanticize suicide. Few would ever seriously suggest that there's anything romantic about the emotional writhing that prefaces a suicide attempt or the heartbreak that's born from it. Fewer still would have attempted it themselves, or has held the hand of someone they love who had attempted it, or had to say goodbye to someone they love who completed an attempt.

I am suggesting, though, that some compassion and understanding is called for — or, at least, something more than the accusations of weakness, cowardice and selfishness that sometimes accompany a discussion of someone taking their own life.

Is the idea to mitigate how tragic suicide is by framing it as a moral failure? That doesn't work — ask someone who has lost a best friend, a child or a significant other and see how much mitigation actually occurs.

Or is the idea to make suicide such an embarrassment that nobody does it? That doesn't work, either — you can't shame the hurt out of someone, and adding a layer of "feeling bad for feeling bad" does little more than further isolate someone who already feels alone.

It's not contingent upon any of us to take ownership of anybody else's happiness. It's an unfair responsibility to place on oneself, and it's unfair to place an expectation on somebody to "get better" on someone else's terms or timetable.

However, we do have a responsibility, in whatever way we can, to make it clear that we are here for each other. That feelings of loneliness, frustration and fear are universal and bind us together in a sometimes horrible, sometimes beautiful sort of way. That failure is an entirely natural part of living, and it's rarely final or irrevocable. That the love we offer each other is not dependent on any artificial, quantitative measure of success — and more importantly, that our love is offered not just when it's convenient or easy to do so.

And that it really, honestly is OK to talk about it aloud.

I don't pretend that tossing around words like love is some automatic, magical solution. Suicide is a complex problem for which there are no simple answers. And it's inappropriate to use the deaths of six students to draw presumptuous conclusions while their loved ones and their campus are all still mourning.

But if nothing else, the tragedy in Cornell is a reminder, however awful, that everybody has their own stuff going on — their own private battles that they're quietly fighting, their own personal hells they're enduring without any outward sign that something's wrong.

When we speak of love, I have to imagine that that in part means acknowledging this and giving each other the dignity and decency of treating each other accordingly. And cynicism or fear of triteness aside, I really don't think we can be guilty of having too much love.

Letters to the Editor

Sacrifices, transformation are needed for change

This is to correct something a letter said Friday: Americans do not elect leaders to alter their country. Now just to quickly get to my point, a leader is meant to usher in what is best for a group of people.

Without transformation, no change can be established. Without this principle, we would still be under England's control. America's victory in World War II wouldn't have been possible without a major transformation of our economy forced in by the government.

Maybe this statement is what is wrong with our system. Leaders shouldn't be elected to do nothing. They are there to protect the country and to do what is best for it.

As far as the war between Democrats and the American people. This represents what is wrong with the American democratic system. A bipartisan system is, by design, flawed; people have long since been voting by party not by views. I cannot count how many surveys I have seen that show most of the voters cannot even tell you the fundamental policies a candidate has.

There is one word I would like to leave readers with: sacrifice. Every major impact requires sacrifice — sacrifice of time, reputation and even lives. Soldiers have sacrificed their lives fighting for their country's right to be free and live free. Inventors sacrifice time and energy for their projects. I think we all know about 10,000 ways not to do something. And while we don't like change, sacrifices are needed. Food for thought.

Reader's letter about health insurance was inaccurate

Alligator, get a hold of yourself.

First, while I was happy to see Chelsea Fleck's inaccuracy-laden letter addressed, surely someone wrote in criticizing it for said inaccuracies properly. In any case, why you chose to publish the response by Mitchell Norton is beyond me.

I don't know what reality he lives in, but when not purchasing something subjects you to a tax that purchasers are exempt from, you have effectively been forced to make a purchase. This is such a basic concept that I can hardly believe it needs to be pointed out.

For full disclosure purposes, I hate stupid Democrats and stupid Republicans equally. Finally, lol at that "Double J" article. WTF?

City needs to focus on gender equality in workplace, not in bars

The city's actions prohibiting bars and restaurants from serving ladies' nights specials are anything but an anti-discrimination attempt. If the city wants to stop promoting stereotypes and societal divisions, maybe it should focus its efforts on making sure that men and women are treated equally in the workplace, especially in matters of equal pay for equal work.

After all, if I'm not getting paid as much for my work as the man sitting next to me at the office, I certainly can't afford to pay as much for a drink as the man sitting next to me at the bar.

