Medical professor passes away at 81

By MATT HARRINGER
 Alligator Writer

Willie Joe Sanders had five children of his own to care for, but he also acted as a father figure for countless UF medical students.

Sanders, 81, one of UF's first black students and the first black faculty member at the UF College of Medicine, died Saturday after losing a battle with cancer.

Many people described Sanders as an "institution within an institution" because of the legacy he left.

Before coming to UF, he attended the Hampton Institute, now Hampton University, a historically black university in Virginia.

He served in the Navy and the Army. After returning from Korea in 1957, he got a job as a lab technician at UF's Health Science Center.

Sanders applied to UF in 1959 — before integration — and was told he'd need a court order to be accepted.

As a technician, he studied on his own time, and in 1962, when the school finally integrated, he was accepted as one of UF's first six black undergraduates and studied mathematics. He graduated in 1970.

In 1968, he became the first black faculty member at the UF College of Medicine. He taught anatomy to first-year medical and dental students.

His daughter Paula Pringle said Sanders was an important role model for the few black-enrolled at the College of Medicine. He helped them with schoolwork and also helped them adjust to life at a predominantly white school.

He retired from UF in 1989, but soon grew bored without a job.

"My father wasn't a man to sit still and let moss grow on his seat," Pringle said.

Sanders started teaching again at Florida A&M University's School of Ladies nights may end

■ IT CAN BE A VIOLATION OF THE CITY'S DISCRIMINATION LAW.

Kelli Stoops does not take Wednesday nights off.

Wednesday is ladies night, and Stoops, a waitress and bartender at Copper Monkey, knows she will bring home more cash.

"That's my main money maker," Stoops said.

But soon, Wednesday may be less lucrative for Stoops. This week, local bar and restaurant owners received a letter from Gainesville Equal Opportunity Director Cecil Howard telling them that offering ladies night specials may get them into trouble.

Any gender-based deals can be considered a violation of the city's discrimination law and subject to lawsuits, according to the letter.

"If [a business] says we will give one gender a discount not another, it's the same as giving one race a discount and not another," Howard said in a phone

Grooveshark faces suit

By ANDREW WYZAN
 Alligator Contributing Writer

Grooveshark may not care too much for money, but it could be forced to pay for oldies.

The Gainesville-based company, which allows users to stream and upload music free of charge, is being sued by Universal Music Group for illegally reproducing and distributing copies of songs from Universal's pre-1972 catalog.

The songs are copyright-protected under New York state law and include hits from popular musicians such as The Jackson 5, Buddy Holly, The Who and Marvin Gaye, all of whom are listed in the lawsuit.

Universal filed the suit in January in a New York state court for an undisclosed amount of money, which will be determined in a trial.

According to the 11-page suit posted on Digitalmusicnews.com, Grooveshark's business plan "is based on copyright infringement," and Grooveshark has caused Universal Music Group "irreparable injury that cannot be fully compensated or measured in money

ENVIRONMENT

Weather helps butterflies

By LAUREN LEGE

Alligator Contributing Writer

The turn of seasons is allowing the Miami blue butterfly population to thrive at UF. Waves of warm weather, critical to the species' survival, may assist UF efforts to restore the endangered butterflies, according to Jaret Daniels, Miami blue project director at the Florida Museum of Natural History.

"Our plant nursery and captive populations was impacted by the winter season," Daniels said. "It will simply mean a slower-than-normal ramp up to high captive numbers this year."

UF scientists had difficulty this winter maintaining a warm-climate flower the butterflies feed on. Nicer weather is expected to yield better results in the plant turnout, which would ensure a native source of nectar for the Miami blue butterflies, said Jeffrey Hansen, vivarium assistant manager at the museum.

The Miami blue, a small species with luminous blue wings, is native to Florida, with the largest population inhabiting South Florida's coastal regions, hence the species' name.

"It is also a highly visible endangered species, making it ideal for public education and nature viewing," Daniels said.

After Hurricane Andrew nearly wiped out the Miami blue population in 1992, conservationists believed the species was extinct.

It wasn't until 1999 that a colony of 50 Miami blue butterflies was rediscovered in Bahia Honda State Park.

Since rediscovery, conservation efforts have gone into effect to restore the fragile population, with UF leading the way with its monitoring and captive propagation program for the species, according to the Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission.

"Our plant nursery and captive populations was impacted by the winter season."

Jaret Daniels

Miami blue project director at the Florida Museum of Natural History

"Dr. Jaret Daniels has been the champion for this little known, almost invisible butterfly," said Michael Boulware, a natural history exhibit staff member. "He has taken a population of under 50, bred over 30,000, and replaced more than 7,000 in the field."

These efforts ensure the butterflies' entire adult lives can be spent in the area they are trying to re-establish as habitat, which will preserve the species for future generations, Boulware said.

"The Miami blue is a Florida endemic, meaning it does not occur elsewhere," Daniels said. "If it is lost from Florida, it is lost forever."

Entrepreneurs to speak

■ THE FORUM WILL FEATURE UF-TIED BUSINESSES.

By ROBERT IMFELD

Alligator Contributing Writer

The founders of Grooveshark and other successful entrepreneurs who have ties to UF will participate in a forum today to discuss how they opened their businesses.

