Scooter rider pulled under car, dies in crash

By KAT BEIN
 Alligator Writer

A 20-year-old Gainesville man was killed early Saturday morning when he was hit by a car while crossing Southwest 13th Street on his scooter.

Matthew Taylor was turning north from Southwest 21st Avenue when he was hit by a northbound Mercedes sedan at about 2 a.m., according to Cpl. Tscharna Senn, spokeswoman for the Gainesville Police Department.

According to witness reports, Taylor and his scooter fell under the car, which eventually caught fire. Members of the Alachua County Fire Department, a security officer from Shands at UF and numerous GPD units arrived at the scene following several witness calls reporting the accident, Senn said. It is unknown whether Taylor was wearing a helmet.

Taylor was pronounced dead at the scene, and northbound traffic on Southwest 13th Street remained blocked until 6:45 a.m., she said.

Fault has yet to be determined, and the crash remains under investigation by GPD officers, Senn said.

Taylor described himself on Facebook as "a joker at heart ... i give alot and will always back anyone up who needs it." He said hard work made him who he was.

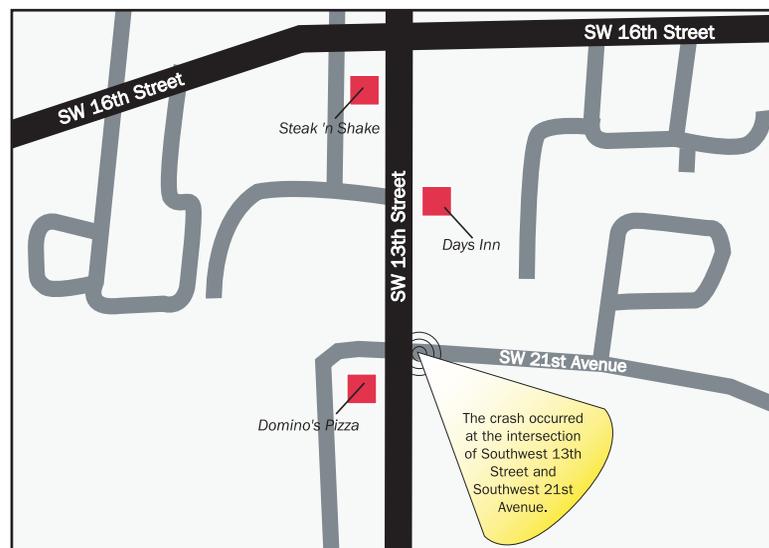

According to Facebook, Taylor worked as an assistant manager at Gator Domino's and was looking forward to marrying his fiancée, Ashley Haire, whom he'd dated since November of 2006.

Taylor's Facebook wall displays messages from friends, telling how he will be "infinitely missed." There will be a memorial service for Taylor on Thursday at 11 a.m. at the Williams-Thomas Funeral Home.

Gainesville bars skirt ladies night restrictions

■ BARS ARE HOSTING SHAVED-LEG AND HIGH-HEEL NIGHTS.

By ALEXANDER KLAUSNER
 Alligator Contributing Writer

It used to be that on certain nights, if you wanted a free drink, all you had to do was be a lady.

Now, for some bars, all you have to do is wear high heels or shave your legs.

With the city's recent talks of discouraging ladies nights in Gainesville, a few area bars have come up with some creative ways to circumvent legal problems.

But is the effort worth the trouble?

According to city commission candidate Ozzy Angulo, contrary to popular belief ladies nights in Gainesville are not illegal.

While the Gainesville Office of Equal Opportunity is fielding complaints related to discrimination regarding ladies nights around town, law enforcement officers are not banging down bar doors trying to shut anything down.

Under current Gainesville codes, if someone were to complain that he or she felt discriminated against because a local bar held a ladies night, then the Office of Equal Opportunity would investigate that bar.

Although the threat of complaint is remote, some bars aren't taking chances. Lux Bar, 211 W University Ave., has done away with its ladies night promotion and switched to new promotions, like their high-heels night.

Many of the bars that have changed their promotions are doing so because they don't want to deal with the hassles of possible complaints and subsequent investigations, Angulo said.

Local News

Lux owner Steve Nichtberger, like other local bar owners, has not heard any complaints about ladies nights in Gainesville.

"I've never heard of a guy complain about ladies night and feeling discriminated against," he said. "Usually they're happy they don't have to buy the drinks."

Other bars, such as Mars Bar and Laser Tag, haven't changed anything at all. Although they are opening themselves up to the possibility of investigation, they are still offering ladies night promotions on Thursdays.

Mars owner Melissa Del Valle said police stopped by her establishment to ask if she was aware that ladies nights could be a violation of the city's ordinance code.

"Everyone keeps talking about it," Del Valle said. "I hear that Midtown bars are telling them 'Oh don't worry guys. We're not doing ladies night,' but it really isn't illegal, so I

JACKSONVILLE (AP) — Let them eat cake. The wedding cake eating contest may have been a bit unconventional, but what else would guests expect when the groom is one of the world's top competitive eaters.

Hall Hunt, who can down 63 Krystal burgers in eight minutes, and Emily Wright served burgers at their wedding reception in north Florida last month in a nod to Hunt's past time.

The civil engineer has eaten his way to $60,000 in the past five years. The world's No. 1 competitive eater, Joey Chestnut, was a wedding guest. The bride, groom and Chestnut competed in a cake eating contest at the reception. The bride won.

Man shoots his son in ear

OCOEE — A central Florida man is being held in jail on charges of attempted murder after authorities say he shot his 17-year-old son in the ear.

At his initial court appearance Monday, 44-year-old Rafael Rodriguez was ordered to be held at the Orange County Jail without bond.

He faces a charge of attempted first-degree murder with a firearm and a count of attempted first-degree murder.