Dove World pastor should be ashamed of displaying hatred

It would seem that Dove World Outreach Center has a pastor appropriately named. Having viewed the video of his hate-filled rhetoric concerning a runoff election for mayor of the fine city of Gainesville, I believe that the minister in question, Wayne Sapp, definitely is one. Hatred in the name of Jesus is simply unbiblical, hypocritical and unacceptable. Shame!

A quote by Amos B. Alcott, father of Louisa May, seems applicable to this pastor: "To be ignorant of one's ignorance is the malady of the ignorant."

Bright Futures should stay merit-based

Bright Futures should not be a need-based scholarship. It was merit-based not to reward students for being successful in high school, but to entice those successful students to stay at Florida schools.

Double standard against conservatives caused censorship of speaker

The Editorial Board's one-sided analysis of Ann Coulter's recent mistreatment by the University of Ottawa deserves greater analysis.

First, a clear summary of the events is necessary. Coulter was invited to speak at the University of Ottawa by the Campus Conservatives who were subsequently granted an auditorium by the administration to host the event.

However, the student government at U of O decided to denounce Coulter for what they defined as her "hate speech" and refused to allow the Campus Conservatives to put up posters advertising her speech. In fact, the student government and its cronies resorted to tearing down all the posters already up.

While the unrestrained emotions of students are to be expected, University of Ottawa vice president and Provost François Houle proceeded to write Coulter a letter, and, in the most condescending tone possible, proceeded to caution Coulter to "educate herself" on the free speech laws of Canada lest her errant mouth "lead to criminal charges." The example he chose to educate her with was hate speech used against an

"identifiable group."

Now, on the day of the event, the peaceful students at U of O lined up, attended Coulter's speech and challenged her controversial political ideas with well-reasoned arguments of their own.

Wrong. Around 2,000 of our peaceful counterparts to the north barricaded the entrance to the auditorium, issued threats of violence against Coulter, and called for the burning of her books. In fact, Coulter was secured in a nearby building with a bodyguard and local police due to the overwhelming threat against her.

Now, why did Coulter file a hate crime allegation against Houle? Two reasons. First, Houle singled Coulter out among all other speakers who have come to the University of Ottawa in an effort to intimidate and embarrass her because she is a conservative.

As Coulter was quick to point out, the university has previously hosted such loving and tolerant guest speakers as Israel hater Omar Barghouti and former Black Panther and communist Angela Davis, neither of which received a letter of concern from Provost Houle. The school also celebrates a week-long anti-Semitic festival called Israel Apartheid Week. How charming.

Second, Coulter is proving the point she is always trying to get across. There is a double standard in the mainstream media and academia against conservatives who are routinely harassed and boycotted while every theocratic dictator (Mahmoud Ahmadinejad), accused cop-killing leftist (William Ayers) or pro-infanticide professor (Peter Singer) is celebrated as an enlightened progressive.

Maybe if the students and administration at the University of Ottawa truly cared about broadening their knowledge and being tolerant of all civil discourse, then they wouldn't be scared out of their insulated minds over a speech Coulter never had the chance to give.

Reed's transition to tight end key for UF's offense

at quarterback, and that was evident at Monday's practice. Florida's first team worked primarily out of the I-form, and Reed even took snaps out of a Wildcat formation and managed the offense for two series at the end of practice.

On a run up the middle, he took a big hit from linebacker Lorenzo Edwards that drew cheers from the rest of the defense, but he won't be getting a red, non-contact jersey anytime soon.

Quarterbacks coach Scot Loeffler said putting Reed back at quarterback was "experimental" and that he won't switch back permanently. But that could change with an injury to starter John Brantley, who only has freshman Trey Burton backing him up.

Loeffler wouldn't specify the team's plan if Brantley gets hurt, but he said it would be a combination of solutions rather than a single replacement. Punter Chas Henry — who played quarterback in high school — has also spent time at the position this spring.

MOORE M.I.A., BUSHELL RETURNS: Receiver Carl Moore, an expected starter for next season, wasn't at Monday's practice. Moore practiced Saturday, and receivers coach Zach Azzanni and a UF spokesman declined to specify whether his absence was due to injury or off-field issues.

UF tight end Jordan Reed cuts upfield after a catch during the Gators' spring practice on March 22. Reed saw action in Monday's practice at his original position of quarterback.

You probably won't find Jordan Reed's name listed as a key player for the 2010 Florida football team, but his development will be a deciding factor in the success or failure of the Gators' offense.

The 6-foot-3, 240-pound red-shirt freshman has been UF's starting tight end in spring practice after moving from quarterback last season. And without a reliable tight end, Florida's hopes of using more of the I-formation would likely go down the drain.