The Student Entrepreneurs Forum, which will be held in Bryan Hall 232 from 5:30 p.m. to 7:30 p.m., comes at a time when, according to the Department of Labor, the national unemployment rate is creeping up to nearly 10 percent.

Kyle Futch, project captain, said he is excited for Grooveshark's founders to participate because the online music service is such a hit with UF students.

Josh Greenberg, co-founder of Grooveshark and vice president of products, said he hopes to help young entrepreneurs by sharing some of the experiences he's had while financing and managing his company during the last four years.

"The time I spent at UF showed me how much talent there is in Gainesville, and gave me inspiration for being able to operate a tech company outside of the traditionally tech-centric regions of the country," Greenberg said.

Greenberg thinks even in such a rough economy, younger people are more inclined to take leaps of faith to pursue their dreams.

Futch said he hopes the looming knowledge of near-double-digit unemployment rates will attract more students to the event as he added the theme for this year's program is UF students' success in opening their own businesses.

Each of the five speakers at today's moderated panel either graduated from or currently attends UF.

The other businesses represented are Fracture, a company that prints images onto glass; Student Maid, a cleaning service; and Kids for Karate, a non-profit organization that teaches underprivileged children.

None of the companies were paid. Students in Free Enterprise, the UF organization that is sponsoring the event, is an international organization that promotes student leadership in business.

Students who want to attend should e-mail sife.entrepreneurship@gmail.com to ensure a reservation.

SG creates Reitz liaison position

It was a unanimous vote

By ELIZABETH BEHRMAN
Alligator Writer

Student Senators continued conversation about the Reitz Union repairs at Tuesday night's Senate meeting.

Senators unanimously passed a bill creating a liaison position between the Student Senate and the Reitz Union Board of Managers.

The liaison will attend the Board of Managers' meetings and report back to the Senate upon request.

Senate President Kara Olesky said she has been hoping to create a position like this for a while.

"I feel that we should be having stronger communication, especially because we do give them a budget and we do give them funding," Olesky said.

Last week, senators rejected a bill presented by the Student Alliance party which would have created a Reitz Union oversight committee.

The committee would have worked with the Board of Managers to determine which Reitz Union repairs are necessary and why money was not set aside when the union was built to make the repairs.

Jonathan Ossip, Student Alliance party Senate leader, said having a single liaison is better than having nothing, and his party will be working on a comprehensive reform package for the Reitz Union to present to the Senate in the fall.

Ossip said the Senate needs to be looking into how the Reitz Union is governed and how its budget is used.

"I feel that we should be having stronger communication, especially because we do give them a budget, and we do give them funding."

Kara Olesky
Senate president

"It doesn't take a Ph.D. or an engineering degree to know that you need to maintain money to keep your building going," Ossip said. "I really hope that in light of the huge problem facing the Reitz Union that this position does actually do something."

Unite Party Sen. Ben Meyers said a Reitz Union oversight committee would have been redundant.

"But it's definitely good to have a liaison between us and the Board of Managers," Meyers said.

Senators also heard a presentation about the pros and cons of making health insurance mandatory for all UF students.

During the presentation, Brandon Sack, the health insurance executive director for SG, said about 20 percent of students do not have health insurance, while 80 percent have their own plan or are covered under their parents' health insurance policy.

He said buying the school-sponsored health insurance mandatory would create a 7 percent increase in the cost of attendance.

But students would still be free to purchase their own policies, Sack said.

Any student is free to go out on their own to the individual insurance market and buy their own, which meets certain minimum standards.

Senators also unanimously passed an amendment to the budget transferring about $14,000 from the Accent and SG Productions co-sponsorship budget to the SGP general budget.

TJ Villamil chairman of the Budget and Appropriations Committee said the amendment will help put money back into the hands of students.

City golf course closes for $1.3-million reconstruction

By ROXANNE FRASER
Alligator Contributing Writer

Beginning Tuesday, Ironwood Golf Course is temporarily closed for reconstruction.

"The golf course was long overdue for renovation and the discussion to renovate the golf course is one of necessity," said Bob Woods, Gainesville spokesman.

But some of the main questions deal with the construction's price tag — nearly $1.3 million.

The city of Gainesville will issue $1,267,500 in bonds to finance the project. The bonds will be repaid by golfers during the next 20 years by paying an additional $5 per round as a "capital improvement" charge.

Some of the renovations include repairing cart paths, enlarging the driving range tee and the putting green and installing an electric irrigation system.

Ironwood, located at 2100 NE 39th Ave., is scheduled to reopen in October.

Meanwhile, monthly walking tours will take place with the golf course architect, Mike Beebe. He will describe the ongoing renovations, and the tours are open to the public.

"I'm very cool with the renovations of the golfing range because these things are bound to happen, especially with the [rain-falls] in the summer," said Jordan Rosales, a political science major who enjoys golfing during his free time.

'Twilight' novella announced

By EMILY MORROW
Alligator Contributing Writer

"Twilight" fans thirsty for more vampire stories have a reason to celebrate.

Stephenie Meyer, the 36-year-old author of the "Twilight" series, announced in a press release Tuesday that a 192-page novella titled "The Short Second Life of Bree Tanner" will hit bookstores on June 5 and will cost about $14. The short story will be available for free online from June 7 to July 5.