Palin makes blunder in Facebook post

CONCORD, N.H. — Sarah Palin incorrectly calls Alaska's Kodiak Island the largest island in America in a Facebook post endorsing a Senate candidate in New Hampshire.

The Big Island of Hawaii is about 440 square miles larger than Kodiak, where Palin and her family were headed Monday.

In endorsing Republican candidate Kelly Ayotte, Palin strayed a bit from the facts in praising her for having "won" a case before the U.S. Supreme Court.

As state attorney general, Ayotte defended a law requiring parental notification for teenagers seeking abortions. But it was repealed after the U.S. Supreme Court sent it back to a lower court.

Ayotte is among seven candidates seeking the GOP nomination for the seat being vacated by Republican Sen. Judd Gregg. Rep. Paul Hodes is unopposed in the Democratic primary.

Truck containing body parts blocks Rhode Island street

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — It's an innocent enough looking tractor-trailer, except for the fact that it's blocking a street in downtown Providence. But what's inside may give the heebie-jeebies to some.

A spokesman for medical instrument maker Smith & Nephew told The Providence Journal the truck contains human body parts as well as body parts models the company's using to demonstrate it's endoscopic surgery instruments at the American Orthopaedic Society for Sports Medicine meeting at the Rhode Island Convention Center.

The body parts, mostly isolated joints, are used so surgeons can get a feel for the company's instruments, or sharpen their skills.

The truck has been parked in the street with permission from the city since Tuesday and is scheduled to leave Friday.

Shands at UF named best in state in 4 specialties

■ SHANDS WAS IN THE TOP 50 NATIONALLY IN 8 AREAS.

By MICHAELA TRIMBLE
Alligator Contributing Writer

Shands at UF was ranked in eight adult specialties by U.S. News & World Report's 2010-2011 edition of America's Best Hospitals.

The rankings, announced publicly on Thursday, analyzed 4,852 hospitals in 16 specialties. Each hospital was ranked in the four areas of reputation, death rate, patient safety and care-related factors such as nursing and patient services.

Shands was one of 152 hospitals out of the 4,852 surveyed that performed well enough to rank among the top 50 in any of the specialties.

Shands was the highest-ranked Florida hospital in four specialties. It ranked 32nd nationally in heart and heart surgery, 40th in kidney disorders, 29th in pulmonology and 25th in urology.

Shands also ranked 29th nationally in cancer care, 39th in neurology and neurosurgery, 39th in geriatrics and 41st in gastroenterology.

Shands was the only Florida hospital ranked in pulmonology, and, for the third consecutive year, the state's highest-ranked hospital in urology, the surgical specialty treating diseases and disorders of the urinary tracts of male and females and the reproductive system of males.

Dr. Johannes Vieweg, UF department of urology chairman, said he owes much of the success in the survey to the recruitment of new faculty.

Vieweg said his department would like to reach out and open up to more areas, extending practices beyond the Gainesville area to become a provider throughout the state and even the country. He said he sees patients visiting from other states for the quality care Shands offers.

"Patients really seek out the top-ranked programs," Vieweg said. "I think this will positively reflect on Shands."

Dr. Carmen Allegra, chief of the division of hematology and oncology for the department of medicine, said he owed part of his department's recognition to excellent faculty as well.

"We've had a tremendous number of new faculty join us within the last year or two," Allegra said. "Many of them have national and international reputations."

Shands Children's Hospital also received recognition in the best children's hospital rankings. The pediatric center ranked 12th in diabetes and endocrinology.

More information and a complete list of rankings can be found at health.usnews.com.

Toyota Prius hybrids are displayed at Toyota Motor Corp.'s showroom in Tokyo, July 6. Toyota said Monday it has settled a patent dispute involving technology used in the Prius.

NATIONAL Toyota settles patent issue

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Toyota Motor Corp. said Monday it has settled a years-long dispute with a U.S. company that had claimed the Japanese automaker used its technology without permission in its hybrids. The deal ends a squabble that had briefly threatened to block the Prius from being sold in the U.S.

Toyota and Paice LLC said they have settled their patent dispute and agreed to have all lawsuits between them dismissed. The terms were confidential, the companies said. No financial details were disclosed.

"After six years of litigation, we are pleased to reach a settlement with Toyota," said Frances Keenan, chairman of the Paice board, in a statement.

Paice, based in Bonita Springs, had claimed that popular Toyota hybrids like the third-generation Prius and the Lexus HS250h contain technology that violated Paice's patents for hybrid engines.

Paice first sued Toyota in 2004 claiming infringement and filed a second lawsuit against the automaker in 2007. Paice asked U.S. trade regulators to block the import of the vehicles to the U.S. Last October, the International Trade Commission, the Washington, D.C.-based body that investigates claims of trade violations, agreed to open its own investigation into the patent dispute.

"After six years of litigation, we are pleased to reach a settlement with Toyota."

Frances Keenan
chairman of the Paice board

A trial had been scheduled to begin Monday. If the ITC had sided with Paice, a number of penalties could have followed, including a possible ban on the import of the hybrids using the patented technology.

Toyota and Paice say they have agreed that although Toyota's hybrids contain technology equivalent to that made by Paice, Toyota developed its hybrid technology independently.

On Friday, Paice said it reached an agreement to license its hybrid vehicle technology to Ford Motor Co. U.S.-listed shares of Toyota fell 43 cents to close at $71.18.

ELECTIONS

Voters have less than a week left to register

By TARA WIND

Alligator Contributing Writer

The voter registration deadline for the fall election is rapidly approaching.

Voters must register for the Aug. 24 primary elections by Monday, which is also the last day for voters to change party affiliation.

Some of the offices voters can expect to see on their ballots are U.S. senator, governor, attorney general, county commissioner, county judge and school board.

Pam Carpenter, Alachua County supervisor of elections, said it is important for everyone to vote.