"We've got to find that tight end. That's a keystone piece. ... Jordan Reed has to have a big spring here."

"We've got to find that tight end," offensive coordinator Steve Addazio said. "That's a keystone piece. ... Jordan Reed has to have a big spring here."

Maddox takes over at third

■ THE GATORS WILL FACE FSU TONIGHT IN JACKSONVILLE.

By TYLER JETT
Alligator Writer
tjett@alligator.org

It took Austin Maddox three years to forget how to play third base.

And it took him just two days to relearn the position.

After starting the season splitting time between catcher and first base, Maddox could be making his fifth-straight start at the hot corner tonight when No. 8 Florida (18-5) takes on No. 4 FSU (19-4) at 7 in Jacksonville.

"It felt a little weird because I haven't played there in so long," Maddox said. "But I'm getting used to it."

Usual third baseman Bryson Smith has not played since March 20, when he dislocated his finger against Mississippi State.

Needing a replacement, coach Kevin O'Sullivan asked Maddox to field ground balls the Monday after Smith's injury. Maddox played third base for a short time as a ninth grader at Eagle's View Academy, but his play as a catcher drew scouts' attention so the position did not stick.

"To be honest with you, there was no hesitation at all when Bryson hurt his finger as to what we needed to do," O'Sullivan

Position battles heating up

With the departure of so many starters from last year's team, spring practice presents a great opportunity for players to gain ground on the battle for a first-team spot in the fall.

The leaders and competitors are beginning to emerge for those openings.

Position Battle No. 1: Cornerback opposite Janoris Jenkins

Contenders: Senior Moses Jenkins, red-shirt sophomores Jeremy Brown and Adrian Bushell and freshmen Jaylen Watkins and Josh Shaw

Leader: It could be a Jenkins-squared pairing next year. After three years at UF, Moses Jenkins is finally playing with the first team, but it won't be an easy task to hold off the highly touted freshmen.

Dark Horse: Shaw was the UF's top-cornerback recruit, and he has shown flashes of that but needs to be more consistent. With a new cornerbacks coach (Teryl Austin), everyone gets a fresh start, and a freshman could win the starting job.

Position Battle No. 2: Middle Linebacker

Contenders: Sophomore Jon Bostic, redshirt sophomore Brendan Beal and senior Lorenzo Edwards

Leader: Whenever coaches and players talk about who needs to step up on defense, it is Bostic's name that comes up. Bostic and Beal have shared time with the first team, but Bostic has the advantage.

Dark Horse: There really is no dark horse in this race because it is only two-man competition. Edwards' move inside is most likely for depth reasons.

Position Battle No. 3: Tight End
Contenders: Redshirt freshmen Desmond Parks and Jordan Reed and fresh-said.

Last Wednesday, just two days after he began practicing third base, Maddox started against Florida Gulf Coast. In the first at-bat of the game, he fielded a grounder and gunned it to first to record the out.

During that sequence, Maddox flashed the cannon that made him a coveted recruit. He was once clocked at 94 mph as a pitcher, and his strong arm is an asset at third.

"If I can keep the ball in front of me, I've got a good enough arm where I can pick it up and throw (runners) out," Maddox said.

Despite playing four games at the position, Maddox has rarely been tested so it is unclear if he can be UF's long-term third baseman.

Maddox has recorded only five assists and already has an error. Moving to his left while tracking a ground ball Sunday, Maddox botched an attempt to scoop the ball and then could not locate it as it rested on the infield grass.

Maddox was able to recover, cleanly fielding two ground balls to help end the inning.

Already leading the Gators with seven home runs and batting average of .378, Maddox could be even more valuable as an everyday third baseman. He started the season splitting time between designated hitter and first base, and Florida was not getting much productivity out of its third baseman during that stretch.

Before dislocating his finger, Smith hit .255 and committed four errors in 16 games.

But with Maddox now at third, O'Sullivan can add his next-best batter to the lineup as DH. In Maddox's first three games at third, the strategy was unsuccessful as four players combined to hit 1 for 10 out of the DH spot.

Then on Sunday, Tyler Thompson showed how much Maddox's position change could help the Gators, going 3 for 5 as the DH and scoring two runs.

An extra bat could provide a boost to the UF's offense, assuming Maddox can shore up his defense.

"I feel like I've been doing pretty well over there," Maddox said. "I'm getting more comfortable every day. The more I play over there, the more comfortable I'm going to get."

information, I'll let you know," Azzanni said.