Bree Tanner is a newborn vampire who was introduced briefly in "Eclipse," the third book in the "Twilight" series. The story will feature her perspective traveling with a vampire army through Seattle.

The book will be released 25 days before the movie "The Twilight Saga: Eclipse" hits theaters.

thinks releasing the book just before the movie is a good idea.

"I think it will help generate even more traffic for the movie," she said.

Book sales will also benefit the American Red Cross International Response Fund, which aids in disaster relief efforts.

According to the press release, $1 from each sale will go to the fund, and the online version of the book will include a link for donations.

Pam Jones, general manager of the Newberry Road Borders Bookstore, said the humanitarian aspect of Meyer's book is relatively new to the publishing world.

But she thinks Meyer's name, rather than the prospect of donating, will play a bigger role in boosting sales.

Harlem students tour campus

■ THEIR TEACHER HOPES TO URGE THEM TO GO TO COLLEGE.

By STEFANIA FERRO

Keith Robinson made a promise to his 90 math students within the orange-and-blue-papered walls of his Harlem, N.Y., classroom.

If they excelled in their classes, they could visit UF, where Tim Tebow made the "promise speech" that has served as a motivational force in their classroom.

Twenty seventh-grade students from Intermediate School 195 visited UF Tuesday after Robinson, 26, their math teacher and a UF alumnus, raised more than $8,000 for the trip through an online donation site.

Their visit will include a tour of campus, a trip to the UF Digital Worlds Institute and a trip to a local horse farm.

Some of the students like A'nisa Megginson, 12, said they hoped to meet Tim Tebow. Megginson said Tebow talked to them on the phone.

The purpose of the trip is to encourage students to pursue college, he said.

Robinson had no doubt he was going to college, but that's not the case for these middle schoolers.

"It's not a given," Robinson said. "And for a lot of them, it's not an option."

Taking Tebow's lead, the students have signed their own promises to work hard in their classes.

In a video Robinson made and posted online, his students touch a picture of Tim Tebow and a laminated sign of Tebow's promise.

On Campus The video helped make the trip to UF possible by spreading the word about Robinson's goal to visit UF with the students.

Robinson raised the money by setting up an account on Donorschoose.org, an online charity, in January and needed to raise almost $7,000 for 24 round-trip plane tickets to Gainesville, according to the Web site's records.

Fifty-seven donors in a little less than a month donated $8,480.54 for the project and the charity organization.

Students react to health bill provision

By ANNIE BOGGS

In six months, second-year UF law student John Hunt will have one extra year of free health care.

After the U.S. House of Representatives passed historic health reform March 21, Hunt, like many fellow students, will be able to remain on his parent's health insurance plan until he is 26 years old, an increase from the current 22.

"I think it's a great idea," Hunt said of the new bill.

Robert French, a 26-year-old UF political science major, is covered by UF's health insurance plan but, like Hunt, spoke positively about the rewards younger students will reap with Congress' approval of the health care bill.

yourself," French said.

Taking effect in about six months, this change will be one of the first elements of the bill people will be able to see. The changes to allow dependent children to remain on their parents' plans for an additional four years comes at a time when the slow job market hinders many college students and graduates from being insured by employment.

In February 2010, the unemployment rate for college graduates 25 or older was 5 percent, according to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics.

We Want You

Alligator wants the Student Body's input

If you could ask Secretary of Education Arne Duncan anything you wanted, what would it be? Would it be about the value of your degree when you graduate?

What about how Obama and his administration plan to provide jobs for you once your done with school?

Or would it be about the frustrations of trying to find and secure financial aid?

Well, you may just get a chance to have that question answered.

For those of you unaware, the Independent Florida Alligator, alongside about 60 other schools, have teamed up with Huffington Post in an effort to showcase problems, achievements and scandals facing college students and their universities today.

Since it's launch in mid-February, HuffPo College has tackled issues about everything from college debt to our underwater hockey team. And yes, Unite Party, they picked up the story involving the audio tapes at your "fun and encouraging" election rally.

Now its teaming up with the White House for an "Open for Questions" live chat.

Here is where the competition comes in.

Huffington Post will select 25 questions submitted by the college papers it works with. And those questions will be asked at the 30-minute video chat with Duncan and Melody Barnes, the White House's top domestic national policy adviser.

The Alligator gets to send in three questions, but we want to know what's on your minds. So give us your input. E-mail us, Facebook us, Tweet us, use smoke signals or send owls.

We don't really care what delivery method you choose.

You all may not believe it, but we really do value your opinion and want to know what you think is important.

You have until noon Friday. Don't let us down.

All Fired Up

We're always surprised at the new levels of hypocrisy some people reach, and the recently proposed Florida House of Representatives Bill 315 is no exception.

Adoption agencies in the past have been able to ask potential parents if they have a firearm in their houses. Bill 315, sponsored by Osceola Republican Rep. Mike Horner, would keep these agencies from asking this question.

We can't see how this is in any way infringing on someone's rights. Answering "yes" to the question would not cause the adoption agencies to deny a child to potential parents; state officials say there's no record of someone being denied adoption because of owning a gun. The question is asked because the agencies want to give safety tips to parents, especially first-timers, so that they may raise their children without any danger. The agencies aren't asking people to get rid of their guns before they adopt or refusing them anything that families without guns would be getting. It's just another question about the safety of a potential new home.