"It's our opportunity to have our voice be heard, and to choose candidates who are going to represent us in the way we want to be represented," she said.

Registration forms are available at VoteAlachua.com, she said. Forms can be filled out online but must be printed, signed and mailed or brought to the supervisor of elections office, located at 111 SE First Ave.

If a form is mailed, it must be postmarked by Monday for the voter to be eligible to participate in the primary election.

Recently, voter registration levels have been slowly increasing, Carpenter said.

She said she wants students to remember they must vote in the precinct of their residency.

If students change their residence to Alachua County, they need to register here, she said. If students aren't changing their residence, then they need to request an absentee ballot so they can vote while they are in school.

Carpenter

Dayna Firth, a 21-year-old political science major, said students should vote because she believes it's their most fundamental right as Americans.

She said students should register to vote to "ensure that your voice makes a difference in the future of our nation."

Firth is the secretary for the UF College Democrats and the vice president for the Florida College Democrats.

"It is our duty to protect our interests as students, locally and nationally," she said.

UF sub breaks at event

By LIDIA DINKOVA

Alligator Contributing Writer

Ten Gators have built a self-navigating submarine.

A team of nine UF engineering students and a professor spent about a year and hundreds of hours in the lab to construct, test and perfect their model of the submarine.

They did not make it to the final cut, however, at the 13th annual International Autonomous Underwater Vehicle Competition in San Diego last week.

"The difference between victory and total failure is very small," said professor Erik Schwartz, a consultant for the project.

The event invites teams from universities from all over the world to show the abilities of their submarines, which are entirely independent from any human control.

The first-place winner this year was Cornell University.

UF has competed since 1996 and was the first-place winner in 2005, 2006 and 2007.

The team's submarine, called "SubjuGator," weighed between 50 and 60 pounds and included two cameras, two computers, six thrusters, two shooters, one grabber, a compass and a thermometer among other mechanics, said Cedric Adam, a mechanical engineering student who worked on the project.

The submarine's basic mechanical core was the same as the one used in the past three years, but each year students make significant improvements on the software and motors.

The competition requires the submarines to locate, shoot at and pick up objects.

During the competition, the UF team was doing well until the final round, when the circuits moving the propellers malfunctioned. The submarine went around in circles until the students gave up and pulled it out of the water.

"A fish with only one fin can only swim in circles," Schwartz said, describing the SubjuGator's dysfunctional motor driver.

On their way home Monday, the students were already discussing ways to improve their submarine model for next year.

Drinking Discrimination

Bars find a loophole

The city may have hammered the last nail in the coffin for ladies night months ago, but that's not stopping local wells from walking on the razor's edge to get around the now-illegal, yet oh-so-common, promotion.

Rather than mourn the death of free booze for broads, bars like Grog House and Rue Bar have gotten proactive. Introducing the new specials, which are the same as the old specials. Whether you name it "shaved-leg night," "high-heel night," or exactly what it is—loophole abuse—it's just a clever way for our favorite dives, clubs and haunts to get around the law.

Theoretically, you don't have to be a member of the fairer sex to get one of those bottomless, white plastic cups—any Tom, Dick or Harry with milky smooth calves could get away with drinking for free at Grog House on a Wednesday night. But paying for that pitcher of Natural Light is probably preferable to explaining all those nicks and cuts on your thighs to your bro friends.

We understand why bars want to keep the status quo—getting a bunch of girls to patronize a college sweatbox is a surefire way to get guys to come in and slap their paper, or plastic, on the bar and join in on the fun. Plus, if the drinks are free for the ladies, then guys have to spring for the good stuff to turn any heads.

But the problem with ladies night wasn't discrimination, it was something much bigger: binge drinking.

Sure, it stings a little having to pay for drinks when you see how effortlessly teenag—uh—20-somethings get their umpteenth, free vodka-cranberry, but it's not hard to get over. What is hard to get over is enabling and encouraging young women to drink as much as they want or can in an environment filled with strangers who can't wait to sidle out into that alleyway behind Midtown and facilitate some bad decisions.

We aren't trying to weave a horror story here, but if we were we wouldn't have to tread too far from reality to prove that bad things can happen when a lot of free booze is involved.

That's why the law was made in the first place. Maybe there is some sort of discriminatory aspect to ladies night, but the ban had a secondary objective to curb binge drinking. The solution: fight fire with fire. Or in this case, fight loophole abuse with loophole abuse.

Bars exist because they are profitable. It wouldn't be hard for any local well to make bank at 4 a.m. on Easter Sunday if it were allowed to be open. It would be hard to make Wednesdays and Thursdays a boon to their bottom lines if everyone walking in had shaved legs and heels though.

Maybe it would be a little embarrassing for guys to ask for free drinks on the basis of their legs being freshly shaven, but we worked out the alibi for you: Just meet all those condescending looks from bouncers and bartenders with a quick story about how you decided to take up professional swimming.

It might seem a little too unbelievable at first, but trust us—after a few free drinks, you won't really care that much at all. Just be vigilant about keeping those legs smooth—nobody likes those second-day pricklies.

Waiting to drink legally was worth it

If you asked me why I waited until my 21st birthday to drink, I could tell you a number of reasons. For one, my big sister waited until her 21st, so that's what I thought you were supposed to do. She has always been my role model. Two, I'm stubborn, and I had told people a while ago that I was waiting until my 21st birthday to drink. I had made up my mind, but they doubted me or told me I'd go wild once I arrived at college. This fueled my fire even more to keep my word. And three, it doesn't sit well with me to think of doing anything illegal. I'm just one of those people who is paranoid of getting in trouble for no good reason. I'd get nervous when an officer would walk by me in the halls when I was in middle school—palms sweaty, heart racing, the whole deal—and I never did anything wrong. I guess you could say I'm a stickler for rules, and I'm OK with that.