Meanwhile, cornerback Adrian Bushell was on the sidelines in shorts, making his first appearance.

UF coach Urban Meyer said at the beginning of spring practice that Bushell was dealing with academic and other off-field problems.

When he returns to the field, Bushell will be battling Moses Jenkins, Jeremy Brown, Josh Shaw and Jaylen Watkins for the cornerback spot opposite Janoris Jenkins.

"Because he just started, there's a mandatory two days without pads before he can get in pads," UF defensive coordinator Teryl Austin said. "Hopefully by Friday and Saturday he'll be out there. He's behind right now, but we'll get an idea of where he is and where he fits in."

man Gerald Christian

Leader: The switch from quarterback to tight end has looked natural for Reed this spring.

Dark Horse: With Parks injured, Christian has gotten plenty of reps. The way Christian and Reed have played, Urban Meyer might be able to use the two-tight end package he wanted to with Aaron Hernandez and Cornelius Ingram in 2008 before C.I. went down with a torn ACL.

Position Battle No. 4: Y Receiver

Contenders: Redshirt senior Carl Moore, redshirt sophomore Omarius Hines and redshirt freshman Stephen Alli

Leader: Moore has been taking the first-team reps but hasn't done anything special to put space between him and Hines, who showed last year he can make plays.

Dark Horse: At 6-foot-5, Alli could be a special talent one day. He's still raw, but that hasn't stopped him from making plays.

Position Battle No. 5: The Percy Position

Contenders: Redshirt junior Chris Rainey, redshirt freshman Andre Debose, redshirt sophomore Frankie Hammond and freshman Robert Clark

Leader: Rainey started working at receiver this spring and looks to be the top candidate for playing the role of Percy Harvin, which the Gators' offense missed last season with Brandon James in the spot.

Dark Horse: Clark probably doesn't have a chance of winning the job but has shown the ability to burn his defender deep. If nothing else, he is going to make a great return specialist next season.

Florida hopes to learn from mistakes against Oregon

Turnovers, poor defense have led to losses

By TONI-ANN MILLER
Alligator Writer

Florida knows what it does wrong in losses, but the young team can't seem to avoid making those mistakes.

In its four defeats this season, three against ranked opponents, UF has committed 83 turnovers, allowed 61 goals and failed to capitalize on its scoring opportunities.

"I'm not going to make excuses for it, as a group we need to figure out how to overcome those obstacles and beat these higher ranked teams, and learning how to win and compete at that level."

Amanda O'Leary
UF lacrosse coach

The Gators (6-4, 0-2 American Lacrosse Conference) will look to avoid that kind of play tonight when they host Oregon (4-6) at 6:30.

Of the teams' four common opponents, they each defeated Jacksonville and St. Bonaventure but lost to North Carolina and Johns Hopkins.

In a matchup of similar teams, Florida will emphasize keeping its focus in the face of adversity, should it fall behind.

"We compete for a half or a certain amount of time, and then we don't," UF coach Amanda O'Leary said. "I'm not going to make excuses for it, as a group we need to figure out how to overcome those obstacles and beat these higher ranked teams, and learn how to win and compete at that level."

The Gators' inconsistency began in February when they would take leaps forward then revert to old mistakes.

After it won the first two games of the season, UF suffered its first loss — a crushing 18-5 blow from North Carolina. The Gators won the next game, but dropped the next two games.

A three-game win streak followed the losses, but UF's run had to end, and Ohio State were the one to do it.

Freshman midfielder Caroline Chesterman called the loss "a heartbreaker" and said her team allowed its opponent to capitalize on its mistakes, as the Gators turned the ball over 17 times.

"It's frustrating not being able to perform as well as you know you are able to, but there's nothing you can do except," Chesterman said. "We're going to learn from what happened against Ohio State, fix those things and try to win against Oregon."

In its losses, UF has especially struggled on the offensive side. The Gators have scored double-digit goals just once in their losses, something they have done in all six of their wins.

Against the Ducks, O'Leary's squad is going to have to be ready to handle the pressure on offense.

"We need to execute just a solid offensive game plan, (because) their defense slides very early to double teams," she said. "Defensively, we're going to need to come out and play a solid defense. It's just the same old thing that we try to do in every game."

Matt Tripp / Alligator Staff

UF midfielder Caroline Chesterman called the Gators' 14-9 loss to Ohio State last weekend "a heartbreaker," and they'll get a chance to bounce back tonight against Oregon.