But this one just might infringe on the rights of barren National Rifle Association members, so it has to go.

There haven't been many challenges to this new bill; everyone seems perfectly happy with it. And, yet, this sudden outrage at lives being pried into does not extend to the question that continues to remain on these adoption forms: whether a potential adopter is religious. Apparently, people shouldn't have to say whether they own guns, but worshipping something is important.

And we won't even get started on gap adoption.

Current wars challenge our generation

No matter your politics, as a citizen of the world and a product of history, you must recognize that the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan are pivotal moments in our age that will have repercussions for decades to come.

Although my knowledge of the situation on the ground in these countries is patched together through futuristic military recruitment commercials and "The Hurt Locker," it is clear that both wars will not only continue to have an effect on the current generation in power but will also color all aspects of life for our generation as we move forward and take the reins of society.

By our generation, I mean those people from roughly their late teens to their early 30s, the generation that has embraced technology, grown more connected to society because of it and eventually has evolved into a people constantly striving for something new, different and bizarre (the so-called "Lady Gaga principle").

However, beyond today's popular culture and the events that currently shape our daily lives, I see a growing disconnect that stems from the continuation and expansion of these two wars. With the wars continuing unabated and tensions mounting over the futures of both conflicts, I feel that the most pressing issue facing us is a social chasm between the young soldiers who are being sent to war and those of us of the same generation who are here at home.

Looking at statistics, the average age of an active duty soldier is 28, and almost half of all soldiers are between the ages of 22 and 30.

When looking at news reports coming out of these countries, I often see that I am the same age as many of these soldiers fighting and dying abroad.

Although support of the troops is a strong American tradition, I can't help but feel that our generation will grow and split into those who have been touched by the wars and those who have not truly felt its sorrow.

In the past, countless generations of Americans have suffered through war and have successfully reconciled its pain

The views expressed here are not necessarily those of the Alligator.

Joshua Lee
letters@alligator.org

with the comforts of peace.

However, two current factors have the potential to combine and deepen the rift between those in our generation.

First, the explosion of social media and the online community has allowed people to escape not only the turbulence of their daily lives but the struggles of greater society, including these two conflicts.

While this technological revolution has bred a greater power to connect and share ideas, too often this power is diverted and used for socially irresponsible reasons.

Second, given the nature of these conflicts and how they have been branded by those who lead them, the gravity of our situation is often lost on many in the greater society.

Although these facts have been repeated so often they are on the verge of becoming hollow points, we are occupying two different countries and fighting a war that grows increasingly unconventional and infinitely more dangerous by the day.

Yet looking at the climate here at home, these facts are not properly reflected and seem to be lost among many in our generation.

They say that you can never understand war or see it properly until you are in it. This idea, augmented by the factors mentioned above, is the source for what I perceive as a dangerous disconnect in our generation.

But what can we do to close the gap? Turn all farms on Farmville into virtual war gardens? Mandate daily tweets to service members deployed overseas?

Perhaps the only thing we can do is recognize that we are at war and work to anticipate the challenges we will face as a generation going forward.

Idol Hands editorial insulting

It has been said that "anti-Catholicism is the anti-Semitism of the Left." The Monday editorial "Idol Hands" is vivid proof this is true.

Disappointing enough was the Alligator's jumping on the bandwagon of the international media, which has been itching to jump on the abominable scandal in Ireland and dig up the slightest shred of evidence by which to condemn the Holy Father — of which they will find none. But the Alligator clearly has not done much research. Worse still, the Alligator editorial staff showed its true colors with this repulsive and absolutely insulting editorial.

The writer was undoubtedly unable to contain his zeal to smear and spew his contempt for the Catholic Church. The writer attacked the often misunderstood, yet valid, doctrine on indulgences, completely disregarded the immense and beneficial work the church has performed throughout its history on behalf of the poor, dismissed an otherwise reasonable argument against contraception as being rooted in the Dark Ages along with abstinence programs and rosary beads, sneered at the spiritual leader of millions as our "over-embellished, over-publicized king in Rome," and took a crass and ignorant jab at the beautiful and revered Gregorian chant and antiquated traditions of which I am a student and lover.

Any self-respecting Catholic should be utterly insulted and disgusted at this Alligator editorial.

Is this the best journalism and the best reasoned and logical argument the Alligator can furnish to support its dripping hatred of the Church? Shame on the Alligator Editorial Board.

Graduate students should be able to include recent Haiti footage

As a 1989 graduate of UF from the College of Journalism and Communications, I think it is absurd that the two documentary graduate students, Jon Bougher and Roman Safiullin, can't include their recent footage from Haiti in their film due to UF's ban on post-earthquake travel there.

In my opinion, the university should not be able to restrict its students' travel, even for their own safety.

Doing so takes away from not only the school's reputation but also the students' experiences. Learning takes place outside of the classroom, too, and not always under completely safe circumstances.

I was shocked when I heard about this, and I immediately thought about what I would do in their situation.