So, at the handful of house parties I've been to in my three years at UF, and during the many nights out dancing at clubs, I just got used to saying, "No, thank you. I don't drink," when an offer came my way. I'd hold my cup of water, and sometimes people wouldn't even realize I wasn't drinking.

But not being 21 began to get annoying when my sister hit the big mile marker two years ago. Being denied from many clubs, bars and even restaurants made me want to scream, and I'm not an angry person. It became a blockade in our friendship, a limit on our outings and a separation of sorts. Once, we got all dressed up and went to the Hard Rock. I think we approached the doors of about 10 places and were turned away. "I don't even want to drink," I'd say. "I just want to come in and sit with her." No dice.

After recently being turned down from the Starlight Room night club in our hotel on a family trip to San Francisco, and then more recently by Market Street Pub in downtown Gainesville, I had about had it with being underage.

But last Wednesday it all ended, and I awoke a free bird, a woman with access. I turned 21. That night, I went to Midtown with 21 friends for one of the most fun nights ever. We started with dinner at The Swamp. Appropriately, my sister

Kathryn Stolarz

bought me my first drink. The waitress didn't ID me - after all, I was wearing a tiara and a "21 Things" sign - but I flashed my license at her anyway. What once was my ticket to "no" now became my all-access pass. Finally, I would unveil the beloved world of booze. I would learn what Grey Goose, peach schnapps, black raspberry, pineapple and Sprite tasted like together. I would be allowed into 101 Cantina and Salty Dog and Balls when I arrived in the coming hours. And, yes, I would be that loud, obnoxious freshly 21-year-old girl stumbling through Midtown in stilettos with a giant sign around her neck.

I enjoyed a few shots with funny names and kept describing a warm sensation in my face and throat. I enjoyed sipping shots because they were so flavorful, much to the chagrin of the people who bought them for me who expected me to kick them back in one gulp.

I danced, I met people and talked excitedly. I laughed a bit more than usual. And I was overly nice — telling people how nice their eyes were or that they had a big heart.

I taught someone how to belly dance, collected 21 phone numbers, had an intellectual conversation, dined with a stranger, made a speech, called the 21st person in my phone and braided the hair of a male stranger, among other equally crazy things listed on my sign. A few minutes after 2 a.m., after walking out of Balls cheerful but tired, I proudly announced to the world I completed the 21 things on my sign.

If you ask me if I would have enjoyed my 21st as much if I had started drinking years earlier like many kids do, I couldn't tell you. But my guess would be that I wouldn't have. The excitement and anticipation of tasting my first drink, of trying different liquors, of being initiated into the drinking world, could not have been nearly as great if I had taken all those opportunities to get used to it. I had built up a curiosity, and waiting made me appreciate the discovery.

Ticket policy is unfair for sick students

If you are a student and need to go to the neurology, oncology, or any of the other important 'ology clinics at Shands Medical Plaza: beware.

The parking "officers" are waiting to prey on your sick, wasting, contemptible body. I've been ticketed the last three times I have gone for legitimate doctor's appointments. There is nothing you can do to protect yourself.

As a patient you are required to park in the attended lot. If you are a student and they find you, you will get a ticket. It's that simple. The burden is on you to convince UF Transportation and Parking Services you were there legitimately. Don't believe it? Allow me.

Unlike parking in front of the Student Health Care Center, you do not get a tag to put in your windshield to show you are a legitimate visitor.

Instead, when I asked the "officer" who gave me one of my tickets what I did wrong he simply replied: "I ran your tag and it showed you were a student." What a racket.

Here is the de facto policy as it stands now:

1. Assume any student parked in the garage is there illegitimately and ticket them.

2. Place the burden on legitimate student patients to prove through the appeals process they were sick.

3. Profit.

Florida should not follow Arizona's law

I am disappointed to have read this week that Florida is backing the Arizona immigration law that basically allows racial profiling.

It is not only offensive that hardworking legal immigrants there will henceforth need to have proof of citizenship with themselves at all times, but it is offensive to me as an American.

This country is turning into the exact opposite of the principles it was founded on. The history lesson shouldn't be necessary here for you to understand that point.

Now this country is turning on those very beliefs. It may not be considered flat out racism, but as far as I see it, it is, since the only basis for question would be race.

These states backing Arizona and the people supporting them as well need to learn to coexist with people.

Religious traditions weren't established by Founding Fathers

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting any free exercise thereof."

This establishment clause in the First Amendment of the United States Constitution has been the basis for hundreds of past and current arguments worldwide. The concepts behind separation of church and state have been touchy subjects, even before this great nation was colonized.

Our parents, schools and nation teach us to idolize individuals like the Puritans who came to the New World looking for religious freedom but, in actuality, set up a society that was more dependent on religion than their former homeland. This was especially true in the New England colonies where the basic society was structured on an ultimatum. Visitors could either follow their form of ecclesiastical law or risk being socially ostracized or even executed.

Just recently Kenneth Howell, a professor at the University of Illinois, did not have his contract renewed after he allegedly gave a "hate speech" toward homosexuality to select students in his Introduction to Catholicism and Modern Catholic Thought class. The quotation marks encompassing "hate speech" give insight to my opinion about the subject, that is not the point of making this reference.

Nolan Sharkey
U-Wire

Instances like this issue show that religious factions and the government are at war every day in America. Our Founding Fathers knew this was going to be an issue for centuries to come, and that is why they set up our Constitution the way they did. Statements such as "our creator" and "Nature's God" appear several times in our Declaration of Independence, but they are left very ambiguous to leave interpretation to any god.

Critics of this historical data may argue that certain American traditions were established by our Founding Fathers, such as "In God We Trust" imprinted on our currency or "one nation under God" in our Pledge of Allegiance.

But these critics are mistaken.

"In God We Trust" was not added to our currencies until a religious rally happened with the close of the Civil War and President Lincoln's death.

"One Nation Under God" was not added to the Pledge of Allegiance until the communist scare of the 1950s. This phrase distinguished Americans from our "godless" communist rivals.

Every day, we hear complaints from the far right and their media that America is departing from the original intentions of our Founding Fathers. In reality, our Founding Fathers lived during the Enlightenment Era in which religion and the church were scrutinized and not trusted. The motto of the Enlightenment Era was reason over religion. In our current time, many people are now fighting for just the opposite: religion over reason or, at least, religion over the separation of church and state. I am a religious individual, and I do believe that the Bible offers powerful insight into truth. But, like our Founding Fathers, I realize religion can blind a state from doing what is best for its people.

Butterfly-friendly plants available at campus museum

■ THE MUSEUM IS LOCATED AT SOUTHWEST 34TH STREET AND HULL ROAD.

CAYLA HARVEY

Alligator Contributing Writer

Those looking to add something new to their garden should consider butterflies.

The Florida Museum of Natural History holds a butterfly-friendly plant sale every Friday to Sunday as part of a series of plant sales. The sale's proceeds will benefit the museum's butterfly rainforest.

"What we try to do is feature the plants that we know will work for the butterflies because we see what works out there in the exhibit," said Michael Boulware, who specializes in living exhibits at the museum.

The plant sale, located outside of the museum's front entrance near the picnic area, features an assortment of plants, and the list of plants available changes with each weekend's sale.

There are two types of plants sold in front of the museum: the plants that caterpillars eat and nectar plants that the butterflies feed off.

Boulware, a former organic farmer, found that if organic food crops are produced correctly, they will then attract butterflies, which can be viewed as a positive or a negative depending on the gardener.

"I've got a butterfly garden growing at the house and it's the coolest thing to watch them," said Jerri Sullivan, a volunteer.

While some of the plants are brought in from local nurseries, most of the plants were grown in the museum.

One type of plant hasn't been selling better than the rest because people pick plants to suit their gardens, Sullivan said.

"I would say a lot of people are very native-plant conscious," Boulware said. "If it attracts a butterfly that's great too, but they want to buy something that's going to look good."

Plant prices are about half of what customers would pay at a nursery, Sullivan said. Plants are priced depending on pot size.

Four-inch pots sell for $3, one-gallon pots cost $6 and three-gallon pots cost up to $18.

The plant sales will be held from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Fridays and Saturdays and 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. on Sundays.

The museum will feature 10 plants each week, along with at least one additional unannounced species, according to the museum's website.

For a complete list of plants available, visit flmnh.ufl.edu/butterflies/plant\_sales.

U.S. to spend $89 million on Everglades protection

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KISSIMMEE — The federal government will spend $89 million to preserve almost 26,000 acres of wild ranch land in a northern swath of the Florida Everglades in one of the biggest expenditures of its kind, officials said Monday.

Under the plan, the federal government will acquire the right to protect wetlands in the Fisheating Creek watershed located in Florida's rural Highlands County, although the four ranching families who own the properties will keep title to the land. The outlay represents a quarter of what the federal government will spend this year as part of its Wetlands Reserve Program. It also is one of the largest contiguous easement purchases of the program.

The program was set up 20 years ago to encourage private landowners to retire land so that wetlands can be restored or protected, and it typically makes purchases of around 250 acres a year per state. However, that average is around 1,700 acres a year in Florida, said Kathleen Merrigan, deputy secretary at the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

"This is huge," Merrigan said. "It is extremely significant in what we do. ... It's a big piece of our national effort."

The four ranching families and companies that own the properties have powerful political and economic ties.

They are Westby Corp., which is controlled by the Finn Caspersen family of Venice; the Doyle Carlton family, which has produced a Florida governor and state senator; the Blue Head Ranch, which is controlled by the family of state senator J.D. Alexander, whose grandfather was Ben Hill Griffin Jr., one of Florida's most famous land barons; and the H.L. Clark family.

The landowners will still be able to graze cattle on the land, although they now will need certain permits from the government.

The Fisheating Creek watershed was a top priority for protection and restoration because it drains into Lake Okeechobee, which then continues to flow into the southern part of the Everglades. The new acquisition will form a conservation corridor stretching from central Florida down to Everglades National Park in South Florida and improve water quality in Lake Okeechobee and the Everglades, Merrigan said.

"You can't repair the lower Everglades without repairing the northern Everglades," said U.S. Rep. Adam Putnam, R-Fla.

There also are 19 different species that will benefit from the acquisition, including the Florida panther and the bald eagle, Merrigan said.

The entire Everglades once covered more than 6,250 square miles, but that figure has shrunk by half. The land has been replaced with homes, farms and a 2,000-mile grid of drainage canals.

In South Florida, water managers have developed a plan supported by Gov. Charlie Crist to pay $536 million for 73,000 acres of U.S. Sugar Corp. land in an effort to restore that part of the Everglades.

Political ads go negative for Fla. gubernatorial race

■ MCCOLLUM AND SCOTT HAVE LAUNCHED ATTACK ADS.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TAMPA — The dirt — specifically dirty diapers — is flying in Florida's race for governor.

In one television commercial, newcomer Rick Scott suggests his GOP primary opponent, the state attorney general and a former congressman, should be thrown out like a baby's dirty diaper. "Bill McCollum's record stinks," a female narrator says over an image of a squirming infant's swaddled bottom.

In response, McCollum criticizes Scott for the record settlement his former hospital company paid to settle Medicare fraud charges. McCollum claims his opponent was "ripping off taxpayers." He looks into the camera in his ad and addresses Scott as if he were in the room: "You put profit over principle, and that's wrong."

Floridians can't watch television for very long this summer without seeing one candidate tear down the other. Wealthy tea party favorite Scott has spent more than $20 million of his own fortune so far on campaign advertising. McCollum and his allies, determined not to let the criticism go unanswered, are firing back.