My first thought would be to go ahead and use the footage anyway. Last time I checked, the university doesn't see all of the master's students' thesis projects. However, they could also do a "graduation edit" just to complete the program and then, once out from under UF's control, send their true edit to various film festivals. I'm thinking this is what they will end up doing.

Either way, the publicity their documentary has generated from the days following the earthquake to this current situation can't hurt them in the long run.

I say let them do their best edit up front. Let people see it and better understand what assistance Haiti needs now and be less of big brother trying to protect us from ourselves.

University should be embarrassed over controversy around student film

I am a student in the Documentary Institute. Jon Bougher and Roman Safiullin are my classmates. I want to echo my professor Churchill Roberts' words that the university should be embarrassed over the controversy that has risen around Bougher and Safiullin's thesis film. I just wanted to clarify that the two went back to Haiti after the earthquake mainly for two reasons: to finish their film, and because, I believe, after having spent nearly a year documenting the good people at Planting Peace, they felt an obligation not to abandon them at such a crucial time. It might be difficult for people not familiar with documentary filmmaking to understand, but Bougher and Safiullin needed to return to Haiti to complete their documentation of this story. As I understand it, the film is not about the earthquake. It is about a charitable organization trying to go great things in an impoverished country.

The earthquake hit. That happened. They were there when it happened. The earthquake has permanently changed the lives of not only the Haitian people, but also the activists whom Bougher and Safiullin are profiling. So the film cannot ignore this event. They need closure on this story, and trust me when I say they absolutely would not have been able to get it without returning to Haiti.

I understand that the travel ban was put in place for a reason. But I also know that they made their decision to return after much contemplation. They returned using private funds and private equipment. They absolutely did not go back to Haiti to defy or insult the university in any way. UF should be proud of these students. Instead they are putting them through the wringer.

UF provost Joe Glover's claim that Bougher and Safiullin went back to get "juicy footage" shows just how out of touch the university is with the Documentary Institute. But that's another story. I can tell you for sure as their classmate and friend that they were not licking their chops and rubbing their palms after the earthquake. Their project is not exploitative. They are dedicated and talented journalists and filmmakers. And as such, they feel a responsibility to stand by the commitment they've made. UF could learn from them.

Peter Salomone
Journalism graduate student

University's decision to censor should raise red flags

The University's decision to censor the documentary film thesis of journalism students Jon Bougher and Roman Safiullin should raise red flags for all students. Bougher and Safiullin, whose thesis centers on a Haitian aid organization, happened to be in Haiti when the earthquake struck. They may have lived to tell their story, but the University doesn't want them to.

I don't object to the University's policy of no UF-sanctioned, -sponsored, or approved trips for students to Haiti. It makes sense from a safety and liability perspective. What I do object to is the University's current stance that the students should not be allowed to use footage from the students post-earthquake, private return trips because it would circumvent the travel policy.

If the purpose of the policy is for safety and risk reduction, then what interest is served by censoring the thesis? Since student safety concerns generally aren't implicated by the presence of documentaries on campus, the answer appears to be retaliation for allegedly violating a policy that doesn't even address penalties for students who go on non-sanctioned trips to Haiti.

The footage highlights the aftermath of one of the worst natural disasters in recent memory and is of great public interest. The prospect of a university administration arbitrarily telling students (in their final semester, no less) that they must take out essential content of their thesis should not be tolerated.

Columnist is cynical moron

CJ Pruner's column on Monday regarding Jordan Johnson's political legacy had a few minor errors that I want him to acknowledge. One, while it is implied that the article is written by CJ Pruner, I cannot help but feel that others deserve credit for its content, namely, Michael Moore movies and malt liquor. Additionally, the article concludes by saying that he is a "journalism junior." I would like to recommend a more appropriate description, perhaps "cynical moron."

It is only appropriate that his guest column picture is of some goofy-looking kid with his mouth wide open. I cannot imagine a better visual representation of someone who thinks that his article is appropriate for a student-run newspaper.

interview.

No new laws are being written, he said. The letter just emphasizes a Gainesville city ordinance that says a business can't discriminate on the basis of gender.

"I tend to agree with the ruling on it," said Dana Rogers, owner of Art of Billiards.

Rogers, who recently stopped offering ladies night specials because they weren't profitable, said many bars have a two-hour special, which leads to women drinking as much as possible in that time frame. She also said some men use ladies night to take advantage of drunken women.

The Gainesville Office of Equal Opportunity has never received a gender discrimination complaint related to ladies night, but at least one student organization has expressed interest in making the weekly tradition illegal, Howard said.

Local News

The office does not issue citations or contact police, Howard said, but they do investigate whenever discrimination charges are filed.

"Our message is either equalize the playing field or do something different," he said.

After retiring from that job, Pringle said her father again became bored, so he started a pepper garden and used the peppers to make a homemade barbecue sauce.

"Tons of people wanted it," Pringle said. "He had his own private customer base of friends he supplied the sauce to for free."

A friend and former colleague, Tom Harris, associate vice president for administrative affairs, said Sanders was a gentle man and a gentleman who went the extra mile for his students.

"He was a father to all of them,"

Harris said. "Not only to his family, but to his students."

A memorial service will be held at 2 p.m. Saturday at the Faith Missionary Baptist Church, 2905 SE 21st Ave.