The use of attack ads in the Florida contest as well as races in Arizona, Nevada and a handful of other states raises questions candidates and campaigns have struggled to answer for decades: Are negative commercials effective in defining an opponent or do they cost the sponsor of the ad as well by turning off voters?

As a rule, political operatives believe negative ads work. But they are aware of the pitfalls and often use humor or a soothing voiceover to take the edge off an ad's tone.

"They're making each other look really bad," said Terry Bishop, a 58-year-old retired oil field worker and registered Republican who lives in Gulf Breeze. "They're not defining themselves, they're defining each other, and you don't know what to believe."

David D. Perlmutter, director of the journalism school at the University of Iowa and an expert on political communication, sums it up: "Negative is the new normal."

He compares the evolution of attack ads with movie audiences who have come to expect more exciting action sequences and better special effects each time they walk into the theater.

"Last year's level of negativity is almost not enough," he said. "It's almost like you have to raise it up a notch each time."

The effectiveness of the ads depends on the attack, Perlmutter said. A claim that is plausible and at least based in truth is more likely to get traction. And at a time when many voters are angry at the government, outsiders are logically going hard after the records of incumbents and established politicians.

In Florida, Scott entered the race in April after McCollum had already been anointed by the state GOP establishment to succeed Gov. Charlie Crist. Scott's immediate and frequent presence on TV commercials and anti-establishment message helped him surge ahead in the polls in the spring.

Absent from the Scott-McCollum commercials is any talk of the likely Democratic nominee Alex Sink, who is locked in a close race with both Republicans in recent polls. That could be a good thing for Sink, Florida's chief financial officer, whose campaign is just starting to get some traction.

Guard troops to head to border states in August

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — National Guard troops will head to the U.S.-Mexico border Aug. 1 for a yearlong deployment to watch for illegal border crossers and smugglers and help in criminal investigations, federal officials said Monday.

The troops will be armed but can use their weapons only to protect themselves, Gen. Craig McKinley, chief of the National Guard Bureau, told a Pentagon news conference. The troops will undergo initial training and be fully deployed along the nearly 2,000-mile southern border by September.

The announcement provides details on how the government will implement President Barack Obama's May decision to bolster border security and comes as drug-related violence has escalated in Mexico, where several people died over the weekend in a car bombing and in a separate massacre at a private party. It also comes as the U.S. debate over illegal immigration has intensified in an election year.

"The border is more secure and more resourced than it has ever been, but there is more to be done," said Alan Bersin, commissioner of Customs and Border Protection, part of the Homeland Security Department.

The 1,200 troops will be distributed among four border states, with Arizona getting 524; Texas, 250; California, 224 and New Mexico, 72. Another 130 would be assigned to a national liaison office.

Bersin also said the Homeland Security Department will provide six more aircraft, including helicopters, to the border. He said at least 300 Customs and Border Protection agents and inspection officers would be sent to the Tucson area, along with mobile surveillance vans and additional technology.

"It will help," Arizona Attorney General Terry Goddard, a Democrat, said Monday in Santa Fe, N.M., where he was attending the annual meeting of the Conference of Western Attorneys General. "Manpower clearly has been deficient. Technology has been somewhat deficient, and they're bolstering that."

Arizona Gov. Jan Brewer, a Republican, said the deployment isn't enough "nor tied to a strategy to comprehensively defeat the increasingly violent drug- and alien-smuggling cartels that operate in Arizona on a daily basis."

U.S. Reps. Ann Kirkpatrick and Gabrielle Giffords, both D-Ariz., separately called the announced actions welcome but insufficient.

"This is the kind of action we want from the administration — not suing the state," Kirkpatrick said, referring to the Department of Justice's challenge to the new Arizona immigration enforcement law. "However, we should continue to move forward with a much larger commitment of National Guard troops right away and with an expansion of the Border Patrol to strengthen security for the long run."

"The border is more secure and more resourced than it has ever been, but there is more to be done."

Alan Bersin
Commissioner of customs and border protection

Texas Gov. Rick Perry also criticized the troops as "grossly insufficient" for the border in a letter to the administration last week.

President George W. Bush deployed 6,000 National Guard troops to the border in June 2006, also a midterm election year. The troops were part of his effort to persuade the Republican-led Congress to pass his immigration reform proposals that included a pathway to citizenship for illegal immigrants. The troops' deployment ended in July 2008.

McKinley said even though the four border states are contributing 54,000 troops to the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, they still have a sizable number available for other deployments or disaster response. More can be deployed at state cost if governors wish, but the 1,200 are being paid for by the federal government, he said.

"Right now I cannot see a case where we would be overextending the National Guard for this effort," he said.

Immigration and Customs Enforcement also is beefing up its presence in Arizona, said John Morton, the Homeland Security Department assistant secretary overseeing the agency.

Morton said ICE is opening a new office in Ajo, Ariz., to focus exclusively on cross-border crime and to deploy a specialized investigative team in Douglas, near where an Arizona rancher was shot and killed while surveying his ranch on the border.

Also, the agency will send ICE lawyers to U.S. attorneys offices to help prosecute felons who illegally re-enter the country after deportation. It also will increase the number of ICE agents in Mexico to 40, making it the largest of ICE's 63 offices in 44 countries.

NATIONAL BASKETBALL ASSOCIATION

Heat plan to address roster options at point guard

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — LeBron James will play some point guard for the Miami Heat. So will Dwyane Wade, as he has throughout his NBA career. Mike Miller will likely do some ballhandling as well.

Thing is, none of them are true point guards.

And that means this Heat summer of change still has some things left to address — particularly finding a starter at the point spot.

Mario Chalmers is under contract, Carlos Arroyo is expected to re-sign with the Heat and there's some talk of a possible Miami reunion with 2006 title-team point guard Jason Williams. Whomever it is, the next starter for the Heat will inherit the keys to what could be one of basketball's most dynamic offenses with Wade, James and Chris Bosh.