Sanders will be buried at the Florida National Cemetery for veterans in Bushnell on Monday.

Grooveshark, which is owned by Escape Media Group, Inc., operates as both a music search engine and streaming source. The site runs on a business model of advertising revenue and premium subscription fees.

Lyrissa Lidsky, professor of law at the Levin College of Law and expert in media law, said Grooveshark's business model makes it very vulnerable to this copyright infringement suit.

"If I were Grooveshark, I'd be worried," Lidsky said. She said the lawsuit may simply spur negotiations for a special licensing deal between Universal Music Group and Grooveshark.

Grooveshark negotiated a similar deal with Electric and Musical Industries Ltd., a British music company, after EMI sued the company last year.

Under this deal, Grooveshark pays to use music owned by EMI.

Errors hurt No. 8 Gators in 7-2 loss to No. 4 'Noles

Harrison Diamond / Alligator Staff

UF first baseman Preston Tucker committed one of the Gators' five errors Tuesday in their 7-2 loss to FSU in Jacksonville. Five of the Seminoles' runs were unearned.

JACKSONVILLE — Riding a five-game win streak, FSU didn't need help to top UF.

That didn't stop the Gators from lending a hand though.

No. 4 Florida State (20-4) scored five runs off five Florida errors en route to a 7-2 win at the Baseball Grounds of Jacksonville on Tuesday night. No. 8 UF (18-6) had committed 15 errors all season.

"That's something that's uncalled for, especially with the defense we have," second baseman Josh Adams said. "I take that personal."

FSU designated hitter Stuart Tapley scored the game's first run in the second inning after reaching on an error by right fielder Kamm Washington, who ran past Tapley's fly ball as it found the grass.

Tapley broke a tie again in the fifth when he scored off another error, this time by Preston Tucker with two outs to give the Seminoles a 3-2 lead.

"That was a ball that Preston usually bodies up and keeps in front of him," UF coach Kevin O'Sullivan said. "I can't really put my finger on it because we've been playing great defense all year."

Another Gators miscue helped the Seminoles extend their lead in the seventh. Junior Mike McGee hit a routine grounder to shortstop Nolan Fontana, but third baseman Austin Maddox cut in front.

Maddox missed the grounder, distracting Fontana and allowing McGee to reach first. McGee then advanced on a wild pitch and scored on a double by Seminoles right fielder James Ramsey.

Maddox, who has started UF's last five games at the hot corner, is new to the position and committed two errors Tuesday.

"That team that played tonight wasn't us," Maddox said.

A pair of bad outings from Anthony DeSclafani and facial injuries to Tommy Toledo have ravaged UF's pitching depth, allowing senior Jeff Barfield to make his first start of the season. Barfield, who made eight relief appearances prior to Tuesday, kept Florida State off balance with

Cullen leads UF past Oregon

Oregon scouted Florida well. It double-teamed Ashley Bruns and kept UF's leading scorer scoreless for most of the first half, but it had no answer for midfielder Kitty Cullen.

Cullen led an efficient offense for the Gators (7-4, 0-2 American Lacrosse Conference) in a 16-6 win over the Ducks (4-7) on Tuesday night.

She scored five of UF's 16 goals while Bruns added three scores and three assists. Attacker Caroline Cochran and midfielders Colby Rhea and Brittany Dashiell each added two goals on the night.

After a disappointing road loss to Ohio State, Florida returned home hoping to put the loss behind it with a win Tuesday over the Ducks, and it came away with one of its most complete games of the season.

The Gators played a nearly flawless offensive game, completing routine passes and making the more challenging ones look easy. Long forgotten were the 17 turnovers it had against Ohio State, as UF made only six on the night.

The team was determined to dominate the Ducks as it fought for and kept possession of the ball most of the night. Florida picked up 16 of the 20 ground balls and took 31 shots to the Ducks' 18.

Cullen said she and her teammates knew the importance of getting the win after the draining defeat it suffered last weekend, and when Oregon doubled Bruns, they knew what they had to do.

"We knew that if they were going to shut her off that everyone else needed to step up in her place," Cullen said.

UF's offensive play was the improvement coach Amanda O'Leary needed to see coming off the loss, especially when Oregon contained Bruns.

"When [Brun]s has the opportunity to go to goal, she has the green light, but

A lot to learn from Meyer v. Fowler

A week ago, UF football coach Urban Meyer went on a rampage and nearly crippled a reporter.

OK, not really, but for all the attention the story got, he might as well have.

Meyer's public dressing-down of the Orlando Sentinel's Jeremy Fowler is well-known, but seven days later, there are still some fuzzy edges to the story. A closer look at the incident shows how a conversation between a coach and reporter becomes national news — and how nearly everyone involved is to blame: Meyer, sports information staffers, reporters, Fowler and the Sentinel.

Last Monday, receiver Deonte Thompson made his infamous "real quarterback" statement comparing John Brantley to Tim Tebow.

He wasn't asked to clarify it, but to me, it's clear he meant "traditional" by "real."

No matter your interpretation, that doesn't meet the standard required to

Mike McCall
McCallin' It
Like I See It
mmccall@alligator.org

classify the quote as a "rip job" of Tebow, but that's how Fowler wrote it on his blog later that day.

Fowler edited the post a few hours later, removing the suggestive rip-job line, but in a business where it's a race to be the first to publish and blogs and tweets are viewed by readers right away, it's enough to affect opinions.

Fowler's later-edited sentence couldn't have been solely responsible, but the quote soon blew up into a national story, and Meyer started yelling.

The most obvious mistake was by Meyer, who was wrong and unprofessional to handle things the way he did.

UF struggles to replace Toledo

■ THE SOPHOMORE HAS BEEN OUT SINCE MARCH 14.

By ANTHONY CHIANG

Alligator Staff Writer
a Chiang@alligator.org

Tommy Toledo is not the only one who has been affected by his injury — the Gators are still trying to pick themselves up after the incident.

Ever since the sophomore was hit in the face by a comebacker on March 14, Florida has been looking for somebody to step up for the injured pitcher.

UF tried plugging freshman Hudson Randall into Toledo's usual weekend spot in the rotation, but that move hasn't been as successful as coach Kevin O'Sullivan would have liked.

In his last weekend start, Randall lasted one inning and gave up five runs on six hits Saturday.

And usual midweek starter Anthony DeSclafani has struggled all season with a 7.84 ERA.

So O'Sullivan tried something different against No. 4 FSU Tuesday. He gave his bullpen a chance to collectively fill the void.

Senior pitcher Jeff Barfield, usually a reliever, got his first start of the season, but he didn't last long. The right-hander rung up three hitters in two innings of work.

"[Barfield] was only going to go through the line up once because we need him for this weekend," O'Sullivan said.

From there the bullpen took over.

Justin Poovey, Randall, Nick Maronde and Kevin Chapman all pitched in relief against FSU in the bullpen-heavy game.

Toledo

But O'Sullivan's new method didn't provide a different result.

They combined to pitch seven innings while giving up six runs, two of them earned. Despite all of the runs coming off five errors, the bullpen kept Florida in the game. FSU was up just 5-2 in the seventh until Chapman gave up a two-run homer in the ninth.

"We had plenty of arms. It's not like we pitched poorly," O'Sullivan said. "Things got away from us at the end with Chapman on the mound."

With Toledo's return in question, finding a replacement will be an ongoing process that the Gators need to figure out as they head into the heart of their conference schedule.

FSU pitchers record 10 Ks

his curveball.

But O'Sullivan did not use Barfield as a traditional starter, pulling him after he allowed zero earned runs in two innings.

With no pitcher able to throw deep in the game, the Gators used six hurlers.

FSU reliever Brian Busch earned the win Tuesday, pitching 4.1 scoreless innings and allowing three hits. Busch and starter Geoff Parker combined to strike out 10 UF batters.

"Our older guys just got to step up and play better — it's as simple as that," O'Sullivan said. "We faced Parker multiple times ... you see a guy over and over and over, I'm disappointed in the strikeouts."

The Gators' offense managed two runs on six hits against the 'Noles, both runs coming off a second-inning homer by designated hitter Tyler Thompson. The sophomore pulled a pitch that barely carried past the right-field fence.

UF wasted a potentially productive fourth inning when the team failed to capitalize on a leadoff double by Maddox, who finished the game 2 for 4.

With Maddox on third, left fielder Daniel Pigott popped out and Thompson grounded out to end the frame.

Florida is 1-2 against FSU, and the two teams will meet for a final time April 13 in Tallahassee.

Baseball

Gators limit Ducks' leading two scorers to just three goals she was really smart tonight," O'Leary said. "They were doubling her on the crease, and she just made really good decisions."

Defensively, the Gators successfully cleared 16 of their 17 opportunities, did not allow their opponent to go on runs and were able to contain the Ducks' two leading scorers, Jana Drummond and Alex Breiner.

The duo, which has scored 57 of the Ducks' 138 goals this season, was limited to just three Tuesday.

UF goalkeeper Cara Canington gave up just two second-half scores and recorded seven saves in the net.

"The defense got the momentum going on the offensive side, shut down their big players, and they weren't able to score," Canington said.

"Our big goal today was, 'If they're going to score, let's make sure they don't score for another five or ten minutes; don't let them get the momentum.'"

UF did a solid job of avoiding the run and a slump when the Ducks put a quick score on the board to start the second half.

"The defense got the momentum going on the offensive side, shut down their big players, and they weren't able to score."

Cara Canington
UF goalkeeper

Instead it responded with six straight scores to seal the victory.

"When you set goals and you put things forth to this group, they've been able to achieve them," O'Leary said. "We definitely have struggled on the road, and that's been a problem, but here at home, they are pretty darn good."

Matt Tripp / Alligator Staff

UF midfielder Kitty Cullen resets the offense after attempting to drive to the net during the Gators' 16-6 win over Oregon on Tuesday in Gainesville. Cullen led the Gators with five goals.

But another is UF's current interview policy, which restricts access to group question sessions and is monitored by sports information staff. Players rarely say anything the least bit interesting, and if they do, they probably won't appear for interviews anytime soon, making it a bigger deal when someone speaks up.

The next mistake was shutting off interviews Wednesday as punishment for Thompson's comments going viral. Give a group of reporters nothing to report on except for Meyer yelling, and that's what they're going to write about.