"It's going to be a lot of fun," Chalmers said.

Maybe for him. Probably not for other clubs.

Take what happened in this past season's playoffs as an example. Wade faced the Boston Celtics in the first round, James faced Boston in the second round. Both saw virtually the same defensive scheme from the Celtics, who kept running multiple people against them in waves.

It worked. The Celtics won both series.

With Wade and James on the floor together — with another ballhandler — the same approach likely wouldn't be as successful in the 2011 postseason. And that's already creating some concern for Heat opponents.

"We tried to just make them see a lot of guys," Celtics point guard Rajon Rondo said Sunday at a charity event Wade hosted. "It's going to be difficult with both those guys on the court, because you can't really load to one particular guy because the other one's on the opposite wing. It's going to be fun. I'm going to enjoy the matchup. I'm probably not going to be checking either of those guys."

Throughout their seven seasons in the league, both Wade and James have regularly taken over the point-guard duty, especially down the stretch in close games.

Each will continue doing the same in Miami, though likely not as much as in the past. And even though the notion has been floated that Miami could line up this season without a true point guard — a hybrid lineup of Wade, James, Miller, Bosh and newly re-signed center Joel Anthony, perhaps? — Wade himself doesn't see it happening regularly.

He thinks, for now anyway, the job is Chalmers' to lose.

"Of course, you've got to go through training camp and you have to go through practices to see what happens," Wade said. "But right now, as I look at it, I think that would be the plan. I would like to play (shooting guard), at least in the starting lineup. I think I've done OK there. But you never know."

Chalmers

Miller said Monday that he likes the idea of handling the ball at times, especially if that gets him on the floor with Wade and James more.

"I see no problem with that," Miller said. "Obviously, Dwyane and LeBron are two of the best in pick-and-roll situations and in the open court. So it's all about defense and rebounding at that point. ... It's definitely an option, for sure."

So far this summer, Miami has added or retained players along the perimeter (Wade, James, Miller and James Jones, who completed his expected re-signing on Monday), power forward (Bosh and Udonis Haslem), and center (Anthony, Zydrunas Ilgauskas, Jamaal Magloire and rookie Dexter Pittman).

No true moves at the point yet, though that will change.

Could Miami play without a point guard? Wade doesn't want it happening, and Rondo doesn't see it happening.

"That's probably one of the hardest positions to play," Rondo said. "It's not an easy position. They'll find somebody. Chalmers is a great young point guard coming up."

Chalmers said earlier this summer that he had designs on being Miami's starting point guard again. He had the job in all 89 games, including playoffs, of his rookie season, then lost the role early in 2009-10 and played behind Arroyo and, at times, Rafer Alston.

"I think Mario is someone we're going to depend on a lot," Wade said.

UF FOOTBALL

Maurkice Pouncey at the center of NCAA probe

By KYLE MAISTRI
Alligator Staff Writer
kmaistri@alligator.org

According to a story first reported by ESPN.com's Pat Forde, UF and the NCAA are investigating a potential rules violation committed in December, before the Gators' 51-24 Sugar Bowl victory over Cincinnati, involving former offensive lineman Maurkice Pouncey.

Florida is in the process of investigating an allegation that a representative of an agent paid Pouncey $100,000 between UF's loss to Alabama in the Southeastern Conference Championship game and the Sugar Bowl. Florida alerted the NCAA when they became aware of the potential incident, according to Forde.

UF athletic director Jeremy Foley released the following statement to ESPN.com on Monday morning:

"We were made aware of some information in early June that we reported to law enforcement and we then shared with the NCAA and the SEC. At this time we have no information that has indicated that there are any compliance issues for the University of Florida."

Maurkice Pouncey was drafted with the 18th overall pick in the 2010 NFL Draft by the Pittsburgh Steelers after his junior season with the Gators.

"At this time we have no information that has indicated that there are any compliance issues for the University of Florida."

Jeremy Foley
UF athletic director

If the allegations hold up, the NCAA could rule Pouncey retroactively ineligible for the Sugar Bowl, and Florida could have to vacate the victory.

Mike Pouncey, Maurkice's twin brother, elected to return to UF rather than turn pro after his junior season and is slated to represent the Gators at SEC Media Days, which takes place July 21-23 in Hoover, Ala., along with Ahmad Black and Justin Tratou.

A UF official said that there are no changes in the school's Media Days' plans, meaning that Mike Pouncey is still expected to make the trip.

Harrison Diamond / Alligator Staff

Former UF center Maurkice Pouncey (56) is alleged to have accepted $100,000 from an agent's representative sometime between the 2009 Southeastern Conference Championship Game and the Sugar Bowl.

NCAA needs to rethink amateur status given to college athletics

The monster that is college sports is beginning to rear its ugly head, which for a long time has been hiding behind a veil of amateurism.

This summer college football, just one of the many faces of the college sports monster, has been masquerading behind news of conference expansion and possible realignment.

But that façade was smeared by sanctions resulting from improper benefits received by athletes and investigations of possible rules violations regarding illegal contact with agents – all because the NCAA doesn't pay its athletes.

It's getting out of hand, really.

First, there were the sanctions handed down to Southern California by the NCAA regarding its findings that former Heisman winner Reggie Bush and his family accepted nearly $280,000 in improper benefits, as did former Trojans basketball standout O.J. Mayo.

Just last week, news surfaced that the NCAA is investigating UNC's football program, coached by Butch Davis, for possible rules violations. In the wake of that report, South Carolina also announced it was being probed by the NCAA for potential rules violations, with multiple outlets claiming the allegations revolve around Gamecocks tight end Weslye Saunders.

While the NCAA has not officially disclosed what each of those investigations is about, it is believed that both of them also deal with improper benefits and illegal contact with sports agents.

When ESPN's Pat Forde reported Monday that UF was also under NCAA investigation for allegations surrounding former offensive lineman Maurkice Pouncey possibly receiving $100,000 in benefits from an agent, the issue seemed to come to a climax and the makeup continued to run down the monster's face.

If found to be true, all of these allegations are serious and should be dealt with appropriately. However, this wouldn't even be an issue if college sports weren't treated as amateur athletics.

It's time the NCAA lifted the veil of amateurism that has been draped over the face of college athletics and revealed it for what it truly is: professional sports in a college setting.

These athletes made it to where they are because they were gifted with a certain skill set, but more importantly, because they worked hard and dedicated themselves to that skill to be as good as they are.

It's a travesty that what they do at universities brings in ample money to their institutions – especially the larger sports like football, which practically fund the athletic programs – yet these student-athletes don't get paid for it.

Sure, you can argue that they get a full ride through college with their athletic scholarships, but hey, plenty of people earn scholarships that help them through college, myself included.

Just like athletes on scholarship, I use my scholarship money to pay for fees, books and food. The same goes for plenty of other college students out there.

The difference though, is that while I work and get paid in order to supplement my funds, these athletes – for whom training, practice and games take up most of their time – aren't getting that same extra cash for the work they are doing on the field.

To say that college athletes aren't professionals is a sham, because they are training year-round and putting in the work to better themselves and their team, all while bringing in more money to the schools they represent.

The fact that these players don't get paid because of the way the system is formatted doesn't excuse any possible violations regarding improper benefits, but the NCAA needs to stop kidding itself and pay its athletes.

Of course, the logistics of payments due to the athletes is a whole other issue, particularly with Title IX requiring women's sports to be given the same funding as the men's programs.

Figuring out how much payment to allot to each sport, and more specifically, to each athlete, could pose quite a problem for the schools, and for the NCAA. Coming up with a solution to that issue, though, is better than having the NCAA misrepresent college athletics as amateurism.

It needs to face reality and accept college athletics for what it truly is, instead of presenting it as something it's not.

It's time for the NCAA to remove that veil.

1. NCAA, UF investigating former Gator

ESPN's Pat Forde first reported Monday that the NCAA and UF are investigating possible rules violations regarding former Gators offensive lineman Maurkice Pouncey. The 18th overall pick by the Pittsburgh Steelers this year, is alleged to have accepted $100,000 in improper benefits from a representative of an agent. The news comes as other schools, such as North Carolina and South Carolina are under inspection for similar violations.

2. SEC Media Days begin Wednesday

The 2010 Southeastern Conference Media Days are set to take place this week in Hoover, Ala. The event begins Wednesday with representatives from Alabama, Mississippi State, Florida and Kentucky scheduled to appear in front of the media. The Gators are scheduled to bring head coach Urban Meyer, defensive end Justin Trattou and safety Ahmad Black. Offensive lineman Mike Pouncey is still slated to appear despite reports of an NCAA investigation surrounding his twin brother.

3. Jordan sounds off on LeBron's decision

Former six-time NBA Finals MVP Michael Jordan made headlines last weekend when, after a celebrity golf tournament in Nevada, he said he wouldn't have done what LeBron James did by joining fellow superstars Dwyane Wade and Chris Bosh in Miami. "There's no way, with hindsight, I would've ever called up Larry (Bird), called up Magic (Johnson) and said, 'Hey, look, let's get together and play on one team.' ... I was trying to beat those guys," he said.

No. 6 TCU: Horned Frogs eye a second BCS berth

■ TCU'S DEFENSE GAVE UP 12.8 POINTS PER GAME LAST SEASON.

Even though TCU made it to their first BCS bowl game in school history, they ended their 2009-2010 campaign on a sour note.

After an undefeated regular season, TCU fell to Boise State 17-10 in the Fiesta Bowl.

But the Horned Frogs will have another opportunity to compete for a national title this year as they come in at No. 6 in the Alligator Sports' college football preseason rankings.

Despite critics maintaining that TCU's weak schedule is the main reason for its success, the Horned Frogs have won 11 games in four of the past five seasons.

If they want to make it five out of six, they will have to find a replacement for two-time All-American defensive end Jerry Hughes, who racked up a team-leading 11.5 sacks last year. The Indianapolis Colts selected him 31st overall in the NFL Draft.

However, the Horned Frogs should have plenty of candidates to fill the void as seven starters return from a defense that allowed 12.8 points per game last season.

TCU will look upon senior defensive end

Wayne Daniels to anchor the defensive line. He piled up 50 tackles and finished second on the team with 5.5 sacks last year.

The front seven will be important, as many expect a drop off in TCU's secondary from last season. Two first-team All-Mountain West Conference cornerbacks, Rafael Priest and Nick Sanders, graduated last season.

The Horned Frogs' offense should provide their defense with ample support, however.

TCU's offense finished fifth in the nation in scoring and it will return nine starters, one of them being MWC Offensive Player of the Year quarterback Andy Dalton. He threw for 2,756 yards and 23 touchdowns last year.

Dalton's top four receivers, in terms of yardage, will be back. Seniors Jeremy Kerley (44 catches, 532 receiving yards), Jimmy Young (33, 517) and Bart Johnson (33, 410), and junior Antoine Hicks (23, 478) will provide Dalton with plenty of options in the passing game.

The offense will be without leading rusher Joseph Turner, who graduated. However, the backfield will be in good hands.

Sophomores Matthew Tucker and Ed Wesley each ran for over 600 yards last season behind Turner.

Dalton will help with the ground game, too. He gained 512 yards with his legs last season, giving the offense an added dimension.

Tucker, Wesley and Dalton combined for 1,826 rushing yards last year, and the departure of Turner should open the door for even more production from the three.

Last season's TCU team made history after earning the first BCS bowl berth in school history, but this season it has even higher aspirations - win a national championship.