The situation got awkward fast for Fowler, who declined comment for this story. No reporter aims to be the center of the story, especially in this kind of situation, but that's where he landed.

A "Jeremy Fowler" tag even had to be added to Fowler's blog, Swamp Things, for filing purposes, certainly not something Fowler or any reporter aspires to require.

Fowler is a genuinely nice guy and a distinguished AlligatorSports alum, but that doesn't mean he didn't make mistakes, and other members of the media need to take some responsibility for this going as far as it did.

But they won't.

You won't hear TV and radio hosts apologize for not bothering to get the full context of the quote, and you won't hear the Sentinel or other news outlets publicly admit they made a mistake.

Sentinel Sports Topics Manager Tim Stephens said in a statement, "Jeremy Fowler's story was accurate and presented in context. Urban Meyer's outburst, directed at Jeremy, was unwarranted and will not deter our efforts to report on University of Florida sports."

The first part of Stephens' statement is correct, if you change that first "was" to an "is." As I mentioned before, the original blog post did call Thompson's quote a rip job.

Now — it is frequently linked to as proof that Fowler did nothing wrong — it reads fairly. But it didn't always, and I don't see why the paper wouldn't be transparent about edits.

The day of the incident, another change was made. The line, "[Meyer] was coming to play better defense than he can coach in honor of Thompson," was cut without mention. That can be taken either as a slight to Meyer's ability to coach defense or to say Meyer was about to seriously D up. Without clarification, we don't know.

And that's the mistake that reporters who ran with the Thompson quote made — they didn't try to find out what he meant.

A few days before Thompson spoke, one player hinted that he wasn't satisfied with a coach last season. When a reporter — Fowler — did his due diligence and asked a follow-up for clarification, the interview was ended by a UF staffer. This isn't uncommon, as any controversial topics normally draw one of the Three-T's (trainer, tutoring, treatment) as reasons to cut off the questions.

This flare-up wasn't really handled well by anyone involved, but it's time for everyone to move on and get back to their respective jobs: catching (and sometimes dropping) passes, writing stories, setting up interviews and coaching football.

But hopefully this can be a learning experience.

If not, Meyer might actually cripple the next reporter.

UF aims to end struggles with top pitchers against UCF

Ana Goni-Lessan / Alligator Staff

UF junior Kelsey Bruder and the Gators have gone 1-2 against pitchers with an ERA less than 1.50 this season.

By GREG LUCA
Alligator Writer

Although the Gators are one of the most prolific offensive teams in the nation, everything seems to change when they go up against top pitching.

While Florida leads the Southeastern Conference in home runs and slugging percentage, the team has only scored four runs in 19 innings against pitchers with an ERA less than 1.50, and are batting just .162 in that span despite hitting a combined .349 against all other opponents.

The No. 6 Gators (23-4, 6-2 SEC) get a chance to improve on those numbers when they travel to Orlando to take on UCF (22-12, 7-1 Conference USA) and pitcher Ashleigh Cole tonight at 7.

So far this season, Cole is 14-6 with a 1.37 ERA, and has led the Knights to upsets of SEC powers Tennessee and Alabama.

In UF's three games against pitchers of that caliber, the Gators are just 1-2.

They were shut out by Georgia Tech's Hope Rush (16-3, 1.38 ERA) in just the second game of the season, and suffered the same fate at the hands of Stanford's Teagan Gerhart (18-3, 1.28 ERA), who allowed just two hits in her outing.

Their lone win came against Auburn's Anna Thompson (9-5, 1.06 ERA), who threw 4.2 innings of no-hit softball before being tagged for four runs with two outs in the fifth.

"Our offense really came together and made adjustments," Kelsey Bruder said. "We all talked about her pitches and what we were seeing and our body placement in the box."

Although the back-to-back home runs the Gators hit to knock Thompson from the game are a positive sign, there is still plenty left to prove.

Thompson is a pitcher who is successful primarily because of her velocity, which is not what the Gators' batters fear most at the plate.

Both Bruder and senior Francesca Enea agree that rotation, and not speed, is the hardest thing to handle as a hitter.

"The slower pitching with more movement is the hardest for me because I can't control my hips for that long," Enea said.

Although facing top-notch pitchers is inherently more difficult than normal, the UF hitters do their best to fight the urge to change too much.

Enea, Bruder and senior Corrie Brooks all agree that staying consistent and not trying to make too many adjustments is key against the best competition.

"You have to try to do everything the same," Brooks said. "You can't over-think yourself because that's when things are going to go wrong."

If UF struggles against certain pitchers, it is not due to a lack of preparation.

Each week, coach Tim Walton and his assistants gather whatever statistics and film they can to try to give hitters as much information as possible about who and what they will be up against.

"We see what type of pitching it is, if it's a drop, rise, curve or screw," Enea said. "We just start by looking at those type of things and then do a bunch of different things to get ready for it."

Above all, the Gators hitters know how important it is to keep their confidence up in those situations.

Perhaps none know better than Bruder, who was 0 for 2 with a strikeout against Thompson before delivering one of the home runs that led to her removal.

"The only thing that's different is they're going to have their out pitches, so you can't get down on yourself when you don't produce exactly how you want," Bruder said.
